~~Welcome to the world of Vampire: The Requiem~~

~~Jack~~

“And then ... and then she fell into the water!” Jack tried to keep from getting a stomach stitch, but laughter was hitting him hard. “By the time we fished her out, it was too late. The dress, the hair, the make-up, it was all ruined.”

Jack, the smaller of the two, was sitting on his friend's couch. A leather couch, Jack was sure, or some expensive derivative. The walls were a solid white but for the paintings framed in elegantly simple, smooth framework. The paintings themselves were of dark things, both in color and what they showed. Jack was sure many of them were of harsh moments from the bible, but he could never be sure.

Who was he to judge though? He preferred white walls without a thing on them.

“Oh wow. And this was her high school prom?” Julias was also sitting on couch across from Jack, a grin on his lips and a glass of red in his hand.

Julias was bad ass. There was no denying it. Jack was a little guy, he knew it, and while he certainly took care of his body and had become quite lean and strong, Julias was a big, built man. He was tall, with broad shoulders and pale complexion. His hair was blond and slicked back flat to his head. It was almost movie surreal. No one did that with their hair. No one could pull off that hair.

Julias could. Even here in his home, on the couch with a glass of red wine in his hand, the man was wearing a really, really ... really nice suit. Far nicer than Jack’s own, that was for sure. He had at least undone the jacket and loosened his black tie, but with the black shoes, black socks, and the cuffs, Jack guessed the cost of his getup at two months his own salary, at least.

“Oh my, took her home?”

“Ha! Man I wish. No, within five minutes of getting her home, she dumped me in a fit of blind rage.”

“Ouch. You have my sympathies.” Julias was trying to not laugh, if only to not spill his drink as he sipped it. Jack doubted it would have really put much of a dent into his friend’s money even if he did though.

Jack had to stand up. Seeing Julias’s place was always a blast, complete with a massive TV on the wall and wall-window view overlooking the city. He paced a little as he looked over the buildings below him. Marble floors in an apartment. The floors alone made his shitty shoes seem inadequate.

Jack almost gasped at Julias’s sudden appearance next to him. He hadn’t made a sound. Those shoes and marble floors and not a sound. Damn smooth.

“No. Ashley was the first and last girl I ever dated. Dumped me before I ever got past second base either.” A moment’s embarrassment past, Jack looked back out the window with his hands in his pockets. His own suit was a pale, dyed comparison of Julias’s, and the two of them standing next to each other made the sad idealism apparent.

“Oooh I see. So that’s what this was all about. You wanted me to find you a girl.”

“No ... well, maybe.”

“Jack, I drag your ass to the gym so many evenings. You even talk to people there. You’re not the weak little piss ant you were five years ago. Thought you’d have some confidence.” Julias swished his red wine around in his glass. It always looked so thick.

“I have confidence.”

“Then what’s the problem?”

“Or perhaps too much time on the internet developing ridiculous standards.”

“Yeah, that too.”

They both laughed. It was a weird friendship, to be sure, like fire and water. Julias was cool, suave, smooth and built. Jack was a lean little guy with a bitter tongue and too much time on his hands. They always had something to talk about.

“So you got that promotion at Barksen’s?” Julias took another sip of his drink before looking to Jack. He put his back to the window and leaned against it with his free arm folded against his chest, hand hooked underneath the other arm.

“You know I had plans to get into law school,” Jack said with a shrug. “Apparently, I’m good at making people do what I want. Barksen wanted me under his thumb early.”

“I can’t blame him. You’re a master at breaking people to your will.” Julias’s sarcasm was almost dripping from his lips, but Jack countered it with a classic wink.

“Barksen thinks I am! He hired me didn’t he, straight out of high school.”

“Yeah but you’ve been stuck at that job for almost three years, Jack. Barksen got you under his thumb because he knew you’d be cheap. He’d have to pay thrice what he pays you to get that job filled by someone with a license.” Julias looked down to his drink and gently swished it around with tilts of his hand.

Jack looked up to older man with a slow squint, before he gave his own grin.

“You’re right, you’re right. I have money aside and I have the connections now. Barksen doesn’t realize one of his partners is looking to branch, and neither of them realize Mr. Turner is looking to expand into this district either. I got a foot in with him too.”

Jack must have looked absolutely pleased with himself. Why wouldn’t he? With this plan he’d have a secure and stable future. He’d get his jobs, his promotions, and retire at a comfortably early age all the while having a comfortable life.

That was good, right?

“You got your ducks in a row then.”

“I like to think so.”

“I ... I don't know. I mean, why would I take risks?”

“When you want something, and really, truly want it, it likely means something or someone's stopping you from getting it so easily. Thus, risks.”

“True. I guess I just haven't found anything worth taking risks for.”

Julias took a long, hard look at Jack after those words. He even took a lick of his teeth. With a sigh, the older man stepped away from the glass and walked toward his kitchen. The apartment was a seamless connection of entryway to living room to kitchen to stairway to bedroom. Surprisingly large and spacious, and it let Julias walk to his counter to grab his wine bottle and refill his drink without breaking conversation.

“And if you had one?”

“If I had ... something worth taking a risk for?”

“Yes. Let's say you were ... fighting for power. Politics. What would you stoop to do to win a campaign?” Julias leveled his gaze on his small friend, and waited. His eyes were steel, cold, and Jack found himself squirming a little at the sudden stare. Why the abrupt change of mood?

“I suppose it would depend on how I felt about my rivals.”

“Oh, predators. Predators the lot of them. Given the opportunity they’d kill you, let alone your campaign.” Julias licked his teeth again and offered another grin before sipping his red. “Some of them you’ll hate, some you won’t, but all would be willing to kill you in your sleep for their own goals.”

“Whoa, that’s ... that’s a lot of risk for political power.”

“But the rewards, Jack. The rewards are ... real power. You have your domain, you have peace, you have your way with whatever you wanted. With whoever you wanted.” He beckoned for the small man, and Jack came. He didn’t plan to, didn’t even want to, but Julias’s eyes were open and unblinking. They looked upon him, gazed upon him with a strange resonance.

“Answer the question.”

“No, seriously, you’re asking some we-”

“Answer the question.” Julias’s eyes flared wide, and Jack took a step back. The air around Julias seemed almost darker, as if the lighting had dimmed in some ridiculously cheesy horror film. Not so cheesy when you’re in it.

“I...” Jack’s mouth moved on its own. Why was he talking? He didn’t mean to answer that question, but he couldn’t stop. “I ... for my own goals? I’d ruin them. For my own life? ... I’d kill them.”

“Kill them? Harsh words.” The older man motioned for Jack to sit across from him at the counter, and the younger one sat obediently. He felt small, very small. All of a sudden the dark apartment felt less a cool hangout, and more a spider’s web.

“Well fuck, man, I’ve never been in that situation. We’re talking about some fantasy world where I’m a god damn mobster. I’m just going off my gut here. What's ... what's going on, Julias?"

With a long and weary sigh, Julias put down his glass and sat down as well. He leaned forward, and with netted fingers, put his chin top his knuckles. He wasn't playing, or kidding or joking, he was just staring Jack straight in the eye until the young man was almost sweating.

This wasn't the Julias he knew. This was frightening.

"I need help. I need someone I can trust. I need someone who will have my back when shit hits the fan."

"When shit hits the fan like back at Omack's? Right?" Jack said with a grin, but found his grin fading when Julias did not smile back. The man across the counter from him was almost glaring, but his gaze was more cold, more hard and dead than angry.

"What if, Jack ... what if you could ... leave it all behind." He stopped. He didn't explain himself. He just left the statement on the air, and Jack tilted his head to the side in confusion.

"I uh ... what?"

"I need someone to help me, and I think that person is you." Despite the compliment, Jack found himself squirming. Julias was not complimenting him aimlessly. He wanted something; all the signs of a business proposition were apparent. Jack saw them, and Julias knew he saw them. The problem was that despite this, Julias was still effortlessly in control of the conversation, and Jack felt smaller by the minute.

"My help? Julias you ... you make enough money to buy ten of me. What could I possibly—"

"Trust. You are my friend. And you are far better at the dance than you think."

“Dance?”

“Politics ... of a sort.” Julias gave his small friend a playful grin, like a fucking tiger might before the kill. “But to my point, I need a friend, and I have a proposition for you. The dilemma is you have to leave it all behind.”

“What is all?”

“All.”

“You can’t ... I don’t ... Julias you got to help me out here.” Jack knew his words would frustrate Julias, but the sheer vagueness of it all was driving him insane.

“All.” Neither frustrated or impatient, Julias kept his voice smooth but stern. “You will move on from your current friends and family. They’ll think you’re dead. You’ll be working with me, here in South Side. You will have a new place to stay, and you will be powerful ... very powerful.” The fact Jack’s mouth had dropped open did not stop Julias. “The money is great, the power greater, but it’s not about that. Well, not just about that. It’s about ... a whole different world, Jack. A world with risks, and rewards.” If his friend was trying to make it sound romantic, he was failing hard. So far, Julias’s speech was only making Jack shake in his shoes.

Julias had gotten up at this point, and was walking around with his glass in his hand. He gestured with his words, but his cold gaze never left Jack. The smaller man couldn’t help but take quick glances to his friend’s drink, if only to avoid Julias’s gaze. Had his red wine always been so thick?

“You’ll be joining me in a long career, my good friend. You will have everything you’ve ever wanted, and more.”

“I, I just, I ... I don’t know! I mean, just ... abandon everything?”

“Everything. The only thing you’ll keep from your old life is my friendship.”

“But my fucking family, Julias! My mother, my sister, my fucking dog. My friends...”

“You don’t have any close friends besides me, and you know you’re not close with your family.” Julias took another sip.

“Hey, I got ... yeah I got nothing.” Jack slumped into a stool at the counter. “Holy fuck Julias. This is a pretty big god damn thing you just dumped on me.”

“A secret thing, by the way.”

“Well yeah, considering the lead-up to your question, I get the impression I tell anyone about this and I’ll have snipers at my back.” Jack let his buzzed head fall to the counter, and lightly rolled it side to side.

“That is ... possible.”

“Jack. Take a breath. I’m not forcing you into anything. This is not an offer you can’t refuse.” Jack stirred lightly when he felt a hand on his shoulder, but otherwise kept his forehead on the counter “Think on it. Take a few days.”

“A few days? Yeah ... yeah I think I’ll do that.” He pushed himself from the counter and stood there for a moment. Julias was standing across from him, the counter between them, and was kinda smiling, and kinda frowning. His expression alien and unreadable, Jack only grew more nervous, and eventually turned around.

“And here I thought we were going to talk about random shit.” Jack walked to the door, put his hand on the handle, and took a glance back.

“So, this change, this job ... anything illegal?”

“Illegal? Not ... really. Different world, my friend. Different rules.”

“ ... mafia. This sounds sounds like mafia stuff. That’s why you have all these suits.” Jack’s words apparently caught the big guy off guard, cause Julias laughed and set his drink down.

“Cherry on top. Agree to join me, and I’ll hook you up with a bunch of suits.”

“Damn man. That...” Jack almost removed his hand from the door handle. “I’ll definitely have to think about that. Cya.”

It was a cold night. Jack couldn’t help but shiver a little when his feet hit the sidewalk. The sun had set hours ago, and the moon was clear in the sky. At least as can be clear in a dense city. Even at this hour, people were walking the streets. Business suits and classy dresses were common. Sharks and call girls no doubt, but at least it wasn’t as obvious or dirty as his neighborhood in the Alley.

“Even the prostitutes make me look like a low-class pleb,” he said. He couldn’t help but laugh at himself and adjust his tie. Presentation, presentation.

The bus station was a good twenty-minute walk, but the streets were crowded and the police didn’t exactly sleep. Jack didn’t worry, at least not about the people. The cold was starting to set in, and he could feel his toes starting to go numb. Business shoes were not good with cold.

“Excuse me.”

Jack almost jumped. The voice beside him was smooth, alluring, feminine and inviting, but extremely unanticipated.

“Shit! Sorry, uh ... yes?” He turned to face the mysterious woman, and struggled to keep his jaw from dropping. She was gorgeous. Long red hair, pale skin, sharp blue eyes, and dark lips. It was unfair how gorgeous she was. The coat she wore, black and long, hugged her figure nicely and highlighted her thin physique. She was standing in an alley between two of the buildings, and her eyes almost glowed in the darkness.

“Do you know Julias?” She spoke so smoothly, so softly, that Jack found himself taking a step toward her. What was so inviting about that voice? At eye level with him, her gaze was unrelenting, but intoxicating. It pulled him, and almost as if a hand was tugging at his neck, she took another step forward.

Her eyes were just like Julias’s.

“Uh ... yes...”

She grinned at him and licked at her lips in a not-so-subtle way, just like Julias would when flirting with a girl. With a raised hand, she beckoned the boy into the darkness. The cold was suddenly not a problem, and Jack stepped toward her yet again. The background shuffling of others grew quiet as he went deeper into the darkness toward the woman, and quieter yet again when his mind grew hazy.

“Did he ask for your help?” One of her fingers pressed to his chest, but it only magnetized him. Attached to her finger, Jack was deep into the darkness now. Any light that would normally line the walls in the alley were blown, yet the stranger’s eyes were still clear in the black, like how a cat’s eyes caught light.

“Then you’re the one I’ve been looking for.”

He didn’t even see the knife.

~~Julias~~

“I wonder if he took me seriously.” Julias paced back and forth from his window, and only occasionally glanced out to look at the city lights. His eyes were fixed on his drink of red. His last attempt at maintaining at least somewhat normal eating habits.

He leaned forward and put his free hand against the window, but still his eyes stayed on his drink. The swirling pool of red was not transparent, and his gaze drowned in it.

“How am I going to do it? How could I explain ... I mean ... with Viktor it was ... Yeah, I don’t want that.” With a weary sigh, Julias walked back into his kitchen and put the glass on his counter. “I don’t want to hurt him, and now I just left this bombshell on his ... he doesn’t deserve that. I can’t give him half-truths. Fuck Viktor. None of that manipulative shit.” The whole conversation had been a horrible attempt to recreate Viktor’s proposal, and just like then, the proposal had been terrifying. Smart. Way to ruin everything, Julias.

He snatched the glass up and raised it with his sights set on the sink. With a strained hand and tight grip, he slowly, very slowly lowered the glass back down.

“Don’t smash the glass, control yourself,” he said between clenched teeth. After putting the glass down, he walked toward the door, all the while looking at his shaking hand. He flexed and released it while his skin grew more and more pale. “Blood stains are a bitch.”

“Where’s that kid gone?” Julias strolled down the street as fast as he could without drawing attention. It was a cold night, but he didn’t mind. While most everyone was in trench coats of some shape or another, Julias stuck with the suit. It was a nice suit; he felt good wearing it. He felt tall around these people. They were just sheep, after all.

“Yeah, I wonder ... how he’ll feel walking down this street after it’s done.” A woman walked by and took a moment to glance Julias up and down. She was attractive, with her blond hair tied into some fashionable shape against her skull’s crown. Julias managed a small nod and kept walking. “Never the same. He could shut himself up even more, or ... become cold and dead. I don’t want another Viktor. If this is going to work, he needs to want it. I can’t trick him into this.”

He kept walking. That was it then. He’d have to explain to Jack tonight what this was really about, instead of letting the man stew for days with all his half-truths.

“I wonder if he’ll hate me. I wonder if he’ll tell anyone. If he told anyone, and I had to clean up that mess, and kill him...” No, don’t think about it. Jack was a smart man, and a disturbingly tenacious little man at that. He could trust him. But shit happens, and if Jack did indeed try to spread the truth once the secrets were out, it would be on Julias’s head.

“Fuck, not just my head. This isn’t just a business deal. He’s your friend. He’s your—” His voice stopped, and he came to a dead halt in the street and looked around. Something wasn’t right. His insides clawed at his ribs and demanded aggression. Someone was inside the domain. Someone was on the hunt inside his domain.

He broke into a run. People in his way were quick to move, and those that didn’t were tossed aside. A few unlucky people found themselves more than knocked aside, and more than one crashed into nearby members of the street crowd with loud hollers of pain. He got faster, and bulldozed through a couple holding hands, each getting pushed to either side and landing against the sidewalk with bone crunching noises.

There was no way someone would have picked this night of all nights. Someone must have known, someone was watching him. Fuck, where's a Mekhet when you need one. Jack couldn't have gone far, he had only one possible route to walk, and he could glance down the alley of each as he ran by, but it was a long shot. Whoever was in his domain could have just taken Jack and run, or pulled him into the sewers, or worse.

Rage built inside him. Whoever it was, he was going to tear them apart. He was going to sink his fingers into their limbs and rip them out of their sockets. You do not just walk into someone's domain without permission, and there was no way this was done by accident, especially not on this night.

Finally, he could smell his friend. Jackpot. He had only to glance down an alley to see the coat of a woman, and the falling body of a boy. Oh god, if he was too late.

“Get away from him!”

The woman pulled away with a jolt. She gave him a glance, only one, before she turned and ran. She was like liquid. Her motions were beyond fluid and her speed was beyond his grasp. Daeva bitch. It had to be. She must have drawn Jack in and ... and...

“Jack! Shit, Jack!” Julias got to his knees and looked down over his little friend. “Fucking hell Jack, can you hear me?”

The small man coughed up blood, curled up on his side, and splattered some of it onto the street. He was always tiny, but now he looked like a spec against the dirty asphalt. Just a kid with a buzzed head in a bad suit, bleeding everywhere.

“I ... I just got stabbed, didn't I?” Blood was seeping out of where Jack kept his hands to his stomach. Julias fought to keep his eyes from staring at the growing pool. He would kill that Daeva with his bare fucking hands, with his teeth! No, not now, he had to focus.

“Move your hands, I have to see.” Julias wrapped his grip around his friend's hands and pulled them away. Jack fought against him, groaned and moaned in pain, but Julias's strength easily overpowered him. “Hold still! I have to see how bad it is.”

His hands gripped into Jack's suit and shirt and lifted it. His desperation even ripped it, but then, it was a cheap suit. He'd really have to buy Jack a nice suit after this.

“Ok, I'm seeing ... ten holes. Fuck that Daeva bitch! Shit shit shit.” He let Jack curl back up into a ball as he stood up. Panic-filled eyes looked around from deep within the alley. It would take only a second to get Jack out into the street, and maybe ten minutes to get him into a hospital. What good would that do? He'd been stabbed ten times.

“I ... I'm not a doctor, but I think...” The little guy coughed up some blood between words. “I think ... I'm dead.”

“What the fuck Jack, how can you ... you're dying!” Julias pulled Jack up to sit against the alley wall.

“I guess I'm just ... intellectualizing? I'm sure ... it'll hit me ... later ... when I'm dead.” Being sat up brought a new fit of coughs, and Jack clutched at his stomach hard. Julias could see it wasn't only from pain, the kid was actually just trying to keep his guts from spilling.

“Well stop intellectualizing! God damn it Jack, I ... shit this is my fault.”

“ ... wha—”

“That Deava cunt! She did this to you to get at me, to stop me. To ... hurt me.”

“Daeva, I don’t un—” Another coughing fit cut Jack off, and he stopped trying to talk. Instead, his draining eyes looked up to Julias. The little guy’s face was getting very white.

“Jack, I ... fuck it. Jack, I’m going to help you.”

“You ... look at me.” Jack pulled his hands away from his stomach, which let loose another pool of blood to spill over his fingers. “I’m dead Julias, just ... take me to the hospital, so ... mom can get me after.”

What the fuck was wrong with this kid? He was dying, he would be dead in minutes, the amount of blood pouring out of him was insane. And yet he was just accepting it. His last moments would be spent just happily giving in? No.

“No, fuck that, fuck that ‘quietly into the good night’ shit you stupid bastard.”

“But ... you can’t—”

Blood stains really are a bitch.

“Yes I can ... yes I fucking can.” Julias reached down and pulled Jack up into his arms. The tiny guy was weightless. He took him deeper into the alleyway, and then, jumped.

“Holy...” Little Jack tried to yell, even flail a little, but the small man was exhausted and shivering. Good. It made carrying him up the side of the building easier. Julias jumped the fire escape railing, and then onto the railing of another, and another still, until ten floors were scaled in a matter of seconds. He landed on the rooftop, where only darkness and moonlight waited.

“How did—”

“Do you trust me?”

“Julias, I—”

“Do you trust me?” Julias yelled this time as he sat down. He put Jack down between his legs with his back to his own stomach. He cradled the small guy in a hug, and rocked him back and forth. He was getting cold.

“ ... yes.”

“Then just relax. Just relax and take a breath.”

Julias knew the reaction. He knew it well. It was always the same. First, his prey would twitch for just a second while his bite first punctured and then numbed the area. And then, they would simply relax into the Kiss. Jack relaxed far too quickly, far too easily, and the blood that flowed into Julias’s mouth was slow and lacked volume.

“What ... are you...” Jack shivered a couple times, trembled, went limp against Julias’s chest. His heartbeat grew slower, and slower, but Julias kept drinking.

How long had it been since he’d drunk someone dry? Years. But his friend? How long had it been since he’d done this? A lifetime.

“I’m ... getting ... tired.” The poor little guy couldn’t even lift his arms anymore. He could barely talk. At least Julias was making the loss of blood feel good, right? He could feel it in Jack’s body. He wasn’t struggling, and he was probably high on the pleasure of it. But then, he probably thought he was dying and that his pleasurable feelings were his body's chemical responses to death. Well, he was half right.

Jack trembled, and then as his trembles faded, he shivered, and then not even that. Now was the time, right? It had to be. The tiny man's breath was almost gone. Julias could feel his anxiety growing. What if this didn't work? Think, what had Viktor done? Viktor had drained him ... completely.

“I can't ... feel ... Please, Julias ... I'm ... scared...”

Jack started to shake. The blood wasn't flowing anymore. He sucked forcefully now, actively, trying to pull the blood out of Jack's body. No more came. Jack's breath turn into nothing but a cold haze.

“ ... a dream. That's all it is. A dream, Jack. Just a dream. Now I have to wake you up.”

All it took was a slice of his fingertip to cut into Julias's own wrist. The blood didn't come; it fought to stay inside him. He could see it in the cut, refusing to fall free of his skin. He glared at the blood, at the Vitae that kept it within. All or nothing, Julias. Just another step toward damnation.

He placed his wrist against Jack's mouth.

~~Jack~~

Jack woke up screaming.

“God! Oh god!” He looked around in a panic. Couch. There was a couch. Paintings on the wall. Even a giant window. Julias's place. He looked around some more. There was Julias, standing behind the counter of his kitchen. His face was a weird mixture of relief and pain, Jack had to guess.

The throbs hit him hard, and Jack fell off the couch to his knees.

“Oh god, Julias! What the fuck ... what the hell is going on.” He looked to Julias in panic, but the tall man was just standing there, watching and waiting. “Julias! Come on, what ... oh fuck. Oh fuck was it all a dream? Did...” With trembling hands, Jack sat back and looked down at his clothes. They were still soaked in blood.

“What the fuck Julias!?” Jack raised his shirt to look at his stomach. His abdomen was covered in his blood, but the wounds were closed. Not healed over. Just closed. They should still be bleeding, but as far as he could tell, they’d stopped. “What’s going on? I can’t ... what the fuck is going on!?” Jack crawled forward until he was on his knees, and forced himself to standing.

It didn’t last long. He reached out to grab one of Julias’s stools, but fell with a hard thud to the floor. He clutched at his stomach again. There was a weird mixture of pain, but also a hunger pang. A deep hunger pang that was well into the pain realm too.

“... you’ve ... never offered me a drink before.” Jack looked between his friend and the drink. The deep red was oddly alluring. Normally it never seemed appetizing, but with it right there in front of him, he had to admit, he wanted a sip.

“I’ll explain everything, don’t worry. Come on, drink.”

With a sigh of relief, Jack reached out. His hands were still bloody, and now that Julias was so close, he couldn’t help but notice the huge stains of blood in his suit as well. Drink though. Julias said drink, so he’d drink.

The first sip was strange, to say the least. Was that metal? The thickness poured over his tongue, and he just had to take a second to let it coat his taste buds. Damn what a taste. Sips soon turned into gulps, and he drank down the glass entirely. It was euphoric. He could feel it in his belly and spreading out, making him feel warm.

“Ok, ok ... so, what’s going on? I remember ... some woman, and then ... a knife.” After handing back the empty glass to Julias, Jack reached down and pulled up his shirt again. He felt his muscles, his abdominal muscles, where the knife had punctured him. He could feel the holes, tiny little vertical slits just enough for his fingers to catch against subtle indents, but the wounds were closed for the most part.

If there was one way he was going to die, it’d be getting stabbed by some beauty in a dark alley.

“This can’t be real, Julias. What the fuck is...” Julias had stood up and offered Jack his hand. Jack took it, and slid onto the stool. As if psychic, Julias was already pouring him another glass of red.

“It’s very real. Here,” Julias said, and put the glass straight into Jack’s hand. Jack drank the newly found, delicious sin with fervor. He almost growled into it when the thick liquid started to coat his throat.

“So, what? What happened? I got stabbed, Julias! I got stabbed a fuck load of times. I’ve read enough to know what extreme blood loss is like.”

“Yes. You were bleeding to death. You had minutes to live.”

“Well then what the fuck!”

Jack was stuck somewhere between panic and joy. He should be dead, but he wasn't. He could see the blood all over him, all over his best friend, but he was still alive. It was obviously the same night; the blood on him wasn't completely dry yet.

Julias sighed and sat down on a stool across the counter. Since when did Julias look so pale? Jack had to give him a few double takes to see it, but there it was. His skin was white, and thin.

“What?”

“Check your pulse, Jack.”

“I can't take a shower first? I mean my god look at us, we're—”

“Check. Your. Pulse.”

Jack grew quiet. Julias was staring at him, with steel eyes and dead calm look. Dead was an understatement. He'd never seen Julias look so ill.

With an annoyed sigh, Jack put his index and middle finger to his wrist.

“... um ... hold on, hold on.” He put the same fingers against his upper neck, near the jaw. “... hold on, hold on.” He put his hand over his heart. “Julias ... where's my pulse?” Jack cracked a worried, fake smile at his friend, but Julias just shook his head.

“I didn’t think you’d remember. You were low on blood, and ... most Kindred never remember being embraced. Not with any clarity.”

“Kindred? Embraced? What the fuck are you talking about?”

“What do you feel, Jack? Inside, right now, what do you feel?” Julias’s stare was stone and more than a bit unsettling. Jack couldn’t help but lower his gaze at the intensity of it.

“I feel ... I don’t know. Just ... I feel ... hunger.”

“Anything else?”

“I don’t know what you mean, dude. I just ... I feel...” He had to take the time to think about it. That throbbing ache in his stomach, in his whole body was subdued but there. There was a strange anxiety mixed with fear and rage, but that had always been there, right?

Jack took a step back. No, it hadn’t always been there. He had trouble looking Julias in the eyes now; he never had that before, not like this. A part of him tingled with the fear of it, the fear of ... Julias? A part of him was itching to run too. A part of him really, really really ... really wanted to tear into something and eat.

A towel hit him in the face.

“Go wash up, get the blood off of you, and take a long look in the mirror.”

Since when had he been this skinny? Jack couldn’t help but stare down at his body while the water of the shower washed the blood from his skin. He could see the stab wounds, closed, and he managed a small smile at the sight of his abs. Julias had been forcing him to eat right and exercise for five years now, and it certainly paid off. Despite his small size, he was a lean and tough little thing, and he ran his fingers up his abs to feel them, and the multitude of stab wounds that still marked them.

But he wasn't just lean anymore. He was thinner. His stomach was pulled in just slightly. His skin was thinner, and paler too. Well that made sense, he had just lost an insane amount of blood. But then, how the hell was he still standing, and moving around as if perfectly fine? He could see the stab wounds like he was some recently stabbed, embalmed corpse.

And that hunger, that hunger wasn't going away. It ached inside him, and not just in his gut. He could feel it coursing through his limbs. He could feel ... something inside him, clawing at him. Something inside was fighting him.

Eventually he got out of the shower, and stood in front of the mirror. He wiped away the moisture with a nearby towel, and let the vapors fade away with the turning ventilation. Slowly, his face came into view.

“Oh my god...” He put a hand against the wall and leaned in close. What the hell happened to his face? His face was pale like the rest of him. His eyes had no sparkle. Everything seemed so ... still. So dead.

“ ... dead. Oh my god. Oh my god oh my god oh my god.” Jack spun around and scampered to gather the clothing Julias laid out for him. He struggled to get on his boxers, and his pants came on one leg at a time while he tried to get the bathroom door open. His efforts earned him a hard land on his side and arm in the hallway, and Julias leaned around the hallway from his stool in the kitchen to peak at him.

“Dead! I'm dead, Julias! What the fuck! I'm a zombie. I'm a god damn zombie! Oh my god oh my god oh my god.” Jack didn't even try to get up. He just lay there, half naked with his pants only on one leg and his hands on his face.

“Figured it out did you?”

“How can I be a zombie? What the flying shit god damn fuck, Julias! Zombies aren’t real.”

“You’re not a zombie.”

“What?”

Julias gave a sigh and walked over to Jack with a reached-out hand. The big guy pulled him up and, with a half-smile, helped Jack sit down so he could put on his pants.

“You’re not a zombie. You are dead though.”

“I, I... “ Jack had to take a moment to breathe. Breathing didn’t seem to do much though. The little man let his head fall and his chin land in his palms with his elbows on the counter, before his head slid further and his eyes planted in his palms instead. Breathing wasn’t doing anything.

“I wasn’t supposed to do this to you so suddenly, Jack. I was going to ease you into it, and you were supposed to have the option to say no. I ... you got pulled into this though, and it was either let you die, or turn you.”

“Turn me ... oh god, you...” Jack almost choked on his tongue. He forced himself to raise his head and make eye contact with Julias. The steely gaze, the pale skin. Julias didn’t look like this before, but now he had that same dead look Jack did.

“We’re vampires, Jack.” Julias gave Jack a tiny little smile and exposed a long fang. It wasn’t normally there, but there it was clear as day on his lip before he hid it in his mouth again. He slid another glass of red toward Jack.

“Vampires. Vampires ... fucking ... vampires.” Jack’s eyes lowered down to the glass. They sank into the pool of it, the swirling mass of its intoxicating appearance. He never cared about the stuff before, and now he couldn’t stop looking at it. “ ... that’s blood isn’t it?”

“Yes.”

“You gave me blood.”

“Yes.”

“I ... how could ... Julias, I...” Jack pulled his eyes away from the drink with great effort. It looked so fucking delicious. “Julias you fucking turned me into a vampire! And you’re a vampire, apparently. I’m freaking out, ok. I am freaking the fuck out.” Even as he complained and ranted, Jack had to stop to drink that delicious, sweet, fulfilling glass of red. That throb in his stomach wasn’t going away, not completely, but the blood drink was at least suppressing it.

“I know, I know, and I’m sorry. This is never easy for anyone. I ... I couldn’t just let you die, friend.”

“But I am dead!”

“How come I’ve never seen it on you before? You don’t normally look so ... dead.”

“So you’ve been a vampire, a Kindred, this whole time? How long? ... how old are you?”

His words hit something sensitive. Julias turned around and reached into his fridge to get another bottle, and poured the two of them another glass. Now Julias was the one who was avoiding Jack’s gaze.

“I was turned during the first world war.”

“The first ... world war ... World War One. Wow.” Jack ran his fingers through the buzz of his hair. “Wow, you’re ... wow that’s old.”

“Joys of being Kindred. You don’t age.”

“Wait, is that why you got me exercising and eating well? You were going to turn me?”

“I was preparing you, yes, but I was never going to force you. I was going to explain everything, and that’s what that business proposition was about earlier. Then I was going to explain what being a Kindred meant. Immortality, but a blood lust, the beast inside, the Danse Macabre, the politics and the other Kindred and the—”

“Dude, dude! I ... ok I am barely keeping it together. I am...” He put his head in his palms again, and let the weight of the insanity pull it down to his elbows. “I just ... I need to think. I need to think. I need to contextualize. I ... you said, earlier today, that my family and friends would think I was dead? That I’d ... be staying here in South Side?”

“Yeah.”

“ ... so my life ... it’s all gone?”

“Yeah...”

Jack had to get up. He left his glass behind and started to pace around with his fingers on his buzzed hair. They both went silent. Jack wanted to pant, but breathing didn't come naturally anymore. All the little fidgets of his body were gone, or at least lessened. He had to make the pacing more frantic, just to make it seem justified.

“So I'm ... immortal now?”

“You won't age, but fire will burn you like dry paper. And ... sunlight will do the same.”

“No sunlight?”

“Oh god ... so that's ... that's why I can't ever see my family again? My friends?” Jack fell to the couch with his elbows on his knees and leaned forward. He kept looking around, desperate for something to focus his mind on.

“Partially, but also ... that pain in your gut. That's the blood lust, Jack.”

“Blood. I have to drink blood. Fucking god I'm Dracula.”

“Don't say that around the Prince if you want to keep your head ... which losing will also kill you, by the way. But beyond that, you're not going to die. Bullet to the head won't even do it.”

“Oh, that's actually pretty—wait, Prince?”

“Yes, Prince, a ... you'll see. I wanted to turn you because you're my friend ... but also because I need an ally, Jack.” Julias came over to sit down next to Jack, bloody suit and all. The couch was likely ruined, but Jack figured Julias had enough money to ignore it. Or that the situation made it not worthy of note.

“No. There are others. I figure there’s over three hundred Kindred here in Dolareido. And there’s a structure to it.”

Holy shit. Three hundred other vampires in the city, with their own structure? Were they all like Julias, with mobster painted on their forehead?

“Rule number one, is to preserve the Masquerade. If you tell people about vampires, the sheriff will leave you out for sunrise. You have to do everything you can to make sure people don’t realize what you are. As my new childe, you’re my responsibility, and I will help you as much as you need.”

“Masquerade. Masquerade, got it. I ... think I got it. Rules ... so there’s more than one rule.” Jack turned his head from within his palms to catch Julias in the corner of his eye.

“I know that this all got dumped on you without warning, but it’s not all bad.” Julias got up and started to take off his jacket. “You’re immortal.”

“I ... I guess.”

“I have to shower, then I’ll show you the clothes I’ve prepared for you.” He winced. “Then we’re going to meet Viktor.”

“Viktor?”

Chapter 2

~~Julias~~

Julias looked over at his little protege. While Julias had picked his usual favorite clothing, a navy lounge suit, two button, single-breasted with no tie, he felt the little Ventrue would be better off with something a tad bit more professional. First impressions were important. He hooked Jack up with a gray business suit, double-breasted, complete with a white dress shirt and a nice tie.

He had a lot of suits already lined up for Jack. Only the best for his new childe.

The streets were cold. People were walking by in trench coats and furs, but his eyes glossed over them even as their eyes drew to him. Besides being in a suit despite the cold, he was tall, broad-shouldered, and looked almost like a hit man. He knew it too. The kine walking by sometimes stared for a little too long, and he met their gaze with a small, intimidating smile. They looked away.

“Viktor is one of the three elders who lead the Invictus. He is one of the founding members of Dolareido, and has been here for a long, long time. Maria and Michael not as long,” Julias said.

“Maria?”

“Yes, a Nosferatu. That brings up a good point.” He glanced around as they rounded a corner. The streets weren’t entirely empty, but good enough to talk about things quietly. “The clans. I should warn you about them. Differences run in the blood and some of them can be a little ... unsettling.”

“Oh?” Jack’s interest was piqued. The little guy always did have an interest in things most people avoided. It’s how they met, after all.

“Daeva are fast and strong, and can seduce you with a glance. They are obsessive, materialistic, and concerned only with gratification. They’re almost always beautiful, and they know it.”

“So, like a succubus?”

“Yes, actually. Very accurate parallel. Be especially careful with them, as our Prince is a Daeva.”

“You mentioned Prince earlier. What’s that?”

“Nutshell? She owns the city’s night. She says what we can and can’t do.”

“Scary. She?”

“Prince is a gender neutral title for the Kindred.”

“Oh.”

“Indeed.” Julias gave Jack a quick punch in the arm, and Jack bounced back like always with feigned shocked. “I know you, Jack. Don’t stick your nose where it doesn’t belong. You have to learn that quick, because Kindred are paranoid predators and they’ll tear you apart and leave you for the sun if they think you’re up to something.”

“ ... very scary.”

“Next. The Mekhet. They are shadows. They see everything and can hide anywhere. Fast too. Good at collecting information.”

“Assassins? They sound like ninjas.”

“Next. The Gangrel. Barbarians in jeans. They are very strong, and very tough. They can be very ... beast-like.” Julias sighed with his word; he couldn't keep the harsh tone out of them. His distaste for the Gangrel must have seemed obvious. "And then the Nosferatu. They are ... monsters."

Jack turned to give Julias a confused look. Always with the interest in the dangerous things, this kid had. He'd have to work hard to keep his childe from getting himself killed.

"They look like monsters, and they can use that fear against you." Julias pointed to his temple. "They'll fuck your head from the shadows, and are strong as well. You've seen The Phantom of the Opera? Think of Erik."

"Oh, that's ... that's classic tragic. I have to avoid them?"

"Honestly? They're probably the ones you should worry about the least. They're wolves. The others are wolves in sheep's clothing." Julias brought a hand up to his chin and scratched at the gruff. "But they look different, so I felt I should warn you."

"So Gangrel, Nosferatu, Daeva, and Mekhet. And..."

"And us, the Ventrue. We are leaders, rulers, kings and queens. We control, and we cannot be stopped. It's in the blood." He threw Jack a smile, and caught a glimpse of surprise in his childe. Jack had never thought of himself as a leader, Julias knew, but there was a potential in his friend. He could see it, even if Jack and no one else could, and that made him a powerful ally indeed.

"You'll find all five in the Invictus. We are the largest of the covenants here."

"Covenants?"

"Political parties, I guess. We have goals and an organization. It would take a long time to fully explain, but just know the names for now. We are going to see Viktor, Maria and Michael, who are the heads of the Invictus. There are also the Carthians, the Circle of the Crone, the Ordo Dracul, and the Lancea et Sanctum. The Prince has outlawed the Second Estate, the Lancea et Sanctum though, or at least any overt practicing of their ways.”

“She ... outlawed an entire political party? Dolareido is a dictatorship?”

“A monarchy is the closer example. She has advisers from all practicing groups, but ultimately her word is law.” He took a glance down his shoulder at his tiny friend. This was a huge information dump, but better than letting Jack brood. He’d seen too many freshly embraced brood themselves into suicide. No, this was better. Don’t let him think about how he’d just lost his entire life and now he was going to have to spend immortality never feeling the sun anymore, and always craving blood. He was going to spend every moment of his existence fearing some elder Kindred was going to rip him apart. No reason to ruin what was proving to be a surprisingly smooth embrace, near-death experience aside.

“So ... why? Why all the politics?”

“How else could you keep a bunch of solitary, territorial predators forced to share the same food source from killing each other?”

“Good. You got the basics.”

“Basics? How much more complicated does it get?”

Julias just had to laugh. He raised a hand to his face and put his fingers over his smile. He knew Jack would be frowning at him, but that only made him laugh harder. Eventually, Julias put a hand on his friend’s shoulder to steady himself.

“I’m sorry, I’m sorry. While many of the Kindred are new to this, not much older than you even, many are also as old as I. Some far more so. They dig their fingers into people and spin webs of deceit so large, no one can track it anymore. Complicated does not begin to describe it, so make sure you don’t fall into any spider webs. Ah, we’re here.”

The two of them stood before a massive office building. It was monolithic, with indented black valleys up and down its length, while gentle white lights bathed it just enough to be visible in the night. The entrance was multiple massive doorways of reinforced glass, each clean to perfection so Julias could see into the lobby.

“Come. Stay beside me. Speak when spoken to, and address members of the circle only as Your Excellency.”

“Holy shit. This is Xnomina. They’re a massive corporation, Julias! From software to foodstuffs. You fucking tell me...”

“Yes, the Invictus run the company. Macro-level stuff. Come on.” Julias stepped up to the front of the building and opened the door. He’d normally open the door for his friend first, but this place was different. He went in first.

“Mister Mire. The circle is already assembled in the conference room. Please hurry,” the woman behind the counter said to Julias. A Mekhet, the quiet librarian type too, complete with glasses, short black hair, and eyes hard-locked on her laptop. Attractive, but timid. The beast inside him grumbled silently at the sight of her, knowing full well it could destroy her if it wanted to. Julias just smiled at her.

“Thank you Madam Jennings. Oh, and please put Master Jack Terry, my childe, in the system.” Julias motioned to the little Ventrue behind him.

“Master Jack? Oh. Oh! Well, isn’t he ... he’s a tiny thing isn’t he?” Gloria Jennings gave Jack a devious grin as she typed his name.

Predictable. Julias was a tall and built man, and his friend was ... not. Still, he gave Gloria a quiet growl, and she sat upright in her seat and doubled her typing speed.

Julias kept walking. It'd be disrespectful to look back and check on Jack, but he knew Jack would be frowning and glaring daggers into Gloria. He could only hope he didn't try that with Viktor.

The building was empty. Such a massive lobby, but the building was closed during the night, at least to its kine employees. Come nightfall, the building was empty save for the Invictus that had business here. The walls were high and black marble, and elevators lined the sides of the room.

"This way." Julias continued on. Toward the back, there were a single elevator marked with Xnomina X. Julias pressed the open button, and waited.

"So ... we're going up?"

"Yes."

"To the top floor of Xnomina HQ."

"Yes."

"... fucking shit."

Julias took a quick glance at his childe. The poor boy was shaking; his inner-beast was well aware of the danger, even if Jack thought he was just nervous. He'd have to explain the beast to him later when there was time, but he could not keep Viktor waiting.

"Just stay quiet, and only speak if they ask for you to. Be pithy, and respectful. To everyone."

His childe nodded in sync with the ding of the elevator. The two stepped in, and a button press and quiet elevator ride later, stepped into a hallway, and then the conference room.

~~Jack~~

Jack didn't know fear until then.

It was a large room, modern, with a huge wooden table in the center, and massive windows that overlooked the city night. The ceiling was raised high with an array of LEDs in ornamental patterns, and the floor was the same black marble as everything. It could not have looked anymore like a conference room designed for typical high-level business discussions.

Along the table, a quick glance revealed several objects that looked religious in origin, though he could not guess it. There were also folders, mountains of paper, and pictures of people and things. On the walls, TVs fed streams of data, statistics and telemetry. Some he recognized as stocks and other economy angles, some as crime reports, some as usage statistics on products. It was the head of the Xnomina corporation, and all the power it held. It made it difficult to tear his eyes away.

But what scared him were the people inside it.

There were only three people in the room. The first was a tall man with wide shoulders, and a black suit that might as well have said 'kneel before me' on its breast. Viktor, Jack guessed. His black hair was tied into a ponytail behind his head, and his face was clearly from an older age, despite his youthful appearance. He looked like he could have worn a cape and brandished a rapier, and have pulled it off easily.

Beside him was another man, but this one was dressed to kill. Jack guessed his motifs rather mafia-esque, with blazer suit, open neck, and a piercing that connected nose to ear by a chain, all under a shaved-head. He was huge. That must have been Michael, the Gangrel.

Then there was Maria. She stood a little short, with a slim and tiny figure. Her hair was long and black over her pale skin, and much of her face was hidden behind it. With her white dress that seemed almost dead to the eye, she looked like a ghost. When she turned to face Jack, he found himself quaking. She didn't just look it, she felt like a ghost too. The air around her was cold — he could feel it from well over by the door — and bits of moisture in the air turned to mist around her.

She was Nosferatu.

“Ah, Mister Julias. Come in and introduce your friend.” That was Viktor. His voice was smooth and had some weird mingle of foreign accents, but every syllable was pronounced cleanly. An expert in communications and, by proxy, manipulations, Jack figured. The other two stood there and leveled their eyes on Jack, and he felt even more small than usual.

That new sensation inside him was howling to get away.

“Alder Viktor, may I present Master Terry, my childe.”

“I did not realize that it would be happening so soon,” Viktor said, and started to walk toward the small Ventrue. Jack did not look him in the eye, and decided it'd be best to keep his head down entirely. He gave a small bow.

“There were unexpected developments, and I was forced to embrace him early. He'd been stabbed.”

“Was he now?” This time it was the Nosferatu Maria who spoke up. Jack could feel the chill in his spine when her hoarse, raspy voice hit him. If someone had been thrown into a basement and left to die without water, he figured there final words would have sounded kinda like that.

“Yes. I believe it was Rebecca,” Julias said. Funny, Jack thought he could hear a moment’s hesitation in his friend’s response.

Alder Viktor, whatever Alder meant, walked up to Jack and looked down at him. Down didn’t do it justice. It was a king looking down at his servant’s servant. A god looking down at a pleb. He smiled, but Jack dared not look any higher than to see his lips and fangs.

The amount of body language reading was overwhelming. It was business, and he knew business, but these gods were all looking at him, and even a child would have noticed how they were thinking thirty steps ahead, purely on how he moved or didn’t move.

“I am sorry, Master Terry, that your embrace had to be handled so callously. I am sure Mister Mire did what had to be done to save your life. Tell me, what do you remember of who attacked you?”

The gods wanted him to speak. Fuck.

“... your Excellency, I remember ... a woman of similar height to myself, with red hair,” he said with lowered head. His voice wavered, and he could barely hear himself. He was sure he could hear Michael suppress a chuckle.

“That does indeed sound like Rebecca.” Viktor turned and paced before Jack and Julias. His hands had slipped behind his back, fingers netted, and his face was hardened into a small grimace. “A dangerous accusation. We’ll take it into consideration. In fact, it may have had something to do with your mission, Mister Mire.”

“Mission, Alder Viktor?”

“Yes, it ... perhaps you should send your childe home. We have business.” Viktor slowly lowered his gaze down to Jack, and the little boy averted his eyes with a snap. If he could avoid eye contact for the night, maybe he'd come out in once piece. He could still feel that thing inside him, something new and unbridled, demanding he escape these titans.

With a nod, Julias put his hand on Jack's shoulder and escorted him out of the room, before closing the doors behind them. They stopped in front of the elevator, and Julias turned Jack to face him.

"That went well," Julias said.

"It did? I got kicked out. That lasted a whole two minutes." Jack squirmed as they waited for the elevator. Some idiot must have called it back down, and now they had to wait, with those terrors behind him.

"Trust me Jack, that was a good first impression. Now, take the elevator back to the lobby and just head back to my place. Drink more of the blood I have in the fridge, and wait for me."

"How long you going to be?" Jack said.

"Don't know, but—" The ding of the elevator interrupted him. "Just get home quickly, and drink as much blood as you want. I really shouldn't just be abandoning you on your first night like this, and Viktor knows it. If he's got something I need to do now, it's important."

"Are there things I should be worried about on my first night?"

"Not if you just get back to my place quick and stay inside my apartment. I'll catch up with you later."

~~Julias~~

The building was already on fire.

“Oh shit. God ... fuck.” Julias stood at the edge of the building, just some run down old apartment building in the old district, but the flames it gave off were starting to rise. He couldn't go rooting through the building's rooms, he'd be ash in seconds, but Viktor wanted that data and supposedly it was in there.

He paced from side to side and looked through the windows. No fire alarms were going off; the building must have been abandoned. Probably condemned. The neighborhood was in the factory district, old and filled with typical lowlife. He wouldn't feed off these streets. And it meant it'd be a while before the police department showed up.

Which meant he had time. The fire was filling the front windows, but around back and behind maybe there was still time. Behind it, the parking lot was empty save for some broken cars and shopping carts, and the backs of other buildings that surrounded the block in the typical dead-city fashion. It was the sort of place he expected a Nosferatu would hang out to feed.

Third floor, apartment 35. Viktor had said a Mekhet would be there, some no-name with sensitive data. Data his master wanted. But now the building was on fire, and the whole thing stank of ash, chemicals, and unlikely coincidence.

The back door to the old building was broken off its hinges, and the fire hadn't done it. In fact, the back of the building was still mostly intact. He stepped up to the door and took a long sniff of the air, but only managed to get smoke. There was movement ahead though, someone else, some short person in a trench coat. They were trying to get up the stairs, but flames blocked their way.

“Rebecca.”

The Daeva turned around. Her speed was a blur, like it was just innate to the she-demon to move with such swiftness. She dug the balls of her feet into the flooring, and growled back at him.

He hated that she was so damn gorgeous. A somewhat petite woman with long red hair and blue eyes, she had the look of a lounge singer, and even her trench coat had that Daeva fashion sense. Classy, sophisticated, but luxurious.

“Julias. Setting fire to the building? I must admit, that’s pretty smart.”

She was accusing him of setting the fire. That meant she hadn’t done it, or was just trying to trick him.

“You stabbed my friend.”

“Ah yea, the boy ... stabbed, but not dead then? So you had time to turn him? Ah well.” The bitch gave a shrug, followed with a devil smile. Flames burned behind her, easing up and devouring the wallpaper, but she didn’t seem phased. “I should have just stabbed him in the face.”

He growled right back at her as the beast within his ribs clawed at his insides for blood. He was going to enjoy ripping her into a fleshy mess and leaving her for the flames. There was no escape, as his body was broad enough to cover the small doorway, and Rebecca knew it. Try as she might to be confident, he could see her eyes glancing around and looking for an exit. It was only getting hotter.

“Of course.”

“You even know what’s on it?”

“Do you?”

“Of course,” she said, and gave him a wicked grin. “Tony isn’t Viktor.”

“Then by all means, share with the class.”

“No.”

He thought he'd have learned by now, but no matter how many times it happened, he always underestimated Rebecca. Her fist smashed into his chest, hard, hard enough to break bones and send him stumbling back. She was such a tiny thing, but she was a Daeva, and that meant she was fast and damn strong. He'd managed to get one of his hands onto the door frame though, just in time to block the doorway when she tried to get past him.

It felt really good to crack her in the face with his knuckles. She rolled back onto her ass, but was on her feet in just a second. To his satisfaction, he could see how his punch had dented in her cheek; the bone underneath was damaged, and the fire was growing behind her.

“Get out of my way, Invictus.”

He grinned and stared down at her. “No.”

“Move! The sun is coming up soon. We'll both die here.”

“Maybe. I'd really love to make sure you burn first though.”

Her Daeva beauty faltered for a moment when she screamed death upon him. She lunged at him, but this time she brought out her knife mid-flight. He'd forgotten about the knife.

Even as a Kindred, a knife was not something to ignore. The feeling of it cutting open his stomach was painful, but his vampire body would not let his blood escape through the wound. He took the opportunity to reach out and take her neck with both hands, and squeeze.

Crack. Crunch. Her neck began to collapse inward under his large grip. It wouldn't kill her, but she wouldn't be able to do much if her neck and spine were a crushed mess. Her eyes bulged in panic, and she sliced at him several more times, but only cutting skin deep. She bared her teeth at him, and raised her hand into the air.

The knife went cleanly into his face. She'd stabbed him under the cheek, likely aiming for his temple and missing, and the metal pushed through the upper half of his jaw to come out the other side of his face. He was no Daeva wimp, he was a Ventrue, and no Ventrue would stop simply from a knife through the face. He continued crushing her neck, and jerked his head about to dislodge her grip until her hands grabbed his wrists. She wasn't strong enough to escape this. He knew it. She knew it.

"You tried to kill my friend. You failed." He threw her weight against a nearby wall, but held onto her neck hard enough that he heard bone snap. The heat was rising, fire danced up the old furniture and dirtied carpet, and smoke clouded the air. "I'm going to break you until you can't move, and then I'm going to toss you into the fire."

This time he smashed her down against a nearby table. Everything in the building was so old and worn, it gave way without resistance, so the girl crashed into the floor with wide eyes. Her hands reached out in obvious panic, and Julias glared down at her with enough rage that he could feel it coursing through his fingers. More things went pop in her neck. Her fingers found something on the floor, but he didn't care. She was dead.

By the time he'd realized what Rebecca had grabbed onto, it was too late. The crashing force of a hammer to his skull knocked him to the side, his grip lost and his balance gone.

"Fucking hell—"

She hit him again. And again. He could feel his skull cave inward under a flurry of blows from the hammer — a mallet, it looked like — before the heating floor rose up to meet him. Then, blackness.

~~Jack~~

Jack had no idea blood could be so warm.

What happened? He was on a rooftop, that much was clear, and from what he could see, he was at least ten stories up. A quick glance over the edge, complete with some vertigo and mild dizziness, confirmed his suspicion. Julias's place was only a few blocks down the street; he recognized some of the buildings even from the weird angle.

There was blood on his lips, his chin, even his neck. It'd been warm only seconds before, so warm, but now in the cold night and on his cold body, it was just as cold. The sweet, sweet taste of it was on his tongue, and the tingling bliss it filled him with rippled out into his limbs from his core. It was just like Julias's drink, but a thousand times more powerful. The hunger was gone, and he felt like he could take on the world.

The corpse behind him made him want to puke.

There was no ladder to get up this high. He must have climbed it. He didn't remember climbing the building, or who this person was. They were dead though, and their eyes weren't closed. They were just staring up at nothing, with the person's face frozen in a terrified expression.

He walked over to the body. A woman. She was in a coat, a few of the buttons torn off, and a business suit underneath. She looked maybe forty, but he couldn't tell. Nothing looked right. There was no subtle movement to her lips or eyes. No blinking. It was like some uncanny valley. With a shaking hand, he reached out to touch her face. Cold. A mess of red was around her neck, staining her blond hair, and the puncture wounds were obvious and messy. The flesh wasn't just punctured, but ripped and torn, like some animal had bitten her neck and thrashed.

She had a wedding ring.

"I ... I don't..." He fell back onto his butt, and sat there. There was a corpse in front of him. Her blood was on his lips. When he buried his face in his hands, fuzzy images of screams, walls, and darkness crept up on him.

The shaking started. He dragged his fingers down his face and stared at the woman, even as every second made him want to wrench his guts out. His body fought against the urge; it demanded blood. The thing inside him, that hidden thing clawing at his ribs was satisfied and would not let it go, no matter how much he wanted to puke it out. Jack could only hug himself tighter.

"She's dead. She's dead. She's dead." More memories sneaked their way into his consciousness. He'd been on the street, and he'd been hungry. Overwhelmingly hungry. He was supposed to get back to Julius's and have some of his blood drink, but he couldn't wait anymore. That thing inside him, it ... it demanded blood. It just demanded it.

"I did this. Fuck ... fuck..." That barrier between reality and acceptance came crumbling down, bit by bit. Not just a corpse, not just a blood bag. This woman was married. She had a family. She had a life. Her blood had been so warm. "God ... fucking ... damn it."

He sat there and cried for a while in the dark, until the woman was paler than even him. How long until sunrise? A part of him thought about just waiting it out and letting the sun take him, but the thought quickly passed. Suicide was a coward's way out. He killed someone. He had to accept that. He had to ... deal with that.

“Shit. The Masquerade.” The puncture wounds on her neck were obvious. No one would have mistaken this for anything but what it was: a vampire attack. “I ... fuck. Run. Run I could run. I could leave! Viktor couldn’t find me. I could hide and...” Only the dead quiet of the corpse in front of him answered. He couldn’t hide, not from Viktor, not from Xnomina. Where the fuck could he run? Sunlight would kill him!

And even if he did run, this corpse would end up on the news, and the puncture wounds in her neck would lead to all sorts of media sensationalism about vampires, warranted or not. Then Julias would have to pay for his mistake. He couldn’t do that to Julias.

“I ... have to ... deal with this.”

Easier said than done. He leaned over the woman — the body — and put a hand over her face. Closing her eyes did not feel natural. How many movies had he seen where they closed the person’s eyes? But he couldn’t let her ... let it see him do what he needed to do. Couldn’t let it watch.

He pulled out a knife.

~~Julias~~

Blood. There was blood being forced into his mouth. Julias didn’t think twice about it and opened his mouth wider to let the sweet nectar flow down his throat.

The revitalizing power of fresh human blood always astonished Julias. He could feel his stomach reseal, his gashes close, and his skull begin to reform. His left eye returned, and with it did his eyesight, though he could still only see darkness. He must have been underground. Was someone feeding him?

His neck eventually closed and allowed his shriveled lungs to pass air. His voice returned, and he took a few moments to make a grunt or two to test it.

“Where ... where am I?” He tried to move to at least determine his orientation. Snapping to consciousness in the dark gives horrible vertigo. His arms refused to move, but he could feel they were functioning. His legs too did not move either.

“Deep in the South Hill Cemetery. The old catacombs.”

He knew that voice. A woman’s voice. He tried to turn his head to see as his Kindred eyes adjusted, but even they had trouble deep in the dark.

“Catacombs? What ... did you... ?” He tried to move his arms and legs again, and this time the binding chains were apparent. They rattled lightly against the hard floor from his attempts to dislodge them, and even his healed body could not free them. They weren’t there for kine, they were for Kindred.

“Julias Julias Julias. You don’t recognize my voice? I’m hurt.”

His head raised at the sound of a thud and clattering of what he had to guess was bone. A stairway showed just the hint of candlelight from a room above, and a stairway connecting them. A corpse was strewn across its steps now.

He sighed. The blood had to come from somewhere.

“You’re ... Beatrice.”

“Ah, I am so glad you remembered.”

He almost gasped when the Kindred crawled onto his body, silent as a snake. She straddled him and smiled in the dark, even as her hands dragged up and down his bare chest. Bare?

This close, he could see more of her features in the dark, and combined with memories, managed to piece together what she looked like. He remembered her claws, long and unnatural. He could see her raven hair that reached her shoulders and framed her face. He could even see the odd green of her eyes and the black slits within them, like a reptile's.

With a chuckle, the Nosferatu brought a candle out and lit it with a strike of a match, and immediately the image was completed for him. She was tanned, for a vampire, and her features were almost predatory in how they highlighted the sharp, piercing gaze of her serpent eyes. She had an average height, but with a body built for flexibility and strength both. She was wearing jeans with a white tank top, and her midriff was completely exposed to show her rather impressive low bodyfat. She wore no bra, and the tight top highlighted her defined torso and pert breasts.

If he didn't know better, he'd think she was showing off. He remembered her though, at the last meeting they saw each other years ago. Nosferatu. She wasn't showing off, she just didn't care.

"I remembered you of course, Mister Julias Mire. Always in such a nice suit like a typical Ventrue. I think that Daeva ruined this one though." She let out a playful laugh and brushed aside remnants of his shirt to expose his chest.

Her laugh was what brought a quick shock back to his system. While her mouth seemed perfectly normal at a glance, past either side of her lips she carried an array of massive crocodile teeth that hooked outside of the jaw and cheek, instead of being hidden within human cheeks. When she opened her mouth, she opened it like a crocodile did, and exposed the myriad of teeth she carried. Perhaps that's why she kept her hair framed around her face, to hide her teeth, if only a little?

"I, what ... you ... you saved me?"

“Yes, I did. Brought you here last night, before the sunrise. You should thank Mr. Dunferl over there for his blood,” she said with a gesture to the corpse on the stairs behind them. “He wasn’t very willing at first, but then I made him relive his worst nightmare. Dark, dirty man.” She put a claw to his lips. “I remembered you didn’t like killing innocent kine, so I made sure to find one you wouldn’t mind disappearing.”

Last night. Shit. Jack would be wondering where he’d gone, or worse, something could have happened to him too.

“ ... thank you.”

“Don’t mention it Superman. Now you owe me one.”

“I see. I do indeed ... is that why I am tied up?” He looked to the binding metal on his left and right wrists.

“No. That’s so you can’t get away while I torture you. The Carthians caught wind Tony was checking something out, something important enough to send Rebecca. Then, funny enough, I found you.” She traced her claws up and down his chest again, and let them dance along the indentations of his broad muscles. Having just drank blood, his body was fueled and feeling the blush of life, and her claws on his skin proved strangely stimulating. “I saw an opportunity. Rebecca bashed your head in good and left you for the sun, or fire.” She snickered. “No one else knows what’s happened to you. I can just leave you strapped here until you tell me what I want to know.”

“I’ll start with—wait what?” She sat upright and glared daggers down at him. She even put her hands on her hips, and Julius had to force his lips to not smile at her childish expression.

“I’ll tell you.”

“I heard you! You ... you’re not supposed to just tell me, what the fuck Superman. Resist!”

“I’m sorry? You did save me after all, and there’s little I can do to get out of this situation. Besides, there’s not much to tell. The Invictus wanted me to check out the location for a Mekhet named Vance’s belongings. Apparently he has or knows something we want.” Julias gave a small shrug. “But I imagine you knew all that, otherwise you wouldn’t have shown up at the location as well.”

“Yes. Arg, fuck you you ... fucking Ventrue. You’re not in control here!” She planted both her hands against the stone floor around his head and leaned forward. Her serpent eyes practically glowed, and her mouth opened at the cheeks to expose her assortment of teeth before she closed it. When her mouth was closed, her lips looked perfectly human, until the corners of her lips met with the array of massive crocodile teeth.

“Sorry.”

“And stop apologizing! Fucking Superman.”

The two held eye contact for a moment, and Julias wondered about the Nosferatu before him. Her green, serpent eyes were gazing down at him with enough predatory fervor that the beast in him was trapped in a strange mix of fright and intrigue. She really was beautiful, but her crocodile mouth couldn’t be hidden even with her black hair trapped over the sides of her face. The center part of her mouth though, the human lips, were dark and ... inviting?

It was Jack’s fault. It had to be. Before the kid even knew about Kindred, he was sharing tales with Julias about being attracted to scary women, women in horror stories, women with teeth.

He blamed video games and the internet.

“The fuck are you looking at.” She lowered her gaze further, until their noses were almost touching. “Ladies’ man not used to looking at a chick with teeth? Thought you’d be used to Nosferatu with one of your bosses being one.”

“I am, and she ... looks nothing like you.”

“Sorry not all Nosferatu got the same little quirks.” She opened her mouth wide this time, far wider than a human could, and showed both her array of massive teeth, and a long dark tongue before she closed up. “We can’t all be delicate little flowers for your fucked up Superman save me routine. Don’t think I haven’t seen you in the clubs and bars, seducing soft, gentle girls and giving them a night of passion and romance and a good bye Kiss.”

“I didn’t—”

“Shut the fuck up.” She drove her hand into the stone next to him, literally into the stone, so that her claws sank an inch through the floor. Nosferatu were strong. “Now I’m pissed. Staring at my face like that. I should just rip you to bits right here.” She sat upright onto his pelvis, and Julias bent a little at the hip when her butt landed against his crotch.

Definitely Jack’s fault. It was true about his love for more tender and romantic relations with the kine, but now this Nosferatu was sitting on his crotch and she had the control. She had the body of a warrior gymnast and her jeans and tank top hugged so tight it left nothing to the imagination. Her crocodile smile only drew in his interest, his intrigue, and her serpent eyes ... Try as he might, he couldn’t look away from her face. She really did have nice lips, supple and soft looking, even with her crocodile teeth on either side. She was powerful, scary, monstrous looking, but ... sexy.

Always thinking with your dick, Julias. You’re a Kindred, act like one.

“There you go, staring again. Maybe you won’t stare so much if I— what the fuck.” Beatrice looked behind her, and Julias could only shift in embarrassment at what she found. He’d grown an erection, and it was pressing through his suit’s pants and nudging against her ass.

“Ah, sorry. I just ... the blood you fed me, it’s ... yeah, you know, and—”

She put a hand over his mouth and used her other to gesture around them. “Let me get this straight, Superman. I got you tied up in a fucking catacomb. The shelves here are full of bones. The floor is covered in dust and ash. There is a corpse of a rapist behind us, the one I fed to you. You have a fucking Nosferatu sitting on you ready to rip you apart ... and you get a stiffy.”

“Oh I know. You just drank. You get that rush inside you, makes the body quiver and the skin tingle. Makes you feel alive again. It doesn’t give you a fucking boner though, unless...” She removed her hand and leaned toward him again with both her sets of claws against his bare chest. “Does Superman have a dark side?”

“I ... uh...” He didn’t know what to say. This wasn’t exactly a normal situation. He looked around at the room she described, but couldn’t find any explanation beyond the obvious. He had remembered Beatrice from when they met, and hadn’t thought much of it, but now that she was on him and they had a chance to exchange words, there was something about her Carthian punk attitude that was appealing to him. That and her child-of-the-damned aura she was pulling off extremely well. Nosferatu were always good at that.

“Let’s find out.” She gazed down at him and brought up some claws to stroke her neck. The monster was thinking, pondering, but for the life of him he couldn’t guess what. Those snake eyes of her were looking into him though, and for a moment, he thought she might rip out his insides to see what they looked like. She was getting angrier.

“What ... I mean, what do you want to do, or wish to know?”

“You sleep with women almost every day. You make kine drop their panties at just the sound of your voice, and all without using your abilities. Like a Daeva, they flock to you and gladly sit on your cock and let you drink their blood. I see you do it all the time. You know what I do?” She took her claws and grabbed the collar of his open shirt. “I hide. I blend to the crowd or shadows, and I grab someone unsuspecting and drink them. If I’m feeling angry, I’ll make them relive their worst nightmare, or maybe one of my own. I’ll get into their mind, and from the dark I’ll ruin their lives. Sometimes I kill them, sometimes I don’t.” She shook him hard enough to make his eyes bounce around in their sockets. “And you! You just fucking walk into any public place and let the girls get in line.”

“I’m sorry Beatrice, but ... I know you’ve been around for a while. I thought you’d...” She was really dropping the hammer on him, complete with rage in her voice. The shock was apparent on his face, it must have been.

“Fuck you, Superman. Really, just ... what the fuck. Will you sleep with anything on two legs?”

He frowned up at her. That was too far.

“I haven’t had relations with another vampire in over fifty years, Beatrice.” Other Kindred had no spark, no life, no passions or desires. Just hunger. Beatrice was proving him wrong though, and quickly at that.

“I’d ... I’d thought you...” She leaned down again until her nose was almost touching his. Those teeth were huge. “Then what the fuck?”

“I can’t be attracted to you?”

“You can say I’d be surprised, yes. Lots of Kindred out there without a shark smile.”

“ ... I like the smile.”

Her mouth opened in a classic jaw drop. He was almost proud of himself for finding the right words to get the power back into his hands. Ventrue habit. It was the truth though, and he did find his eyes drifting between her green serpent eyes and the extra teeth between her cheek and jaw bone. His erection wasn’t going away.

“I’m afraid I have to insist on my freedom. I sired a friend just tonight ... last night, actually. I’m afraid if I don’t get back to him soon, he’ll—”

She put her hand over his lips again.

“Mffmf.”

She laughed. Not some sadistic, cruel laugh, or manipulative typical Kindred laugh. The woman laughed. If he didn’t know any better, he thought he might have seen a genuine smile on that crocodile mouth.

“I’m going to let you go, and because you’re such a nice guy, you’re going to come back here next week, and you’re going to do what I ask. Got it?”

~~Jack~~

Jack woke up in a bed. It was a nice change from the last time he woke up. Comfy sheets, quiet, no pain in his belly or blood soaking his clothes.

With the slow dawn of realization, he sat up. It was Julias's spare bedroom, the one on the same floor as the kitchen and living room. The blinds — apparently on a timer — started to open on their own, and pulled aside to expose the night sky of the city.

When the sun had started to come up the night before, the change was immediate. The exhaustion overwhelmed him, and within moments, he'd collapsed onto the bed with no say in the matter. Thank god Julias's place had timed curtains, or he'd have probably cooked.

So it was the next night. The next night of being a vampire. He looked down at his stomach; those stabs wounds were still there, closed and healed but never fully sealing.

“Still no Julias. I wonder ... if his mission got him...” He shook his head, slapped his own face a few times, and got up. He'd never been in Julias's place without him. Without thinking about it, he walked into the kitchen, poured himself a glass of blood, and sat down on the couch. He'd seen Julias do it a hundred times, and now, it seemed so natural.

He turned on the TV.

“—orpse was found in the South Side docks. Mrs. Pavala's head had been cut from the body, and was found some ways down the docks.”

Next channel.

“Mrs. Pavala's widow is left with two sons and a daughter to care f
—”

There wasn't anything he could do, other than wait for Julias to get back. So he sat there and stared at the glass of red in his hands between his knees. Images of Mrs. Pavala's face — fuck he never counted on learning her name — forced their way into his mind. Cold dead eyes. Warm, tasty, delicious blood.

Nothing to be done but brood, so he just listened to the silent clocks. It wasn't until an hour later that the door opened. Julias walked in, far worse for wear than Jack was. His sire's clothes were ruined, and his face was covered in dirt, ash, and blood.

“Rebecca! That she-witch nearly killed me. Left me for the sun.”

“Shit. So she's nearly killed both of us in one night.”

“Yeah. Yeah she did. I'm going to catch that Daeva bitch and crucify her and let the sun eat her. And I'll watch.”

Jack blinked. His sire was pacing around, fists clenched, livid and dripping with fury. His teeth were grinding, fangs bared, and something else. Something inhuman and unseen was coming off of him in waves, like rippling waves of ... of something. Something that shook him to his core.

“I'm sorry,” he said, and after taking a moment to compose himself, he sat down next to Jack. “And you? I just sent you back to my place on the night of your embrace. That is not good form on my part.”

Jack took a moment to look at his friend. Part of him wanted to scream at him, to yell and cry and tear into him and blame him. How dare he leave him alone? He didn't know that the sun would make him pass out, he didn't know about feeding on living humans, and ... he didn't know about whatever it was that took control the night before.

So he just turned on the TV.

“—hunt for Mrs. Pavala's killer continues. Coroners say it has been one day since her body was dumped into the water, and that she died of bloodless before her mutilation. Please be warned, the following scenes are quite graphic.”

Julias turned it off, and stared at him. Jack could only maintain eye contact for a couple seconds before he had to look away. He could feel himself trying to cry, but the tears didn't come; corpses don't cry.

“I ... I am so sorry Jack. I ... Viktor ... I...” He stopped. He probably figured words wouldn't mean anything. He figured right. “Did you ... lose control?”

“Yeah. Seems that way.” He forced his voice to not break. He was already sobbing, a voice crack was not what he needed right now, so he just sipped his blood.

“The beast. That thing you feel inside you. If you don't feed for a long time, it ... it takes control. It shouldn't have happened so soon, but ... maybe because you'd been stabbed so much, and had to heal, it...”

“There's a beast inside me?”

“All of us.”

“Wonderful.” He took another sip of his drink, and wiped away at his eyes. No tears, but it felt like there should be. “I had ... had to get rid of the body.” The body. Say it. The body. “Had to get rid of it, and hide that she’d been ... bitten.”

“I can’t even ... you did the right thing, Jack. Always preserve the Masquerade. But it should never have gone down like this. This is all my fault.”

“Just tell me one thing. Does drinking someone always kill them?” Am I going to be killing people on a regular basis?

“No, not at all.” The pain on Julias’s face was so blatant, Jack could feel it on his shoulders. “I’ll teach you how to drink someone, the Kiss, and you’ll see it’s not so bad a thing. It can be a great thing even.”

Jack choked on a laugh. “Great thing ... hard to see that side right now.”

“You’ll see. Really.” His sire stood up, took his drink away, and gave him a pat on the shoulder. “Much as this sucks, this is why I sired you, Jack. You did something god awful, and you took care of it when any other freshly embraced would have just disappeared, or waited for sunrise.”

“ ... yay me.”

“I’m serious Jack. You did good.”

“I killed someone!” He stood up and stared straight up at his sire. The difference in their sizes didn’t matter, the difference in their ages didn’t matter, and all the favors in the world Jack owed Julias didn’t matter. He shoved his friend back and shoved him hard, hard enough that he fell back against the counter harder than he’d ever have been able to shove him were he alive. “I killed someone! They’re...”

Julias didn't even fight him back. The big guy just sat down at the counter he'd been pushed against, and listened.

"She's dead."

"I know, Jack, I know."

"I ... I don't..."

"You feel bad you killed someone, even though it wasn't really your fault. Remember that feeling, but don't let it bury you." Julias smiled, walked over to him, and put a hand on his shoulder again, even as Jack sobbed a few more times. "It will keep you human."

~~Julias~~

There she was, bitch supreme.

Julias stood way up high, a good twenty feet above the unsuspecting kindred. The remains of the fire were barely enough to call a building, but then the abandoned apartment had been rundown and rotting for sometime. At least before it was burned to a crisp. Not many homes remained this close to the factory district, but warehouses remained at large, and Julias kept low upon one's roof. He hated to leave Jack again, but his childe was home, fed, safe, and this had to be dealt with and dealt with now.

Rebecca was dressed in jeans and a hoodie, which were hilariously out of place with her usual attire, the Daeva vixen, but it made it far easier to move about at night, ignored in the bowels of a city like the warehouse district. She was rummaging through the burned wood and blackened furniture for something, but what? The shattered array of ruined beams and barely standing walls were enough to block Julias's view; he'd have to sneak in closer.

It's hard to sneak in a suit, and shoes, and especially when you generally suck at sneaking. The beast in him was not interested in sneaking. It wanted to walk in through the front door and bend his prey's mind to his will like some idiot puppet, but that wasn't going to work. If he wanted what Rebecca had, he'd have to catch her by surprise. Daeva are fast.

He climbed down the side of the warehouse, taking care that each step onto the siding was quiet. He'd have jumped down but shoes landing on asphalt weren't quiet enough, so he climbed. He must have looked hilarious, he imagined, still in his suit but scaling down the side of a building. Once he was low enough, he gripped the side of a window and let himself slide down with gravity, just slow enough to land with only the gentle tap of a shoe.

She was still there, rummaging and digging, but still too far to see with any detail. He knew he wouldn't be able to get closer, but there had to be something. This was the factory district, and there had to be rats.

He took a moment to look around while keeping himself to the dark. Indeed, a rat passed by, no doubt on a journey from one abandoned house to one of the warehouses to scavenge. Pressed to the wall of the warehouse, it stopped to look at Julias, its beady little eyes wide in the dark. Julias looked straight back at it. He could feel the tiny creature's presence, its quick little mind, its silent feet, and its odd intelligence. He could feel every bit of its self-awareness even as the creature lost control of itself.

Then, he could feel it hand itself over to him, and become him.

Now Julias was the one scurrying in the dark. He turned to look at the body of the man slumped against a wall in the dark of the night. His eyes weren't wide or beady, and his suit was indeed hilariously out of place. Now, with a form slick and quiet and unnoticeable, Julias crawled over the leg of his old comatose body, and scampered toward Rebecca.

“There has to be something,” she said. The red-haired vixen was opening drawers and opening folders, all too preoccupied to notice the little rat. His fur blended nicely into the ash of the burned home, so much that he might as well not have existed as he got closer still. His feet didn’t even rustle the soot beneath him.

She eventually found a box buried underneath more folders.

“Please don’t be locked, please ... shit.”

Shit. She found something. His claws dug effortlessly into the dirt and burnt wood, and he worked his way up a beam to a higher position. Little whiskers tickled the air as he pressed to the wall, but he had to get closer and see what she was talking about. To be silent was effortless, but now that he was above her, he cursed within his little rat mind. He couldn’t see shit; damn a rat’s blurry vision. He could hear just fine though, every little detail.

Minutes went by, then an hour. Tony’s childe continued to dig through the wreckage, and as time went by she only got more and more anxious. Soon she was actually pushing pillars over, lifting objects no young woman should be able to lift, and getting dirtier than any Daeva he’d ever seen bother to get. She could have just ripped the box open, but then, Mekhet were smart. A damaged box could mean ruined contents.

“Come on, he has to ... fuck yes. Finally.”

Rebecca wasn’t stupid though. Or at least, not so stupid as to go shouting to the rooftops what she was doing. She kept quiet and murmured to herself as she worked. And he could hear every word of it. He could even hear the tick of metal opening; she’d found a key.

“Drop location ... North Side ... a month.”

He laughed. Well, a rat didn't laugh, so he let out a tiny squeak of joy. Her quiet muttering was his for the listening.

“Blah blah ... Antoinette's downfall?” Rebecca stood up straight, tensed, and slipped something into her pocket. Then she was gone. Her insane speed combined with his blurry rat vision made following her with eyes impossible.

He didn't need to though. Now he knew what he had to do, and he had one month to do it.

He broke the connection, and the snap back into his own body left a dizzying wave to crash into him. With a groan, he forced himself back to his feet, dusted himself off, and started to walk back home. A whistle had joined his gait, and with his hands in his pockets, he even found a skip in his step. He couldn't stop smiling.

Rebecca would find out he was still alive soon, and it would eat at her how that happened. He definitely needed to thank Beatrice for that. He now knew what Tony and Rebecca were up to, so a failed mission was partially recovered. On top of it all, his friend had nearly died, then killed someone, and yet his friend was now his child, and of his own willpower managed to preserve the Masquerade in the most horrible of situations. Things were bouncing back.

His mind wandered back to Beatrice. The sexy Nosferatu — a paradox he still blamed Jack for — had saved his life and then let him go. He'd misjudged the crocodile-mouth in the past, back when they met at a cross-covenant meeting in the Elysium. That must have been ten years ago.

“Saved my life, let me go ... if Garry knew. Heh.” He laughed. Could he have found a potential ally in her? She was a loose cannon if there ever was one, strong, wild, and brazen. If he gave her the explosives, she'd probably have blown up the Prince's tower just to watch the fallout.

Whatever her plan was for him, he did owe her. And for the first time in decades, he had no idea what sort of favor this Kindred he owed would ask for.

He found himself looking forward to it.

Chapter 3

The next week went by in a blur. Jack couldn't have imagined the amount of details he'd have to learn just to get a grasp for his new world, or the amount of work he'd have to do to be able to make his old life gone.

The first night was spent organizing enough hints to suggest to his family that he'd been killed, and that there was no body to find. Vague bits of evidence left that lead to reports of kidnapping and murders. He'd watched his family during the night then, through windows and from trees. He watched them monitor the news with crying eyes, and watched them hug each other until they crumbled.

He never thought of himself as a family man, but seeing his mom die a little inside nearly broke his resolve. Thrice, his sire had to stop him from walking in on his family and proclaiming he was still alive. He was allowed only one trip to his tombstone, lest he risk someone recognizing him.

During all this, he was haunted by the face of Mrs. Pavala. Julius told him to accept it and move on, that he had to work past it. Don't look up any pictures of her family. Don't look into how her husband's doing. Don't stare at that one picture of her the news had of when she was smiling. Of course he did all these things, and slowly dug himself a hole that took every bit of energy he had to dig himself out of.

It was a painful couple weeks of misery and self loathing. Every brooding cliché he could think of, he experienced. Staring in the mirror, breaking dishes, crying over photos of his family, and everything in between. But, with a little time, the pain faded.

Next, he had to learn about being a Kindred.

“Normally,” Julias said, “when you want to drink someone, or Kiss them as we call it, you can either subdue them physically or use your disciplines.”

“Disciplines?”

“Abilities of the blood. You’ll learn about those later.”

The two of them were walking around outside, middle of the night, in a graveyard nearest Julias’s place. It was a rich person’s graveyard, with everything in a neat row and all the mausoleums in prime condition. Even the fence that surrounded the place was massive, Gothic, and well maintained.

“So I can just ... pin someone down?”

“Indeed.” Julias made a grabbing motion with his arms. “You can hold someone easily, and then bite into them. Control yourself, control them, and they will succumb to the Kiss. It will immediately sap their energy.”

“Like ... a snake bite.”

“No. The Kiss will not only be the best feeling you’ve ever had, but if you do it gently, it can be amazing for the person you bite too.”

“ ... come again?”

Julias came over to him, hands in pockets, and walked side-by-side with him between the tombstones. “Romantic vampire trash novels? Not entirely unfounded. A kine — human — being Kissed is more or less trapped in a state of orgasmic bliss, if you do it subtly. Gently.”

“Oh. That...” As much as his last feeding experience still left haunting pain in his gut, he had to admit the idea of a pleasurable vampire bite was rather enticing.

“Make no mistake, a Kindred lives for the Kiss. A hundred years from now, it will be the thing that makes you wake up for night, spawn an empire, have a harem of ghouls, and much more.”

“Are you serious? I’m dealing with people like Viktor, gods basically, who are motivated only by their hunger?”

Julias chuckled and patted him on the shoulder. It got under Jack’s skin, and Julias knew it. He’d make sure to find a way to get Julias back later.

