

FEYWILD'S ENCHANTED WOODS

PART 03

It was a silent night, not unlike any other. Your kids in bed, wife passed out on the other end of the bed, and the scurrying rats inside your walls making their otherwise hidden appearance widely known. Suddenly you wake up in cold sweat and with a heavy pain in your ribcage—you immediately press your clamped hands against your chest and grasp for air. Sweat drips down your cheeks as you look around bewildered and attempt to calm yourself down. You look to your left and notice your wife in deep sleep; your antics did not wake her up.

A bright blue bulb appears out of nowhere and the sight of it seems to calm you down somehow. The light flies out through the open window. “Strange...” you mumble to yourself. You quickly get out of bed, put on shoes and a coat, grab yourself a lantern, and make way to follow that blue light. It has somehow piqued your interest. You follow it through patches of grass and are ultimately led to this dense forest before losing track of it.

Trees larger than any you’ve ever seen are firmly submerged in the forest’s mud. The roots are wildly entangled as they crawl up the many trees, forming natural pathways and bridges.