“When you’ve got a proper taste for the Kiss, you’ll understand. The Prince rules Dolareido, hundreds of Kindred, with an iron fist and an unbreakable will, because it means she gets to live a long life filled with the Kiss.” Julias leaned back onto a tombstone and put his hands against it to balance himself. “I know your first time was horrible, and a blur, but when it’s done right, it ... makes this unlife worth it, Jack. It really does.

“Someday even, you may have your own ghoul. A person you can feed on whenever you want.” He grinned a knowing grin at Jack, and the small Ventrue quirked a brow at him.

“Ghoul?”

“When you have the strength to hold one, you can feed your blood to a human, one who is healthy and alive. They will, as long as you continue to feed them regularly, no longer age. They’ll be stronger, faster for it, and they’ll be your loyal servant. A Kindred-blood-addicted servant.”

“I’m ... not sure I’d want a blood-addicted servant.”

Julias nodded back at him and stroked at his chin. “Me neither. I’ve never created a ghoul. When you’re strong enough to take care of yourself, don’t think you can’t have one just because I don’t. Just make sure to talk to me first. They're not only very valuable tools, but they can be good friends too."

"You sound like you know some ghouls."

"I do. So do you."

"I do?"

"Indeed. You may even see some you recognize at the ball tomorrow."

"Ball? Ball what ball? You never said anything about a ball."

"The ball I'm taking you to tomorrow." Julias chuckled and winked at him. His sire was a nice guy, but manipulation and deceit came to him as second nature.

"I'm going to a ball?"

"Yeap."

"... to a ball."

"Yeap."

"You mean a suit, dresses, appetizers—"

"Hors d'oeuvres."

"Whatever! With ... with all the politics and nuance I don't get?"

"Yeap."

Jack ran his fingers over his buzzed head with a sigh. If there was one way he was going to get himself killed, it was saying something he shouldn't at a ball.

---

“You look like a Ventrue, my good man. A small one, but a Ventrue nonetheless.”

Jack frowned at his sire. They were walking down that same old street, the one that connected to his friend’s apartment complex. The city was way too crowded, even at this time of night, for his sire to bother with a car. A cab was the only viable means of travel.

That or jumping along rooftops, which was perfectly doable to two vampires. Just not good for the rather fancy suits they were wearing. Suits made for a ball, not for business.

“Should I be wearing a mask or something?”

“You most definitely do not wear suits like this to a cocktail party. It’s practically a wedding tuxedo. I think I can feel the souls of the hundred slaves who sacrificed their lives to sew this thing with their blood.”

“That’s how you know it’s quality. Come on.” His sire only smiled at him as he waved down a taxi. “So do you know how to speak at the party?”

“You mean ... don’t?”

“Haha, well ... yeah, I guess. It’s probably a good idea for you to simply not, unless someone talks to you. Viktor, you may greet as Your Excellency, like in the meeting. Maria and Michael, greet as My Lady Turio and My Lord McDonald. Pay attention to how other Invictus talk with each other, and you’ll start picking up on the titles. It’s a game, with rules and implications that you’re good at figuring out.”

“But ... there are so many other Kindred. I didn’t even meet the rest of the circle, and—”

“Viktor, Maria and Michael are a triumvirate. They each have their right and left hands if you will, and many of them have freshly embraced to care for, such as yourself to me. Just stick by me, and you will be introduced to others. To others of similar rank as myself, address as Most Admirable Mister or Madam surname. To others who are young like yourself, you may address as Master or Miss surname. If referring to them but not speaking directly at them, add The at the start of their title.”

“Mister or Madam for people like you, Master or Miss for people like me. Ok, ok.”

“As for people outside the Invictus who are visiting, well...” Julias shrugged and, once a cab had pulled up, he opened the door and stepped in, with Jack to follow. “To the Fall Palace my good man.” The cab driver nodded and started driving without a sound. Apparently this was normal for him. Jack took a moment to look at him with scrutiny.

“Wait, others? Other co—, er, groups will be visiting?”

“You may speak freely. George works for Maria. He knew when to pick us up.”

The human gave a small salute, but otherwise kept driving.

“Oh. Ok, well, um ... others? Like, Carthians or Cronos?”

“The Circle of the Crone has very few members, and never meddle in our affairs. Invictus run this city, with only the Carthians as a thorn in our side, so we invite Garry to our balls to encourage him to join us, or at least mend bridges. Other cities often have a much more violent relationship between the Invictus and Carthians. We do not want that.

“Oh shit. Antoinette and ... Daniel.” Jack shivered in his seat. His sire’s sire’s boss, and her hitman. Julias had sewed a few stories of the nasty hits Daniel had done on unruly Kindred.

“We pay her every courtesy. She lets us run the city, even as she stands as Prince. We dare not risk offending her as she does very little to impede us, and only controls the Kindred in the city to preserve the Masquerade. When she gave Viktor permission for the Invictus to sire someone, he gave that right to me, and I then had to ask her for it personally.”

“Hoops! So many hoops, Julias! Oh fuck, fucking ... ugh.” The small boy leaned his head down and put his elbows to his knees. How was he going to manage all this? One wrong word and he’d be exiled or executed or worse. He couldn’t imagine worse, but he was sure there was worse.

“Refer to her as Your Excellency as well, and you’ll be fine. Come on, you got this.”

The explanations continued. Minor details that he would never remember, but he knew that just hearing them beforehand meant catching onto it faster once he was in the wolf’s den. Jack prayed he’d find another Kindred his own age, someone he could confide in, someone he could open his mouth to and not risk immediate death. Fat chance.

Very fat chance. The building was something out of the Victorian age. It was a ballroom. A genuine ballroom, complete with a ludicrously massive chandelier, classic paintings of godly figures on the walls, and red-lined chairs on the sides of the immensely tall walls. To its end, two staircases curved upward and joined into a balcony.

Even more intimidating were the people. They were all dressed in clothes that looked like a strange combination of the past and the future. Suits were both fashionable but honorable. Dresses were both frilly and long, but also revealing and sexy. He figured at least a hundred people were standing around, talking with each other over the quiet music of some classical composer he did not know.

Nearly every one of them was a vampire, and the beast in his chest cowered at the sight of it all.

How could there have been so many vampires in Dolareido? And all of them were Invictus. He recognized members of each blood clan, and as he gazed over them, they looked back at him with inspecting eyes. Too many eyes. He found himself paralyzed in the opening archway of the ballroom, suddenly with no idea where to put his hands. A hundred hungry, deadly predators were looking right at him, and more than one of them had that same downcast in their eyes that Viktor and his partners had.

He was just a little minnow in a tank full of piranha.

“Presenting Mister Julias Mire, and childe Master Jack Terry.” A man to the side called out his title to the crowd, complete with a smart phone in his hand. Jack wouldn’t have been surprised if the man had been carrying a parchment of guest names instead.

“Mister Mire! How good of you to join us.” A man, all too similar in Julias in build except for his long, black hair. Another man straight out of a mafia film.

“Mister Vanna. I am glad to see your business venture has gone well. Might I introduce Master Terry, my childe.”

Jack gulped, but managed to make a small bow.

“Master Terry. Fresh to the fold I see? I am delighted to meet you.”

“The pleasure is mine, Most Admirable Mister Vanna.” He stood straight again, and raised his head only long enough to glance to Vanna’s eyes. The other Invictus was smiling, and even gave him a wink. He could breathe, or at least would if a vampire needed to. Habits die hard.

“Fret not, you are safe, the guest of honor should be arriving momentarily though. Come, I bore of this dillydallying. Let us talk business.”

And they were off. Jack did his best to stay behind his sire, but the dancing bodies and the swaying dresses and the lovely music were all such a strange contrast to the reality of it all that he found himself distracted. Maria, he saw in the distance, was not some frightful ghost haunting and killing, but instead wore a white dress that was both long and elegant, and even weirder, the scary Nosferatu was talking with other Kindred. He could tell some of them found the ghost woman unsettling, but they talked to her nonetheless. It was a den of monsters.

He half expected to find a dining table with a naked woman’s body on it, and drink taps plugged into her wrists.

A group of men and women were circled in the center of the floor, and of them Jack recognized the other of the inner circle, Michael. He too was wearing a beautiful suit that was odd to see on so beastly a man. They were chatting, using words in contexts he did not understand. Angel? Red book? Monomacy? Valea? He dared not ask anyone, but if he could remember to ask Julias later, maybe he could get somewhere.

There were other freshly embraced as well. Paiges of their Invictus sires like him, so he was told. They were nervous too, but many of them stood side by side with their sires, instead of behind. Most were tall, proud looking, with great bodies and intelligent eyes.

They were doing as he was, absorbing information, saying less than they knew so as to never leave an opening, and to always find a step up without exposing their flank.

Even the kids were learning to dance the Danse.

“Mister Mire. Welcome.”

Jack froze, but forced himself to look in the direction of the voice. Viktor came walking down from the balcony, and many of the party stopped talking to look to him.

He was a king and a tyrant in a suit. The black ensemble looked like something one would wear to an opera, but with the streamlined adaptations of the future. He knew Viktor to be a powerful, old beast, and guessed someone else had picked his wardrobe. They'd done their job well, as what might as well have been an emperor stepped down to join them. Viktor, like many of the Ventrue, was tall and well built, and his long black hair was tied into a ponytail. Jack could not have felt more out of place with his buzzed head.

“Alder Viktor, I am glad to have made it. I see Mister Tones of the Carthians has joined us,” Julius said, and made motion to the one Viktor had been talking to on the balcony. It was for Jack's sake more than anyone else's, and Jack thanked his sire with a small nod before looking up to see the man. Garry Tones did not look good in a suit, and was clearly uncomfortable, but just a glance at him made Jack nervous. He was normal height, shaved head, with a hard jaw and a fighter's body. The Gangrel leader of the Carthians looked like he was raised fighting on the streets.

Jack expected dynamite to have longer patience than Garry, by the looks of him.

“Mister Tones and I were discussing the growing incidence of our neonates becoming violent with each other. Conflicts are to be expected. Violence that is a blatant threat to the Masquerade is to be punished.”

“Of course, Alder Viktor, I—”

“I know you to be of sound mind, Mister Mire, as well as Mister Vanna. You, my Master Terry, are you of sound mind? Would you thoughtlessly pick fights with a random Carthian, in hopes of boast?”

Viktor, Julias, and Vanna all looked at him expectantly. It wasn't just the four of them that were silent, nearby Invictus were listening and watching now too, and Jack found himself the center of attention of at least thirty members, even paiges who glanced between each other in shock. Apparently, his predicament was unique.

“ ... Your Excellency, I would not stir trouble that was not worth its price, and nothing is worth risking the Masquerade,” Jack said, and dared not raise his eyes above Viktor's shoes.

The other Invictus smiled and nodded to each other, and Viktor, if the movement of his shoes was any indication, seemed pleased by Jack's response. He used the correct address to his superior, he upheld the value of the Masquerade, and he made it in the context of business. Point for you, Jack.

“Well spoken Master Terry. The Invictus do not waste resources on pointless acts of pride. The First Estate was not built on juvenile jousts.” He gave a nod, and went on his way. The crowd returned to its chitchat, and Jack more than once heard his name. Not exactly the way he wanted others in the Invictus to learn about him, but not bad at all.

“Well spoken indeed, Master Terry.” Vanna gave him a small nod and walked after Viktor to join in whatever conversation they had planned.

Once Jack glanced back to his sire, Julias gave him a grin. Jack couldn't help but grin back. This wasn't so bad.

“May I present Alder Antoinette, Prince.”

Jack turned at the sound of the announcer. Alder Antoinette? The Prince wasn't Invictus. But then, Julius said she was regularly invited, so perhaps she liked to play to their etiquette?

When the crowd shifted to look, Jack found himself staring at the backs of many other Invictus, and no way to see the Prince. He stepped to the side a little further, and a little further still, until he was leaning over one of the seats on the side of the great hall to see. No one was looking at him or his goofy pose, and damn it he really wanted to see the Prince.

He almost fell into the chair once he did.

If he didn't know better, he'd think it were some kind of story or fairy tale character he was looking at. The Prince was very, very tall. She had a foot of height on him, so that she was even taller than Julias or Viktor. Her dress was very long, smooth, elegant, tasteful but gloriously sexy in its black curves and subtle sparkle. This Daeva did not care for the frilly dresses the Invictus wore. It seemed she preferred more formfitting dresses.

That form was fitting to be sure. She wasn't just tall, she was a deadly creature of lean physique but also glorious curves. The hips, the waist, the absolutely massive breasts. Jack's jaw was hanging open, but he couldn't tear his eyes away from her. Her hair was wavy, long, like some sort of princess, but it was white. Pure white. And unless he was seeing things, the iris of her eyes were red. White hair, but she didn't look old at all.

A quick glance to Julias, and his sire gave him a nod of knowing. She was both unusual looking, and absolutely beautiful.

She was making her way through the crowd. She was shaking hands, nodding, exchanging momentary courtesies with the triumvirate before moving onto the ancillae. She ... she was greeting the neonates. She was greeting the paiges! Every Kindred she passed, it seemed she greeted, and she was getting further through the crowd.

“Mister Mire. It has been weeks since your request. Has it gone well?”

Her voice carried just a hint of French, and was smooth like her dress. Her lips were red against her milky white skin, and her eyes were indeed red too.

“I have, your Excellency. May I present Master Terry, my childe.”

Jack slowly, so very slowly, raised his head to look up at the Prince. She was looking right at him, right into him, with her red eyes and her red smile. God she was beautiful. The beast in him was both stricken with fear from the power that dripped from the Prince, but also awe-struck with her. As a Daeva, it was only expected she'd have spent a long time making herself look beautiful, but the sheer confidence she displayed was overwhelming. Even those around who must have been intimidated by her massive height were watching her with hungry eyes.

“Master Terry. Tell me child, what is your first name?”

“ ... J-Jack, your Excellency.”

“Master Jack Terry. I am pleased to make your acquaintance.” She gave him a small nod, and continued on her way.

When she moved, everyone stepped aside for her with lowered heads and roaming eyes. She was Jessica Rabbit with white hair and a black dress. Even just how she walked in those heels was mesmerizing, complete with a hip sway that demanded everyone's gaze. The dress left her back wholly exposed, and her height only served to emphasize the long, enticing curve of her spine down to the small of her back. Her lengthy attire, sliding along the clean floor behind her, was split at the hip and left one of her legs exposed, and Jack's eyes opened a little wider each time she took a step with her right leg to bare the long, milky, toned limb.

He would have been drooling if he could salivate. He didn't even look around, just at her. The rest of the ball had gone on about its business, and Antoinette was talking with Garry and Viktor up on the balcony. When feeling returned to his limbs, Jack turned to look to Julias, and his sire gave him a small shrug.

"She likes to know everyone's name."

"Everyone's? I ... that ... what." He took a moment to look around at the other paiges, and they too were watching after the Prince, as confused as he. "Why?"

"Because she's good at what she does." Julias walked up to Jack, and motioned for him to follow. "She and her Sheriff are the only Ordo Dracul we know of in the city, and yet she is Prince. Never underestimate her, Jack. She is cunning, intelligent, and dangerous." Soon, the two of them found a caterer, and like a couple of snobs, were drinking blood from expensive wine glasses.

"Indeed. The Prince is both a beautiful and deadly ally."

Jack and Julias turned at the sound of another. A woman, dressed in a conservative white dress of minimal frills. She was only as tall as Jack, and even thinner than he. Her features were soft, skin almost obsidian, and her long black hair was kept smooth to her back.

"Ah, Miss Pol. May I introduce Master Terry, my childe."

“Charmed.” She gave a small curtsy, and Jack replied with a small bow. His insides weren’t freaking out with fear, but were instead comparing itself against this new creature. She couldn’t have been very old.

“Miss Pol is Mekhet, and recently ended her paige-hood and became a neonate with the Invictus. You met her sire at the reception of Xnomina. The Madam Jennings.”

Gloria Jennings. She’d called him small, but maybe it was a flirtation? Miss Pol was certainly small.

“That is correct, Most Admirable Mister Mire. I am pleased to know my name is not forgotten. The Invictus grow large.”

“You are most welcome. Master Terry and I were discussing the faces of those he does not yet know. It is his first time at the ball,” Julias said.

“Then I am sure his mind must be reeling with the names and faces and customs.” She stepped toward Jack, and he stood his ground. There was a glint of something in her eyes, awareness perhaps, or intrigue. “I bid you farewell, Master Terry.”

And like that she was gone. Jack scratched at his buzzed hair, and looked back to Julias with confusion on his face.

“Um ... what was that?”

“She was introducing herself. Now you know who she is, she knows who you are, she knows you know who she is, and who her sire is, and her current progression in the ranks, and she knows I remember her.” Julias made some puppeteer motions with his hands. “All from thirty seconds of her time.”

“ ... damn. This will take some getting used to.”

“You have all the time in the world now.” Julias gave him a pat on the back. “Come on, I’ll introduce you to some more, less threatening people. Then we’re out of here. I got a date.”

Was she nervous? When was the last time that happened?

Beatrice stood in front of her mirror in her home, far from her feeding den at the cemetery. It was an abandoned old apartment building, and other Carthians went there to sleep, deep in the Prince-sanctioned district of the Carthians, where they were safe. Likely safe, anyway. It was old, dusty, falling apart, and rats outnumbered them a thousand to one. The only thing they were safe from was Invictus invasion, not from the building falling on their heads.

But it was quiet. And some nice Mekhet had even stolen them power and, fucking hilariously, internet. There was a laptop next to her, complete with running music. She was a metal fan, naturally.

Nude in front of her mirror, and adjusting her hair in preparation for her date. Could she even call it a date? She’d saved the fucking Invictus’s life, he owed her one, and this was what she was wasting that favor on. Well, fuck Garry, he’d said the Carthians needed to bide their time and wait, and she was going stir crazy. Julias would prove an interesting distraction.

Her crocodile smile emerged. Julias was interesting. Dude had full-on popped a boner underneath her. Now that had been unexpected. The great and mighty Julias, right hand of Viktor Honors, ladies man and walking sex in a suit, was turned on by her, monster chick in the cemetery. He’d said he hadn’t been with a vampire in decades, so maybe he was sick of ... well, vampires. Scheming, manipulating, selfish, conniving leeches, completely predictable and yet you could never tell what they were thinking or planning. She fucking hated that shit.

She adjusted the piercings in her nipples. Her breasts weren't large, but they certainly weren't small. They were tight against her muscular form though. She had the body of a fighter, complete with ripped six-pack of abs, defined serratus muscles, wicked V-cut hips, and some thickness to her arms. She'd been a fitness instructor when she was alive, beautiful and a master gymnast, flexible, lean, strong. Gorgeous.

“This another trick? More Kindred shit? This all some ploy to get information about the Carthians from me?” She threw on a white tank top, black jeans, and army boots. “We'll fucking see.”

Julias was waiting for her at the cemetery. Fuckler was dressed in a casual suit, no tie but with a nice jacket and some loose cuffs. Her teeth clicked side to side. Ventrue really knew how to wear a suit.

“ ... did you just wave at me?”

“Yes. Was ... I not supposed to?”

“Arg.” Ten seconds into this exchange and she was already thrown off her game. Julias was smarter than her, older, and if she wasn’t careful he’d get into her head and who fucking knows what with his Ventrue fucking Jedi powers. “Look. We’re doing this because I want to. No manipulative shit, no schemes, no bids for power.” She walked up to him and put her claws against his chest. “If I figure out you’re trying anything, now or later, I’ll rip out your entrails and leave you for the sun.”

“Of course.” Julias didn’t back down, he didn’t even flinch, he just smiled at her. What the fuck was his problem?

“Think I’m joking?”

“No! No, I don’t, I—”

“Good. So, you owe me one, and this has nothing to do with Garry or Viktor or whatever fucking games our bosses are playing. I need some R&R and you’re going to provide. Take me to dinner.”

“Dinner? I’m not sure what—”

“Take me someplace nice ... ish, someplace you frequent. Someplace where we can sit down and enjoy a nice meal between us with no violence or screaming.”

“Oh. Yes, I can do that. Where would you like to go? And ... will you be wearing that?” His question made him grimace, as if it would bring down her hellfire.

He was partly correct, and she wrapped her claws around his throat and pulled him down to meet her at eye level. He squirmed but otherwise did nothing but smile awkwardly. She could swear he was enjoying this.

“You think what I wear matters? I’ll be next to you, but hiding with a discipline, dumbass. No one will notice me. You’ll get us a nice meal with that devil charm of yours, and then we’ll eat.”

“I see ... I think Bloodlust will work well. Once seated, no one will notice your differences in the dark. Just, please don’t kill anyone there.”

“Bloodlust is in Invictus territory.”

“You’ll be hidden, right? And with me anyway. No one will question.”

She let go of him, and clicked her teeth side to side. She’d seen the outside of Bloodlust many times, but she’d never dared go in, not even while hidden. A place swarming with that much life and that many bodies so close to each other, it would have struck too close to painful memories.

But this time she’d have her man here to take her. Different circumstance, right?

“Alright, let’s go,” she said, and slipped her claws into her jeans pockets. It took only moments to step out of the catacombs, and the empty cemetery provided no distractions from stepping onto the road.

Julias followed up behind her in a short jog until they stood side-by-side.

“You look lovely tonight.”

Oh no he fucking didn't.

“What? It's not bullshit.”

“Really?” She turned to him, and opened her mouth to its fullest. When she wanted to, she could open that crocodile smile until it was ninety degrees apart, and he'd be able see down her throat and how long her tongue was.

He didn't even blink.

“You know Maria, Viktor's partner, is a Nosferatu right? Are you trying to scare me?”

“Maria doesn't have an extra fifty teeth.”

The man shrugged.

“Come on. I thought you wanted to go out and enjoy yourself? Is it so hard to believe I don't find you hideous? Here I thought that's how we got into this situation.”

“... fine.” He had her there. She'd asked him to do this because it seemed like he'd been sexually attracted to her. Fucked up reason to ask for such a stupid favor, but fuck reason.

The walk was otherwise uneventful. Julias tried to make small talk, but she ignored it. She wasn't interested in his ridiculous attempts at normalizing this absurd affair, but he did not relent. She had to threaten him before he shut up.

The Invictus half of South Side district was always alive, lights everywhere, and people wearing nice clothes walked down the nice sidewalks and into nice buildings. She avoided this place. Not only was it Invictus territory, but she used to live here and in this life. Twenty years was not long enough to forget.

“Ah, we’re here.” He motioned to the Bloodlust, and stepped up to the bouncer at the door. A nod and handshake and they were in. Invictus, and Ventrue in particular, were connections incarnate. Julias could probably shake a hand, call in a favor, and walk them into any club or business in the city. How fucking nice for him.

The inside almost blinded her senses. She had to put up a hand and partly cover her eyes at the weird array of smells and sights. There was a white light that pulsed with the beat-heavy music, but between it was the constant dull red lighting that must have been just enough for humans to see. People danced with each other in a dancing center, and booth seats lined the walls.

“So this is how the rich nightlife plays out,” she said with her shoulders almost touching Julias’s arm. “Fancy clothes, fancy personalities, but when it gets dark they grind like bunnies.” She motioned to the dance floor where they were, indeed, grinding like bunnies.

“Yes. People come here to relax, get laid, or just meet. Admittedly, people here are a little more open-minded than other places. That’s why I come here.” He pointed to one of the two staircases that lined the walls, leading to a second balcony floor. “Come. It’s quieter up there, darker.”

“Lovely.” With a groan, she followed her knight up the staircases. The balcony floor was indeed less populated, and the white pulse light didn’t shine very much up there. There were booths with people in them, and as much as they were hidden in the dark from each other, she could see them just fine with Kindred eyes. A lot of them were kissing, some were chatting, some were fucking.

“I could have taken you to an opera, but I believe you said you wanted to eat?” He turned and grinned at her.

“Here’s an empty spot.” He grabbed a booth near the back, and stood by it with a palm open toward the seat. The Ventrue was waiting for her to sit first.

She rolled her eyes and sat down. Even if she wasn’t using her Nosferatu abilities to hide, she doubted anyone would notice her back here. Part of her felt offended, but another felt relieved. She could stop taxing her vitae so much to hide.

Julias sat down next to her, and shifted on his hip to look at her with a smile.

“... what?”

“Why are you smiling at me?”

“Oh, was I smiling?”

“Yes you were fucking smiling you bastard.” She sneaked a hand underneath the table and grabbed at his leg hard enough to pierce his skin with her claws. He winced and shifted around, but otherwise stayed quiet. “Stop making fun of me.” She dug in a little deeper. Were he still alive, his blood would have been dripping down his leg.

“I ... I’m not. Really, I’m not.” He cracked another smile, though she could see it mixed with pain. Good.

“You’re making me angry. Just get us something to eat, Superman.”

“ ... ok.”

She hurt him. Physically, of course, but she saw that look of sadness on his face. Now she felt guilty. Guilty and angry. Was it so weird that he was trying to be nice to her? She did save his life after all. That was Kindred business though, or so she thought, but then...

“Fine! Fine, talk,” she said, and his smile returned immediately. He was like a weird hybrid between a valiant knight and a manipulative trickster. She couldn’t quite place him or his motives, and it was driving her insane. “Talk about ... you said you hadn’t been with a vampire in fifty years. I see you hook up with kine all the time, why not Kindred?”

“Ha! Yes you do, you slut. I may never have sneaked in here but I’ve sneaked into other clubs. I’ve seen at least two dozen different women either go home with you, or straight up fuck you in the club while you drink them.”

Ho ho. The mighty Ventrue was squirming with embarrassment. Point for her.

“That’s ... I like to see them happy.”

“You fucking what?”

“I like to see them happy. I make sure they all know it’s not a relationship, but to see a human simply ... give in to pleasure and relax and enjoy themselves. To be happy for just a few minutes. I like that.” He shrugged at her. “You ever seen a vampire be happy like that? Ever see a Kindred stop manipulating, scheming, planning, for just five minutes to enjoy a Kiss, or just a regular kiss?”

She stopped, and stared at him. That sounded familiar.

“Kine don’t think outside of a week, maybe a couple years at most. I can’t have a conversation with a Kindred without them planning out fifty years in advance. Viktor, easily a hundred.”

“ ... yeah, that really does fucking suck.” She flicked at her earring chain and scratched at the table. The Carthians were not nearly so long-sighted and boring as the Invinctus, and she found even them trying to talk with.

“Julias!” A squeal of a voice came from the stairs, and a woman skipped over in her ridiculous heels. She was barely five feet tall and was wearing an open-back dress with a short skirt, dark red. Fake tits too. Typical bimbo blond. Julias was smiling right back at her though.

“Hey Kristen. Get the job?”

“No!” She humphed like a child and hooked her arms under her bosom. “They gave it to some dumbass. Glass ceiling, am I right?”

“Completely right,” Julias said. Did he really know about this random woman’s life? Did he actually fucking care?

Beatrice’s eyes opened wide when he gestured to her.

“This is my date, Scarlet.”

“ ... h-hi.” Beatrice sank into her booth, and made sure her hair framed over her cheeks, where her extra teeth were. Talking with a kine like they were friends was not what she had planned.

“A date? Julias you make me sad. I thought you said you weren’t interested in dating.”

“Well, Scarlet is a special case.” Julias winked at her. She was going to kill him later. “We met a couple weeks ago, and she roped me in.”

“Lucky girl.” The bimbo stared right at Beatrice, and gave her a big smile of absolute obliviousness. “And here I was hoping for another one of those special kisses.”

Beatrice twitched. Julias was Kissing the same people multiple times? He was letting them run around knowing that?

“Well, actually, Scarlet here is really shy, but she gives the same kiss.”

“Really now,” the bimbo said. She walked around the table, and slid into the booth to cozy up next to Beatrice. “The same? How? Julias won’t tell me, and ... it’s really amazing. Like, totally. So you’re shy? Hi my name is Kristen, and I’m just a young girl in the city working for a micromanagement division, and—” She went on, but Beatrice had to tune her out and give Julias a long, hateful stare. She really, really was going to kill him.

“So ... you can kiss?” She slid closer, and Beatrice found herself sliding away until her hips were against Julias’s. Naturally, the bastard didn’t move, and the bimbo only slid closer until she was sandwiched between the two of them. “Can you ... you know, kiss me, like Julias does? I’ve never had a woman do it, only Julias, and ... you seem really sexy.”

Because you can barely see my face in this darkness you dumbass bitch.

“Kristen Fitzern, how dare you come onto my date.”

“Oh come on! It’s just a little fun. Please?”

Beatrice was trapped. Not really trapped, she could have easily slipped out of there, made the bitch suffer some kind of nightmare hallucination, something. But she was hungry. Really hungry. She looked over her shoulder to Julias again, but the fucker was just smiling and motioning to the bimbo.

“ ... ok. But ... turn around.”

“Yay! Turn around? Hehe, exciting.” Kristen did as requested and turned herself around so her back was facing Beatrice, and then she backed up even more until she was resting her back against Beatrice’s shoulder. Beatrice had to turn to face her a bit, and let the bimbo rest her back into her torso.

Kristen relaxed. Beatrice did not. The Nosferatu sat there, and stared down at the sight before her. This stupid, idiotic bloodbag without a clue in the world ... was just resting against her, and waiting for it. There were no mind tricks here, no struggles, no use of her hiding or nightmares, just a kine who wanted to get drunk from the Kiss, ignorant of what it was.

Her dress meant Kristen’s naked back was pressed to Beatrice’s body, and she could feel her heart. This close to her neck, she could practically hear it through the bass-heavy music. Her heartbeat was slow, or at least, slow compared to who she usually fed from. Hell, the bimbo was almost grinding against her.

“I’m sorry, is the dress in the way?” Without hesitation, the blond reached up, undid the neck of the dress, and let it fall to her lap. Now Beatrice had a topless bimbo almost in her lap, begging to be sucked on. She got what she wanted, but didn’t know if she wanted what she got.

“ ... ok.”

She could tell Julias was watching intently from his spot, but otherwise did not move to intervene. He'd said to not kill people, but that was proving to be a tough thing to do. She really, really wanted to kill this one. Hell, even when she was alive she'd have wanted to kill this one. But, she couldn't deny the simple efficiency of having your meal walk up to you, let its dress down, and beg to be Kissed.

She leaned in, and put her lips to the girl's neck. She had to fight her own reflex to pin down and bite into her prey hard, like she usually had to do. This one was willing, and damn it all, she was going to try one of these consensual feedings. It's why she was here. She'd never done it in her entire unlife; how could she?

Opening her mouth only just as wide as a normal Kindred would, she eased her fangs — only her normal fangs — onto the bimbo, and let her teeth sink into her neck.

“Oh! Mm ... you're ... right ... Julias. It's...” Kristen trailed off as the euphoria of the Kiss washed over her. Beatrice, on the other hand, was focused so intently on her new experience, her eyes open wide enough to hurt. The blood wasn't a squirting mess, and it wasn't thinned with adrenaline. This blood was thick, it was warm, it pooled into her mouth in slow, powerful waves. And it was sweet. So very, very god damn sweet.

She hooked her lips onto the prey's neck to prevent a single drop of the blood from escaping, and only had to suckle to ensure the delicious red filled her. Her mouth wasn't open very much, so even crocodile teeth instead of cheeks, the blood simply pooled along the bottom of her mouth before she swallowed it down. No mess, nothing.

Even more surprising was when Kristen took Beatrice's hands, and hooked them around her breasts. The kine encouraged her and pressed her fingers into her. The bimbo's nipples were damn hard, and Beatrice had to admit, fake or not, those large tits felt nice filling her palms.

“You have ... long nails. You have to tell me ... where you bought them ... later.”

What the fuck was going on? Beatrice was supposed to be getting a free meal, but even she let out a tiny moan, like the bimbo's. Hell, she was starting to squeeze and massage Kristen's breasts just to encourage the bimbo to relax into her even more. She was sure the blond would have been masturbating if she had any energy, but the Kiss had sapped all her strength within seconds and left her a lethargic slug. Kristen was used to this, very used to this, and was leaning up and into Beatrice's own neck to rest her head. If she had opened her eyes, she may have been able to see the Nosferatu's extra teeth, but the kine was completely absorbed in the orgasmic bliss of a Kiss done the gentle way. The sexual way.

A tap on Beatrice's shoulder snapped her out of her own bliss. Slowly, with delicate care, Beatrice removed her fangs from Kristen's neck. The kine didn't say anything, even when Beatrice licked the wound to seal it. Her eyes were closed and she was practically comatose, so Beatrice had to right her up herself and put her back to the booth seat. She put a claw to her own lips; the human's breasts were still on display, and rising and falling with the labored breaths of a satisfied woman.

It was really, really hot.

She reached out and cupped one of those tits in her palms, just to feel its weight. Julias was still behind her, but she didn't care. Fresh blood was coursing through her insides, filling her, spreading through her, making her feel warm and alive again, and with no violence or death in the mix, instead she found all the energy going toward ... arousal.

“She’s really just ... sitting here ... and ... we could ... could anything. We could fuck her all night long.” She raised the tit and let it drop, jiggle, and bounce. Fake, but she cupped it again anyway. Still hot.

“We could. She wouldn’t even mind. As long as you didn’t take too much from her, she’d let you do anything to her, and she’d thank you after.”

Beatrice let go of the woman’s breast, and turned to face Julias. He was looking at Kristen, and smiling a half smile. Something was on his mind, something that was making the situation bittersweet for him. There wasn’t anything like this to find in the Kindred world. This dumbass bimbo wasn’t thinking outside this night alone for her plans, and that simple honesty, coming from even such a stupid bloodbag, was intoxicating.

The Nosferatu reached with both hands and raised Kristen’s dress to tie it back behind her neck.

“Oh? Sure. Where to?”

“Your place.”

---

Julias’s place might as well have had Invictus Ventrue written on the fucking walls. White walls with Gothic paintings, expensive looking leather couches and chairs and streamlined ... streamlined everything. She rolled her eyes.

“Your new childe?”

“Yes. He often shows up. He’s pretty new to the whole thing.”

“Yeah...” Her mind fell back to memories of her own sire. That relationship had lasted just a few days before he’d been executed, and it was not a relationship she’d enjoyed. He was stalker and fucked up creature, looking to pass on that fucked up clan of his.

“So, may I interest you in a drink? I do keep several blood types for drinking.” He shrugged with a silly grin. “It helps me feel human, you know? Sit down, sip from a wine glass, chat with Jack about good times.”

“You ... were friends with Jack?” She walked around and let her claws drag along various surfaces. It was so clean.

“Yes. For five years. I groomed him, helped nurture his intelligence and trained his physical body.” Julias wandered over to the fridge and pulled out a wine bottle. She knew fuck all about wine, but it was blood anyway so what did it matter? The Ventrue really did enjoy the image of it all, and he sipped from a glass. She’d fed, but he hadn’t.

“Does he know you’re such a tragedy freak?”

“ ... I’m sorry, what?”

“Tragedy freak. Weep and cry at the cruel night at all? Hang with the humans because you miss it so much, and never truly accept that you’re a dead thing now?” The signs were all there, after all. As much as his Kindred side showed through every so often, he played at the white knight and tried to balance the two. “You practically drip of the brooding, tragic hero stereotype, Julias. Like, no matter how nice you are, you just can’t rejoin the humans in life. You’re a Ventrue, so why are you acting like an emo Daeva bitch?”

He looked at her for a long while before setting his glass down on the counter. “ ... you don’t miss it?”

Boom.

She'd thought she'd had him. She'd figured it out. Pieced together the puzzle of the great Julias and his weird habits, and even his attraction to her. Tragedy freak. But then he asked a stupid fucking question and suddenly she felt his genuine eyes poking a hole through her bad girl attitude.

“Of course I fucking miss it! I ... that was the first time I've ever really talked to a human in twenty fucking years. That idiot blond! And...” Her hands gently grasped at the air in front of her in a subtle motion. “And ... yeah. Yes, I get it. I fucking get it, I miss it. But you! You don't get to miss it! You don't get to fucking miss it!” Fuck him. Fuck him and his bullshit. She was Nosferatu. He was Ventrue. He looked dead sexy and could wear a suit and get a job. He had no right to complain.

“Sorry,” he said, and took another sip of his blood, “I can't help it. I'm neck deep in all these political games playing out for decades to come. I don't know how Viktor does it, or Maria or Michael, but ... I just get sick of it all. The Danse is fucking horrible.”

“... you're fucking right it is.” Her anger fell away, and she laughed. She had to. Ventrue live and breathe for the Danse Macabre. They came to it naturally. But this one was sick of it? She had to laugh.

She walked over to him, and wrapped her claws around his wrist. When he blinked at her, she lowered his wrist until he put the glass down on the counter, and she tugged at him.

“What are—”

“Shut the fuck up.” She pulled him toward the stairway. Yes, the fucker's apartment had a second floor, and she was sure his master bedroom would be up there. What kind of bed she wondered? She licked at her crocodile teeth as she envisioned it, no doubt some fancy memory foam mattress with silk sheets if Julias's stereotypical tastes were predictable enough.

Bingo. His king-sized bed was layered in black silk. The walls were still white, and this time there was a single painting of a beautiful, pale woman with long black hair and a see-through white dress, wet with rain and laying across a seat of Victorian style.

“You sleep with this thing on the wall, looking at you?”

“I find the image soothing. She seems like a quiet soul.”

“You mean a miserable soul. Look you fucked-in-the-head dumbass, if your unlife sucks so much, then you make a god damn change to make it suck a little less. You think I really wanted to go out tonight? I’d rather sit in my apartment in the god damn dirt and dust and watch TV, or eat some some worthless fuck off the streets, then risk someone freaking out over how I looked at the Bloodlust. I came out cause I saw an opportunity for a god damn change.”

Her grip tightened and she threw him onto the bed. Literally. None of that whimpy shit. She was Nosferatu, and she was a hell of a lot stronger than him. The bed thankfully did not break. Julias on the other hand looked shocked as all hell, and she chuckled at him again as she approached.

“And you know what? That was the first time I’d fed on someone who wasn’t resisting me or unconscious. Ever. And as much as I hated that bimbo bitch ... thank you for that.” She climbed onto the bed, and straddled the poor, idiot Ventrue the same way she had when she’d fed him in her catacombs.”Now we’re going to do thing number two I haven’t done since being embraced.”

She really had no clue how they’d gotten to this point. She never had any intention of sleeping with Julias, but now she was straddling the man on his bed. His attraction to her had been a window of opportunity, but now it was going straight up to fucking.

She could use a good fuck. Twenty years celibate was not fun, even as an undead.

She blushed for him. The blush of life brought color to her skin again, got her old dead heart beating again, and even got her to salivate again. She licked at the little bit of wetness that formed on one of her massive teeth along her cheek.

“Now you, my tragic knight, are going to do exactly as I say for the night. Got it?”

“I, uh ... yes ma’am.”

Heh, ma’am. She chuckled, reached down, and slid off her tank top without hesitation. The Ventrue’s eyes opened wide at her body, but she saw the spark of intrigue and arousal in his gaze. Her mouth may have looked like it belonged on some monster in a horror movie, but she had the body of a fucking amazon warrior. She reached down with both hands and cupped her perky breasts, and even plucked on her pierced nipples for him.

Julias did as ordered. Ordering a Ventrue around was a first, and she grew giddy with the power of it. She knew the bastard, much older than she, had the powers to turn her into a mindless puppet, but she was confident she had the position to rip him in half if he tried anything. And honestly, she didn’t expect him to try anything.

His blush of life brought a nice tone to him, a little darker than she expected. He had blonde hair combed back over his head, like some mobster from the 40’s, but she had to admit it worked on him. That was it! He looked like some kind of young king of the mobsters from the 40’s. That was driving her nuts.

She already felt his erection poking against her ass, and immediately her body responded. It’d been so damn fucking long, her nipples were already growing to points.

“You, sir knight, are a god damn bastard. How much did this suit cost?” The look of shock on his face was priceless when she motioned to slice it up, but she didn’t. Instead, she put her hands against his chest, and started to slide off his jacket. He helped — it’s hard to get a jacket off when lying down — and she tossed it aside. Her claws found the buttons of his shirt, and with great dexterity, she undid them one at a time.

“Of course it did. Got to look good in the mobster world.” She spread open his shirt, and let out a quiet moan of satisfaction. He was a man after all, not some whiny little girl like he sounded. His chest was chiseled and wide, muscles defined, shoulders broad, and a bit-but-not-too-much chest hair. Perfect. Her claws roamed over his hard muscles, but she did not remove the unbuttoned shirt from his shoulders. More interesting to leave it on, as it framed his abs. He wasn’t super ripped like her, but his stomach was flat and hard, and she put her hands against it. Mmm, firm.

“What would you have me do?”

“Shhh. No talking,” she said, and Julias smiled and closed his mouth. Good, he was getting the game.

She shifted back and put her hands to his belt. When was the last time she’d done this? Undressing a man, the pop of the belt buckle, sliding it off and out and tossing it to the floor? She’d been a sexual animal when she was alive, and she could feel the old hunger coming back to her. Her claws tugged at his pants and underwear, and she slid them both down to his knees in a single motion. She had to reach behind her to continue, and get them over his boots. Fuck, the boots. She undid those too, and pulled it all off, even his fucking socks. Nosferatu didn’t get laid often, and she wasn’t going to spoil this by rushing it.

Once she turned around again, she sat straddling his knees, and Julias smiled to her from across the bed with his hands hooked behind his head. He had a nice, big back with wide lats, but her eyes lasted only a second before drawing to his member.

“Is this why you’re such a slut?” She hovered over his member, and took a second to examine it. He was circumcised, and his girth was surprisingly thick. And long. There were veins running around it in interesting patterns, and she ran the smooth side of one of her claws up and down them. “I admit, you got a huge dick.”

He looked about to say something, but he remembered his orders, and closed his mouth again. He just smiled, and she rolled her eyes.

“Shame to lose it.” She took her right hand to its base, and wrapped around its warm, hard girth. Damn that feeling of a cock in her hand. With a wicked grin, she aimed it straight up, opened her mouth wide so all her teeth were on full display, and moved to bite down on his dick. Julias sat up with a startle, but relaxed when she didn’t bite down.

“Yeah, that’s what I’m going to do. I find the first guy who don’t mind a crocodile mouth and I’m going to bite his dick off.” She rolled her eyes again, and lay across his leg. She was still wearing her jeans, but being topless was fun. Her hand remained around his cock, and she squeezed it gently with experimentation. The shark smile was only inches away from his cock as her head was by his hips, and yet his erection remained. He really did like her smile.

She stopped to take a moment to enjoy the situation. The man really was a hunk, a bastard Invictus and a Ventrue at that, but that didn’t change he was a hunk. Her claws were wrapped around his cock — fuck he was big — and it only grew harder at her touch. She gave it a slow stroke with a tender squeeze, just enough to feel its texture comply to her hands, and pushed it forward so it lay across his abs, before she brought it back to stand. His pubic hair was short and trimmed, proper and neat, just like a typical Invictus.

She liked it.

The Nosferatu picked herself up and stood over the Ventrue. She grinned down at him, knowing full well grinning made her look like a demon from hell, and started to undo her jeans. They came off easily, and panties too, so she was standing stark naked over the man. Her claws reached down and found another piercing, a little ring that pierced the hood of her clitoris, and she plucked at it softly. It bounced against her clit and sent tingling sparks up through her pelvis and down her thighs. Fuck she was horny.

“I expect the mighty slut knight to know how to use his tongue. He better. I’ve got a lot of years to make up for.” She didn’t really wait to see his response, but already started to get down onto her knees and spread herself over his head. One of her hands had to press to the wall for balance, but her other found his head, and her long claws wrapped around his skull while her knees worked further and further out.

Finally, she eased her pussy onto his lips. The shivering started immediately, and she let out a sultry moan that surprised her when she felt her juices spread over his face. Christ it had been forever. She looked down to him, but his eyes were closed. Good, she didn’t want him to see how deliriously aroused she already was. It was all over her face, she could tell, as all it took was a single lick from the large man to make her eyes roll upward.

“Fu ... uuuuck.” Soon both of her sets of claws were on the wall, and Julias wrapped both his hands around the front of her thighs to help her balance. He wasn’t just licking, he was suckling. The man had wrapped his lips around the upper half of her cunt and was pulling her clit into his mouth. Just a little suction was going a long way, and he licked and nuzzled his tongue against the piercing too.

She thought she'd grind her cunt against him, but this was proving far better. The Ventrue bastard was skilled, she had no reason to move, so she simply sat there, shaking, while he kissed her cunt.

“You ... fucking ... slut.” She'd been horny ever since she Kissed the bimbo at the club, but she was racing now. Her mouth was hanging open, her voice was coming out in moans, even girly mewls, and her juices were spreading. She could feel them on her thighs, making a mess on the knight's bed, but she didn't care. It was the first time anyone had touched her in two fucking decades, and holy fuck, undead or not, she missed this.

The orgasm did not take long to arrive. Her claws sank into the wall, but better than the man's head. Both her hands used the wall for grip as her body started to shake and the pleasure tremors shot up through her. Sparks of bliss made her powerful thighs quiver, and the clench of her cunt caused more of her juices to leak from her and onto Julius's face. His tongue grew far softer, but he gave her a few long, gentle licks to keep her orgasm going until she was trembling.

“Ok! Ok stop ... Jesus.” She backed away and eased herself onto his stomach, leaning forward with her hands on his chest. Not even five minutes and she'd cum already. “Fuck I needed that. God damn. Ok, round two.” Still shaking a bit with orgasm aftershocks, she smirked up at the Ventrue. He still wasn't talking, as ordered. It made her grin.

She rolled off of him, lay down on her back, and spread her legs. She had great legs. Just the act of putting herself on display like this put that spark into Superman's eyes that she longed for. He was hungry for her. Christ, just the sight of a hunky man like him hungry for her had more of her juices flowing. She ran her claws up and down her powerful thighs, and shivered at the tingling it sent up her still quivering body.

With great delicacy, she slid those claws down her shaved pussy before spreading open her dripping folds. “Fingers. Now.”

Julias gave a grin and a nod. Part of her still worried he was manipulating her, Invictus and all that, but the cock between his legs wasn't lying. She really ... really wanted to do things to that cock, but that would come later. For now, she was going to just lay back and enjoy herself with her hands hooked around the inside of her thighs and spreading them open.

The big loaf knelt next to her and, with a stupid smile on his face, leaned down to kiss one of her knees, while one of his hands started to caress her leg. She rolled her eyes, and did her best to suppress the smile she felt tugging at her cheeks.

Then, Julias put his other hand against her pussy. He didn't penetrate her, he just rested his hand against her soaked, bare folds, and caressed her labia. Up and down they went, kneading and massaging the outside of her cunt, squeezing her lips together until she felt her juices leak, before his fingers spread out to work where her thigh connected to her pelvis. She wanted to yell at him to get to it, but, the feel of those large hands loosening her up and spreading her cum around was making her start to tremble.

At last, she let out a low, primal groan when two of his big fingers eased her open. Her muscles gripped down, hard, and she had to force herself to relax while he worked his digits further into her insides.

She stopped holding her thighs apart, and put her hands to the blankets to sit up a bit. There was no way she'd miss seeing this. She kept her legs spread nice and far for him, but her eyes were glued to his fingers. They were just barely visible as she leaned forward a bit to see over her bare mons, and she clicked her crocodile teeth together at the sight of them when he pulled them from her squeezing muscles. Her juices were dripping from his knuckles.

“Yeah, yeah ... like ... that.” Her arm closer to him reached for him and took his shoulder, but she kept her eyes on his fingers. It was mesmerizing. He sank his middle and ring finger into her, palm up and to the knuckle, and wriggled them around until she felt her toes curl. Then he pulled them out of her in a slow, massaging motion with his fingers curling upward against her g-spot. Then he did it again.

He reached into her as deep as his fingers could go, and pressed up toward her belly. She gasped in a sharp hiss, and leaned forward a little closer to hook the arm on his shoulder around the back of his neck instead. His digits pressed a little harder into her, toward her belly with his fingers buried in her cunt to the knuckle. There, he massaged above her deepest spot, and smiled at her while doing it.

“Stop ... smiling ... you ... jackass.” Try as she might to stay quiet, her other hand was soon clutching the blanket until her claws sliced into the fabric, and more of her juices joined the mess. His big digits pressed so deep into her, deep and up against that spot way in the back that was making her body sing and her mind go blank. Her mouth opened wide, crocodile teeth on full display, but she didn’t care. The bastard was making her cum, and she even let out a few quiet moans as her muscles clenched down like a vice and forced more of herself to leak onto his palm.

She collapsed. Julias finally stopped massaging the depths of her cunt, so she was free to just lay back and ride out her orgasm. The aftershocks worked up and down her legs like fireworks, and every so often her body would just convulse for a second and clench down on his fingers. She had no control, she could only lay there and let the pleasure earn the occasional small moan from her.

Then Julias started to pump her insides up and down like a piston.

“Ah shi-i-i-i-t!” Both her hands were on the blankets again, but she managed to force herself to sit up to see. Julias’s hand was no longer gently stroking her insides, but instead he was slapping his two fingers up against her g-spot hard enough to make her ass lift off the blanket, before pushing back down only to do it again.

His free hand slid down from her leg to her pelvis, and he pushed down against the muscle below her navel. Her poor g-spot was trapped between both his hands, and when she tried to say something to ask him to ease up, he only pumped her faster, and harder. The noises were lecherous, and even her pert breasts were jiggling against her with the force of his fingering. Her juices were soaking his palm, and they splashed around her thighs and down her shaking ass. Every muscle down the valley of her abs was in constant flex, and try as she might to squeeze Julias’s fingers, he only worked harder to finger her. The piercings in her ears and nose clinked together with the vibration, and even the piercing in her clit hood bounced against the swollen flesh.

After almost a minute of near-painful cumming, Julias stopped pumping her insides. A random spasm of her muscles caused a little gush of her juices, and she tried fruitlessly to suppress her mewls. She collapsed again, and this time didn’t try suppress the little mewls that the orgasm aftershocks pulled from her. The wet spot on the bed had grown substantially, but she didn’t care, the rich fucker could probably buy a million beds. Right now, all she cared about was how fucking amazing it felt to have a pair of fingers inside her again. Even now, the bastard was gently stroking her depths, just enough to make her body still quiver and her toes curl.

“Ok ... you ... can speak.” Were she still alive, she’d have given up on going to work the next day. Hell, just the sensation of him removing his fingers was enough to make her tremble.

“Enjoying yourself?”

“ ... yes.” She forced herself to sit up. There was no point in modesty here, so she didn’t cover up or anything. She just spread her legs and looked down at the mess she’d made all over the Ventrue’s sheets. He was sitting on his knees and smiling at her, but something had changed. His smile was different.

He actually seemed happy. Strange.

“Well you had an advantage. I’ve just fed and spent twenty years in a shadow. You know how hard up a vampire can get?” She tried to pull herself up onto her knees to sit like him, but more rippling shakes worked through her core and put her flat on her ass again. Julias chuckled with a warmth she hadn’t expected, and she smiled right back at him, crocodile teeth and all.

“You deserve ... a reward,” she said. “I hereby give you the right ... to fuck me in whichever way is most popular ... among your lady friends.” Little mewls were sneaking into her speech, try as she might to suppress them. “Come on, gimme the top rated position.”

“Are you sure?”

“Yeap.”

“ ... alright.” Julias lay down, and motioned for her to come to him. “Lay down on your side next to me.”

“ ... you have got to be shitting me.” She pulled herself forward into a crawl, complete with a raised ass and arched back to emphasize her wicked form, and did as he asked. Soon she was facing away from him with his pillow under her head, and her arms in front of her with her claws playing with his blankets. “You legit going to spoon me?”

“I am.”

“Aha. Alright.” She didn’t look, but she could feel him nuzzle up against her back. He was a big, muscular guy, and he not only sank the bed in, but she fit into the crevice of his pelvis nicely. His hand found her hip, and she gave a tiny shiver. The position made her feel so ... vulnerable. She wasn’t going to look back and make it obvious, but she could feel a little anxiety creep up on her.

His cock pressed against her ass cheeks, and her whole body went rigid as it sneaked its way down her buttocks before sliding between her thighs. She looked down, and his glans peeked its way through underneath her cunt as the large Ventrue snuggled, fucking snuggled up against her back. With his cock between her thighs and rubbing against her soaked pussy, she became acutely aware of suddenly how nervous she felt. Her skin was turning red, fucking blush of life, and her nipples were so hard, her piercings were starting to hurt.

“Would you ... guide me in?” Julias had his head over hers with his weight propped up on an elbow, so she had only to turn a bit to see him smiling down at her. Why the fuck was this making her so tense? With an unsteady hand, she reached down to her thighs, and slipped her claws around the underside of his member. She had to be careful to not hurt him with her claws, but she found it hard to not tremble, just a bit, as she slid her hips forward, and pushed up on his cock.

When she eased her hips back down, she let out the softest little moan as his cock’s head spread her tight cunt open. Everything was so damn soaked in her juices, that even his big dick had little trouble spreading her muscles apart, and his member slipped into her with a quiet plop.

“God ... fuck ... mother fucking...” She’d expected him to pick a position better for a good cunt ramming, but now she could guess why he picked a softer arrangement. The fucker was likely to hurt a woman if he went with a more aggressive position.

She blinked down at her breasts. Julias had sneaked one of his hands onto her tit, and was giving it a squeeze not unlike what she did to his cock. Gentle and massaging. His finger found the little bolt piercing through her nipple, and he plucked at it lightly, which only sparked more mewls from her. Along with his gentle touch, the bastard was sliding more of himself into her, and her eyes again rolled upward. The angle let his glans press straight into her g-spot on the way in, and her head collapsed onto the pillow as the sensation of its texture on her swollen insides made her quiver all over again.

“I like your piercings,” he said, and his hand sneaked down to her abs to find the one on her navel. “Did you get them before or after your embrace?”

“A ... after.” Fuck, she was moaning again. Julias was fucking her now, but the bastard was so slow about it. He never shoved, never pushed, he only eased his cock into her as deep as the position would let, which was plenty with his size, and then eased himself back out of her.

“And the tattoos?” The fingertips of his free hand found the tail of her snake, and traced it along her flat stomach until it came back to her breast where the snake had an open mouth around her nipple.

“What happened to being so talkative?”

“Fuck ... you...” She didn’t look his way this time for fear of how bright red her face must have been. Getting him to lick and finger her to a mess of orgasms had seemed like a good idea at the time, but now the big bad Ventrue was spooning her and she was doing her best to not gush all over him. He’d probably planned this! Fucking bastard would pay for it ... later. Now, she brought one of her hands to her other breast, and the other hand sneaked back down to her cunt to find his cock. She didn’t stop him, didn’t even touch herself, she just wanted to feel that member of his slide into her. Her juices were literally dripping down her leg. She'd always been a wet one during sex, but this was embarrassing.

As if in tune with her, Julias lowered his hand down her stomach and her pelvis, and stopped short of her thighs. His fingers found the piercing of her clit hood again — god damn her clit was so sensitive — and he began to rub it up and down against her body in that same damn gentle motion his fucking was doing. Too slow to make her cum, but just hard enough to send tiny sparks of pleasure down her legs.

“Come on, just ... please just fuck me hard. This is...”

“You said fuck you like I do the kine I feed from. This is how.” He lowered his head to her ear, and her body went rigid when his lips found it. His lips plucked at some of the many piercings her ears contained before lowering and settling on her lobe. There were piercings there too, but he seemed content to suckle lightly on the flesh.

“Christ. How ... long does it take to cum ... like this?”

“Could take a while.” He sighed into her body and held her close to him. His nibbling on her ear would stop, only to start again in a different spot on her ear, and his finger on her clit never grew rough or hard or any of the things she silently begged it would. His rhythm with his hips was barely ever enough to even make the bed creak, but was just enough to make his cock's head kiss her g-spot lightly with each motion until her toned ass was molded to his pelvis.

He definitely planned this.

“So ... you — nnnm — uh ... you ... don't do this with other Kindred?” she said. She couldn't admit to losing control of the battle.

“Nope. You’re the first Kindred I’ve shared my bed with in a very long while.”

“ ... heh ... yay ... me.” Both her hands were free, and she found herself playing with her own breasts with one, while the other rested on the wrist of the bastard’s hand currently make her clit sing. “The other Carthians ... oh ... they’re boring. No — fuuck — no ... spunk.”

“You have spunk,” he said. Damn right she did. “I like that.” He gave her clit a little pinch, just enough to shock her system, but not enough to get her over the edge, before he settled back into his practically loving rhythm.

“Tragic knight ... such a romantic? I’m ... surprised a Daeva didn’t ... scoop you up.”

“I’m a hopeless romantic ... and a slut. I guess I should have been Daeva.” He gave a harder thrust into her, just a single one, just enough to earn a mewl from her before he eased back into the gentle sex.

“Ha, yeah. I ... can see it now. Ditch the suit, start writing ... poetry.” She’d given up on trying to talk smoothly. He was riding her constantly at the edge of orgasm and it was fucking with her speech. She sounded like a little girl with her tiny mewls.

“I hate poetry.” His rhythm got a little faster, and the fingers on her clit got a little rougher. “And as much as I’m a romantic, I do love to control things.” His rhythm got a bit faster again, and his back pushed a little harder into her so she was turned slightly toward the blankets. She’d lost control, without contest.

His new rhythm was just fast enough, just hard enough, that should could feel her orgasm building. Her face turned into the pillow, and she clutched at the blankets as his thrusts got just a bit deeper and harder. It was such a slow transition into a proper fucking speed that her mind was left in a haze as the orgasm she longed for was always just slightly out of reach.

A single strong thrust did it. She tightened like a vice and squeezed his member hard enough she'd thought she'd wring it off, but her juices came trickling out of her boiling cunt and kept everything flowing nicely as her orgasm started working through her legs. Her toes curled and her knees bent against herself into a fetal position as she shook. That warm, rippling bliss of the climax went up and down her spine and through her core, and another squeeze of her cunt forced the wet spot of her cum on the sheets to grow.

The tragic knight had only just started to cum when she was finished though. When the tremors were at last starting to pass, he pushed into her again with enough force to make her squeak. Then, warmth. Another push of his hips, and that warm started ooze out from their messy connection. He was cumming, and filling her cunt in the process. Not like a Kindred could get pregnant from just having the blush of life going, but god damn she'd long forgotten what this felt like.

Another push. One of her hands reached behind her and rested on his hip, but she dared not move. The fucker had spent so long working her to orgasm, she was still struggling to get some control of her muscles, and in the mean time he was squirting his cum into her and making her mewl with each thrust. Another shove of his hips, harder than the last, earned a small spurt of her own cum to join his trickling down her thigh.

She looked over her shoulder to the big guy, and a smile graced her lips. The man really was a hopeless romantic. He was holding her, nuzzling into her, and his eyes were closed like he was in love. His big arm pulled her close, and she had to admit it certainly would have swept her off her feet, how he held her into the nook of his broad body and slowed his thrusts as his orgasm came and went. He eased into a slow rhythm again, and hell, she had to squeeze down on his cock to help milk him dry. He'd earned it after all, and she grinned with a playful snicker as she pushed her ass against him, squeezed hard enough to hurt, and drew her hips forward to pull out what little cum he had left.

"That is ... very tight," he said with a whisper. His face leaned into her neck, and she shivered at the feel of his lips on her skin.

"You are way too good at this. I'm rusty." She pushed her ass back into him. Her ass was great, there was no denying it, big and firm and toned and hard, and she pressed it to his pelvis and squeezed down on his cock yet again. Her antics forced him free of her, and she looked down with a sigh. His cum was leaking out of her and dripping down either side of her thigh. Fuck, she'd missed this.

"Thank you." The big mobster man was hugging her still, and even cuddling into her. She rolled her eyes, but didn't move. That was his quirk after all, he was the tragedy freak who missed life and all its simple pleasures. Didn't mean she couldn't join in for a little while.

"Don't get the wrong idea. This is not some Beauty and the Beast relationship. You are my window to good food and a good fuck. Got it?"

"Got it, Belle."

"Excuse me?" She tried to turn around and give him a good smacking, but the big Ventrue pulled her tight into the spooning hug, and she relented. What was a girl to do? It was comfortable in the nook of his body.

"Sorry. You can play badass Nosferatu all you like, but I like it." His free hand slid down one of her arms until his fingers were dancing on one of her palms, and her huge claws nudged against them.

“Cause you got some screws loose and you’re a tragedy freak.”

“Maybe. I think it’s because I like a woman with some life to her,” he said. She had to chuckle at that. “And I think reptiles are beautiful.”

“Calling me a reptile?”

~~Jack~~

It only took a small nod to the bouncer for Jack to get in. Just a week ago, he wouldn't have dared dream of it, but Invictus connections were endless – larger than just Xnomina - so now here he was, stepping into throbbing music and pulsing lights. The air smelled of sweat, body's grinding against each other with the beat, and enough skin was exposed to make his heart race. Or at least, it would have if it still beat; the fact it didn't never stopped unsettling him.

Everything was an elegant mixture of sex and presentation. There were no tube tops or cut-short jean shorts, but instead open-back tops, fashionable blazers, silk shirts open at the neck, and stilettos. The rich and comfortable enjoying the night life, fancy cars and white lines included.

How many people were in here? The smell was on his nose, not offensive but defined. He could feel the animal inside him struggle against the inside of his ribs. He could hear more than just the music, or even the tap of feet against the floor and chatting of people in dark corners. He could hear flesh and blood.

“Julias does this all the time, Jack. The people here want to socialize, they want to get drunk and fuck and get high.” He straightened the open collar of his white shirt. “You can do this.”

Ahead of him was the bar, parallel to the run of the hall that lead into the more open area. Beyond the hall opened a large room, easily capable of fitting a hundred people. At least fifty were out on the floor, and streaks of white light exposed them in the otherwise drowning red dark. Each time a streak crossed a dancer's path, it was a quick flash that showed the person dancing for a single moment. The dance floor seemed like it was a TV show running too slow, a stark contrast to the ear-numbing repetitive bass-heavy so-called music.

Jack looked to his left and right. Stairways on the side, beneath the red lights, lead up to a second floor where a balcony went over the bar. All along the walls, both above and below him, white tables with black booths had people. Some were alone, some were with others, some were almost dry humping as if the dark red of the Bloodlust's lighting would hide them.

“Yeah ... maybe I should ask a Mehket where they feed. This place is going to make me vomit.” With a cringe, Jack moved past the bar and kept to the sidewall to find one of the staircases. He walked up the stairs while keeping his eyes off to the side and looking down at the people below. Some of them weren't just rubbing pants in the seats. Some were actually having sex.

At least they kept their clothes on.

It was when Jack reached the top that he looked out over the second floor. It was more of the same, except darker. There were fewer tables, fewer people, and the music wasn't as loud, but the people up here were mostly unchanged. In fact, he seemed to have come across the make-out spot of the club, as almost every booth had a couple in it. Some were drinking, most were kissing.

One booth though, at the far back and on a slightly raised platform, had a different arrangement. One woman, tall and with long hair was sitting alone, yet behind her stood two other women. They did not sit, but waited next to her, outside the booth, with their hands hooked behind their back and their eyes on Jack. He gulped.

Antoinette.

Oh fuck oh fuck oh fuck. The animal inside him almost screeched. Run. Get the fuck out. You can't be here!

The Daeva raised one of her hands and pointed her finger at him before curling it toward herself.

Jack made a quiet groan. His hands were clenched hard enough to the railing to damage it, and he was almost shaking in his new shoes. Why hadn't he worn his new suit though? Casual black pants and white shirt weren't exactly meet-the-Prince material. Why was she here anyway? Bloodlust was in the Invictus domain, Viktor's domain. Then again, a Prince could go wherever she wanted probably. It was her city. And there were no other vamps here besides the two of them, so maybe other kindred avoided Bloodlust because of Antoinette?

She frowned.

He was stalling, and now she was angry. With a reluctant sigh, the tiny Ventrue walked over to her with his hands at his side, doing his best to not let her see they were shivering. At least the music wasn't as loud up here.

Daeva were always beautiful, but Antoinette was different. Her long, wavy white hair was clearly unnatural, as her sharp face looked no more than 30-years-old, and her red eyes were just as unusual and alluring. Her lips were dark, and the red lighting of the club hid whatever color lipstick she was wearing, but she had indeed taken the time to dress for her outing. Hopefully she was just out for a social visit to her club.

She was tall, as well. Well over six feet, and now that only a few feet separated them, he couldn't help but notice her glorious curves. Whoever had sired her in some ancient past had clearly picked his timing with purpose, as the woman was both lean with a fit physique, and yet endowed with exceptionally large breasts and wide hips. Julias had said who the Daeva sired was largely influenced by their appearance; Antoinette was a defining example.

Her dress was jaw-dropping, and it barely covered her body. An open-back black dress that tied around the neck and went down across the chest before wrapping the legs in a long, side-split skirt. The chest of it hugged Antoinette's breasts tightly, barely able to contain them as it exposed the sides of her large bosom. No bra in sight. She was leaning back in her booth with her arms up on the backs of the seat, legs crossed, and clearly enjoying how the sight of her was making Jack squirm with fear and dead man's arousal.

With a devious grin, the Prince pointed to the open space beside her in the booth.

Jack gulped almost audibly and sat down. His fingers ran over his buzzed hair with nervous habituation, and he tried to not look at the Daeva next to him. Where the hell to look though? The two women standing behind them were quite attractive as well, both of small height, one a blonde and the other a brunette. They had soft features and ballerina figures, and were dressed in uniform black jeans and black shirts that left the midriff exposed.

Ghouls? Must be. They weren't dead at least.

"I, uh ... I didn't know ... I-" Jack came to a stop when the Prince brought one of her fingers up to her own lips with a quiet shh. The small Ventrue's eyes followed the finger, now helpless to look away.

"You are Julias's new childe, yes? Jack ... Terry." The French in her accent was subtle, but still there.

"Yes ... your Excellency," Jack said. Oh god she remembers your name.

"My Prince, please." The goddess tapped her finger on the table to emphasize the title; it was important to her. "Julias is a good man. I see that he has chosen an ... interesting childe.” She liked to draw out her words, her sentences, and make every syllable dance on her lips with a playful articulation. “Most Ventrue prefer to sire those of ... greater presence, with greater power or at least the ability to pretend such power. You though, you have none of this.”

Words hurt.

“Yes, Prince.”

“My Prince,” she said.

He tensed; he’d made a mistake. But her tone was soft, and her gaze was teasing. She was the cat playing with the mouse. He knew very well she could have him killed, right here, if he said even the smallest offense. No one would risk her wrath over the death of a freshly embraced.

“Yes ... my Prince. Julias sired me for other reasons.” Keep it short. Answer her questions directly. Do not lie to her. His hands felt like they were trying to sweat.

“Oh? And what are those?”

“He ... chose me because I am...” He turned the words over in his head. Get to the point. “Because of my tenacity, so he claims.”

“Ah. That is indeed a powerful trait in an ally.” She leaned forward and hooked her fingers together with elbows on the table. Her chin rested against her knuckles, and she licked her lips. “A dangerous one in an enemy.”

His eyes went wide. She was going to kill him. Was she? She was just staring at him, this succubus of death and curves, and the little boy could only sit there and wait for her whim. The beast inside him huddled to the base of his gut and whimpered.

“Haha, do not worry little Ventrue. You are safe, for tonight at least. You amuse me. Most newly embraced would simply run, or have frozen, but here you sit. Tenacity indeed.” She winked at him in a motion so subtle he barely noticed. “It has been a long time since I’ve been able to talk with someone so new to the dark.”

He sighed in relief.

“You want to talk to a fledgling like me?”

“Yes.”

“But-”

“You offer a view of the world that is uncolored with decades, or centuries of bias. A freshly embraced like you is a welcome change of pace.” She let out a soft, masterful giggle. “You have met Viktor, I am sure. Imagine talking with none but his sort for years on end.”

Jack laughed, and quickly brought a hand to his mouth. Not only did he just laugh in front of the Prince, but he laughed at his sire’s sire.

“I ... understand, my Prince.”

“So, you have come to the Bloodlust to feed, little Ventrue?”

“I, uh ... yes.”

Kine? Oh right, humans.

“Just once. It was a ... violent experience.”

“Yes ... my Prince.” Embarrassing did not even begin to describe his predicament. He tried to keep his hands on the table in front of him, but he couldn’t help but run his fingertips along his buzzed hair again. He really was hungry.

“Julias comes here. Women grow wet at the sound of his voice. He should have been Daeva.” She chuckled again and let her hands fall to the table. “You do not have such a commanding presence. His advice to feed here is probably misplaced.”

Jack sighed, and nodded. It was a terribly depressing truth, but the small Ventrue didn’t exactly bleed the confidence common to his clan. And without the Daeva’s natural talents for seduction, wooing women into his arms on a nightly basis wouldn’t be easy.

“Oooh, yes mistress.”

Jack sat upright with a jolt. He looked wide-eyed between the tall Prince beside him, and then to the ghoul who came to sit on his other side. The blonde, with her gentle features and soft smile, did not hesitate to obey her master’s orders. Up so close, he could see the subtle lines of her abdominal muscles from her toned, lean stomach. Her top was tight to her body, and while her breasts were tiny, her lithe figure was very appealing. She was small, like Jack.

“Uh ... my Prince, I...”

When he looked to Antoinette, he went rigid at the sight of her sliding closer. She inched her body across the booth until she was touching leg-to-leg with Jack, with her closest arm upon the booth behind him. Her breasts, massive and hugged tight by her dress, were inches from his chest. She was leaning into him.

“Go on. Slowly. Enjoy it. Let her enjoy it.”

Jack gulped and looked to the ghoul, Ashley. This one was apparently quite happy to indulge the Prince's commands. He'd imagined Viktor's ghouls as beaten, broken slaves; the blonde kine was nothing like that. Ashley was smiling playfully at Jack even as her breath quickened. She wanted it.

"Julee, I think Jack is unfamiliar with women, as much as feeding."

"I believe you are right mistress," said the other ghoul. She had wandered over at this point, and was leaning over the booth from the other side. Jack was completely surrounded. A deer in headlights.

"Have some fun with him Ashley. He will hold still, won't you Jack?" There was a quiet hint of absolution to her voice, as if the very idea someone like him would disobey her was unfathomable. Frozen, the best he could manage was a small nod.

"Yes mistress." Ashley was almost giddy with excitement. "I never get to get to be ... the one leading." She ran a finger up and down Jack's shirt, across his stomach. "He is a cute little boy isn't he?"

"Yes, very," the Prince added. When Jack turned to look at her in surprise, she gave another wink and put a finger to his lips. Julias had warned him about Daeva, but only now did he recognize how deadly they were. Without threat of violence or risk of danger, he was a puppet to Antoinette's games.

Things could have been worse. A lot worse, he realized, as Ashley nudged her head toward him and put her lips against his neck.

The ghoul's neck was completely exposed. The black shirt she wore was barely more than a tank top, and now that she was snuggling into him, he could see that it was open-back like much of the clothing in the Bloodlust. A single string tied it to her neck, where it then hooked under her arms and tied around her lower back. A fact she was aware of, apparently, as she guided Jack's nearest arm around her and placed his fingers to her naked spine.

The Prince had told him to not move, and he was not going to move. Well, maybe squirm a little.

"The Daeva enjoy a much more ... delightful approach to feeding, when we can." Her finger on his lips moved down, and Antoinette's hand soon found itself on the boy's shaking leg. She pressed it down with a sudden power, and his shaking stopped from the sheer strength of her grip. She was smiling though; there was no anger in her eyes. She was merely enjoying herself.

"You can bite me," Ashley said, her voice barely audible underneath the music, "whenever you want. Please be gentle." She leaned up to his ear and gave it a little nibble. So close, he could smell her, almost hear her heart pumping that warm, thick, delicious blood.

His hands started to move on their own to take her, if only slowly and gently, and hug her to him as his cravings started to rise. She started to shake in his grip, but with excitement instead of fear. Her nipples had grown hard until they were pressing into his chest. One arm was tickling along his back underneath his shirt, and the other was joining Antoinette between his legs. The ghoul's hands were warm, unlike his or Antoinette's, and the heat of them was making his fangs grow.

The dark, red light of the Bloodlust was becoming far too strong a metaphor for his own bloodlust. Unable to ignore his desires anymore, he closed his eyes, and leaned into Ashley's nibbling. His lips found her neck, and she shuddered with anticipation. His fangs were at their full length now, and all it took was just the slightest, tiniest bit of pressure, to gently sink through her skin and into her muscle.

“ ... oooh.” Ashley moaned into him once the first signs of pain faded.

Holy hell.

Jack could not believe the sensation of it, the power of it. He could literally feel her heartbeat pumping tiny flows of that hot, heavy liquid up from her neck and into his mouth. He didn't have to pierce deep, it didn't take much force at all to gently coax the blood from her lean flesh.

His legs shook for a few seconds, but the elation settled him. He didn't have to pin this person down, or fight them. The beast within was left to sleep while he got to enjoy the pleasure of it. It was inhuman. The thirst, the cravings quenched felt so amazing that it left him relaxing into Ashley's neck. Once the initial cravings were subdued, all that was left was basking in the bliss of that sweet, sweet liquid trickling down into his cold body.

“He's ... gentle,” Ashley said. She was mewling quietly into his ear, and her body was relaxing into his as much as he into her. Her muscles shuddered every so often, a little jerk that surprised him. She was enjoying herself far more than he'd anticipated.

Without breaking the kiss, he looked up and over to Antoinette, who was now leaning in so close as to nearly be touching noses with him. Her red eyes were gorgeous.

Even with the Prince so close, Jack couldn't help but get pulled back into his Kiss with the ghoul. The ballerina was pressing harder against him, and her moans had grown only more erotic. He could feel the buzz of her vocal cords within her neck as he drank more, and more of her blood into his corpse. That warm liquid coating his insides was making him tingle, like a slow, easing orgasm.

No wonder Kindred enjoyed this so much. Jack couldn't help but give a small smile into Ashley's neck as he looked back up to Antoinette. That's what she was doing. She wanted to see him enjoy himself. Was it because she was so ancient? Had such things become boring to her? He couldn't see how. This lithe, sexy little creature was grinding against him, mewling into him, begging for him to continue, and the way each squirt of blood felt splashing against his tongue and going down his throat? He had no idea, just no idea how good this could feel.

"You may want to stop," Antoinette said. "If you keep drinking, she'll pass out. Anymore, she'll die."

With reluctance, Jack slowly lifted his head and turned his sights to Ashley. Her eyes were closed and weight rested to his shoulder. Her breathing was shallow, more like panting little moans, and her hand drifted up and down his stomach underneath his shirt with teasing fingertips. She had clearly enjoyed herself, even as drops of blood rose to the puncture marks still on her neck.

"Lick the bite to heal the wound." Antoinette gave his leg a reassuring nudge.

Right, Julias had mentioned that. Not that he'd need encouraging, with more blood leaking from the ballerina's neck. He put his lips to her delicate skin, and with an almost loving touch, licked the blood off of her and let his tongue press to the holes. He could feel her wounds closing underneath his touch, as inhuman as his own blood lust.

"I ... like this one," Ashley said. She was almost asleep, and had a big smile on her face. She rolled off of him and went lax beside him in the booth, apparently too weak to stand up.

"I do too." The Prince brought her hand from Jack's leg to his neck and ran one of her long claws up and down his cheek playfully. He was still shaking a little from the strange, overwhelming joy of the feeding, so new to him. The toying touch of an ancient, deadly queen on his face was the strangest spice to what might as well had been the best orgasm of his life.

“I, um ... uh ... thank you, my Prince.” What else could he say? His thirst was quenched, his beast sated, his anxiety about the whole process greatly reduced, and it was all because Antoinette felt like being generous.

“You must think I am doing this to manipulate you, hmmm? A pawn in the Danse Macabre?” Antoinette did not slide back to her original spot. Apparently, she was quite happy to stay snug against the small Ventrue. Jack did everything he could to avoid staring at her breasts, and hide the erection this whole ordeal had given him. The flood of fresh blood into his corpse had awoken his body’s nerves, and that included sexual response.

“ ... may I speak freely?”

The Prince tapped her chin thoughtfully for a second, before she gave Jack a knowing grin.

“You may.”

“Julias explained the Danse to me, the power games, and told me of the clans and covenants. This ... certainly seems like a maneuver in the Danse, but you know that I know absolutely nothing, will never learn anything of value, and have no influence.” He managed to swallow his fear and smile at the tall, gorgeous Daeva. “I can only assume you were telling the truth, and that ... you really do just want to talk to a fledgling like me.”

She took a while to look at him, those red predatory eyes looking straight into his green eyes. She was thinking? He’d said something to make the Prince deliberate? He held perfectly still, dared not even blink when she lowered her hand from his cheek to his lips, and wiped across their surface. The gorgeous creature brought her fingertip to her own lips, and with an elegant kiss cleaned the ghoul's blood from her digit. God damn.

“You are a smart little Ventrue,” she said, “but you may be underestimating the value of your own worth. We were all newly embraced, once.”

She was talking to him so normally, like he was an equal – well, almost. He started to relax a little, partly from being sated and partly from her words. She was Daeva, he had to be careful, but so far she hadn't said or done anything other than be friendly. Very friendly, what with Ashley snuggled against his arm, half asleep.

“And you ... my Prince, are ... I just ... wow. I...” He tried to find the words, but how the hell was he supposed to describe her? She was beautiful, but she undoubtedly knew that. She was beyond scary and intimidating, but she knew that too. She was drop dead sexy, but that'd be like telling a bird they have wings. What could he say? “You are ... wow.”

Antoinette outright laughed, and Jack couldn't help but smile at the sound of her voice.

“Thank you, Jack. It has been some time since someone has complimented me so truthfully.”

“Really?”

“Truly.”

“But you're so ... beautiful, and intelligent, and...” His words trailed off. She was smiling at him, but it had changed. This wasn't the cool, manipulative, powerful Prince smiling at him. It was a woman smiling at him, but there was a weight to it. Something pulled at her eyebrows and made her look somber.

His mother had smiled at him the same way, after their father had died.

The brunette ghoul behind the booth frowned, but didn't say anything. Antoinette gave Jack a hard look, and he almost shook in his seat. He may have just crossed a line.

“Yes. I am.” She finally looked away and back to the table in front of them. “It is the way of things. The Danse Macabre exists for a reason; Kindred are paranoid, avaricious creatures.”

He looked away as well. Things just got serious. His words had apparently struck a nerve with her, and her playful Daeva side vanished. Well, what a great way to repay her enormous kindness. Make her sad. Brilliant.

“I ... could ... I mean I don't know what I could possibly do. I can't even begin to wrap my mind around the sort of world you live in, but ... I could visit? Talk, maybe?” He ran his fingers across his buzzed hair again, and tried his best to look her in the eyes. His gaze kept drifting though, afraid her eyes would burn him if his proposal backfired. Who was he, to make such an offer to the Prince?

She looked to him again, slowly though, and as she turned to face him, a small frown was on her lips. He froze. He might as well have told Kali he'd be happy to visit for tea.

“I would like that,” she said, and her warm smile returned. When his jaw dropped, relief washing over him, she reached out and put her hand on his shoulder. “You are a brave little Ventrue. Innocent, and terribly honest.” She plucked at his ear a little. “I like that.”

The fresh blood in his stomach, and the touch of her fingers was making him blush. He was still trying to not shake; the sudden shift in their relationship hadn't changed that she was a spider and he was a fly. But now, with her fingers on his earlobe, even brushing his buzzed hair lightly, he couldn't help but sigh a little into her touch.

Her fingers felt nice.

“Come back soon, if you wish. I can help you with learning to feed.” She leaned in close, close enough that her lips just lightly grazed his earlobe. “And other things.”

“Indeed.” She pulled away, but her voice – so husky and sultry – let out a quiet sigh of satisfaction. “You'll have to come back to find out.”

~~Beatrice~~

There's nothing quite like a great singer who can belt a note with perfect glottal compression and cord closure.

Beatrice had her headphones on, and she had the metal cranked. Normally she'd sit still when listening, maybe air guitar or mouth the lyrics, but this time she was jumping up and down. She couldn't stop smiling.

When the singer hit a really high note, loud and hard, she kicked her bed hard enough to send it flying into the wall, and she slid onto her knees, all the while holding a non-existent mic to her non-existent singing.

Her door swung open loud enough that the crack of it against her wall managed to penetrate her headphones.

“For fuck's sake! Beatrice, the fuck is wrong with you?”

Beatrice came to a stop, looked at Joe, and held up a finger. Just ... one ... last ... minute.

“Song had to finish,” she said, and removed the headphones while she stepped over to her laptop to pause the music. Metal/rock operas always had the best singers.

“Yeah, sure.” Joe gave a low snort, not unlike an annoyed dog. She was tempted to throw the Gangrel a ball, just to see how pissed he’d get. He was a big guy though, a little older than her, a bit taller, and much thicker. Bald too. Looked kinda like a wrestler, now that she considered it.

“What do you want then?”

“Garry’s back. Says he wants to talk to you?” Joe gave a shrug and disappeared down the hallway. He had a room down the hallway a bit. All of Garry’s closest friends had rooms up here on the top floors of the building.

She hoped she hadn’t ruined that ‘closest friend’ title already with the whole Julias thing, hopefully still a secret. Even as she left her room and headed for the roof, she couldn’t help but smile to herself at the thought of Julias. She knew she shouldn’t of course; she’d made it clear to him what that night meant, but that didn’t mean she hadn’t enjoyed it. Or that it’d be the only night like it.

“Hey Beatrice.”

A small guy stepped in beside her. Scrawny, short brown hair, dazed eyes. Mike, a Mekhet who spent his days on the computer. He hadn’t been in the game for more than a few years, and he averted his eyes from her mouth when talking to her.

He annoyed the fuck out of her, but he got her mountains of free software so, he’d earned a pass.

“Yo Mike. Garry want to talk to you too?”

The kid nodded back. “And he’s got someone waiting for us?”

“Know who?”

“Nope.”

She shrugged, clicked her crocodile teeth from side to side, and stepped up onto the roof.

Garry was standing there in the center, and from the way he had his arms across his chest, she guessed he was in a defensive mood. He was a tough guy too – you had to be to run the Carthians – and the Gangrel looked more like he belonged in illegal street fighting rings than running any covenant. His hair was buzzed to basically nothing, his scruffy-short beard was barely kept in any state of neatness, and his hard jaw kind of made him look Russian from a distance. Julias may have had a suave, kingly look to him, but Garry looked like he could rip anyone apart with his bare hands.

The two vampires he was talking to, on the other hand, looked like a couple of wimpy bitches.

Her inner-beast stood up straight and tried to seem bigger than it was, but Rebecca was strong enough to beat her in a fight. The Daeva had a lot of years on her. Worse though, was her sire Tony.

Tony looked like he came out of a fucking vampire chick flick. She practically expected him to sparkle. He was a bit tall, with a lean and almost girlish figure. His hair was a short black trim, his face was soft with just a touch of scruff, and his blue eyes always carried a hint of gentleness to them. All he had to do was give her a small glance with those blue eyes though, and she found herself paralyzed.

He was ancient. Far older than Rebecca, or Garry for that matter. Every motion he made, she could see how measured it was, how precise. Worse still was how his blue eyes carried just a hint of the insanity you saw in serial killer sociopaths. The Prince's ex-lover was terrifying.

The two of them may have looked like wimpy bitches, but her inner-beast knew better. They'd rip her to shreds.

"Mike, see if you can crack this. Tony thinks it may have some coordinate data encrypted in some messages." Garry tossed a phone Mike's way, and the Mehket reached out to grab it. Of course, the idiot nearly dropped it, and everyone sucked in their breath for a second before Beatrice snatched it out of the air.

"Ah ... sorry ... boss," he said. Beatrice just had to wince; that cost him some respect points. She gave him the phone, and pushed him toward the door. He needed little convincing, and vanished back into the building.

"That kid, I swear." Garry groaned and looked back to the two Daeva on his roof. "Any other favors you want? Should I fucking dance?"

Rebecca looked angry, but Tony just laughed. "You don't want me to succeed?"

"You could say you're not my first choice for the next Prince."

"I'm hurt, Mister Tones." Tony shook his head, and his condescending-but-playful smile never waned. "But I could use a pair of eyes on the Invictus. You knew I'd ask though. That's why you sent for her, is it not?" He pointed straight at Beatrice.

"Tch." Garry gave a small snort in Gangrel fashion. "If the Prince catches on to what you're doing Tony, the Sheriff will be the least of your worries."

“I won’t tell if you won’t.”

The sheer amount of implied terrors was beyond her imagining. Julias was right, Kindred were fucking tiresome. Beatrice forced herself to stay silent, and instead resigned to watching Garry and Tony make thinly veiled threats at each other.

She ignored the slight trembling in her boots.

“Of course. No promises. Are there ever?” Tony gave a bow. Hell, even his whore childe Rebecca gave a bow, and then the both of them walked off. A small jump and they were down the building side, and down into the streets to be on their merry way.

“Tch. We work the hand we’re dealt. The idiot wants to be a thorn in Antoinette’s side, I say let him.” He leaned over the side of the rooftop and gazed out into the street below. “You think I went to a fucking Invictus party for the chicks?”

“Fucking right, no. Invictus are up to something. Viktor was pushing for a little ceasefire between us, for now. And you’re going to deliver.”

“What?”

“Ease off the aggression. Don’t go making any new enemies until I say we’re in the clear. Understood?” He leveled his gaze at her. Something was going on, and if she fucked with shit, she might ruin it.

And she wouldn't do that. She owed him, and they both knew it.

“ ... understood sir.”

“Viktor and Tony are going to get in each other's way sooner or later. When shit hits the fan ... well, we'll see. Tony wants us to give him a heads up if the Invictus head his way, so just keep an eye on the triumvirate's right hands, Julias and Natasha and them. If they're on his tail, tell me.”

Julias. She tried hard to not smile.

“Oh, and if you see an opportunity to kill that bitch Rebecca and pin the blame on the Invictus, take it.”

She couldn't hold back the smile anymore.

On the way down, she heard more voices. There hadn't been anyone else up there, and no one had come up the stairs since Mike had gone down. But when she stuck her head back out through the door to see, her boss was just standing there and looking out at the street.

Weird. She never pegged her boss for the talks-to-himself type.

Chapter 5

~~Julias~~

“The Carthians are rebels without a cause. They don’t do well taking orders from the older covenants, and work to try and establish more modern forms of government.”

Julias paced back and forth in his kitchen, glass of red in his hand and his childe at the counter.

“They’re not ‘bad,’ but they’d tear down generations of structure, of heritage, of rules and dynasties just because it doesn’t have the flash of a modern government.” He gave a shrug and sipped his drink. “Props to them for wanting a more fair and just system, but they’re naive. Kindred are not just, fair creatures, Jack. They’re greedy, paranoid predators.”

“Then how do the Invictus do it?”

“Rules. We’re the foundation that a society of vampires can last with, harsh and strict and formal. The Carthians would collapse within a year of being in charge.”

“But ... I thought Antoinette was in charge?”

Julias quirked a brow. The boy said her name with an odd touch of softness. “She is. We ask her permission for anything she’d care about, and she almost always lets us do as we will.” He chuckled. “It drives the triumvirate mad though. What’s that dragon up to, they argue constantly.”

“How many Carthians are there?”

“As many as Invictus; the two covenants make up the bulk of Dolareido’s Kindred. Viktor, Maria, and Michael are older than Garry though, so the Prince lets the Invictus rule ... usually.”

“Ok...” Jack ran both of his hands back and forth over his buzzed head, and his eyes were darting back and forth at nothing. Processing.

Julias managed another chuckle and took another drink. The amount of information was massive, and there was still more to come. The covenants would be enough for today though.

“Antoinette banned the Lancea et Sanctum, so you don’t need to worry about them. Normally they’d be our partners; Invictus control while the Lancea et Sanctum record. They’re a very religious group.”

“Can’t believe she has the power to ... no, wait, yeah I can believe it.” The small Ventrue gave a shiver. Apparently his meeting with the Prince had left an impression on him.

“And then ... there’s the Circle of the Crone.” It was Julias’s turn to give a shiver. “Jacob is their leader. A Nosferatu. He ... well...” He scratched at the back of his neck, even as Jack raised his head to look at him with wide eyes. “Jacob is primal.”

“Primal?”

“Yes. Primal. Jacob would be deep underground with his nest, and I would not be surprised to see him chanting around a bowl of Kindred blood, mixed with the bones of animals and kine, and casting ... dark things.”

They stared at each other for a moment. So far, all talk of Kindred had been modern, of business men and slum lords and politics and money. The thought of the Circle and their ancient, primordial ways got under Julias’s skin, and under the skin of his childe too from the way Jack was looking at him.

“No one’s mentioned him ... I’m surprised Antoinette allows that, and not the Lancea et Sanctum.” Again, Jack’s voice said the Prince’s name with an odd inflection, and for a moment, Julias could swear the boy smiled.

“You have the Prince on your mind, Jack? What’s up?”

“I ... er, yeah.” The little man huddled in on himself until he practically reeked of shame. “I ... hung out with Antoinette last night.”

“ ... I’m sorry. What?”

“I uh ... had a lovely night with Antoinette.” Jack was scratching his head in that way he always did when he was nervous. Well, at least his childe was predicable. Or so he thought.

“The Prince.”

“The Prince.”

“You had a lovely night with ... the Prince ... of our city.”

“ ... yeah.”

Julias’s face was stuck in a permanent frown, but his childe apparently couldn’t contain his grin anymore. He refused to look Julias in the eye, and his were looking to the counter. Hell, even one of his fingers was tracing nothing into its surface.

“Ok, ok, you’re going to have to walk me through it.” With a groan of frustration, Julias took up his usual glass of blood and started to walk around. Soon he was in front of his window and looking out over the city. His childe had been talking to Antoinette?

“Well, I dropped by Bloodlust like you suggested. Which was a horrible idea, by the way. The music alone, my god. I mean-”

“The story, Jack.”

“Right, right. Well, I went up onto the second floor, thought maybe it would be nicer up there. And .. well Antoinette was there in the back.”

“The hell was the Prince doing at Bloodlust? She’s never been there before...” Julias scratched at his chin before taking another sip of his blood. A Prince wouldn’t just go walking around visiting new places. They are machines of decision and efficiency. Everything is done with a purpose.

“I have no idea, but when she saw me, she made me sit with her.”

Julias had to turn to look at Jack just to make sure the boy wasn’t joking. Nope, the small Ventrue was scratching his head in his usual way.

“You sat down at her booth.”

“Yeap.”

“Who?”

“Oh. I uh, didn’t see him. Only two of her ghouls.”

“You wouldn’t see him, he’s a Mekhet. He was there though, he’d have to be. Antoinette wouldn’t just go out alone.” The large Ventrue paced back and forth in front of the window. Viktor was not going to like this. Anything out of the ordinary was enough to make his master nervous, and that it had been this brand new childe who discovered it? Suspicious wouldn’t even describe his reaction.

“Well, I’m still in one piece, so I guess he didn’t. I sat down and Antoinette saw I was hungry.”

“That’s why I went there! You know I’m no good at this sort of thing. Antoinette noticed right off the bat, so she...”

“She um ... let me feed off of one of her ghouls.”

“Oh ... oh. Well.” His grip loosened on his drink, and he came back to the counter to sit across from his childe. “She didn’t give you any of her blood to drink, did she?”

“What? No, no ... vampires can drink other vampire blood?”

Julias ran his fingers through his hair in a way not too dissimilar to Jack.

“It’s ... just, don’t do it. Never do it. Ever. I can explain it in detail later, just know that it will ruin you. Ruin. You.” He could tell his words struck home, as Jack’s eyes opened wide. If he had to scare his childe to the extreme to get across his point, he'd do it. Jack was far too trusting and innocent to be making that risk.

“Ok ok, never drink another vamp's blood. Got it. So I drank from her ghoul, which was amazing and insanely hot, by the way.”

“Which one?”

“The blonde, Ashley. Ballerina's body you know? She got all snug with me and rubbed against me and stuff.”

“... damn that is pretty hot, so lean and bendy and – wait wait wait. She let you feed on one of her ghouls? Why?” Focus, Julias. Women later, the problem now.

“I guess ... to be nice?”

“She's the Prince, Jack. She's not going to do anything without a real motive.”

“I know, I know. But what exactly is she going to get out of controlling me, Julias? I'm not in a position of power, or influence, or even knowledge. And hey, I get that, I understand. So what's the harm?”

“I ... don't know. Vampires are patient, her more than most. She may be sewing a seed that will help her in decades to come.”

“Maybe, maybe, but ... I don't know. She didn't know I'd be coming - hell I didn't know. She was ... she seemed like she ... wanted to experience the things I was only just experiencing.” The small Ventrue scratched at the back of his neck, and Julias could only ponder.

“She is ancient, and a Daeva. She'll chase after things like that, I guess. This is unheard of though, for Antoinette. If Tony knew...”

“The Daeva Primogen?”

“Yeah. If he knew, he’d rip you to bits, and I don’t think he’d worry about doing it secretly,” Julias said.

“Fuck ... fuck fuck fuck.”

Julias groaned and moved over to his couch. If Antoinette’s unknown games weren’t going to get Jack killed, then Tony’s jealousy would.

“Don’t ... just be careful. It’s not like you can just tell her no, if she asks you to do something innocent, even if it does piss Tony off. Maybe she’ll protect you if he finds out ... maybe?” The taller man swished his drink around in its glass. His eyes stared into it and his mind wandered. His new childe was already at the whim of the Prince herself, and her games were putting his new life at risk.

Jack came over to join him. Even with scared written on his face, Julias could see the small Ventrue was also smiling.

“ ... you like her!”

“What!? No I don’t.”

“Oh yes you do Jack. She has you wrapped around her finger and she’s making you dance.”

“I can’t dance.”

“You know what I mean Jack. She’s got you swooning over her like a typical man and a succubus.”

“She didn’t use her ... abilities, as far as I can tell. I mean I remember what it felt like when Rebecca had me, and Antoinette didn’t do anything like that. Or she’s really good at hiding it.”

“Well that’s good ... ish.” Julias couldn’t help but smirk at Jack. The little Ventrue was certainly biting off big fish, whether he had meant to or not. “So, what was she like?”

“What do you mean?”

“Her personality.”

“You don’t know?”

“No one talks to the Prince outside of meetings, Jack.” Julias took another sip of his drink and smirked at his childe. “You’re in the Danse Macabre now, if only by the strangest means possible.”

“Oh, wow. Well she was ... well, she was nice. Oddly insistent I call her ‘my Prince,’ but still really nice to me.”

“Nice?”

“Yeah, nice, like she legitimately wanted to have a nice night and talk to me, help me even.”

“You do know she’s ancient, right? She’s the oldest vampire in the city. Older than Viktor. Maybe even older than Jacob. She’s been around since the Italian War 1542. She has seen more death than any of us. She’s seen nations rise and fall. She’s one of the oldest members of the Ordo Dracul!”

“ ... I don’t know what to tell you dude. She seemed nice.” The childe squirmed a little. Some memory put a smile on his face. “And sexual.”

“Oh?”

“Yeah, she ... she got really close, especially when I got to feed on Ashley. Got right up next to me, leaned into me, played with my ear a little.”

Even Julias found his interest peaked. This was the Prince? He knew she was Daeva, but damn.

“She was wearing this little black dress that left very, very little to hide. Just ... wow. And she was so close while I was feeding, it was ... and I mean...” Jack gestured to his chest with open palms. “They were huge.”

“I admit, Antoinette is gorgeous. Tall though. She’s got a foot on you.”

“And I am perfectly fine with that.” Jack grinned like a jackass, and Julias could only hope the man’s innocence wasn’t going to get him turned into ash.

“Please please please don’t try and hook up with Antoinette.”

“I would never!”

His feigned shock managed to make Julias laugh.

“Jack.” Julias forced himself to frown, reached over, and gave him a good slug in the arm. “I’m not ... I’m just ... you’re new to this. You’re picking it up very quickly but you’re still very new to this. You have to tread carefully. Not all Kindred are reasonable.”

“I’m picking this up quickly?”

“Yes.” Julias gave his friend a slow sigh before sipping his drink. “But if you draw too much attention before you’re able to protect yourself, depending on who you piss off, I won’t be able to protect you.” It was a bitter pill to swallow.

Jack was still smiling though.

Just when Julias was about to give him a tongue lashing for not taking things seriously, a call came in on his phone.

~Yo let me in.~

“Ah, Beatrice is here,” Julias said.

“Who?”

“A new acquaintance. I’m sure you’ll like her.” The older Ventrue hit OK on the apartment smartphone app, and a chime let him know the lobby door had been opened. The wonders of technology. It startled him sometimes, having been embraced early in the 20th century. Technology grew so fast as to make his head spin, and sometimes he could only imagine what it did to the elder Kindred.

“A girl? I should go then. This—hey, how often do you drink the women you bring here?”

“I don’t bring women here that often.”

“Oh hell yes you do man.” Jack just laughed, and Julias found himself frowning at the drink in his hand. Did he really? Beatrice was right then.

“ ... yes, I drink them. I don’t kill them.”

“Didn’t think you would man. You may be a playboy but you certainly don’t seem a—”

The door flew open with a crack, and both men almost jumped at the sudden sound. Beatrice walked in in her typical jeans, black army boots and a tank top, but she also had a box in her hands.

“Ok White Knight, pants off. I got a box of goodies and we are going to try some shit out!” Beatrice said, and she grinned maniacally with all her teeth on display. She must not have seen Jack yet. Julias raised a hand, but the Nosferatu threw the box to the floor where it landed with a loud thud. “And check these out!” With a shameless motion, Beatrice lifted her tanktop up to her neck and hooked it against her chest above her breasts. Her claws found her nipples, and they plucked at some rings that pierced them, rather than the bolts she had last time. “I brought lots of piercings and chains and shit we can try and see what looks hot.”

“Beatrice, um...” Julias said, and motioned to his childe on the couch. “Have you met Jack?”

Jack was a deer in headlights. Beatrice just humphed though, and lowered her shirt before turning to look at Julias’s friend.

His childe was a child, and his lover was a punk.

“Yeah, buh-bye kid.”

Once Jack was off the couch, Beatrice hopped into it his spot and crossed her legs. Jack glanced to her, but she just smiled and waved her claws. Ok, so maybe Jack wouldn’t like her, but Julias was sure he’d figure out how to make them get along. Maybe.

Jack managed a slow, hesitant return wave, and mouthed ‘what the fuck’ before leaving.

“Aha, that is fucking adorable. You sired him? Fuck man. I’m surprised Viktor hasn’t eaten him. Literally. I don’t mean diablerie, I mean just eaten him whole like a fucking pickle.”

“Jack is actually over twenty years old, he just looks kinda young ... and acts it. He’s a friend though, and I sired him for good reasons.” Julias took another sip. He had to admit, seeing Beatrice walk through his door and with such a brazen attitude was such a change from the Invictus approach. Her crass behavior wasn’t irritating, despite how much he felt it should be, but was instead very refreshing. Usually.

“Hey, I ain’t judging his character, just his size.” She reached out and over to her dropped box, and slid it back to the foot of the couch where she sat. “So, seriously, check this out. I got some vibrators, some beads, some lube – of fucking course – and some rope. Oh, and a bunch of different piercings to try, and nipple chains. Fucking eh, nipple chains, right? Never tried em.”

“You think it’s that easy? You just show up and we fuck?”

Beatrice slowly raised her eyes from the box to him, utterly perplexed, before she burst into fits of laughter. “Yes. I do. Think I didn’t see how much you liked this piece of ass last time I was here?”

“ ... well, still, a little dialogue might be nice. What have you been up to?”

“Me? I have been up to absolutely fuck-all besides stealing sex toys and having a nice good feed before coming here.” Suddenly, she was topless, and her tank top was on the floor. She’d taken it off in such a carefree motion, Julias wasn’t sure he’d seen it. “How about you? I’m sure you must have a ghoul or two around to drink.”

“No ghoul.”

Try as he might to maintain normal conversation, he was in fact staring at the topless woman. She had the thick, toned legs of a fighter, but the leanness of a gymnast. He was almost jealous of her muscle definition along her flat stomach, but jealously quickly turned to arousal as he drank the sight of her handful breasts sitting on her strong torso. The tattoos and piercings and her casual sitting stance, as if everything was normal despite having taken her shirt off, painted the perfect picture of a badass woman.

He really liked it. When her dark hair covered her cheeks and left only her normal lips exposed, she seemed like a perfectly normal, albeit spunky woman. With snake eyes. And claws.

“I suppose you wouldn’t really need one, with girls lining up at your door. Ah man, you should invite me to one of your feedings sometime. We could turn the lights off so she can’t see my face, and do all sorts of dirty things to her in the dark.” The Nosferatu was grinning with her scary array of massive crocodile teeth, and started to dig into the box of goodies she’d brought.

“If it was a ghoul, I could leave the lights on,” he said, and walked over to join her on the couch after setting his drink down on the counter.

“Thinking about getting one then?”

“I’m not sure. Why not you?”

“Me? Shit Julias, I’ve only been a Kindred for 20 years. Turning some kine into my slave is heavy shit, not to mention a Nosferatu’s slave. Plus Garry says it can be a drain on you ... aha!” As if she’d found treasure, she pulled out of the box a small, black bag, the sort you’d keep jewelry in. She dumped the contents onto the nightstand and exposed an assortment of chains.

“See?” she said, grabbed one of the thin silver ones, and right in front of him as if trying on hats, hooked each end to her nipple rings. She was turned on the couch to face him now, with her knee pulled up onto the cushion, and one of her arms hooked along the back of the couch, so her other hand was free to pluck at the length of the chain.

Then she blushed. The blush of life brought color to her skin right in front of him, and to his delight, made her nipples swell slightly. She must have caught the lust in his eyes, cause she got up off the couch, and posed for him.

“You like?”

“What happened to the nasty, horrible monster who lived in the dark and hated everyone?”

“Hey! I never hated everyone, just ... the monster is on vacation. This is her vacation, unless you want me to—”

“No no, please continue.” He leaned back in his couch and put both his arms along its back. The blush of life went through him as well, and within moments colors had come back to his skin, saliva had joined his tongue, and arousal started to pump blood into his member.

“Ah, see, now I feel like a schoolgirl trying to make it in the movie business, so I agree to do an audition that gets dirty.” She just laughed. “How about this one?” She changed chains for a longer, thicker one that nearly reached her navel.

“Oh, I do like that one.”

“I know, right? It’s got heft. I can feel it pulling down on my tits.” The warrior walked up to him, put her hands down onto his knees, and leaned forward so the chain nestled against the bottom of his shirt.

“I can ... feel that.”

“That all you feel?” With a bit of roughness to her, she put her clawed hands against his crotch. “Come on, I don’t have all night here.”

“You don’t?”

“Well ... ok yeah, I do.” She started to rub against the growing erection in his pants. Just the fact she was so brazen about it was enough to bring him to full arousal within seconds. “That’s why I brought the box.” The Nosferatu pulled herself onto the couch and straddled him, then slid forward enough so her own crotch rested against his. One of her arms hooked around behind him, and the other rested its elbow on his shoulder so her claws could run through his hair.

He had to admit, she was acting very differently than last time. All the subtle ways she tried to hide her crocodile smile were gone, and instead she was looking him straight in the eye with the huge array of teeth on full display. Her lips in the center looked perfectly normal, but both cheeks were replaced with monstrous teeth that could easily rip him in half. Despite himself, having such a monster grinding on him was only making him harder.

“Christ you are one weird man, Julias. Inches away from snapping distance, and you get horny.” She leaned in closer, and closer, until their noses were touching. “That really turns me on.”

He leaned in toward her in return, and put his lips to hers. She blinked at him, and for just a moment he thought she was going to bite him, but once his hands reached behind her and started to caress her naked back, she relented. She let her body relax against him, closed her eyes, and kissed him back with a sigh.

That sigh of acceptance on her voice was what he wanted. It was beautiful, how such a dark creature could be so sexual, and even tender and romantic. He dared not say it, lest she rip him to bits, but he could think it.

“Ok Romeo ... don’t make me smack you.” She loved to threaten him, but he saw the grin on her lips. She liked it.

Her hands reached down and took his, and as she got comfy on his lap, her claws guided his fingers to her body. She really did have the physique of a gymnast and fighter combined. Her legs were thick and powerful – damn hot in those tight jeans she liked – and her stomach was an impressive array of defined abs. He was a big, tall, and muscular guy, but her chiseled stomach was iron.

A snake tattoo danced along her stomach, curling around over the muscles of her pelvis, abs, and then up the center of her sternum to turn and bite into one of her nipples. She even guided one of his hands to follow the snake’s trail, until she planted his hand against her breast. Even with her lean, muscular physique, her breast was just large enough to fill his large palm, and a gentle squeeze was enough to mold its softness to his fingers while the chain dangled over his thumb.

Her hands found his tie. To his surprise, she was looking at it with a rather lustful gaze. Her claws drifted up and down its length, and she plucked at his tie bar with a playful grin.

“So ... we’re going to have a no-work-talk clause, right?” she said, and hooked one hand around his neck, while the other continued to tug and pull at his tie.

“A clause?”

“Just trying to talk like an Invictus would understand.” She shifted her jaw to the side a bit, which caused a few of the front crocodile teeth to click together as they slid over each other. “You know shit will happen between the Carthians and Invictus. And I don’t want any of that fuckery coming in here and ruining a good thing.”

“ ... are you planning on coming over often?” He tilted his head to the side and nudged his cheek into her wrist.

The Nosferatu looked at him for only a moment before her eyes wandered away, and the telltale hints of shyness sneaked their way into her mannerisms. She started to fidget a little, confidence wavering, and her body tensed. She was thinking.

“You don’t want me to?”

“I definitely do want you to.” He gave her wrist a kiss, and her smile returned. “But you’ve entered relationship territory now. If you start coming over regularly, I’m afraid I’ll have to officially declare that we’re dating.”

“ ... fuck. Seriously?” The Kindred frowned down at him. “You can’t do that. Our bosses would kill us.”

“They won’t. They may want to, but they won’t.” Both his hands slid down to her waist, and he let his fingers run back over the muscles of her pelvis, before reaching behind her to feel the shape of her ass through her jeans. She leaned into his grip a little too. “Besides, I won’t tell anyone if don’t want me to. It’d just be for us.”

“But ... I don’t want to be in a committed relationship.” She sat back on his lap, and he could swear she was trying to pout. She couldn’t really do it right though, with her extra teeth along her cheeks.

“Too bad. Call me old fashioned.” He gave a shrug, but smiled his jackass smile. “You’ll get to come over whenever you want, share in my things, share in my meals too. We’ll talk, laugh, comfort each other, and kiss and other things.” He sat up and spread his legs, and Beatrice’s eyes opened a little wide as her ass fell between his legs and onto the couch. “Won’t that just be horrible?”

The poor girl. She was dealing with a Ventrue. He never went into a conversation without having planned it out ahead of time, for a million different possibilities. He could read her expressions – even with her extra teeth – like a poker player too, to every last tell she had. He crafted the words, the inflections, the propositions to go with them, all to manipulate and control the dialogue to go the way he wanted it to go, and make the other person realize what he wanted them to realize.

He wanted her to realize he liked her.

“Come on. Do ... I have to decide now?”

“No. Take your time.” Now that her ass was on the couch between his legs, his height came into play and he was looking down at her. His hands sneaked up her back, and his fingers danced along her naked shoulder blades. He even leaned forward, and put his forehead to hers. She tried to pull away, but with his hands on her back, she was trapped and helpless to escape. All she could do was lower her gaze and avoid eye contact.

After a minute of stubborn quietness, the Nosferatu creature let out a quiet grumble and put her hands on his chest. “I’ll think about it.”

“Thank you.”

“Fucking ... Ventrue.” She reached up and undid his tie. How she managed to undo clothing without her claws cutting it, he couldn’t fathom. “I just wanted to come over and have a good fuck, maybe chill out a bit. Didn’t want any of this emotional crap.” Little by little, she started to undo his suit. He watched her work with a tilted head and a smile; much as she may hate the Invictus, or Ventrue Kindred, she seemed to really like his suit, and she was delicate as she undid the jacket, and then the waistcoat.

She laughed, and he gave her another kiss. This time, she kissed him back immediately, and even smiled a little before pushing him harder so he was leaning into the couch. Her claws were quick, and an eagerness started to join her movements until she was almost pulling his clothes off of him. When she finally had him down to his boxers, she slid off of him and laid down on the couch, and with her legs in the air, she undid her boots, then pulled off her pants and underwear.

The Nosferatu, naked and smirking, let one of her legs dangle off the side of the couch, and pulled up her other leg to bend at the knee and press into the back of the furniture so her legs were spread open. Her claws drifted up and down her hard stomach, and one pair found the chain still attached to her nipples, then idly tugged on it.

“If it’s my fault, at least I can get something out of it.” She reached down with her other hand, and her sharp claws found the pierced hood of her clit. The little nub of flesh was already swollen, and Beatrice didn’t hesitate to start stroking it.

For a moment, a part of him worried about his couch, and then he grinned at the image of what would happen if he told Beatrice to stop for fear of his furniture. She’d probably stab the couch, then him.

The couch didn’t matter anyway. The deadly creature in front of him was naked, masturbating, and watching him with hungry eyes. Just seeing those snake eyes of hers, green with black slits down their centers, was enough to make him shiver. She really was a dangerous animal, wild and almost chaotic with her impulses. He wanted more of that.

“You just going to watch?” she said. Her fingers had gotten faster, and he could see the shine of moisture already starting to build on her tight snatch’s lips.

“You seem to like it.” He reached out, took her leg still on the couch, pulled it onto his lap, and ran his hands up down her calf and thigh. She really had the legs of a warrior.

“... I do. No one’s looked at me in a long time.” She clicked her teeth together, and even let out her tongue – damn that was a long tongue – to lick at her chops. “And ... I really got off on being watched, when I was alive.”

She spread herself a little more, and started to masturbate a little faster. Every bit of him wanted to take her there, but there was something to this. The sight of her, monster and all, spreading herself and playing with herself, knowing he could see every detail and had his hands on her leg, was intoxicating. Her abs flexed whenever she got a little rougher, and the leg in his hands pressed against his bare chest a little harder too.

He slid off his boxers. His member was already hard and upright, and he kept his eyes on Beatrice as he wrapped a hand around it. The Nosferatu responded immediately, her voice growing to a full moan, and her hand on her clit getting faster and faster. When he started to slowly stroke himself, all while keeping his eyes focused on her, she erupted.

She almost pushed herself off the couch, but managed to balance herself before her spreading legs nudged her anymore. Her back arched, one hand grabbed onto her breast, and the other covered her pussy while the juices started to trickle. In only minutes, she’d gone from the teasing creature on his lap, to cumming and groaning at her own fingers.

“That was fast,” he said. The Nosferatu didn’t seem to mind. She milked her orgasm with her hand gently cupping her cunt, holding herself, while the spasms of her body worked through the couch so he could just barely feel them. She was looking at him while she came too, and her snake eyes drifted down to where his hand was stroking himself.

“H ... hold on,” she managed to say, and forced herself to sit up. He stopped massaging his cock, and laid back as Beatrice grabbed his shoulders, and straddled his lap again; he could feel her trembling thighs against his. This time, she had her knees planted on the couch on either side of him, and the hand that was holding his shoulder moved to wrap its claws around his throat.

He dared not move. For a moment he wondered if she'd cut off his head, but the fear passed quickly as her other hand reached down and grabbed his shaft. She gave it a few, tender strokes, enough to rekindle it to full arousal. With her lean, ripped body squirming around in front of him, and the chain dangling from her nipples – not to mention her other assortment of piercings – Julias could only drink in the sight of the wild animal guiding his cock upward.

With a quiet whimper, she lowered herself onto him.

She was so unbelievably tight. Julias settled his hands on her hips, and simply watched with hungry eyes while she continued to work her way down. He was a big guy, he knew that, and Beatrice was tight enough and strong enough she could probably squeeze him until she tore his dick right off. She was so wet though, that even her clenching muscles let him penetrate her, inch by slow inch. The blush of life had her small labia dripping juices down his length, and before long, he could feel her warm cum on his testicles.

“Ever ... thought of ... getting into porn?” she said. She’d managed half of him at that point, and even Julias was struggling to hold still. Her soaked insides were squeezing his glans, massaging with each inch of him she took in. The hot wet of her cunt was sending little jolts of pleasure down his cock; it took every part of his willpower to not push down on her hips.

She liked to be watched, and he wanted to watch.

“Yeah, dumbass. You got the dick for it. You ... need a girl ... with a looser pussy. This is ... painful.”

Despite her complaint, Beatrice let out another moan, her jaw opening and her long tongue hanging from between her teeth. A low growl escaped her. She’d finally taken him to the base, and slid her hands back to his shoulders to hold on while she sat there and got comfortable with a little wriggle of her hips.

“I don’t think I’d look very good on camera.” He smiled at her, and she even grinned back at him. He was better at controlling his voice than her, but truth was he found no room left for his cock inside her. Every last inch of him was being squeezed by her snatch, almost hard enough to be painful, but she was soaking wet and only dripping more of her juices down onto him. Apparently, Beatrice was a sex addict in life, and it carried over to her undeath. Even as a vampire, the blush of life had turned her body into a fountain of hot, flowing juices that sent waves of warm pleasure down his cock.

She started to move. She didn’t bounce up and down, instead the monster was more content to push against him, and make sure his back was against the couch, so she could lean back and gently grind herself back and forth. It was heaven on his cock; he could feel his glans gently rubbing against her deepest walls, massaging him in her almost circular lap dance.

“Fucking hitting ... that deep spot. Hurts...”

“Are you alright?”

Beatrice just laughed, and let her weight sink her balls deep onto him. More of her juices trickled down his testicles, she was so wet.

“Only hurts a little. But ... so ... fucking ... deep, nng. Just don’t ... move...”

The Nosferatu was in control. It left him with nothing to do but watch, and touch. His hands started to drift up and down her body, to the skull tattoo where her missing pubic hair would be, the snake that coiled around her abs and bit into her right nipple, and to the various other tattoos that decorated her muscular form. One of her ears had a large assortment of earrings, and a small chain that connected a nose-piercing to it; he reached up to touch those as well. An eyebrow held a small stud. Her shoulder-length dark hair framed her face and hid it, but with his hands roaming her body, he found the tattoo of chain link circling her neck. He touched it all.

Any one of these would have made her uncouth, even vulgar to an Invictus, but Julias could only stare, mesmerized. The chain connecting her nipples started to jingle lightly against her abs, and one of his hands took it and softly pulled on it, just hard enough to feel her breasts resist.

“You ... keep staring...” She took his hand from the chain, and guided it down her stomach to the piercing of her clit hood. “Play with me too.”

He looked down at where they were connected. With one hand over her mons, he could see the skull tattoo between his fingers. When he touched her, the sensation was immediate. All he had to do was gently rub his thumb down along her swollen clitoris, and then nudge it upward just as gently. Every time he did, he tensed a little from the powerful squeeze her muscles did around his cock, all while she lightly rocked herself back and forth. He worked her clit in a subtle rhythm, half to pleasure her, half because each time he massaged it with a little force, she gave a quiet whimper and squeezed his cock so tight, he thought he'd cum right there. The sensation of her pussy gripping his whole length was intense.

“You are so ... beautiful ... and tight.”

He laughed. The Nosferatu was good at banter. He couldn't help but smile all the more, and even as they struggled to talk while little moans and groans slipped into their dialogue, he continued to play with her clit. Soon he was toying more with its piercing, and he pushed up on it with his thumb just to let it fall against her sensitive flesh. Each time, she almost winced, tightened her grip on his shoulders, and really really tightened her grip on his shaft. The monster creature let out a rather deep, almost sultry moan, and sank down onto him until she'd swallowed him to the base again, and Julias found himself struggling to keep his eyes from closing with how strong a sensation it was. His glans was so swollen, and she was squeezing it so hard, he was sure it'd hurt if her flesh wasn't absolutely dripping.

Soon, he could feel the juices start to build. Beatrice was keeping her pace slow, and each time she worked her hips back and forth, the head of his cock sent powerful jolts of stimulation down his length. Her movement only let her shift maybe an inch of his length, but it was more than enough with how tight she was.

Before he could say anything about how close he was, Beatrice reached down and stopped his hand from playing with her clit anymore. Her other hand squeezed into his shoulder, hard, her body went still for a moment, and then started to tremble. Her thighs squeezed in around him, and the creature herself was looking down at where she was spread open over him. More juices joined the already messy connection, and the vice-like grip of her insides clamped down on him with spasms.

She was cumming, and with him already on the edge, it was more than enough to bring him over it. The quivering of her insides made his own legs shake slightly, and he had to hold her hips when the liquid started to pour from him.

“W ... wait...” she said, but Julias could barely hear it. For just a few seconds, he lost control, and with his hands on her hips, he forced her balls deep and pushed up with his own hips. Just a few times, just enough so those first few squirts of his cum sent powerful, almost painful jolts of pleasure down his cock and between his legs. Each thrust earned a small, pained squeak from the Nosferatu, made her nipple chain bounce against her, and caused a drenching splash of her juices to coat his pelvis. He was already stretching her to her limits, and now he was hitting the back of her pussy with an almost desperate need; he couldn't stop. When the urge overwhelmed him, he gave her a final hard thrust upward while pressing down on her hips. Her muscles responded in kind, and squeezed him hard enough to make him wince as more of his thick cum gushed into her.

After the first few seconds of his orgasm, he relaxed and leaned back, and looked to the woman on his lap while they came together. She was still cumming, and her mouth of crocodile teeth was hanging open with her tongue dangling out. His forceful climax had apparently done a number on the powerful creature in his arms, as she sat there in his lap and let out quiet mewls while her body continued to lightly spasm. Her insides clenched and squeezed in random spurts, and forcibly milked several more waves of his cum from him, along with trickles of her own juices.

A couple moments later, she collapsed forward and put her head against his shoulder. She was a fair bit smaller than him, and fit against his chest and body without issue.

“You ... hurt me...” she said. She was still trembling, unable to hold still, and Julias put his hands to her back to hug her while she came.

“I’m sorry. I, I...”

“You dumbass.” Still shivering, she wriggled her hips about so she could wrap her legs around and behind him. She hugged him too, and kept her face hidden from him in the nook of his neck. “It’s ok. Just ... was a little surprised. Didn’t know Superman could be so rough.”

He breathed a sigh of relief, and let himself relax back against the couch while he held the woman to his chest. He hadn’t meant to hurt her, but sometimes the need to be rough was irresistible. Beatrice was only hugging him tighter though, and her trembling pussy still gave a small spasm every few moments. She’d absolutely soaked him. Poor couch.

“If I was human, I’d be walking bow-legged for a week ... fucking bruised my insides.”

“I thought you said it was ok?”

“Well that’s one perk about being a vampire. I will be by tomorrow night.” She nudged her nose up into his neck. “But maybe tomorrow night ... we’ll try spooning again.”

“Tomorrow night?”

“Fucking right.” She sat up again and put her claw against his nose, a glint of playfulness in her eyes and a grin on her lips. “Cause now, I’ve got my eye on you.”

Chapter 6

~~Julias~~

It didn't matter how many times Julias stood before the triumvirate, he never felt safe.

Viktor was old. Michael and Maria were there as well, and while they were older and stronger than Julias, it was Viktor that made his inner-beast recoil. Sometimes Julias wondered if his sire would try another torpor, before his strength grew to the point that he'd need Kindred blood to survive, and not kine blood. Every time he stood before him, he started to worry more and more about that possibility.

Natasha and Jessy were there too. Jessy was Michael's childe, a Gangrel, and his right hand for the Invictus; she was just a bloodthirsty animal. Natasha on the other hand was a Mehket, and served as Maria's right hand. Only Maria knew who Natasha's sire was.

The three right hands and their three masters. They stood in the top floor of Xnomina, with a gigantic touch-screen on the wall. The masters were not good with keyboards, or texting, but they were quite comfortable managing complicated webs of notes, photos, hints and evidence. The huge touch-screen let them slide the nodes in the web quickly.

“Rebecca was seen at Julias's, and attacked his childe before he was turned. Then was later seen at the building Julias was sent to to capture Vance or his data.” No titles, all business. Viktor was pacing in front of the screen, and his right hand would occasionally reach out to drag one of the digital images to the center of it, so it would grow in size for them to read or analyze. “She defeated Julias, who only managed to survive because the fire or sunrise risked Rebecca's life."

Natasha frowned, Jessy snickered, and Julias grit his teeth. Well, at least they didn't know Beatrice had saved him.

"Julias managed to recover the situation. The next night, he observed that Rebecca had recovered the data, and overheard – with brilliant use of possession on a rodent, I might add – that in a months' time from that night, in North Side, there would be a drop. Typical lingo of gutter trash." Viktor gave a shrug. "Now, we have another piece of the puzzle to add to that."

"Sir?" Julias said. He tried to hide the small smile he had over the earlier compliment. Jessy hated him.

"Natasha has come across some valuable information. Her childe has discovered that, not long after Rebecca recovered Vance's data, her and, who we believe to be Tony, visited the Carthians."

"S-sir," Natasha said, barely above a whisper. She was a petite thing, long black hair, with a young but hard face. "W-we know the Carthians have a Mike Unknown working for them. He ... he is only five years embraced." As the ridiculously shy Mehket spoke, Viktor turned around and pulled up Mike Unknown's picture on the touch-screen. "He is a hacker."

"A hacker? This-" Jessy tried to cut in, but Michael snapped her a look Julias only manage to catch a second of. Jessy's sire certainly wasn't happy. He was probably upset over Jessy's lack of anything to contribute. Julias had to try hard to suppress his grin.

"A hacker," Natasha continued, "who we believe has been responsible for several data leaks of Invictus trades."

Jessy whistled. Even Julias was impressed. The little punk on the screen had balls.

“His antics have been nothing but meaningless jabs at Xnomina, with no major consequence,” Maria said, “and we have ignored them until now.”

The ghost lady walked around the conference room table and stood in front of the three right hands. They all stood up straight at her approach. Sometimes, Julias thought Maria looked like a freshly dragged corpse from the river. When she stepped up to him and looked at him, only a foot away, he could swear he could see bits of water drip from her skin before turning into mist.

“And you three, are going to find out what he knows.”

Shit.

Michael stepped up beside Maria. “We know this could spark problems with the Carthians if anyone finds out. The Prince has made it absolutely clear that we are not to disturb the peace, so...”

“So that means no one finds out.” Jessy punched a hand to her palm. She had really, really short blonde hair, was almost as tall as Julias or Michael, and looked more like a boxer than anything.

“Get the information by whatever means necessary,” Viktor said, “but if this gets back to the Carthians, someone will have to pay.” With that, the eldest of them all stood there, hooked his hands behind his back, and stared at the three of them. His gaze was cold, stern, and despite his young form, the furrow of his brow was heavy enough to carry centuries.

They were pawns, and pawns were expendable.

“I don’t understand why we don’t just beat him until he tells us what we need to know, and then dust him.”

Jessy was dressed in a leather jacket and pants, and looked somewhere between a Carthian's love for street-wear, and an Invictus's love for class. She was even wearing some slim sunglasses. At night. She'd seen The Matrix too many times. It fit the scene though, with the three of them kneeling on a rooftop and looking down at the streets leading into the Carthian half of South Side.

Julias rolled his eyes. "If Mike disappears, they'll know he's dead. Dead Mike means Garry gets suspicious. You think Garry won't find out? Think he'll take that shit lying down?"

"N-no ... he wouldn't." Natasha was beside him, dressed in a simple business suit with a knee-length skirt, blue color.

"Then what do we do?"

"Natasha?" Julias looked to her.

"We ... we could observe him. But he wouldn't j-just make a stupid mistake. He's smart. He'll have l-locked everything, encrypted, and wouldn't accident-tally say something out loud. He's lived the digital world his whole life."

"Fucking new Kindred," Jessy said, and she clenched the rooftop's edge hard enough to sink her fingers into the structure.

Much as Julias hated to admit it, the new Kindred had a huge advantage. They adapted to how insanely small the world had gotten, how connected and immediate it was. He grew up when the radio had just become a household item. Natasha and Jessy, barely half his age, grew up when TV was still young. The internet was absolutely nauseating to try and understand in scope.

He could only pity Viktor, on that front.

“ ... then I guess I’ll have to make him tell me, then make him forget.”

“What?” Jessy stood up and looked down at Julias. “I’m sorry, since when were you an Elder Kindred?”

“She’s r-r-right.” Even Natasha stood up and looked down at him. “We’re all Ancillae. You’re ... not that powerful. Maybe against a kine, but against a Kindred?”

Sometimes, when presented with the opportunity to be a jackass and a show off, you just can’t help but give in. “Watch me.”

Finding Mike wouldn’t be too hard. Natasha was a Mehket, and her clan held the power of Auspex. Nothing could be hidden from them for forever. The problem would be what to do once they had their hands on him.

Jessy and Julias followed Natasha around, out in the open streets of the night. Trespassing was allowed, but feeding in another covenant’s territory was not. And there were plenty of people around. The kine were everywhere; the smell of blood and the sound of heartbeats filled his nose and ears. These were the things he was about to risk his unlife for: food. Blood bags. A couple he recognized from Xnomina, and they nodded to him, cheerful and pleasant.

He really did envy them. All of them.

When they walked by, his eyes drifted down over their faces, down their jawline and to their necks. Even on a full stomach, he could feel the cravings force his attention to blood. Always back to the blood. Idly, he wondered how long it would be until he’d have to enter his first torpor, when his cravings would become too strong and he’d be forced to survive on the blood of other vampires. How long until he’d be in Viktor’s shoes?

Another woman he knew walked by; Juliette, he believed her name was, and an employee of Xnomina's daytime activities. They'd slept together a few times, he drank her each time, and just walking by her was enough to make his insides tingle with desire for the warm, rich drink. She offered more than just a smile, and even reached out to let her hand graze along the sleeve of his suit as she walked by, complete with a glance over her shoulder.

"Food later," Jessy said.

"Coming from you, that's a laugh." Julias gave a small snort.

"I'll have you know I drank from both my ghouls before coming on this trip." The Gangrel stepped up beside him, and even gave him a punch in the arm. Gangrel hit hard, and he couldn't tell from the smirk on her face if she was angry or just being aggressive and playful. Animals were never easy to read.

"And again tonight, I imagine. Think they'll survive?"

"Fuck you, I don't kill my ghouls."

He grit his teeth hard enough that his fangs were just visible.
"You ne-"

"Quiet!" Natasha said. To hear the quiet girl snap at them with hushed but harsh voice was enough to make the two of them shut up. "He's ... here. Alone."

The three of them stepped into an alleyway, complete with hazy neon lights on brick walls advertising convenience stores and movie rentals. No one would ever rent a movie these days.

Natasha took them to a worn, dark green door. It was one of those metal doors they had on the back of small stores, complete with a numpad for inputting a door code. Jessy just gave a small chuckle, and pushed in on the door with a hand on the doorknob. The metal bent and cracked in effortlessly. The damn animal had the grace of an ox. Julias and Natasha both grimaced in unison, but when no alarm went off they followed Jessy in.

“What the fuck!”

A scrawny little Mehket with messy hair over his eyes jumped up in a panic. He was in the dark, with several computer monitors laid around the desk shining dull blue light over a keyboard, mouse, and a desk covered in dozens of ... things. Catalogs, little books, pamphlets, devices, smartphones, pens, and wallets. A classic example of a fresh Mehket in the new world; he lived in computers and, while a juggernaut in the digital realm, was a sad waste of skin in the real one.

“Oh shit ... shit shit shit. I’m sorry, I’m sorry I stole those blueprints. I’ll delete them right now! Just give me twenty seconds and you’ll have-”

“Shut up.” Jessy was on him in a second, with her fingers around his throat and slamming him back into a wall.

Julias grunted. Jessy’s antics were likely to get them all killed, but she didn’t hesitate, and that was useful. “Natasha, keep an eye open.”

“Of c-course.” The little woman stood by the door, and waited. Mehket were always valuable on missions as well; they could keep themselves hidden like nothing more than mist in the corner of the eye. One as powerful as Natasha could keep them all hidden.

Julias looked to Jessy, and she threw a glance back at him. There was a need in her eyes, like a cat who wanted to play with a mouse. She liked making the poor fool in her hands squirm and wriggle in fear.

“Phone? Phone what phone? I don’t have any phone, man. Come on, seriously, I’ll do anything you want! I’m sorry, Invictus won’t get anymore trouble from me.”

Jessy growled, and Julias stood over the messy desk. He idly flipped through the array of random things. The kid even had spare hard-drives lined up, plugged into what he guessed were servers running only God knows what.

“The smartphone. Rebecca or Tony gave it to you. You’re a hacker.” Julias rolled his eyes and walked up to the kid pinned against the wall. “How stupid do you think we are?”

Mike’s jaw dropped. “You ... you can’t ... we have a truce! The Prince won’t allow this.”

Jessy grit her teeth so hard, Julias could hear them grind. The kid was right, and this was all resting on the hope that they could convince the kid to keep this quiet, which would be impossible. Normally.

“Mike,” Julias said, and stepped even closer so he was standing over him.

“You’re all Invictus! You can’t do this, you’re ... you’re...”

“I don’t ... know...”

The Gangrel would never know this feeling, neither would the Mehket. The Daeva could only make people adore them, and the Nosferatu could only make people fear them. The Ventrue though, they could make people obey.

From deep within, down in his core, into the blood that circled his corpse, he pulled forth his vitae. The energy rose like forgotten adrenaline. Unseen and overwhelming, his mind reached out and found Mike's. The eye contact was the key. He could see straight into the weak Kindred's eyes, and he could feel the twerp's inner-beast fall to its knees. Mike's eyes had gone wide, but they were now unblinking.

"Mike. Is there any surveillance in here monitoring us?" A test.

"... no..."

Good. His voice was dead and monotone. The fool was broken.

"What did you learn from the device Rebecca gave you?"

"There's ... a drop..." Mike's eyes stayed wide. All the subtleties of his movements were gone. Robots had more life to them.

Jessy gasped. Her grip loosened on the kid until he was standing on his own, while she stood there casting surprised glances between Julias and Mike.

"Where."

"The abandoned ... textile mill ... North Side."

"When."

"... eight days."

"What's the drop?"

"... information."

Julias narrowed his eyes. "What kind of information?"

"Didn't say ... important to ... the covenants."

God damn it. Julias couldn't extract information that didn't exist. He groaned and looked to Jessy, who was smirking at him.

"Impressive," she said, "but I could have just beat that out of him. We're no better off now either way. He's going to tell Garry, or we kill him and Garry figures it out."

Julias leaned in closer until only six inches were between his eyes and the tiny Kindred's. Mike didn't squirm anymore, and his eyes didn't break contact. For a moment, Julias was sure he could see through the kid's pupils and into his insides. Into blood and ash.

"Mike." His voice practically echoed in the quiet. "We were never here. This conversation did not happen." The vitae in his dried and withered insides rose higher. It filled him. He could feel the inhuman plague flow into his brain, into his eyes, and through the contact with his victim.

Mike never stood a chance. Like the rat, the child Kindred's mind surrendered and collapsed.

Julias put a hand on the wall to steady himself. He wanted to fall over. Exhaustion washed over him, and so too the hunger. He'd gone from a full belly to the beast within knocking at the door, demanding he feed or it'd feed for him. He forced down a growl and brushed his hair back with his fingers.

"Let's go." Julias gave Jessy a nod and headed to join Natasha at the door. When he glanced over his shoulder, he could see Jessy blink at Mike before she turned to join him. Mike collapsed to the floor, but did not move; he wouldn't move for a while.

Within five minutes, they'd broken down a door, interrogated a kid, and rewrote his memories. Julias smiled to himself as they walked out of the building, back into the street, and with the practice of decades, nonchalantly rejoined the flow of bodies walking the large sidewalks.

“Julias, you just re-wrote that kid’s memories.” Jessy grabbed his arm and pulled him to a stop.

“Y-yes. That is ... how did you do that?” Natasha stepped in beside Jessy and looked up at him. She looked meek, but her eyes always had a layer to them. Whenever Julias met them, she looked away, but for just that glimpse he could see she was thinking fast.

“How do you think?” He met Jessy’s glare, but the Gangrel stared right back at him. Julias wrenched his arm free and started walking again. Damn idiots. You don’t stop to talk in the middle of moving crowds unless you actually want to look suspicious.

“I’m sorry, did you suddenly go Elder on us when we weren’t looking? Victor is the only Ventrue in the whole damn city who can rewrite someone’s memories.”

“Not the only one.” Julias gave Jessy a playful smirk, and to his satisfaction, she immediately growled and furrowed her brow in frustration.

“I’m not fucking kidding here!” The Gangrel reached out with a snap and yanked him into an alley. Before he could even say anything, she’d moved them well into the black of the alley and away from the crowd again. She’d pushed him against a wall, but he pried her hands away from his shirt.

So much for getting out of there quickly.

To his dismay, Natasha stood beside Jessy, and she peaked up at him. “Julias ... we’re afraid of Victor.”

“You’d be a fool to not be.” Julias frowned down at the little Mehket. “Michael and Maria are scared of him too.”

Jessy finally let go of him. “We’re all afraid.”

“V-Victor ... he’ll need torpor again soon. If he comes back ... even worse than last t-t-time.” Natasha shuddered. “And if he doesn’t torpor, he’ll need to drink ... Kindred to survive.”

“ ... you want me to do something about it?”

“Yes,” they both said in unison.

“Pray tell, what am I supposed to do about my own sire?”

Both the scary Gangrel and the shy Mehket looked down, then at each other, and then down again. It was obvious they’d been talking to each other before this. They even shuffled their feet from side to side.

Then Natasha looked up at him, and her eyes hardened. “Kill him.”

~~Jack~~

It was the same damn music. Mindlessly repetitive and deep enough to give a headache purely by making his skull vibrate. How did people listen to this stuff? But then, that was probably part of the problem. The first thing he noticed was the music while everyone else here was noticing each other instead.

It had been a week since he was last here. He figured a week would be the likely schedule a figure like the Prince would follow. Businesses breathe in weeks. He could have come some other day, and avoided Antoinette, but here he was actually going out of his way to see her.

He had a death wish, he must have. Little fledgling that was he going to have a sit down with a vampire so powerful and ancient she might as well have been fictional. So why was he walking next to the walls of this place again, bathed in red light with his fingers on the railings? Why was he walking up that staircase again and up onto that second floor? Why was he scanning the room for the very tall woman with the white hair?

Why did he get excited when he saw that she was there?

She looked at him, and again he almost quaked in his shoes. It was a harsh reminder that he was no longer human, when the beast inside him reeled back with hair on end and tried to run away. Two predators that saw each other at a distance, except one was a god and the other was a house cat. But when the look on her face – he could swear it was almost sad – turned into a smile, he couldn't help but smile back.

She pointed at hand to him and curled her finger in the same way as before, and this time Jack walked over without hesitation. He still walked slowly – he wasn't that stupid – and took a moment to look around for Daniel. To know that Mekhet sheriff was around, hidden and spying and able to effortlessly cut him to bits, was not exactly a comforting thought. To see the Prince smile at him though, and motion for him to join her in the booth, quickly buried that fear.

Now all that was left was the strange mix of exhilaration of talking with the Prince of Dolareido, and the ever-present worry that if he said or did anything to offend her, absolutely nothing stood between her and his final death.

“You came back.” She smiled again, and Jack found his toes tapping on the floor. The dress she wore was just as enticing and beautiful as the last time. Open back, it was again black and wrapped tightly to her figure, but this time the chest opened to reveal the large cleavage she carried before connecting together again just below the navel. The skirt it connected with split at the left hip and, while the skirt went down to the ankle, it only had enough fabric to cover her right leg. Her left leg was fully exposed, and Jack couldn't help but take a quick glance at the long, white limb, and the dangerously sharp six-inch heels she was wearing.

“Yes, my Prince.” Every time he said that, he felt so submissive. He didn't mind, but it felt weird. What reason could she have for forcing people to personalize the title?

“I was sure Julias would convince you to avoid me.” She pointed at the space next to her, and Jack slid over closer to her with a shy glance.

“Really?”

“Yes.” Now that he was almost touching her, Antoinette slid just a few inches until they actually were. Her bare leg was pressed to his pants; god how he wished he wasn't wearing pants. “I assume he had warnings that I would manipulate you for my own plans, and that I was dangerous. Not only I, but others in the Danse Macabre would be a danger to you as well.”

She slid closer still, but already pressed against him, her motion brought her torso a little closer to him as she put her arm behind him across the back of the booth. He tried his best to not stare, but he hadn't expected her to start snuggling up to him like this. It was so blatant, so sexual, inviting and imposing at the same time.

“Uh, yeah, he did. But I assured him my utter uselessness to anyone would protect me.” He managed to crack a goofy smile, and the Prince giggled.

“You have such a low opinion of yourself for a Ventrue!”

“I prefer the predictability of realistic expectations, versus the gambling of delusions of grandeur.” The straightforwardness of his words shocked him. Be careful Jack, before your social bluntness gets you killed.

“Oh, I see. But then, you are here, with me, the Prince. That seems a paradox.” She tilted her head pensively.

“I ... thought the gamble was worth the risk, my Prince. You’ve treated me with a lot more respect than other Kindred. I thought that ... well ... I’d hate to throw away a friendship like this one.” He had to look away, and his eyes drifted down to the table in front of them. He waited with netted fingers, and his thumbs rubbed into his knuckles with worry.

“ ... is my friendship valuable to you? A powerful ally?”

“Yes ... no! No I don’t mean, I didn’t mean that ... I’m not here for an ally. I’m here because ... other than Julias, you’re the first Kindred I’ve talked to who’s talked to me, not at me.”

“I see.” She gave him one of her smiles, less seductive, more genuine, and he relaxed. “I suppose you must be wondering why.”

“Yes, very. I can’t imagine what I could...”

“ ... how much do you know of the history of our kind, little Ventrue?”

“Almost nothing. Julias hasn’t told me much.”

“He tells you little because he knows little, because we know little.”

“Know little? I ... I don’t understand. Aren’t you 500 years old?” he said. She gave him a frown, and he immediately put both his hands up apologetically. “I’m sorry! But-”

“It is true, I am very old, as are Daniel, and Viktor, Tony, Jacob, and the other Primogen. But age does ... take its toll on the mind.” While one arm stayed behind Jack, her other came up to her face and palmed her cheek with thought. “Centuries cause memories to fade, to blend. They mix with fiction, with fantasy, and then torpor...”

“Torpor?”

“I suppose Julias would not have told you, as he has not done it himself, at least not for a real length of time. It is a sleep, a deep sleep full of dreams. When an elder such as I becomes ravenous, we must sleep before our hunger consumes us.” She looked away. Was she ashamed? “Decades of dreams. They bend and twist the mind. For some, the effects are ... wicked.”

Viktor. She was talking about Viktor. She had to be.

“A coma?”

“Yes, in a fashion. It does fade the memory, and now ... I cannot even remember my sire.” She took a fingertip and ran it around the edges of a glass in front of her. Jack guessed the contents as blood; he recognized its consistency from Julias’s.

“I am s ... sorry.” He dared the word, but he recoiled a little just in case she decided shred him for the offense. She did not.

“I am as well. Things are lost, including our history. I would trust only the Lancea et Sanctum to have any literature worthy of a historian’s eye.” Her eyes narrowed and she glared daggers into her glass. “And I do not allow those zealots to practice in my city.”

That was not a playful glare or a toying glare or a teasing glare. She was legitimately angry. The beast in him cowered in such close proximity, and an almost overpowering desire to flee rippled through his limbs. Even his eyes went wide, just glancing at her red eyes glaring at the table.

When she turned to look at him though, her eyes softened. Apparently she saw that she scared him, and she made herself calm for him. At least, that's what it looked like, and that she made the effort made him smile.

"I remember almost nothing of my time as a youngling, little Ventrue. Who could I talk to about it? What fresh neonate would share their life story with me? As you said, I am lonely."

Jack had to stop for a moment and just look at her. She was so upfront. This ancient, almost mythical entity was asking him to share his life story? All because he didn't know when to keep his mouth shut?

"Have I said too much?" she said.

"No! No I ... well yes." She blinked at him, but he gave a shy grin at her. "But I like that."

She laughed, outright laughed with a wholesome volume that he could feel through her leg.

"And I you, little Ventrue. Perhaps we can play a game?" Her arm behind him drifted down a little, just enough for her claws to find his ear on the far side. He shivered with her touch.

"A game?"

"Trading questions. I am sure you have many."

"I do, but ... you'd really answer my questions?"

"Indeed."

"Even personal ones?"

"If you ask me, but be prepared to answer one just as personal." She gave him a wicked grin and licked her dark lips. This was a dangerous game.

“ ... I’ll play.”

“Wonderful.” She leaned in nuzzled against his little body, just a tad, to the point her breasts were almost pressed to his suit jacket. “You go first.”

“Oh, wow um ... uh...” He was so very thankful his body wouldn’t sprout random erections anymore. “Why ... is your hair white, and your eyes red? I haven’t seen another Kindred with such unique features.”

The hand on the table rose and ran through her hair, and she pulled a large portion of it onto her chest to rest between her breasts while she combed it.

“I honestly do not remember. Daniel believes it may be because I was one of the first members of the Ordo Dracul, and am perhaps linked to Dracula. The coils back then were new and untested.”

“Dracula.”

“Yes.”

“The Dracula?”

“Yes, butchered by fiction, but yes. I would ... prefer to avoid the details, what little I remember.”

Jack had to nod. That was fair. He had no idea what coils were, but that was probably stepping into the details realm.

“My turn.” She tapped her chin thoughtfully. “What was the first thing you thought, when you finally, truly realized you were now a vampire? That you were now a dead thing?”

“Oh...” He ran his fingers over his buzzed head. “I, er ... haven’t even told Julias this. But I honestly thought ... how the hell am I going to lose my virginity now.”

Antoinette stopped, completely stopped. She stared at him with bewilderment for almost ten full seconds before she cracked a smile, and then erupted into laughter.

“That is ... that is so delightedly honest. You have no idea.” She even gave him a hug. An actual hug, with her right arm hooked around his neck and pulling him to her side. “Many Kindred lose their taste or interest in sex. The act of feeding replaces it. Daeva, such as myself though, are not so quick to forget the simple pleasures of the body.”

Dangerous game indeed. He gulped from pure habitual reflex.

“Your turn.”

“Oh! Right, um ... wow this is hard. Uh ... why did you ban the Lancea et Sanctum? I understand they’re holders of a lot of our history?”

“I have banned the practice because it is idiocy. They are self-deluding fools who convince themselves of all manner of lies and deceit to condone their actions and their hypocrisy. The Judges are disgusting, illogical, worthless tyrants. In God’s name, they say. In God’s name, over and over, to convince themselves of anything that fits their fancy, if they can bend the words enough to serve their bible. Longinus indeed!”

He knew it’d be a hot button. Why’d he have to ask? He was sure he’d wet himself if his bladder still functioned, but all he could do was sit there and not move an inch. Jack was still in her half-embrace, and he was sure if he tried to move enough to at least break their touching legs, she’d shred him like an tiger.

The Daeva eventually calmed down, and Jack made mental note to be careful with the topic in the future. He’d thought it perhaps a political reason, but apparently it was not. She had removed them from the city for more personal reasons.

“We are better without them. Instead of looking to the past in some pointless attempt to embody dead ideals, we can look forward and embrace truth, logic, and intelligence.” She gave Jack a long, quizzical look, and he turned away with her scrutiny. “That was a dangerous question, little Ventrue. I am impressed.”

“Th-thanks.”

“Oh, did I frighten you?”

He dared a glance, he had to. Like a moth to the flame, he raised his head to meet her eyes, and quickly lost himself in her red gaze. She was looking directly at him, into him even, and he could feel the beast in him grow silent with awe.

“Yes.”

“Good. I would hate to see you grow dumb with your courage. Now, my turn.” The Daeva tapped her chin a fingernail. “Do you miss the things you’ve lost, since being embraced?”

Jack sighed. He knew he didn’t need the air, but the question was so powerful and something that had been on his mind all the time. How could it not?

“... My family thinks I’m dead. I was never that close with them, but now ... now I miss them.” He lowered his eyes but did not turn away. Julias’s words came back to him with a sting. “My friends think I’m dead. I miss them. I even miss that stupid job.” He chuckled a bit, but it caught in his throat. “I don’t really miss the sun, or food, but ... but sometimes I get hit with it, you know? I’ll sit down and just ... miss things. Random, stupid little things.”

“Such as?”

“The small things you never even think about. Shaving. Trying to beat the rush hour. Trying to pick which spice for your chicken. Worrying about vitamins. Exercising. Trying to find motivation to exercise. The security of a boring, predictable job.” His voice grew soft. It never seemed like much, just thinking the things, but saying them out loud was different. He had to cough to stop the urge for a quiet whimper.

“I guess, yeah.” He went silent. His question had angered Antoinette, while hers had sent him into a spiral of depression. This was not the same night as last week.

“I am sorry, little Ventrue. I understand Julias embraced you to save your life.”

“Yeah. I had been stabbed after leaving his place. I ... it was a shock.”

“You have handled the change well. Many soak in misery for months, even years.”

“Julias has helped me a lot ... so have you.” He scratched at his buzzed hair, but tried to keep eye contact. He was rewarded when the Prince smiled at him. Such a lovely smile, when she wasn’t playing a manipulative Daeva. He couldn’t deny it was definitely in her nature, but if he said just the right thing, she rewarded him with something genuine.

“You are most welcome. Also, your turn.”

“Oh, right. Hmm.” The conversation had grown very serious, but empowering. They had asked each other meaningful questions and gotten meaningful answers. What else could he ask? “Do Kindred ever have relationships?”

Yeap. If he was going to get himself killed, it'd be in a bad attempt at flirting with the Prince of Dolareido, and an insanely powerful Kindred to boot.

“Oh! Are you not full of big surprises, little Ventrue.” She ran her fingers upside the temple of his head opposite to her. “I suppose you mean a romantic relationship with another Kindred?” He managed a small nod. “Yes, we do. The last I had was with Tony, my childe. A sad story that ended when he ceased being my pupil decades ago, and left the Ordo Dracul.”

He remembered Tony. He'd seen him at a distance once, at the Elysium. He shivered. The man was terrifying. If Viktor was the bull he had to avoid, Tony was the serpent.

“He is not the man he once was. He despises me now, but I suppose that is true of many scorned lovers. I leave him as a Primogen though, so I may hear the voices of his worthless, directionless lot.”

“Yes. I disagree with him, his methods, but he is not a mindless fool incapable of adaptation or logic. His council is valuable.”

The Danse Macabre. She would keep this man she once laid with, this man she no longer loved, and who despised her in return, as council purely for the information it gave her. Jack had to wonder how many ancient Kindred had weaved such interesting webs between them.

“If questions are going to get this personal, well then.” She leaned in again, and with her hand on the other side of his head, hooked some of her fingers around his jaw to guide his face to look up to her. His heart would have stopped were it beating as she put her nose to his “Would you like to kiss me?”

Oh sweet mother of god.

“I ... er – uh, um ... uh...”

“I assume that is why you asked, no?” She leaned in closer, but you can’t get much closer than touching noses. Her lips were literally only an inch from his, and if he moved there was a good chance he’d accidentally kiss her.

“Well ... I mean...” He tried to move away, but her grip was immovable; he couldn’t even turn his head. She put her other hand on his leg, and simply stared into his eyes like a hungry snake. The Daeva side of her was coming out to play.

“There is no one here but us, little Ventrue.” She raised her head just a touch, then lowered it, so her nose nudged playfully against his.

Too fast. It was all happening too fast. The gorgeous woman nudged her nose against his so lightly, again and again, just so the tip grazed his. It was so close. Her red eyes were so fucking beautiful. It was all so fucking beautiful. Her long white hair pulled over her shoulder and down in front of her, and she raised her hand from his leg to comb it with her fingers in a blatantly seductive way.

He really wanted to kiss her, but she was a god. She was just toying with him, she had to be.

“Please, I ... it’s...”

“You can say no, if you want. I will not hurt you. But I am no fool. I can see where your eyes slide.” The hand holding his head toward her tickled his jawline. “If I wanted to, I could break your will with a discipline, Jack. I could twist and corrupt your mind so that you would care for me and only me.” She leaned in just a little closer, so her forehead grazed his, and her red eyes were practically glowing.

“But I have not and will not. You came here tonight of your own desire, and ... I appreciate that. More than you know.”

Everything froze.

Antoinette had stopped moving. She was just looking at him, smiling at him, waiting and watching. Those sultry eyes of hers looked into him until he could feel the ancient, colossal power of the vixen. She wasn't using her power on him; the doubt in his mind about the insanity of it all proved it. But that didn't mean she wasn't a woman. A deadly, scary, godly powerful, seductive, ancient undead woman.

“I ... I don't want to ... ruin...”

Fuck, Julias had said the same thing to him, the same damn thing. Jack was always waiting, always playing it safe, always aiming for the easy goals with no risk. Methodical, and boring. That was then though, and that old life was gone. Gone! He was a different person now, a different creature in a different world. If there was any time to change...

He half-closed his eyes, and leaned in just a single inch, but it was enough. His lips found the Prince's, and she gave the smallest smile into his own before she too leaned in. She only half-closed her eyes as well, and they looked at each other while their lips met.

God her lips were so soft.

“Thank you, Jack,” she said, barely breaking the kiss but able to speak with perfect enunciation. “It has been ... so very long since a Kindred has kissed me.” Before he could respond, she’d already leaned back into the kiss and took control.

He held still, and let the crazy situation take him. The most powerful being in his wildest dreams was kissing him, her dark lips nudging into his, her tongue sneaking out just long enough to give a little lick. For a second, he pictured a snake tasting the air of him, but then she lowered her lips, and lightly plucked at his lower lip before pulling away.

She laughed then, pulled away, and combed her long hair over her shoulder with one hand while the other tickled along his jaw. The jaw had dropped by that point, and he found himself unable to lift it until she did it for him. He couldn’t stop staring at her.

“Mister Terry,” she said, and put a finger to his lips, “I do hope to see you again. Would you like that?”

Chapter 7

~~Beatrice~~

Following the Invictus right hands was hard enough, but now she had to follow three.

Shadowing Julias was easy. Like a typical Ventrue, he was useless on his own. His power was in creating and controlling armies. But damn he looked good in a suit. Those broad shoulders, the combed back mafia hair, even the damn tie. It was a good thing she wasn't using the blush of life, or she'd be rubbing her thighs together already.

Fuck, the stupid knight made her feel like a cat in heat.

The other two were the problem. Younger than Julias, sure, but Jessy was a Gangrel and that meant someone she couldn't easily predict in a fight. She was an animal, like Garry, and she knew well enough from Garry about dangerous animals. Natasha, on the other hand, Beatrice was sure she could crush into ash in seconds, if she could get her hands on her. And she wouldn't be able to get her hands on a Mehket. Worse still, the damn Mehket could hide in the shadow like Beatrice, but also see ... anything. Anything and everything.

It meant Beatrice had to drain every last bit of vitae she had within to fuel her cloak of night, but she had no choice. The fuck were the three hands doing in Carthian territory? And that fucking Natasha, the little shadow bitch, was making it so damn hard to even see them with her use of cloak of night. Her eyes would glide off of them and onto the random kine walking the streets, and she'd have to focus herself – with a good face slap – to get her eyes back on track. She couldn't lose them.

And then she lost them.

Fuuuuuuuck. She dared not even curse out loud, the damn shadow could probably hear it. Beatrice did her best to stay pressed down to the rooftops, and her cloak of night would keep all eyes off her completely. But then Natasha did the same damn mother fucking thing!

Where was this? The convenience store, complete with ancient movie rentals. This was Mike's hangout! Mike, the stupid punk kid Garry had given Tony's stuff to. She dug her claws straight into the building rooftop. Shit shit shit shit.

She couldn't go in there; she was no use to Mike dead. But then if she didn't, Mike could end up dead. They wouldn't kill him, or at least Julias wouldn't. The other two, she couldn't guess. God damn it, they were Invictus. If they killed Mike, it could spell war. If they killed Mike...

There! The three were suddenly on the street again, heading back the way they came. They were bickering among themselves, but it was too quiet to hear in the bustling streets. She looked between the convenience store and the three Invictus. Fuck. Fuck fuck fuck fuck.

Fuck it. Once they had some distance, she hopped down from the rooftop and into an alley. She eased off her shadow hiding, but kept enough of it going to let her glide through the kine without attracting their attention. Just a face in the crowd. Within moments, she'd crossed the street and stopped at Mike's door. It'd been broken in.

Mike was on the floor with his back against a wall. The kid's place was a huge mess of the typical nerd shit, but the kid himself looked fine.

"Mike! Mike you stupid fuck." She almost pounced at him before she reached down and picked him up. "Mike. Mike!" And a slap to the face for good measure.

“... Beatrice?” The kid’s eyes opened wide. She was point blank with him, and her teeth were on full display. He was startled.

“Mike you fucking stupid piece of shit. What happened?” She shook him hard enough to crack his head against the wall a few times.

“Ow! Hey hey hey! I, I ... what? What do you mean what happened?”

“What do I mean? The fucking Invictus man! What did they want?”

“I ... you ... what? What do you mean no one’s been here.” She dragged him out to the door and pointed at the broken lock. “The Invictus broke in here just five minutes ago!”

“Whoa.” He inspected the lock, obviously surprised. “I don’t know. You ... you don’t think...” He put a hand to his lips and stared back at Beatrice.

“No. It wasn’t Viktor, it was Julias. He isn’t ... strong...”

They both just stared at each other. Julias had rewritten the kid’s memories. Her secret boyfriend had rewritten Mike’s god damn fucking memories.

“Come on, we’re heading back home. I gotta talk to Garry.”

---

She kept a close eye on Mike. Julias had been in his head, and who fucking knew what sorta shit a Ventrue could leave in there. She’d heard stories from Garry, about all the nasty tricks a Ventrue could do to someone's mind. They could brainwash you, turn you into a sleeper agent, and attach triggers to you. It was some seriously scary shit. She was shaking just thinking about it; what if Julias done something to her?

"You ... you just ... stay here." She ushered the kid back to his room, back at the abandoned apartment building, and sat him down on his bed.

"The hell Beatrice, why are you dotting on me?"

"Just don't touch anything! I need to talk with Garry. You had a fucking Invictus Ventrue inside your head man." She reached up and pointed at her temple. "So do me a favor and stay put."

Finally, realization hit the stupid punk. His head lowered, his jaw dropped, and his hands grabbed at the knees of his jeans.

"I ... I get it. I'll just ... yeah."

"Yeah," she said, and despite herself, reached out to give him a gentle pat on his slumped shoulder, claws and all. "Don't worry about it though, Garry's dealt with this kinda shit before."

He nodded. Good, he wasn't freaking out, cause fucking hell she was. What if Julias had done something to her? What if it had all been a god damn Ventrue ploy? A trick? Fucking smooth talking bastard could have done anything to her.

She forced herself to walk. No use in getting everyone's attention. Garry would know what to do; he always knew. Dude was fucking ancient and a beast, and he'd saved her from stupid shit multiple times.

She opened the door to his room without so much as a knock. The Gangrel was standing and looking out a window into the night sky. He practically dripped of introspection and reflection.

Which was weird as hell. Garry didn't do shit like that.

“Garry! Sir! You told me to keep an eye on the right hands, so I tracked them and they fucking found Mike, and they fucking did ... did something to his mind! He seems fine, but he can't remember anything. Not a damn thing!”

The ancient Gangrel gave a quiet sigh, and turned over his shoulder to look at her. “Is he alright?”

“What? Yeah, yeah he's alright. He's fine I think, but who the fuck knows what Julias did to his brain! I didn't know he'd gotten that strong. He's ... that's dangerous. That's so fucking dangerous, Garry! The fuck am I supposed to do if he can just-”

“Yeah, Mike is ... is...”

She stood there and stared at him. The Gangrel lowered his head and turned it just enough to keep her in the corner of his eye. He was ... relieved.

“You knew!”

He turned back to the window, like as if his silence would have been enough to end the conversation.

Well fuck that.

“Garry, what the fuck?” She stomped right over to him and stood in front of him. He avoided her glare. “What the fuck is going on?”

More silence.

Fuck him! She reached out and shoved him hard enough to drive his back into the wall. The bastard didn't even look shocked. "Tell me!"

"... just let it go, Triss." He stood up straight then, put a hand against the wall, and stepped back to where he was. He looked down at her, and the weight of his eyes crushed her. For just a second, Garry looked old, so old.

"Come on, you can't just—"

"I can't tell you, Triss. Let it go."

They stood there, the two of them, and stared at each other. She wanted to stay angry at him, maybe even push him around some more, but the Elder Kindred and her most trusted friend in the damn world was looking at her with enough burden in his eyes to make her sick. What webs was he weaving? What stupid Kindred bullshit of manipulation was he playing at? What the fuck was he doing that risked Mike's life?

"Enjoy your Primogen meeting, jackass." She kicked over his desk – who the fuck cared how juvenile it was – and stormed out.

Within a few minutes, she was back in Mike's room.

"Beatrice, I heard a slam, what—"

"You're fine, Mike. Julias didn't do anything to you, except make you forget whatever information he got."

"Oh ... ok ... that's good, right?" He blinked at her. She must have looked furious.

"Yeah. Get a snack and move your computer shit to a new haunt before something happens."

He looked sad. Stupid kid had spent a lot of time building that nest probably, but it was compromised now. Tough lesson and a tough way to learn it.

She turned around and left.

“Triss, where ya going?”

She dismissed him with a small wave, barely more than a shake of her claws, before she marched down the stairs and back out into the streets.

Someone was going to get an earful. If Julias had been playing her with his ‘Kindred are so tiresome’ talk, she was going to cut his balls off with her claws and feed him the ashes.

~~Antoinette~~

How dull it was, in the demon’s mouth.

The Prince of Dolareido sat upon her throne, a luxurious leather office chair, and leaned forward with her elbows on her desk. Behind her, a glass wall was the only thing that separated the room from the hundreds of feet to the street beneath them. Every so often, she turned her chair halfway toward the glass and gazed out over the city. In the center of the Elysium, the South Side district was full of lights from the nightlife, and she let her eyes wander over the beautiful dance of it all.

The room itself was devoid of anything that would cause distraction beyond the window. The walls were white. The floor was black. The ceiling was white with hidden LEDs to light the room. All was designed to maximize the efficiency of its purpose.

To house the squabbles of demons. Within the center of the room, a massive table of clear glass connected to her desk, and surrounding it were chairs fit for kings. Her Primogen.

“Rebecca and Julias are going to kill each other eventually.” Viktor Honors, eldest of the Invictus triumvirate. He did look good in a suit, but his Ventrue habit of talking like he owned everything was irritating. Maria and Michael were sitting on either side of him, the ghost woman and the animal.

“You have no proof of that.” Tony. Her ex-lover and childe. The Daeva sat across from Viktor, and he held his chin in his palm with a stupid smile of feigned innocence on his face. Sometimes she wondered why she let him remain Primogen, with no covenant of his own. Better the devil you know, she supposed.

“She was seen in Invictus territory, near Julias’s home.”

“The Prince hasn’t given a no-trespassing law. Only that we can’t feed in each other’s districts,” Tony said.

Viktor grumbled, and Tony smiled. Antoinette did her best to not groan.

“Don’t fuck with us, Tony. We know Rebecca was snooping around the Invictus chunk half of South Side.” Garry. The Gangrel didn’t bother to dress up for her meetings, but she really wished he would. While Michael looked like he was trafficking drugs across borders, she imagined Garry could pull off a casual blazer with the sexual flare of the bad boy.

“So what if she was? Sorry if I like to keep a feeler out. Like you guys don’t do the same.” Her childe knew just how to talk to sound like a juvenile, but he gave each of them a tiny glance – just for a second – that made them hesitate to challenge him.

“Is this why we’ve gathered this month? To bicker over Rebecca?”

Then there was Jacob.

The Nosferatu took a long look at each Primogen, and then looked at her. The others would never hold her gaze for long, but Jacob would look into her eyes, as he did now, and smile. While Maria's physical deformity of her Nosferatu clan was her ghostly appearance, Jacob was another beast entirely.

At first glance, he looked normal enough, with short, wavy salt'n'pepper hair and the subtle wrinkles of an older man, but it only took a second glance to realize there was much more. He had no eyes, as if someone had scooped them out – his eyelids too – with a smoldering, serrated spoon.

Looking into the eyeless Circle of the Crone was like looking into the inner-beast of them all.

“Gentlemen, please.” Antoinette straightened her chair to point back at her group of cutthroats. “Viktor, Tony is correct, you have nothing but suspicions. Bring me proof that Rebecca was breaking the no-violence or no-feed treaty, and I will punish her. She is not forbidden from entering the Invictus state in South Side though.

“And Jacob,” she continued, just a touch of venom on her voice, “we meet to discuss what matters. You may think it immaterial, but wars have been fought over smaller incidents.”

Daniel gave a small nod and hmph to mark her words. Her fellow dragon was an innocent-looking fellow, average height, fairly thin, with somewhat short brown hair. He wore a pair of reading glasses, and with him in his trench coat, she would not put it past him to be a school teacher. His expression was – as always – blank and emotionless.

“Of course, Prince.” The Circle of the Crone witch put both his hands on the table. “Is there anything else to discuss? Rebecca causing a stir is nothing new.”

Antoinette looked to each of the Primogen in turn. No one said anything. “This meeting is adjourned then.”

That was it. The Invictus trio bowed, Garry and Tony managed small nods, and Jacob put a hand to his chest. She bowed in return. Without another sound, they walked out through the door, and would disappear from her tower in whichever way they deemed fit. Sometimes she wondered if they’d start trying to kill each other right there outside her door.

Once the doors closed, Antoinette let out a weary sigh, got up from her chair, and walked over to the window. She dared not touch the glass for fear of dirtying it, so she netted her fingers together behind her elegant business dress.

Daniel stepped in beside her, a little shorter than her despite his tall figure, and he too gazed out the window.

“How many Kindred are there in my city now, Daniel?”

“Over three-hundred, Annie.” His voice was so deadpan, so straightforward that she almost found it cold. It wasn’t though. That was just Daniel. He raised a gloved hand to adjust his glasses.

“Most of them Invictus and Carthian. Do I let them grow too large?”

“I do not think so,” he said.

She frowned, but after a few moments, it turned into a smile, and she chuckled at her sheriff. She would have a better luck getting blood from a stone.

So the two of them stood in silence, and watched over the city.

It was a good twenty minutes of admiring the sparkling lights of the night skyline of Dolareido, before her memories eventually drifted to the little boy she'd met thrice now. She had been there to witness his first controlled feeding. She got to see the pure bliss of it overwhelm his almost comically honest face. And to her delight, the young man had pushed through his fear to see her a second time, not to ask for more free blood, but instead just to talk with her.

She licked her fangs at the thought of him.

“ ... what do you think of Jack?”

“I'm not sure what you mean, Annie.”

She reached out for Daniel and put a hand on his shoulder. The man did not even flinch or turn to face her.

“You know what.”

“ ... he certainly isn't Tony.” For just a brief second, the Mehket managed a small smile, and Antoinette's own smile grew in response. Daniel's smile vanished quickly, as if he'd been caught in a shameful act, and he adjusted his glasses again.

“I think I would like to see him, then. Send for him, and bring him to Elysium garden.”

“Yes, Voivode.”

Her tower, at the center of the Elysium ground, was a gigantic thing of glass, curved and nothing but windows. In the day, it would have spelled death for any vampire within with no where to hide from the sunlight, but at night it was the center of Elysium, her official no-violence zone. In all directions from the skyscraper was garden and artistic pathways of road and sidewalk within curving walls of stone.

Kindred fledglings hung around in Elysium, safe from the hungry teeth or games of their betters, but as she walked down the stairway of her tower to the street, all fled at the sight of her as politely they could. She could force them to her, naturally. Her control of the Daeva disciplines was enough to have every young Kindred and every kine in all of Elysium begging at her feet. But there was no soul in that, no truth or intimacy or friendship.

It was an old, cruel story. She was not so delusional as the mighty Viktor or the consumed Tony to think herself immune to such solitude, but with age came barriers and shackles.

The taxi pulled up to the front of her tower. Jack stepped out, wearing what was obviously his best suit – Julias had dressed him well – but perhaps a little out of place for what she had in mind. He looked ready for a company merge negotiation.

She smiled at him from across the entry lane. It was further past the bushes and trees, near the entrance of her garden, but she was confident the fellow Kindred would see her in the dark. She'd sat upon a bench, an artful piece of stone vines, and she waited for him with a small smile.

“My Prince.” He walked to her, caught somewhere between a hurried step and his best businessman's walk. He looked so happy, excited, but his innocent face could not hide his fear either. Silently, their two inner-beasts looked at each other, smelled each other, and without hesitation the boy's knelt in submission.

Hers crooned with interest.

“Mister Terry.” She motioned for him to join her, and he sat beside her with a small bounce. To him, it must have seemed such a natural thing, to be so expressive.

“My Prince ... are you alright?” He blinked up at her, then quickly looked away and scratched his buzzed head. “You seem sad.”

“Do I? Then that must be the reason I summoned you, to raise my spirits.” She grinned at him with just enough smirk to expose a fang, and pulled her hair out in front of her to comb it with her fingers. As she did, she took her time to fold one leg over the other. The motion was purposeful, drawn out, and it was more than enough to draw the poor boy’s eyes like moths to flame.

While young Kindred would flee from her, those old enough to stand against her did not care for the physical. Yet Jack was devouring her with his eyes before he managed to snap to awareness and avert his gaze. She almost cooed, and did not hesitate to slide across the bench a little until they were closer. He was like a nervous, excited puppy.

“Ah, the bore of running a kingdom.” She gestured to her monolith of glass windows. “The Primogen are not easy to corral and coerce. Like mating birds, they posture and shout.”

Jack just stared at her, with a dropped jaw and his delightedly innocent, amazed expression.

“Have I said something offensive, little Terry?”

“No! No, but ... are you sure you should be talking about ... you know ... such important things in front of me.” The boy looked left and right like they were being stalked.

She gave a warm chuckle. “Jack, you do know who I am, yes?” She slid closer again, and this time wrapped an arm about his shoulders. Whenever their legs touched, back in the Bloodlust club, it was enough to make the poor boy tremble. She cultivated the reaction, and gave a mischievous grin to Jack when her touch yet again earned his quaking.

“This is my city,” she said, “and mine alone. The Invictus have Xnomina because I let them. The Carthians rebel against their meaningless barriers because I let them. The Circle of the Crone hide in the dark and pursue their primal magics because I let them.”

“B-but-”

“I will talk with who I please, about whatever I please, in front of whoever I please.” She leaned in close. Her business dress hugged her form nicely, but her breasts were large and pressed to the boy whenever she leaned in so. His squirming always increased whenever her breasts touched him, despite the layers of fabric between them.

All the classic tricks of seduction, all the blatant flirtations, all the tosses of her hair, folding of her legs, and teasing with her fingers, it worked all too well on the poor boy. His eyes would widen, and then he'd catch himself looking at a part of her for too long, and then he'd force himself to look away. And each and every time, it made her cold, withered insides warm.

It had been ages since she'd had the opportunity to flirt, and ages more that it hadn't simply squashed her target with fear. This boy was precious.

“Yes, my Prince. I ... wow, I just have trouble grasping it.” He smiled up at her, scratched his head, and tried to shrug off his anxiety.

“I am sure you will grow more comfortable, the more time we spend together.” She drew out the final word. Implications abound. It was enough to make the boy smile nervously and awkwardly. Honesty dripped from his every action like honey.

Her fingers grazed his skull, just soft enough that it'd shock him. And it did, but after a moment he managed to relax into her touch, and even gave a soft murr as her fingertips touched the odd texture of buzzed hair. His sudden ease and noises surprised her; she'd found a spot he enjoyed being touched, evidently.

"I enjoy trimmed hair," she said.

"T-thanks. I uh ... time together?"

"Why yes. I was quite pleased that you decided to kiss me." She leaned in even closer, until her head was just over his, her nose just over his. "Or have you forgotten?" With others, toying and taunting and teasing them would soon have them thinking they were being drawn into a trap. But Jack Terry, little Ventrue, was both fearful of and entranced by it.

How she missed this game of cat and mouse, and Jack was such a cute little mouse.

"I ... I..."

Ah, she'd stunned him. She would have to lead the poor boy, it seemed. That was ok, she enjoyed it.

"What were your plans for the night, little Ventrue?"

He snapped back to awareness. Her talk of time together had put a fantasy in his head apparently.

"Um ... Julias was teaching me the Ventrue disciplines."

"Powerful knowledge and skills to learn. Ventrue can become nigh invincible, can control animals, and even others."

"Julias said the same thing. I like the idea of becoming invincible..."

Ah little Ventrue Who wouldn't? "But?"

“But ... controlling others? I can’t even ... I can’t wrap my head around that either.” Jack squirmed, as if the sheer thought of controlling others was unfathomable to him. He’d learn.

“As your power grows, little Ventrue, so too will your ability to control the kine, and even other Kindred.” She gave his buzzed hair a light stroke of her fingers; it truly was an interesting sensation on the skin. “Kindred have my permission to with the kine as they see fit. As long as you do not risk the Masquerade, you may do whatever you wish. You may kill, you may feed, you may bend, manipulate, control, build and nest.”

“Whatever I want?”

“Indeed. Carnal delights, I admit, are what most freshly embraced drift to, and I cannot blame them.” She spun her words carefully, with just the right inflections to emphasize the sexual nature of it all. “You could command a kine to make love to you while you drink them. With a little practice, you could have walked into Bloodlust, and simply asked any woman there to join you in a booth. At your command, they would have let you devour them while granting your every sexual desire.” She gave him the look. The look. Sexual intent poured from her gaze like water.

She could play a brilliant devil when she wanted.

“Command someone, er, command a kine for sex? For blood? That...” The boy scratched at his buzzed head. “I mean yeah, that sounds great ... for a little while. I dunno, that ... that seems like it’d get pretty...”

He turned the words on his tongue. He was afraid he’d offend her. Just what was on the young Kindred’s mind?

“It sounds hollow.”

The erotic gaze she carried faded. The boy, the poor silly boy struck something within her so hard, she could feel the pain resonate through her core. She'd have gasped, if the reflex had still existed.

“ ... that it does, little Terry, that it does.” She pulled him closer to her. The boy had a confused look on his face, but he usually did. She hugged him, pulled his head to her shoulder, and stroked at his crown idly. He wouldn't know why she was holding him so, and that was fine, because she knew he'd just accept her touch. And he did.

He most definitely was not Tony.

“But,” she said, and turned them both slightly to again look at the humans that walked down the pathway past them, “you must still learn the disciplines, for protection or when you must feed and have no choice. I suggest...” She grinned down at the boy, and slid away on the bench so they could face each other. Whenever she held her words, Jack always squirmed a little with anticipation; it was delectable. “I suggest you practice on me.”

“ ... my Prince?”

“You will not be able to dominate me.” Oho, the word choice alone was making the game such a pleasure. “You may try though.” With a foot between them, both of them sitting on the bench, she held his hands in her lap, and lightly stroked his knuckles.

“But, I ... I...”

He squirmed and wriggled all the more at the proposal. The little Ventrue was almost turning on himself with conflicts and struggles. She gave him a moment to think, and soon Jack turned to face her, and gave a small nod.

“I must meet your gaze,” she said, and looked the little boy straight in the eyes. “Now, you must learn to exercise your power over your Vitae. The blood in your body, you control it. Like an extra muscle, you can wield it.”

Jack gave another small nod. It had been so long since she was embraced. Centuries. For her, to control the energy within her blood was just second nature. She’d long forgotten what it was like to breathe, but she imagined it was similar. For Jack though, it would be new, and she did her best to convey how ingrained it was into a Kindred’s body.

“Yes my Prince. I think ... yes. Alright, uh ... what ... what should I try to do.”

“Mesmerize me of course.” She gave his hand another gentle stroke of her nails. “I will be a slave to your whim. Anything you desire.” And of course, a cherry on top to reward his efforts.

His eyes were so wide, she could see the whole of white around his irises. Then determination set in, he furrowed his brow, and gazed right back into her own eyes. The concentration in them was so endearing, she had to do her best to not smile at him. It was a serious matter, to learn to control Vitae, but the little man was truly adorable.

She could feel it though. His mind was reaching out and trying to control hers, mesmerize hers. It was surprising. Astonishing even. It was not like some fledgling only several weeks to the game, as Jack was. Rather, it felt like a Kindred of some years was trying to tear down her walls and dominate her.

He never could of course, but she had to admit, there was a reservoir there in the little man. Julias had chosen well.

“These ... are not the droids you’re looking for.”

She bopped him on the head. He’d grown bold, the little imp, but she couldn’t help but laugh.

“Sorry! Sorry, I ... I couldn’t stop myself,” he said.

“Well, your silly sense of humor aside, you succeeded in performing the attempt.”

“I ... yeah, I felt something. Like I could feel you through my eyes ... thank you, my Prince.” He grinned up at her sheepishly, and stroked at where she thwaped him.

“Little Ventrue, you wasted a perfect opportunity at romance.” She leaned in close, close, and closer still, and kept her eyes unusually wide. The boy was helpless to look away, despite how she did not use a single discipline upon him. She didn’t need a Ventrue discipline to mesmerize with her gaze.

“But ... I didn’t want to ... impose...”

“I invited you to my estate.” She ran one of her fingers down his neck, and then down the center of his suit’s chest. “I shared one of my ghouls with you.” Her other hand behind his head lightly grazed his ear. “We kissed.” Her nose nudged against his. “And I would like to again.”

Jack had the look of a boy confronted with a dream memory come to life. Had her kiss all been a dream, she imagined were his current thoughts.

With a warm smile, she brought her lips down to meet his with half-closed eyes. He’d have pulled back in surprise, but she had her arm behind him; he was trapped, and there was no way she was going to miss the look in his eyes.

It was always his eyes. They were wide with shock, despite the road he’d taken to get here. Beautiful, green, innocent eyes. His gaze blinked a few times when she plucked at his bottom lip, and she couldn’t help but chuckle.

“You may kiss me in return, Jack. I will not bite.” She nudged her nose into his lightly, and put a light kiss on his upper lip. “Yet.”

Her silly threats sounded so juvenile and cliché to her, but Jack reacted just as she’d hoped, nervous and afraid but hopeless to escape her charms. He kissed her back, clumsy and timid, but that was what made it so enjoyable, so — dare she think it — fun. Her hand upon his head lowered to his shoulder, and with soft fingers, she tickled along his jawline while she played her lips across his. The boy’s eyes eventually closed, but she did not close hers; she dared not miss a single moment of his expression. Even with his closed eyes, he looked so enraptured with her. And to her utmost delight, he made a tiny moan when she pushed a little harder into him.

Then her beast within stood upright and roared. The silent noise was enough that she almost slammed Terry back into the bench. She put a hand to his chest to hold him in place while she scanned around with angry eyes.

“My Prince, I-”

She silenced him with a finger over his lips. There, by the entrance to the parking lot, a man stepped around the stone wall and into her Elysium.

It was Tony.

“... you should run along now, Jack.” Her voice had gone cold, and her grip around the tiny Ventrue had become protective.

“Is that Tony?”

“Indeed. Go home. He will not harm you, but it seems he would have words with me.”

The young man looked between her and the Daeva in the distance. For a second, there was a strange look of determination in his eyes, but before she could say a word, it had faded and young Master Terry slipped off the bench.

He didn't sneak off through the maze though. To her utter amazement, the young man walked with slow determination up to Tony. She got ready to intervene, but Tony only gave him a quick glance, and Jack did not even raise his head to meet it; he just marched on past Tony and out into the streets.

She had not expected that. The little Ventrue did not seem so little anymore.

Tony walked toward her, hands in pockets and a small smirk on his face. He truly was a beautiful man with his tall, lean figure, his short black hair, and those blue eyes. Such a stylish dresser too, with his business coat and shoes. All he had to do was give her that half smile and memories crept up her spine and refused to die.

Their inner-beasts growled at each other in silence. Her childe had grown to the point she was no longer his obvious superior. He was a dangerous creature.

“New boy toy?” he said. “I'm a little surprised. Bit young, don't you think?”

“He is an adult.”

“Barely. You always did like them young.” He kept walking toward her, and soon he came to a stop just a few feet in front of her. He was almost as tall as her.

“Did you come here to taunt me, Tony?” She leaned her weight into one of her hips, and folded her arms together underneath her bosom. “A little juvenile.”

“You’d know juvenile, wouldn’t you?”

She grit her teeth until she felt her fangs poked against the inside of her lips. “What do you want, Tony?”

“Just came to check up on my old sire. I see your pedophile tendencies have only gotten worse.”

Do not play into his game, Annie. Do not debase yourself.

“You stepped into my Elysium, Tony. When was the last time you came here outside of the meeting of the Primogen?” She took a step toward him, and looked down at him. “If you wish to duel, I will gather them, and we can settle your frustrations in combat.” Her hand reached up and pushed her hair back over her shoulder behind her.

“Sorry Sire.” He didn’t look away or back down. He met her gaze with his usual arrogance and nauseating smirk. “Don’t mix business with pleasure. You-,” he reached out and poked her sternum hard enough to make her take a step back, “taught me that. Must have been a couple hundred years ago before this city even fucking existed.”

She did not unfold her arms. “Do not test me.”

“Sorry again.” He gave a shrug. “But it’s my right as the ex in our relationship.”

The Prince took a moment to watch her childe. He was so smooth, suave, with just that edge of badboy and the cleanliness of a man who took care of himself. He dripped confidence, intelligence, and sexual allure.

She’d taught him well. Too well.

“Begone, Tony.”

“It’s the Elysium, right? I can take a stroll here if I want, by your own rules.” He gave her another push against her sternum, and she was forced to take another step to stay standing. “That Jack kid looks cute as a button. Maybe I’ll have Rebecca pay your new boy toy a second visit.”

For just a moment, a split moment, she heard a growl. She didn’t know where the sound came from, maybe it was from her, but a sound came that no human mouth could make. The next moment, she was standing with a foot forward and a fist already out in front of her. The skin of her knuckles had split open to reveal the dark, thick blood of Kindred that would not drip.

Tony was across the way with well over a hundred feet between them. One of the stone walls of her maze garden was cracked, and he was slumped against it with a hand against his jaw. The bone and skin of it was shattered, torn open, broken to pieces and splattered over his clothes. Kindred blood did not drip or flow, but her sudden assault had been enough to splash the viscous liquid against his neck and collar.

A crowd of Kindred crept up in the shadows. The garden maze covered a huge expanse of Elysium, and at least twenty freshly embraced fledglings who craved its no-violence law stood at the edge of the maze’s walls. Their eyes were hidden, and they whispered to each other while Tony crawled around on the ground with strands of his jaw hanging from his skull.

With a groan, the Daeva forced his body to recover. Flesh molded over the shattered bone and torn muscle; it was all dead flesh after all, and a Kindred as strong as her arrogant childe could regenerate from the wound. The young Kindred watching even let out gasps at the sight of Tony’s jaw reforming itself.

She should have punched him harder.

“You’re going to regret that,” he said, once his jaw and tongue were back together. Much of his bone was still exposed, but pale skin was growing over it quickly. “You’re going to regret everything.”

Damn it, the bastard had baited her. Now there she stood with bits of Kindred – now turning to ash – on her fingers, with a host of fledglings watching. She’d struck first, and inside her Elysium where violence was forbidden. On top of that, his threat against Jack had been ambiguous; she had no proof. With just a few words, he’d damaged her position.

Conniving, manipulative, cruel and vicious. Part of her was proud, while another part of her wanted nothing more than to rip him apart, piece by literal piece.

Tony laughed to himself as he struggled to get back up. For a moment, she thought he’d fight back. Daeva fighting was a dangerous game indeed, for as fast and strong as they were, they did not have the resilience of a Gangrel or Ventrue. The fight would have been over in seconds.

He didn’t though. With a snarky laugh, he turned around and walked away. He even gave a small wave as he moved on, without bothering to look back, and left her in the wake of her mistake.

Chapter 8

~~Beatrice~~

She had to get something to eat first, then she'd show Julias. She'd show up and beat the undead shit out of that piece of shit, stupid shit fuck. Eat first though, definitely. She was drained and tired from shadowing the trio, and there was no way she was going to confront big bad ancillae Julias without a stomach full of blood.

She'd tried feeding on some people gently lately, using the darkness and her strength to her advantage. It had worked well enough, and she'd had more than one kine succumb to her grip and enjoy the Kiss from the unknown creature in the shadows. But tonight, she stalked the streets for a bit, found some asshole who was about to rape someone, and then she drank him to death after making him relive his most horrible nightmare.

That made her feel a bit better. She could get into people's heads too; perks of being a Nosferatu. Not like a Ventrue could, but damn there was something very satisfying about making a fuckwad of a kine piss themselves in fear with hallucinations.

And then it was the next night. She was fully rested, strong, ready to kick some Invictus ass. She dialed his number.

“Yo let me up.”

Bzzt. The door to the apartment complex opened. She could be walking into a trap for all she knew, but fuck it, she wouldn't go down easy.

She was dressed in her combat boots and jeans, with a black t-shirt to go with. The boots were steel-toe, but not obviously. If things went sour, she was going to crack some nuts.

On the elevator, she folded her arms across her chest and waited while it went up. Her mind drifted around to all the things she might do to Julias if it turned out he'd been messing with her head. She already owed him for Mike. Poor kid was always a bit nervous and shaky, and now she could only imagine the sort of paranoia he'd have. Just thinking about it was making her nervous too.

She walked in with the same confidence she had last time she was there, when she'd shown up with a box of sex toys and night of fun in mind. Julias gave her that warm smile of his though from behind his counter, and already put a dent in her armor. For just a split moment, she thought about forgetting the whole vendetta thing and just having a good romp with Superman again.

Jack was there too. The two of them were sitting at the counter in his luxurious apartment, and they were ... looking at a candle.

“Hey Beatrice. I was showing Jack here the difference fire has on the skin now that he's Kindred.” With that, Julias ran a fingertip through the candle flame quickly. It only took a moment, but just that was enough for the flame to cut a deep gash of ash into his finger, almost deep enough to burn straight through it. If he'd been an elder Kindred, he'd have lost his entire hand.

When Jack repeated the motion, with a groan and grimace to join it, the damage to his skin was far less. Just a few specs of ash and burned skin.

“And now ... focus on that blood inside you. Pool it into your finger. Tell it to rebuild you.” Julias put his hand palm up on the counter. Beatrice stood beside the counter, and watched the Ventrue rebuild his own flesh. Kindred blood was nothing like kine blood; it was thick and viscous and moved like another limb. True to Julias's words, the strange, dark red covered the deep hole burned into his finger, and rebuilt pale flesh onto his dead bones.

“This is ... fucking ... hard.” The poor kid groaned all the more, and Beatrice openly chuckled. He glared at her, and she straight up laughed. His expression was so hilariously honest and juvenile in its frustration, she had to sit down on the couch before laughter knocked her over.

Julias looked over at her with a frown, but she just grinned back him, crocodile smile and all.

“ ... why don't you go home and work on this, Jack?”

“Yeah, good plan.” Jack, still holding his hand in the other and looking at it like it were his enemy, got up and headed over to the door. He managed to throw Beatrice an angry glare, which she returned with a smirk to go with. A moment later he was gone, and she was alone with her supposed boyfriend.

She got up and stood there, hip out to the side and arms folded on her chest. Julias looked back at her, and tilted his head to the side.

“How's it going Beatrice?”

Damn him. That smile, that confident but benevolent, powerful but gentle smile, was so inviting. He didn't just sit there either; he got up and walked over to her, and even put his hands on her hips.

She clicked her crocodile teeth together. “ ... this isn't a social visit.” She couldn't wane. He was a Ventrue; just repeat that line. An Invictus Ventrue.

“Oh? What is it?”

“I want to talk about what happened last night.”

He didn't even flinch. “What happened last night?”

In that moment of him acting like nothing happened, so smooth and perfect, she felt her insides burn. Her inner-beast almost sent her into a fury right there, with how rage exploded and filled her limbs.

She shoved him hard enough to send him back five feet and onto his ass. “You know what fucking happened!” There, that earned a flinch from him.

“... what happened to the no-work-talk rule?” Julias reached up to a nearby stool to stand up, but he didn’t fix the mess she’d made of his suit. His shirt had loosened at the waist and his shoulders weren’t on straight anymore, but all he did was stand there once he was up again. His expression was ... hurt? Serious? Angry? She couldn’t tell.

“You and your right hand bitch friends broke into Mike’s place and you ... you ... you fucking screwed with his head!” Her voice was getting louder, and that made it easier. With the rage building again, she pulled back a fist and drove it into the bastard’s chest. He fell to the floor with a very audible thud.

Well then she’d make him. She stomped over to him, reached down, and picked him up by his shirt like he weighed nothing.

“I want you to fucking explain yourself!”

“You know I can’t.”

“Bullshit!” She threw him into the fridge. The heavy appliance cracked against the wall behind it, and Julias fell to the floor again with his back to it. His suit was a mess now, but all he did was sit there and look down at the floor.

“ ... I can't. You know it's Invictus business.”

“Fuck that and fuck you. You rewrote my friend's memories! I bet you made him tell you something! So-”

“What about me then, hmm? The fuck did you do to me?” There wasn't much thought left going on in her head anymore, just enough to know she wasn't thinking. She reached down, picked up the damn Invictus bastard, and shoved him back against the fridge again.

“You? I've never done anything to you Beatrice.”

“Liar! That's why you agreed to go out on a date with me, isn't it?” She punched him hard enough to hear something crack. “Like a classy, sophisticated, self-righteous Ventrue would ever date a shark-mouth! You saw an opportunity! What Carthian secrets did you take from my mind then, hmm?” The second punch made a dent into his old, undead bones. “What the fuck have you made me forget!?”

This time, she used her claws. Cutting into a Kindred was different than cutting into a living human. His suit was like paper, but the flesh underneath was hard. It was a Kindred reflex, after all, to expend vitae to protect the insides, but it wasn't enough to stop her claws from forcing their way through a couple inches of his pale skin and into the hidden, withered insides of a vampire.

It had only taken a couple minutes, but she went from his hands on her hips, to her cutting open his chest. What surprised her even more was her sudden outburst about being a shark mouth. Her anger only increased; she was supposed to be passed that Nosferatu self-lamenting bull shit. She was done with it! Done!

He fell back down again, and did not react. He just slumped, and slowly raised his eyes to look up at her. Fuck, those god damn eyes really were hurt.

“ ... I’m not lying.” He looked down at his chest, and put a hand over the open gashes. The Kindred blood stayed inside his wounds, like a liquid with its own mind determined to stay hidden. With a groan of pain, he looked back up to her. “About either part.”

“Either? What fucking either?”

Watching the beaten and sliced open Ventrue get up struck her with a sudden fear. What she was thinking? He didn’t know what she was thinking!

“Actually, I do know what you’re thinking,” he said. She practically gasped. “You’re angry. You’re angry I hurt your friend...” He stepped toward her. “And now you’re using that as a cover.”

“ ... cover? What fucking cover?”

“That you hate being a Nosferatu. You hate being a shark-mouth, and now ... you’re taking out that hate on me.” He came a little closer.

She punched him in the face hard enough to crunch nose. “Fuck you! Tragedy freak! This isn’t a fucking therapy session you stupid-”

“I’m sorry I hurt your friend, but I had to to save his life. He had info we needed, and if I didn’t take it from him that way, he would have ended up ash.” He hadn’t fallen over this time; he didn’t even break his gaze with her when he raised his hands to realign his nose with a crack. “And ... I have no way to prove to you that I’ve never wiped your memories, other than that I simply can’t. You’re too strong.” He started walking toward her again, with a sad and tired smile. “And I have no way to prove to you that I really do like you. You know me though, I’m a tragedy freak.”

“You fucking calling me a tragedy you fucking-”

“I am.” His smile returned, even as he used the counter for support while his wounds closed. “And now you know what I’m thinking.”

“ ... you think ... that I haven’t gotten over this Nosferatu curse.”

He gave a nod, and stepped closer to her again. “And maybe I’m a freak because I like that about you. Maybe I like that you’re not dead inside ... like Jacob. Or Maria.” His weight fell onto his hand on the counter, and he held himself up that way with his other hand on his chest. He didn’t try and fix himself up, fix his suit or heal his wound. He just stood there, a half-smile on his face, confident as always, but ... something else. “I like you, Nosferatu tragedy included. This,” he gestured to the wounds she’d inflicted, “included.”

Too much. It was way too much. How dare he? How dare he just stomp on twenty-years of her bullshit. Fuck him and his ... his ... bullshit!

She punched him again, but her rage had faded. It wasn’t even hard enough to make him stumble back. He stepped toward her again, and she could see where his hands were going. He wanted to put them on her hips again. She couldn’t let him.

She shoved him, and ran away.

“Beatrice! Wa-”

Slam. Fuck listening to that psychology shit. He couldn’t read her mind! He ... could practically read her mind, without any powers.

How was he so good at reading her? Screw all that ... fucking ... stupid...

Ten minutes later, she was back in the catacombs where she first talked with Julias. Dark, filled with bones, deep underground with nothing but stone and earth and death around her. No one would hear her here.

“Aaaaaaaaaaaaarr!”

Her claws came out in full force. The shelves held hundreds of skulls on layers of stone and dust, and it all came crashing down when her claws ripped through them. Her inner-beast took over, and she scratched and clawed against the walls with rabid abandon. More screams came out, inhuman and wall-shaking, until she could almost feel her jaw crack with how wide her mouth was. Before she knew it, she had grabbed a coffin and bit through it. The bones and clothes within exploded outward from the force of her shark teeth snapping through it all.

“It does not bother me anymore! It shouldn’t bother me anymore! How ... how can this ... still...”

She collapsed in a corner, covered in dust and bone, and cried.

~~Julias~~

It’d been a week since he last saw Beatrice. He may have just fucked up the first real relationship he’d had in decades.

He’d known Beatrice would be volatile, it was part of what attracted him to her, but not only had she picked a fight with him, she had literally cut him open. She’d followed him as per Carthian orders he figured, and that didn’t bother him. It was scary the young Kindred was able to hide from Natasha and stalk all three Invictus right hands, but again, that didn't bother him. If anything, that just made her more interesting. She was powerful.

Julias paced in front of his massive window, a hand on his chin with a glass of blood in the other. It'd been a week since Beatrice had thrashed him, and he hadn't seen her. He'd considered walking into Carthian territory, knocking on the door of their pathetic apartment building, and just asking for her. He couldn't risk inciting an incident though, after Rebecca had put everyone on edge.

"... I really do like her though." He took a sip of his blood. What could he say to her? He'd said all he could say. "Yeah but I talked to her like a fucking therapist. I'm surprised she didn't rip off my arm." He chuckled. "You really fucked this up Julias. Tragedy freak.

"Alright, alright, how to fix this ... fuck I don't know how to fix this. She hates being Nosferatu, but I can't fix that. She still doesn't accept that I like the way she looks, not really. I have to convince her that I do. The thing with Mike though ... she was really upset I hurt her friend. Or was it about ... that I could have..."

He smacked himself in the forehead. "Fuck. She can't trust me anymore. She thinks I can do to her what I did to Mike, that I may have rewritten her memories. How the fuck am I supposed to prove I—"

His smartphone rang. It was Viktor.

"... shit." He answered. "Alder Viktor."

"Mister Mire. I require your presence."

---

There was no triumvirate this time. In the meeting room of Xnomina, Viktor was standing by the digital board, with his back to Julias and his hands netted together on the small of his back. Julias stood where he did last time, but without Jessy or Natasha at his side.

Just him and his sire, one of the most powerful Kindred in Dolareido. Each and every time, his one-on-one's with his sire made him more nervous.

“Mister Mire, you know that tomorrow is when you must retrieve that sensitive information from the North Side drop location.”

“Yes Alder Viktor.”

“Are you also aware that Antoinette has started visiting Bloodlust every week, starting about the same time I sent you to retrieve the information from Vance? The night of the fire?”

“I ... was not.” Julias folded his arms across his chest and stepped up to be next to Viktor. On the screen, pictures of Antoinette were shown, entering and exiting Bloodlust. They were date stamped. “I knew she had been visiting Bloodlust, but I did not make that connection.”

“Indeed.” Viktor gave him a short glance, cold and demanding. “And did you know she has been seducing your childe?”

He did not like where this conversation was going.

“Yes, Alder Viktor.”

“Strange that you have not brought this to my attention.” Viktor looked back to the screen, and gently eased several more digital photographs onto it. There was Antoinette, tall and gorgeous, with Julias's little childe in her arms.

The kid was right, Antoinette was really sexual with him. Really sexual. The picture was of them in Elysium, sitting on a bench outside her tower, and she was holding his childe to her and snuggling and ... kissing. His childe was kissing the Prince of Dolareido.

Viktor looked back to him, and his eyes were even more cold.

“Is he aware of any sensitive information?”

“No, sire.”

Viktor idly wiped some non-existent dust from the shoulder of his suit. “But that does not mean he will not become aware of any. She...” His voice trailed, and he reached for another digital image to drag into the center of the screen. He dragged at its corners to expand it, and zoomed in on Antoinette’s face. “Interesting.”

“Sire?”

“I’ve known the Prince for a long time. We met before she was Prince, and... ,” he pointed to her eyes, “she rarely shows those eyes anymore.”

Julias took a long hard look at the picture. Antoinette was stroking Jack’s chin with her arm hooked around his shoulders. She was holding him close, and she’d leaned in close enough to touch her nose to his. He almost felt jealous, that Antoinette was getting so much of his childe’s attention. It was in the Prince’s eyes though, and now that Viktor pointed it out, it was clear as day.

She liked Jack.

“Bring him on the mission.”

Say what? “I ... am not sure that is a good idea, Sire.”

“He is young, barely a fledgling, and your childe; it is natural for you to think so. He has value though. If the information we aim to retrieve from this ‘drop’ is indeed related to the Prince, as Rebecca and Tony believe, his intimate experience with her may be of use.”

You mean he’d be a valuable pawn in your game. Cold, cruel, calculating, and efficient. Would his sire really use his own grandchilde, just a babe, in his game? Most definitely.

Viktor Honors reached out for another folder on the screen, opened it and spilled out another list of images. They were of Tony and Rebecca, and based on the background, it was pictures of them scouting North Side. “Now that we know where to look — thanks to you — we caught these two sneaking in the area.” Even his compliments sounded cold and calculating. “Tony is no fool. He will expect others to show up for this drop, even if he does not suspect us specifically.”

“There may be a fight then. How many others are we bringing with us?”

“No one. I would bring Mister McDonald and Madame Turio, and perhaps their proteges, but the rest of the Triumvirate and their right hands are otherwise engaged. Someone has been performing night raids on several of Xnomina’s factories, damaging the company’s export profits.” He gave a subtle frown. “They have eluded capture. It is likely one or more Kindred, perhaps an ancillae and several fledglings, but I trust my partners to handle it.”

“Perhaps. And that is why I am going for the drop, as are you.” For just a second, Viktor had a smile. “Tony and Rebecca may be powerful Daeva, but they are also degenerates. Whores. And we will crush them. I trust you want revenge against Rebecca.”

He had to hand it to Viktor, his sire could be a persuasive, charismatic man when he wanted to be. He'd even raised a hand in front of him, and squeezed into a fist.

“ ... I would indeed, sire.”

---

~~Jack~~

“Mrs. Pavala’s murder is still under investigation, but with no leads, it would appear that the case has gone cold.”

Jack dared peak at the TV on display, but immediately regretted it. There were pictures of Mrs. Pavala when she was alive, and interviews with her family. It was enough to make his dead, withered insides turn upside down.

“Ah? No, I’m just getting a lighter.” He forced his eyes away from the TV hanging from the ceiling, and reached for a lighter. Nothing special or fancy, just your typical cigarette lighter from your typical convenience store.

It had hurt so much more than he thought possible, when he just ran his finger through the flame for a moment with Julias. His sire had done the same and almost lost his hand.

He held it in his grip. It was a lighter, he’d seen hundreds of them, but now it was something different. Just holding it in his hand was enough to make the strange Kindred energy in his blood, vitae, rise and prepare to defend itself. Like a human afraid of heights looking over the edge of a cliff fall, he could feel the fear in his bones.

He slipped the cashier the money, and left with his eyes still on the lighter in his hand. It was only when a hand grabbed his shoulder from behind that he looked up.

“Jack!”

“ ... Mary?”

It was his sister. Oh shit.

“Jack! Jack what the fuck? You’re alive? How ... I ... what? What’s going on?”

His sister was taller than him, a brunette with a soft face and lean figure. Her eyes were soft, and right then, wide enough he could see the veins.

“You’re alive! What are you doing? Did you run away, is that what happened?” She had tears in her eyes, and her voice was getting higher in pitch. People in the streets were stopping to stare. Even the nightlight pedestrians were startled by random squeals of shock.

“Mary, let-”

“I got to call Mom! She’s going to be so happy you’re alive!”

Jack gripped the lighter in his hand tighter.

“Mary.” He grabbed Mary’s hand and pulled her to the side of the street, and then out of the way a little, between some of the convenience stores. Dark alleys. Dolareido was full of them.

“Jack, what are you do-”

“Look into my eyes, Mary.” He forced down the imaginary bile he felt building up. There was no bile, because he wasn’t a human anymore. He was a god damn mother fucking vampire, a Kindred, and he had to accept that, both the good and the bad.

“The fuck are you on about? I have to call-”

“Look ... into ... my eyes.” He reached out with his mind, with his eyes, with the vitae inside him. Like reaching out with a hand, except it was his gaze, his own vision bestowed the power to grasp, touch ... control.

Mary went quiet. Her squeaks stopped, her hyperventilating stopped, her expression went deadpan, and her arms fell to her sides limp.

It wasn't just eye contact. Eye contact was how you got your foot in the door. He couldn't do it against Julias, and definitely not Antoinette, but against this weak kine ... his sister ... he could feel it. Her will was broken; it didn't even try to fight. Unaware and ignorant, with no inner-beast to fight him, she just gave in without a fuss. He could almost feel her mind his palm, soft, malleable, ready to be shaped into whatever he wished.

“Mary ... forget ... you ever saw me. As far as you know, I'm dead.”

“Now go home.”

“ ... I will go home.” No more emotion. No more sparkle of excitement and shock and surprise in her eyes. Mary just turned around without hesitation and walked down the street.

Jack crept back further into the alley until there was only shadow, and the sounds of the streetlife had completely faded. He found a dumpster, filth-ridden, but he didn't care. Something, anything to hide while he collapsed. With his ass on the dirty pavement and his back against the dumpster, he ignored the horrible smell and cold liquid soaking into his clothes.

He punched the wall. Ventrue reflex turned his skin and bone harder, so he punched it again. And again. The wall began to dent and crumble into powder and dust, and he kept punching it until the hole punctured the building. He was so close, so closing to moving on, but one stupid mistake and every horrible memory sprang back up and crushed him.

He had to stare deep into the eyes of his sister, and make her forget. The last memory he'd ever have of her would be her dead expression while he wiped the encounter from her mind. That hopeful, sudden burst of shock and joy and confusion and excitement in her eyes, and then nothing.

He got up and kicked the dumpster hard enough to send it spiraling down the alley before it slammed into a corner. He didn't care. He screamed into night air while he collapsed again, and put his hands against the wall he'd punctured.

For now, all he could do was cry, with no tears to show for it.

Xnomina was paying for his own current apartment, and it certainly was a sweet apartment. It was expected that eventually, once trained under Julias, he would serve his sire as partner in expanding Xnonmina's branches. For now though, he had the time to become accustomed to being Kindred, and he needed it.

He went to Julias's apartment the next day. Normally he would have preferred to deal with his sadness alone, but things had changed. He had a sire, and the new shit that was tearing him apart wasn't exactly typical grief.

"Hey Julias," he said with a small nod.

"Jack. I was going to call you." Julias was in the living room, getting dressed into a casual suit, and slipping a large knife into a large sheath along his ribs.

“ ... um, what’s with the knife?”

Julias gave him a long, hard look, but slowly his expression softened. “A mission.”

“Never thought I’d see you carrying a weapon. I thought we were Kindred?”

“Unfortunately, the other clans are a bit more apt at straight-on confrontation than a Ventrue.” He gave him a smirk. “So we adapt.” Then he pulled out a pistol, and slipped the disturbingly large firearm against the other side of his chest.

“Shit ... what’s going down? Wait wait, do I want to know?”

“No, you don’t. But you’re going to, because you’re coming.”

“ ... on a mission.”

“Yes.”

“Where you’re taking a knife, and a gun I’m sure could put a hole through an elephant.”

“Yes.”

They sort of just looked at each other for a while. He couldn’t figure out his sire’s face; what the hell was going on inside his head? Julias always looked like he belonged in the mafia in the 40’s, but the knife and gun completed the imagery.

“We’re going to North Side,” he said, “to pick up a package meant for someone else, and wanted by Tony and Rebecca.”

“I’m sorry, I think I misheard you. Did you just say Tony and Rebecca are going to be there? That someone unidentified might also be there? That we’re going on a mission I’ve had no prior warning about, into a potentially life threatening situation, to steal some unknown person's important package?"

"Yes."

Jack couldn't hide his frown. It was just one real moment after another. Every time he thought he had a second to get his bearings, to get adjusted to being a Kindred, something new came up. "A possible fight ... as much as I'd love to see Rebecca dead, I'm only going to be a liability."

"Viktor wants you there."

"Viktor is a sociopath!"

It was Julias's turn to frown. "Viktor is my sire, Jack, as I am yours. He can be cold and brutal, but he is smart. Very smart. I trust his judgment."

There was a moment of hesitation in Julias's voice though. It was just a moment, and Julias tried to cover it, but Jack heard it. And Julias knew it.

"There's more to this, isn't there?" Jack said.

"... yes." Julias adjusted his jacket and stepped over to the giant window to look out into the city; the whole conversation now reeked of a movie scene. "I don't want to put you between Viktor and Antoinette." He looked over his shoulder at him. The look said it all; Julias knew he'd been seeing Antoinette more. "But the information we aim to retrieve is sensitive to the covenants. That means it could have to do with the Invictus, or the Carthians or ... the Ordo Dracul and Antoinette."

Crap. Jack sat down onto the couch and ran his fingers over his buzzed head. "I probably should have listened to you and avoided Antoinette, right?"

Julias walked over to him, and to Jack's surprise, there was a strange smile on his face.

"I can't deny you and the Prince could have perhaps done a better job hiding your little game." He reached down and pulled Jack back to standing, firm but slowly, before patting him on the shoulders. "And now, like I said, you've got yourself in the middle of the Danse Macabre. You're important. You know things, whether you realize you do or not, and Viktor and Tony, probably even Garry and Jacob all know your face now."

"... ah shit. So I'm going because ... because I should?"

"Viktor thinks so. You're in the Danse now. You have connections with Antoinette; your input may prove quite valuable," his sire said, and at the same time handed him a sheathed knife similar to his own. "I won't let anything happen to you."

He wanted to talk about Mrs. Pavala. He wanted to talk about him and Antoinette. He wanted to talk about Mary. But now, he had a knife in his hand, and his sire was hooking a carrying belt around his hips.

"You must trust Viktor a lot, to bring me on this mission just cause he thinks you should." Jack raised his arms so Julias would have an easier time hooking the belt on him.

"You know Viktor is a dangerous man." Julias finished and stood up. "But I've been working with him since he sired me seventy-years ago, since even before then. He truly believes in the Invictus, and you're Invictus now."

"I'm Invictus ... but I haven't done anything for the Invictus yet."

"Yet."

---

~~Julias~~

He really hoped he was right.

The two of them, Julias and Jack, were in a taxi and riding to North Side. It was an Invictus taxi, the driver was one of Michael's ghouls, but the two Ventrue had gone quiet. Julias occasionally threw his childe a small glance, but the young man was looking out the window and rubbing his buzzed head nervously.

He could tell Jack was a mess of nerves, since he always went quiet like that when he was nervous. Not only that, but Julias had seen the pictures; Jack liked Antoinette, and now the kid was getting put into a situation purely because he knew the Prince. Who knew how that was going to go?

Julias was no better off. Natasha and Jessy wanted him to kill Viktor. Kill his sire. It was a classic story of course, of an elder vampire grown old, powerful, and dangerous. Viktor's last torpor had lasted decades, and when he'd awoken from his long sleep, he wasn't the same. And now Julias had his own childe to think about.

Nothing was the same.

He almost laughed. God, did he really just think that? If Beatrice was there, he'd have said it just to irritate her with the cliché.

"Do I get a gun?" Jack said.

"... what?"

"A gun. You gave me a knife, but not a gun."

"Do you know how to fire a gun?"

"I'm sure I could figure it out." Jack finally turned from the window, and gave Julias a little grin.

Julias did laugh this time. “Tomorrow night. I’ll take you to a range and make sure, so you don’t accidentally shoot a pedestrian.” He gave his childe a grin back. Jack’s confidence was starting to show through, and he probably didn’t even realize it.

The taxi stopped at a dead-end road that came to an abrupt stop before North Side. The factory district was blocked off by various walls of old brick and dying wire fences, and this particular road stopped in the most dense section. Every hundred feet was a warehouse of some kind, broken up by wood pallets and empty metal cargo units. The only lighting was the occasional flickering light hanging by wire, strung between warehouses.

Viktor Honors was standing by one of the buildings, with his arms folded across his chest. Dressed in a gray suit Julias was sure was made by the devil himself, his sire also sported a black long coat, a duster at that. It was open at the chest, revealing Viktor’s own chest strap that carried a pistol, and ... his sword. With his black hair in a ponytail, his young face and his ancient gaze, his sire looked somewhere between comic book cheesy, and awe inspiring.

Jack’s jaw had dropped. Viktor gave his grandchilde a smile.

“Master Terry. I am glad to see you came.” His voice was so smooth but monotone, soft yet antediluvian.

“Please. We are all Invictus, and that includes you, Master Terry. Refer to me by my title.”

“Yes Alder Viktor.”

The kid tried to hide his smile, but failed. Viktor returned it though. Even Julias found himself smiling. Things were going well. It was true that Viktor was terrifying, but he hadn’t fed on another vampire yet. Maybe Julias wouldn't need to kill him, if he even could.

“Do you understand why you are here, Master Terry?”

“Yes Alder Viktor. I am to provide possibly valuable insight into the situation if the opportunities arises. I understand we're here to retrieve an information drop that may be pertinent to the covenants.”

“Indeed. Your relationship with the Prince is unheard of, since Tony. And I believe your insight regarding that serpent may be even more valuable.” The elder Kindred then looked to Julias. “I have only been here twenty minutes, and I have heard nothing. Still, let us assume the worst and approach this cautiously.”

All three Ventrue nodded. Jack got behind Julias while the two of them eased against a wall of a warehouse, and Viktor the other. Between the two buildings, it was a long, exposed walk toward their destination. Even Viktor, who dripped professional efficiency, carefully stuck his head out.

Then half of the elder's head exploded.

Chapter 9

~~Jack~~

Jack's eyes went wide. Half of Viktor's head was gone, just gone. The bloody gibs of brain matter and bone turned into tiny fires that faded into ash and embers before they even hit the ground.

"Shit! Shit shit, what-"

Julias put a hand against Jack's mouth, and pushed him back against the wall. "Sniper, down the path."

Jack reached up and pulled his sire's hand down. "What about Viktor!? The fuck are we supposed to do now?"

Just as he was about to start ranting, his jaw dropped yet again when Viktor sat back up, safe out of the line of sight of the alley. Half his head was still missing, but it was rebuilding itself. That dark and thick Kindred blood was seeping into the gory mess and quite literally rebuilding bone, muscle, tendon, teeth, and even his hair. It wasn't like when Julias healed from his burn; this was some freaky mutant insane healing powers shit.

A minute later, Viktor was standing and dusting his shoulders off. His hair was now undone, and the black length reached the middle of his back. "Vermin. Cowards. If they want to play as rats, then rats they shall have." He looked to his childe, grandchile, and gave a small grin. The smirk was gone so fast, Jack wasn't sure he'd seen it.

And then, as if thrown into the ocean during a hurricane, Jack had to press a hand to the wall to brace himself against the invisible. Viktor's voice was quiet, but he could feel it resonate through him. There was power there, so much power that it shook the blood in his withered insides. It only got worse when Viktor used a fingernail to slice open his wrist, and forced a large splattering of his blood to land on the pavement.

Squeaks. At first it was a barely audible buzzing sound, like a fly near the ear, but soon the rising tide of squeaks flooded toward them. When Jack looked toward the source, he could not find it. It came from everywhere. In the dark of night, it looked like the pavement had come to life.

Hundreds of rats poured over everything. They ran the corners of building and street, flowed up from sewer drains, and down the walls of warehouses, all to sip at Viktor's blood.

“Go. Swarm and devour my enemies.”

King of the rats. The flood of moving fur poured past them all and down the alley. The moving carpet of teeth was met with gunfire, squeaks of death and exploding, furry little bodies, but whoever was shooting did not have nearly enough bullets to stop a torrent of claws. Within a minute, the sounds of gunfire had fallen back.

Julias went in first, his pistol held in both hands. Viktor had also drawn his pistol, a machine pistol at that, but he held it in one hand. With an almost flamboyant flare, he drew his sword and held it in his right hand at the ready. It was not some antique, but rather something clearly modern, almost more like a very long dagger.

Jack found himself suppressing a grin. He was afraid, there was gunfire, and Viktor had lost half his head, but damn if his grandsire wasn't an irrefutable badass. Viktor went in after Julias, and the two went at a full run. Jack came up behind them, and found himself drifting to hide behind Viktor more than Julias. No offense to his sire, but his grandsire was scarier.

Instead of stopping to regroup once a new set of warehouses were reached, they kept running. Fearless. It was strangely exhilarating. At first, he was terrified, and he still was, but there was something to this, hunting things in the dark. Something primal and ancient tugged at Jack's insides, that inner-beast that now lived inside him, and pulled him along like a cat chasing prey. He forgot about Mrs. Pavala, about Mary, about all the stupid shit that didn't matter then. For the moment, he was a predator.

They soon found themselves in a cross section of road, warehouses, factories, dipping ramps of asphalt that lead into garage doors. The rats were pouring down one of the ramps and under a barely-opened garage door. Then the air was filled with squeaks, hundreds, even thousands of squeaks. Dying squeaks.

Viktor held up a hand, and Julias came to a stop with his back against the wall of the opened door. Jack's sire clearly had training; he moved with efficiency and speed with his pistol in both hands. His grandsire on the other hand, walked forward as if immortal. For all Jack knew, he might as well have been. The elder Kindred stepped underneath the garage door, following the rats into the darkness.

Jack followed him in, only to have the garage door slam behind him.

~Julias~

Shit.

Julias only had time to take two steps toward the garage door before a pair of hands crashed into him. Everything turned upside down, everything hurt, and suddenly the pavement was zipping by underneath him. He was sent fifty feet before he skidded to a stop, suit torn to bits and his pale skin ripped open all over.

His skin closed and healed itself within seconds, and he was up on a knee in the same amount of time with his gun drawn. A quick look around showed he was in clearing of street, likely where transport trucks rerouted.

“God damn Ventrue. Too damn hard to kill with bullets.”

Rebecca. The redheaded bitch was wearing a wearing a black trench coat, and ... a nice scarf. Damn Daeva always concerned with looking sexy. The woman had a large rifle with a long barrel in her hands, but she threw it to the ground with a frustrated groan.

“Good thing Daeva aren’t so hard to kill.” He’d shot thousands of bullets from dozens of different guns. His current pistol had kick, but it was nothing a Kindred couldn’t suppress easily, so firing several bullets in rapid succession from the oversized weapon was easy.

Hitting the Daeva, on the other hand, would not be so easy. Rebecca moved as a blur, fast enough that before he knew it she had put a warehouse corner between them. He’d clipped her; the splattering bits of dark blood and withering ash proved it. He’d have to hit her in the chest several times just to slow her down long enough to take off her head, though.

Well, at least the place was deserted for a wide radius. No cops.

“Come out come out wherever you are.” Julias stood up and started to walk toward where she’d disappeared, pistol at the ready.

“Well, you can hide, but eventually I’ll give up and get back to Viktor.” He poked his head around the corner, just long enough to see what waited for him. Nothing.

“Well I can’t have that.”

“No I don’t suppose you can. You really think Tony can kill Viktor?” He really only had one direction to move in: toward the voice. Rebecca was staying ahead of him, ducking around warehouse corners and likely hiding on rooftops to throw her voice.

“What’s a Ventrue without his subjects to fight for him?”

“Ah, so that’s why you separated me.” He kept his pistol in both hands, and tracked his gaze with practiced speed.

“Indeed!” Always with a flare for the dramatic, the serpent jumped from a rooftop. Jumped was incorrect, she’d actually propelled herself down toward him, and she crashed into him with enough force to dent the wall behind him with his head.

He was prepared this time, and Ventrue reflexes had his vitae pumping defense through his body upon impact. Physics were physics though, and he slammed into the wall hard enough to almost bounce. He pulled the trigger, several times, but all the bullets went wide. It only got worse when a punch hit his hands hard enough to knock the weapon away.

Julias got back up, knife in hand and Rebecca’s blood on its blade for only a moment before the red became ash. He didn’t need a gun.

“You nearly killed by childe. You nearly killed me.” He gripped the blade tight in his right hand with his left hand open and pointed toward the Daeva. “You really suck at finishing jobs. You wouldn’t last two days in the Invictus.”

Or at least, they were empty. It was too damn hard to follow her movements, but she managed to reach into her jacket and pull out a weapon before he could move. He wasn't worried about a pistol, but she wasn't pulling out a pistol. She was pulling out a short-barreled shotgun, perfect for splattering a Kindred into bits.

He ducked in and tackled her. She was faster and stronger, but he was tougher. Her shot clipped over his shoulder and tore a chunk of his flesh free, enough to disable the arm. For the moment.

“Get off of me!”

She bashed him in the face with the weapon, but he was inside now. His right hand still worked, so he swung the knife for her guts. She raised the gun in a harsh uppercut though, straight up against the hand, blocked his swipe, and drove the butt of the gun into his face. The damn Daeva hit so hard, his knife was knocked up from his hand and away, and his head snapped back almost hard enough to break his bones.

She pointed the gun at him again, but he reached for it with his good arm while falling back. His torn up arm was taking just seconds to heal, but seconds was a long time when a Daeva was struggling to get a shotgun in your mouth, so he only had the one hand to hold onto the gun while she had a free hand. She used it to punch his chest again, and again, and again, until bone broke inward.

He didn't let go of the gun. She beat him, tore into him, ripped open his chest, but still he didn't let go. Over the seconds, his arm put itself back together with the crack of undead bone and shifting cartilage. When the arm finally started working again, he ignored the blinding pain – his inner-beast demanded it – and raised his free hand to grab her face. He was bigger than her, much bigger, and he put his size to use with his larger grip over her eyes, and his grip squeezing hard enough to crush bone.

He may not have had the strength of a Daeva, but she didn't have the resilience of a Ventrue. Within seconds, he felt her pale skin start to give way to his fingers, and soon the bone underneath it around her temples and eye sockets began to crack.

She screamed. Kindred were not immune to pain, and her noises made Julias grimace. Her high-pitched wail turned into a furious banshee cry as she let go of the gun, but put both hands against his assaulting hand, and ripped it off.

It was his turn to cry out. Her nails dug into his flesh, into the undead insides, and tore it apart at the wrist. Bits of bone flew out, along with a small splatter of his blood before the viscous liquid contained itself to his open wound. His hand was gone though, and the severed limb crumbled into old dust and bone on the pavement. He wasn't Viktor, it would take a lot longer than few seconds to grow an entire hand.

Rebecca threw her fist into his face, and this time he flew back only to crash into a nearby warehouse wall. With only five feet between them still, the Daeva pounced at him.

But he hadn't let go of her shotgun.

With barely enough sense of mind to pay attention, searing pain tearing through his wrist and through his body, he raised his remaining hand up to the serpent's face. She was mid-air, she couldn't change direction, and the speed of it all meant she crashed into the gun the moment he pulled the trigger.

Rebecca still crashed into him, but now it was a mess of limbs, blood and ash. She wasn't trying to grab him, not yet. Maybe he'd killed her? He got his bearings – she was on top of him – and he swung the gun into the side of her head. She rolled off of him, onto her knees, and started moving, struggling, groaning.

He forced himself up and onto his feet, gun still in hand. He tried to not look, but eventually he had to take a glance at the damage Rebecca had done to his other hand. There was no hand, just a stump of wrist where it had been. Pain re-surfed anew, and he forced down the need to scream and yell. He had a job to do.

The Ventrue looked down at Rebecca, who was whimpering with obvious pain and favoring one arm. When she realized he was up, she turned around on her knees to face him, but immediately fell over onto her side. There was a mess of blood, torn clothes, and a blatantly open cavity in her right chest that exposed dark flesh and shrunk organs. Were the shotgun any stronger, it would have put a hole clear through her torso.

He pointed the shotgun at her head.

“ ... m-mercy,” she said.

He froze.

She attacked.

He only had time to blink before the Daeva forced herself into a tackle against him. She was practically snarling, and despite a giant chunk of her chest missing, she was still using both arms and managed to punch him in the jaw hard enough crack bone again. When his back smashed into the pavement, he let go of the shotgun, and immediately found his only hand pinned underneath one of hers.

“God damn Julias Mire. Still a sucker for a girl in distress. You know what? Fuck you. I’m not going to kill you because it’s my job. Instead, I’m going to kill you just because you’re an archaic, sexist dick.” She put the shotgun against his head.

And then she had no arm.

Julias's jaw dropped open as Rebecca's arm dropped to the floor. By the time it reached the ground, the limb fell apart into bone, ember, fading ash, and the shotgun bounced harmlessly across the pavement.

Rebecca's eyes opened wide. She tried to get up and turn around, but only two seconds after her arm had simply fallen off, a massive set of claws were sticking out of her chest. Some claws poked through the wound the shotgun had made, while most just bore straight through her back and out through her ribs.

"I ... I ... can-"

Another set of claws punctured her, next to the others. Rebecca was skewered ten times through, and shaking with disbelief, and pain.

With taunting slowness, Beatrice exposed her face from behind and over Rebecca's shoulder. Like a dark ghost, the Nosferatu formed into view from the shadow, with obsidian melting off of her to expose her teeth, claws, and snake eyes.

"Beatrice? Wai-wait, I-"

Julias's hand was suddenly free, and he had to raise it to his eyes to cover himself from the sudden explosion of Kindred flesh. Beatrice's arms swung to both sides, and the Daeva split apart at the center, down the middle and in both directions. For just a split second, he saw a surprised look on Rebecca's face, before his hand was covering his eyes, and the Daeva's blood and body went everywhere. Within seconds, her flesh withered and decomposed, until moments later it was nothing but bones and dust.

When Julias lowered his gaze, it was just soon enough to see Beatrice showered in red, her arms out to either side of her, and large chunks of Rebecca still within her claws. With a slow, almost dramatic flare, the Nosferatu stepped up from her knee, and stood over Julias. He was still just laying there, jaw dropped, and blinking up at the woman.

Holy shit.

“Fuck that felt good. I really hated that bitch.” She chuckled, stepped forward, and reached for his hand. “Need a haaaand ... oh god, I didn’t even realize.” She managed a glance at his missing hand, then back to him, before she burst into laughter.

“ ... thanks.” He took her hand, and pulled on it hard in a weak attempt to pull her down to him. But she was Nosferatu, and instead pulled him up to his feet like he weighed nothing.

“Damn you really owe me one for this.” She was smiling, big crocodile teeth on either side of her mouth, with her sweet, perfect lips between them. He really wanted to kiss right then. Not now, Julias!

“I do. Definitely. But I need to get in that building. Jack, Viktor and Tony are in there.”

---

~~Jack~~

If there was one way Jack was going to get himself killed, it’d be making a stupid decision.

There were dead rats absolutely everywhere. Someone had ripped them up like a tornado of meat and bits of blood, stomped into mulch underneath boots. It was a carpet of whiskers and rat tails midst tiny guts and tufts of fur.

“My oh my. The great and proud Viktor Honors himself. I’d have thought you would have sent your right hands,” the black said.

He froze; he knew that voice. That was Tony.

Rows and rows of machines lined the floor of the large warehouse, abandoned and forgotten. Spools of different fabrics were being rolled into machines of turning wheels that were then threading the threads into other machines. All were silent, except for the hidden man's voice bouncing along the walls for a dull echo.

It was the textile mill.

Viktor sneered. "It wasn't you, serpent, raiding on Xnomina property then?" The elder Kindred walked forward into the black, unhindered with any sort of hesitation or fear.

Why weren't they leaving? Tony was a Daeva, and that meant fast, and strong. If Jack turned around to open the door, it meant being exposed. Still, there were two of them, he could open the door while Viktor covered him. Instead, the ancient Ventrue walked between the old machines, sword and gun in each hand, black hair pouring down his back.

It probably never even dawned on his grandsire to retreat, or that retreat was even an option.

"I have to admit, I didn't expect one of the triumvirate, especially the Ventrue himself. What good are you without an army to bark orders to?"

Jack tried to follow the voice, but Tony's sly tone was a soft echo and nothing more.

"You try my patience, Tony. Begone."

"Guess I'll just take the pack-"

"You don't have the information drop, plague-ridden vermin. Otherwise you would have left already." Viktor took a swipe at the air with his sword.

Jack smiled. Damn his grandsire was such a badass.

“Tch.” From down the pathway of cold floor and dusty machines, Tony stepped out into the open. He was wearing black jeans and a jacket, so casual Jack almost found it insulting.

But the grin on his face was enough to make the tiny Ventrue’s withered stomach turn on itself, and his inner-beast recoil in fear.

“Begone.”

“Nah,” the Daeva said with a shrug. “The fuck do I have to fear from a god damn Ventrue?”

The two elder Kindred stood there, looking at each other, neither moving, neither making the first move. At first, Jack noticed the hilarious similarity of it and shogun samurai duels; two people staring at each other, as if their facial expressions alone were a battle. But as time went on, his body slowly froze under the power of it. These were not juveniles throwing around testosterone, but gods, staring down hundreds of years of wisdom and murder.

Jack stepped back an inch.

“Ah, hey, it’s they kid. Hey twerp.” Tony stepped forward toward them.

It was enough to make Jack step back again, even with a hundred feet between them. Viktor didn’t move though, and with a leisurely gesture, angled his sword down between Jack and Tony.

“You’ve met my grandchilde then? As I understand it, he’s accomplished something you could do not.”

Jack went completely still. What? What had he accomplished? The only link between him and Tony was ... Antoinette.

“... be careful Viktor.” Tony tightened his hands into fists. On the surface, it was nothing but posturing, but Jack could feel the anger and power flowing out of the Daeva like lava.

Viktor glanced over his shoulder at Jack, gave him a knowing smirk, and looked back to Tony. “He managed to woo the Prince, but a month old and barely a fledgling.” He took a step toward the Daeva. “Does it sting, vermin? The great and mighty Tony, forgotten by his sire, only to be replaced by a freshly embraced?”

Oh. He was bait. That’s why Viktor wanted him, not for his ‘insight,’ but for bait. Well, he had to admit, it was a smart move. A dangerous move, for him. His unlife was on the line now and Viktor was specifically goading the monstrous Daeva into attacking. If he did, Jack would be the first he’d try and kill.

But Viktor was keeping between the two of them, and the Ventrue seemed more than ready to fight if the situation called for it.

“You don’t know what happened between us, Viktor. You know nothing.” Tony stepped forward again, but then raised a hand. “You know, we’re both here for information. Think I’ll find any nasty Invictus secrets?”

It was Viktor’s turn to grimace, but he said nothing.

“I don’t give a shit about you, Invictus,” Tony said. “I want Antoinette crushed and ruined. So, how about we put this little dilemma on hold?”

“So you can get your hands on that information? I have no intention of letting vermin learn of our secrets.”

“And if I promise to share?” Tony said, but he laughed when he said it. “We could ignore each other, for the time being, and use the information together.”

“You do not even know what the information is.” Viktor dismissed Tony with a wave of his hand. “Or if it’s here already, or coming.”

“Mehket can be sneaky, but I saw a car drive away when I got here.” Tony snickered. “So it’s probably here, somewhere ... come on Viktor. You’re not being very reasonable. Think I don’t know you want to be Prince?”

“When I become Prince and destroy Antoinette,” Viktor said, with sword now raised and pointed at Tony, “it will be on my own terms, and not with the aid of some vermin ser-”

“What? You can’t hurt Antoinette.” Before he could stop himself, the words were out of his mouth. Jack put a hand to his lips, as if he could cover up the mistake. If there was one way he was going to get himself killed, it’d be making a really, really stupid decision.

Tony stopped and looked at him, eyebrow raised and hands slipping into his pockets. Viktor, on the other hand, slowly turned to face his grandchilde, and his expression was shocked. More than shocked. His eyes were wide, confused, and his mouth looked like it was ready to drop.

“ ... I beg your pardon?”

“Um ... I...”

Viktor started to walk toward him, one slow step at a time. His eyes were still wide, and ... afraid? It didn’t make sense. The ancient Kindred just walked toward him until Jack’s back was against the garage door.

“You ... you would dare insult me?” Viktor swung the sword in the air several times, as if to display his disbelief. He wasn’t afraid. He was furious.

Like Tony moments before, Jack could feel the anger actually flow out of his grandsire as crushing waves. His own inner-beast was screaming in terror, but he couldn't move back any further. His mind was in a panic, he couldn't turn to lift the door, he couldn't get out. Trapped. Trapped!

“Al-Alder Viktor, please, I ... Antoinette is-”

“You would betray me for her?” Intent was dripping from Viktor's gaze like blood. Maybe there was fear in his eyes. Fury, but also paranoia. Julias had said elders were paranoid, but he had no idea.

Jack was shaking.

“I-”

The blade came down fast. Too fast. Almost as fast as a Daeva. And in the next moment, the blade had swiped through and was now pointed down at Viktor's feet.

The moment after that, Jack fell to his knees, and then onto his side. Things stopped working. He clutched his hands at the floor and tried to pick himself up, but it just wasn't happening. He looked down at himself, but found only a mess of his suit cut down the center, and the thick, viscous blood of a Kindred dripping down onto the floor; Kindred blood wasn't supposed to do that.

Then the pain started. It exploded outward from his face first, and when he reached up to clutch it, he found a massive gash down through it, through his forehead, nose, mouth, jaw, and into his skull. It wasn't just a small cut, but a deep cut that had sliced deep through his bone. The pain moved downward, and with a trembling hand, he managed to bring a hand to feel his chest. There too, a massive gash had cut into chest.

Things were falling out of him.

When he managed to force his attention through nausea and blistering pain, he could just barely make out withered things, dark and atrophied and dead things slipping from his pale skin, and soaked in dark red. Kindred insides.

“Learn your place.” Then Viktor kicked him. “And die.”

Bone cracked inward and more of his precious vitae splattered over the floor. Hard as the viscous liquid fought to stay inside him, he was cut open like a gutted fish, and the blood was helpless but to pool around him. He tried to talk, to beg, to plead, but all that came out was Kindred blood.

He could hear laughter, and voices. Viktor was talking, but not at him. Tony. The two were walking toward each other, faster, and then ... running at each other.

Gunfire. Metal smashed against the machines. Everything became a blur. Tony was moving, jumping, insanely fast but everything was spinning now. Even Viktor looked like a blur, with his machine pistol drawn and unleashing a sliding light of muzzle flash in the darkness.

Their fighting was his death song. Sword against the floor and bullets against the spooling machines. Whoever won was going to kill him. Either Tony would for his relationship with Antoinette, or Viktor for Jack’s audacity.

He was going to die. He was going to die because he didn’t know how to keep his mouth shut, because Viktor was a paranoid bastard, and because Tony was a deluded asshole.

... no. Fuck that. Fuck it. Fuck Tony. Fuck Viktor. Fuck them all.

He reached out across the floor with one hand, dug his fingers into the floor as best he could, and started to drag himself. He’d broken his leg once as a kid. He'd been kicked in the balls by a bully once in high school. One time, he lost a tooth to an infection.

None of it even compared. If he'd still be human, kine, he'd have passed out from the pain. So much of his body had been split open, he could feel bone grinding against bone where it was supposed to be connected. Each inch crossed sent migraines of pain that overwhelmed him until he couldn't think. No! He was Kindred now. He was a fucking Ventrue, and he wasn't going to fucking pass out and die to a fucking flesh wound in the middle of a fucking textile mill!

Textile mill! Thread. Fabric. Spools of it. Let it be let it be ... yes! The lighter was still in his pocket.

The two elder Kindred were still fighting. He could barely follow that they were moving, and the gunfire was growing quiet. Gunfire wasn't supposed to be quiet. He had to go faster. Find some thread, some fabric, something that was hanging far enough down he could light it.

He wouldn't let these fucking animals hurt Antoinette.

The building was in disarray. It'd obviously not been properly emptied when abandoned. And after dragging himself twenty feet, he found one of the spool machines. It was such an old machine, no wonder the mill had been abandoned. It wouldn't have passed safety inspection, and it would have cost a fortune to replace all the machines. But it'd only recently been abandoned, and now that he was up against the machines, he could see through cloudy eyes that bits of fabric were everywhere.

He held the lighter in front of him. It was drenched in blood, and he had to struggle to hold it. He was shaking, either from how close to his second death he was, or because he was holding Kindred bane in his hand. Every flick of the thumb against the flint wheel was fruitless. He kept trying, even as he fell over onto his shoulder, and could barely see the lighter in front of him or the threads of fabric, he kept at it.

Finally, a spark.

And then, fire.

---

~Beatrice~

Fire. Fire! Fire poured out of the old warehouse like death given its own life, its own desires, its own hands to reach out and grab and take whatever it wanted. And it wanted everything.

“No! Jack!” Julias tried to rush past her, but it only took a quick hand to his chest to knock the big man down onto his ass.

“Stay back, fucking idiot! Look at that!”

Fire didn't just rise from the old building. It exploded outward. Fire and smoke and chemicals; it was a giant cluster fuck of insane proportions.

And then it was the next building. They didn't go up in flame with the same eagerness as the first building, but the fire was spreading nonetheless. Just looking at the flame was making the Nosferatu tremble.

“Jack was in there, with Viktor!” Julias motioned to the first building that went up in flame. “I have to get him!”

Superman got up again, and she put him down just as easily. Hell, he was missing a hand and beat to shit, he couldn't even land without stumbling over. “You'll fucking die! We'll both fucking die. The fire is spreading.” She reached down, picked him up by his collar, and shook him. “Use your god damn brain, Invictus!”

He struggled. “No. No I have to go get him, I-”

Nope. Fuck that. She punched him in the face, and when he spit curses of pain, she punched him again until she heard something crack. She couldn't knock him out without nearly kill him, but it was enough to break his face if that was the only way to get him to not commit suicide.

She dragged him off. He was holding his face now, yelling and struggling, but at least his hands – er, hand – was off of her so she could drag him without issue.

“I didn't save your god damn life so you could throw it away. Now shut up. The kine will be here soon. This whole district will be in flames soon!”

Wow, he did not stop struggling. Whatever, she overpowered him easily, and the big man was helpless to escape her grip as she bounded up onto rooftops.

She took him back to his place.

Finally, they were back at his apartment. She had to use her cloak of night to get past all the pedestrians, and with the one-handed Ventrue hanging off of her shoulder, that was no easy task. At least the big lug had finally given up struggling.

“Sit down and so help me god if you try and leave I will rip off one of your legs. See how far you can get with half your limbs gone!” She threw him onto the couch, hard enough to make her point.

“ ... alright.”

Superman slumped against the couch and cradled his missing hand. He'd be able to regrow it during the day when he slept, and the host of other wounds he'd taken. He'd be hungry as well when he woke up, for the sheer amount of vitae it'd require to regenerate.

“Sunrise is in an hour. So don’t ... just don’t.” She stood there, arms folded across her chest, before she finally took a look down at herself. God she was a filthy mess. She had Rebecca all over her.

Ok, the situation sucked, but that thought made her laugh. Julias quirked a brow at her, and she raised her hands up in surrender. “Just a funny thought.”

“Jack could be dead.”

She did a double take. He had said it, right?

“Hey, he could be alive too.” Pretty damn unlikely though. The fire had eaten a dozen warehouses by the time it was beyond them and out of sight. And even to a Kindred as young as Jack, fire was still extremely deadly.

Julias didn’t say anything. Just looking at him was enough to make her feel weighed down though. For just a moment, she thought of the old stories she’d heard, of what a parent went through when they lost a child. The Ventrue was beaten, missing a hand, suit in shambles, but it was his down-pointed eyes that had her feeling ... feelings.

She came over and sat down next to him.

“ ... what are you going to do?” she said.

“Don’t know. I don’t even know if Viktor is alive; he hasn’t called to arrange another meeting.”

“God. What the fuck went down tonight, Julias?”

“It was just supposed to be a smash’n’grab! Get the package, get out, push Tony and Rebecca around if we had to.” He reached up with his only hand and covered his face. “Important information, just didn’t know what it fucking was. There were too many signs to ignore though, so we risked it. Fucking ... Viktor. I trusted him to keep Jack safe.”

“It ... uh ... doesn’t sound like a very well thought-out mission. Not very Invictus-like. No offense.”

“It wasn’t. But the information was supposed to be sensitive to the covenants, so Viktor ... thought it was so important, he’d go himself.”

“Wow, the big man himself thought it was that important?”

Julias gave a slow nod, but she’d set the wheels turning in his head. His eyes drifted forward, but he just gazed into nothingness while his hand gripped at his other wrist. She had no hope of following all the webs he was untangling in his mind.

Julias blinked; she’d startled him.

“I ... I really shouldn’t have.” He managed a small smile at her, and scratched at the back of his neck with his only hand. She could see he was in a lot of pain, but he bore it like a true Ventrue. The stupid bastard.

“Well, thanks anyway.” She got up again, headed for the door, and gave the poor guy a pat on his shoulder. “And ... he ... well...” Arg, why was this so hard? She clicked her teeth together from side to side. “I ... I’ll go.”

When she lifted her hand and stepped to the door, a tug on her arm stopped her. She turned around, and found Julias’s one good hand holding onto hers. His hand, covered in the now-turned-to-ash blood of Rebecca, sneaked its fingers between her long claws. She gave a small tug again, but he didn't let go.

He didn't raise his head, didn't smile anymore, didn't move, just looked down at the floor in front of him, and held onto her hand.

“Sunrise is in an hour, I have to-”

“Stay.” Finally, he raised his eyes to look at her. “Please.”

Man, even a begging Ventrue still looked noble. Part of him looked like a poor boy asking for more food, and another like a defeated king bravely requesting of his conquerer for his people to be spared. Those eyes of his lowered a bit, to where their hands were netted together, and then he looked up to her again. He tugged on her this time, only tightened his hold of her hand, and lead her to sit back down beside him.

Her turn to blink. She wanted him to stay? “As in ... stay the day? Like, sleep here? Like, super defenseless deep Kindred sleep, with no one around to protect me?”

He managed a small chuckle, weak, but real. “The place seals off from sunrise to sunset, and the curtains automatically close. And I ... I could...” His eyes lowered again, where his hand held hers over his knee.

She'd never thought she'd ever see a Ventrue look so defenseless, open ... vulnerable. Broken.

~~Jack~~

Fire was always a frightening beast. It seemed alive and bloodthirsty, even when it was just a candle's flame. But dry fabric like cotton was not the same. Not the same. He could not have known how bad it would have been.

It was like an explosion. The fire filled the air far faster than he could have imagined. The flash of it burned his skin until he could feel it against bone, and he backed away from it like a panicked animal. Fear, so much fear filled him, that for that brief instant the red flame lit up the mill, he could not feel that he'd been cut open from head to gut.

“No. No!”

Jack looked across the way, but all he could see was flame billowing out. Something was in the air, something that caught the flame and whipped it into a maelstrom. He'd heard stories, horrible stories about cotton mill fires, but he had no clue. It slammed him into the garage door hard enough that he was sure something else broke. To the two elder Kindred though, the effect was entirely different. The explosion of incinerating air crashed into them, and through the fury of its swirling red, Jack forced himself to watch.

The two of them only had time to raise their hands in panic, and then they were gone. Their voices echoed with billowing force over the explosion, like dying gods, and then they were gone. They burst into flames, bright and unnatural against the fire, before falling apart to ash, and then they were gone.

It was almost disgustingly quick. Beings hundreds of years old, ancient, powerful, deadly and intelligent, were gone in a flash. A literal flash. The air was on fire and it didn't care about how powerful and ancient they were, it just made them gone. And it was coming for him next.

The walls, the machines, so much of it was old and dry. It was going up in flames after the flash fire, and he had no time. No time to think about it, no time to worry about it, he could only do one thing.

He turned around with one hand holding his guts in, got to a knee, and used his free hand to grab the garage door's base. He lifted.

Agony coursed through him. He could feel his undead insides fight against the weight. It wouldn't have been too hard for a kine, but even as a Kindred, split almost in-half and with one hand, nothing was working right. He started to tumble over, blink in confusion, lose his sense of awareness, before he snapped back to his senses. He pulled harder, and harder, until he heard the creak of moving metal against the roar of fire. More of his blood was pooling out of him. Kindred blood wasn't supposed to do that, but it didn't matter. Ignore it, just move!

At last the door lifted. For a moment, he forgot about his singed skin turned to ash over half his face. The next moment, it was almost enough to blind his thoughts. He stumbled forward as the door rolled up, and fell out onto the pavement. He managed a glance around, silently begging for Julias, but his sire was no where to be seen.

He looked behind him, and found only more of the growing red engulfing everything in its wake, like a demon on his heels.

He grit his teeth. He wasn't going to die to this bullshit. He'd killed Tony. He'd killed Viktor. He was not going to die to some fire that he himself created. Fuck that and fuck them. He was a Ventrue.

Ventrue do not fail.

He started to crawl. Attempts to stand quickly proved impossible, for pain and lack of strength, but that was fine. He didn't need to stand, he just needed to move. More of his dark blood dripped out of him in unnaturally thick globs, but he ignored it. Just move. Just move.

A small chuckle escaped him, quickly regretted for the pain. He was absolutely and completely alone, in what was proving to be a raging fire that was doing more than just burning the building behind him; it was burning the buildings everywhere around him. Still, somewhere in his mind, he refused to accept it. He was a Ventrue. He would not die here to a stupid fire.

So he kept crawling, even as the fire spread out to the buildings in front of him, even as the palettes of wood around him burned, and the trucks and what-the-fuck-ever started to catch fire, he kept crawling. His bloodline would not let him give up.

Boots. There were boots in front of him. He looked up and tried to focus his eyes. A person, someone tall, in a trench-coat. And glasses?

Whoever it was leaned down with a hand outstretched. Part of him wanted to panic and fight, but the hand was empty. He was too tired to fight anyway. Instead, the stranger put his hand on Jack's shoulder.

“Mister Terry? I got you.”

Heh, Mister? His title was Master Terry, just a kid. Julius was a Mister. Whoever this guy was, he was no Invictus. Darkness pulled him under, and all he could think was, what a dumb last thought to have before you die.

Chapter 10

~~Antoinette~~

From the meeting room of her great glass tower in Elysium, Antoinette stood in front of the window-wall, and watched the city burn. Far off in the distance, the night sky had turned slightly orange with the light of flame, as the large fire of the North Side's warehouse district spread. Sirens filled the air, and flashing lights of firetrucks and other emergency vehicles zipped by.

"It burns," she said.

"Quite the sight."

Jacob stood beside her. The old Nosferatu was dressed in some ridiculous garb, old and worn fabric that draped over him, thick and heavy like some sort of animal skin. It smelled like it too.

She managed a small chuckle at his words, and even the eyeless Nosferatu cracked a grin at her in return. He could see without eyes, she knew it, but how he did or what it was like were mysteries she would never know. Mysteries were infuriating and intoxicating to a Dragon.

"Did your raid against Xnomina go well?" she asked.

"Michael and Maria both showed up. I made enough chaos that they stuck around, so whatever is happening out there," he said, and pointed at the giant fire miles off in the distance, "is probably just between Viktor and Tony." He lowered his hand, and she grimaced. He'd left a smudge on her window.

"I cannot see how either of them would cause such insanity. They are not children, Jacob."

“You’re right, but men can get pretty stupid in a pissing contest.” The old Nosferatu gave a shrug, slipped his hands together inside his robes, and moved over to lean back against the window. Ugh, her poor window, so many smudges. “And hey, maybe you got what you wanted. One of them could have killed the other.”

“I can only hope.”

The door opened. She turned, and smiled when Daniel stuck his head in through the door.

The smile quickly faded when he walked in with Jack in his arms. The boy had been split open from face to gut, and half of him was badly burned. Kindred blood soaked him, and bits of it turned to ash on his skin and ruined suit.

“Jack!” She almost jumped to Daniel to scoop the boy out of his arms. Composure went out the window. It was only Daniel and Jacob, one her faithful servant and the other ... well, composure mattered little to the ancient Circle of the Crone member. “What happened?”

“I found only Mister Terry at the site. Mister Mire and ... Beatrice, I believe was her name, were both there, but were leaving to escape the fire.” Daniel stepped forward and adjusted his glasses with a single finger, his voice monotone as always. “If Viktor or Tony had been there, I found no sign of them.”

No Tony or Viktor. Could the fire have eaten them? She could only hope.

Now was no time to bask in triumph though, she had to deal with the boy. He was in torpor, the Kindred coma forced on him by his wounds, but he would not survive with more of his blood escaping by the minute. He was too young to regenerate what would wound even her.

“Daniel. Bring me three from the reserve.”

“Three, Prince? Per-”

“Now.”

“Perhaps the boy can tell us what we wish to know.” Jacob was beside her, and she found herself naturally stepping between him and the boy.

“Perhaps. For now, I am only concerned with saving his life.” She held the small man to her business suit. It did not matter that his dark blood soaked through it, she did not care. All the webs she’d spun, all the deceit and manipulations and carefully laid plans, it all just stopped existing. For just the moment, for just right now, there was only the young vampire in her arms.

“Yeah? What does a Voivode of the Ordo Dracul care with a fledgling?”

She glared daggers into him. “You are not a Dragon, do not call me by that title. And,” she looked down and stroked the boy’s hair, “when was the last time someone cared for you, witch?”

He stopped. She had chosen her words carefully. The old monster, long a witch of the Circle, likely cared for many things, but for someone to care for him was a different matter entirely. So for the moment, she did nothing but stroke the unconscious Ventrue’s hair, while the Nosferatu lowered his eyeless gaze to look at nothing. They were just two old monsters, prime examples of each of their covenants’ most powerful members, and in the end, it meant nothing.

Tony would not understand it, and neither would Viktor, but Jacob knew. He knew all too well.

Daniel returned, and by his hands he pulled three people along with wrists cuffed behind their backs.

“Daniel, would you ... no, it is too late to risk it, even for you. Tomorrow night, please find Julias Mire and explain to him that his childe is still alive. I will return him soon.”

He nodded, and left. Not even the situation before them could spark conversation from her stone sheriff. He'd left the three kine in her care.

“Jacob, you may go. You may stop your raids against the Invictus for now. I will contact you again if your help is required. And ... I—”

He raised a hand to cut off her apology, and moved it to the side with a dismissal as his smile returned. “Don't worry about it,” he said, “happy to help anytime.” Then he vanished. Literally. Even she could not follow his mastery of the hiding disciplines. Such a powerful ally. Such a dangerous enemy.

Antoinette turned to her sacrifices, gave each of them a stern look, and they whimpered in their gags. She was not a cruel soul; she avoided sacrificing kine that deserved life, when the situation allowed. But an elder learned to not be wasteful with their enemies, even human enemies.

She could spare a few souls from her dungeon.

It took only twenty minutes. In twenty minutes, she had bled the three kine dry. It was so simple and easy for her to cut their throats, pin them to the boy's propped-open mouth, and force the fresh blood to pour into his destroyed jaw. Kindred reflex was enough to make even one in torpor drink blood, so when the warm, red fluid gushed into Jack's mouth, he drank it down. Had he been awake, she imagined the young vampire would have found such casual murder revolting. She was glad he was not.

His head had been almost split open to the center, but one kine's blood was enough to close it. The second's blood was enough to restore the giant gash through his chest and stomach; his insides would regenerate throughout the day when he slept. And the third kine was enough to regenerate the massive amount of burned flesh. Much of it had peeled away and fallen to rotting skin before eventually turning to ash, but gallons of fresh blood now pumped through the young Kindred's body and restored his skin quickly.

And then he woke up. There were only thirty minutes before sunrise, but that would be more than enough for a quick conversation.

"Uh ... Antoinette? Er, I mean, my Prince? What's ... going on?" He looked around, clearly confused.

"You survived the fire." She gestured to the window. The small boy hopped off the table and fell to floor. He let out a loud groan of pain, but when she stood up to help him, he'd already forced himself to stand and look out the glass wall.

"Oh ... god ... oh fuck I'm sorry. I had no idea it'd get this crazy."

"You did this?"

"I ... yes, my Prince. I had to. Viktor and Tony, they were going to kill each other, but..." He lowered his gaze, even as he turned around to face her. "Viktor let slip he wanted to be Prince, and that he'd kill you to do it. I said no, and ... he was going to kill me. He ... cut me..." Jack took a sniff at the air, and then glanced over by the door, where Antoinette had laid out the bodies. He was still cradling his stomach where much of him had been ruined. "... were they for me?"

"Do not worry about them," she said, and dismissed the three dead humans with a wave of her hand, "continue the story. Please."

“Right ... Viktor cut me, and he'd ... his eyes ... it was like he'd gone insane. Just because I said he shouldn't kill you. Tony and Viktor were bickering, fighting, and I was dying, and we were in a textile mill, and I had to think of something, because Viktor wanted me dead now and Tony wanted me dead because of you and Viktor taunting him by using me so I set fire to the mill and both of them died in the fire like incinerated dead and—”

“Alright. Alright.” She stepped over to him by the window, and reached down to raise his gaze. “You set fire to the mill.”

“ ... yes.” He looked down at his bloodied body. There were still massive gashes down his flesh, but those would heal while he slept come sunrise.

“To save yourself?”

The boy turned his gaze to the side for a moment. “I ... yes, but...” And then, he looked up to her, and a smile graced his lips. “Not just for me. Um ... he wanted to hurt you, you know? Both of them did.” He touched the huge cut along his chest that had split open his suit. “ ... I didn't want you hurt.”

Oh damn you Jack.

She reached out for her nice leather chair, without a care for the mess of blood on her, and sat down with Jack's hands in hers. “Jack ... Jack I am so sorry.”

“Sorry? Sorry for what?”

“There was no information, Jack.”

He just blinked at her, but that was alright. He was but a fly caught in her web, to her dismay. He did not deserve what her net had wrought.

“That mission that Julias was sent on last month, to acquire information, was planted at my whim. The fire, the fake Vance, everything.”

He blinked a few times more, but she could see his mind start to come to the realization.

“So the information drop ... was all just ... a goose-chase?”

“I needed to create a situation where Tony and Viktor could be dealt with, and where I could blame their deaths on each other.” She looked down just to avoid the pained look on his face, so she stroked his knuckles with her fingernails instead. “My first appearance at Bloodlust was to spark their paranoia. I pulled many puppet strings to lead them both to that location and confrontation. If they killed each other, wonderful, but if not, it was for my sheriff to kill them, and plant evidence they had had killed each other. The plan was not perfect. There were many risks, and gambles, that could have turned the result of this against me instead. But the risk was worth it.”

She would not mention Jacob’s name. The twisted Crone had been the one to plant evidence of Vance, the mysterious information, and the trail that lead to the Carthian hacker Mike. He had even worked with Garry to ensure the trail of evidence would lead to North Side.

She would not betray that trust, but Jack deserved to know the rest.

“And you,” she continued, “killed Viktor, and Tony ... on your own,” a sad chuckle forced its way through, “by burning half of North Side.”

The small Ventrue just stood there, digesting the information. The poor boy. So young, and already she had corrupted him with the Danse Macabre.

“What about ... us?”

When she raised her gaze at his question, she was taken aback. He looked worried. Almost petrified with worry.

“Oh no, little Ventrue.” She pulled him in a little closer. No no, she would not lose this. “Our first meeting was coincidence. I ... please do not think...” She raised his hands to her chest and held them to there. Begging. The Prince was begging, and she did not care.

“So ... you crafted a ridiculously complicated plan just for a slight chance of creating a situation where you could kill Tony and Viktor while avoiding political fallout. Me nearly dying in the process was an unhappy consequence, but us ... together ... is a good thing?”

“Yes. I did not lie to you.”

This time, it was the boy who stepped closer to her. “Then what’s the problem?”

“You almost died, Jack! You were split open and burned. You had to kill your own grandsire, and Tony. Two elders!” What had happened? The young boy was still the same, but changed. Just a little changed, just enough that a warm, confident smile was on his lips, instead of a nervous one. Well, maybe still a little nervous.

He looked down at himself; he was truly an absolutely a mess. The gash, closed but not yet completely healed, ran down his face to his chest and down his stomach to his pelvis. Much of his pale skin was still growing and replacing withered skin and rotting ash. Most of his clothes were ruined, bloodied and burned and split open from neck to hip, and even as he still clutched his stomach in pain, she knew his insides were not whole.

“But ... none of that matters,” he said. Again he stepped closer, until they were almost touching noses, but this time he was the one looking down at her, as she was sitting. “I ... um.” He squirmed, and worry rejoined his expression. “I don’t want to lose this either.”

The boy looked so afraid, sad, uneasy. Did he not realize he was the one who’d been injured, not her? Did he not see that she was the one afraid of losing him?

She let go of his hands, reached out for his sides, and pulled him into her. She even closed her eyes; there was no playful flirtation here, she just wanted to kiss him. Kiss the young man, make all his problems go away, take him, protect him, hold him, and just hug him. He sank into her kiss, so she wrapped her arms around him entirely, and cradled his smaller form against her.

He was hers. Her little Ventrue.

~~Jack~~

He awoke in her office. Thankfully, like Julias’s place, it automatically sealed itself come sunrise. She’d let him sleep there, since it was so late there was no chance he’d get home before the sun came up. They’d only had time to kiss for five minutes before she left for her den, and invited him to sleep in the office.

And he slept like a corpse. Upon awakening, he felt reborn, with his pain gone and insides healed. For once, it was good to be dead.

Alone in the dark of her office. No bodies – mental note, ask about those bodies later – were found, and no Kindred waited him. Instead, he found a suit prepared for him, a note on the table, and a keycard.

“Prepare yourself, and come join me in the ... sub-basement? What?” The note was hand-written, and some of the most god damn beautiful calligraphy he’d ever seen. So, with a shrug, he took the keycard, and looked around. The office had a bathroom, and upon entering, he found it actually had a shower. A shower in an office. Pays to be rich.

Once he was no longer a bloody mess, and wearing the prepared suit, he started his way down the glass tower of Elysium. There were several Kindred and kine working in the tower; which, upon exploring, was actually an office building. Probably for some dummy corporation Antoinette owned, he imagined. The kine, he did not know if they were ghouls or not, so he said nothing to them, but the Kindred he walked by gave him curious glances. Kindred working for Antoinette not even of her own covenant. Scary. One even stopped him, but he held up the keycard and was immediately given passage to continue.

Then there was the guy with the boots, the last thing he'd seen before passing out. With no more fire and insane pain screwing up his vision, he could see the man clearly. Trench coat, glasses, gloves, and a thin, tall, unassuming form. His own inner-beast shriveled at the sight of him though, and that was enough to know who it was. It was the sheriff.

“Sheriff.”

“Mister Terry.”

“I ... owe you. Antoinette told me about what happened, and then you must have—”

The sheriff held a finger up to his own mouth, and glanced around at nearby patrons of the hallway. When he lowered it, Jack found himself a little uncomfortable with the man's gaze. It was so ... deadpan, emotionless, and almost creepy. But then the Kindred adjusted his glasses, and gave a tiny smile.

“Be kind to her, young Kindred. She is more fragile than you know.”

And then he was gone. With nothing more than a nod, the ancient Mehket just walked past him and continued on his way. For a moment, Jack thought he looked like an English professor, or something.

---

Dozens of floors and a few oddly vault-like doors later, he opened a door that would have blocked a nuclear explosion, and stepped into the Prince’s den.

The room was massive. Absolutely massive. Huge black drapes hung from the walls, all the walls, bathing the room in darkness except for several standing lamps that gave off just enough white light to keep the room lit. In the center of the room was the bed, the Prince’s bed. It was huge, easily ten feet both across and long, covered in silk black sheets and similarly silk black-covered pillows, a dozen of them. The sheer size of the room combined with the black motif and white light made for an imposing presence.

The floor beneath him was marble, with dancing dragons and coiling around each other. Where black dragons coiled into white dragons, the marble around them changed color as well. Within the coiling dragons, various symbols were highlighted, symbols beyond his knowledge.

“The Coils of the Dragon, of the Ordo Dracul. There are many.”

Jack froze. Ahead of him, Antoinette was sitting on the edge of the bed and facing him. She was dressed in what was probably a silk nightgown, white, and painfully see-through. It did little to hide that underneath it, the Prince was completely naked. Completely. Naked. He tried to avert his eyes, desperate to look at anything to keep his lust down. Oh look, the lamps had dragons coiling around them too, how interesting.

“Come here, my little Ventrue.” That stern voice had come through again, but she was smiling at him. He recognized that smile, from the first day they talked at Bloodlust. She wanted something.

He dragged himself toward her, but damned if he was going to stare. The Prince was beautiful, beyond beautiful, so naturally he had to do everything his power to not look at her right? He kept his eyes on the floor as he eventually closed the distance between them.

“Am I going to have to guide you through every step of this journey?” she said. She was teasing him, he knew it. Her French accent was subtle and playful, and he knew that she knew that he knew that she was playing with him.

He nodded, and she laughed.

“That is fine with me. Come, sit.” She motioned to the space next to her on the bed. There was a lot of it.

With a nervous sigh, Jack took those two final steps toward the woman, and sat next to her. So close, he couldn't help but see her in the corner of his eye. He was wearing the simple suit someone had left for him in her office, but the woman next to him was wearing what might as well have been nothing.

The Prince turned to face him with one knee pulled up onto the bed. She placed one hand to the bed to lean her weight onto it, and the other drifted up and down her own leg.

“Take off your clothes. Every. Last. Piece.”

Both his hands were on his head, rubbing and scratching at the buzz cut. Wow, just ... what could he do? Say no? But then, why would he say no? He'd killed Viktor and Tony, largely because he knew if he didn't they'd have killed him, but wasn't the only reason.

Glancing at Antoinette with nervous green eyes, he knew. He killed them because he didn't want her hurt.

He reached up and undid the buttons of his jacket, and slid it from his shoulders. The Prince helped him, her delicate grip taking the jacket from him and tossing it to the floor.

With a nervous smile, he took a quick glance at her as he undid his tie and did the same. Once he started unbuttoning his shirt though, he got far more nervous. It was his first time getting naked in front of a woman, but the Prince's word was absolute. Not only absolute, but her smile was so terribly inviting. With shaking fingers, he started to work on his buttons. Each proved problematic, but it wasn't until he undid the last that Antoinette helped him slide the shirt from his arms.

"You are a lean little thing, aren't you?" She ran one of her hands up and down his thin body. He had the body of a gymnast, which Antoinette apparently liked. A lot. Her claws found his abs and ran down the cracks of his muscles with hunger. Her red eyes drank in the sight of his small, tight form.

"Do you ... like bigger guys?"

"A faint memory suggests I did, when I was but a freshly embraced. Tall women were not common, and all the men wanted a little dainty thing under their arm." She leaned in close and put her dark lips to his ear. "That was a long time ago." She gave his earlobe a gentle nibble as her hand slid further down his stomach to tickle around his navel.

"I, uh ... mm." Her hands were on him, touching him, playing with him. Her lips were on his ear, tugging and nibbling. Nervousness and anxiety mixed with anticipation and arousal. She wanted him. The Prince of all Dolareido was chewing on his ear.

"I did not say stop," she said. Commanded.

Jack let out a tiny, nervous chuckle. It was a weird position, but he made it work and undid his pants. Her grip on him was unmovable, her strength unimaginable, and she made no effort to stop teasing his stomach as he slid his pants off. Now, the only thing between him and the sheets was his boxers.

“Now.”

He trembled. That voice almost resonated with power, terrifying, like a hungry tiger looming over a mouse.

A strange mix of exhilaration and fear was coursing through his dead bones. He was scared, but definitely aroused, and the combination made him shiver with excitement when he slid off his boxers.

“Oh, you trimmed it.” She let out a teasing giggle before she lowered her hand to the man’s pelvis. Jack dared not move, but he couldn’t help but turn his head to watch her. She was grinning at him. With a wink, her fingers started to stroke where his pubic hair would have been, but found only soft fuzz where he had trimmed it all off. “You remembered when I said I do not like hair, hmm? Did you expect this to happen?”

“No! No, I ... well ... I hoped.”

“Good. Blush for me, my little Ventrue.”

He gulped. On nothing. Kindred don’t salivate unless they had the blush of life going. He took a moment to visualize, and reached into his blood; it was becoming much easier now. Instead of grasping blindly and hoping it worked, he could find his blood and move it like a limb, and with a little concentration, he could tell it to course through him like real human blood.

Tingling warmth came back to his skin. Saliva came back to his mouth. The forgotten, subtle nuances of a heartbeat filled him. He was even blinking his eyes again to moisten them.

His member had also risen with an erection.

He chuckled nervously, horribly nervously, and managed to look up to her eyes. She was licking her lips with her gaze on his member though, and he almost quaked at the hunger in her stare. Quaking turned to a quiet groan when her grip, tender and gentle, wrapped around the base of his shaft. What little growing it had left to do finished an instant, now as hard as possible in her hand.

He had to take a second to examine the situation, so he looked around with a shy shift of his eyes. He was in the Prince's haven, her lair. The huge room was extremely intimidating; he half expected a metal coffin in its center. The most beautiful creature, and most powerful he'd ever seen, was sitting next to him in a see-through gown, and he next to her wearing absolutely nothing, on a bed. Her hand was around his cock, and she was slowly, so very slowly, starting to squeeze and stroke it.

"I ... I don't know how ... how did this all hap-"

She put her free hand to his lips with a chuckle, kissed his forehead, and then stood before him. Both her hands reached up to her shoulders, and took grip of the collar of her gown. She arched her back subtly as she pulled on the silk to let it fall down her body, and soon she was standing in front of Jack, completely naked.

Jack's mouth fell open. Just ... wow. Her body was unbelievable. Her legs were toned and curvy, her stomach flat, her waist thin and her hips wide. Her ass was plentiful, and her breasts were absolutely enormous, with large, dark nipples of the same tint as her dark lips. Her skin was pale, more than other vampires', and her long, white hair reached down to her hip.

The fact she was a foot taller than him only made it all the more intoxicating a sight.

Then she too blushed, and his mouth fell open further. Her dark nipples and lips turned red like her eyes, and her pale skin turned into beautiful white alabaster. It was like looking at painting.

When she saw that her nudity had struck him dumb, Antoinette giggled — an actual giggle — and crawled back onto the bed beside him. She laid down on her side, propped her head up on one arm, and slowly rubbed her legs together as she waited for Jack's eyes to eventually reach her.

Jack's eyes had a long journey to make though. They started at her feet, which had nails painted black, before sliding up the length of her long, very very long legs. They looked so smooth. His eyes soon reached her hips and between her legs, where the smoothness of her body was uncontested. Not a hair to be found. She wasn't lying about disliking body hair.

His eyes continued moving up her body, but came to a standstill at the sight of her breasts. With her on her side like that, one breast was squishing the other into the silk sheets. They were heavy, natural, and sagged slightly with their volume and mass, like teardrops. The sight of them collapsing to gravity only made him groan in arousal.

Jack melted back onto the bed. It was truly soft, obviously covered in the finest of silks and a mattress definitely made of the latest in memory foam. He could even see the mattress contour just slightly to the shape of her hips, her torso, and the weight of her breasts. He had tried to land on the bed so they'd be face to face, but her greater height had offset him and now he found his eyes just above her nipples. Her areola, puffy and swollen, were only inches from his chin.

“Tell me, little Ventrue. What do you think of my breasts?” On her side and propping her head up with her elbow, her free arm reached out and took Jack’s hand. Her sharp fingernails drifted down his forearm to find his fingers, and there she guided them up to her body and placed his open palm to the underside of her breasts.

Jack froze. He was doing it. He was really touching her. God her breast was soft.

“I ... my Prince ... I...” No words to be found. He still didn’t move, but with the huge mound of her breast filling the cup of his palm, he couldn’t help but caress her skin with his fingertips. The feel of her breast molding to fit the shape of his hand with its heavy softness made him groan.

“Ah, my little Ventrue, always so honest.” She licked her lips and slid his hand higher until his palm was pressed against her engorged nipple. It was hard against his palm, and Jack’s eyes went a little wide at the sensation of it pressing into his skin.

“I want you,” she continued, pushing his palm toward her until her breast’s ample size overflowed his hand, “to play with my breasts as you desire. Do as you will.” With that, she let go of his hand, and placed her claws upon the back of his neck to rest there. She waited.

Jack was sure he’d died and gone to heaven. Died again, maybe? With her gentle grip on his neck, he drifted across the blankets toward her longer body, and finally brought his face to her breasts.

What’s a man to do when an amazing, huge pair of breasts, so soft and heavy, are just inches from his face? Jack found himself moving without telling himself to, and his lips touched the topside of her bosom. His kisses pressed into her skin, and he let his chin sink into her a bit as he found the sheer size of her breast enough to let his face rest against.

Unable to contain himself any longer, his lips moved further down, and he wrapped his mouth around the large, swollen nipple and areola. A gentle mewl escaped Antoinette. God, how could such an unobtainable goddess be letting him do this? Not just letting him, encouraging him. She pulled his head closer to her breast, enough that much of it overwhelmed his lips, chin and nose with its softness. If he had to breathe, he'd be worried.

He brought both palms to her breasts, but with his head unsupported it had to fall to the blankets. That was alright though. Her other breast, squished under its sister, was just as inviting and soft, and he delightedly wrapped his lips around its nipple instead. Even on his side, he managed to wrap her breast with both palms, and gently squeezed and kneaded its size. With his palm trapped underneath it, its size completely hid his hand and buried his fingers.

A touch of lips on his buzzed hair shocked him from his breasts obsession, and he looked up to see the source. Antoinette was smiling down at him with that softer, more elegant, more natural and honest smile he was growing fond of.

She closed her eyes and rolled onto her back with her hips still turned to face him. Her hands raised and ran through her white hair, now splayed out across the black sheets, like a painting of white radiance against night's black. With her body mostly flat against the bed, her breasts slipped free of Jack's hands and lips, only to flatten against her body with their natural weight. The volume of them dipped to the sides of her torso, mostly toward Jack, and the sheer size of them combined with the angle made them seem like the most comfy pillows imaginable.

She pointed a finger at him, and curled it toward her breasts.

Jack groaned, almost growled even, and pulled himself over her. Sitting down beside her, he leaned over and put one hand next her so the other could cup the side of one of her breasts. He pushed its weight back up onto her torso, where it slid lightly toward her neck from how she was laying down. God, the size of them. He leaned back in to devour it with a little more aggression this time. The way her breast moved and rolled with its size over her smooth, perfect body was too much for the little Ventrue. He just had to have her, and with tight lips around her nipple, he started to suckle.

Antoinette outright moaned with this, and brought both her hands out to hold his head from behind.

“Never have I seen a man so engrossed with a woman’s bosom. Like a child,” she said, but her voice was anything but insulting. No, she was encouraging him, even pressing him harder to her breast. Her leg nearest his slid over to nudge against him; she was beyond smooth, like the silk they were laying upon.

“You have warmed me, little Ventrue.” With a grin, she put both her hands on Jack’s temples and raised his head. He was almost drooling. “I trust one such as you is well educated in the anatomy of a woman?”

Jack blushed bright red, but nodded. He knew she knew everything about him, including his lack of experience with such things. His only experiences worth mentioning had been with her after all. But a man could learn a thing or two from diligent internet research.

“Good. Make me cum.” She giggled when his eyes went wide. “And you may only use your mouth for now. Come, slowly now.” With that, she leaned back even as she pushed his head down toward her belly. Once she had pushed him far enough that his eyes were over her pelvis, she slowly, teasingly spread her milky white, toned legs apart, and laid herself bare.

Jack, with a gulp and groan, slid over one of her legs to get between them. He got down onto his stomach and leaned in close, but nothing could prepare him for the unusual beauty of the scene. Antoinette's vulva were smooth, just like the rest of her, and the lips of her pussy were of the same dark tint red as her lips and nipples. It was exceedingly erotic against her alabaster skin. More so was how little beads of her juices coated her pussy's lips, and she periodically gave her muscles a slow but hard squeeze that forced out a couple more drops of her juices.

Antoinette just reveled in waiting.

He was terrified. He was excited. He was shaking with fear. Or was it arousal? He couldn't tell anymore. A mighty goddess had her legs spread and was asking for him to pleasure her, and one wrong move could upset her. But ... he really, really wanted to touch her.

He leaned down to her center, and with a very large degree of nervousness, placed a couple kisses around her inner thighs. Satisfied, quiet mewls from the Prince eased his anxiety though, and he pushed into his kisses more. Her skin was so smooth, always so smooth, but her thick legs were toned and strong. It was a lovely feeling, that soft skin against hard muscle beneath his lips.

His kisses drifted closer to her pussy, but he took his time. Antoinette was not some schoolgirl. She was ancient. She wanted him to go slow, and so did he.

Finally, his kiss found her labia. They were wet. Very wet. He blinked in surprise at the reaction her body had given to his touch. While the blush of life had brought her body's living functions back to the surface, he hadn't expected her body's response to be so strong. Her juices moistened his lips, and he sighed into her body. When his kisses eventually found her clitoris, erect and swollen, Antoinette outright moaned.

"Careful Jack. Gently ... slowly... , " she said. Her claws drifted down to her stomach and down her thighs.

Jack tried to contain his excitement. She was enjoying it. The ancient succubus was enjoying his touch. He beamed with pride and grinned into his kiss upon her clit. She'd said use only his mouth, so he hooked his arms under her legs and put his hands onto her stomach while he eased his tongue against her moist cunt.

Her hands found his and netted their fingers together. She tickled his palms with her fingernails and let out more, quiet moans. When he let his tongue slip under her clit and pressed it to her body, her grip on his hands tightened. He could feel her muscles clench, and more juices leaked from her onto his lips, even onto his chin with her arousal.

When he gave her clit a gentle little suckle, her grip on his fingers tightened sharply. Apparently, he'd found something she liked. He smiled into his kiss before sucking her swollen button back between his lips again, this time where he kept it with a constant but ever-so-gentle suckling.

He stopped for a moment, and the Prince gave a tiny whimper. Oh god the sound of her voice, making tiny whimpers because of him? He really wanted to devour her harder, but she said slow, she liked slow. Slow was making her mewl. So slowly, he explored the whole of her labia. He probed at her pussy's clenching muscles with curious licks, and sucked her lips between his own, just to hear the quiet purrs of pleasure she made. It was when his lips trapped the entirety of her clit though, that her sounds grew so erotic it was making his cock hurt between him and the bed.

He sucked a little harder this time, and pushed with his tongue against the budding, swollen flesh in his mouth. The pressure was apparently too much for Antoinette, her hands grabbed his head and pinned him to her. He looked up from between her legs, down the valley of her body to her face, but could not see anything but her chin. Her head was reeled back, and her grip was firmly on the back of his skull, preventing him from retreating.

She had grown quiet, but more juices had joined the mess between her legs. It dripped from the little Ventrue's mouth and wet the sheets. Her legs spread further, and her hips pushed her slit up against his mouth in rhythm with her clenching muscles, until more of her fluids dripped down her skin. Her orgasm was silent, not a squeak or moan to be heard, but her body spoke volumes as her legs started to shake and her hands did not let go. Jack knew better than to grow too zealous with his licks during her climax, but he could not resist another long stroke of his tongue along the folds she was pinning his head to. That managed to pull a gasp from her, and another drop of her cum hit his tongue before trickling down his chin.

“Ah ... that was delightful.” At last the mighty Prince released him, and Jack put his palms to the sheets to sit up before wiping his lips dry.

“... wow.” He sat there and watched her, and she watched him in return. She kept her legs spread, and her hands returned to her breasts to softly knead the mounds. She was massaging her breasts in front of him. His member felt like it was going to explode.

“Now, little Ventrue, I want you to use only your hands.”

Fuck yes. He was free to touch her, to open her, to feel her. Anxiety was replaced with genuine excitement by this point.

His left hand reached out and rested against her leg for balance, and his right ran its fingertips up and down the Prince's soaked folds. She chuckled at him, but soon her juices had coated his fingers, warming them and moistening them. With curious experimentation, he caressed her labia from side to side, and traced the lines of them up to the hood of her swollen clit. It only took a touch of the underside of the little nub to make Antoinette let out a quiet mewl.

“Am I some new land for you to explore?”

“Sorry! I just ... never done this, and ... you’re so beautiful. I want to...”

She reached down between her legs with both her hands, and with a slow, teasing motion, she spread her lips for him. “Explore.”

Jack gulped. Her juices were leaking out of her, and he could see the opening of her pussy clench down in anticipation. It was all so wet and inviting. His index finger grew bold and pressed along her folds before sliding toward the opening, and with an almost fearful slowness, he slid his digit into her squeezing body.

God her insides felt amazing.

Antoinette chuckled and squeezed down on him in response, and Jack found himself groaning again. Her insides were so warm, rippled with bumps and grooves, and each clench she made only highlighted the curvature. When he turned his hand over so his palm faced upward, he curled his finger and found a swollen bump, slightly rougher than the rest of her flesh.

Her sigh of content was his signal. He’d found her g-spot, and he smiled to himself. He sneaked in his middle finger to join his index, and the tightness of her walls increased, as did his pressure on the bump of her flesh. His other hand went flat over her pelvis, just above her pubic bone, and when he pushed down on it, he could feel his fingers pressing up from within her.

The little man did as commanded. He pushed his fingers up against her g-spot, and with his other hand, pushed down against her pelvis, trapping her between his hands and massaging the sensitive flesh between. Her pussy dripped her juices down his knuckles, and her ass raised when he pushed harder up against her.

He stopped. She gave him a small pout, but he had to feel more. He sank his fingers into her as deep as they could until her folds swallowed his last knuckles, and he rubbed his fingers up against the soft flesh of her cunt from beginning to end. With his other hand pushing down, he could feel every groove of the softness of her squeezing, tight muscles, milking at his fingers. Antoinette wiggled her hips to meet his exploring fingers, and she mewled in rhythm with them.

He started to finger her in earnest. Instead of just curling his fingers, he started to push his whole hand upward, and the motion gave his two fingers inside her enough force to almost slap against her g-spot. It was enough force to make a sloshing sound of her growing juices, and pull even more moans from the mighty Prince. He got faster, and faster as his actions only made the Prince grow louder and louder. Just to hear her voice make such sounds was intoxicating, and watching her heavy breasts tremble along her body even more so.

Eventually his hand was forced to stop when her muscles squeezed down on him like a vice. He let her relax, and only with gently curving fingers did he continue to massage her insides. Her orgasm had her quaking, and her hips rocked up and down while more of her juices leaked over his palm and down his wrist. She went silent once again — it seemed to be what she liked to do when she came — but the pleasure on her face was obvious.

He had no idea this ancient creature was capable of such sexuality, but her body responded without hesitation or embarrassment to his touch.

Eventually, her legs slowly closed around Jack to embrace him between her quivering thighs as her body calmed with orgasm aftershocks. He could still feel the shaking of her large thighs against his sides, and when he slipped his fingers from her, she gave another husky mewl.

For a moment, he froze. Her red eyes were staring at him, more wide than usual, and lips were curled into a predator’s grin. Then she reached out, took his shoulders, and eased him over onto his back beside her. He was just a feather to her, and even though she was gentle with him, he couldn’t move an inch.

With a slow motion, she got up onto him, and straddled him. She was so tall he almost disappeared between her legs, with her weight now on her knees around him, and her pelvis hovering just over his.

“I ... don’t know if I’ll-”

Her finger found his lips, silencing him. “Do not speak.”

He gulped. The tall, gorgeous goddess reached down, and wrapped her other hand around his cock. It had several drops of precum on it already, and she chuckled as she gently eased the skin down to expose his glans. So swollen it was almost painful.

It only got worse when she aimed the member up toward herself, and began to lower her weight onto him. The hot, soaked folds of her cunt found his cock’s head, and he groaned with the powerful sparks of pleasure her squeezing muscles coaxed out of him.

“Watch,” she said. He forced his eyes to open, and just drank in the sight of her. She lowered herself slowly, with a light rocking of her hips from side to side, complete with a hard squeeze of her muscles around him whenever she dipped from left to right. It was a dance. The Prince was dancing for him. She put her hands on his shoulders, pinning him down and so he was helpless to escape her as she worked her body to devour him to the hilt.

When her folds found the base of him, she squeezed him again, so hard and tight it made his jaw drop and a low moan escape him.

“Do not think our difference in size a problem, little Ventrue.” She leaned forward so her elbows were against his chest, her breasts against his neck, and her lips over his eyes. “You feel delightful inside me. And I trust I am a comfortable sheathe for you?” While still leaned forward, she raised her ass higher, squeezed tight the whole way up, before lowering herself back down with a slowness that had him almost whimpering.

“I-”

She cut him off with a finger yet again, and gave him an almost angry look. Dangerous. He wasn’t supposed to speak.

She sat up, and let the weight of her body bury him inside her. Then, as if performing art, she reached up to comb her fingers back through her hair, arched her back to jut out her breasts, all the while easing her hips back and forth against him. Her juices were soaking him, coating him, as if rewarding him for her earlier orgasms.

Then she leaned forward again, took his shoulders, pinned him down, and started to work her hips in a figure eight. An actual figure eight, so that each curve outward of her hips was met with a light forward thrust. He was mesmerized. Her heavy, beautiful breasts hung over him, swaying back and forth with their weight, but it was the glorious movement of her wide hips he couldn’t look away from. She was just so god damn perfect, and skilled; each forward shift of her body was met with a squeeze of her cunt in just the right way to make the tingling bliss start to build between his legs.

The Prince took the boy’s hands into her own, and pinned them against the blankets over his head. “It has been many, many years since I have delighted in this dance.” Her breasts were swaying directly over his head now, as she was leaning far more forward to hold his hands down over his head. He just stared with jaw open. “How would you like to cum, hmm? I could take it from you roughly.” She raised her ass, dragged her soaked lips along his length, and slammed her hips back down. The bed creaked, and he struggled to not push his hips up to meet her.

It took everything he had to not cum right there.

“No, I do not think so. You, my little Ventrue, are not that sort.” She grinned again, a devil’s grin, and leaned down even closer. His hands were still pinned, so he couldn’t even lift them to touch her, but she pressed her body down into him so her breasts overwhelmed his collar and neck, and he had to look up to see her with her head past his. “You are a methodical creature. Deliberate. Paced. You would prefer slow.” Her voice got deeper, husky, and she arched her back to push her breasts into him. “Very slow.”

Oh god. She was squeezing him so tight, and now she was easing herself back and forth along his body, with the whole of her pressed into him. Her hips were pushing into him at just the right angle to massage the length of him while milking the swollen head of his member. She was edging him closer and closer, and each time he made a little groan or whimper, she let out a satisfied sigh.

Over the course of painfully long minutes, the rising pleasure was too much. Warm cum poured into him, and after a powerful wave of bliss forced his muscles to clench, it poured into her.

“Oh,” the Prince said. She sat up so she could look him in the eyes, but still leaned forward enough to keep his hands pinned down above his head against the bed. “Cumming inside, are we?”

He managed a small nod, even as he struggled to keep his eyes open while his muscles tingled with each squirt of cum that escaped him. She chuckled down at him, but did not stop easing herself back and forth in her slow dance, and tight grip of her insides. The eye contact was overwhelming; something on his face, in his expression maybe, was making the red-eyed goddess gaze at him with almost animal hunger. It made each clench of his muscles, each spark of bliss between his thighs and along his length feel almost unimaginably surreal. How could this be happening?

But then, she squeezed him yet again, and his own fluid started to trickle out of her and onto his body. It was most definitely happening, and the mighty goddess continued milking him until his eyes rolled upward. She kept a perfect pace of tight, massaging, hot muscles along his cock, that each squirt of his cum was almost painful, and the pleasure made his breath come out in pathetic pants.

When his orgasm finally started to pass, she pressed her chest to him again, and kissed his head, even as she continued to gently rock her hips. “You are so adorable, little Jack.” At last, she let go of his hands, and put her weight into her elbows against the blankets so she could hug him, and to his delight, continue to rock her hips forward. Those few final drops of his cum were squeezed out of him in the rocking motion, and he trembled underneath her with each one. She was milking him, squeezing him in a rhythm to stir those last few sparks of orgasm aftershocks down his cock’s length and into his thighs.

She finally sat upright completely, and lifted her hips from his body. His member slid free, and more drops of their mess dripped down onto it. It only made her smile.

God damn that dark red, ludicrously seductive smile.

“You may speak now,” she said. “Did you enjoy yourself?”

He looked up to her with wide eyes, totally perplexed.

“You are too cute, Mister Jack Terry.” She rolled over, and Jack gave a small gasp of shock when she turned him around to face away from her as if he weighed nothing. Suddenly they were spooning, but she was the large spoon, and he was tucked snug against her pelvis. She propped herself up on an elbow, and leaned forward to rest one of her breasts along his shoulder.

He was the small spoon, and she was using his body as a breast rest. She even sighed warm noises into his ear, and hugged him closer to her to her stomach. All he could do was snuggle back into the crevice of her body, let her take control, and just melt into her.

“So, how do you feel Julias will respond to all of this? You killed his sire, and now you are my lover. We may have put him in an unusual situation. He is likely to replace Viktor on the Invictus council, so he will be forced to make difficult decisions.” Her hand drifted up and down his side, his legs, his abs, and circled the lines of his chest. She really liked to touch his muscles, he guessed. He’d have to thank Julias later for all those grueling nights being forced to exercise and eat well when he was still alive.

“He doesn’t know that we’re ... lovers.” He hesitated on the word, but it only made Antoinette laugh softly. He’d never imagined using the word before. “Should I tell him?”

“Yes. He is your sire. Do not betray his trust.”

“He doesn’t know I killed Viktor either...”

“That is perhaps more difficult, but I know the other Invictus right hands wanted Viktor killed.”

“Viktor did not return from his latest Torpor the same man. He was not always so cold or destructive.” She let out a weary sigh and continued to stroke Jack’s chest. “I once considered him an ally, but both his childe and I saw who he was becoming. Julias and his companions will be thankful ... though do not expose my plot to him, if you please.”

“So ... what do I tell him?”

“You killed Viktor because he threatened your life, and my own. It is true, is it not?” She leaned down and gave him another kiss, this time on his earlobe. “At the time, that is all you knew.”

“That is true ... sneaky.” He grinned to himself. He did not like half-truths, but this one was harmless. The Prince merely gave Viktor and Tony the rope to hang themselves with. Look at you Jack, already dancing the Danse Macabre.

“Do not think that is the only reason you are here in my bed, little Ventrue.” She gave him a hard pinch on his nipple, and he let out a yelp. “I found you intriguing even when we first met. How could Julias have picked such a small, feeble creature for his childe, I thought to myself.”

“And then, when we met at the Bloodlust, I knew why. You, my little Ventrue,” she leaned down again and grazed his ear with her lips, “have quite the spark in you. And that spark is mine now.” Her lips encased his lobe again, and he shivered against her with delight.

“I was so terrified of you ... I still am.”

“And yet, that only seems to spur you on.” She hugged him closer to her with her hand on his chest. Her grip was strong, damn strong, immovable even, but Jack didn’t struggle. He shivered a little at the feel of her naked skin against his back, and the thought of how she was literally the most powerful, deadly thing in the entire city and then some, pushing her naked body into his.

“Tell me,” she said, “is there a gift you would like, for your actions against Viktor and Tony?”

A gift? He hadn't really thought about it. He'd assumed his current position, literal and figurative, was reward enough.

“I uh ... don't know. I never really did want for big things. Julias chastised me for lack of ambition.”

“Well, you are Ventrue now. Ambition is in your blood. Come, whatever sneaks its way into your mind,” she said. Her fingers kept tracing the indentations of his abs and chest, like he was a canvas for her to paint.

“Can ... can I sleep here today?” he said. His hand rested against his stomach where Viktor had sliced him open. The wound was gone, not even a scar, but the scars of Rebecca's stabbing stayed. Had he really been through so much? He could still remember the feel of his insides spilling, bone breaking, skin burning. Next to Antoinette though, the images faded.

“To sleep next to me?”

“I'm sorry, I just ... little scared lately. Rebecca got me, and then Viktor ... but ... I really like it here, with you. I know it's ... I know Kindred don't normally ... yeah it's too much to ask. I- “ Her finger found his lips and silenced him.

“You have earned my trust, little Ventrue, and I understand.” She guided his head to turn and look at her, and he found himself shocked. For a moment she looked sad, but her eyes drifted down and her smile opened. “You may sleep next to me today. And future days.” She hugged him close again, and this time she kissed his crown and nestled her head atop his.

“It has been a long time,” she said, “since I have trusted anyone but Daniel, and he is only a friend. That you would waste a gift on something so little, just to be closer to me?” For a moment, he thought her voice was caught in her throat, as if ready to cry. She didn’t though. He knew she wouldn’t, perhaps she even couldn’t, ancient as she was. She hugged him closer still though, and sighed with relaxed joy into his ear. “Are you trying to woo me?”

“ ... yes.” He smiled. The Prince was moved by his request. To him it seemed such an obvious thing. He’d killed for her, fought for her, like a fool in love; was it so strange that he’d want to spend time just sleeping next to her?

“Be careful, little Ventrue. If anyone found out you were by side during the day, it would create opportunities for enemies. Kindred are powerful things, and some can control your thoughts, your body, even your memories.”

“And I have been Prince of this city for decades. It is not my safety that worries me, it is yours.”

“ ... then I’ll risk it.” Fool in love. Yep. If there was one way he was going to die, it’d be head over heels in love.

Antoinette let out another sigh of contentment, and rolled Jack toward her, onto his back. Before he knew what was going on, she had locked her lips against his, and half of his body was covered in her white hair as she leaned over him. Her eyes were closed this time, and her hands were bracing her weight against the sheets with her breasts pressing to his chest. His own hands drifted up her arms and then along her back, and his eyes eventually drifted close in the kiss as he succumbed to her touch.

“You are under my protection now, Jack,” she said between kisses, “and I will kill anyone that threatens you.”

His eyes opened again in surprise, but hers were still closed, absorbed in the sudden intimacy. Her words scared him to all hell.

... he kinda liked it.

Chapter 11

~~Julias~~

A sleeping Kindred is not really sleeping. Instead, they are nearly in torpor, an undead coma. When the sun disappears, they wake in an almost jarring pulse of energy from their dead body jamming vitae through their limbs. Older Kindred, like Julias, had long learned to rise with awareness and efficiency.

Younger Kindred like Beatrice rose with a startle, as if someone had injected adrenaline straight into their heart. They had fallen asleep together on his couch when dawn demanded they slumber, and when she awoke, she punched him with the sudden snap of a frightened animal.

“Ah! Triss!” He got up from the couch and rubbed at his jaw. Good, his new hand was there to rub the chin; it’d regrown over the night without issue. He was definitely hungry now though; regrowing a limb was no small thing.

“Shit! Julias, fuck...” The Nosferatu got up from the couch and walked toward him. “Hey, got your hand back.”

“Yes.” He took a moment to look himself up and down. Christ he was a mess, torn up suit and covered in Rebecca’s ashes.

Memories flooded him like acid. The fire. Rebecca. Viktor and Tony. Jack.

He stumbled back until he was forced to catch his weight against the counter behind him. “Fuck. Jack. I have to go look for him.”

“Come on, I want you to come too.”

“What? Why?”

“Why not?” He had to find Jack. Kid was probably dead, but that didn’t mean he wasn’t going to try his hardest to find him.

“Speaking of whys. Why did you save me? Why did you follow me?” He threw questions at her, riding the anxiety of his situation.

“I ... because I was following the right hands cause Garry told me to.” She didn’t look up, but instead hooked her fingers together and shuffled her feet.

“And saving me?”

He looked at her, opened his mouth to say something, and stopped. Not the time, definitely not the time. “Just ... I could use your help. Please?”

“Alright. Yeah, let’s go. Got any Mehket friends to help with this?”

“There are plenty in the Invictus, but this is heavy shit. We need to be discrete, and I’d only trust Natasha with that. We don’t have time to get her though, we need to get going.” He moved and talked, threw off his suit jacket and threw on a coat to cover the mess of his clothes.

“Julias, I know you have to find your childe, but slow down and think this through. There was a massive fire there less than twenty-four-hours ago. It’ll be crawling with kine and you know the Carthians and Invictus will already have ghouls investigating. Someone will f-”

“It doesn’t matter! I have to look, I have to look!” He yelled the words. He didn’t mean to, but his voice just came out with enough volume that the Nosferatu almost jumped back. A touch of guilt quickly passed; the only thought in his mind was Jack. It was pulling at him. Blood inside was pulling at him, making him move, forcing him to go faster. He’d heard of the bond between childe and sire, but he had no idea, no idea at all.

He swung his door open, and stopped dead.

A tall, thin man was standing in the hallway, with an unassuming, passive face, complete with glasses befitting a Languages professor. He had one hand in his trench coat, and the other was reaching out to knock on his door; Julias had opened the door just before he had managed to. Whoever he was, the man had gotten in without being buzzed in.

When realization kicked in, Julias’s inner-beast almost screamed in shock before it started to whimper silently, terrified. It took all Julias’s will to not jump back in fright. The sheriff was at his door.

“... Mister Mire.” The sheriff, Daniel, pulled back his hand to adjust his glasses before slipping it into his coat. “And Beatrice.” He gave them both a small nod.

The sheriff of Dolareido was giving them nods, like this were regular happenstance. It was most definitely not regular happenstance.

“Mister Terry is safe. He and the Prince are enjoying the evening together. He will be returned to you soon. Before dawn, maybe.” With that, the sheriff gave another nod, and turned around.

And then Julias’s hand was on his shoulder and turning him back to face him. He heard a gasp come from behind him, Beatrice, and even he realized what he just did was insanely stupid. But whatever the fuck was pulling at him did not care.

“He’s ... alive? And with the Prince? Why the Prince and not with his sire!”

Daniel barely reacted. He didn’t smile, didn’t frown, didn’t even brush Julias’s hand away. The sheriff, most powerful Mehket in the whole damn city and one of the only two Ordo Dracul in it, just looked back at him through his glasses.

“I suggest asking Mister Terry when you see him next. May I go?”

Julias’s hand twitched. Part of him wanted to throw the sheriff around, but he forced himself to let go. The fuck could he do to the sheriff anyway? “ ... thank you.”

“Good day, Mister Mire.” The sheriff gave him a small nod, and left with his hands in his pockets and movements so casual it seemed unreal. He pressed the button for the elevator and waited for it, didn’t even glance Julias’s way, until the door parted and he disappeared inside.

Julias slowly closed the apartment door, and turned around. Beatrice was standing by the counter, one of his stools knocked over by her feet, and her crocodile-teeth mouth was hanging open. Even the Ventrue’s mouth was parted in shock.

“Jack and the Prince? Jack, little itty bitty Jack, and tall, deadly Antoinette ... enjoying the evening?” Beatrice said.

“ ... yeah.” What the fuck have you gotten yourself into now, kid? “Um, yeah.” Julias reached up, ran his fingers through his hair, and eased himself down onto the arm of his couch. When he looked out the huge window of his living room, he could just barely see the Prince’s grand tower, in the center of her Elysium in the distance, with the lights of a building that never slept.

“Yeah? That’s it, yeah? Details man, details!” The Nosferatu had her claws against her lips like they were sharing juicy gossip.

“ ... The Prince and Jack are apparently ... dating.”

Beatrice collapsed. For a split moment, he thought she’d gone into shock, but the feisty woman was rolling on the floor, laughing like a hyena, claws reaching out to hold onto something while her body shook.

“Hey, come on. This isn’t funny.”

“Fuck yes it is!” She would have started to struggle breathing, if she were kine, but a Kindred could laugh ad nauseam.

“Well, at least the kid is alright, and far as I know from what he’s told me, Jack and the Prince are pretty close.”

“Friends in high places, man! Ah this is great. I’ll have to ask him for details myself.” The Nosferatu got up with a bounce, and sat down on the couch. To his surprise, she reached out, and pulled him off the couch arm to sit down next to her. “The fuck you still look so sad for?”

“Do I?” He reached up and touched the corner of his lip. “Just Jack, I guess, getting into such dangerous things so quickly. I may have really screwed up that kid’s life.”

“Come on!” She punched him in the arm. Always with the hitting. “Jack’s alive, good thing. Rebecca’s dead, fucking good thing.”

“ ... and there’s this thing with my girlfriend. I didn’t realize how much I scared her when I used my abilities on her friend, and I couldn’t figure out how to apologize because of how complicated the situation is. And all I really want to do is let her know I’d never betray her trust, but I have no way to prove it.”

The words sort of just fell out, some shitty, poetic confession, like a juvenile Daeva. He hadn’t really meant to say them, but now that he had, he raised his eyes and watched Beatrice’s.

It was her turn to look sad.

“Fucking hell Julias. I tore you up, and you’re the one apologizing.” Still looking away, she slid across the couch, and put her head against his shoulder. “Just ... you were right, ok? I was using that excuse to cover up typical drama bullshit. Can we just ... forget it? I trust you, alright? I mean, you were actually going to let Rebecca go cause she played the damsel in distress for just a second.”

He frowned. “Is that why you saved me?”

“I was on the fence about it, when watching you two fight.” She lightly dragged her claws up and down his arm. “But, seeing you stop fighting just cause ... yeah. You’re too damn soft, Julias.” To his surprise, she buried her face in his shoulder, and hugged his arm against her.

He could hardly believe what he was seeing, when looking down at the warrior woman holding him. She looked so gentle, caring even, and she continued to hold and pull and nudge into him with her forehead.

“ ... you’re welcome.”

Awkward silence.

“I, um...” He blinked a few times and tripped over the words on his tongue. “I know I said som-”

“I said forget it. I don’t want to dig up buried shit just so we can let out our feelings.” She raised her head again, and he found himself shocked yet again. The Nosferatu was grinning at him. “I like you a lot, and you’re my boyfriend. That’s that.”

What happened to Beatrice? Did seeing him get his ass kicked in by Rebecca affect her that much? There was that moment, that one stupid moment, where the Daeva had asked for mercy; he froze then. Triss seeing that he really was such a stupid, stupid man was apparently a great thing.

He chuckled. “Oh so you’re agreeing with my terms then?”

“Yes.”

She gave him another punch in the arm, and just when he was going to let out a yelp, she grabbed his face and kissed him. Before he knew what she was up to, she’d already slipped onto his lap, straddling him, and was holding him by the back of his neck and head with her claws.

“Are you su-”

“Fucking course I’m sure.” Her lips found his again, and with a sinister chuckle of her own, she rubbed some of her giant crocodile fangs within her cheek against his cheek. “We got a good thing going, and I was stupid to think a big softy like you would do anything to screw me over.” She sneaked in another quick kiss. “And thanks for not letting your friends fuck up Mike. Stupid nerd is smart, but just a dumb kid.”

Before he could say anything else, she already had her lips on his neck, and her lap was grinding into his. She'd blushed, heat was starting to seep from her skin, and he could feel the warmth of her saliva on his collar.

He was no fool. When a beautiful – if perhaps also monstrous and scary – woman is on your lap and demanding sex, you give her sex. He put his hands on her back, let his fingers drift down her spine, and also blushed. The Nosferatu wasted no time once he did, and within moments she had her claws slipped under his coat by his shoulders and was sliding it off.

“Christ we're both a mess, we should-”

Then his phone rang.

“You better ignore that.”

“I ... it's the triumvirate.” He reached down into his coat pocket and pulled out the smart phone; the custom ring was the most horrible sound he could possibly imagine right then.

He tried to not smile at her. Her pouting was as effective as a sad crocodile.

“Mire here.”

“Sir?”

~We've heard no word from Alder Honors, or you and your childe.~

“I’m sorry sir.” He got up and started to pace around, but his eyes just glazed over everything. Shit, no Viktor? No Viktor ... no Viktor. “There was a huge fire, Mister McDonald. I was separated from my sire. Alder Viktor Honors is ... the Alder could be dead, sir.”

The line went quiet. Julius raised his eyes to Beatrice to find the Nosferatu had pulled herself up to sit on his counter, with her legs dangling off the side. He knew she wouldn’t make a sound; if Michael or Maria found out she was listening, they’d make his life hell, and hers too.

~Mister Mire, please come meet us at the Xnomina HQ in one hour.~

“I’ll be there, Mister McDonald. One hour.” He tapped his thumb against the end button, and walked up to the counter next to Beatrice. Once he put the phone down, he put his elbows against the counter and looked over at the woman.

“ ... maybe.” He managed a slow nod, and shifted out of his coat before hanging it up. Did he feel sad? Was he relieved? Was he happy? He couldn’t tell. Viktor was a scary man, but he’d always been a reliable man. Decades of knowing his sire was there, an anchor for the Invictus and a terrifying, powerful elder Kindred, just gone in a single night.

Not just that. Viktor was his sire. His sire. Trying to process the conflicting feelings was just too damn hard to do right then.

He started to make his way down the hall to the bathroom. “I have to meet Maria and Michael at Xnomina in an hour. I guess I’ll see you later?”

“An hour? Fuck that man. That’s more than enough time.” She hopped down from the counter and walked after him. Within moments, she'd already taken off her top and was kicking off her pants, even as she grabbed his hand and pulled him into the bathroom. "Shower-sex quickie. Let's go."

Despite himself, his old smile came back. The damn Carthian wouldn't understand what it meant to lose a sire, not a real sire, and he was kind of thankful for that. He couldn't pull the sorrow card, and at the moment, he didn't want to.

If there was anyone who'd keep him from being a sad, stupid man, it was the Nosferatu in his shower.

"Mister Mire." Michael was leaning back against the conference table, and Maria was looking out the window with her hands hooked behind her back. The ghost woman managed a small peak over her shoulder at Julias, but her expression was bewildering.

She looked happy. Or at least as happy as a recently killed girl dragged from the riverbed could manage.

"Mister McDonald ... Madame Turio."

"We've scoured the site of the fire, Mister Mire." The Gangrel folded his arms across his chest. "With what little was left of it after the kine had their way during the day, we managed to piece together at least one thing. From the ashes, we know at least one Kindred died. We haven't heard from Alder Honors."

"And," Maria said, voice raspy as per usual, "Madame Vola has reported that both Tony and Rebecca are missing."

Julias gave a small nod. If Natasha said Tony was missing, he believed it.

"My childe and I both escaped, and with how fast the fire spread, it was a very close call." A small smile managed to sneak onto his lips. "I did kill Rebecca though. That I can confirm." No need to bring Beatrice into this.

McDonald gave a hearty chuckle, reached out, and patted him on the shoulder. "Good form, Mister Mire. That bitch was a constant thorn in my side. But I am sorry about your sire."

"... are you, sir?" Julias said.

Maria turned around then, and slowly made her way toward him. With her wet, black hair covering her face and clinging against her white dress, her approach gave him the distinct impression she was going to reach out and pull him down into the abyss.

"What do you mean?" the Nosferatu said.

Sometimes he forgot how scary Maria and Michael could be. Viktor Honors dominated any room he was in, but Michael and Maria were elders too, hundreds of years old and both with a long history of murder and Invictus servitude to their names. Now that the small ghost woman was only a foot in front of him, staring at him with an almost sinister gaze, his inner-beast started to shrivel.

But it was too late now.

"Madame, I ... there's been more than a little talk about Alder Viktor."

Michael gave a small snort, not too dissimilar from a wild hog's. It fit the large man.

"My sire was one of the oldest Kindred known. He..." Julias forced himself to make eye contact with Maria. "And he was not the man he was when he sired me. After his long torpor, I ... he was-"

"Instead of another torpor to calm his bloodlust, he was going to start drinking Kindred blood to sate it," Maria said. When Julias's jaw dropped, the Nosferatu gave a shrug. “It is the way of things, Mister Mire. We grow old, and we eventually succumb to the curse. Alder Honors was not the first partner we’ve lost to time.”

Michael eased himself down into a chair at the table. “Something had to be done, but you know as well as I that the Alder was no push over. He was...” The big guy struggled with the words, chewed them up in his mouth, and eventually settled with a sigh as he put his hands on the table.

“He was going mad, but his unlife was wholly dedicated to the Invictus; we were unsure of what to do.” Maria took a seat opposite of Michael, and netted her fingers together before resting her elbows upon the table with her chin on her knuckles. “A brilliant actor, Alder Honors kept his fits of paranoia and delusions well hidden. Those delusions may have very well proved his undoing in this meeting with Tony.”

After all that, the small ghost woman could only give a small shrug, and settled her eyes on Michael. “It all burned. We will never know the details.”

Jack. He would know the details. He might be able to fill in some of the blanks.

“The Invictus in Dolareido have survived decades because of the power of a triumvirate, Mister Mire.” The Gangrel tapped his fingers against the wood, but his animal eyes were staring long and hard at Julias. “Not only are you one of the oldest ancillae within the Invictus, but you are the most powerful and intelligent of them. It would be both practical and fitting if you would replace your sire on the council.”

Holy shit. They wanted him on the triumvirate. He was still just an ancillae, with at least another fifty years to go before the power of elder was in his grasp, but the highest seat of power of the Invictus in Dolareido was being offered to him.

He looked down at his regrown hand. He knew he was powerful, Jessy and Natasha confirmed it, and he knew he was smart. Part of him had just assumed it was Ventrue pride, but the animal and the ghost of the Invictus council apparently disagreed.

“This is not the formal invitation, as we will have a banquet for such matters of presentation. But this is the moment of truth, mighty Ventrue.” Maria reached out to the chair next to her and pulled it out for him, complete with a beckoning motion. “We have need of younger blood on the council, and we both agree that you are the best candidate. Do you accept?”

He looked between the two of them. Julias was a great actor and poker player. He’d learned from the best, and could read anyone, but these were Invictus council; their gaze was cold and pure. It was like reading steel.

“ ... I do.”

~~Antoinette~~

It was just the two of them in her bed, quiet, deep in her tower, and holding each other.

Truly, it was her holding him, but the boy did not seem to mind. He was nervous at first, the poor thing, like a mouse before the tiger. All Kindred contained within them an animal, a beast that spoke in the unseen and the unheard, and the boy’s was terrified of hers, while hers was basking in the glory of superiority.

But there was more. That demon inside, disgustingly poetic as it was, was accepting the young man as more than just someone to force into submission. She found herself pulled to him, hugging him tighter just because she had to. What the boy felt inside, she could not know, but he sank into her and returned her embrace with the most precious sighs of contentment when she held him.

Sometimes she worried if her tall stature, greater age, or superior might would suddenly crush the boy's intrigue, as it had done to others before, but he returned her kisses with the same nervous joy as that first night in Bloodlust. Only Jacob could fully understand how lucky she genuinely was, and she did not envy the Witch his solitude.

With a warm chuckle, she sat up and started to comb her hair over her shoulder. When she saw Jack sit up and found his face frozen in a shocked, amazed expression, she blinked. She followed his gaze, and realized he was looking at her breasts. The silk had fallen from both their torsos, leaving their bare skin exposed. His eyes only made her smile.

“Already you lust for me? Were I not informed, I would assume you still kine.”

“I ... just I ... um.”

Neither of them had performed the blush of life again since their last bout, so their skin was pale, lifeless, and their frames slightly thinner. It was not enough to dissuade the boy's eyes though, and that made the Prince smile all the more.

How would she treat this? Hundreds of years ago, she could faintly remember such a time with Tony, when her sexual wiles had controlled him, when her teasing and use of sex as manipulation had been a source of amusement and confidence. She did not want that. She would not create another Tony.

All the mistakes she'd made with her childe crept into her mind. What could she do differently this time?

“... Jack.” She put a hand to his chest, and his eyes raised to hers. Lovely, green eyes that bared the boy's honest soul so completely, it was sometimes painful for her to see. Now, she craved it. “I want you,” she said, and gently pushed on his chest until he was laying down once more, “to come to me when you wish for my touch.” She leaned over him, still sitting up and with a hand on his flat stomach, her heavy breasts hanging over him. “Do not be shy with me. Whenever you wish of it,” she said, and traced her fingers along his abs, “and if I am available, I will gladly share it.”

The boy Ventrue quirked a brow, more confused than ever. He did not know why she said such things, and that was fine. Her history with Tony was painful, and unneeded. She would do things better this time.

“Of course, my Prince.”

Like a resonating note, the words rung clear and unmistakable. It was so obvious a barrier, and one she would have to throw away.

“ ... call me Antoinette.”

The boy’s eyes widened all the more.

“And I do not lie, little Ventrue, when I say I will gladly share my touch, my bed, even Ashley and Julee.” While still leaning over him, sitting, and the boy on his back, she had one hand free to roam his body. She took his wrist, and placed his hand upon her other arm. “Whether you wish to be in my embrace, and rest against my bosom,” her hand reached for his other wrist, and this time raised it to place his palm underneath the weight of her nearest breast, “or share in any carnal delight you can imagine.”

The boy froze, eyes wide, jaw dropped. Apparently, her honesty had robbed him of speech. She could no longer hold back her laughter, and she let herself fall against him so her torso pressed to his. She put her cheek to his and snuggled against him, whispered sweet nothings to him, and held him under her with gentle hands. A few moments later, the boy finally responded, and raised his hands to hug her.

“Damn, um. Yes, my ... Antoinette,” he said. “Yes, gladly. And, uh, you can ... well ... yeah, you can do anything with me, any time. Not just physical too, you know?” He gave a tiny shrug and dopey smile, like joyful surrender.

Surrender. It was such a horrible word, one that a Kindred would never use as anything but insult or tragedy. Kindred were lone predators; their societies and covenants were created to force cooperation, not because of it. But to see the boy just give into her so completely, honest green eyes smiling up at her, his hands on her back and almost afraid to touch her, was overwhelming.

Part of her knew her Daeva blood was twisting this into obsession, but another part of her knew there was more. So much more. Dusty old words, long buried and forgotten, would have to be unearthed to make sense of it.

“I have only fifteen minutes time before I must prepare for my first meeting,” she said, “but I am sure I can satisfy you in less, if you wish.” She sat upright again with her weight on her hip, leaning over the boy, palm pressed to the blankets, free hand caressing his chest.

“I ... really? Like ... just like that?”

“Of course.” She gave another warm chuckle, and this time, leaned further in until her breasts were hanging over his face. The boy, to her delight, had proved to be quite enamored with them. They were heavy, very large teardrops, and if not for her Kindred body, would have been a source of pain and frustration. She had long since learned to enjoy her great height and curvaceous figure though, even if some others found it intimidating instead of arousing. The fact that Jack found it to be both was delightful.

And when she blushed for him, the sight of his beautiful eyes opening even more wide was intoxicating.

She mouthed 'blush' silently, and the boy was quick to also perform the blush of life. Such a young man, that once his body took on the color and signs of a living human, his erection returned in seconds. With a chuckle, she watched his fake heartbeat cause his member to rise against the blankets, higher and higher, until she peeled the sheet away to reveal the naked boy. The way he squirmed, the way he struggled against his shyness, the way he avoided eye contact but kept sneaking glances at her naked body, it was all deliriously arousing.

She slid down the blankets a little further from him, got onto her hands and knees, and with an arched back to prowl and emphasize the curves of her form, she slipped between the boy's legs. He watched her like she were some fairy tail creature, those wide eyes of his struggling to grasp the reality of what she was about to do.

She got down onto her elbows, laid herself on her stomach between his legs, and took his member with one hand to point it up to her face. The boy sat up enough to put his weight on his own elbows, but otherwise did not move, paralyzed by her. Good.

Her lips found his shaft, and with ginger kisses, she brought her lips from the base of him up to the tip, while her hand eased the skin down to expose its head. The pink flesh of his glans was so swollen, she gave it a kiss as well, and Jack trembled under her touch. Another kiss, and again he shivered, with eyes drawn and mouth parted to moan quietly.

Jack was no supreme lover, or ladies' man. He had no large history with women, no well of experience to draw on. He was just a boy, barely a man, and that meant everything she did and everything she would do to him was a new moment of pleasure he had never experienced before. When she finally wrapped her lips around the whole of the head of his cock, that alone was enough to make him shudder, and when she suckled on it while drawing her lips back across its skin, he let out a blatant moan. Hers were the first lips he had ever felt on his body.

His inexperience was addicting.

She wanted to edge him toward orgasm. The sight of his eyes, eyebrows raised in pleasure, was making her mad with need, and she wanted more of that. She wanted to hold him down and slowly, over agonizing minutes, milk pleasure from him while gazing into his eyes.

And she would, for the moment. There was not enough time to really indulge, but there was enough to have a little fun. So she watched the poor boy squirm while she eased her lips back down along his ripe and swollen length, and yet again gave it gentle suckles while sliding her lips back and forth around the tip's base edge. While she did so, her hand around his member lightly stroked up and down, and her other sneaked down to find his testicles to softly tease and caress the skin with her fingertips.

The poor boy. He was already twitching with rising pleasure. His muscles were flexing, and his shaft was pulling against her lips with its gentle spasms, announcing his orgasm.

So she stopped.

He let out a relieved sigh, but his eyes spoke volumes. Begging. He was silently begging her to continue.

She kissed his cock in small, teasing pecks that raised from the base of him up to his glans once again, where his twitches brought out a couple drops of his precum. With a playful grin, she gently licked it off. Jack's eyes closed and his head rolled back in obvious bliss, but she gave the base of his shaft a hard squeeze, just hard enough to hurt a touch.

"Watch," she said, her voice soft but firm.

He raised his head, forced his eyes open, and watched her with those begging, green eyes. In turn, she watched him, gazed at him, grinned at him while she tilted his shaft to point toward her chin, and then eased her mouth down upon it. Her tongue danced along its underside while she slipped inch after inch into her mouth, before finally bringing her lips to the base of him.

“Oh ... god...” He squirmed all the more, and she could feel him twitch inside her throat. To her delight, he did not break eye contact, despite how much his eyes tried to roll upward when she tightened her lips around the hilt of his length.

She stayed there for the moment. Air was no concern, and the boy's struggles were too scrumptious to resist tempting. Her tongue slipped out from between his flesh and her lip, and with a devious smile, slowly licked the underside of his cock where it joined his body. He started to pant, even moan quietly, but just as his member began to twitch once more, she stopped, and withdrew her attentions.

When she raised her head, another drop of precum had risen to the tip of his member; she kissed that one away as well.

“I'm ... so close...”

“Tell me then, little Ventrue. Where would you like to cum?”

“I ... what?”

She laughed. Oh Jack Jack. The boy could not see further than five seconds into his future, so she wrapped her hand around the base of him again, and gave more teasing kisses to his swollen glans. He was just on the edge of orgasm, and she could keep him there until it hurt if she wished it.

“Would you like to cum on my face, like this were some horrible pornographic video? No, that does not seem like you.” She leaned forward, wrapped the whole of his cock's head in her lips again, and pulled them away in a suckling motion. His tortured, quiet groans were making her wet. "Perhaps on my breasts? Perhaps inside my mouth?"

His eyes were looking at her, over her, around her, and they were almost panicked with the question she'd posed. She drew his attention back to her eyes with yet another warm kiss to the underside of his length, and then the same along the swollen tip.

"... lips," he said. The Ventrue brushed so brightly she felt he might burst.

Of course, she thought. She'd spent the past ten minutes showing off how she could milk pleasure from him with her lips. Her lips were quite luscious and red when she blushed, and warm.

So she gave him that wicked devil smile she had long mastered, and put her lips over his glans again, but this time just enough to wrap half of it within her massaging embrace. The blush of life kept her lips warm for him, wet, inviting, and she gazed up at the boy with bedroom eyes while she kissed and suckled. All the while, one set of fingers caressed his testicles, and the other gripped the base of his cock with relaxed strength. Slowly, gently, she squeezed a little harder, worked her hand up a single inch, before sliding her grip back down.

He came in seconds.

The boy didn't look away. Such an obedient young man, even when the pleasure was so obvious on his face that it was practically pouring off of him. His panting was laced with moans, quiet ones that were close to whimpers, and when she gave his glans a slow suckle, she could feel she was walking the line of pleasure and painful stimulation.

But when his warm cum started to trickle out of him, she couldn't stop herself. All it took was a gentle kiss, just the smallest one, and the boy trembled in her grip. The first gush of his cum was a sharp spurt, and it splashed over his stomach. With a chuckle, she put her lips over the head of his cock, and this time made sure to catch the new waves of cum that flowed out of boy. The new trickles of his cum were slow, thick, and she kissed them to let them coat her lips in white. Warm wetness dripped down and onto her hands, pooling between her fingers working his length, and when she wrapped the whole of her mouth over his glans again, she let more of his cum slip free of her lips.

She held him on the edge of that pleasure pain threshold, lightly moaned onto his cock while she suckled the final bits of his cum from him, and let it fall down his length. For several minutes she coaxed those final bits of pleasure from Jack, milked it from him with centuries of practice, until the boy had practically melted into her bed.

“Sorry I ... such a mess,” he said. One of his hands reached out for his stomach, and he ran a finger through a small pool of his cum.

“One of the joys of being Kindred. When using the blush, your fluids like saliva, and cum,” she emphasized the last word with a smack of her soaked lips as she sat up, “will fade to nothing but the faintest trace of dust in a few minutes.” It was already starting to disperse. Delightfully convenient, it also meant the mess of his fluids over her hands and lips was fading.

“Oh. Then ... thank you.”

Thank you? Ah Jack, silly boy. His awkwardness was enough to nearly have her in fits of laughter. “You are quite welcome. You do owe me though, and I expect you to repay me tonight, when you return.”

“Return? Am I going somewhere?”

“Indeed. I have meetings for the next five hours. You should visit your sire during that time.” She stood up and combed her hair over her shoulder, between her breasts. Her blush was still pumping fake life through her, and it kept her aroused. Very aroused. She wanted to pin the small man down, kiss him, hold him and slide his cock into her and squeeze him until her own juices were dripping down her thighs. How long had it been since she had felt such ravenous desire?

Later, later. For now, she relaxed her vitae and the blush ceased. Her skin thinned, paled, and her nipples no longer swelled with need. Fake hormones stopped pumping, saliva faded, and sexual desire along with it. Patience. She could indulge as much as she wanted later.

“I’m not looking forward to that conversation,” he said.

She walked around the bed and stood over it beside him. He was such a young creature, and even now when he looked up to her, he couldn’t hold eye contact for long before he looked away, a little shy, a little scared. So she leaned over him, ran a finger down his lips, and let her breasts sway directly over his head. His eyes opened so wide.

“Julias is a good man, and he deserves to know. Take care of your sire, and he will take care of you. And, if you do this,” she said, and leaned down further to let her one of her heavy breasts nudge into his cheek and nose, “I will make sure you are rewarded.”

She couldn’t help but enjoy some teasing, just a little.

She waited.

Her legs were folded, her hands on her lap with fingers netted, and her gaze on the door of her meeting room. The same meeting room where she had killed and fed three of her kine prisoners to her new lover. A small smile managed to sneak its way onto the corner of her mouth before she suppressed it.

Now was not the time for smiles. Now was the time for dominance.

Jacob entered the room first. With only the two of them, there was just a small enough window to share a knowing glance, and even a nod. Behind him though, Garry stepped into the room. She truly wished the man would put on a nice suit instead of his jeans and other lowly clothing; if only he knew how easily he could pass for a dark James Bond. Such a waste.

Then there was Michael, a Gangrel like Garry but no where near as delightful; he was just a brute, a smart and dangerous brute. Behind him was Maria, ghost woman, and the sight of her always made Antoinette's withered heart ache. The few Nosferatu in her city often had trouble finding comfort in others, due to their disfigurements, and Maria's was one of the worst she had seen.

For a moment, she expected Viktor to follow in behind her, but her tensed blood settled when, instead of her most dangerous enemy back from the ashes, Julias walked through the door. Implications abound. Julias must have been summoned to replace Viktor, and if they thought him worthy of joining the meeting of primogen, it meant he was already promoted to a member of their council. It had only been twenty hours since the fire, which meant both Invictus had been hopeful of such an event. Good. That meant that Michael and Maria, whether they wanted to be or not, were her allies.

All her puppets danced beautifully under her strings.

When Tony did not follow, she was forced to look down. In a single second, memories of their time together, faded and worn in the centuries, were strong enough to flash before her. She could remember the smart and suave man at the dawn of the Romantic era; he was a painter.

Part of her even wanted to cry, but she pushed it aside. Tony was ash, and not only were they all better off, her new lover was his killer. She could wrestle with her conflicted emotions later.

If Daniel noticed her distress, he made no show of it. As per usual, he stood there quietly by her side, bless his damned soul.

“My primogen,” she said, and motioned for them to sit at the glass table, “I have heard that Tony and Viktor were at the source of the fire last night. And they are not here. I can only assume the worst.” She said it slightly too fast, slightly too obviously, with just a touch too much enthusiasm. Of course, she did it on purpose, and they knew it. It was enough to let them know she had a hand in their deaths, and that was plenty.

“... Indeed.” Maria with her raspy voice was the one to talk first. How often it had been Viktor and Tony to talk first, to bitch and whine in their own, elderly ways. It was nice to hear the tiny woman speak, raspy voice included.

“You can guess why we have brought Mister Mire then,” Michael said, and he gestured to Julias while he sat down.

Garry chuckled. “Not exactly a long time to mourn your twice dead. And this kid is who you brought to replace him?”

Julias gave Garry a tiny smirk. Jack’s sire was barely a century old, a wolf in a den of tigers. But the man was intelligent, and more importantly, wise.

“If Viktor is truly dead, then ... it is a shame. We saw what was happening to him. To take such a long torpor is a gamble,” Jacob said.

Julias said nothing, but leaned back in his chair and shifted his gaze from elder to elder. What must be running through your mind now, Ventrue? To hear the most powerful Kindred of all Dolareido lament the trials of their age?

“We believe both Viktor and Tony were caught in the fire.” Michael leaned in and put his elbows on the table. “But enough of this bullshit. We all know those two were going to going to keep getting in each other’s way, and do more damage to the peace we’ve managed to secure here.” Then, to the Prince’s silent delight, the Gangrel gave her a thankful glance. “Dolareido is one of the few cities without active conflicts between the covenants. Viktor ... Alder Honors and Tony would have ruined that.”

“ ... perhaps they would have, Mister McDonald. If I had known Tony would become an anarchist, I would have...” She bit her tongue hard enough to spark some pain, enough to snap her out of sad memories. For all her control, a small crack had managed to slip into her voice. “We’re quite the sad sight for our new primogen. I am sorry, Mister Mire, for this sorry state of affairs.”

The tall Ventrue glanced between the group of them before offering a nod. “Alder Viktor Honors was my sire ... and despite that, I agree, we are all better for his passing. I understand your feelings, Prince.”

Garry gave another chuckle, and Jacob right along with him. Antoinette could tell those two had more in common than they realized. But then, the two exchanged a quick glance. A tiny thing, just as subtle as any of them. What sort of dealings had those two shared beyond the ones she knew? Her sheriff could find out later.

Julias’s glance though, was on her, and it was not a quick one. His gaze lingered on her, met her eyes, and when she looked back at him, the young Kindred did not break. The other four had started talking about the pressing matters at hand, such as the fallout of Tony being dead and his followers now leaderless, but Julias did not join them. He continued to look at her, and as the seconds grew, his eyes were unwavering.

Evidently, Daniel had delivered her message about Jack.

She gave him a nod of her own. Jack was not a topic for the primogen, and the less they knew about her relationship with the boy, the better. But Julias was the boy's sire, and he deserved to know she recognized that.

The two of them, she and the Ventrue, were most definitely going to have to talk.

~~Jack~~

There was some time before he had to get back to Elysium, so he could spend the day sleeping with Antoinette.

He couldn't stop grinning. Sleeping with Antoinette. Sleeping. Antoinette. God damn he was sleeping with Antoinette. Not just the Prince, but Antoinette. Curvy, tall, busty, smooth and classy and sexy and gorgeous and beautiful Antoinette. Scary, dangerous, smart, witty, terrifyingly powerful and even manipulative Antoinette. It was all so mesmerizing.

He almost twirled while waiting for the elevator. The ding of its arrival was enough to shock him out of his high though. He was here to see Julias, and as much as he was high on bliss, he did not look forward to explaining to his sire what had happened. It'd taken him some time to work up the nerve to come here, hours even. Antoinette had meetings for much of the night, and instead of just waiting for her in her bed, he got up and started wandering around the city dreading this conversation with his sire.

When he stepped onto the elevator and watched the doors close, the weight of realizations crashed into him. The last time he was on this elevator, it was to talk to Julias about his sister, but that conversation never happened. He wanted to talk about how horrible that fucking felt, and how that and Mrs. Pavala and everything about his actions were crushing him. Then there was Viktor, who he'd killed. His grandsire. And then there was Antoinette, who he was spending more and more time with, while spending less and less with the man who he owed everything to.

When the doors opened up again, he froze. What was he supposed to say? How was he going to say it? Oh, sorry Julias, I killed your sire, and shit has been kind of rough for me, but I'm sleeping with the Prince now so everything is good?

Fuck it. He knocked. Since being embraced, he'd taken to just walking into Julias's, but now he had to knock; the door was a literal and figurative barrier. What would Antoinette say? How droll.

When it opened, he suddenly found himself looking at the floor. He could see Julias's shoes. Such nice shoes.

"Jack! Kid, I am damn glad to see you ... why the knock?"

"Julias, I ... man, I..."

"Jack? What's the problem?" His sire put a hand on his shoulder and pulled him into the room.

Jack managed a glance around. Same place but it felt so damn different. Julias apparently caught onto his unease, and ushered him over to the couch to sit down.

"You ok Jack? When we got separated, everything went downhill and I had to take care of Rebecca."

Rebecca. The memory of that bitch stabbing him was like scar tissue on his brain. “Did you get her?”

“Indeed I did.” Julias gave him a light punch in the arm. Where’d he pick up that quirk? “She’s dead. Soon as she was ash, everything suddenly caught fire though. I tried to get to you, but Beatrice—”

“The Nosferatu was there?”

“Yeah. She was the one who actually killed Rebecca. But don’t tell anyone, no need to get her involved.”

Jack gave a small nod. He’d definitely have to thank shark-mouth.

“You were in that warehouse with Viktor, and Tony I assume. What happened? That fire just exploded and took out half the district.”

Antoinette said Julias would not be angry that he’d killed Viktor, but it wasn’t the same as being in front of the man and actually having to say it.

“I ... set the fire.”

“You did what? Fucking Christ Jack, a day after I showed you what fire does! Someone like Viktor might—”

“That was why.”

“That was why? You...”

Jack looked up from the floor just long enough to see the realization dawn on Julias’s face.

“I said the wrong thing. When the two of them were arguing, Viktor said something about becoming Prince, and I said I didn’t want him to hurt Antoinette. And Viktor just ... he just lost it. He cut me nearly in half, and ... then and Tony and him started fighting, and ... and I had to do something, and...”

Silence. When Jack managed another peak, Julias was sitting in the exact same position as him, elbows on his knees and head hanging on slouched shoulders.

“You killed Viktor then.”

“ ... yeah.”

“Tony too?”

“Pretty sure, yeah...”

More silence. His sire must have been thinking. He’d raised a hand to hold his chin, but his face was pained.

“Then ... I am sorry Jack.”

“You? Sorry? I killed your sire Julias.”

“Only because I was putting it off.”

Jack raised his head. “Really?”

Julias copied the motion. “Viktor was ... he needed to die. He was...” His voice caught in his throat, and he coughed it out as he leaned back. “Shit, everyone was looking for Viktor to die. More than one Invictus wanted him dead, and they were looking to me to do it. He was old, his last torpor had twisted him, and his bloodlust was growing beyond what human blood would satisfy.”

“Antoinette said that too. Kindred can drink other Kindred blood?”

Julias grabbed him on the shoulder, and both squeezed and twisted him hard enough to hurt and face him. “Never do it. Ever.

That's why I was so worried about Antoinette and you, cause she had so many opportunities to slip you her blood, and then you'd..." The pain on his face was enough that Jack felt it on him. "You become addicted to Kindred blood, and at the same time, you become enamored with whose blood you drank. Drink it a few times, and you become so unbelievably infatuated, you'd put Romeo and Juliet to shame."

"But ... but Viktor-"

"That changes when you're so old, so powerful, that kine blood just isn't enough anymore. Then Kindred just become your new food source, and Viktor was fast approaching that day."

Jack ran his fingers over his buzzed head. "Fuck. So someone could just slip me their blood and ... fuck, Antoinette could have done that easily. Shit, Antoinette is older than Viktor! She could already be past that day."

Julias's grip relaxed. "Dolareido is lucky to have Antoinette as its Prince. Dragons are fucking mysterious, and one mystery they have is they manage torpor very well; her last torpor quelled her blood lust very well. And much as I hate having a Dragon as Prince, and a Daeva at that, the Prince is damn smart, and ... stable." He managed a sad chuckle, and braced his face with his hand. "If Viktor was Prince, he'd have turned it into a dictatorship. And they never last."

"Fuck, he sounds like a monster."

"... Give it a couple hundred years, Jack." His sire got up then, went around the counter, and started to pour them both some glasses of blood. "Put yourself in my position, and me in Viktor's. Could you do it?"

"No ... no I couldn't. God damn it Julias, I'm sorry I-"

“It’s all for the best, Jack. I’m just ... I couldn’t bring myself to think my old sire had fallen so far, and I left you in his protection. You came out on top though, and that’s why I sired you. Tenacious kid.” He took a sip, and the sorrow mostly faded from his old gaze. “I’m damn proud you’ve come so far in such a small amount of time, even if it paints a bullseye on your back. But you got friends in high places now, and not just the Prince.”

“Not just the prince?”

“The council has asked me to replace Viktor on the triumvirate.”

“Damn dude! Wow, holy shit what a promotion. Fucking ... like ... I don’t even know. What’s that change for us?” He hopped up off the couch and jumped onto a stool by the counter. The conversation had quickly turned from sobering to joyful, and that was a fucking awesome change.

“Now,” the tall Ventrue said as he slid Jack a drink, “we make the changes.”

~~Beatrice~~

The catacombs seemed more empty than usual.

Of course, the catacombs of the old cemetery were always empty. Not even the stupid punk kids showed up to vandalize it anymore with graffiti, not after she was through with them. Still, it really did seem more empty than usual. The other Kindred didn’t hang out there, they knew it was her hangout, and the only Kindred old enough to give her trouble didn’t give a shit about some nasty old catacombs.

The only reason it felt empty was because she wasn’t used to it anymore. She stood there, leaning against a shelf of rock, covered in skulls, and she marveled at them. Dolareido practically belonged in France; the joys of having an ancient French Daeva as the city's Prince. Normally she enjoyed the hilariously edgy, brooding nature of a catacomb deep in the dark, spooky cemetery of the city, but it was just so damn empty. She'd gotten used to hanging out with Julias. That was the problem.

Problem? She grinned to no one. It wasn't a problem. Sure, she was a Nosferatu and that meant she'd never be able to hang with the kine, not openly, but if hanging out with Julias taught her at least one thing, it was to not judge a Kindred too quickly. Maybe she should start hanging with the other Carthians more? Hell, maybe she should hang at the Elysium more? All the neonates like her hung out there regularly. No ancillae or elders to scare them; they all had more important business.

She clicked her teeth together, and dragged her claws carelessly along the stone walls in the dark. "Would it be so bad to make some friends?"

"A friend you can trust is worth any hell."

She spun around with such panic, her claws cut through the stone and sent bones flying. Someone was in the tomb with her. Some dude she couldn't smell or see.

"The fuck! Who the fuck is there?" The darkness held no secrets from a Kindred. She crouched down, claws drawn, and crept forward through the black. No one waited for her, no presence, no smell, but then she could hear a chuckle. Whoever this fucker was was laughing at her.

"The fuck do you think you're doing? Nosferatu, Mehket? Hiding in the shadow? Come on out so I can rip your fucking face off." Big words, Triss. If she couldn't find them, then they weren't a pushover. Whoever was in her lair was a master of the shadow disciplines; she couldn't even smell him.

“I understand you tore Rebecca apart. I find that impressive.”

She spun around again. The bastard had gotten around behind her, but still she couldn't see anyone. “Fuck you! No one else was there, so how would you know?”

“Garry told me.”

“You heard us talking.”

Talking. She'd heard them talking? “ ... on the roof, after Tony gave Mike the shit to crack.”

“So Garry wasn't just talking to himself.” Secrets on top of secrets. Fucking Kindred. Even Garry was playing that stupid game. “So who the fuck are you then?”

And yet another chuckle. “Guess?”

Guess, right. Fuck him. Still, some knowledge was better than none. It was a man's voice, and the only dude Mehket she knew powerful enough pull this in-your-face shadow shit was Daniel. And the sheriff didn't strike her as the playful type, unlike this fucker who was taunting her.

That meant a Nosferatu, a powerful one, and if it wasn't Maria then it was...

Shit shit shit shit shit shit. She started to back up away from the voice, but then his Joker laugh started up behind her. This time, there was something there, someone wrapped in a dirty old cloak. Someone with a bandage wrapped around his eyes. The old Witch was eyeless, one of the more fucked up Nosferatu deformities, and how he managed to get around she had no idea.

But he was there, arms and legs hidden inside his cloak, eyes covered, and walking toward her with a smirk. His hood was pulled back, and his grey and black hair looked so very odd on a Kindred. Vampires rarely sired someone older than in the prime of their youth. He even had a couple wrinkles.

“Get the fuck out of my hideout.” Hollow words, her inner-beast was practically frozen in fear. Hell, she’d be pissing herself if she was kine. Jacob was as old as the fucking Prince. Older.

So she took a swing at him. No thought to it, no considering the ramifications, no worries or that too-many-mind bullshit. No one got to just fuck with her, elder or not.

Jacob fell apart like black mist. Even her Kindred eyes could not follow it in the black, and it wormed around in the dust and bones of the abandoned catacombs like something out of a god damn Dracula movie. That was not a trick innate to Nosferatu blood.

“Did you just fucking laugh at me like some comic book villain? Hold still so I can—”

And then Jacob had his hands around her wrists. He was behind her, his grip was insane, and it felt like her arms were going to get ripped out of her shoulders. It didn’t get any better when a foot was planted between her shoulder blades, and her body was driven into the stone earth. The crunch of a ruined nose was a warning sign before the pain hit her too.

“You are a fierce creature. I like that.” He pulled on her arms more, more things went pop, and she screamed.

“Fuck you! Fuck you and let go so I can kill you you fucking god damn fucking stupid—”

“I came here to test your spirit, Beatrice. You may have noticed that Dolareido is a nice place, with little Kindred conflict, especially now. And you know? I’m starting to get bored.”

Oh my god the fucker was going to talk her death. She’d rather he just rip her arms off.

“So, I came here to make an offer.”

“Offer ... and if I say no?”

“You won’t say no. Why? Because I can tell just by looking at you neonate, that you’re sick of the mind games of these elder Kindred and their bullshit. You’re sick of the century-old games, and how these old tigers are playing you all like puppets for their own benefit. Even Garry, barely an elder, is already playing those games, and you fucking know it. He risked Mike’s life for it. And you? You are sick of being on the sidelines. So excuse my ranting,” he pulled harder on her arms again and coaxed more screams from her, “but I know an opportunity when I see one.”

He let go, thank fucking god. She rolled over, and forced her hands up to grab her shoulders. Kindred blood quickly got to work, forcing undead tissue tight and making sure her joints were aligned. But she wouldn’t let herself stay exposed, undefended, not with this nutjob standing over her. She started to get up, expecting to get pinned again, but Jacob just watched her with that stupid, weird, goofy smile.

“Opportunity?”

“To put a little chaos into their plans, Beatrice. To put the tigers back on the front lines, so they’re the ones that take the heat for their stupid, god damn plans, like I did with Viktor and Tony.”

Oh fucking shit.

“Garry, Michael, Maria, Antoinette,” he said, “and the others. Instead of just letting these fuckers play puppeteer, how about we sew a little chaos in their bullshit?” The fucking ancient Nosferatu witch was disturbingly persuasive.

“Wait. Others?”

~~Damien~~

All the kine were walking around with their handhelds and their smartphones and their bluetooth devices. Not only that, most of them were wearing revealing clothing designed to function in the cool air. Winter was approaching, and Dolareido wasn’t very far North, but it wasn’t exactly warm either. Despite that, the kine were whoring themselves out on the streets. High-class hookers and dealers in ties. A den of sin and decay.

“Look at this, Damien. Look at these kine. Have I been gone so long? Fifty years of sleep and the world changed above me.” Damien’s sire, a quiet man with brown skin and short, curly black hair sat on a bus bench. “It is good you awoke me when you did. The technology alone is ... I cannot understand it.”

Damien was sitting next to him, with a half-shaved head, and waves of black hair combed over that reached down to his shoulder. His sire was dressed in some simple black robe, while Damien was in jeans and a snazzy jacket. What an odd couple, but that was the times. Damien had the luxury to acclimate and adjust over the years. His sire did not.

“Times have changed,” Damien said. “They still change. Even those born in this twilight of science and blasphemy can’t keep up. And after what the Prince did, the churches here have become passive, empty.”

Lucas reached out and gave him a strong pat on the shoulder. “Antoinette did what she thought was best for the city. Painful as it is to say, there is peace here.”

“The peace of gluttony, and sloth.”

“Ha! Well said.” Again his sire gave him a pat on the back. “It is true. These kine need the fear of God in them. But first, we must put the fear of the Lancea et Sanctum into the Kindred.”

“With Viktor Honors dead, the Invictus may not be our ally this time, Archbishop.”

“But if Tony is dead, as you say he is, then there is a flock out there, Damien. They need a shepherd. Do you know where that devil slept?”

“I do.”

Lucas gave a curt nod, stood up, and closed his bible with a loud, resounding thud, as if the walls of the church surrounded them once more. “Then come, and let us be the harbingers of a grand reckoning.”

Part 2

Chapter 12

~~One week later.~~

~~Jack~~

“Twenty million.”

“Fifty million.”

“Twenty million.”

“I’m sorry. Is there an echo in here?” The sly brute adjusted his gloves, even as he put his feet up on the table. A pistol rested in his chest strap, mirrored by the four thugs who stood behind him. Thugs in suits.

“I know what the merchandise is worth, and it’s not worth fifty,” Jack said. He was standing, with his arms folded across his chest and a surly look on his face. It was all part of the game, of course. Bargaining was just as much a game of knowledge as it was poker, reading and outplaying the opponent.

“Seller’s market kid. You want it, you pay fifty, and I know you want it.”

Jack could feel his frown growing. “You think I won’t buy it elsewhere?”

“Who else would deal with Xnomina? Your head man has gone missing, and all they have is his lackeys to follow up for him. So how about we cut the bullshit, and you give me fifty or get the fuck out.” The weasel kine gave a hearty chuckle; he’d thought he won.

Jack glanced over his shoulder. Julias was leaning against the wall, his arms across his chest in a similar manner to Jack. Or maybe it was Jack mimicking him?

Julias just gave him a shrug and a tiny smile. Time to man up.

Jack feigned a weary sigh, and began to pace left to right in front of the kine. He could smell the blood in their bodies, he could just faintly make out other smells too. Things normally lost to the air, he could make notice of; too much cologne was easy, but one of the men had a hint of perfume on him, and another smelled of gunpowder. All of them had the subtle mix of salt and musk that came with sweat.

When he glanced between them, they held his gaze, but there was a flicker of concern there. They didn't know him, and they didn't understand why he was so confident. He was just a young man, a tiny young man, with only one man for back-up, in a room full of sharks. What could he possibly do? When he returned their gazes, he gave them a smile, a grand smile, the smile of a man who made men like them dance on strings.

Being a Ventrue was not just his title, but his blood. Julias's lineage had started to take hold, and now, when he looked over the five humans trying to negotiate with him, he delighted in bravado of it all.

"Mr. Woolang ... look into my eyes." Jack took a step toward the table, put his hands down against it, and leaned forward to look straight at the businessman.

"Kid, I am looking right the fuck at you. What kind of ... of..."

Mr. Woolang's voice died down. His expression deadened, became deadpan. His body relaxed. With just a moment, he even lowered his feet, and sat still and limp with his head loose on his shoulders.

He looked right back at Jack, and Jack in turn gazed straight into the conniver's soul.

And he crushed it. The human's will was just an ant before him, and through his eyes he was able to find that will and grind it into dust. His sister Mary's will had been much stronger than this oaf, this worthless gutter trash, this inferior, juvenile thug. And despite himself, he enjoyed squashing it.

"You will accept twenty million, Mr. Woolang."

"I will ... accept ... twenty million." Like a drone.

"Mr. Woolong?" His guards walked up to reach out and shake him, and when they looked to Jack, they met his gaze too. And they too crumbled.

"You four will accept this as a good deal."

"We ... will accept..." A chorus of drones.

"Good. Call my assistant to arrange the exchange. Good night." He gave a short nod, didn't even try to hide the obvious pleasure in his eyes, and walked out of the room.

Julias chuckled behind him, but didn't say a word. He just followed his childe out, playing the role of bodyguard in their little charade. When Jack gave a glance over his shoulder, Julias was grinning at him, and gave him a pat on the shoulder as he closed the door behind him.

A few minutes later, they were out of the dark alley and back onto the busy streets of Dolareido. Hookers in fancy, expensive dresses, cocaine addicts in expensive suits, and expensive cars with nowhere to go. Such was Dolareido night life.

The sidewalks were large, but Dolareido was a city that reached the sky with apartments stacked on apartments, particularly in South Side. The hotels were luxurious and the casinos were noisy. It was a city that never slept, and that meant people, lots of them. Julias and Jack were soon buried in the crowd, but they walked through them with an ease Jack had never known when he was alive. Dodging shoulders and hips was easy, but keeping his eyes off their exposed necks was not.

Damn he was hungry. Mesmerizing five kine was not what he'd planned, and now he had an empty stomach to show for it.

“Thanks. They were just ... it was just so damn easy. I mean I really wanted to do more, like tell them to beat each other senseless for that bull shit. Fifty million for just a year's worth-”

Julias gave him a quick jab in the side. Right, right, you don't mention any details where people can hear. Xnomina didn't need a federal investigation into its less-than-legal dealings. Kindred talk was easier to get away with in the open; vampires didn't exist after all.

“If you could have done more, then that is even more impressive. It may be a talent of a Ventrue to dominate another's mind, but it's coming to you really quick.”

“I got a good teacher.”

Julias stepped in beside him and hooked an arm about Jack's shoulder, complete with a hug. “I am pretty amazing.”

Jack laughed. Julias laughed. It was that same stupid laugh they shared back before Jack had ever known about vampires. God damn the nostalgia felt nice.

“Got another date with the Prince?” Julias said. His sire let go of him then, but not before giving him a hard punch in the arm. Julias didn’t used to be the guy with the buddy punches; Beatrice probably taught him that one.

“Yeah. With Xnomina’s schedule and her schedule, we don’t see each other as much as we’d like.”

“Look at you, trying to balance your work and social life like an adult.”

His sire was goading him. Good-natured ribbing had become the norm between them again, since Julias’s rise to power. The two of them had become the duo Viktor and Julias had once been, securing deals for Xnomina and expanding the power sphere of the Invictus. For now, it was just dealing with kine, and that was getting easier and easier every day.

But there was something else too. Julias was smiling more. He’d always been a more morose fellow, and in hindsight, Jack realized his sire fit the bill of eternally-tormented undead creature of the night quite well. That was then though. In less than ten days, the century-old Ventrue had gained a bounce in his step.

Could it have been because Viktor was dead? Or was it shark-mouth’s fault? Mental note: ask Beatrice, and thank her for whatever kinky shit she was doing to him to make him smile.

“Things going well with you and the Nosferatu?”

“I haven’t shown her the new place yet.” Julias waved down a taxi. “At first I figured she’d hate a mansion, but then ... well, she’s really got a thing for suits.” His sire grinned with that one.

“Ugh, I don’t want to visualize that.”

“Hey, you’re the one whose relationship is the hot topic. You don’t think everyone’s visualizing what Antoinette’s doing to you?”

He hadn’t thought of it, at least not in such explicit terms. Their relationship wasn’t secret, there was no way it could have been, but knowing other people were talking about him, picturing him with her? For a moment he frowned, but then the reaction passed, and a Ventrue smile replaced it.

“Let them.”

Once the taxi came to a stop, Jack jumped in, but Julias remained on the street and leaned forward to put his hands on the door and roof.

“Just be careful kid.”

“You know Antoinette won’t-”

“I don’t know her, and that’s the problem.” Julias gave a shrug. “I got everyone in this city figured out, Jack. I know what they want and I know why, even that witch Jacob. But her? Who knows what’s going on in any Dragon’s mind?”

Jack laughed then, and gave Julias a small, dismissing salute. “Blood and secrets, like everyone else.”

The Elysium tower – the humans called it Central Tower – was where the Prince both held her meetings, and where she slept deep down in its depths. There were no other towers near it for several blocks, so once he found the garden maze that spread out before it, all he had to do was walk toward the giant glass monolith.

He stuck to the sidewalks for a little while, just to hear the heartbeat of the city more clearly. Taxis and high heels instead of crickets and rustling leaves. Over the past few months, they’d become his chorus of life; it's not like he had his own to provide it. No heartbeat, no breath, even swallowing saliva or the need to blink were gone. He kind of missed it, but only a little.

Some larger kine walked by him, obvious that they expected him to be the one to move, but when he gave them a hard glare they were the ones to step aside. Julias had warned him Ventrue had a desire to dominate, to control, to own and rule, that it was in his blood and it would be both an asset and a curse. But for the moment, he enjoyed having the street crowd of kine be the ones to step around him, instead of him being the one to move.

He stepped into the garden maze. Antoinette really did have amazing taste, if old, but it really lent to the odd mash-up of modern metal railings and walls that served as platforms for the garden walls, the benches with carvings of stone vines, and actual vines that joined them. It was like someone had combined smooth, minimalist metal architecture with old, rustic stone carvings. The walls were short, three or four feet, so it wasn't much of a maze, and it let him see the various people coming and going from the streets and paths that connected with it.

Elysium was a no-violence zone for Kindred, and its garden maze was a great place for Kindred to hang out. He could see them, hiding in the shadows with only the occasional lamppost to expose them, and they gave him a quick glance before going about their business. Some of them stopped though, stared at him in shock, and then turned to a fellow Kindred to whisper.

He was the survivor of the incident that had killed Tony and Viktor; so many talked about that. Then there was the fact his relationship with Antoinette had become public knowledge. It's not like he could have hidden it, he was no Mehket, and Antoinette's movements were monitored by everyone.

And that was fine. He gave the other young Kindred a small smile, even a small wave, which was very decidedly not Kindred-like of him. They faded into the shadows. He couldn't blame them; that's what he did for a while when he first became Kindred.

According to Julias, he got over bullshit fast, and was picking up being a Kindred fast too. That didn't mean he didn't think about Mrs. Pavala or Mary or his mom, but he knew if he did too much, he'd be just like those other Kindred hiding in the shadows of Elysium. Weak, depressed, and struggling with their new life as undead predators. A different sire, different circumstances, and he could have spent a decade wallowing in misery.

He stopped in front of the giant, glass tower, and glanced back over his shoulder toward the garden maze. Damn it. He shook his head, like he was trying to shake out the infectious thoughts. Why the fuck was he thinking about all this? Get out of your head for once, Jack. Shit was going well. Shit was going very well. Just enjoy it.

So he pushed open the doors of the Elysium Tower, gave a nod to the front desk, and headed towards the elevator.

The elevator didn't go all the way to the bottom floor, but stopped before an array of stairways in a giant lobby of the black marble the Prince seemed to like so much. From there, the stairways reached down to varying levels, each opening to a hallway marked by dragon statues at their entrances. Antoinette's vault was only the final part of the inner depths of the Elysium tower, and he wasn't there quite just yet.

It was an underground, ridiculously expensive paradise. The cost to fill each floor with its luxuries would have easily been in the tens of millions, like the huge pool, the electronic entertainment, the bar where only the best blood was served, the stage for musicians, and its locked labs where Antoinette pursued her secret Dracul ways.

The joys of power, money, and the centuries to use it.

Then there was a giant vault door. Getting through that would have taken a nuke, and it was only there the Prince felt comfortable sleeping the day. He walked down the stairs, fully intent on knocking, when the sound of splashing water drew his eyes to the side.

He walked between two dragon statues, curling marvels of blue, before stepping into the pool room. Like much of the underground levels, the walls, the floor, everything was black marble with cracks of white throughout. Antoinette really had a thing for marble. But, to her credit, it both looked awesome, and was updated with smart LED bulbs in carved holes. They were emitting slow waves of blue and white light over the huge room. The only sounds were the quiet hum of air cycling, and more splashing.

Antoinette was there. For a moment, he was excited at the prospect of seeing her in a swimsuit, but the tall creature was in a white bath robe, sitting on her side on a lounge chair by the poolside, her elbow propped up on its arm and a book in her hand. She was so tall, curvy, long white hair, just ... so fucking beautiful.

The water looked surreal with the white and blue light gently alternating over it against the black marble. Around the pool were a dozen huge lounge chairs of white, with glass tables for sitting and chatting. He'd never seen anyone use them though, until now.

The splashing was coming from two girls in the pool.

“Ashley, come on, I beat your time so bad.”

“Lies! Madness! You did no such thing. I am still the champ – Oh! Jack!”

Jack found himself standing at the edge of the pool. He felt so out of place, still in his shoes and wearing his suit, while the two ghouls were wearing open-back one-piece swimsuits. But hot damn, the two blonde and brunette ballerinas looked great in the water. He did always have a thing for wet hair.

“Ah, Mister Terry. You arrived early,” the Prince said, and she lowered her book down before giving a small smile. “Good.”

“Ah, hey ... girls.” Nervous cough. The Prince’s two ghouls swam up to him, came to a stop only a couple feet away from him, and glanced at each other with delighted giggles.

Julee nodded in agreement.

“Sorry! But we’re ... you know...” Christ, he could stand toe-to-toe with any cold, ruthless thug, but talking to a couple of pretty girls was more than enough to put his tongue in a knot.

“Forgive the girls, little Ventrue. It is true that I have neglected them for you lately.” She motioned for Jack to come to her. “I hope you do not mind sharing my time with them for a little while?”

“No, of course not.” He walked around the pool, almost skipped, and came to a stand by the Prince. She had her white hair combed over her shoulder to drape down her chest and white robe, and she combed it with her fingers when she looked at him. So pretty.

“Come now Jack, please undress. There is no need for suits here.”

“Hehe, ya!” Ashley had followed him without leaving the pool, and now the blonde had her elbows up on the pool edge to hold herself while she watched. Julee followed in behind her, the quieter of the two girls, but she hooked her elbows over the pool edge just the same, and gave Jack a rather intrigued look.

He looked to the two ghouls, then back to Antoinette. She was giving him that look with her red eyes, the one where she expected him to obey. It was never a harsh or cruel look, but a dominating one nonetheless, and it was more than enough to make him oblige. He wanted to oblige.

He started to undress.

“Julee, Ashley, come here. You may have your drink while Jack gets comfortable,” the Prince said.

The girls pulled themselves out of the pool, and Jack couldn't help but sneak glances at their bodies while he undid the buttons of his jacket. Their swimsuits may have been one-piece, but their open-back designs left little to the imagination. Tight little ballerina bodies Jack very, very, very much wanted to sink his teeth into. Why didn't he eat before coming?

It only got worse when the two girls sat down on the floor, and with great smiles, waited impatiently while the Prince cut open her own wrist. Jack had never seen what it looked like, for someone to drink Kindred blood, but he couldn't tear his eyes away from Antoinette cutting open her skin with a fingernail. The pale skin of a vampire did not let blood just flow out freely, so Jack's eyes were glued to the sight of it when a large, thick, dark droplet of it formed over the wound. The Prince was forcing the blood out, much the same way a Kindred controlled their blood to do many things.

In this case, it was to feed her ghouls. First a single drop for Ashley, and then Julee, which had them both sighing with the bliss of satisfied addiction. Julias had explained the addictive properties of Kindred blood, but also how it turned humans into immortal, strong creatures for weeks before more blood was required. It had all been explained, but seeing it was so different, so real, how the two ghouls sat at Antoinette's side like pets. Happy, purring pets.

Soon, his jacket, tie, and shirt were on another lounge chair, with his shoes and socks underneath. “Um, should I—”

He was just going to ask about the pants, but she wanted him naked. Naked in front of her two ghouls. The two pets even turned to look at him then, and they got comfortable on the marble floor to watch him like giddy school girls.

With an awkward cough, he slid off his pants and boxers. Like the Prince, he hadn’t blushed yet, so his skin was pale, thinned, and no physical symptoms of arousal were to be had. Despite that, Ashley and Julee giggled yet again, and watched him with hungry eyes.

“Oh. He’s a strong, lean little man, isn’t he Mistress?” Ashley said.

Antoinette nodded. “Indeed he is. Julias groomed him well.”

All three women were gazing at him, looking him up and down, smiling their devilish little smiles and sharing hushed chuckles. He was a piece of meat on display, and yet, he couldn’t even begin to be offended. Nervous and uncomfortable, sure, but after having seen Antoinette devour him with her eyes many times, it was exciting instead.

He knew what would happen the moment he did, so he looked away, and kept his hands at his sides as he began the blush of life. Immediately, his skin warmed with the pulse of a fake heartbeat, and his member rose to a full erection; he suppressed his reflex to cover himself. Antoinette would not want him to cover anything.

The ghouls burst into fits of giggles, cheeks red with their own blushing, but the Prince gave each of them a thump on the head.

“Treat Jack with respect. He is my lover, and you will be seeing much of him.” The Prince motioned for Jack to sit on the chair his clothes were laying on. “Jack, you would not mind letting my pets grow more comfortable with you, yes? They have never been with a man.”

Jack took a seat, gripped the edge of the chair, and did his best to not squirm. Never been with a man? Was Antoinette implying what he thought she was implying?

“S-sure.”

More giggles, but when he looked at the ghouls, he could see they were just as nervous as him. Nervous, and aroused. The nipples of their small, pert breasts were standing hard against their swimsuits, and they just lightly rubbed their thighs together while they too squirmed a little. And, at the height of his new senses, he could smell their blood course with need.

Ashley was the first to get up. They’d shared a Kiss before, and the sight of her lithe body coming to sit next to him brought back all the tingly memories of it. When Julee came over and sat down on the other side of him, he actually started to get light-headed. So aroused, but so hungry too, a concoction of varying lusts fighting for his attention.

Jack looked between the two blushing ghouls, then back to Antoinette. She met his gaze, nodded to him, and gave her lips a slow lick.

“Lean back, little Ventrue. Put your hands behind you on the chair, and do not move them.” Her words were hushed, teasing, but again they carried that controlling tone.

He obeyed, leaned back, and put his palms to the chair surface behind him. His body was on full display for the two girls at his sides, and he glanced between them with a nervous shiver.

“You may do whatever you wish with him, my pets,” Antoinette said, “but be mindful. He is Kindred, and mine.”

Welp, he was all their plaything now. But just looking at the Prince was more than enough to sway him; he really was hers, and he loved it.

Ashley was the first to touch him. With a warm sigh, the tiny woman put her hand on his chest, and her fingers roamed the indentations of his lean frame; she must have picked up the habit from the Prince. How long had the three of them been sleeping together? His mind drifted off to thoughts of the two girls, and Antoinette, naked, a mess of legs and breasts, fingers entering each other and lips on each others’—

A hand around his member snapped him to awareness.

“Oh, it’s ... hard, but kind of soft too.” While Ashley was busy exploring his chest, Julee had reached down to wrap her fingers around the hilt of his cock. “None of our toys ... get this ... texture.” Her mouth was lightly parted, and her eyes were fixed on his shaft. She looked like she was in a trance, as if her hand had developed a mind of its own. It started to squeeze him, just softly, and lightly stroke the base of him.

Ashley joined her, and put her hand over the remaining half of his length. “It’s kind of spongy.”

Both of them erupted into laughter, but they only scooted in closer, pressed their legs against his, and leaned in to push their breasts against his arms. They put their cheeks to his chest, and looked at each other while glancing down at the cock in their hands.

“Are you gonna do it?”

“I dunno. Are you?”

“Maybe. Mistress said we could do whatever we wanted.”

“So we can ... you know.”

“Then you should do it.”

“Why not you?”

“I dunno! It’s...”

And then the two of them peeled their swimsuits off. Jack’s jaw dropped while they slipped the straps from their shoulders, and pulled the tight fabric away and from their skin. Like Jack, the two girls were lean creatures, small but well built, a bit skinny but nothing unhealthy; Antoinette would never let her ghouls be unhealthy. The two girls were, instead, athletic ballerinas, and their small, pert breasts stood at attention when finally exposed.

The two of them were blushing, but what embarrassment they may have felt was clearly overwhelmed by arousal; he could smell it on them. Their small nipples were hard against their skin, and when they finally pushed their swimsuits down past their hips to fall off, he could see their the arousal on their smooth pussies.

Then they attacked.

“Ah!” Like cats, they pounced him. Ashley got up onto his lap straddled him, and put her hands against his shoulders. He’d have handled her weight fine, but Julee sat beside him, grabbed his arm and pulled it from under him so he fell back onto the chair. Laying on his back with his legs off its side, he could only look between the two girls as they shifted him around until Ashley was comfortable in the nook of his pelvis, with Julee sitting next to them.

Antoinette let out a hearty chuckle. Jack looked to her in panic, but she just grinned at him, smiled that devil smile, and slid her robe apart at the thigh. The Daeva began the blush of life, raised one leg slightly, and with her eyes on Jack, started to lightly stroke her clitoris. Seeing him helpless against the whims of her ghouls was apparently extremely arousing for Prince.

God he loved that.

“So ... are you and the Mistress ... going to be together a lot?” Ashley slid forward a little, careful of her knees so she didn’t fall off the lounge chair, and gently placed her warm cunt against the underside of Jack’s cock. “We’ve never had a man before, and ... you’re nice. And cute.” She put her hands on his chest, and started to slide her body back and forth so her cunt’s lips coated his shaft. Antoinette said they’d never been with a man, but if that was true, Ashley had a major porn habit, cause she was quite comfortable with the position.

“ ... th-thanks.”

So warm, wet, inviting. Don’t move your hands, Jack. Every fiber in his undead body wanted to take the girl, slam her down on his cock, and bite into her. Drink her, feel her writhe in the Kiss while penetrating her. But Antoinette said don’t move, and when he looked to her again, he could see her lips were lightly parted, her eyes just slightly glazed, and her fingers had disappeared between her legs.

Ashley giggled down at him, oblivious to his blood hunger. She shook her hips around a little, let out quiet mewls of bliss as she dragged her clit along his length, and reached out to take Julee's hand. Her fellow ghoul was awestruck by it all, Jack noticed, with her eyes locked to where Ashley was soaking him. And her mouth simply dropped when Ashley sat up, reached down, and guided Jack into her drenched insides.

The little vixen was so tight, it was almost painful. She slid into the groove of his pelvis, and with a playful squeal, wriggled her hips around some more.

"Nn ... oh ... oh! I like this." Ashley wasted no time. Jack could hardly believe the sheer sexual drive of the ballerina sitting on him. "We need to do this more." She started to slide back and forth with speed, complete with tiny mewls of bliss, and her insides only grew more tight as more of her juices coated him.

Antoinette had clearly nourished the girl's sexual drive, but Jack found himself looking away from the ghoul to the Prince instead. Ashley was certainly beautiful, and definitely lively, but she had none of the control or subtlety of Antoinette.

The Prince caught his eye, spread her robe for him so he could see her hand, and continued to finger her insides in slow, insidious motions. The woman was a sexual marvel of drawn-out, deliberate movements; everything she did was calculated to make him boil with need. As if on queue, with a grin, she used her other hand to point at Ashley, and silently mouthed some words.

Drink her.

Jack sat up, wrapped Ashley's naked back in his hands, and pulled her into him.

Oh. My. God. The blood. Oh god it was so warm, and it tasted different. Something was different in the blood, an odd taste on his tongue like a sweet spice that made the blood a dessert. Ashley’s wriggling, writhing, squirming, it all mixed and made her blood practically squirt into his mouth; he had to bite her hard and keep his lips tight just to make sure none spilled.

“But ... we just ... started...” Ashley’s voice turned into quiet pants. Her hands reached out to hold onto Jack’s sides, but her grip was weak and trembling. Despite her growing still until she was reduced to a quivering, faint thing in his arms, she started to cum, hard. Her insides squeezed in random spasms, and a copious amount of juices leaked from her until she was dripping from his body.

Her orgasm intensified everything. The blood became a sweet, flowing river that washed over his tongue and throat, warmed his insides, and made him hold her tighter. The small creature in his grip was helpless, barely conscious anymore, but when he secured his grip and pulled her hips to him to sink her slit to the hilt of his cock, she came all the more. Being trapped in his Kiss while skewered on him turned the ghoul into a mess of trembling bliss and fluids, and with each shudder of her body, more of her blood naturally gushed over his teeth. No wonder Kindred often fucked their victims; it turned them into geysers of blood and delight.

Julee put her hand on his shoulder. It was enough to snap him back to awareness, and he finally let the blonde ballerina go. She collapsed against his chest though, and judging from the sounds she was making, she’d either passed out or was so exhausted she might as well have been. Jack gave her neck wound several licks, both to heal the fang marks, but also because god damn that blood was sweet.

“Wow. She...”

“Ashley grew a little too bold for my taste, and I could see Jack was hungry.” The Prince got up, stepped over to their chair, and reached out to pick up the petite thing. Jack let out a tiny groan as Ashley’s warm, drenched insides were pulled off of his cock, and the ballerina was set down onto another chair nearby.

“Can ... can I ... you know...” Julee slid a little closer to Jack, still on the same chair as him, and pressed her body into his arm. Her head was upturned to look at the Prince though; she was asking Antoinette, not him. He couldn’t blame her.

The Prince curled her fingers toward her as invite, and Julee got up to stand in front of her, between her and Jack. Julee didn’t have anywhere near the same bounce or enthusiasm as Ashley, but Jack could smell the arousal on her all the same. The brunette ballerina was definitely more shy than her friend.

“Please forgive me, my little Ventrue,” the Prince said. Still in her robe, the Prince was behind Julee – fuck she was tall – and put her hands on the small girl’s shoulders. “Ever since our first night together, I have shared stories with my pets of us. You know how much women enjoy talking with each other.” She let her hands drift over Julee’s shoulders, and even down her body to find her tiny breasts, where she cupped them and traced circles around her hard nipples. “And my poor pets have both been neglected, and dying to taste you.”

“Oh ... really? I mean, it’s just me.” He reached up to scratch at his head. Why would they want him so bad?

“Mister Terry, for all the confidence of a Ventrue, you underestimate yourself when it comes to women.” Antoinette reached down, wrapped one of her hands around Julee’s throat, and her other sneaked its way down the lean girl’s stomach to find her smooth, drenched pussy. To prove her point, the Prince purposefully spread the ghoul's lips wide to expose the dripping folds.

Julee could only mewl with helplessness. She didn't struggle, didn't even turn her head, she just looked at Jack, the Prince's hand still around her throat, and blushed so bright her face went completely red. The ghoul really, really wanted him.

"So I promised my ghouls that they would have their first time with you." Antoinette nudged Julee forward, and the ghoul let out an excited squeak. She climbed onto the chair again, straddled Jack over his stomach, and put her hands on his chest. Unlike Ashley, the brunette had trouble making eye contact, and even raised one of her arms to hide her breasts after she noticed Jack staring at them. Her nipples looked so hard against her pert breasts and thin body.

"Shit, and I'm just laying here and-"

"Just as we wanted, little Ventrue. Please lay back, and relax." He couldn't see the Prince very well, with Julee nearly sitting on his chest, but he didn't have to to feel her grip around his cock.

"Ah ... hey..." Her grip was so ... perfect. Firm, solid, just shy of painful, just enough to keep him on the edge. And she kept that grip on him even as her other hand took Julee's hip, and slid her back like she was weightless until her warm lips found his glans. The Prince rubbed his cock up and down against Julee's entrance, but Jack couldn't see any of it, he could only wriggle and squirm while Antoinette teased Julee with him.

"Mistress ... please ... it's too embarrassing." Julee's whole body was turning red. She hugged herself, but one of her hands had drifted up to her parted lips where quiet pants and mewls escaped. The girl radiated young sexuality, the same as Ashley, even if it was behind some shyness. Jack understood her all too well.

But thank god, while Julee may have been too shy to initiate, Antoinette was not. She finally pushed Jack's swollen cock in toward the young girl's cunt, and pulled Julee back until she fell into the crevice of Jack's pelvis.

"Nn! Oh ... oh..." Julee put her hands down against her own legs and looked down at where she was spread over Jack's cock. Everything was soaked, and not just in her own juices but her fellow ghoul's as well. So warm, so very warm. "This ... feels nice. It feels different than toys. It..." Julee shifted her weight forward a little, partly at the Prince's behest as Antoinette put both her hands on the girl's hips. "It's got ... it's different, and..."

The Prince laughed, a full laugh that made Jack smile despite himself. "Sex between a man and woman is a delicious thing. You can feel him filling you up, spreading you open, warm, hard." Antoinette said, and after sitting down behind Julee on the large lounge chair, she reached one hand up under Julee's arms until she found the girl's throat again. Just a small grip of the petite thing's neck was enough to make Julee squeeze on Jack's cock like a vice.

And when the Prince used her other hand to play with Julee's swollen clit, Jack had to do everything in his power to not cum right there.

Julee on the other hand held no such reservations. Jack could see it in the tiny thing's barely open eyes; the Prince's grip around her neck was a trigger. With Antoinette holding the girl's neck in one hand, and her clit in the other, her ghoul turned into a squirming mess of mewls, and Jack could only do his best to hold still. Those tight, squeezing muscles were working back and forth on his length, though from the look on Julee's face he could see she wasn't meaning to. She was too preoccupied with trying to hold still, but the Prince knew just how to touch, just where to squeeze, to milk pleasure from someone. She'd done it to him dozens of times, and now she was doing it to the girl sitting on his cock.

Then Antoinette sank her teeth into Julee.

Julee started to cum immediately, and Jack joined her a moment later. There was simply no way he could hold on any longer, with how the ballerina was moaning, mewling, and trembling on him. When Antoinette bit into her, Julee just erupted in the same way Ashley had, and came so hard Jack could feel every muscle inside her spasm in random spurts. Her juices practically gushed over his cock, down his pelvis, and his own juices soon joined her in the mess, white trickling out of her. She was milking him of his cum, wringing it out of him, when all she was trying to do was survive the combination of orgasm and Kiss.

But for Jack, it was about seeing the act. He’d never actually gotten to see a vampire feed, not like this, not so close. He got to watch Julee’s eyes roll upward in the unnatural bliss, see her whole body tremble in the weird mixture of pleasures, see her hands fumble about blindly for something to hold onto while her body shook. Her skin grew a little more faint with the moments, but that didn’t stop her body from convulsing in pleasure. The blood was flowing through her like a wave with each mewl she made; he could actually see Antoinette’s mouth suckle each time the girl’s hips subconsciously pushed forward to grind her cunt against him, milking him of his cum until that too was dripping off of his testicles. Her trembling, quivering insides massaged his swollen cock and ripe glans until the waves of pleasure had his own legs shivering underneath her.

And then there was Antoinette. The Prince was still in her robe, cozy up behind Julee between Jack’s legs. The tall woman was sustaining Julee’s orgasm to what must have been painful degrees; he knew the feeling. Her eyes though, they were looking at Jack. Red, seductive, intelligent eyes that were gazing into him with blatant desire. He managed to hold eye contact with her, even as Julee continued to writhe on his cock; she wanted to see his eyes, and he wanted to see hers. The Prince loved to stare into his eyes, and with time, he learned to meet hers, to look into her ruby gaze and drink it in.

It was like looking into the eyes of a goddess. Ancient, wise, all-around unfathomable, and so damn fucking beautiful. And she was smiling at him with those eyes even as she drank her ghoul, like it was something easily done. He could barely keep his eyes open when in the Kiss, let alone flirt during it.

At last, she was done drinking. He'd never seen Antoinette so soon after she fed, but he imagined a recently fed tiger looked similar. Julee, on the other hand, was a twitching mess of exhaustion, and she'd long ago collapsed backward against the Prince's bosom.

Antoinette pulled her fangs from the girl's neck, and gave her skin light kisses. "Julee is a little different than Ashley, no?" Again the Prince wrapped her hand around the girl's throat, and squeezed, this time tight enough that Jack could see the girl having trouble breathing. She was choking the exhausted ghoul, and even more so, she started stroking and massaging the girl's clit once more.

And that was more than enough to make Julee, barely conscious after the Kiss, start to tremble on his cock again. Her young muscles squeezed him hard enough to make him wince, milk the final sparks of pleasure from his orgasm, and draw out a few more drops of his cum. Even more of Julee's juices trickled down over him as Antoinette brought the brunette a second orgasm. The ghoul was completely exhausted by the Kiss, and simply sat there with her arms dangling at her sides while her whole body quivered.

Finally, the Prince let Julee breathe, and even gave her a kiss on the cheek, before lifting her from Jack's body, and setting her down next to Ashley. “She enjoys a little breath play, some light domination. Did she feel pleasant upon you, during my Kiss?”

“Oh god yes.”

“Wonderful.” Antoinette let out a long, satisfied sigh, and undid the belt of her robe. That body was beyond amazing, and such a contrast to the two ghouls she kept. A flat stomach and fit physique, true, but she was a curvy woman, with wide hips, thick legs, and glorious, massive, heavy teardrop breasts.

He really had a thing for breasts.

She kept the robe on, but open, and slipped herself over him so smoothly he almost didn't even realize she was moving. The goddess reached down, took his drenched member in her hand, slid it into her awaiting insides, and then she too got comfortable in the nook of his pelvis. In just a split moment, she'd gone from standing before him, to fucking him, as if she were just slipping on shoes. The expression on her face was anything but bored though; she looked delighted.

“Oh my. Everything is so wet. My pets do not normally make such a mess; they must like you more than I thought.” The Prince moaned softly, shifted her weight about to get more comfortable on him, and put her hands on his chest. “I hope I did not betray your trust when I promised them they would taste you.”

She talked so casually, comfortably, despite that she was sitting on his cock and already rocking herself back and forth in a gentle-but-perfect pace. Ashley's blood was fresh in his belly, thank god, so he was still good for a round two.

“I'm just surprised they wanted to so badly.”

Antoinette let out a sultry chuckle. “Well, I did regale them with tales of your touch, little Ventrue. Stories involving your lips on my breasts, in particular, were of great interests to them.”

“I ... can’t blame them.” He reached out for her. They’d had sex a few times now, and when she was on top, they got into a nice rhythm. She would lean forward, put her hands on his chest, slowly work herself toward orgasm, and he got to play with her breasts. Soft, heavy, they filled his palms to overflowing, and a gentle squeeze made the Prince smile down at him. He brought his thumbs to her nipples, and lightly teased her swollen, large areola.

“Next time, I am sure they will ask for similar breast play from you.” She closed her eyes and pushed her hips forward a little harder. She’d been masturbating before, and it showed in her movements; she was already close to climax.

“Next time? Sure! Sure, I just...”

“Hmm?”

“I ... I don’t want you to think that ... I’m here just for sex, you know?”

“Jack.” She gave him a thunk on his forehead with her right hand’s knuckles. “You are not kine anymore. You are Kindred. Let go of your inhibitions, and embrace the few joys of unlife.” Now she sounded like an Ordo Dracul.

“But I—”

“I know, and I understand. You need not worry. You are mine, and I am yours. No one else spends the day in my bed while I sleep, not even my ghouls.” The Prince sat up straight, raised her arms, stuck out her chest, and combed her fingers through her hair like a glamour model. She was just showing off for him now, as any Daeva loved to. Her long, beautiful white hair matched her robe nicely.

And god he loved to watch her show off for him. He lowered his hands down to her hips, and just gently held on while she danced on his cock for him. She was squeezing him harder, and pushing herself forward into him a little faster. Some small sounds were even coming out of her, with a much deeper, huskier voice than the ghouls could manage.

“And I hope you forgive me, little Ventrue, if you think I only desire you here for sex.” She leaned forward again, put her hands on his shoulders and elbows down to the blankets, so her chest was pressed to his. So much taller than him, it caused her huge breasts to overwhelm him chest and shoulders. “But ... I look at you, and until I am satisfied, all I can think of is this.”

She pushed her hips forward harder this time, and then stopped. Her voice went silent, replaced with a single, quiet pant, before she started to very lightly shiver on him. While her whole body was mostly still, her cunt squeezed down on him so very, very hard, and her warm juices joined the pool of wetness already soaking his cock.

It amazed him how the woman was in so much control of her body that her orgasm was something she'd mastered. She wanted to cum, so she came, and her warm, tight muscles did not hesitate to milk him in thankful bliss for it. Even while the orgasm trembles worked through her pussy, squeezing and massaging him, her eyes never closed, and instead gazed into his while their noses touched. And when the trembles began to settle, she started to fuck him harder, and soon earned herself another orgasm.

The longer he held out, the longer he got to watch her gorgeous eyes in orgasm, and feel her powerful, constricting, massaging flesh on his length. She even dipped her hips around in a dancing motion, like a belly dancer, just to make him mewl he bet. It worked every time.

“Three women have cum on you tonight, little Ventrue.” She nudged her nose into his cheek, and then his own nose, before smiling into tiny kisses on his lips. “Where would you like to cum?”

Oh god. She always knew when he was close, every time. She’d work him to the edge, and with a succubus smile, ask him.

“In ... inside.” Much as he loved her outside, her insides were so warm, wet, and binding tight. And the lounge chair didn’t leave much room for different positions.

Antoinette chuckled over him and got to work, sinking herself to the hilt before slowly raising her ass, all the while making sure to squeeze her muscles so tight she almost hurt him. Almost. She knew just how hard to squeeze to milk the rising waves of pleasure, and she knew just how to arch her back, twist her hips, and ease herself back down to make sure she edged him toward orgasm in slow, blissful strokes of his glans and length.

He was a little more bold these days, a little more confident. The Prince was more than happy to receive his touch, and god damn he wanted to hold her. So he did. He wrapped his arms around her, hugged her taller body, and let his hands roam up and down her back underneath the robe. When he started to cum, he had to settle his hands on her shoulder blades and just hold on while she worked her magic.

They never broke eye contact. It was her thing; she liked to watch his eyes when he came, and he was quickly picking up the fetish for hers too. She sank her hips down, and with her body devouring every single inch of him, she shifted her hips left to right in a slow, deliberate movement. Just at the right pace, and squeezing so hard in rhythm with him spurts of cum, that she milked each gush of him until more of his fluid was leaking out of her.

Holding eye contact while she masterfully wrung every drop of cum out of him while riding him at the edge of pain and pleasure was not an easy task, but it was worth it to see her quenched smile.

“I look forward to other choices, little Ventrue.” Her voice was warm, and he could feel her delighted chuckle through her chest into his while she nudged their noses. “Not that I mind this, indeed I love to feel your cum inside me, but the ghouls would delight getting to play with you. Perhaps I could seduce you with an image?” She sat up, brought her hands up to her breasts, and she cupped their weight with her palms. “You, sitting on my stomach, and both Ashley and Julee,” she motioned to the two sleeping girls, “kissing and suckling on your length until your cum coats my breasts.” Her smile turned devilish. “Just a thought.”

Oh god he was dating an ancient, all-powerful succubus.

She stood up then, and let out another satisfied sigh, before walking over to grab some towels. He immediately grabbed the opportunity to watch her ass sway with her steps, and couldn't stop himself from groaning at the sight of the copious amount of juices the four of them had made dripping down her thighs. While the Kindred's fluids were already fading, the ghouls' would not.

So the Prince took a moment to wipe some of the mess away, and tossed Jack a clean towel to do the same. “Come, to my changing room.”

“While it pleases me that Ashley and Julee can orgasm with such intensity, I do hate having to clean such messes. Their cum is everywhere.”

The shower in her changing room was, predictably, luxurious, huge, and a marvel of black marble, metal fixings, and LED lights from carved holes in the ceiling. There was no curtain or glass barrier, as the shower itself was its own room within the changing room. But his eyes weren't looking at the shower walls, they were looking at Antoinette.

The blush of life had ended, but that didn't change how beautiful she was. Her nipples and lips were dark instead of red, her skin a paler version of alabaster, and the lack of blood flow caused the skin to thin lightly. But with her long white hair, now wet underneath the shower flow, cascading down her back and sticking to her from the water, his eyes had become transfixed. She was so tall, curvy, that just watching the water pour down the S shape of her body was mesmerizing.

Suddenly, all those stupid old paintings of naked women in water all made sense.

“Will you not join me?”

“Oh! Yeah, definitely.” He hopped in with her, and forced himself to lift his gaze from her body. It was the first time he'd ever seen her changing room, or the shower room half of it, and he grinned up at the hot water when it found him. Antoinette didn't use a shower head like a normal person, no. Instead, she'd set up a sort of fake waterfall that poured from slanted marble in the ceiling, and it fell down on them like heavy rain.

“How long did it take to build this place? And keep it so modern, with all these cool ... things.” He pointed at the waterfall structure when he looked up to her. It was seriously awesome.

“Decades, little Ventrue. It was long before I...” The moment she met his gaze, her voice stopped, and trailed off like someone had stolen it.

Antoinette was staring at him. He blinked at her, a little confused, and tilted his head to the side. Her arms reached out for him, and with a tender touch, she turned him around so his back was to her. She pulled him against her, leaned forward to hug her arms around him, and rested her chin on his shoulder.

“Did ... did I say something wrong?”

“You do not even notice when you do it, do you?”

“Do what?”

“When you smile so. Your eyes widen, your mouth parts slightly, your cheeks raise.” Her voice turned to a whisper, and her hug grew a little tighter around him.

Damn. She was talking about his facial expressions. “Julias is teaching me to get better at, you know, not wearing my emotions on my face. Hard to work for the Invictus if I can’t lie with a straight face.”

“A useful skill.” She reached out for something, and when he looked down he found she’d filled a hand with soap, and was rubbing it down along his abdomen. “But when I see you smile, in such a way that even your feet gain a small bounce, I ... please do not lose that.”

Fuck, his feet gain a small bounce? He frowned a little at that; he’d never make a good negotiator if he couldn’t learn to lie. He did alright with the thugs from earlier, but they were just stupid, arrogant kine. He needed to be able to fool a Kindred.

The Prince didn’t care about that though. When he turned his head to take a peak at her with her chin on his shoulder, she nudged her nose into his, and took a long taste of his lips. “Please.”

“I ... I won’t,” he said. The way she looked at him, like her heart would break, was enough to shake him to the core. He never wanted to lie to her.

“Good.” She rested her forehead against his temple, while her hands started to roam over his lower body to clean him. If he turned on the blush, the situation would have instantly turned erotic, but he didn’t want to. It was just really nice to lean back into her body, and let her hold him, hug him, and wash him.

“I am hosting a ball in several weeks, my little Ventrue. It will be a time for the covenants, all of them, to socialize without the weight or worry of Viktor and Tony’s anger. And I do hope that you,” she poked him in the chest while her other hand continued to lather him, “will accompany me as my companion. My date.”

Uh oh.

“Really? Um ... I mean, I’d love to but...”

“I know you worry for my station, but there is no need. Everyone already knows of us, even the other fledglings.” She turned him to face her, and took his hand into hers. “And this is my city. I can protect myself, and all know that any who harm you will see a swift sunrise.”

“What is it then?”

“ ... I can’t dance.”

Chapter 13

~~Beatrice~~

Beatrice had no idea Dolareido had so many dark, hidden corners.

“You Carthians. It will never cease to amaze me how much you want to adapt the modern,” Jacob said.

“Modern?” The two of them were deep into North Side, and probably near the edge of the city. It was a big city; she’d never been out this far.

“That you would take a car, instead of this!” The crazy Nosferatu gave that weird chuckle of his, and jumped. With the old, dark robes he was wearing, he looked like a shadow.

They were on rooftops in the old business district, old old, back from way before Beatrice was alive. North Side had long ago turned into more a factory district, full of heavy labor workers during the day, and dead silent at night. And it meant that the two monsters could jump from rooftop to rooftop of factories, warehouses, parking garages, foundries and power plants. They had the freedom to let loose, jump from building to building like the predators they were, and even look up at the sky.

Every so often, that’s exactly what they did. Jacob would hold up a hand, look up at the sky — what the fuck dude your eyes are covered with bandages how the fuck can you see — and sigh with some weird bliss. But hey, when he did, she did, and she had to admit, damn that was a nice sky. You couldn’t see it in South Side, not with all the massive buildings and the constant sources of light.

“It’s hard to go roof jumping when there’s a hundred thousand cameras and a couple million eyes looking around,” she said.

“Hard for us?”

“ ... no, I suppose not.” It was true, of course. Any Nosferatu or Mehket could hide in shadows, and the best of them could hide in plain sight. Jacob could. She could.

She followed after him, jumping from rooftop to rooftop, like cats jumping from tree to tree. “You put your den way the fuck out here?”

“Dolareido started over a couple hundred years ago. Back then, it was just Antoinette, her lover Tony, Viktor, and me.” He grinned over his shoulder at her. “Three groups. We all took a corner, and I have since made sure that my corner is ... not a focus point of attention.” He stopped then, and this time gave her a Joker smile. “Kind of like your Catacomb Fortress of Solitude.”

She grumbled and looked away. The fucker was disturbingly pop-culture savvy, considering he was the oldest Kindred in the whole fucking city.

“Fine. Fuck you, but fine. So I’ve earned your trust, is that it?”

He walked toward her then, and she stood her ground. The elder Nosferatu had had multiple opportunities to kill her; that wasn’t his game. So she wasn’t afraid of him killing her, or at least that’s what she told herself. He was a psycho, and the closer he got, the more her inner-beast told her to shut up the fuck up and run.

“Of course not.” He poked her in the shoulder, and she stood there and took it. The fuck was she going to do to him? “The primogen know of the den. You can do no real harm knowing its location. And besides, I think you’ll like it.”

More grumbles, but she eventually gave a nod, and clicked her monstrous crocodile teeth side to side. “Fine, let’s go.”

All the way outside the city and further up North Side, they came to the mix of hard, dry forest and rock. Lots of lifeless rock. But Jacob gave her a wink, and jumped down one of the larger drops.

Holy mother fucking shit. There was a cave. An actual real cave buried in a dense bit of wood and bush, at the base of the canyon. The fall would have killed any kine, as it was pretty steep, and the landing was almost nothing but jagged rocks, but the two Kindred were able to jump down without issue. Jacob squeezed through all the twigs and sharp stone like a snake, slick and smooth; she got a thousand cuts trying to follow him. But it was worth it.

The cave was, for a good long while, just a tunnel, but after a couple minutes of pressing forward through solid black, her Kindred eyes were suddenly forced to adjust to flickering brightness.

She thought her catacomb was metal, but whatever fucking insanity Jacob had set up in the cave was beyond humbling. The tiny tunnel expanded into a massive, absolutely colossal cavern. A thousand people could have fit in it, and when she glanced around, she could see there were tunnels that lead elsewhere. The floor of the cave had been smoothed out, like a beach stone, and the walls were not only smoothed out as well, they had holes carved into them. They held skulls, and the skulls served as the base for lit candles.

All along the walls of the rounded cave, there were bones hung in symmetrical arrangements. Where someone else may have hung paintings, or splurged on fancy sidings and curtains, the cave used bones. They weren't just put at random, but arranged as artwork themselves that drew her eye to the center of the room. Skulls were the theme, naturally, and some sort of fountain altar, lined with skulls up and down its rim and sides, stood in that center.

A couple of ghouls were walking around, nothing special about them, except they had brooms and clothes and were casually cleaning.

“ ... did you find this?”

“No. Decades of effort were required to carve this hole.” Jacob jumped across the whole of the massive room, and landed by the center altar, just opposite of her. She walked, walking was fine, but her eyes were drawn to that altar; as she approached, she could see it was filled with red liquid, thick and viscous.

On the way toward the altar, she glanced around. Many of the tunnel holes dug into the walls were actually just small rooms, some ground level and some higher, all rounded and filled with furs. And one of them had noises coming from them.

She took a peak at Jacob, but he just shrugged at her with a smirk, and looked into his bowl of blood. So she had the freedom to explore, did she? They probably figured she'd be too timid in the new surroundings, well fuck them. She walked toward the noise, got comfy in the doorway with her shoulder against the wall of stone, and folded her arms against her stomach.

“Beatrice.”

“ ... Othello. Haven't seen you in a while.” She tried to hide the shock in her voice, but it was true she hadn't seen the man in some time.

Othello was a dark-skinned fellow with delicate brown eyes, long black hair, and whoever had groomed him before embracing him had put him through a grueling training regimen. He was of average height, sure, but he was built like a tank. Steroid abuse had probably been in his history, when he was kine. He was a Daeva too, and as far as Beatrice knew, he was almost a century old, almost as old as Julias. He was one of their strongest Ancillae Kindred; he'd been a Carthian before he kinda just upped and left.

Apparently, he'd joined the Circle of the Crone. And apparently he was enjoying himself, as was the woman sitting on his lap. A curvy, short creature with clipped red hair was facing Beatrice, her back to Othello, with her legs spread and her ass grinding into his naked body. The Kindred was just sitting there, letting the girl do all the work, but judging from the noises she was making she was perfectly happy with that. The quiet Daeva's cock had spread her ass open, so the woman's cunt was on full display, and it was a mess of juices. The room smelled thick of her sex.

"Enjoying the view?" The big guy's hands reached out for the curvy little fox on his cock, and they started to drift and roam up and down her body. He made a showing of pinching her nipples, lifting her breasts by them to let them drop, jiggle a little too, before sliding down to her pussy. His fingers slipped into her cunt, and from how the girl started moaning, he was probably stroking her insides with his shaft deep in her ass.

Beatrice shook her head for a second to snap her eyes back up to Othello's; now was not the time to think about sex. But there wasn't any harm in looking, right?

"You could say I'm a little surprised. You witches just fuck like animals, all the time, no privacy?"

"We could have privacy, if we wanted," he said, "but we don't. No desire to. It's not really in the spirit of the Circle, is it?" Suddenly, the ghoul started squirming and mewling; Othello's fingers had started doing a number on her insides.

"... I suppose not." She took a peak around his room. Nothing in there except a mountain of furs to rest on, and fuck on.

More noises, but not from those two. She gave Othello a small nod, he returned it, and she moved on. She really, very much tried to not think of the girl having the anal sex with the fingering and the wriggling and the squirming and the cumming. Arg, she could smell sex, and it was making her hungry.

The next room with noises required a good thirty-foot jump to reach, but was otherwise the same, just a really large, carved-out nook in the wall of stone and bones. It was all smooth stone with a couple of skull candles in its walls, and a mountain of furs.

This time she found Jennifer. The Ventrue was only a decade embraced, a neonate, and they actually looked kind of similar with their ear-length raven hair that framed their face, average height, slightly dark skin, and slim, fighter physiques. Every time Beatrice saw her, it was a painful mirror of what she'd look like if she wasn't Nosferatu.

Jennifer's side was to the doorway, and she was laying down on her back on top of a man. And on top of her, was another man, and she had her legs spread around his hips.

“ ... you have got to me shitting me.”

“Oh, Beatrice. Jacob said he'd be bringing you here today.” Jennifer let out a quiet sigh of pleasure, and turned her head to look to the Nosferatu.

She didn't stop fucking though. In fact, the two men – ghouls, Beatrice assumed – just continued to fuck her and ignored Beatrice completely. Even knowing she was coming, Jennifer hadn't bothered to hold off her sexual desires until later. Everyone just went with their desires in the Circle, evidently.

“So you all really do just fuck like animals.” This time she did look away, but the image was already burned into her skull. One girl, two guys, six legs, the rhythmic back and forth of three sets of hips, and Jennifer's quiet, controlled sighs.

The Ventrue just laughed, and wrapped her hands to pull the man between her legs closer. “We are animals, just at the top of the food chain. I think we’re entitled to a few perks.” Spoken like a true Ventrue. “Come join me. My ghouls won’t mind a Nosferatu, what with Jacob terrorizing them regularly.”

The two men chuckled at that, but still didn’t stop. They’d buried their faces in the girl’s neck at that point, and just kept gently fucking the Kindred between them. It was all so surreal, the way their limbs all just entwined on each other, their bodies on the furs. Jennifer was apparently quite comfortable with the position, and she relaxed into their bodies while her hands roamed over one of the men’s back. The Ventrue angled her hips in just the right way, and raised her legs in just the right way, to keep everything moving in just a perfect pace of sexual god damn fucking beauty.

Well, Beatrice was definitely down with the Circle’s approach to sex. It took everything she had to look away, but she had a boyfriend now though. Shit, now she had thoughts of Julias, naked, doing things to her.

“Um, can’t, but ... I’ll ... uh ... talk to you later.”

She didn’t wait to hear whatever Jennifer had to say, or moan. She’d seen more naked bodies fucking in five minutes than she usually did in weeks of hunting, so that was enough sex thoughts for now. A second later she was down by Jacob.

“This is like, some Phantom of the Opera shit dude.” She gestured to the array of candles that lined the back wall. Unlike the other candles, the ones along the back were all sitting on hands of bone that jutted out from the wall, instead of sitting in a carved indent. “... if Erik had been even more horny. You all just fuck all the time?” Then she gestured to the holes-in-walls with the two Kindred and the sex noises.

Jacob just shrugged, like it were the most casual question. “My acolytes? Jennifer, Othello and Aaron do. The Circle encourages us to embrace our primal desires. You want to fuck? Fuck. You want to kill? Kill.”

She winced at that last part. “That where you got all these bones?”

“Indeed, from decades ago. I thought you would be comfortable with killing kine though. I know you have, many times.”

“Yeah but ... I did try to always make sure anyone I killed deserved it.”

That was enough to get Jacob laughing. He put a hand up to his salt and pepper hair, and raised it on the bandage that covered his eyeless eyes. “Don’t we all?”

“No, we don’t all, you jackass. I know some Kindred who are sickening.” She put her claws on the edge of his big blood altar, but her eyes were on him. “You think Tony or Viktor didn’t occasionally kill a kine, or maybe someone’s new childe, just because they could?”

“... ok, ok, but you said you wanted to sew some chaos. The fuck are you aiming for?”

“What do you know of the Circle of the Crone, Beatrice?” Jacob began to circle the altar then, and dragged his finger along the bowl’s edge where the skulls surrounded it.

“Fuck all, cause you’ve told me fuck all. All I know is that you’re all a bunch of primal fucks and ... that’s it. Carthians are trying to secure modern government for Kindred, with groups and votes and shit, while you disturbing weirdos would prefer anarchy.”

“Not anarchy.” He shook his head, dipped his hands into the bowl of blood, and then ran his fingers along the skulls of the altar. “Anarchy is bullshit. Freedom for everyone? Everyone gets to just do their own thing? Don’t make me laugh.” He laughed, and raised the finger to lick some of the blood off.

It was old blood, and most definitely not appetizing. Fucking gross.

“The Circle,” he continued, “wants us to accept what we are. And that’s it.”

“That some philosophical bullshit?”

“Not at all.” He stepped between her and the altar, and slipped his hands into his robes while he got comfortable leaning back against it. “Tell me, when you tore Rebecca apart with your claws, how did you feel?”

Shit, Rebecca. She’d sunk her Nosferatu claws right into that bitch’s back, when she was about to kill her man, and she’d torn her apart. “ ... fucking awesome.”

“Right? To get your nails right into someone and just destroy them in such a savage way. I’m sure you felt something deep down inside. I only wish my Nosferatu curse had given me such delightful claws.” Jacob ran his bloody fingers along his face then. His fingers looked normal, but he was forced to wear bandages over his eyes lest a kine see them, or lack there of.

She frowned. Her inner-beast had reveled in the bath of Kindred blood and ash, but it made no sense for Kindred to just give in to their beasts. Inner-beasts were mindless, incapable of keeping the Masquerade, and if the Masquerade fell, all Kindred everywhere would get wiped out; humans had this nasty perk of outnumbering Kindred ten million to one.

“Yeah, I get you. Fucking felt satisfying, but-”

“Not just satisfying. Don’t fucking lie to me, Beatrice.” He reached out and grabbed her hands. Now she had old, disgusting blood on her huge claws, but she didn’t try to remove her hands from his grip. She probably couldn’t if she tried. “It felt natural. Like instinct.”

“Instinct.” She raised an eyebrow, but Jacob gave her a long, waiting gaze. He wanted to know what she thought, no lies, and she had never really thought about it. When Rebecca was about to kill Julias, she’d just acted, no thought to it. Well fuck. “Then ... yeah, I guess. I mean I just ... just went with it.”

“Exactly! By the grace of God, she’s seen the light” He let go of her hands and raised his own, like a preacher giving praise to the lord, but the dopey and psychotic smile on his face betrayed him. “Someone wanted what was yours, so you tore them apart when you saw the opportunity.”

“Yeah ... so?”

“So? You ever seen an elder get their hands dirty like that?” He walked around the altar again until it was between them, and this time he kept his face pointed down at it. “You think a human, blood-cattle kine, would have the instinct to rip into someone like that, with their bare hands, or their teeth?”

She folded her arms across her chest and tapped her foot, but shook her head. “So elders are bitches, and we’re not like kine, is what you’re saying?”

“That is part of it. The Circle of the Crone is such a simple thing, such a straight forward thing, and there is only one binding view. Just one mother fucking thing you need to believe to be a member.” With that, he made a large sweeping gesture to the cavern around them. The furs of dead animals, the skulls and bones of dead kine, and the altar of blood before them. “That we’re natural.”

“Natural.”

“Natural! I get you said natural, ok? Fucking explain it.”

Her frustration just made the bastard laugh. “What else is there to explain? Do you think God reached down from the sky and cursed Vlad the Impaler, or Longinus and his spear, with undeath?”

“ ... no.”

“Do you think answers to our plight can be solved with governments, monarchies or democracies, totalitarians or councils or politics? You really think the Invictus or the Carthians will be able to carve out something worthwhile out of the clusterfuck of insanity that is a bunch of lone predators trying to live together and share food?”

“ ... no.”

“Do you think there is some hidden meaning to being a Kindred? Some explanation to our existence that will raise us to a new level of understanding?”

“ ... no.”

“Then you are no Ordo Dracul, Invictus, or Carthian. And thankfully, no Lancea et Sanctum either. Now perhaps, do you think that Kindred simply ... are? That we have been around for as long as kine, and we exist just as they do? Do you stare up at the night sky and think of God casting his judgments, or do you think the universe is just really fucking big, and you are one tiny fucking spec inside that infinite cosmos?”

Well, she didn't look up at the stars much, but yeah, that was exactly what she thought. She clicked her teeth to the side and blinked her snake eyes at him. “Sure.”

“And that is what we believe. We simply are what we are. Lone predators who have been hunting the kine since there were kine to hunt.”

She tapped her foot on the ground some more. “That's a lot of preaching and not much to do with it.”

“Too true, too true. The truth is, I have need of a right hand, such as the Invictus have.”

“Pretty sure Othello is a lot older than I am, Jacob.”

“Perhaps. He has value, but he does not have the same hunter's instinct as you, not the same...” he tapped his bloody finger on his lip, “affinity for brutality that you do. Like I do.”

She winced again, but found herself taking a small step back. The old Nosferatu loved to leave little implications like that laying around, like candy eggs or land mines.

“You realize you're asking me to leave the Carthians, right?”

“Garry is a friend ... of a sort. He will understand, and I do believe you'd prefer some of the tasks I have planned for you, over Garry's meaningless tests of territory with the Invictus.”

She did hate the stupid bickering the Carthians and Invictus had all the time. Kindred got hurt, sometimes killed, because someone didn't respect feeding grounds, and it was just a bunch of stupid political bullshit, red tape, and lies to get justice. Jacob had her pegged.

“Ok, alright, I admit you guys really got a thing going for you that I like. Maybe a little heavy on the Gothic shit,” she said with a motion to the walls decorated in bones, “and maybe a little heavy on the porn show,” and another motion to the rooms where Jennifer and Othello were getting off, “but yeah, you’re talking my language. I’ll give it a shot. What’s your test?”

Jacob gave a slow nod. His face turned serious, very serious, which was so very odd on his almost constant Joker expression.

“Lucas has risen from torpor, and that means there will be conflict soon.”

“Lucas?”

“An old friend from long ago. When the Prince was finally at the end of her patience, she expelled the Lancea et Sanctum, and killed the Bishops and Priests. Lucas, the Archbishop, disappeared, and no one was able to find him. We had simply assumed he left Dolareido, even me, but I was wrong.”

She just listened, and as he talked, her mouth dropped more, and more. He talked about it like it were the most casual thing, but he was talking about the purge of the Second Estate. It was well before Beatrice’s time, but she’d heard the stories. She knew about the Prince and the Sheriff, and the killings and the blood hunts. It was the the story Garry told them, when they questioned if they really needed to bother with any of the covenant bullshit.

“So he was in torpor?”

“Yes, deep in the bowels of the city. Only his childe Damien knew where.”

“How the fuck do you know all this?”

Again with the Joker smile. “This is not just the Prince’s city, as many would believe. It is also mine.” He shook his head then, and gave a long, slow, psychotic chuckle. “I like you. You’re fun.”

Every conversation with this insane Nosferatu elder was like some twisted vision of her future. If she lived another four hundred-years, would she be this ridiculous? She’d be strong enough to do whatever she wanted, but Jacob was so hard to follow.

“So your test is to confirm something for me. I want you to sneak into Tony’s underground network. I am sure that is where Lucas has set up his new nest. Then I want you to determine what you can about this childe of his.”

“You don’t know him?”

Jacob frowned, turned, and started to pace his altar of blood. “I don’t. This Damien, probably his new Bishop, is a sneaky creature. A sneaky Mehket is something to worry about.”

---

~~Julias~~

Sometimes, it disturbed Julias, how quickly he adapted to his new role.

Maria Turio and Michael McDonald seemed happy with him, at least. The Nosferatu ghost woman, and the big brute of a Gangrel slid into a rhythm with him that felt quite natural. They talked as a council, shared views, debated with intelligence, and even wisdom. His two fellow council members did not preach of meaningless values or views like a zealot would, like Viktor sometimes did with his mindless devotion to the Invictus.

It was pleasant. They could argue sometimes, but he was arguing with equals, and that was satisfying.

“Miss Amanda Pol and Master Jordan Leval have both disappeared.” Michael made a grand, sweep gesture to the giant touch screen that covered the wall. They were in their primary meeting room, at the top of the Xnomina HQ, and the three of them were standing and looking at the screen’s display of a map of Dolareido.

“They were only a few years embraced, still young neonates,” Maria said. “Perhaps they were caught unawares by sunrise?”

Julias shook his head. “I’d thought as much, but I’ve already asked their sires. They’d looked into it and both agreed it was highly unlikely. The two are simply gone.”

Michael grumbled, adjusted his tie, and leaned forward until he’d placed a hand against the wall, beside the wall display. “Last seen here.” He reached out with his other hand, and drew a circle on the display around a chunk of South Side. The display app circled it in red for him.

“Near Tony’s district.” Julias got up and stood next to Michael. They were both tall, broad guys in suits, but Julias standing next to Michael felt like standing next to a barely-contained wild animal. He was a Gangrel though, so Julias was just going to have to get used to standing shoulder to shoulder with him.

“Tony’s gone, and Rebecca’s gone. We know of no one else in his flock of covenant-less fools who would be both strong enough, and stupid enough to kidnap or kill our Kindred.”

“Then perhaps something else is going on?” Maria walked around the table to join them. Now the ghost woman was on his other side, looking like a freshly dragged river corpse as usual. Just being near her was enough for Julias to feel the unnatural cold pour off her.

“We’ve seen unusual activity from the anarchists. Even without their leader, they are doing something. They scout their area like it were still their territory.”

Michael grunted. “Without Tony or Rebecca to stop us, why don’t we just march in there and stake them? Put them out for sunrise one at a time, one kill a day, until one of them tells us what we want to know. They have no covenant to claim them, so the Prince will not mind.”

Julias shook his head. Staking a vampire in the heart paralyzed them, forced them into torpor until the stake was removed, so Michael’s plan would certainly work. But hell no. “They’re all neonates, Mister McDonald. Tony was the only elder, and Rebecca their only ancillae. They are just children.”

“No, they are not.” Maria was the one to frown this time, and the tiny corpse looked up him from behind her flat, black hair. “Do not let your new role as sire cloud your judgment, Mister Mire. Unless I am correct, your childe was quite thorough in undoing the damage of an error on their first night. Beheading the kine corpse, I believe, of someone he’d killed in frenzy. Not childish behavior.”

Invictus had good memories. “... he did, yes. Master Terry is not as easily broken as most fledglings though.”

“Perhaps, Mister Mire. Perhaps. But the fact remains, we should not underestimate them, or be lenient simply because they are young. They had every opportunity to join the Invictus, even the Carthians.” Then she gave a small smile, which was all sorts of disturbing on her quiet face. “Even if they’d joined the Circle of the Crone, at least they would have been a known factor.”

“Then I suggest we investigate first,” he said. He stepped closer to the screen, and drew several lines along rooftops and subways. “We send two or three Kindred we can trust to handle themselves. They can report back, and we can make an informed decision then.”

Julias gave a small nod, and looked to the animal on his right. “We do not survive centuries by jumping to conclusions.”

That earned a small smile from Michael too. Julias always knew what to say to make them happy, and get his way. He really did have a knack for this; Viktor would have been proud.

---

Natasha and Jessy walked in, and Julias gave them both a small nod. He was leaning back against the table of the meeting room, while Michael and Maria sat further back at the table. They were there to listen, nothing more, he hoped.

Little Natasha, the Mehket, and Maria’s right hand. A bit short, with long black hair and dainty features, he worried she’d one day wake up and find her skeleton had cracked in half. She really was too thin, but she was fifty-years embraced; it was far too late to tell her to eat a sandwich. She was in a casual gray business suit, pants and single-button jacket over a white shirt. It was so plain, so Mehket. She reminded him of the sheriff.

Then of course there was Jessy. Short blonde hair that, he had to admit, looked pretty sexy on her boxer figure. She was almost as tall as him, and had no trouble meeting his eyes and trying to stare him down; she reminded him of a panther. She too was in a suit, black, but her jacket was open, her shirt unbuttoned enough to show some of the black bra underneath, and a pair of sunglasses hung in the pocket. She even had a gold necklace that trickled down between her breasts, and long gold earring chains.

Thirty-years out-of-date fashion sense, but that was alright. He knew what that was like.

“Madame Vola,” he nodded to Natasha. “Madame Herrington.” Another nod for Jessy. Using titles of address was proper for Kindred in the Invictus, whenever discussing things in an official capacity, but for the moment, he just wanted to rub their noses in his success. What good was there in being on the triumvirate if you couldn’t tease your old comrades.

They both give him back their own, weird, slightly embarrassed nods.

“M-mister Mire. You summoned us?” Natasha said.

“Indeed. I have a mission for you two.” He walked over to the digital map on the wall; for a second, he reminded himself of Viktor, strategizing and giving orders. “Miss Pol and Master Leval have gone missing. Last we heard, they were hunting near Tony’s old grounds.” He circled the large chunk of South Side where Tony used to nest. It was prime black market territory, with a lot of bars and a lot of dark alleys that made the alleys of the business district seem tame.

Natasha took a tiny step forward. “T-that...”

“Madame Vola?”

“Yesterday, my childe Vivienne ... Miss Maiorie ... she did not report in. I had assumed she had simply forgotten, lost in her w-w-work.” Natasha looked down, then to the side when worry painted itself on her face. “Her apartment is near there.”

Julias looked back at Michael and Maria. Now things were personal for one of his chosen, but the two of them dismissed it with a slight wave of their hands.

“Keep an eye open for Miss Maiorie then, but understand your primary objective is to determine what happened to Miss Pol and Master Leval. We know Tony and Rebecca are dead, but he had a lot of underground networks built over the centuries. There are entire labyrinths we should get mapped, later. For now, we just need to know what's going on that's caused our young neonates – three now – to go missing. The moment you can answer that question, return here.”

“Come on Julias, you can't expect us to—”

“Did I stutter, Madame Herrington?”

Cold did not do justice the tone of his voice. Jessy was a powerful, willful Gangrel, but her impulsive bullshit was a liability. He could nearly feel Michael smiling behind him; Jessy's sire was more than happy with his approach to crushing Jessy's juvenile stupidity.

“ ... no, Mister Mire.”

“The operation is to begin tomorrow night, two hours after sunset. You have the rest of the night to prepare.”

“Something happened. I trust our Invictus neonates to be more than punctual with their check-ins. So if they're not checking in, then...” He shrugged, and gestured to the map on the wall again. “Just be prepared.”

“Yes, Mister Mire,” the two right hands said in unison. After a small nod, they both turned and were gone.

Julias sat back against the table, and kept his eyes on the map. What was going on? There were no attacks against Xnomina lately, no trouble with the Carthians on Invictus borders. Everything was quiet. Even Jacob, or his Circle of the Crone group, hadn't caused any trouble lately.

“What do you think you'll find?” Maria said, her elbows on the table, fingers netted and chin on her knuckles.

“Honestly? I've no fucking idea.” Julias ran his fingers through his blonde hair, slick backed against his head. “If it were werewolves, there would be a lot more damage than a few missing neonates.”

But Julias and Maria both shook their head.

“I can't see a pattern. Until we have one, we can't push forward on this,” he said.

“Indeed,” Maria said. “In the meantime, I would like to discuss the ball the Prince has planned. The Carthians will be there, Garry will be there...”

Julias tried to listen, but his mind wandered to thoughts of Natasha and Jessy. Normally he'd be going with them, and he kind of missed the thrill of going on a mission. He'd been in dozens of fights with Tony's anarchists, and sometimes the Carthians when they got rough. Deaths were rare, but they happened, and the last thing he wanted was his old partners coming back in urns.

Part of his promotion was getting Viktor's old mansion, and now that he had it, he had no idea what to do with it.

It was a classic thing, something built a ways out along the edge of South Side where only the most filthy rich lived, where there was actual space for roads, small hills, and grandiose buildings. There was no official name for the district, but most simply called it Rich Side, and the multitude of hills it was built on were enough to raise the heights of his mansion so his window view saw over much of the city. And he did find himself staring out that window on a regular basis, with both hands netted behind his back.

He'd seen Viktor stand like this a million times, but he never imagined himself doing it.

When he looked down behind him, he got flashes of the Victorian era. Massive, curling stairways lead down into spacious rooms with classic furnishings. There were no TVs here, all electronics were hidden and subtle, and his front door was a giant pair of wooden doors. There were pillars of white, carpets with ornate patterns of red and gold, and all sorts of extra rooms that were useless. He did not need six bathrooms. He barely needed the one.

And when someone knocked, they used a door knocker that sounded like a club against a church bell. With a groan, he stepped away from the window, walked down the stairs, and headed for the door. He'd seen the car pull up, but his mind was wandering, and his body just went on auto-pilot mode to open the door.

It snapped back to awareness with jarring effect when he found the Prince at his door. The tall, gorgeous woman was dressed in something white and furry, and it matched her white hair and red lips well. Her red eyes made her look like she'd stepped out of a movie.

“Prince! I, uh ... how can I help you?”

“I was hoping we could talk, Mister Mire. May I come in?”

“Yes ma'am.” He stepped back and held the door for her. She returned his words with a nod, a smile, and walked into his abode. She paused for a moment to give her driver a small wave, and when Julias peaked his head out to see, he bit his cheek at the sight of the sheriff.

He could count on one hand the amount of times he'd had a direct conversation with the Prince, and now she was at his place. At his actual place, and her sheriff was waiting for her when she was done. He tried to suppress the aching fear his beast was emitting.

“Would you enjoy a drink, Prince?” Be kind, be courteous. He had the leeway to be an aggressive negotiator in a primogen meeting, but he had no such room to maneuver when it was just the two of them.

“Thank you, but I am fine.” She gave a small dismissal with one of her hands; she was wearing white, elbow-length gloves. “How is your new home, Julias? Viktor’s old-fashioned taste must be quite boring for you.” She gave him a devilish grin before she walked over to one of the couches – some sort of massive, Victorian lounge chair, he believed – and sat down. “It does remind me of my previous home, oh so long ago. Such faded memories.”

The lounge chair had plenty of room, so at least it didn't feel awkward when he sat down on its other end and angled himself to face her. “I forget sometimes that you are from Europe, from a different time. Your Elysium tower, and most of the architecture in Elysium seems much more modern.”

“Ah, Mister Mire, I do strive to ride the waves of fashion as best I can. It can be hard, when you are as old as I.”

She was a master at manipulation. She'd adjusted the conversation so he knew how old she was, ancient even, while making it seem like it was a weakness, instead of something that gave her massive power. He wasn't about to simply ask her what she wanted though. It'd borderline on rude, even though it was all he could think about.

“Viktor made no effort to change with the times. I had no idea he was so obsessed with the past until I’d inherited this home. This entrance lobby is just the tip of the iceberg. He has rooms dedicated to reliving ages past,” he said.

“Has he now?”

Julias nodded. “I’m sure there is clothing and jewelry here worth more than this house, and he has them on display in glass casings.”

“Oh Viktor, you always had your eyes to the ground.” The Daeva gave Julias a knowing glance, and even a soft smile, like she were apologetic about something. “I am sorry for this talk of Viktor. I did not come to discuss your sire past. I came to discuss your childe.”

You mean that you’re dating my childe and basically have me by the balls because of it? He almost said it, too. “I ... am not sure that is my business, Prince.”

“Of course it is your business. He is your childe. You wish to protect him. He is also a member of the Invictus, while am I Ordo Dracul; our relationship is highly peculiar and you deserve to have any concerns voiced, or questions answered.”

Well, this was going to be a weird, painful conversation. He’d planned on approaching her about this, not the other way around.

“ ... this is all true, Prince, but I can only be so frank.”

“Say whatever you wish, however you wish. I grant you complete freedom of speech, Mister Mire.” She raised a gloved hand to her red lips, and touched one of her fangs while she looked at him with an analyzing eye. “For now.”

Was she trying to get him to talk himself into a corner? Those red eyes of hers were so damn hard to read. She just held his gaze, and each time her gaze shifted from one of his own eyes to the other, he could practically see the thousand possibilities she was calculating. If he said the wrong thing, he could make a powerful enemy. But on the other hand, her proposal seemed genuine enough, logical, and he had no reason to distrust her motives other than her impenetrable veil of secrecy.

Damn Dragons.

“Alright, if that is true. Then ... may I ask ... why?”

“Why what?”

“Why Jack?”

She raised a brow. “ ... why Beatrice?”

God mother fucking damn her. Did she know everything? He hadn't brought the relationship up to anyone, and the Nosferatu was good at the shadow arts.

“Beatrice ... why Beatrice.” He raised a hand to his hair, and let his eyes drift to the carpet. He'd never really thought about why. Can you put into words what draws a kine to gaze into fire? “She's captivating. She ... she's so different than me. She cares nothing for politics, or Kindred webs. Brutal, genuine, direct, all those things I've forgotten how to be, if I ever was...” A smile forced its way onto his lips. He tried to hide it, but he couldn't. Just the thought of that damn shark-mouth and her brazen attitude, calling him out on his bullshit and forcing him to ... to be alive, it was something he wanted more of.

“There is a secret, Julias dear, that I have told no one.” She leaned forward then, and folded one leg over the other. He hadn't noticed her white high heels; she really did have great fashion sense. “You and I are much alike.”

“ ... I'm sorry?”

“I first met Jack when he failing at something that came naturally to you, or me. Failing to manipulate kine for an easy meal. And when he saw me, he froze in fear as many do.” She gave him a grinning wink then. He was one of those people who froze at the sight of her too. “How many fledglings do you imagine could suffer the fear of meeting someone nearly five centuries their elder?”

But his words just made Antoinette chuckle, and she looked to the floor while she traced a finger along her knee. “Jack did. He sat next to me in that booth, and it was then I noticed a strange thing. Something I’d never seen in another Kindred.”

Julias blinked, and tilted his head to the side.

“Jack was afraid of me,” she said, “but he was also intrigued. It was all over him, every gesture, every glance, every noise. His eyes spoke volumes, honest and open, and it was indeed captivating. He has a spark in him, Julias, that you found when he was still alive. The boy has an honest soul, and a determined one.” She chuckled again, but followed it with a longing sigh that had Julias shocked. “And I know you see similar in Beatrice. The reason she despises our webs of deceit and control is because she too is an honest, determined soul.”

“Honest. Determined ... you summarize people very well in few words,” he said.

“Only because I have been doing it for much, much longer than you.” She righted her gaze at him then, and a harsh edge joined it. “You would do well to hold onto Beatrice. She has that inner fire that will warm your cold insides. As Jack will mine.”

He did not like that predator look in her eyes. “Are you saying I’m using Beatrice, and you’re using Jack?”

“We all use each other, Julias, but that does not mean I don’t hold Jack in my arms, and wish happiness upon him. I want nothing more than what is best for Master Terry,” she said, Invictus title and all, “and I will fight for that.” She stood then, and looked down at him. He couldn’t bring himself to meet her gaze just then, like she were some goddess casting her gaze down at him from on high.

She was grabbing what she wanted, she wasn’t going to let go, and if he stood in the way, she’d destroy him.

But, after a while, she let out a slow sigh. “I am sorry. I made that sound a threat, and I did not mean that. I only wished to say...”

He raised his eyes to blink at her, surprised. The Prince was embarrassed about something. She was even squirming a little.

“To say that Jack is precious to me, Julias, and that is a feeling I have not felt since before your existence. Do you understand what that means to me?”

“I ... I don’t think I can.”

“I believe you do, Julias. It is why you sired Jack in the first place, no? You sensed in him that fire that warmed your cold, dying soul.” She reached out, and poked him in the forehead. It was the first time she’d ever touched him.

She sure was Daeva. Disgustingly, unabashedly poetic, but painfully truthful.

“If you do not wish to become Viktor, a broken and paranoid man with no humanity in his withered, dead insides, you will fight for Beatrice, as I will fight for Jack. And I do not wish Viktor’s fate upon you, Julias. You are a kind man, and one I would like to keep in my city.” Again she sighed, and reached up to pull her main of hair over her fur scarf and down her chest so she could comb it with her fingers. “Forgive my ranting. Do you have anymore questions?”

The fuck could he ask after that? A single conversation and she'd made him feel like he was a teenager barely passed puberty, getting a lecture from his mom about love.

"I'm not sure. I ... I'm glad, that you think so highly of Jack. I really do love that kid," he said.

She smiled, was about to say something, but stopped herself. "... I owe you, Julius. I cannot grant you a boon that would affect the covenants, but whatever personal favor you can think of, please, ask of it."

He just blinked at her. He was doing a lot of that, but Antoinette was not someone he could control in conversation. "If I think of something I will. Thank you."

"You are most welcome, Mister Mire." She gave a small bow, turned, and headed toward the door.

Before he knew what he was doing, he was up and opening the door for her. For a moment, he thought maybe she'd bewitched him into opening the door, but when she gave him a smile, another nod, and walked on, he knew she hadn't. She just had that affect on people.

"Ah, Prince?"

She stopped, ten feet from the doorway, and looked up the stone pathway up to him. "Yes, Mister Mire?"

"The Ordo Dracul, do you-"

"Don't worry, Mister Mire." She tapped her lips in a mocking shh. "Master Terry is Invictus, and it would be decades before I could even open those doors to him. You have nothing to worry about on that front."

He sighed with relief, and gave a nod of his own before watching her go. Well, at least that one was thing he didn't have to worry about; she wouldn't steal Jack that way, and she wasn't stealing the other neonates either.

Then where the hell were they?

~~Natasha~~

“Man that Julias has a big pair of balls on him.” Jessy said. She was smart enough to keep her voice down, but the Gangrel kept getting louder and louder until Natasha had to poke her in the ribs. She'd had to a few times now.

“He is Viktor's childe, after all.” It was so much easier to not stutter when it was just the two of them. “And he was right. It was the right plan.”

“Fuck, doesn't mean he should talk down to us like that.”

Natasha smiled up at the Gangrel next to her. It was just the two of them, and they'd worked their way down the subway tunnels. Natasha was happy to wear one of her typical suits, but Jessy was much happier going all out. She'd put on leather, and all sorts of weird layers of straps, belts, and vests over top of it. It was some sort of modern, secret military espionage armor, probably, maybe. It looked cool, but kind of silly too.

But then, Natasha was the one with a silenced pistol in her hand, and a short sword on her side. To each their own.

She'd kept the two of them hidden from eyes with her cloak of night. If there was at least one thing she could do right, it was hide them from prying eyes, even with Jessy's loud voice. Julias trusted her with stealth, even for infiltration, and that made her smile.

“I still c-can’t believe Viktor is dead, and Tony. You think Julias did it?”

“Maybe.” Jessy shrugged. “Or his little kid Jack. See that kid? Christ he’s tiny.”

“Hey.” Natasha frowned up at her partner.

The Gangrel laughed down at her, and even put a gloved hand on her head to toy with her hair. “Tiny little thing like you? Bit different than with a guy. A small guy like that, all I can think is, his dick must be the size of a used-up pencil. You though? Guys are thinking ‘hot damn, she’d be so fucking tight.’”

Her friend knew no shame, and Natasha could swear she was blushing, even without the blush of life going. “He’s dating the Prince.”

“I know!” she yelled, and Natasha was quick to give her another jab in the side. “Sorry, sorry. But yeah, she’s so damn tall, and she’s a pretty curvy thing you know? The hell she doing with that pipsqueak?”

“Size isn’t everything.” She shook her head. Why was she having this conversation? It was such boy talk, talking about penis sizes and breast sizes and vagina sizes. “And besides, biological differences in size of genitalia are not correlated with frame height at a one-to-one ratio in an adult. His penis size is probably of adequ – are you making fun of me?”

Jessy had started using her hand as a fake mouth, and was flapping it in the air in front of her. “Nerd.”

“Barbarian.”

“Geek.”

“Philistine.”

“Butch.”

“Hey hey, now that’s below the belt.” Jessy gave her a frown, and used both her hands to adjust her hair a bit. “Shit, you got me all self conscious now.”

They had to slip through some very old tunnels, older holes, into ancient tunnels that weren’t even used anymore. Tony’s underground network was very, very old. But at least it was sturdy. Without a fear of a rock falling on their head, they were free to stick to the shadows of the pillars that held the tunnel up, and once they were beyond any lights, there was only darkness. Eventually it got so dark that even Kindred eyes could barely see. But that’s where Natasha was her most comfortable.

She could see where others could not; an unnatural talent for the auspex, her sire had said. Jessy called it Sith sight.

Natasha smiled at the thought, but a noise down the way had her reaching up to grab Jessy, and she pulled her down into a crouch along the railway. Voices rolled off the walls up ahead from far ahead. Natasha crept closer.

Light was starting to bounce off the rocks of the large tunnel, but thankfully its curving nature and metal pillars gave them something to hide behind. Not that they needed it, as Natasha kept the cloak of night upon them both, but better safe than sorry. She crept from corner to corner of the curling tunnel, to pillar to pillar, until the tunnel straightened out and finally, they both could see a gateway.

It was odd. Deep down, under the earth, in old abandoned tunnels, they’d found what looked quite majestic. The tunnel ceiling rose so the gate had room to stand tall, a pair of pillars of dark metal with a beam that connected them above. But the metal had been shaped into ornate curves that looked like something that would belong in the Prince's Elysium. It was definitely Tony's nest, complete with electric lanterns that dangled from hooks and gave off gentle white light.

And they could hear people talking. Not just talking, Natasha noticed, but talking casually. They were ... happy? She pressed forward, but stepping out into the light and through a gate was not so easy. Her cloak of night drained her, and doing it so openly was exhausting, but if Vivienne was in there, or Amanda or Jordan, she had to find out.

So they walked through the gate. Jessy kept low, stuck to her side, and behind a little. They'd worked together for over a decade, had developed great synergy, so all they had to do was make small gestures at each other or tap each other on the shoulder to communicate. They stuck to the walls of what had become a hallway, plain and metal like everything so deep underground, but the further they got into the lit tunnel, the more it became not-so plain. More of the electronic lanterns hung from the walls. Carvings and engravings of ornate, meaningless patterns decorated the floor and ceiling.

And then the hallway opened up into a giant room. All it took was a glance left or right to see it was a series of several massive lobbies connected by doorways similar to the one they'd found to enter the complex. There were chairs, there were tables, there were lights and doors with names on them, some open and some closed. And there were ghouls and Kindred walking around, young neonates all of them, minding their own business and chatting with each other. They had smiles on their faces, and many had a large book in their hand.

Vivienne. Her childe was sitting at one of the tables, chatting with Jordan, and Amanda too. Others were at the table, Kindred she did not recognize, but none of them were a threat. Now that she looked around at the strange group of Kindred, perhaps nearly fifty, with another fifty ghouls, she sort of recognized them, if only in passing. Tony's brood. The anarchist had a thing for collecting souls for his personal use, she knew, but his brood never looked happy whenever she saw them.

They looked happy now. So too did the three missing Invictus neonates. Vivienne, a small and quiet little thing like her, was laughing openly, loudly even, with her fellow missing Invictus, and the others.

What was going on? She almost said it, but they were too close to make a sound; even her cloak of night wouldn't be able to hide everything from so close. Jessy and her kept to the hallway, with its metal pillars serving as something to hide behind, but they couldn't do this for long. Natasha looked at Jessy, but the Gangrel just shrugged at her and mouthed 'your call.'

The Mehket bit her lip, and poked her head out to look further down the way. One direction lead through another large lobby, with its own doors along its side – bedrooms, she guessed – and the other direction opened to a lobby filled with pews. Pews?

And then two men walked out. One of them was of average height, average build, and all around forgettable if not for his hair; she kind of liked the look of it, one side shaved clean, the other half with long black hair. A Mehket, and judging from what her inner-beast felt at the sight of him, one of similar age to her.

She contemplated talking to him. He did seem like a guy she'd want to talk to. He had a nice, gentle face, and plain clothes; just jeans and a blue shirt.

The man he was talking to was a fledgling, a Daeva not even a week old. A freshly embraced Kindred. A smiling, freshly embraced Kindred. It was unsettling to see so many content faces.

“Bishop, I worry about my role in all this. You—”

“Jonathan, you spend far too much time worrying about things beyond your control.” This Bishop fellow put his arm around the fledgling’s shoulder. “Your purpose is clear, and the Archbishop and I will help you with any problems you may have serving in that purpose.”

“So, I mean ... I just...”

“Serve your sire. She will teach you how to seduce kine with but a glance, and you can feed upon them as God demands we should. You are the wolf, and they are God’s sheep.”

“God’s sheep. But then, I don’t understand why we’re supposed to feed on them, and even kill them sometimes...”

“Read the Testament of Longinus. And then, once it has confused you, read it again. And then once you are confused even more, come talk to me,” the man said with a chuckle, and gave the fledgling a pat on the back. “But for now, simply know that human kind has sinned, corrupted to the core by Adam and Eve. Earth is their prison, and we their tormentors. Only through total devotion to God will the sheep find salvation, and by preying upon them as the wolf, we will force them to put their faith in the shepherd.”

Natasha managed a half-smile half-frown. He had a lovely voice, but his words were a loud warning. Lancea et Sanctum. She’d never met one, how could she since the Prince had banished their covenant from the city. It was when she was first embraced, half a century ago, and she could only barely remember the conflict. But there had been violence, and a lot of it.

And then the Bishop looked straight at her.

She jumped. Jessy jumped too, hand on Natasha’s shoulder. But it was enough signal for the two of them to immediately turn around, and run. Natasha dropped her cloak of night, ready to put all her speed to use, but she froze.

The Bishop was already behind them, with his head tilted to the side so his half-head of hair hung over the shaved side. He was fast! Faster than most Mehket. Faster than her. “I am surprised. It has been not even two weeks since Tony’s death, and already scouts have come for his place?”

“Well you fuckers stole three of our-”

Natasha elbowed Jessy in the side. Her friend talked way too much.

“Oh? Three? Then you are Invictus. You speak of Amanda, Jordan, and Vivienne,” the bishop said, and gestured behind them.

“... Sire?” Vivienne said. The three Invictus members, and a couple dozen Kindred and ghouls stepped up to circle them, but only through sheer intrigue.

“... Vivienne. I’m g-g-glad ... you’re well.” Neither she nor her childe could look each other in the eye. Guilt dripped from Vivienne’s face like tears, and Natasha was forced to look away to avoid it. She’d been betrayed, but it need not be said.

Jessy, of course, was more than willing to say it. “So what’s up you fucks? The fuck is going on here? Lancea et Sanctum shit? The Second Estate was banned from Dolareido.”

“We ... we...” Vivienne tried to talk, but Amanda stepped up.

Amanda Pol, Gloria Jennings’ childe, another Mehket of the Invictus, stood her ground. “They’ve started again, and we’ve joined. We’re a family here, we belong, and—”

“And nothing you stupid little shit. You don’t just vanish without a word. Now I don’t give a fuck about what church boy here,” Jessy gestured to the bishop behind her, “or his ‘family’ want to do, or whether they exist, but you owe the Invictus. You’re coming with us, and you’re going to explain everything.”

“I’m afraid I can’t allow that.” Damien reached behind him, and slowly withdrew a sword. It was an elegant piece, sleek, modern, and he held it with a confidence that had Natasha almost trembling. “Please, do not force me to kill you. Surrender, and no one will be harmed. Once my sire is back, he can decide how to deal with this situation. We want only peace.”

Sire? She’d figured this Mehket had avoided notice due to his young age, but if he had a sire, she was thoroughly confused. She knew of no one old enough to be this boy’s sire except for the sheriff. And he most definitely was not the sheriff’s.

“Two against one, fucking priest.” Jessy took a step forward, hunched over slightly, and pointed her hands down. With an almost sickening tear of leather, large claws erupted from her fingers and through her gloves.

“... Invictus Gangrel, I pity your sire. Your counting ability leaves much to be desired.”

Jessy and Natasha looked back to the crowd that surrounded them. The two of them were at the entrance to the hallway that lead out of the weird underground complex, but the Bishop was in the hallway blocking them, and behind them was a growing half-ring of Kindred. The former Invictus neonates did not join in, but that didn’t stop Tony’s old brood from stepping up.

And Tony’s old brood didn’t seem too upset by the prospect of beating up some Invictus.

Natasha put on her biggest frown, pathetic as it was, and walked up to the bishop. She motioned for Jessy to cover their six, and the Gangrel gave an annoyed grunt before turning to face the oncoming neonates.

“Alright, so no violence? And we c-can’t leave?”

“Correct. Please submit. You will only be detained until my sire returns, and then he can determine what to do. He wants only peace for the Lancea et Sanctum.”

She gave a small smile. He really did have a nice voice.

He didn’t make a sound when she shot him between the eyes, and collapsed with a large hole in his forehead.

A silencer did not reduce a gunshot to quiet levels, not even close. Instead, it was just not ear-splitting loud, so the score of Kindred behind her did not hesitate to jump forward and tackle them when she fired. To their surprise though, Jessy also did not hesitate to throw herself against the tide.

“You stupid fucks!” She grabbed one of them by the throat – she did not spare her claws – and smashed their skull into the floor and walls. Natasha turned to face Jessy, only to look away at the sight of a Kindred’s skull splitting open.

It wouldn’t kill a Kindred, but it’d be a close call with second death for any fledgling. But, to Natasha’s surprise, it didn’t deter them. In fact, a few of them threw themselves at Jessy, and Natasha was forced to step back and away from the cluster of limbs fighting and scraping.

“Get off of me! Fucking vermin!”

Those poor Kindred, they didn't know. They may have known who Jessy was, but none of them had seen her fight, not really. Natasha stepped back a little further, and made room.

One of the Kindred flew straight up and into the ceiling, and her arm was missing. Another was thrown back and into the lobby, through several chairs and tables and ghouls. The ghouls were not so sturdy as to not break limbs on contact with the flying body. Another Kindred lost a leg, and Jessy screamed murder at those on top of her and drove the limb into one of them like a baseball bat.

There were too many though. Too many. Get out get out, they had to get out. Don't panic, Natasha. Look at Vivienne, what's she doing? She's just watching, scared. This doesn't need to get worse, just get out.

Then Damien got back up.

“That ... hurt...”

She squealed with a jump, but Damien's hand was around her throat and pinning her to the wall before she got two inches into the air. From so close, she got to see the hole in his forehead close itself. The Bishop, this fellow Mehket, was strong. Too strong. His grip was tight enough around her throat to break skin, and his other hand was on his sword and raising it to her eye.

But she still had her gun in her hand, and she raised it to try and shoot him again. All she got for her efforts was a sword through the palm that stuck her hand to the wall. She screamed.

“Natasha! Shit, get the fuck off of me,” Jessy said. Natasha couldn't see the her, not with Damien pinning her by the throat against the wall. But she could hear the crunch of bone, tearing clothes, and ripped skin coming from her friend's direction. Jessy was not happy.

“I said no harm would come to you if you surrendered, and I was not lying. But I cannot fault you for your caution. The flock will detain your friend, and you will come with me. Understand?”

“You ... you can't expect me to-”

“Tell your friend to stand down.”

“No. We – aaar!” This time, Damien removed the sword and stabbed her clean through the stomach and into the wall. All thoughts of reaching for her sword to counter attack were washed away by the splitting pain of a blade skewering her insides.

“One more time. Please, ask your friend to stand down.”

“ ... Jessy ... can—”

A blur cut straight down from Damien's side. A massive blur that moved the air as it past, before slamming into the ground hard enough to make the walls ring.

“Aaaaaarg!”

The noise didn't come from Damien. Damien was gone. Natasha had to close her eyes from the spray of blood, and it wasn't warm kine blood either. There was Kindred blood in the air, and it splattered over her face before soon fading to ash. Whatever that blur was, it had forced Damien away with all the subtlety of a truck.

The sword had been pulled from her gut, but to the side and harsh enough to cut her guts open, forcing her to hold onto her belly while she collapsed. Damien had held onto the sword, when Jessy had pounced him.

Jessy. Damien. She looked to the group of Kindred, but they were a pile of bodies and groans struggling to get their senses back. When she looked to the other side, it was a frenzy of movement and madness. All she could do was drag herself along the floor away from them, with a trail of Kindred blood and ash behind her.

Damien had his sword, and he was blocking and slashing with the speed of a Mehket, but Jessy continued to push forward toward him with wild insanity. She'd let her Gangrel side out, and it was enough to have Natasha back away from them both. Jessy's claws had grown to immense lengths, and had become serrated like something from a horror movie. Her skin had darkened, and her posture was hunched to the point she was leaping and pouncing around like some sort of beast. When Damien managed to land his sword upon her, it did wound the Gangrel, but didn't slow her down. It was like poking a crazed, bloodthirsty animal with a stick, and all it did was make Jessy scream with rage.

Jessy's massive claws had already cut Damien's chest open — it must have been the attack that had dislodged Damien from Natasha — and it was not a clean wound. Those claws ripped and tore and shredded.

“Jessy, be careful!”

But Jessy was barely there. “I'll kill you! You don't touch her, ever!” Jessy roared, screamed, gave voice to that inner-beast they all kept hidden, and let out her Gangrel side. “Never touch her!” When those massive claws on Jessy's hands found metal, they sliced through it with heavy, monstrous swings. Each time, Damien had to dodge, and if it weren't for his Mehket speed, the crazed woman would have rendered him a splattered mess in a single hit.

For a moment, she thought of the Nosferatu Beatrice, and her claws. These were ten fold that size.

“Ah!” Natasha fell down, and turned over to find a couple of the Kindred had jumped her. One of them was missing an eye now, a fresh wound, but the neonates were determined. Like brave soldiers, or crazed zealots.

“Pin her down! We have to get her back and into one of the cells. Lucas will be happy,” the neonate said.

Lucas? She didn’t know the name. Damn it, they were too heavy for her, and she’d dropped her gun. Her sword was still on her, but she couldn’t get it, they were grabbing her hands and pinning her down, punching and kicking all the while.

“Jessy! Help!”

“Quickly children, get her to the cells!” Damien lunged forward, and sank his sword into Jessy’s neck.

Jessy screamed rage, fury, loud enough that it shook the walls.

“Jessy!”

Damien pushed the sword forward. “Don’t make me kill you, Invictus. I—”

Natasha twisted her head to see as best she could; Jessy had turned her neck into the blade so badly that Kindred blood was actually dripping down her body, but she’d bit down onto the Bishop’s sword, hard. It was enough to get the shocked Damien to hold still for that split moment, and that was all Jessy needed take one large swing with her hands and land those monstrous claws on him.

He let go. He jumped back with that same, insane speed he’d used to get behind them, but it wasn’t enough, not completely. Jessy’s claws managed to sink their way into his chest, and he spun backward into a heap on the floor with four new, massive gashes along his skin.

“Lucas is here! Hold them!” Another Kindred said as he rounded the corner. He had no idea. No idea at all.

The random Kindred probably didn't even register it when Jessy leaped at him. Her claws crashed down onto the unsuspecting man, and in that single slash, she cut him from head to his waist so he fell apart into three chunks of shredded meat. He was too young to turn to ash upon second death, and instead rotted away to decayed flesh before their very eyes until he was bone.

“What? What's going—”

Jessy wasted no time. Her boxer reflexes knew what to do, Natasha was sure; you followed up a hit with another, and Jessy's other hand swiped out horizontally against the two Kindred holding Natasha down. It was a blood bath. Natasha closed her eyes as fast as she could, just so she wouldn't see the two young Kindred nearly explode from the impact of the serrated claws.

For just a split moment, Natasha thought Jessy might attack her next. Those eyes were crazed, frenzied, as if she had given into her inner-beast completely and just let the madness consume her. But she scooped Natasha up, held her to her friend's bigger body, and hooked her arms around her neck and shoulders before tossing her onto her back.

Before she knew it, Jessy was running on all fours, back out the way they came. The light faded quickly, but Natasha could only wish Jessy ran faster. Once blackness covered them, Natasha did her best to guide her partner, but it was like trying to guide a rampaging bull. Jessy even crashed against the tunnel walls with enough force to crack stone, but her body was heavier now, her skin thicker, her bones harder, and she just kept running.

“What the fuck was I supposed to do? We don’t know who the fuck this Damien is, or Lucas, or Archbishop or Bishop and fucking shit. They wouldn’t let us go.”

“I know, I know. You made the right call, but...” She looked behind her at the disappearing light. If this Lucas person came running after them, they were thoroughly fucked. But with time, no one came, and Natasha finally took a minute to start healing her stomach wound.

She had no idea what to tell Julias, or Maria or Michael. What about Vivienne? She’d betrayed Natasha, and now the Invictus had killed a few of their new group.

Shit could not have gone worse.

Chapter 14

~~Beatrice~~

“So you’ll do it?” Jacob said.

“Yeah I’ll fucking do it. But if this Damien is as sneaky as you think he is, you think I can really just creep into his place and follow him around?” She clicked her teeth together.

“I know you can.” Psycho-man circled around the skull alter so it was between them, and began to move his hands over the bowl of rotting old blood. “That’s part of the reason I brought you, after all. You have a lot of power, strength, and that animal instinct, unlike those worthless fucking leeches.” He laughed then, and started to wave his hands over the blood. “And you’ll have help.”

“Help?”

He nodded then, and with a motion so casual, sliced open his wrist. She winced, he cut deep, but it wasn’t enough to make Jacob even blink. The dark, thick blood of a Kindred started to drip from the unnatural wound in a slow, mesmerizing flow. When it fell into the pool of old blood, it pushed away the gross mess, and overtook the bowl of blood. Eventually, the blood was renewed.

And then Jacob started to hum.

“... what the fuck are you doing?”

He held up a finger then, and gave her a quick glare that shut her right up. He was serious. Scary serious. When he looked down at the blood, the look was so solemn it made her insides clench, and it only got worse when he put his hand into the blood. He kept humming, louder, and louder, until he found the frequency to make the very cave resonate.

She took a step back, but Jacob's other hand rose, and gestured her to step closer. His joking smile was gone, and now she was standing in front of an altar. And he was bleeding his blood, his vitae right into an altar bowl of skulls in front of her. Suddenly, the bones on the cave walls didn't seem so ridiculous.

As the weight of his hums made the cave almost vibrate, she couldn't help but get drawn into the awesome but overwhelming, sinister, and horrific nature of it all. Bones, blood, bleeding, dark words that had no meaning, it all combined into a surreal array of theatrical notes. She could almost hear the chanting of naked, ancient Kindred dancing around the corpses of their kills.

Scary stories spread by fellow Carthians about Jacob and his dark arts were the things young neonates talked about. What else were freshly embraced going to do? They sat around in the dark, afraid of the elders, and talked about the unusual, disturbing things they'd heard those elders could do. There'd been talk about the Lancea et Sanctum, long gone, and their strange works of God. But the stories about Jacob were so much more visceral, because Jacob was real, and none of them knew anything about the Circle of the Crone. Stories about something they could do with blood, and magic. Something called Crúac.

And now she was here, in his dark ritual. It was Crúac. The whole cave was made as Jacob's shrine, and the altar in the center that had seemed moderately innocent at first now loomed before her like an evil god. It was a sacrifice altar, and the weight of that only now dawned on her.

What sort of fucked up shit had she gotten herself into? Her insides were howling, like wolves howling at the moon. She stepped closer to Jacob then, because her inner-beast demanded it, and she watched with wide eyes. Something called to her, something wild and animal, hungry and territorial, savage and pure. The sounds of those hums danced up and down her spine and made her whole body tingle.

When Jacob reached out to place a bloody hand against her face, she didn't even flinch, she only closed her eyes and let the elder put a hand print of his own blood on her face. And just like that, it was as if someone had injected the blood of a god straight into her withered, undead veins. She stumbled for a moment while the power worked its way up and down her legs and into her claws; it even made her teeth vibrate.

“What ... wh—”

“You'll have my mastery of the cloak of night, for tonight. Use it well. I want to know everything about this Damien, and now that Lucas is back, I am sure he'll let something show.”

“Your ... right, right, ok. Why not do it yourself though?”

Jacob shook his head and idly scratched at the gash made in his own flesh. “I will be distracting Lucas.”

She gulped. Jacob was putting a whole lot of faith in her. Why? Why not the others? The psycho bastard was going to ‘distract’ some other elder, while she fucking followed his childe?

It was some serious next level shit.

“I'll try.”

“Ha. Might want to do better than try. You fuck up, and Lucas may just rip you to shreds.” Jacob shrugged, gave a large psycho smile, and dismissed her with a wave. “I knew him, and that was fifty years before his torpor. Who knows what kind of man he is now.”

---

How long had it been since she'd felt so nervous? Must have been since she was turned. Back then she was just a mess of self-loathing, thrust into a fucked up world, and only Garry showed her an ounce of compassion. And Garry was a scary guy. But now? Now she was dragging her ass through the vents of Tony's old underground lair, with a Crúac bloodmagic symbol on her face giving her elder levels of badassness, so she could spy on a super dangerous elder's childe.

Nervous did not begin to describe how she felt.

Fighting on the streets, pushing around Invictus assholes treading on Carthian territory, and worrying about how she'd get her next meal were the things she was used to. Now she was neck deep in the shit. Jacob had said he knew her, that she was sick of being on the sidelines, and back then this was exactly the sort of shit she would have wanted. She had stakes in the game now and some power to go with it. She got what she wanted, but not so sure she wanted what she got.

The vents were built into the structure of the ceiling of the tunnels. How Tony had managed to get all this shit built she could not guess, but then he had centuries to work with. And Jacob knew it all. Jacob had probably arranged the entrance into the vents being built somehow too. Her life was in his palm, and she could only hope the crazy fuck knew what he was doing.

Beneath her, there were ghouls wandering around, all very new to the whole thing. They sat in the tunnels of metal walls and discussed with each other their new masters. She peaked down through grates to watch, and spotted several Kindred who walked with them. From how the conversation was going, the ghouls seemed to be the servants of the Kindred, which was typical.

What wasn't so typical was how they talked about God. Not a god, but God. Kindred serving God? The fuck kind of shit was that?

Jacob had said Lucas was an Archbishop for the Lancea et Sanctum, so maybe this shit was the norm back before her time, but now it sounded like cult talk.

“Sam said that the Archbishop said that Vince is doing well! He was sent out to scare some kine into thinking the devil was haunting them, and...”

Beatrice rolled her eyes, and moved on. What a sick, twisted joke. Kindred scaring kine into being obedient little religious folk? Ugh.

Vents were not easy to move through. The movies made it seem easy, but when you don't have the proper traction of feet, and you have to be quiet, squirming and wriggling through vents is a bitch. Whatever weird blood spell Jacob had cast had definitely affected her, made her cloak of night stronger, but that didn't mean she could make a bunch of noise. Not when there were other Kindred walking around beneath her. Not when this mysterious Damien character was such a question mark.

It really was a weird thing, now that she thought about it. Jacob had only just learned about this Damien apparently, and she'd never heard about him from any other Kindred. Who the fuck was he? If he was Lucas's childe and Lucas had been in torpor for half a century, then Damien was at least fifty years old. It's not like a Kindred just hopped city to city, so Damien must have been hiding out in Dolareido for fifty years.

Jacob had said sneaky Mehket. No joke.

“Jonathan, you spend far too much time worrying about things beyond your control. Your purpose is clear, and the Archbishop and I will help you with any problems you may have serving in that purpose.”

Archbishop and I? Jackpot. Beatrice came to a stop over one vent and peered down into the room beneath her, and found more than one Kindred gathering there. She could put her face onto the grate, nose against the metal, and as long as she trusted Jacob's blood magic, she would be able to remain hidden. Hopefully.

“Serve your sire. She will teach you how to seduce kine with but a glance, and you can feed upon them as God demands we should. You are the wolf, and they are God's sheep.”

She blinked down at the one talking. So that was Damien? He seemed normal enough, with a cool haircut and half-shaved head. His voice was soft, but confident. He seemed ... unremarkable. Even her inner-beast barely noticed him. He was just another Kindred.

And then he was gone. She was staring right at him, analyzing him, and then he was gone. Poof. She almost made a noise, bit her tongue, and pushed her face closer to the grate.

“I am surprised. It has been not even two weeks since Tony's death, and already scouts have come for his nesting grounds?”

He'd moved. What the fuck, the fucker had moved, and she could only barely see him in the large room, at the doorway of what looked like a tunnel.

Two other Kindred were there, and she knew these two: the bitch Jessy, and the pussy Natasha. What were the Invictus doing here? Natasha started talking then, and Beatrice could just see her and her partner's back, facing Damien. The speedy fucker must have moved to block the doorway.

Natasha said a few quiet words, and Beatrice strained to hear her. That Invictus was always quiet, and she stuttered like a scared mouse probably would have. Fuck she was infuriating.

But then Natasha shot the guy. Beatrice barely even noticed the movement, but like a sly snake, the tiny Mehket girl drew her pistol and put a hole straight into Damiens' forehead. He crumbled like a sack of potatoes. The brains and dark, Kindred blood that splattered out behind his skull turned into bits of hot ash in the air.

And then all hell broke loose.

Beatrice was so focused on the two Invictus and their unexpected appearance, she hadn't even noticed the growing crowd. They threw themselves at the Invictus, but Jessy wasted no time throwing herself at them. Fuck Jessy was such a mindless animal, and that Gangrel side of her came out with no hesitation, claw mutation and all.

Beatrice took a moment to look at her claws, and then the claws of the wild woman in the orgy of punches and kicks. Jessy spared no effort, and tore into the young Kindred and ghouls alike as if they were fresh meat. They kind of were, even the Kindred with a few years on them, and Beatrice winced each time one of them was bent in half by the barbarian.

Damien got back up though. He healed fast. Very fast. Before Beatrice could figure out what was going on, Jessy just went psycho and grew claws straight out of a monster horror flick. She jumped at Damien, and he started fighting her off with a sword, and then it was Natasha against the mob. They tried to pin her down, but just like the insane, reckless fuck she was, Jessy jumped in and killed them. It was fucking chaos contained to a few seconds.

Holy mother fucking of shit. Day one of her new sneaky sneak Circle of the Crone ways and she was already watching two covenants shit down each other's throat.

“Stop them! Stop them! Lucas is here. He'll want them!”

Beatrice looked back down, and her whole body went stiff. Lucas wasn't supposed to be coming. Jacob was supposed to keep him distracted! Fuck fuck fuck. She started to creep backward, but her eyes fell back down through the grate to Damien. The two Invictus were running, but Damien wasn't pursuing. He'd collapsed and sat down on a chair with his hands to his chest. The barbarian bitch must have landed a hit on him with her claws. It was a wonder he hadn't been split into separate pieces.

Leave, Beatrice. Lucas is coming, and you have no fucking clue if you can stay hidden from an elder. But of course she couldn't leave, not when all the tasty, succulent information she wanted was right there in front of her. Heh, wow, first day on the job and she was already addicted to the rush of the Danse Macabre.

So she kept quiet, and did her best to stay hidden with the cloak of night. Jacob said Lucas and him were friends, so maybe she'd be able to talk her way out of a second death?

---

~~Julias~~

The three of them sat in silence.

Not true silence, of course. His fellow members of the triumvirate were busy with their smart phones and tablets. He had to give them credit, the two elders had managed to adopt modern technology to a degree Viktor never could. They weren't exactly capable of multi-tasking like younger Kindred, but with their devices they could handle large, complicated webs of data. Both of them used their smart phones for only that, and talking.

The thought of the Nosferatu ghost woman playing a match-3 game made him smirk.

“The ball the Prince is hosting seems like it is in good faith. Master Terry says as much, though he is definitely biased,” Julias said.

“I’m sure he is.” Michael gave a hearty chuckle, but his eyes never raised from his tablet. From what Julias could see, the large Gangrel was reading reports on the affairs of Xnomina. “Your childe has proved efficient in both Xnomina’s dealings, and at making friends in high places.”

“He has. The former I predicted, the latter not so much.”

“We all change when embraced,” Maria Turio said, and she reached up with one hand to idly stroke her flat, black hair. She could never truly hide her corpse-from-the-water look, it was her curse after all, but she dressed for her role and was all the more intimidating for it. “As for the ball, you know the Prince is simply looking to gauge the feelings of the Kindred population here. The death of two elders would make any city’s Prince worry for political change.”

Julias gave a small nod and leaned back in his chair with a hand on his chin. “Agreed. I plan to go too, if only to do the same. Will you two?”

They both considered, but eventually gave Julias a nod and returned to their devices. For a moment, Julias thought of them as children addicted to their smart phones, as many kine were these days, but the two elders were anything but addicted to mindless distraction. Their finger strokes were determining the outcomes of many merges of companies, acquisitions of product and resources, and other elements of Xnomina Julias wasn’t even familiar with.

He thought of the ball. He’d go to test the political climate, and to keep an eye on Jack as well. Beatrice though ... he wanted to go with Beatrice. The damn pain-in-his-ass Carthian was really stirring up all sorts of strange feelings in him. Joy and recklessness combined. He thought of her in an evening gown that highlighted her ridiculously amazing legs and ass, and that too put a smile on his face. Elysium was open to kine, so she'd have to hide her face to stop one from seeing her Nosferatu elements, but a silky face veil would look foreign, exotic, and very sexy.

Then the door opened.

“Madame Vola, Madame Herrington ... what the hell happened?” Julias got up and just stared at them. This was not good.

They were all back at the Xnomina HQ, in the same scenario as when Julias gave the two women their order. Maria and Michael were sitting at the center table of the office, and Julias was standing while leaning back against the table.

The exact same, except that Natasha and Jessy had limped in. Kindred didn't carry wounds like a kine, being a walking corpse and all, but he could see it in their uneven steps and their worn faces. They were more pale than usual, they winced as they moved, and even Jessy held a hand up to her neck every so often to hide the obvious gash.

“What. Happened?”

They looked to each other, and the shared glance of guilt was obvious.

“Sir,” Natasha said, “we ... there was...”

“It was the Lancea et Sanctum, Mire.” Jessy took a step forward, and met his upset gaze. “Tony's old brood are now a bunch of religious nuts.”

“Truly?” This time it was Maria to speak up, and everyone in the room looked to her. The ghost woman sounded genuinely surprised.

Excited, maybe?

Natasha managed a tiny nod. “Yes, Madame Turio.”

Michael tapped his fingers on the table loud enough to grab their attention. “Hold on. The Lancea et Sanctum is back? What about our missing neonates?”

“They’ve ... they’ve joined,” Natasha said, and looked down at her hands. Even Jessy went quiet, and looked down.

Julias too looked down, and grit his teeth. For fledglings to change covenants was not unheard of, and the state of peace in Dolareido allowed it, but it was always painful for a sire to see their childe leave their ways. But who could just randomly sway dozens of young Kindred, three of which were Invictus, to join the Second Estate?

“ ... it was Lucas, wasn’t it?” Julias said. He reached up and tapped his chin, but his eyes looked back over his shoulder to Maria. She looked away, and for just a second, he saw a small twitch of delight on her ghostly lips.

Viktor had confided in Julias more information than his council realized.

Natasha tilted her head a little. “Lucas, sir? We heard that name when we were down there.”

“Lucas is alive then?” Michael got up and started to pace around, but his slightly hunched, animal posture made it look more so like a stalking wolf. “The Archbishop survived the Prince’s purge.”

Jessy and both Natasha raised their head, blinked at each other, and looked at Michael together. “Archbishop, sire?”

“You were both embraced mere months after the purge, and we were not to discuss the Archbishop or his Bishops and priests.” Julias gave a small dismissing wave of his hand, but the memories of the purge were still there. Memories of the sheriff, his sword, and the ashes of dead priests. Memories of Lucas, a Mehket so persuasive and compelling, he should have been Ventrue.

“Archbishop Lucas of the Lancea et Sanctum. He ran the Second Estate here, and was a frequent thorn in the Prince’s side.” Michael chuckled and folded his arms across his chest. “We thought he may have escaped the purge, but we had no proof.”

“Is ... is he an ally then?” Jessy said. She had a guilty look on her face, and Julias squinted at her. She avoided his gaze, shuffled her feet, dripping guilt all over the floor.

“The Invictus and the Lancea et Sanctum are almost always allies. We are the First Estate, and they are the Second Estate for a reason.” Maria got up, moved to the display wall and brought up the digital overhead display of the city. “The Archbishop had twelve churches, here and here, and here.” Elysium and the Prince’s lair lied in the center of the city, more or less, with the Xnomina HQ – where they stood – not too far off. The churches circled it nicely. “If things had continued as they were half a century ago, the current Prince would probably not be Antoinette.”

Julias gave a small sigh. There had been a purge for more than one reason, but he did not disagree with the Prince’s more known explanation: the religious pursuits of Lucas bordered on mindless zealotry. Julias had been quite happy with their removal, while his sire had most definitely been not.

“Did you speak with Lucas then?” Maria said, and approached the two right hands. Both Jessy and Natasha avoided eye contact with her most of all.

“Um, Madame T-T-Turio, we ... um...”

“There was a fight,” Jessy said, and she forced her eyes to Maria’s.

Julias winced. He knew what was coming. Right on queue the ghost woman reached up to the taller Gangrel, grabbed her by the neck, and brought her down to her knees like she was a toddler. Jessy could only comply, and Julias could see the mix of shock and fear in her eyes.

“Did you kill anyone?” Maria’s voice had turned gravely, and Julias could hear dirt and grit coming out of her mouth. If graveyards could talk, they’d sound like that.

“N-n-n-n—”

“Shut up Natasha.” Maria squeezed harder, and Jessy brought up her hands out of reflex to grab the elder’s wrist. She even struggled a little, but Maria’s grip was absolute. The itty bitty ghost woman had more than enough strength to crush Jessy into dust right in front of them, and they all knew it. “Did you kill any of them?”

Julias considered stepping in to help the Gangrel, but the way anger was just pouring off the ghost woman told him he better not.

With a loud scoff, Maria threw Jessy back and onto the floor. She stepped toward Natasha then, and the tiny Mehket did her best to stand her ground. Julias hid a small smirk, as Natasha managed to even make some eye contact with Maria despite the proximity.

“Y-yes ma’am.”

“And you found Lucas?”

“No m-m-ma’am. We found a ... a congregation, ma’am, and someone called Bishop Damien.” Natasha looked away when Maria leaned in closer. “We ... got into a fight, and ... B-B-B-Bishop Damien tried to detain us. We ... resisted. And we were forced to d-defend ourselves. Some of Tony’s old brood died.”

Julias blinked, raised a hand to his hair to brush it back, and stepped up to put a hand on Maria’s shoulder. A little touch to stop her from getting too angry and damaging their already-damaged Invictus. Hopefully she wouldn’t tear it off. “Tony’s old brood? So Lucas is back, he’s moved into Tony’s nest, and he’s converted them?”

Jessy got up in as submissive a way as possible, and held her throat in one hand. “Yes sir.”

“And the doors to Tony’s nest were just ... open?”

“Yes sir.”

Julias quirked a brow and looked at Maria. The Nosferatu returned his confusion with a frown, and sat back at the table without even a glance at poor Jessy.

“So you killed some of their members. Did you kill our neonates?”

“No sir!” Natasha’s eyes went so wide, as if Julias had struck her insides with a hot poker. She was loyal to the Invictus, through-and-through, Julias admitted.

“And this Bishop Damien?”

“No sir. He was who we fought, when he tried to stop us from leaving, but he lives.”

Julias groaned and paced back and forth in front of the two right hands. “Bishop Damien ... I do not remember a Bishop named Damien before the purge. How long embraced do you think?”

“Maybe fifty years, sir.”

Fifty years ... Fifty years? Was he new? It wasn't common for Kindred to hop cities; a single mistake meant sunlight and a very painful death. Had he been hiding in Dolareido this long? Was Jacob hiding him? Antoinette?

“We have all we need for now. You two may go. Submit your detailed reports tomorrow.” McDonald stood in front of the wall display of the city, and gave a small wave of his hand to dismiss the two right hands.

Julias leaned back against the center table and watched the two girls leave. They left limping. Maria hurt their pride, sure, but they were physically injured too, and if it wasn't from Lucas, it certainly wasn't from some neonates. They were trained, old enough to be ancillae, and hand picked to be the Invictus right hands. Natasha may not have been the best in a fist fight, but she was capable, and her mastery of the Mehket disciplines was astounding. On top of that, Jessy was a terror in combat, and if given room to let loose she could annihilate groups of Kindred.

So ... what? They were beaten by this Damien? Someone no older than them?

Once Natasha and Jessy were gone, all three of the triumvirate stood in front of the wall display, and scanned the digital map. They stood in silence for a moment, until Julias turned to look at them. They met his gaze, and a weird, awkward silence fell on them.

“There has been fifty years of peace, and that is largely because of the Prince's choice.” McDonald reached out to the digital display and drew an X through each church Lucas used to control. Some of them were actual churches the kind used that were re-purposed by Kindred during the night, while others were strictly Kindred-only buildings. “How many had there been under Lucas’s hand? Three hundred? What were left after the purge...” McDonald shrugged. “All Lucas could possibly muster now for his followers are Tony’s brood, and our own neonates evidently. He could not reach the numbers he used to control without decades to grow.”

“And Antoinette will not allow that.” Maria stepped between the two large men, reached up, and drew a circle around Tony’s nest. “When she learns of Lucas, if she doesn’t already know, she will give him the same ultimatum as before. If he doesn’t leave the city, she’ll slaughter him and every follower he has.”

The two men nodded. It was a tricky situation. Lucas was a valuable ally, even for all his insane ways, but the Prince had not only been clear about her law, she and her sheriff were strong enough to enforce it. If they sided with the Lancea et Sanctum, it would mean war, and last time the odds were in the Second Estate’s favor yet they still lost.

But the Invictus had only watched the carnage last time. They’d made no efforts to stop it, and that meant they had the same choice again this time.

For a good long while, they all stood there, thinking the same thoughts, until McDonald spoke up. “Who the fuck is Bishop Damien?”

Maria and Julias shrugged.

---

~~Damien~~

He had not expected that.

He'd expected someone to show up eventually, true. The Invictus were as likely a candidate as any, especially considering three of their group had converted. And he'd expected anger, and perhaps even a thrown fist from whoever did discover their congregation.

He hadn't expected to be standing over the corpses of several Kindred. They were young enough, only a few years old, that they didn't even fall to ash like a true Kindred. Instead their withered corpses were left. Other Kindred had wandered up to gather them, and picked up their mangled, dry husks. They stood in front of Damien with the bodies in their arms, and they had sad, expectant faces.

Damien just sat down in a chair, held his sliced-open chest with one hand, and his face with the other. "Take ... take them to the second library. I will burn them later."

They nodded and obeyed without question. A part of him wished they'd argue with him, just so he had a reason to let out some anger.

"I see our quiet home has finally been assaulted."

Lucas stepped into the room of metal walls and tunnels and approached him. The good Archbishop, with his soothing voice and soft smile, was dressed in his black robes. He had short, curly black hair and beard, dark skin, and a blend of many accents Damien could not quite place. The Archbishop was from Africa, from a time well before Damien could even imagine.

But just his presence was enough to have every Kindred in the room fall hushed with awe and silence. Damien was not surprised, as their contact with their elders would have been few and far between. They must have felt like simple dogs before the mighty Cerberus, a glorious example of the most powerful of their kind and an icon of faith. Of course they worshiped Lucas, and he could not blame them.

“Archbishop, we beg your forgiveness!” The crowd of Kindred, all fledglings and neonates, bowed and pleaded. “Everything went-”

“Please, children, let the Bishop speak,” Lucas said, and approached Damien. He reached out with both hands, and put a hand on his childe’s torn open chest and shoulder before touching where the bullet had entered his skull. “But I can guess what happened.”

“I can imagine how the Gangrel would have responded to that. Like a caged animal?”

“Yes.” Damien managed a quick glance down at the mess of the fight, where bits of ash coated the floor. “I thought perhaps an Invictus would ... would not be so...” He clutched at his wound and squeezed his eyes shut. The healing was slow, painful, as the fight left him drained and unable to regenerate quickly. That Jessy feral animal had hit him hard. And the fellow Mehket Natasha, her quick actions had put a bullet in his head.

Perhaps that was what frustrated him most? That he’d fallen for her innocent exterior? Or that he wasn’t fast enough. He needed to be faster. Everything would fail if he wasn’t faster.

Lucas gave his cheek a light tap. “I will see to the dead, my childe. You should go, feast, and rest.”

“But more may come.”

“Unless they can summon an army within the hour, I am sure I will be fine.” Lucas shook his head and motioned to the crowd behind him. More and more Kindred had gathered, even the ghouls, and they waited with hopeful faces. All they wanted was a word from his sire, a message or sermon, anything to soothe their fears and worries. Damien could admit he too wanted to be soothed; now that the Invictus could confirm their existence, everything was moving forward.

All according to his sire's plan, but that did not change how dangerous it was. How unnerving.

Lucas gave Damien that same, fatherly smile, but his eyes drifted.

“Sire?”

“Hmm? Oh, I am sorry my boy. My thoughts are elsewhere. An old friend and I shared words.” He gave Damien another pat on the shoulder and a nod. “And he will not trouble us. So at least that is one worry dealt with. Now go, but be careful. The Invictus will be slow to react to this, as they are to everything, but you never know.”

“I always am, sire.” He managed a smile, and with the Archbishop's help, stood up. The wounds were healing, at least enough that he could go hunt.

He decided to take a side exit, one not used by either the congregation or the intruders. Once he was out of sight, he clenched his fists and let the rage work its way up his limbs. He didn't head out into the night until his arms stopped shaking.

---

The streets of Dolareido were loud with the hustle and bustle of movement, whores, drugs, alcohol, self-deceit, dirty money, and suits. Maybe it was the pain of his wounds underneath his coat, but being so near the sheep of God and their sin was more annoying than usual. How many years had he lived in this, and only now it ate at him? How many years he stayed hidden in the most rotten core of the city?

Only now did he have his sire back, but only now did he know the pain of another Kindred cutting him open and blowing his brains out. The highs and lows of the massive changes were a harsh contrast.

“Fifty years ... it took fifty years, but I have him back,” he said with a hushed voice. He was only talking to himself while he walked deep into the loudest and most compressed sections of the city, where bars and gambling and prostitution were on every corner. Talking to himself while surrounded by people who ignored him.

It almost felt like a film noir scene.

Deeper and deeper he went into the city’s underbelly. Soon the bright lights of the casinos and the hum of endless vehicle horns were faded background, and instead he found the hiss of its recesses. It was a quiet hiss broken by random gunfire, sirens, and cat calls. The hookers wore fake fur instead of fine dresses, and the men wore tattoos of hookers in fake fur, instead of ties.

The upper class were a lost cause, but these lower class still had an ounce of soul left in them, and that meant they were worth saving. So as the crowds on the streets grew less and less, until he was surrounded by only dark and windows-with-bars, he kept walking. It wasn’t until he heard the familiar cry of crime that he turned a corner.

Down an alley – Dolareido and its alleys were common to the point of cliché – he found the source. A woman was trapped between several alleyways, with each containing a thug of some sort or another to block her way. Each offender had lust in their eyes. One of the thugs, Damien noticed, was a woman. At least Dolareido was progressive with its gender roles.

“No! Stop!”

“Shut the fuck up before I break your jaw.” A taller guy with broad shoulders stood between the woman and the street Damien walked in from. Apparently, the brute and his group were more than happy to rape in the middle of an alley. They knew the alleys in this part of town had no cameras. Damien knew it too.

“Please ... don’t...”

Damien crept in closer. Hunger was on his tongue. His body demanded blood. The beast in his chest could smell it, see it, hell he could hear their hearts pumping. The greater the hunger, the closer that beast came to the surface and the more he wanted to rip the blood bags open with savage need, and drink from a fountain of red.

But right now, he really wanted to let out some anger first. Damien was no Gangrel, or Nosferatu or Daeva, or even Ventrue. It was a Mehket’s way to use shadows, secrecy, and speed. But for the moment, he didn’t feel like doing any of that. For the moment, he wanted to feel a vermin’s blood on his hands.

And the satisfaction of driving his sword through the rapist’s back and then up and through his sternum was euphoric.

“Aaaaaaaaah!” from the three remaining that lived. They stood there, eyes wide and jaws dropped, staring at him, but he didn’t care. He just let the skewered man gargle on blood even as the delicious, warm liquid gushed over his hand.

He removed the sword with a sideways swipe, and it forced the man’s body to twist and fold on itself from being nearly split in half. The blood was everywhere, and each splatter it cast drew more screams from the viewers. Their voices were just tiny echoes against the ugly hiss of the city’s dark side.

Deep down in Dolareido’s underbelly, it was free feeding for any Kindred. They could feed, kill, whatever they wanted to the kine within. As long as the Masquerade was not risked, it was up to the Kindred to do as they wished within its borders. And right now, that meant a killing spree.

“What the fuck is—” The female thug was next. No archaic notions of gender inequality here; the woman died in the same way as her friend, but with the sword stabbing down through her sternum and out her back instead.

“No! No!” The remaining rapist managed to come to his senses just long enough to turn around. He managed a single step, then Damien was behind him, and he sank his sword through the man’s back and out through his stomach. Before the prey could start screaming, Damien let go of his weapon and reached out to pull the taller man down to him with a hand around his mouth. His other hand grabbed the man’s shoulder, and with enough force to break bone, he bent the man down in an unnatural position so he could sink his teeth into his neck.

Everything went quiet. The dying man could only grumble with Damien’s hand over his mouth and nose, and the vampire wasted no time draining the stupid sheep of blood so quickly, so aggressively, that it was only moments before his victim was unconscious. Damien could only just barely hear behind him the weeping, petrified woman he’d saved. Just barely over the pumping blood in his mouth and the roaring beast in his gut, he could hear her whimpers.

She’d have no idea what he was doing, in the dark and with his back to her. It was her only saving grace.

When the last of the warm, delicious red liquid coated his tongue, he reached down and pulled the sword clean from the body. He let the corpse fall, and before it managed to fully crumble he lopped off its head with his sword. Even in the dark, he squarely destroyed the fang marks with his blade and the cold efficiency of hundreds of murders.

And now everything was covered in blood. It was all over his hands, cooling in the night, and it soaked into his clothes. The painful wounds on his chest were already sealed with the rush of fresh Vitae, and hunger was at last settling, but now he was surrounded and coated in so much red that the beast within was rumbling with the glee of slaughter.

He raised a hand to his face without a care for its stained skin, and put it to his forehead. Why was he so angry? Shouldn't he be happy his sire was back?

“I ... I... —”

“You!” He slammed the sword into the wall next to her head. Brick exploded into powder next to her skull, and the volume was like a gunshot. The poor, helpless sheep just collapsed and stared at him, shaking, pale, and wide eyed.

“You ... The devil is coming for you, stupid girl.”

“What? What, I-”

“Swimming in sin. Stupid girl has forgotten all about the Lord her shepherd.” He grabbed her throat, lifted her like she was nothing but a feather, and tossed her forward. He was careful the dumb harlot wouldn't break any bones, but some skinned knees and a piss-soaked skirt would do her good.

“B-b-b-but-”

“I can smell filth and disease on you from here.” It was true of course. To the stupid sheep, he was just a blur of movement in the dark alley, but he could see every detail on her painted face and smell the disease coming from between her legs, along with perfumes to hide it. “Now swear to me, you worthless harlot, that you will fear God.”

“Fear God? I ... my mom, and...”

His patience was gone. Normally he would do all this manipulation, all this coaxing and terrorizing through subtle actions his target wouldn't be able to pinpoint. But now he was just burying himself in the anger that was bubbling up and taking him over. Now he felt like a Nosferatu relishing in the mix of a torturer's power and animal's rage. He reached down, grabbed the girl, picked her up, and slammed her against the wall with his fingers around her neck.

“Go beg the nearest priest for forgiveness then. If I see you out on these streets, I will cut you open from cunt to mouth.” His sword, now ruined with scratches from the brick, found its way up to her eyes, and he used his free hand to bring it within an inch of her iris. “Have I made myself clear?”

She fainted.

He rolled his eyes and set the girl back down. There was no way anyone would harm her while she recovered, with all the bodies scaring away anyone who may accidentally stumble down the alley. When she awoke, he was sure she'd do just as he demanded. He knew that look in her eye, terrified and destroyed, and it'd scar her for life. It'd also put her back into God's embrace.

He took a moment to check for evidence. He'd only bit one kine, and destroyed his fang marks after. All DNA that may have been left behind would fade to ash and dust within mere minutes, and even fingerprints were nothing but hazy blurs from a Kindred. The crime, the slaughter, it was all a mess of chaos and random brutality, but it could not be traced. Damien knew which alleys had cameras, so the whore would have nothing but her own word.

Fed, but not satisfied, Damien jumped up onto the rooftops. His wounds were healed, his energy returned, and his inner-beast was no longer ravenous and on the edge of taking over to frenzy. But still, he was not satisfied. So he jumped to another building, and another, with just enough cloak of night to hide himself from accidental glances from kine. After several buildings, he sat down and let his legs dangle over the side of one ledge, seeped in enough dark to hide anything.

“I’m not angry with the Invictus right hands.” He brought his bloodied hands up to his temples and rubbed them in circles. Talk through it. Verbalize. Intellectualize. Understand. “Sire said to let them come. Kindred died because of that. Am I angry he made a stupid decision, or am I angry I think it’s stupid? Am I angry with myself that I can’t see the wisdom in his decision?” He bit down on his teeth hard enough to hurt the fangs hidden behind his lips. “He hasn’t told me everything though. How can he not trust me?”

“... or I’m just angry that he’s demanded patience.” He chewed his teeth until it hurt, and squeezed his eyes shut. Memories of the Bishops and priests turning to ash in a slaughter were always there, even fifty years later. It ate at him, and it demanded justice. Maybe that was why? No patience for revenge? “Why didn’t Lucas take advantage of the secrecy? I woke him at the perfect time, fifty years of patience, and he didn’t use it to take revenge. Why?” Why did Lucas waste half a century of his childe’s misery?

He mulled over it, chewed on it, until he forgot he was covered in blood. His sword needed to be replaced and his clothes too, but he knew himself enough to know he was stuck in his mind. He couldn’t move until he’d made sense of his own feelings.

At least normally that was true, but he jumped up and turned around with sword in hand like someone had jammed a tazer into his ass.

Someone was there.

“Who the—” He cut himself off. Talk less. Control the situation. Someone was up on the old tavern’s roof and he couldn’t see them.

And that meant it was someone strong. No one could hide from his sight. No one.

He stepped forward, sword drawn, and started to scope out the rooftop. Deep in the underbelly of the city, the sky wasn't as washed out by the lighting, which was great for vampires stalking prey. And for many, they thought it meant they could hide from the prying eyes of their betters.

“But not from me,” Damien said, voice so quiet he could barely hear himself. He kept his short sword at the ready at his side; he'd already accidentally let them know that he knew someone was there. So he crept around, eyes peeled, and with a belly full of sheep's blood he had more than enough power in him to rip apart whoever was spying on him to silence them.

It wouldn't be the first time.

Only silence greeted him though. He'd felt eyes on him, he knew it, but now there was nothing there except the silence of the night. He grit his teeth, hid himself to the shadows, and faded away into the black. There was no use pursuing the issue soaked in blood, even with the inner-beast's ability to hide a Kindred's face from cameras. It was too dangerous, so he retreated, and sped back to the underground nest of the new Lancea et Sanctum.

He couldn't remember exactly what he'd said when talking to himself. Nothing incriminating, nothing important. Maybe?

Everything had been going according to plan. He prayed he didn't just screw it up.

Chapter 15

~~Jack~~

Every time he woke up, it was a shock.

Julias had said a Kindred doesn't really sleep, cause how could a corpse sleep? They just become a corpse, and when the sun sets, they un-corpsify. Each and every time, it was like someone jammed adrenaline straight into his heart. He sat up in his bed with a jolt, and could feel the Vitae spike through his system to wake him with its unnatural power.

But then it settled. He'd grown more comfortable with his new body, its strange, thinned and pale skin, its strength and durability, and even the beast that now lived in his chest. He looked around, and smiled at the world around him. It was his apartment, and it was a really, really, really nice apartment, like the one Julias had before he'd been promoted. The place locked down automatically during the day, so he didn't even need to worry about accidentally getting himself killed in the sun.

He took some time to look at himself in the mirror. The scars were still there on his stomach, a painful reminder of the circumstances of his embrace, but other than that he really liked what he saw. Sure, a Kindred was pasty white and unusually thin unless they blushed life, but everything else looked great. And it always would. He no longer aged, and every day he'd revert to the condition he was in upon embrace while he slept. He was god damn immortal.

As long as he kept drinking blood, that is. He pat his belly, half expecting it to growl either from gurgling stomach acids that no longer existed, or from the famished beast that lived next to his withered heart.

“Wow, poetry?” he said to the mirror. “Antoinette’s rubbing off on me.”

The apartment didn’t have two floors like Julias’s, but it had three bedrooms – two completely unused cause what the fuck did he need three bedrooms for – and a connected living room and kitchen. All sleek, stylish and cool-colored cupboards and walls, with a window to overlook the city from high high high up in his apartment. Hell, Julias’s old apartment was right across the street.

He walked around his apartment, naked of course. It was weird how there was absolutely no sensation of cold from the air on bare skin, not even a little, even when he opened his fridge. There was blood there, in the same sort of wine bottle Julias used. He reached in and got ready to down it straight, but rolled his eyes and put the thing back.

“Get a glass or get it fresh.” He wanted fresh, of course. There was nothing quite like a cool drink when he was alive, but now he was dead and his dry insides demanded warm, thick blood to satisfy.

His mind drifted to Antoinette and her ghouls. Much as he loved the Prince, it was her ghouls that came to his mind when he was actually hungry. The feel of their young, healthy blood gushing over his tongue with the mix of hormones from arousal, and orgasm, it was all a glorious cocktail of taste and exhilaration. And then, there was the feel of their tight, wet flesh wrapped around him during the Kiss, and all the hot juices that came with climax.

“No! Fucking hell you stupid ass. Antoinette is busy today, Julias is busy today, so you have to take care of yourself. You’re not some weak leech. You’re a fucking vampire.” He stabbed himself in the temples with his index fingers a few times, before rubbing his fingers along his buzzed head. “Go hunt. Hunt. Hunt.”

Hunt. Hunt. It sounded so easy. It's what Kindred did after all, and he'd more than proved himself to the Invictus and to Antoinette that he was capable. But the actual act of a solo hunt was just something he'd yet to do. Something always happened that allowed him to bypass it. Fuck that though, he was going to do it.

He got dressed in the typical suit of casual Invictus business, and tried to keep the memories of Mrs. Pavala from his mind. It wasn't his fault, he knew that, and the beast in his gut who'd killed her didn't care about her death or her family's misery at all. And then that made him think of his own family. Kindred had a dozen ways to fall into a spiral of depression.

"Maybe that's why I'm being such a pussy about this. Alone with my thoughts ... ugh. Julias warned me, he did." He stood in front of his apartment's door, still closed, and bounced his head against it. Then banged. He'd been spending all his time with Antoinette, and his sire Julias, cause it meant he didn't have to think about this shit.

Well, fuck that. He wasn't a pussy!

---

Ok, he was a bit of a pussy.

Just a couple week ago, he was riding high on his ego after a successful mission for Xnomina, and even higher after having slept with three women in a single night. But now he was standing on the sidewalk outside his apartment building, watching the nightlife walk by, taxis drive by, and he had no fucking idea what he was doing.

Suddenly, the kine he was supposed to feed on weren't kine. They were humans. They had thoughts and feelings and voices.

"Social anxiety? ... really?" He jabbed himself in the forehead with a finger. He was a Kindred. He was a fucking vampire.

But he just stood there, shuffling his feet, watching people go by. Paralyzed.

“Hey.”

It was Shark-mouth. She was leaning back against the door to the apartment building — she’d gotten behind him so easily — with arms folded against her stomach and one boot against the door. She really carried that badass chick thing well, complete with the tank top, leather jacket, ripped jeans, the works. She was using that nifty cloak of night thing Nosferatu and Mehket could do, but so close like this they could still talk.

To the kine, he probably looked like he was talking to his imaginary friend. Wonderful.

“Julias here? He wasn’t at his place.” She pointed across the street.

“His place? Oh, right, he said he hadn’t shown you his new place.”

“He moved? ... he didn’t tell me.”

Wow. If he didn’t know any better, he’d think she was pouting. It was hard to tell with how her raven hair hid the sides of her mouth, but he doubted it’d be any better if he could see her massive array of huge teeth. “He took Alder Honors’s mansion for his own.” He tried to sound adult, proper, royal, but it just didn’t sound very good on him.

With a small wince, he got back up and dusted himself off. Presentation was important, even to a Nosferatu, or a rebellious Carthian. But adjusting his suit and tie only made the damn monster girl chuckle. She was infuriating, and scary.

“Wait wait, he’s got Viktor’s old place? Shit man, in Rich Side?” She pushed away from the door, and a mad grin crossed her lips, big enough he could see the shark teeth peak through.

“Right, Rich Side. Ok? I’ll be seeing you.” He gave up on the fake royal demeanor waved her off before he started walking down the street.

A moment later, she was walking next to him. She definitely had guts for a Nosferatu, not for walking with him since he was just a pipsqueak, but for walking along in the crowd of kine. She tilted her head, avoided eye contact with kine who stepped too close, and otherwise kept her discipline going just enough so kine’s eyes just glided off of her. It was impressive.

And he’d much prefer to make his mistakes learning to hunt in private.

“What do you want?”

“You’re hungry aren’t you? Please sir, I want some more?”

“Oh fuck you.”

“Ha!” She reached out and gave him a pat on the shoulder, just hard enough he felt the claws on her fingers. “Kid you are fucking hilarious.”

“Seriously could you fuck off so I can—”

“You have no idea what you’re doing, do you?”

He looked up at her and gave her the meanest glare he could muster. It only made her laugh.

“Kid you got a Ventrue with a heart of gold for a sire and a Prince with blood bags by the dozens lined up for you. Not either of them has probably had to go on a proper hunt in decades. Antoinette, centuries.” She chuckled more, wrapped an arm around his shoulders, and pulled him in close while they walked. “Ain’t neither of them who could teach you to hunt. Manipulate people and control them, sure, but hunt?”

He grit his teeth. Julias was a tough fucker, and Antoinette even tougher, but Beatrice had a point. Neither of them were hunters.

“What’s your point?”

“I,” she said, and poked his temple with a claw, “am going to teach you.”

---

There was no way out. Between the dark and the street, there were only walls. As if he was herding sheep, the kine in the back alley stepped away from him with a hurried, uneven step.

“Who are you? Hey, don’t try anything!”

It was a woman, someone in her forties, in good health and well dressed in a nice, sexy nightlife dress made for clubbing. The dress was particular for its open neck line, and his eyes transfixed themselves to it. She couldn’t see his face, not with the distant back light of the street behind him, and only blackness around them, but he could see every detail on her. With hunger bubbling up in his chest, the subtle touches of veins on her neck stuck out like a sore thumb.

“I said stay back!” She started rooting through her purse, and before long she had out her pepper spray, but he kept coming closer.

There was no one around, this deep into the city’s underbelly. No one who cared about a woman in an alley, anyhow. He had no idea how unsafe it was down here, this deep in South Side, but now that danger was his ally. So many dark alleys, barely any cops, and enough dirty money being thrown that nearly every street had some sort of unruly establishment. It made for easy pickings.

She reached into her purse, hands fumbling and zippers rattling. “I’m warning y—”

“Look into my eyes, woman.” He put on his best Julius voice. He was short, with no width to his shoulders or weight to his stance, but none of that mattered to a panicking woman all alone in a dark alley. And when he stepped closer so she could see his eyes in the shadow, he could hear her heart beating fast enough to hurt.

“I ... said...”

Quieter, and quieter. Her voice faded until it was just a whisper. Her eyes locked to his, drifted half-closed, and when he moved his head to the side, hers moved with it. Even her heartbeat slowed rapidly.

“Look into my eyes.” He came closer again, until he reached out. Would she break from his hold? Would she scream bloody murder? So close, he could smell her body, the natural scents of skin, the unnatural scents of perfume, and the hidden tide of blood within.

“I...” Barely audible. When he finally took her wrist into his hand, she didn’t pull back or flinch or even breath faster. She just held his gaze, and he held hers. Her consciousness had faded, and her eyes became a window to her subconscious. He had control.

Don’t think about your sister. Think about those thugs you controlled for that Xnomina deal instead. He didn’t know this woman, and that anonymity was powerful. It took only a small bit of effort, the smallest push, and her weak and terrified consciousness knelt like a slave. He never considered himself to be the dominant sort, but to have a human just give into your will was ... intoxicating.

“Expose your neck.”

She tilted her head to the side, reached up, and brushed her hair out of the way. Her eyes had grown dull, subservient, and her breathing was smooth and calm.

“Turn around.”

She did as told. So easy, so effortless. Intoxicating wasn't a strong enough word for the rush of power he felt controlling her. He took a step nearer to close the distance, put his hands on her stomach and hip, and took a deep breath of her neck. The smell of life, blood, even the musk and perfume, it spoke to that beast in his gut and mixed into his senses like thick incense.

And when he bit into her, it all came together in that orgasmic mixture of sweet, warm, flowing blood gushing up into his mouth. Tight lips, don't spill a drop, drink it all down until the flow slowed. He remembered, from Antoinette and Julias, remembered how to keep the victim alive. For the moment though, he let his beast rule, and drank with wild abandon. She didn't mind, and even let out moans of bliss from the power the Kiss had. Just like with Antoinette's ghouls, just like with the kine he'd fed on when with Julias, the woman melted and gave in.

A minute later, he opened his eyes, and lowered the now unconscious woman to the ground. He spent a moment to make sure she was leaning against the building wall, and despite himself, even checked to make sure he could still see signs of life. It was important she was still alive.

Beatrice landed beside him with a loud thud. She'd been watching from above, and it was her guidance that had lead him here. She showed him how to pick a target, follow them, guide them with bits of scary noises, moving shadows, and knowledge of the city's layout.

“You let her live.”

“What? Well ... yeah, course I did.” He tilted his head to the side and scratched his buzzed hair. “Is that ... do you not?”

She shrugged. “I usually let them live. Sometimes though, you find a kine that really just deserves to die.” With a quiet chuckle, she brought her claws up to her hair, and moved it aside to expose her shark teeth so she could pick at them. “But some Kindred kill at their whim. They’re just kine, blood bags, sheep, and you’re the wolf. You can too.” She reached out with that claw then, and poked him in the forehead hard enough she actually pierced skin; and it did nothing, no blood or anything, because he was a Kindred.

He was a Kindred. Not a human, not really. He was a walking corpse.

“ ... just because I can doesn’t mean I would.” He frowned then and pushed her claw aside, complete with a painful wince. “What sick fuck would just murder living, thinking, self-aware humans just because they can?”

“Your grandsire for one.”

“Then I’m glad I fucking killed him!”

She blinked. He blinked. Oh shit. Oh fuck he may have just royally boned himself.

“Fucking hell. You set the fire that took him out!” She grinned a smile that had him taking a step back. Those teeth were horrifying whenever she let them show.

“I ... um...” Shit shit shit. He looked around in a panic, but there was nothing and no one around. It was just a dark alley, an unconscious woman, and a Nosferatu Carthian who should very much not know what he just said.

“Don’t worry kid, your secret is safe with me. You think I’d be fucking your sire if I just wanted to screw you guys over?” She winked at him, but there was an obvious glee in her eyes. No poker skills at all, like him.

She was trustworthy ... ish. Julias had taught him well enough to see that.

“Ugh, don’t remind me.”

“Ah god damn kid, you’ve seen me topless. Just think of all the things your sire does to me in the dark.”

Ew. Ugh. Erk. Beatrice was attractive, sure, in a monster chick kind of way, and her shark-teeth-for-cheeks made her definitely interesting, and scary, but the thought of his sire fucking her was disturbing. Kind of like picturing your dad fucking someone.

“Speaking of sex!” Beatrice peaked down the alley to make sure no one was coming into the dark, then sat down on the unconscious woman’s lap. “Gimme the scoop!”

“Uh, she isn’t going to wake up?”

“Fuck no. You drained her good. In a few hours she’ll wake up and this’ll all be a hazy memory.”

“Um ... alright. Scoop?”

“You and the Prince! My god man, you’re banging the most powerful Kindred in all of Dolareido! Hundreds of Kindred in this city and your first hook-up is the mother fucking Prince. Gimme something!”

He did not expect that, not at all. Most of the Nosferatu he’d dealt with were quite closed off and aggressive. Beatrice was certainly aggressive, but she was smiling and grinning in a genuine way he couldn't quite understand. A happy Nosferatu was paradoxical.

He wasn't exactly keen on talking about Antoinette with her, but he did owe her. And she had him by the balls with his slip-up.

Arg, the ball. All the Kindred would be there. At least, the Carthians and Invictus would, and Antoinette. The Circle of the Crone never came to those gatherings, thank god. Jacob was a scary fucker.

“Yes, yes of course but...” He looked around, as if someone else may be listening. Just him, the monster, the unconscious woman, and the dark. “Fucking terrified of dancing in front of hundreds of Kindred.”

The laughter that erupted out of Beatrice was almost deafening. “Fucking surrounded by vampires, all of them older than you and looking for any edge they can find, and you're worried about your dancing skills?”

He shrugged. “Wouldn't you be?”

She tapped her chin a few times with a claw. “You know what? I probably would be too.”

---

~~Beatrice~~

She could never whistle, not since she got her shark teeth, but she tried anyway. It was a huge mansion. Huge! Dare she say, it was the biggest place in Rich Side. And her boyfriend owned it. She tried to hide the grin on her face, even wipe it away, but it remained. There really was something hot about Julias and his rise to power, complete with the suits to go with. Her old Carthian friends would laugh, hell she'd laugh if she'd known she had such a kink.

But she wasn't about to just walk up to his front door. He had a big, fancy place, and she was sure in typical Julias fashion that he'd let his guard down with his naivete. So she crept through the shadows and worked her up toward the huge building, which was not easy with its large array of windows on its antique, Victorian design. Whatever, that was Viktor's shit, but it did mean she had a lot of windows to keep track of as she approached, even with her cloak of her night hiding her.

It'd been a few days since Jacob had marked her with his Crúac. That insane rush and elder mastery of the discipline was gone, but she was still a damn pro. Pro enough to sneak up on her white knight, at least. There were small hills, trees, and holy fuck there were statues holding pitchers of water and everything. It was so disgusting. She loved it.

She went around back. Christ there was a fountain, huge and pouring water over an array of some kneeling statues before a tall ... Viktor. The fucker had a statue of himself. The hair was different, but she recognized the cheek bones of the twice dead bastard. Around the base of the statues were yet more statues of various predators and scavenger animals. Typical Ventrue, thinking he lorded over the animals and the kine.

One of the small animals waved. A rat, a real one. She looked at it, it looked at her, and it waved again. Why the mother fucking shit was a rat waving at her?

How had she not smelled it? Shit, she was downwind, so the fucker must have sneaked up on her. And to top it all off, the rat was pointing at the back door of the mansion. Rats didn't just randomly stand up and point at things, but this one was.

For fuck's sake. With a loud grump, she got up, let her cloak of night fade, and opened the large door. It was one of those heavy doors of colored wood with ornate carvings of historical figures she'd only seen on book covers.

She was not prepared for what was inside. Massive, spiral stairways, pillars, couches with elaborate patterns and what must have been the softest fabrics from a billion years ago. On one of the couches that pointed toward the entrance she'd come in through was Julias, one leg folded over the other and a smirk on his face.

“Alright, alright, you caught me.” She put up her hands. It was his rat, the dirty rat. Damn Ventrue and their rats.

“Think the Invictus would have given me this place if I wasn't strong enough to protect it?” He got up, gave her that cocky smirk, and walked to her.

All she had to do was smirk though, and that cocky smirk of his was gone and replaced with his old white knight self. The dumb bastard, smart as he was, didn't have a cruel bone in his body, and she took full advantage. She stepped up to him, and gave him a quick kiss. It was more than enough to make him surprise blink.

“Hey.”

“Hey,” he said, head tilted and eyebrow raised. “You seem in a good mood.”

She'd told Jacob about Damien, and what she'd seen him do once he'd left the underground compound. And Jacob had nodded, greeted her into the circle, and said she was free to do with the information as she wished. Right now, she had no idea what to do with it, but the power and choice was making her high. She'd warn Julias about the Lancea et Sanctum, but his goonies would have already told him. They didn't know that she knew, though.

“My god this mansion is huge. So many rooms!” She looked down the hallway where wooden chairs with cushions and end tables waited. The other way, a spiral staircase. The other way, the main entrance room where two staircases ended in a glorious display of wasted space.

It was such a turn on.

She took Julias's hand then, and started walking. He complied without a sound, but very confused. “So, which bedroom did you have my box of goodies in?”

“Oh,” he said, and the light clicked on over his head. “Sure, this way.”

---

“Oh my fucking god ... Ok, I admit it, this is so fucking awesome.”

The bedroom was gigantic. Big big big big bed, four posts, fluffy blankets of royal purple — fucking purple! — and massive pillows. The walls were drapes and curtains between fitting mannequins, and each mannequin was wearing some elaborate dress suit from probably hundreds of years ago.

And she was going to fuck on that bed. A lot. Nearly every day if she had any say in the matter.

“Viktor wasted much for extravagance,” Julias said, and he stepped around her to show a small frown. “I'd meant to bring you, but—”

“Whee!” She jumped up, spread out in the air, and belly flopped onto the bed. With expected delight, it bounced her back up a foot before she got to settle in. She looked over her shoulder at Julias, who was beyond bewildered, and she turned on the blush of life with a wink. Tone returned to her skin, her heart started pumping again, and the feel of blankets on skin became even more euphoric.

He chuckled, outright laughed even, and also began the blush of life as he approached her. “I had no idea you’d enjoy this sort of thing so much.”

“Decades spent living in rundown and abandoned buildings, Julias. Decades. Even when I was alive, nothing like this!” She kicked off her jeans with a laugh, and threw them at Julias at just the right angle they fell on his face and shoulders. He didn’t seem to mind, and smiled at her from between their legs.

“So, look at this.” She got onto her hands and knees, and arched her back like a stretching cat. The effect was her ass in the air, and to make things even better, she’d worn a thong. A tight, black thing that was a little lacy, but mostly just a thin strip that covered what might as well have been nothing. Micro thongs were the hottest. “You have any idea how uncomfortable ass floss is?” Uncomfortable, sure, but she had a large, toned ass, and the thong really brought out those curves perfectly.

Poor Julias’s jaw had dropped. “Damn.” He walked toward the bed with that same confident swagger he always had, but it was in stark contrast to his face. He was mesmerized. Had she found his weakness? His eyes were glued to her exposed ass cheeks, and even as he reached under the bed to pull out her box of goodies, he didn’t break his gaze. Yeap, he was an ass man, and she had the legs and ass of a yoga god.

Memories of Othello, the woman in his lap, and her ass spread open on his cock, jumped into her mind.

“Hey.” She grinned a big, delightful grin. “You know I never really thought about it, and I only just realized it. We’re vampires, and that means,” she said, and reached behind her to give her ass a slap, “no prep work needed for some fun. One-hundred percent clean.”

The look of genuine surprise on his face yet again made it all worth it. She was the one throwing the curve-balls tonight.

“You sure? I mean—”

“Hell yes I’m sure.” She looked around, grabbed one of those ridiculously expensive-looking pillows, and put it under her hips so she could lay down on her stomach. This way she got to relax, and keep her ass in the air.

The old tingles of excitement started to spark on her toes and up her legs. She loved anal sex when she was alive, if she could find a man who actually knew what he was doing. Julias had a hundred years under his belt; he most definitely knew what he was doing.

He started to undress. She found another pillow to put her head on, and turned her gaze to watch her man get out of his suit. Something about the way he undid the tie, slipped off the jacket, undid the buttons, it all reeked of confidence. And strength. The damn Ventrue had a lot of years on her, but it was more than that. It was in the size of his shoulders, the thickness of his arms, his height, the hard jaw despite his soft smile, and how he wore that ridiculous haircut of slicked-back blonde hair so well.

When he was finally naked, she took a good long look at his cock. Excitement turned to just a touch of panic. Julias was a very well-endowed man, and sure that was awesome for a rough-loving girl like her, but it was a little more complicated for anal sex.

But the big guy sat down beside her, and all it took was a gentle finger running along her thigh to break her. She let out a quiet murr before burying her face in the big pillow. With her hips raised on the other pillow, she wriggled around, got comfy, and took peaks over her shoulder to spy on Julias and whatever he was going to do.

He spent a couple minutes just massaging her ass with deep, drawn-out motions. She rolled her eyes and kept quiet, since there was no use in trying to coax the big bastard to do anything fast. He liked slow. Those tingles between her thighs were getting stronger though, and that fake warmth from the blush of life wasted no time.

He finally slid off her thong, and she let out a pleasant sigh. “Come on,” she said, “some of us have places to be.” She dipped her hips around left and right, squeezed her thighs, grinded them down against the pillow, and spread her legs nice and wide to expose everything for him.

He just chuckled.

She was about to protest, but instead let her head sink into the pillow, even chew on it a bit with her huge shark teeth, as Julias started to massage the lips of her cunt. He knew just how to tease her folds, just where to press and rub near her insides to make her muscles clench. When his fingers found her clit, it all just came together in a perfect array of pampering. She’d pay him back later with a good strip dance and lap fuck or something, but for now she just let him spoil her.

She let out a high-pitched meep when something cold landed on her ass. “Hey! Oh ...ahaha.” Over her shoulder, she watched Julias drip copious amounts of the lubricant from her box down the crack of her ass. Like, a lot. He just let it pour, until even she found herself a little worried for the pillow. “Yo, the bed is soaked now.”

He shrugged with a knowing smile. Once he’d thoroughly soaked her, he put the bottle away and resumed gently massaging her clit with his thumb. She thought it was his thumb anyway, not being able to see between her legs from the angle. But that circular, loving motion of it along the swollen nub, and how it teased her clit-hood piercing just right definitely meant thumb. She’d grown quite fond of that thumb.

His other hand though sneaked its way along her back and tickled her spine. If she were still kine, she'd have started breathing faster in anticipation. Those fingers roamed up and down the small of her back, nudged her shirt up to tease more of her back, before inching their way down to her ass. Just when she was about to say something, that thumb making love to her clit slipped into her cunt between muscle clenches, and she let out a surprised squeal.

“Hey! Cheater.” She leaned up on her hands and arched her back to look behind her, but she only managed a quick glance at the bastard's sly grin before she collapsed. His thumb reached into her pussy deep and pressed down toward her belly, hard. Like fucking lightning, powerful shocks worked up and down her legs and into her insides until she was shaking. Her huge claws pierced the ridiculously expensive bed, and her huge teeth took a chunk out of the pillow, but she couldn't possibly bring herself to give a fuck while an orgasm was working through her. She squeezed, clenched, wriggled and squirmed, and otherwise just laid there while Julias rubbed her g-spot down toward the pillow she was resting her hips on. Her juices gushed out with each hard clench of her muscles. Girl cum soaked her, splashed against his thumb, and trickled down her thighs.

“I think,” Julias said once she'd stopped mewling into the pillow, “you should come to the Prince's ball with me.”

“Wh ... what?”

“You should come to the ball with me.”

“I thoooooought...” She looked behind her again. Julias had started to caress and massage the rose of her sphincter. His other hand still had its thumb deep inside her slit, but now he was slowly working a finger into her ass. And she loved it. Something about the pressure, the spreading open of the muscle, the sinking sensation of his finger working her open and entering her.

The mountains of lube he'd used also made it easy. The big guy had big hands, big fingers, but he was slow and knew just how to lightly press in, give her time to adjust, let her relax, and then push a finger deeper.

"I thought we talked ... about this." Quiet moans were mixed with her words, and her eyes were fixed on how his hand was moving between her butt cheeks; watching him slide his finger into her tight ass was half the fun. When his finger started to work on the second ring of muscle inside her, she lied back down and sighed with glee. So deep. After a few more delightful minutes, he'd managed to get a finger in down to the base knuckle, and he was pushing it down toward her belly and womb. Pressure, deep inside her in her belly, pushing down and into her abs from inside her ass.

He pushed into her further, sinking more than just the finger, but some of his hand as well. With time, he pressed down harder, until he was squashing her womb and deepspot through the wall of her insides and pushing them into the blankets. He pressed in a slow rhythm, but each time he pressed down until she felt like she was pinned, ass spread open and insides singing in bliss.

Christ she was mewling like a cat in heat again.

"We did, but you're much easier to convince in this scenario," he said, and started to ease his finger out. She managed a small whimper, which sounded disgustingly girly, but god damn it'd been so long. Just when she was going to say something, he started to work two fingers into her, massaging the lubricant around and opening her up.

"I told ... don't want to go ... fucking ball." She could feel her juices soaking the pillow, coating her thighs, and joining the mess of lube everywhere. Two fingers were wriggling around inside her ass, pushing down toward her cunt, and putting pressure on that deep spot inside. Deep deep inside. When he got the two fingers into her ass past the knuckles, space inside her suddenly ran out, and her eyes were rolling up with the sensation of being so full.

“You sure?” He started to press down toward her belly again, and this time he massaged her clit with his other hand until the juices were just pouring.

She tried to look behind her to watch, but the telltale signs of an orgasm put her head back down onto the pillow. It was different when it was so deep. A clit orgasm was like a sharp shock of pleasure, but the way he got to press down into her deepest parts got one of those powerful, full-body waves of pleasure orgasms going that she could feel from her core to her toes. Her muscles gripped down on his fingers between spasms, and more of her juices leaked from her cunt until the pillow was a lost cause. And he milked it from her, pushing those two fingers harder down against her until she could feel it pushing against her cunt and womb through her ass. The effect left her a wriggling, writhing mess of moans, and leaking cum.

He pushed harder, enough to sink her down into the bed. She came again, groaned into the pillows, and squirted against his hands so hard she felt the splash. He eased his play on her clit — thank god, the swollen nub had become so sensitive, any touch felt like fire — but the fingers in her ass were not so forgiving, and they started to work up and down hard enough to make her ass bounce. Her whole body convulsed, pleasure spasms tearing through her, making her toes curl and her feet kick at the blankets. She squirted again, and whimpered like a little virgin girl as a few more sharp spurts of her cum splashed against the pillow and her thighs. But at last, just seconds before she was going to start begging for a break, Julias eased up his finger fucking, and massaged her quivering walls with his fingers while her orgasms settled into blissful aftershocks.

“See, I think it’d be pretty amazing for a Carthian to be seen with an Invictus.” He removed his fingers, and she found herself clenching her muscles in spurts at the empty feeling. “A member of the Invictus council, nonetheless.”

He thought she was still a Carthian. Hell she thought she was still a Carthian half the time. Better everyone thought that, for now.

“Is that why? Politics?” She managed to put her weight on her elbows, shivering included, and gave Julias the biggest evil glare she could muster.

It all melted away when he knelt down between her legs, and laid his cock between her butt cheeks. She tried to look back up at him, glare at him or something, but her eyes were stuck on how its length rested in the crevice of her muscles, and its head, swollen and demanding attention, nudged into the small of her back.

And it only got better when he started to drip more lube onto it. He didn't give a damn about the bed either.

“I'd be lying if I said no. There's peace, and I'd like to keep it that way.” He brought his cock back a ways, and with one hand guided the glans down between her toned ass cheeks to find her sphincter. The way he'd thoroughly worked her open earlier left her muscles still partly spread for him, and he used it to start easing his fat cock into her ass.

He'd only just started and it was already thicker than two fingers, but the man knew what he was doing, and went slowly. Very slowly.

“... and?” she managed to say, before he sank a couple inches of his girth into her. Her rings of muscle squeezed on it and made her wince for a moment, but its flesh texture spread her open and continued to push into her, until her eyes were rolling up in her skull.

“And I think it'd be a great time. You, me, slow dancing.” His voice got deep in that manipulative way he was so good at, until she could feel it against her. Then he leaned over her, put his hands down against hers so they were pinned down to the bed, and he started to lower himself on top of her.

“I hate ... slow dancing...”

Sometimes she'd forget how physically imposing Julias could be. He was a smooth talker and all-around nice guy. He had no business being so tall, with such broad shoulders and thick arms, but when he got on top, she became the tiny girl hidden in his shadow. His big hands entwined with her claws, and his chest grew closer and closer to her spine as he sank further down.

And the further he sank down, the deeper he went. Deeper, until he was deeper than his fingers went. With him right over her, she put her cheek to the pillow and looked up at him sideways, and did her best to not mewl, or panic. It was really deep.

She almost stopped him. It felt like there was no end to him, and when it felt like he was going to push up into her stomach, she opened her mouth to say something. But her ass and his hips aligned, nice and snug, and Julias let out his own quiet groan as he pushed his weight into her. She, on the other hand, started to tremble. She was trapped underneath him, his abdomen against her ass and pushing her into the bed, and it was so damn fucking hot she could already feel her toes curling. His balls resting against her soaked pussy lips only made everything better.

“I think you like slow dancing.” His weight nudged forward, just enough to make her ass shift with him and the girth of his cock press down at a different angle. Then he eased back, still buried balls-deep in her ass, in the softest rocking motion he'd ever used on her.

And it worked. That deep penetration sensation was scary, it was all such soft flesh inside there, but the way he put his weight down in that constant pressure pushing down against her womb was fucking wonderful. She squeezed her claws around his fingers between them, and let her mewls get louder as another one of those overwhelming climaxes worked through her like a machine.

“This is different ... slow dancing.” She managed a little energy, and pushed her ass up to meet him, but she barely had enough room to even wriggle. She could still squeeze though, and when the orgasm aftershocks weren’t making her muscles spasm too uncontrollably, she did her best to milk the man’s cock for him.

The groans he gave, quiet and just barely audible grunts over her head, would have sounded so corny in a porno. But they were real groans, and she was the one milking them out of the big guy, and that made it all so much hotter.

He kept that super slow pace of his for a good ten minutes. The bastard had so much patience, and no matter how much she squirmed and wriggled to entice him, he never started to fuck her hard. This time she was thankful for it. She laid there, and simply writhed in pleasure as he pushed his cock down against her deepspot until she came a couple more times. With her legs spread and with how he was burying himself to the hilt inside her, she could feel his testicles resting against her pussy lips; they were absolutely drenched in her cum.

And when he started to cum inside her, he put his head down next to hers on the pillow, continued to fuck her in that slow, gentle, barely-moving pace. His body gave tiny muscle twitches, and his weight rested on her back as he came. She let out soft whimpers, partially just cause it seemed like the thing to do, but the sensation of his body burying hers into the bed was oddly comforting. He was squirting cum into her guts, with how deep he was. Fucking god the thought alone made her moan for him, squeeze her ass, and grind it against his body to milk more hot cum from him.

“You don’t think ... everyone at that ball would be staring at you like I do?” he said, and leaning down so far he managed to put his lips to her ear. “At that ass like I do?”

Fuck, the ear. So cliché, but she was still shaking like a leaf and all it took was a little kiss or breath on her ear to make her shiver a little.

“That is ... you think so?” Of course he was just smooth talking. She had claws for fingers and a shark mouth; she just had to look at younger Kindred to make them look the other way, or run.

But then, she’d never hung out with older Kindred before Julias. Maybe there was something there? Even the Invictus Maria had to get laid, right? Well, maybe not. Elder sex drives were unpredictable.

They laid together for a few more minutes, just letting the last remnants of their fake life leak out of them as sexual juices. She turned her head enough to look at Julias, and he looked at her, and they sorta just looked at each other for a while. Comfortable.

Comfortable was weird, new ground, but fuck it, she liked it.

Should she tell him about Damien? That Mehket was fucking dangerous. No doubt Julias had learned about him from Natasha and Jessy but the things that happened after were surprising. The things Damien had said when she followed him after his murdering spree, hints about some plan...

She’d told Jacob, and only him. Was Jack in danger? Damien clearly had something against the Prince, and that meant Jack. And after earlier tonight, she had to admit she liked the kid.

Ok, maybe just a little info, to keep Jack out of shit. “So ... I did a little scouting a few nights ago, right? Ran into this guy named Damien.”

Chapter 16

~~Damien~~

There is much you can see from above.

Damien sat there, sullen, in the dark, until the image of it made him shake his head. If anyone had the right to be emo, angst, edgy, dark and brooding, it was him, but things were different now and every action had purpose and goals. He sat atop one of the tallest towers of South Side, and he peered through his telescope. Not some child's toy either, but a genuine, expensive, heavy machine he'd carried with him up the tower.

There were several such towers, and he knew which ones were safe to perch from and observe the city in peace. The Carthians, the Invictus, even the occasional witch from the Crone, he knew their faces and he knew their patterns. For fifty long years he watched, waited, analyzed, stalked, and it was all starting to come together, now that Lucas was awake once more.

He hoped.

This tower he chose because it allowed him to see into Jack Terry's room. The boy was standing by his large window, and he was ... practicing poses of intimidation. He had a glass of blood in one hand, his other hand in the small of his back behind him, and he was trying to stand up straight with good posture. It did not suit the small vampire.

He could kill Jack, of that there was no question. He could have killed Natasha and Jessy too, if he hadn't let his guard down and suffered a bullet to the face to start their fight, and hadn't been trying to subdue them instead of kill them. That defeat still ate at him. Jack, he could kill in his sleep, but the boy deserved no such fate.

His lover did, and that was why he watched him. Information was deadly, and any he could glean from Jack about Antoinette would be worth it. If the worse came to pass, he could kill Jack to make sure she suffered, but it would be a hollow victory. And it would doom him. The Prince would burn the city to the ground looking for him, and even he could not avoid that.

He could kidnap Jack, hold him hostage, but then the Invictus and the two Dragons would rain death upon him and the Lancea et Sanctum. The Carthians would probably join in just to watch the fire.

Every fiber of his being, every shred of dust and ash in his withered insides wanted that Prince dead. He wanted to see her crucified and left for the sun. He wanted to collect her ashes and throw them into the the sewers.

But he couldn't do it. Not for any ethical, moral, or even political reason. He simply did not have the strength. Lucas was only just awoken from fifty years torpor; it would take him months, even years to fully recover the strength he once had in his prime. All Damien could do was believe in his sire. He had a plan.

Movement. Jack was turning from the window to answer the door.

---

~~Antoinette~~

How long had it been, since she had walked the streets of her city so openly?

She had to be careful, for more reasons than most. As Prince she was a target, her second death would cause a power vacuum many hoped for. But there were other, more subtle reasons, such as her distinguished features. It meant that older humans could recognize her quite easily, even if they hadn't seen her in half a century. Kindred faces did not appear on camera or film easily, the beast was a sly creature capable of avoiding such things, but a human's eyes had no such issue.

Still, it had been a long time since she'd let her face be openly known to the public, and that meant she could walk the streets if she wished. And now in the modern times, her white hair, her red eyes, they were just expressions of the latest fashion with hair dye and contact lenses. Naturally.

Daniel was next to her. The tall, quiet man with his monotone voice kept pace with her as if he was inanimate, like some sword in its sheathe. Something about the way he moved, trench coat and unassuming face behind those boring glasses, was enough to make any approaching kine step aside and give them both a wide berth.

“I am not sure. No doubt it was Tony's death that sparked his return, but Viktor's death would only harm his inevitable attempts to reestablish the Sanctified.” She gave a small shrug and kept walking. Even for a midnight stroll through her city, she would not be caught wearing something as drab as a trench coat. Instead she wore a black night coat with fur for cuffs and neck lining, with the straps of a corset along the coat's back.

Daniel adjusted his glasses. “He hides in Tony's complex, but has managed to convert many. His approach is the opposite of what I expected.”

“What he did last time is why we killed them, Daniel.” Antoinette gave him a quick glance, but kept walking. The topic of conversation was very sensitive, but meaningless to any kine who overheard. “Now he attempts passivity, as if he were Ghandi. I suspect I will have to deal with him and that childe of his before their veil of deceit succeeds over their new congregation.”

Daniel made the tiniest flinch. “Of course Voivode.”

“Daniel, I know you spared the boy for a reason, but if he wastes your generosity, I expect you to have the will to deal with him.” Her voice grew cold, ice, and she reached out to take her sheriff by the arm. She squeezed the wrist just hard enough to force him to look at her.

His eyes, as monotone as his voice, managed to hold her gaze until he adjusted his glasses again. “Yes Voivode.” The slight twitch in his lip was enough to let her know he was listening.

“Good.” She let go, and they resumed their stroll. She did not enjoy being harsh on her sheriff, but circumstances had changed. Things were simpler when it was simply the two of them holding the city through sheer force, and keeping the other covenants under her control. Now she maintained an unsteady peace with two covenants, while one hid in the dark and the other seemed content to rise as Jesus.

She let out a quiet groan and brought a hand to her face. “Once that fool Lucas is dealt with, as well as that sneaky childe of his, I will have to deal with Jacob.”

“You don’t trust him?”

“Of course not. He plays his games for chaos and carnage. If I let him, he would have the entire city sectioned off, and he would let survival of the fittest rein within.” Her voice turned to bile. “No respect for the Masquerade, for the Danse Macabre, or anything that would last the tide of a revolution by the kine.” She gritted her teeth and shook her head. How could the fools not understand? Lucas and his idiot religion would not survive technological growth, and neither would Jacob's Circle of the Crone. At least the Invictus understood that, and the Carthians.

In a hundred years, space travel could very well be commercial, and each decade brought with it new ways to expose Kindred everywhere. Could they not see the future? Were they so blind as to the dangers? Idiot children. Worse yet, idiot old men incapable of adapting.

She bit down on her fangs. Now she was angry. Things had been going so well, but Lucas's return and Jacob's games had ruined her delightful mood. "Daniel, return to the tower and have my assistant cancel my three o'clock. I will be spending the remainder of my time with Mister Terry."

With only the smallest nod, he turned and started to walk, but he only managed a foot before she took his arm again.

"Daniel, your childe is already involved in this. You should warn them."

"... yes, Voivode."

---

She knocked.

Oh, how long had it been since she knocked on someone's door? It seemed like such a simple thing, but now she realized it was a rarity in her life. It made her chuckle. She made sure to step aside so Jack would not be able to see her clearly through the peephole.

He opened the door with barely a check. "Hello?"

She reached out, grabbed him, and pinned him against the wall of the hallway. It was one of the more modern apartment buildings, where each floor contained only one apartment, all connected by a single elevator, each with a single small entrance lobby. It also meant no one could knock unless Jack had buzzed them in. She had her ways, of course, and had bypassed it. And still Jack had opened the door as if nothing was unusual.

“My dear boy, you are much too trusting.” She leaned down to put her forehead against his, and met his gaze with a wicked grin.

“My Prince! I ... um...” Aha, she had caught him with his guard down. He even looked ashamed. “You’re right, sorry. Just habit.”

“I am glad you are home though. Please forgive my unannounced visit, but I could do with a distraction.” Too forward? Nonsense. She didn’t let go of his wrists though, and kept them pinned to the wall.

He looked so confused, like a deer in headlights. “Um, I ... you’re ... alone.”

“I am alone. Is that surprising?”

“You’re the Prince! I expected bodyguards, the sheriff, sniper sights tracing me right now!”

She laughed. “Were it but fifty years ago. The elders would hide in their homes and let their ancillae wolves handle the fighting between covenants. There is peace now, and I can once again walk my streets without fear of such mindlessness.” She lowered her face further, until her lips were grazing the boy’s and her nose was nudging against his. “But even in such times, I took care of myself, little Ventrue.”

“Wow. Just ... it’s like, royalty knocking on my door, ya know?”

“Like? Prince is a Kindred title of politics.” She pressed her lips against his, and drank in his green, wide eyes as she did so. “You, my dear lover, have been fucking the Queen.”

Oh the look in his eyes lifted her spirits immediately. He was so delightful, the way they opened wide with her words, realization and exhilaration and shock and fear mixing in only a split moment of awareness. She let go of him then, and took a step back to give him way. Once he realized why, he gave a small ‘ooh’ and stepped inside to hold the door open for her.

She recognized the apartment’s style. “You truly are Julias’s childe. But I admit there is a certain elegance to the simplicity.” The apartment took up the whole floor of the building, and every room with interconnected with few walls. Minimalist, with cool colors. Of course, there was the huge window that overlooked a huge chunk of South Side. Its sister building across the way had the same. People often stood in the windows and looked at each other. No one waved, but some managed smiles. Some did a little more than smile.

“Sorry, sorry! And, uh, I didn’t know you were coming. So I...” Jack looked around, scratched at his buzzed hair, and gave her a quirky smile. There was no mess, but there wasn’t much of anything.

“Most Kindred your age would be hanging any memento they could of the time of their death. Something that would mark the time period they passed. Do you not have any idols?”

“It’s never been my thing, I guess.” He put his hands out for her coat, and she obliged. Underneath she wore her business suit, though it was closer to a dress than a suit, and its ample cleavage and exposed knee was more than enough to pull the boy’s gaze. “I can sit, and listen to a virtuoso for hours, and focus on the depth and technique and complexity of the composition, but it just never occurred to me to put their picture up on my wall.”

The boy was skilled in active music listening then. A rare talent. “It sounds to me that you prefer to focus on the art, and not the artist, yes?” She sat down on his couch, a lovely thing of black softness, and folded a leg over the other. “To truly let yourself be captured in the moment of art is a skill rarely found in kine, Jack. It is something many Daeva look for in a potential childe.”

“Really?” He plopped down next to her on the couch. He too was in a suit, something far more casual, and she could smell the after-scents of kine on him. From the smile and the smell, he must have returned from a successful hunt.

“Indeed. That level of focus, and awareness? It is impressive, and it brings me joy to know that you have it.” She curled a finger at him, and he slid closer along the couch. “It is why you have an innate talent for the Ventrue discipline dominate. To focus so purely and completely?” She pointed at her eyes, and then his own. “It is the same focus a conductor uses to weave together a massive tapestry of dozens of instruments across movements.”

And he went deer in headlights again. She rolled her eyes, and laughed. Such talk could be saved for between Julias and his childe, but it was nice to know there was more depth to Jack than what was obvious. Even as he stirred uncomfortably while she watched him, the hints of self-awareness dripped from his movements. The way his eyes flickered for a second when he looked between her and an object, the way his fingers tapped subtle rhythms, it all left small droplets of thinking, processing, and being trapped in his thoughts.

She would pull him out of those thoughts into the moment, and enjoy doing so.

She blushed life. It was enough to bring the boys eyes up, and a smile. That expectant, nervous, excited smile. “Blush for me,” she said, in a way she’d grown accustomed to. And like a well-trained husband, he broke into a big smile and did as told. Warmth returned to their skin, as did color, and the heat of fake life.

“I still feel horribly unprepared, this place is just an apartment. You’re royalty!”

“And that is why I walk the streets alone instead of with an army of ghouls and ancillae, like Viktor would.” She chuckled all the more. “Ruling, for Kindred, is in the action, not the presentation. But,” she waggled a finger, “a little presentation never hurt. Have you decided on what to wear to the ball?”

“The ball ... er...” He shuffled, squirmed, refused to look at her, and even dragged his feet along the hardwood floor. “I haven’t. Julias purchased me some things, cause ... you know, never going to change size-wise.”

“Mon cheri, you must fetch them! The ball is in only a few days, and while Julias has a good eye, he does not have mine.” Her French accent erupted into full bloom. Hazy, distant memories of trying on dresses back in Europe crept into her mind, and faded away just as quickly, like dreams. But the emotion was there, and it touched on her and made her giggle.

Jack blinked a few times at her, then was up with a bounce and running down the hall. Nervous, as always, but excited too. In a few minutes, he had several garment bags thrown onto the counter of his kitchen.

“Heh, this could be fun. I never thought about doing this with you. Always seemed like the kind of thing to do before you meet the girl.” He moved to the window and reached for the curtains. They were only open a couple feet, and now that he was aiming to close them, a thought dawned on her.

“Leave them open.”

“Antoinette?”

“The curtains, leave them.” She brought her fingers to her chin and rested her index upon her lip, complete with a wicked smile. “And try on some clothes for me, s’il vous plaît.”

Conflicted. What would he do? He would obey, of course, after debating it in his mind as he always did. He would consider his options and realize she was presenting him the opportunity for both growth, and exhilaration. And after a moment he did as requested, with the occasional glance toward the window as he started to undress.

“A few windows across the street can see into here.”

“Let them see, then. They are just kine, and no Kindred of age would care.” She took her own glance at the window, and then back to the young man stripping in front of her. “And any who see you would only grow hungry for you, as I do.” She pulled her skirt up a few inches on one leg, and let the fingers of her other hand drift up her thigh.

“I ... uh ... should I—”

“Do not stop, little Ventrue. I would like to see the clothes.”

The way he squirmed and struggled with the mixture of so many avenues of stimulation was like a tasty dessert. He'd glance out the window as he stripped off a piece of clothes, then back to her, and she'd entice him with her wandering fingers while she sat on the couch. Before long, he was down to simple undergarments, and trying on a suit.

“Hmm. It is lovely, but too business imposing. The ball will be formal, but not business related. It is a black tie event.”

Jack scratched his head and looked down at his suit. “The tie is black.”

Laughter just poured out of her. “Oh Jack. Silly boy, I mean a tuxedo.”

“Oh!” He started to undress again, and once down to his boxers, he unzipped the bag containing the tuxedo. “But ... it doesn’t have a tie. It has a bow tie, but — why are you laughing?”

It was too much. The utterly perplexed expression on his face had her in fits of laughter. Her voice grew to a volume she’d not used in ages, and it was all joy. When she managed to recompose herself long enough to look at Jack, he was torn between smiling and looking offended, and it only made her laugh harder.

She got up, and with a swiftness that took her lover by surprise, she scooped him up into her arms and hugged him. “Never you mind the insanity of it all. Just show me your choice of tuxedos ... later.” She set him down on the couch, and replaced him as the one on display.

“Later? I ... oh.”

With slow teasing, she started to undo the buttons of her suit jacket. “I love to indulge in great displays of wealth, power, presence, such as a tuxedo or dress, when it is not a question of politics. I can faintly remember, when I was but a young ancilla hundreds of years ago, walking down grand stairways with silk dress twenty-feet long following behind me, tied to my naked body at the wrists. Musicians would be there, playing gentle music on strings, and before me a host of kine, men and woman alike, waited and bathed in a pool of warm waters. I would drink of them all, and the moans of sex would fill the corridors.”

Jack’s eyes were wide and glued to her fingers.

“But,” she said, and slid out of her suit jacket to begin undoing the buttons of her shirt, “it was all, as you once said, hollow. Right now, to simply enter my lover’s abode, not to feed on kine, but to talk and touch? You may think this simple, or obvious, but to an elder such as I, this is ... unique. Precious.” She slid out of the white shirt and tossed it aside. As expected, the boy’s eyes immediately fell to her bra, and how it fit snug against her large bosom. A delicate, white thing made more for looks than function.

“I ... well ... I mean ... heh.” He managed to break eye contact with her breasts and lift his gaze to her before scratching his buzzed hair. “That does sound pretty amazing though.”

“Oh? Then perhaps some day, I will gather a dozen girls for you? A slave to a Daeva discipline for the night, they would gladly do anything you wanted.” She reached behind her, and undid the clasp of her bra with just the right amount of angle and twist that it came off with almost elastic force. And when it fell, Jack’s eyes were again fixed to her breasts, helpless to them. “But I think you will find I can satisfy any desire you have personally.”

He gulped, something Kindred did not do, but her topless body was enough to regress him so. She chuckled, stepped forward, and put her hands on his shoulders. Her long white mane was behind her, spread over her back, and her breasts dangled with their size and weight in front of the boy’s face.

“Undress me.”

“... ok.” His hands found her hips, and fumbled behind her to look for the zipper of her skirt. His face was almost touching her breasts, but he knew better than to disobey. It took some time for him to find the zipper and undo it, but time only made everything sweeter for her. She shifted her hips as he pulled down, and with tiny chuckles, worked her way out of the skirt. A kine or two were probably watching the two of them through the apartment window. Good.

“Continue.”

He was practically melting, and arousal was pouring out of him. Her panties were, of course, of something both elegant and soft on the skin. Even a vampire disliked coarse fabrics.

He slipped his fingers into them, and let out a groan. “God ... so ... beautiful...” His tongue got twisted in his mouth, but his green eyes were locked to her hips, and lower. When he finally exposed her smooth privates, he groaned even louder. Then he glanced to the window. “Um, some people might be able to see you.”

“Then let them watch.” She kicked off her heels, and raised a leg to place the foot upon the couch, next to the young man. She was completely naked, and her great height put her sex at the perfect height to Jack’s face, as he was still sitting on the couch. With a quiet sigh, she stood up straight, and leaned her crotch in towards his lips, with one hand on her hip and the other on his fuzzy head.

With a little guidance, she brought the boy’s head to her pussy’s lips. He responded with another moan and wrapped her lips around most of her, devouring her, burying her slit in the warmth of his lips. He started softly though, like she taught him, and gave her clitoris slow, loving licks. More quiet mewls escaped her. She put her other hand on his head to balance herself, and pin him there.

“Slowly at first, like that. You can ... taste me ... growing more wet.” She slid a hand off his head, found his arm, and guided his hand up between her legs. “And when you can taste me, then you can enter me.”

Jack looked up at her, though she had to lean forward to see past her breasts, and the look of intoxication in his green eyes had her growing more wet just for it. He was so enraptured, so compelled, she sometimes wondered if she had accidentally fed him some of her blood to bind him, or perhaps used a Daeva discipline on him to seduce him. But she had done neither, and it made it all the more sweet when he finally did slip a finger into her wet, dripping insides.

“Yes. There, a little deeper ... there. Curl your finger toward yourself, like ... that.” It wasn’t that Jack was a poor lover; indeed, he was a quick learner, but she knew what she liked, and every man could use a little guidance now and then. Jack didn't mind, and even thrived on the advice. He curled his finger toward her g-spot, and continued to lick her clit until her juices were almost dripping. When he started to suckle on her clit, pulling it between his lips and burying with his tongue, she did start to drip. Her juices trickled down her thighs, and it only spurred Jack to finger her faster. Sparks of pleasure filled her center, and rose into her into and down into her thighs.

Her muscles clenched down. The orgasm was building, but it wasn't there yet. She would milk it though, suppress it and rebuild it until she was ready. "Two fingers ... harder." He withdrew his finger, and then spread her open with two, before resuming with curling pressure toward her g-spot that only grew harder, and harder. She started to move her hips with him, and put both her hands on his head again to steady herself as at last the waves of pleasure started to creep up and down her legs.

Her toes curled, her voice grew quiet, and her eyes rolled upward. Her nipples swelled, and juices leaked out of her onto the boy's palm.

"Slower ... gently..." she said, a difficult thing to do in the middle of orgasm. But it was worth it. It would have been painful for him to keep going during orgasm, but to be gentle and milk her pleasure during climax was wonderful. Her pussy started to spasm on its own, and those blissful waves worked their way up into her chest and down to her toes. The gentle, continued touch of her lover kept those waves going, until her eyes closed and she basked in the long-coming afterglow.

At last, she stepped away. Her legs were quivering with orgasm aftershocks, and she let out a long sigh with contentment at how the sparks worked up her thighs. She sat down next to Jack, and leaned her head down to rest it atop his while she focused on those final pleasure tremors.

The young man was smiling giddy.

“Proud of yourself?”

“No! Well ... yes, but it’s you, you know? The look on your face, and the way you move and ... arg, it’s all so damn amazing, and hot.”

“Thank you.” She took a moment to look around. His couch was quite large, with flat cushions. Horrendously dull, but efficient, and it also worked as a small bed. So with a chuckle, she leaned to the side and rolled onto her back, and laid down upon the couch. With a little adjusting of her long hair, and wriggling of her hips, she successfully got comfortable with her head up on the arm of the couch, and one leg behind Jack while the other rested on his lap.

“Umm...”

“Come here, little Ventrue.” She opened her arms for him, palms up, and motioned for him to come to her. She had vague images of a siren or mermaid, seducing a naive sailor from the safety of his vessel.

But only softness awaited her Jack. He smiled, green eyes wide at the valley of flesh she had laid before him, and he wriggled around to face her between her legs. She let one of her legs dangle off to the side of the couch to give him room, and he crawled up and over her with patience despite the ravenous look in his eyes.

He nearly fell off the couch getting out of his boxers, complete with looks of shame, but it only made her laugh. She reached out and slipped her hands down his back, felt the lean muscles of his smaller body, how his hard muscles lined his shoulder blades and down his spine, and how his abs rested against her stomach as he laid down on her.

Her hands drifted back up to his neck, and without even thinking about it, she guided his lips to her breasts. Their large size and heavy weight made them fall to the sides of her ribs, but that did not stop Jack from closing his eyes as if in glorious rapture when he wrapped his lips around one of her nipples. He was laying on top of her, his weight but a feather, and the feel of his body and cock along her pelvis and stomach was warm, comforting, erotic. But it was the feel of his tongue, saliva, and lips enveloping her engorged areola and hard, swollen nipple that had her cooing.

The earlier orgasm had readied her body, and now everything the boy did, every lick of his tongue along her breasts, the way he shifted slightly with his cock resting on her lower stomach, the way his gentle groans vibrated on her skin, it all made her tingle with pleasure. Pleasure sparks worked through her, from her breasts into her core and down between her legs, and all she had to do was lay there and let Jack do what came naturally to him.

Then he raised his head, tilted it to the side and looked at her, puzzled. “You ever think ... I dunno, just sometimes I think this is a little childish of me.”

“Oh?”

“Your breasts! They’re ... huge, and soft and so heavy, and ... your nipples get all swollen and big...” As if addicted, he cupped the weight of her other breast to push it up onto the center of her chest so he could nudge his nose into its soft underside. “And I have to suck on them. Not exactly manly.”

“We can do something manly later, my little lover. Perhaps a blowjob? And then you can take me hard from behind?” He blinked with raised eyebrows, and she laughed. She would do it, of course, and enjoy every moment if only because of how fun it would be to take Jack through such exhilaration. But... “But for now, I would like to lay down on my lover’s couch, and feel his kisses on my breasts. Many women would love for nothing more than this.

“If only one change...” She reached down underneath him, between where their stomachs grazed each other, and took his cock into her hand. He backed up a little, looked down at how she held him, and melted into her grip like butter as she guided him in. The feel of his member opening her soaked flesh was always the most euphoric moment. Each separate inch of his cock spreading her and making her cunt spasm in random spurts of delight. And when she squeezed, Jack had to work to push himself in further, which made her weak in the knees and had him almost whimpering as her soaked, hot flesh gripped him.

But eventually he was in, and she put her hand back on his head while the other rested on his lower back. She helped him of course, raised her hips into him and guided his motion with her hand, but it was not a new position for them – except for the couch part. He leaned down into her, balls deep inside her, and rocked back and forth in a slow, subtle motion while he used his hands to keep himself over her. No matter the position, the boy really loved to gorge on her breasts with his lips, and continued to do so. The warmth of her earlier orgasm made her breasts sensitive, her nipples hard and loving the attention, so each of his kisses sent more slow tingles down her core until it reached her thighs and toes.

His kisses drifted up higher, and she even found herself a little stunned when his lips found her neck. He pressed his chest down against her, just a little, and nudged his nose up underneath her jaw before taking a few more kisses along her naked collar. Despite being surprised, she leaned into it, and stroked his head’s crown with encouragement. It was a little thing, but something Jack would not have done without her forcing it in the past.

“You know, every time we have sex ... I really do feel like I’m in the arms of a goddess.” His kisses drifted further down, and before long he started to do the same to one of her breasts again. “A scary, deadly, beautiful undead goddess.” He used his hand this time, and squeezed the soft mound so that it overwhelmed his hand and fingers. Without a care for time or need to cum anytime soon, he massaged her breast, ran his thumb over and around her swollen nipple, and again wrapped it within his mouth to suckle on it.

All she had to do was lay there and enjoy every moment of his touch and his words.

It was a slow, gentle bout of sex. She would entice more of his hidden, aggressive nature eventually, but there was no harm in reveling in the soft and loving pace of their style right now. It made sex last. For twenty minutes she laid there, caressed the man's back with her fingers, letting out quiet encouraging mewls whenever he suckled on her breasts, and squeezed his cock in a milking rhythm. So slow, the build up to an orgasm was like a relaxing massage, and eventually she succumbed to it.

She hugged the boy and went quiet when she came, as was her way. She focused on the pleasure, on the bliss of how tingling muscle spasms fired outward from between her legs and squeezed on that warm cock inside her. And he knew to ease his breast play, but he still sneaked in gentle suckles while she came on him, and more of her juices leaked from her.

And then she squeezed, hard. Jack pushed himself up straighter, but he was trapped between her legs and unable to pull away. She saw that look on his face, the mix of pleasure and over-stimulation as she gripped his cock hard enough to hurt and force her juices to drip out of her. She dipped her hips left and right, squeezed in rhythm with the dance, and gave a joyous sigh at the look on Jack's face when the first gush of his cum flowed into her. He'd spent so long building up his own orgasm, every gush of cum was met with a shack of his body and a thrust of his hips despite his almost painful expression.

“God ... damn...” He collapsed onto her. If he were still alive, he would have been panting. His cum started to leak out of her, warm and wet, and eventually his cock softened and fell out of her as well.

“From royal orgies with a dozen slaves, to a simple fuck on a couch. How unbecoming a Prince,” she said. Jack lifted his head and pouted, but she put her hand back his head and pushed it back down to her chest. “Fret not. I am much happier here.” She stroked his buzzed head, grinned at the fuzzy texture, and massaged his back with her other hand.

“Yeah?”

“Truly. It has been centuries since I have been able to enjoy something so delightfully simple and intimate. In the past, the Lancea et Sanctum would have publicly insulted me for such behavior. The Invictus too, but Viktor is gone, thanks to you,” she said, and touched his nose with a finger. “I owe you much.”

“You owe me...” He sat up then, and got up from the couch to walk around. That stern jaw made her think of Julias, complete with pacing back and forth. The boy completely forgot the window curtain was open. “Then, I ... don’t suppose I—”

“You are going to the ball, Mister Jack Terry.” She got up and followed after him. He backed up against the counter and looked down, broken; the guilt was obvious. “Why would you not want to go?”

“Besides not being able to dance? I ... don’t do well with crowds.”

“I seem to remember the first time we met was at a similar event held by the Invictus.” The fool boy, still prey to social anxieties. So she put her hands on his shoulders, and when he looked up at her, she leaned down to put her forehead to his as before. “And you may not have heard during that ball, but I heard the whispers of many speaking your name. Apparently, you had quite the way with words with Viktor, yes? And others wondered what sort of creature Julias had sired. Who was this boy who stood among vipers, they whispered.”

“ ... really?”

“Indeed. And now your sire is a part of the Invictus Triumvirate, and you are publicly known to be the lover of the Prince.” Men. All it took was a little stroking of the ego, and men were as malleable as clay. But it did not change that it was all true. “You have the social skill, and you have the status to empower it. Do not be afraid of the other Kindred. Most will be more afraid of you.”

“ ... me?”

Aha, the boy smiled with that subtle glee of a Ventrue validated. Good. He would have to leave his human habits to die, just as his human life did.

“Oui.” She gave him a kiss, and reached for the tuxedo still within its garment bag. “And just as Julias has tried to teach you, I am sure, you can say much with how you dress.”

~~Damien~~

He had not expected that.

Sure, he'd expected Antoinette and her little bitch boy to fuck, but that wasn't fucking. That was making love. He frowned until his cheek dug into the telescope. It hurt to watch.

He was envious.

“I'm a monster of God. A damned creature. Know peace in that.” Still, Kindred could fuck Kindred. God didn't care whether two of his damned fucked, only that they did not lay with the kine. And it would be nice to have someone to hold.

Maybe ... Natasha? He reached up and touched where she'd shot him. Why was he thinking about her? Same age embraced, same bloodline. Maybe that was why, but something else nagged at him. Something about her seemed so familiar.

---

Tower #8, used for monitoring Natasha and Jessy. They had apartments near each other in South Side, and often looked out their windows. It was a Kindred quirk, to gaze out at the city from the window, like wolves gazing over a herd of sheep. Their curtains were closed this time, but Damien had quality sight. Mehket sight. He knew where to look, and he let the telescope roam over the street near the apartment building until he found the tiny girl.

She was standing still in the middle of the large sidewalks, surrounded by moving kine walking past her. In front of her, standing like a rock against water, was the sheriff.

Chapter 17

~~Natasha~~

Nothing was as satisfying as the sensation of keyboard keys giving way to just the right movement of the fingers for flawless typing.

Did that make her a geek? She was too old to be a geek. Fifty-years embraced, and another twenty-five kine years on that meant she was older than commercial computers. By a lot. But she picked them up quick. Perhaps it was her lifetime of piano play that drew her to typing. Even as a kine, she found typewriters fascinating.

“Yo, Natasha.” Snap snap. The Gangrel was snapping her fingers in front of Natasha’s face, and she hadn’t even realized. “The info?”

“Right, right.” The two were in Natasha’s apartment, in her living room, and she had her laptop on the kitchen counter. Jessy must have got up from the couch to pester her.

“It says here,” she said, and raised a finger to point at the screen, “that Lucas came to Dolareido after the Prince, Viktor, and Jacob did. Hmm, about one-hundred and fifty years ago. Only Jacob knew him, but he quickly became friends with Viktor and Maria.” Natasha gritted her teeth. No wonder her master was so intrigued by the news.

“No connection with my sire then?” Jessy said.

“No. Mister McD-D-Donald’s relationship with Lucas was distant at best.” Natasha’s eyes scanned through the records. Thank god someone in the Invictus was smart enough to digitize their old journals. Nothing was written that was incriminating or destructive, but enough that she could read between the lines. A company merged here or acquired there, a piece of real estate changing hands, funds and donations, etc.

Natasha pointed at the screen again. This time there was a picture of Lucas, as much as anyone could take a picture of a Kindred. It was, at best, a hazy glimpse of his side in a blurry picture from a time when commercial cameras were only just becoming popular. “It-t says here ... Lucas was embraced sometime in the sixteenth century.” They both whistled. He was very old. “And ... he’s from Africa.”

Jessy looked down at her, but Natasha was dumbstruck until her friend poked her a few times in the head. “So?”

“Here.” She pointed at the hazy picture again, and a quick summary someone wrote of Lucas. “Lucas is the name he chose after he escaped Africa. He was ... a slave, and was about to be transported when someone turned him.”

“Fuck. So he’s ... that is some old school dark ages shit.”

“And he escaped a continent after being embraced, not before.” She turned on her stool and looked up at Jessy. “Whoever Lucas was, or is, he has been through some ancient hell. How c-could a Kindred survive a boat trip across the ocean hundreds of years ago? How could you...”

“I guess that’s why he’s a member of the Sanctified then.” Jessy gave a shrug, hopped back onto Natasha’s couch, and turned the TV back on. “Worst possible life you can imagine, then someone turns him into a vampire. Can’t blame him for looking for something to believe in.”

“Maybe, except the Lancea et Sanctum don’t believe they are God’s children. They believe they are God’s monsters.” She reached across the counter and lifted the Testament of Longinus. The full version, not the abridged the typical neonates read. It was a beast of a bible. “Longinus was the Roman soldier who stabbed the crucified Christ with a spear. A moment of compassion, or fear, if you read the book, from the overwhelming gaze of Jesus. The wound splashed blood, and some of it went into Longinus’s mouth, or eyes, or something.” Natasha grumbled with the infuriatingly vague and confusing text. “But thus was born Longinus, ancient Kindred. Potentially the first.”

“So ... what, Kindred are just damned things?”

Natasha shrugged and rubbed her arms. “They think so. They have to serve as God’s monsters, terrorizing and torturing the kine, like wolves to sheep, to scare the herd back into the Shepard’s warm embrace.” She found the imagery disturbing, but powerful. It was no wonder such a message affected her childe. “If they serve, then maybe, some day, they will no longer be damned. Very maybe. The text isn’t specific about redemption at all.”

“Brainwashing.” Jessy scoffed, dismissed it all with a wave of her hand, and turned on a streaming service on the TV. “Let’s watch a movie. I’m thinking—”

It all faded to background noise, for Natasha. She had a hand on the Testament of Longinus, and her eyes kept switching between it and the picture of Lucas on her laptop. This man, and his Bishop Damien, had converted several Invictus, including her childe Vivienne. It couldn’t be just mindless brainwashing idiocy, if Vivienne could be turned.

She hated herself. She should have seen this coming. Information about the Lancea et Sanctum was not hidden, and even information about Lucas was not hidden. But by the time she’d risen up the ranks and had access to such information, it had ceased to be an issue. The Sanctified were long gone.

She turned off her laptop, made some quiet grumbling sounds, and reached for her coat.

“Hey where you going?”

“Just ... out.”

“Fuck that. You’re going out to look for Vivienne.” Jessy was up in a flash and getting in Natasha’s way, herself between Natasha and the door. “And you know that’s a bad idea. We’re already on bad ground after having killed some of them.”

“You killed—”

“You shot the Bishop in the face!” Jessy reached out and put a hand on her shoulder. She knew she didn’t like to be touched, but again Jessy insisted on touching her arm. Stop touching. “I had your back when shit hit the fan, right?”

“Yeah b-b-but—”

“But nothing. You owe me, so promise me you won’t go looking for Vivienne, ok?”

“I still—”

Natasha lowered her head and did her best to hide her destroyed feelings. If she were alive, she’d have tears in her eyes. “You d-d-don’t know! You don’t have a childe. It ... it gnaws at you. She’s mine. Mine and ... I lost her.”

“You didn’t lose shit you dumbass. Either things will calm down and you can hang with your childe again, just on different sides of a business fence, or someone will put the Sanctified back into the ground and we’ll make sure Vivi isn’t involved in that. Ok?”

Natasha did her best to get a stiff upper lip, or some such. It was hollow. But she tried anyway, and managed to put on a stern face and a nod for Jessy. “Ok. I ... I just want to go hunt.”

“Hungry? I could get the boys over.” Jessy let go of her and hoped back up onto the counter. Her super short blonde hair and her tall, boxer build really made every motion she made seem so ... ferocious, like everything she did was in preparation for a fight. Maybe she was.

Sometimes Natasha wondered why they were friends. She wanted quiet, peace, and all those other things that made her and her Gangrel friend fire and water. The classic introvert and extrovert pairing.

“You know you ... k-k-killed some of those K-kindred. Are you ... okay with that?”

Jessy just shrugged. “It was a fight. We could have died too, we had no way of knowing. I ain’t gonna bust myself up about shit hitting the fan. But seriously though, can I invite the boys over? Come on, I know you want em.” The Gangrel reached out, grabbed a glass, and tossed it from one hand to the other. “How many years now since you had some fun with your meal? You gotta open up a bit, have some fun.” She put her hands up then, and gave a big, playful grin. “Hey, I’ll be there! No funny business, and hot damn it’ll be a glorious mess of legs.”

Natasha shuddered. Touching. Contact. So much ... close quarters proximity with others, kine at that. They were warm, they breathed and bled, they salivated, they ejaculated. Part of her was so very repulsed by the idea of others being in her personal space like that.

But she wasn’t oblivious to her own desires. She spent plenty of time online, like any introverted Mehket did. An idle mind lead to a vary diverse browser history of pornography. She took care of her sexual needs in peace, alone, with a belly full of blood and some toys in hand. She didn’t need others to take care of that need.

But it could be pleasant. Jessy would be there after all, for better or worse, and it'd be nice to have a quartet of men lined up to drink.

“Maybe ... later.”

“Bah, you always say later. Been saying that for years.”

“And I mean it! Ok! Just ... g-g-gotta ... I'll be back later.” She didn't wait for Jessy to interrupt her again this time.

---

Out the door and down into the lobby, she took a deep breath to relax herself. Of course it did nothing. She hadn't needed to breathe in decades.

She fidgeted with her long coat around her, avoided eye contact with the humans on the way through the lobby, and got out onto the street. There. In the crowd of kine just moving past and around each other like chaotic water, it was so much easier to blend in. She could forget all the bullshit, and just let her hunter instincts guide her.

A wolf among sheep. Just like the Testament of Longinus said. Surrounded by anonymity and blood, she had the freedom to just let her beast lead her. Someone would eventually take a break in an alley, or expose their back in a secluded convenience store, or drift further down into the city underbelly where it was a free-for-all.

But she didn't get very far. Without even looking up she could feel a wall, a barrier of power that spread kine apart around it without anyone even realizing. It stopped her in her tracks, and shook her to the core until the beast inside her was kneeling and whimpering in fear.

After a few hard seconds, she looked up, and five feet in front of her was the sheriff, Daniel.

The sheriff was an average looking man, just a little tall with a lanky figure, and a boring, dull trench coat hanging off of him. Short brown hair, some simple glasses, and brown leather gloves. He was the epitome of simple. There was a sword hidden underneath the coat along his back, but it was not visible. She knew it was there, though.

She took a look around, and used her Mehket sight to scan for nearby threats. But there was no Kindred within earshot of the two of them. “ ... sire.”

Daniel reached up, pushed his glasses back onto the bridge of his nose, and stepped in closer to her. He stopped once he was a couple feet away, looked down at her, and gave a small nod. “Madame Vola.”

“You know you can c-call me Natasha.”

“You never call me Daniel.”

“ ... never feels right. N-not since then.” She shook her head and tightened her coat around her. She wasn’t cold, she couldn’t get cold, but that barrier between her and her sire was like ice.

“ ... I know you infiltrated the Lancea et Sanctum.”

A small nod. He always knew. “ ... yeah.”

“You attacked Damien.”

“How ... how d-d-did...” She was looking down. She didn’t know when she started to look down, but before she knew it she was hugging herself protectively and keeping her gaze on her sire’s shoes. He really did always know everything.

“I am the sheriff. It’s my job to know things.”

“I ... had to act fast. I d-d-didn't know who he was, or what he'd d-do.”

“He spotted you through your discipline.”

Oh no. “He ... yes.” She could feel her insides trying to make her whimper, but without the blush of life going, she had no tears or the muscle contractions. Just a still, pale woman who couldn't look the man in the eye.

“He's a dangerous man.”

“He didn't look dangerous.”

The lanky man adjusted his glasses again. “Exactly.”

She forced a frown. “I did land the shot. Right here. Forehead.”

“Impressive.” Daniel gave her a small smile. It was such a small thing, innocent and barely noticeable, but it made her dead heart flutter for the praise. “How is Maria treating you?”

Natasha shuddered a little. How many decades now, had she served under Madame Turio? The ghost woman was scary. Very scary. Her orders were usually of the information-gathering nature, and Natasha was very good at that, but every failure and every mistake felt like it could be her last. “... c-could be worse. Viktor was ... worse.”

That earned the tiniest smirk from the sheriff, so fast he probably thought she didn't notice. She very much noticed.

“Was I worse?” he said.

“What? No! No just ... the Ordo Dracul, and ... the things you and the Prince researched. You know I found it t-t-t-too...” Both she and Daniel and had drifted to the side of the street, closer to the building by this point, out of the way of the flow of kine. Even with the anonymity of the crowd, talk of the Dragons was too sensitive to speak of as anything more than hushed whisper.

“Too frightening. And Maria is not more frightening?”

“The order does deal with real things.”

“Those weren’t ... just...” Ugh, talking with her sire was like talking to a stone. But then, she imagined she wasn’t very easy to talk to either. Couldn’t they have had this conversation with e-mails, or texting? Did Daniel even know what those were? Time for a topic change. “So...” Her feet drifted around a little. Nervous shuffling. “Why ... um ... why did you come?”

“I came to warn you.”

“Warn me?”

“About that man, Damien.”

“The Bishop? He wasn’t that t-t-tough.”

“He is ... a true believer, Natasha. You got very lucky. In any other circumstance, he would have killed you to protect the Sanctified.” The sheriff looked away, and even down, as if the words had weight. Why would Damien mean anything to Daniel?

“ ... you know him.”

“I do.” He raised his eyes again, and even reached out with a gloved hand for her. She flinched, he paused, and after a few moments of awkward silence, Daniel put his hand away. “Just ... avoid him, please.”

Please ... please? Had he ever said those words to her before?

“Things will get worse,” he said, and adjusted his glasses again, “and more Kindred will die before this is done.” He turned, and started to walk away.

Her hand was out and tugging back on his elbow. She didn’t remember putting it there, and once she realized what she’d done, she pulled it back with a little squeak.

“How?” she said. “You can’t just...”

“It was a ... moment of compassion. Of weakness.” He looked over his shoulder at her before turning halfway to offer a small frown. “I spared him during the purge. He was ... just like you.”

Just like her? He was fifty-years embraced like her, and a Mehket like her, and ... something else? What else? She looked up at her sire, but Daniel had already turned around again, and was making his way through the crowd.

And as always, it was the kine who stepped aside for him, like water parting.

She sighed, leaned back against the apartment building wall and watched the kine go by. Talking with her sire was a rare thing, and it was like two stones trying to have a conversation. As far as the rest of Dolareido knew, she had no sire, and as far as their conversations went, it felt kinda like that too. Or at least it normally did, but the way he looked at her, it was almost like ... someone caring for her? So many questions.

The beast in her gut grumbled. Right, food. She could analyze the conversation later.

~~Julias~~

“So the Lancea et Sanctum – god what an annoying name – are back?” Jack said.

“After a fashion. Lucas is back, and he was the leader of their movement here in Dolareido. How convenient he came back right when Tony left a whole herd of young, easily controlled Kindred without a leader.” Julias ran a finger down his jaw as they walked. There were pieces, a puzzle, and not much time to put them together before shit hit the fan.

“So he was in torpor?”

“Most likely.”

“Just ... what, hidden in a coffin underneath the city where the Prince and the sheriff couldn’t find him?”

“Most likely.”

“Fuck, that’s a long time to be in weird dream coma land.”

Julias and Jack were in a taxi and being driven through South Side. A ghoul of the Invictus was driving them, otherwise the conversation would have been a little more subtle. They were also dressed for business, real business, a combination of business savvy fashion, and freedom of movement. It was their ‘shady deals could mean a fight’ suits.

Of course his childe was practically oblivious to all the undertones and hidden messages of the various elements of the suits, but that was fine.

“It is. Lucas was a very old Kindred, so old I knew that he’d begun feeding on other Kindred in order to satiate his hunger. A long torpor will suppress such insane hunger for many decades, and it let him vanish from existence for half a century. He will be weak, but his strength will return.”

Jack tapped his chin with a finger, in a manner not too dissimilar to Julias, which made the older Kindred smirk.

“And you think Damien raised him?”

“Yes. He sensed the opportunity with Tony’s death. But ... ugh, something doesn’t make sense. Even if he raised Lucas, Lucas wouldn’t just expose himself like this by living in Tony’s old nest. I remember the purge, Jack, and it was not like Antoinette walked up to a pacifist and stabbed him. Lucas was a raging zealot who was hellbent on controlling all the Kindred and forcing everyone to follow the Lancea et Sanctum. Now he’s playing passive, and that just isn’t Lucas.”

“Maybe his torpor changed him? Maybe he’s a more passive person now?”

Julias gave Jack a long, dead stare, and Jack rolled his eyes and nodded.

“Yeah yeah, not likely, I get you. I’m still not sure what to gain from visiting the Carthians though.”

“Well,” Julias said, but stopped talking as the taxi pulled up to the sidewalk. A moment later both him and his childe were on the street, and making their way down through the Carthian side of South Side. Down here, the people weren’t in business suits or power dresses, but jeans and shirts instead. The two of them stuck out like a sore thumb. “It was fifty years ago, and the Carthians were still young and growing at the time. Garry though, Garry was the tough new guy, only a hundred years old but standing up to the Prince and Jacob and the Invictus on his own.”

“I remember seeing him at the Invictus ball, all those months ago.”

“Indeed. He’s smart and tough. And when the Prince began the purge, it was more than just those two against the Lancea et Sanctum army. Garry and his small group of Carthians were, at the time, at war with the Sanctified.”

“Shit...”

Yeah, Julias could see it on Jack’s face now as they walked. The boy was only barely paying attention to the kine on the sidewalk, but was instead intently focused on his sire’s words. Fingers on his chin, eyes flickering back and forth, Jack was thinking about all the connections and possibilities. The Danse Macabre was a complicated web of madness.

“The witch? As usual, he watched from afar, and knowing that man he probably instigated a lot of the conflicts between the covenants.” The damn witch was chaos incarnate. If he could find a way to deal with Jacob, he would, but the Sanctified was the bigger question mark at the moment.

“The Invictus didn’t do anything either, from what Natasha tells me.”

“Viktor called it a crisis of politics. The Invictus don’t mindlessly follow ideologies, you know that. We pursue power, growth, money. Neither side was a safe bet, and Maria and Michael were divided on it anyway.”

Jack nodded. He got it, Julias could see that. In fact, Jack embraced the power growth money motto quite well. Kid had that ruthlessness buried in there, hidden under goofiness, but then, that’s why Julias was bringing him. If, and when things went sideways, the kid would pull through, and the only two people who knew that were Julias and the Prince. His ace in the hole.

He was damn proud of his childe, but he wasn't about to shower him in praise. Not yet.

“So, we need to talk to Garry, and get some more information,” he said.

“You think I'm ready for this?”

“You think every sire takes their childe to multi-million dollar business deals? You think every neonate can dominate half a dozen kine?” Julias reached out and gave his childe a hard punch in the shoulder. Maybe a little praise.

Jack almost fell over, but kept walking and rubbed where he punched him. “Antoinette said I had a talent for it.”

“I sired you for a reason Jack. I said I needed you to watch my back, remember? So hey, I'll let you in on a secret.” He leaned down then, but kept walking. No need to draw attention. “I'm young. A hundred years for my position? Very young. And you are in the same boat. We're young, and when things go bad, people will underestimate us.” He chuckled and ran his fingers through his blonde hair. “Never underestimate a Ventrue.”

That got the kid walking with a little confidence in his step. Good, Jack deserved it. He had the drive, the obsessive drive to master and overcome obstacles of a Ventrue, now all he needed was the confidence it deserved. As long as it didn't inflate his ego to disastrous proportions, as had a tendency to happen with Ventrue. Like Viktor Honors.

The neighborhood only grew more urban and downtrodden. It wasn't like the city underbelly, filled with vice and disease. Instead it was just hard working folk with no time or money to waste on frills. There were far less people on the sidewalks, and the buildings were often brick and stone, painted horrible ugly colors. The streets were cracked, patched, and all the road surface markings were faded. Taxis and buses and old cars that sounded like they ran on coal.

The kine here were hardened, tough, loyal. The Carthians probably thought of themselves the same way. Maybe Garry was, and Beatrice too, but Julias had been in enough tussles with the rebels long enough to know better. Like all the other covenants, the Carthians had their own agenda, and weren't above underhanded bullshit to get it. The Invictus had clashed with them for centuries in more places than Dolareido. Grudges die hard.

So two Invictus walking through their half of South Side, even with the peace, was not exactly welcome company. Eventually they got to a part of South Side that was pretty empty, even quiet, and that's when the Carthians started to come out like locusts. The damn rebels were always looking for a fight, to the point it was printed on their faces. They stood leaning against street lights with arms folded across their chests, t-shirts with skulls, tattoos of chains, and baseball bats or tire irons in hand.

And then there were even more them. Some in front, some behind. One of them sat on a car's trunk, a pistol in hand and a big smirk on his face. He was a big guy, thick, bald, built like a bear.

"The fuck is Julias Mire doing this deep in Carthian territory?" He dinged the trunk a couple times with the handle of the gun.

"I need to talk to Garry." He kept his hands in his jacket pockets, but didn't back down. It was all just posturing, and this Carthian Gangrel postured like an animal, like some bird puffing up.

Julias postured like a king, with a straight back and a knowing smile.

“Then fucking call him. You don’t just show up unannounced, Mister Triumvirate.”

More Carthians started to gather. Steel-toe boots, jeans, and miscellaneous weaponry abound. They had formed a loose circle around Julias and his childe, but they kept their distance. Jack looked around, over his shoulder, and back at the growing crowd, but Julias managed to catch a glimpse of the kid’s eyes.

Jack had a small grin too, and was standing the same way Julias was. The message was clear: the two of them were businessmen, not thugs.

“... uh huh.” The big guy hopped off the car and started to walk toward him. “And you couldn’t call to make an appointment?” He said appointment with enough emphasis that it was practically spat at Julias.

“Who says he didn’t?”

Like a choreographed dance, everyone turned and looked to the apartment building across the street. An old, abandoned thing, with paint peeling off the walls and cracked windows. In the open doorway stood Garry, with a buzzed head and a short scruffy beard. He wasn’t tall, and he wasn’t huge, but he had all the markings of a man who grew up splitting his knuckles fighting bare-fisted. His hard face had a lot of scars on it too, and considering Kindred healed wounds when they slept, it meant they were from before his embrace.

“Boss, you knew these guys were coming?”

“Yeah Joe. Rest of you, fuck off. Joe, get in here.”

With some obvious groans of disapproval, everyone dispersed. Joe walked into the building after Garry, and Julias gave Jack a wink before following him.

Once everyone was inside the lobby of the apartment building, and Julias had closed the door behind him, Garry snapped his hand out, caught Joe by the mouth, and forced the much bigger man down to his knees. Jack was dumbstruck, but Julias had to keep from smirking. Maria had done the same thing to Jessy not long ago. Except Garry had actually put three of his fingers into Joe's mouth, and was squeezing the man's jaw hard enough to split skin.

“A member of the fucking Invictus triumvirate shows up and you have the god damn nerve to get lippy with him? Joe, give me one reason I shouldn't rip out your tongue. That'll take a few days to regrow.”

Julias did his best to not laugh. He was pretty sure Garry wasn't Joe's sire, even though they were both Gangrels, but Garry was just that sort of hands-on kind of guy.

Joe made some muffled noises.

“Fuck it.” Garry let go of him with a backward push, and Joe was forced to get to a knee before standing up. “Start trouble with the Invictus just one more fucking time and I'll stake you and let Mire here decide what to do with you.”

“... sir.” Joe lowered his head and walked out, but not before both Julias and Jack gave him the most subtle smirks.

“Mire, this better be fucking good. The fuck do you want to talk about that you couldn't talk about on the phone?”

“Lucas.”

“The fuck do you want to talk about Lucas for? Dude showed up and basically painted a bulls-eye on his forehead. The Prince or the sheriff will have his second death, sooner or later.” The Gangrel just shrugged.

“Can we ... talk somewhere a little more private?”

“Master Terry is my partner in this,” Julias said, and gave a head nod in the boy’s direction. Jack affirmed with a nod of his own. “Besides, it’s not secret information, just sensitive.”

“ ... fine.” Garry went for the stairs, and the two Ventrue followed.

Only after ten flights of stairs did Julias notice how long it had been since he’d last taken the stairs in a building. It was no trouble for a Kindred, but the direct comparison of an Invictus in a suit riding the elevator, versus a Carthian in jeans walking the stairs, was poetically accurate.

A minute later, they were in one of the rooms. It was just a regular apartment room of a low-rent building, except the furniture had been removed and replaced with a desk and chair for Garry to sit at. He motioned for Julias and Jack to sit, and Julias reached for one of the equally unimpressive chairs. Jack looked around, devouring the information with his eyes, before also sitting.

“K Mire, you got your fifteen. The fuck do you want to know?” Garry leaned back in his chair and put his boots up on the table, all the while picking at his fingernails with a knife.

“Lucas. You and him were at each other’s throats for a long time.”

“You make it sound like a juvenile spat, Mire. Kindred died.”

The dark look Garry gave him put a dent in his composure, until Julias was forced to lower his head in apology.

“I understand. My question is about his new behavior. No one knows what sort of tactics he used better than you.”

“Be specific.”

“The Lucas I remember was meticulous and careful. He had a dozen Bishops and churches he used as bases and he slowly expanded. But now he just ... he just showed up, and is squatting in Tony’s old nest with his ass exposed.”

“Yeap. And I agree, that is very weird.” Garry brought the knife up to his teeth and picked at them idly. A pointless habit for a vampire, but more than enough to catch Jack’s eye at least. “Kind of pulling a Jesus, isn’t he? Rises from the grave and just plays nice. Far as I’ve heard, he’s just sitting in Tony’s underground network and preaching the good message.” The Gangrel choked on the words with a harsh chuckle.

“Can you give me any insight into why?”

Garry stabbed the knife into the desk hard enough that it made Jack jump in his seat, but the elder didn’t even look the boy’s way. He kept his eyes on Julias, and Julias did not break his gaze.

“Invictus sat on their asses and watched me fight that fucker for years. Why the fuck do you care what he’s doing now?”

“I wasn’t on the council then, Mister Tones. My sire may have had no issue with the Lancea et Sanctum, but I do. I am not about to let Lucas ruin the peace, and I am trying to make up for Viktor’s mistakes.” It was like staring down a raging bull; he had to be careful. Garry wasn’t just a Gangrel, but a Carthian, and that was a frustrating cocktail of unpredictability and violent tendencies.

“Heh, you got balls. Not even an elder yet and trying to play with the big boys.”

“You did the same back then, and held your own against Lucas and his army of zealots.”

“Touché,” Garry said. “So, Lucas ... never seen a Mehket so comfortable talking to crowds. Your typical Mehket is meticulous and careful, like you said, but Lucas was more than that. He had the patience and intelligence, but also the belief.”

“Yeah kid, belief. We’re talking about a covenant of religious types, right? Well, unlike your typical religious fuckwad, Lucas really fucking believed in that Testament of Longinus shit. A lot of elder Sanctified just use the covenant to pursue power – which is typical and expected – but Lucas was not that sort. He really bought into his own sermons.”

Julias leaned back in his chair and put a couple fingers to his chin. “Do you think fifty years of torpor could change that?”

“Not a chance. I’ve seen long torpors do fucked up shit to an elder, like Viktor.” Garry threw Julias a harsh glance, but continued on. “But Lucas would die for his beliefs, and bring everyone else down to hell with him for them.”

That made Julias sit up straighter. Kindred were selfish creatures, normally. They cared about blood and the safety to see another night, and that was it. It was a rare thing to deal with a Kindred who fought for other reasons.

“You think he’d sacrifice his flock if it meant achieving a goal.”

Garry chuckled, gravelly voice and all, and started rolling the knife along his knuckles. “I know he would, Mire. And if history is any indication, a long torpor would only drive a crazy man crazier.”

Each time they mentioned torpor, and the effects it had on sanity, Julias noticed Jack wince. By now, Jack’s eyes had wandered off, and he was rubbing his buzzed head with his usual nervous ticks. He must have been thinking about Antoinette.

“Indeed.” Sorry Jack. Antoinette would have to go through such a torpor in the future. Julias just hoped, for Jack’s sake, the Dragons and their hidden talent for suffering torpor well would save her from such a fate. “So if there is one thing we know, it’s that Lucas’s goal is to further the Testament of Longinus above all else, and now with such a long torpor just past him, he may very well take that to the next extreme.”

“Yeap. So, what are you going to do about Maria?”

“You know about Lucas and Maria?” Shit, the conversation was going in a direction he didn’t want Jack to know about. The less he knew about such behind-closed-doors behavior, the better.

“Better than anyone, Mire. More than once I had that ghost bitch on my ass. She tried to kill me a few times, and did every dirty, underhanded trick she could to kill me so save her precious Lucas.”

Shit shit shit. Julias looked to Jack, but the boy was listening intently with fingers netted in front of his mouth and nose. He was devouring information again, and when he looked back at Julias, he could see the awareness on the boy’s face. He knew what he was hearing was deadly.

“But hey,” Garry said, “she failed, and then the Prince lost her patience and ended things herself. Bygones, right?” He rolled his eyes and started flipping the knife in his palm. “I fucking wish. Keep an eye on her, Julias. You may have a good head on your shoulders, but that bitch is fucking vicious. If Jacob and her were trapped together in a room and had to fight it out, I’d put my money on her.”

Julias groaned audibly. He dealt with Maria all the time. She was intelligent, self-aware, capable of making reasonable decisions, and extremely talented in the Nosferatu disciplines. Normally she'd be the one he'd rely on over Michael, but now that Lucas was in the picture, that would have to change.

And Garry's faith in her was not expected. Fear her over Jacob? The witch had almost two-hundred years on Maria. Sure, Maria Turio was terrifying like most Nosferatu; she was basically the ghost girl in the well. But against Jacob?

"Alright, thanks for the info, Mister Tones. I hadn't realized Lucas was a little ... different, than most elders. I'll see what I can do to stop this fire before it burns down the city." He got up, gave Jack a nod, and turned to leave.

"Mire, about Beatrice."

Julias looked over his shoulder. Jack was in the middle of getting out of his chair, but stopped halfway. Garry was sneering at the kid, and his eyes drifted between the two of them.

"Yes?"

"She's neck deep in some serious shit I doubt she's told you about. She likes you though, and I expect you like her." He leaned back in his chair again, and idly rotated the knife along his knuckles. "Keep her out of trouble, would you?"

He half expected a Dad speech about Garry hurting him if he broke her heart.

"... I will."

He gave a small whistle, and Jack resumed from his freeze position to stand and walk after him. Garry said nothing else, not even a dismissing hand gesture. He just looked at the knife in his hands, and went silent with thought.

Fifteen minutes later, they were back in the taxi. Jack and Julias gave each other occasional glances, but were silent. He'd just dumped a lot of dangerous info in the kid's lap, and Jack knew it. He was processing it, breaking it down and analyzing it, just like Julias was.

But unlike Jack, Julias's mind kept wandering back to Beatrice. What sort of shit was Garry talking about?

~~Damien~~

Natasha was the sheriff's childe.

That was where he recognized her personality, her character, her movements. It all held just a hint of the monster's taint. The quiet and stillness of cold, and then the sudden action of brutality.

He put a finger up to his forehead where she had shot him. It was a hazy memory, and a weird one, the feeling of a hole in the skull, and then darkness. She'd been so ... timid seeming, and then before he even realized what was happening, she'd put a hole through his face.

As if a cold stone could strike out with lightning. Just like the sheriff all those years ago.

He moved fast. He took the telescope with him, scooped up the components into his bag, and took off with as much speed as he could muster. All the Mehket speed in the world, all the shadow tactics and cloak of night he could muster, every bit of silence he could get from each step, he poured his vitae into it and vanished from the tower. He couldn't leave a trail, and he couldn't take his time.

He covered miles in minutes. No one spotted him, no one stopped him, and before long he was deep underground and tearing through the sewers. A hidden doorway there. A hidden hatch here. A winding tunnel. The Prince may have owned the city's surface, but its underground was his home, and no one knew it like he did, not even that witch Jacob. Navigating the underground tunnels was as natural to him as playing an instrument.

And before long, he was back in Tony's abandoned tunnel network. As he approached, he could hear Lucas, and the chorus of a hundred voices agreeing between bits of sermon.

He walked in, and everyone turned to look at him. It was the largest room of the complex, with massive walls that echoed every noise. Huge metal walls created interesting acoustics, and the sudden silence made every motion ring loud. He set the pack down, careful of the sensitive bits of a telescope, and headed up to the podium. Everyone watched him.

"Sire, we must speak."

Lucas tilted his head to the side. "Is it urgent?"

"Yes."

"Then, I am sorry children. Bishop Damien and I have business together. Take the message and keep it inside, and use it to control that beast in your chest. We are damned, and only by serving God's plan is there a place for us."

"As Longinus," they said, together, as an army.

Damien smiled and nodded to each Kindred that made eye contact with him. He saw that look in their eyes, that look of fulfillment, and satisfaction. They had a place to call home, a belief to drive them, and a man to look up to. They looked up to Damien, true, and he preached the word to them with patience and knowledge, but Lucas was different.

Lucas was like Jesus Christ to them. As the congregation filtered out of the hall, Lucas walked among them, patted them on the shoulder, knew their names, and gave each of them specific advice. Knowledge was a Mehket currency, and Lucas wielded it well. Combined with his quiet, wise demeanor, they flowed around him like a school of fish.

“Bishop Damien, I...” A fellow Mehket walked up to him. Vivienne, Natasha’s childe. A tiny, frail thing just like her sire.

For a moment, he considered taking her hostage, and using her to control Natasha, and in turn perhaps control the sheriff? No, too distant a connection, too risky. It’d give him no control over Invictus repercussions.

He shrugged off the exhaustion that made his bones tremble, and forced a smile. “Vivienne?” He was Bishop Damien now, in these tunnels and halls. The children did not know of his nightly exploits, and it was best to keep it as such.

“I wanted ... to apologize for my sire. She was only—”

Damien held up a hand. “Don’t worry, Vivienne. She was only trying to protect herself, and you. I was in error to try and detain them.”

“Jessy was in error!” The tiny thing had some bark to her. “She killed ... and it didn’t need to escalate like that. Natasha was just trying to ... and then Jessy...”

A pat on the shoulder. It was all it took, just a simple pat on the shoulder, a small, gentle smile, and Vivienne’s downtrodden expression managed to rise to something of relief. He walked her down the isle and out of the room, and gave her a small shove to send her on her way.

“There is a plan for us all, Vivienne Maiorie. There will be justice, don’t worry. Now go.” He waved her away, a fish cast back into the ocean. She looked like she was about to say something, but a confirming nod from him was returned by one from her, and she left with the abridged Testament held close to her bosom.

Then he turned and met with Lucas. His sire waited for him in the isle, dressed in a black robe and wearing a necklace with a tiny spear dangling from it. They both nodded to each other, quiet, hushed, as Mehket always were, and they waited for the congregation to fade away.

Then, they moved to the next room. The door, seemingly innocent enough, was sealed, soundproof, and the walls it met with were as well. The room inside was not large, but once they’d closed the door behind them, it was the safest place to converse.

“Sire.”

“Damien. You seem anxious.” Lucas cast a warm glance his way, and moved toward the altar the room held. A large table covered in expensive fabrics, ornaments, sacraments, and symbols rested against the back wall, and what little light the room held was pointed to it. Lucas stood by the altar, and with patience removed the necklace he wore and placed it within a chalice to join the other symbols.

“Sire, I have news! It is about the sheriff.”

“Oh?” That got his attention.

“I knew I recognized Natasha from somewhere. The way she moved, acted, it all itched at the back of my mind. But today I observed a conversation between her, and the sheriff.”

Lucas put his fingers to his chin, but nodded and waited.

“And the way they moved, the way they looked at each other, it was clear, sire. Sheriff Daniel is the girl’s sire.”

Lucas’s eyes went wide, his small grin grew large, and before long a boisterous laugh escaped him. “Truly? Bishop Damien, I could not have picked a better childe before my torpor.” He walked forward, wrapped his robbed arms around Damien, and gave him a hug.

Damien froze. A hug? He’d never felt such a thing from his sire, not since being embraced. It felt ... strange. When Lucas pulled away and chuckled all the more, Damien tilted his head to the side and watched his sire. Something was strange. His sire didn’t laugh like that normally.

“I will visit Maria then, and she will deliver the girl to us,” Lucas said, and he turned with a sweeping gesture around the room. The walls were covered in hanging drapes, each with a woven image of scenes from the bible. Jesus on the cross. Job and the tortures he suffered. The ninth circle of hell, with Satan frozen and trapped within. In Satan’s hands he held Brutus and Cassius, and in his mouth he chewed and tore into Judas Iscariot.

Traitors.

“You believe ... Maria will betray Natasha to us?”

“We have no intention of ending the girl’s second life, and Maria Turio’s faith will steel her resolve.”

“What will we do once Natasha is ours, without fear of Invictus anger?”

“But one piece of the puzzle, Bishop. She will be how we disarm the Prince’s guard. Two remain: to arm ourselves with a shield, and a weapon.”

“Shield and weapon, sire?”

“The weapon, I have.” He motioned to one of the ornaments by the altar. A sword. A ridiculous antique of a weapon that must have been well over a thousand years old. Maybe two-thousand. Rust, dust, dents, scrapes, it certainly looked like no weapon with its ornamental design.

And then Lucas turned around, and walked up to Damien with enough necessity and power in his eyes that the Bishop found himself taking a step back. Lucas put both his hands on his shoulders though, and squeezed tight, hard enough to hurt.

“The shield though, Damien, the shield will be flesh, and ash!”

Chapter 18

~~Julias~~

A taxi would not do, not for this.

Perhaps it was too ridiculous, too absurd, or just too over-the-top, but Julias took great delight in the magnificent limousine they were in. Other Kindred would arrive in their usual ways, but the Prince expected a certain level of presentation for her ball, and Julias got that. There was something beautifully innocent in the mindless indulgence of expensive vice, jewelry, and wearing someone on your arm.

Jack was in the limousine with him, and both of them were in tuxedos. His childe looked so cute in his suit. Like all young neonates, they wore more modern clothes, but the older Kindred such as himself were more partial to clothes that managed to capture the majesty and allure of the older age. Himself, his tuxedo carried hints of the early 1900's with its open jacket, inner vest with a chain in the pocket, and tie. He was sure there would be even older, but even more compelling clothes combinations at the ball.

And to make the trip even more luxurious, the two of them were sipping blood.

“How does it feel to be visiting the Black Hall?” he said.

“Dude, Julias, I ... crap man, I had no idea the Prince owned the Black Hall.”

“I imagine she doesn't talk about it much? The Prince has vast corporations under her thumb. Which ones, we're not entirely sure. We know she owns some of the major old money corporations, which is natural, and her influence spreads as wide as Xnomina's, just quietly and secretly.”

Jack frowned. “Secretly. She never told me about any of this.”

“Hey, don't blame her. Centuries of habits die hard. Someone like Antoinette has built a base of money and power over many webs over many decades of careful manipulation. And she's a Dragon. The Ordo Dracul are made of secrets.”

If only Jack knew. Julias chuckled, sipped more of their blood, and watched the city go by in the window. Xnomina was built on such secrets and manipulations, and that rabbit hole went deep, but neither he nor his peers knew what sort of secrets Antoinette built her empire on. It was one of the reasons she ruled the city; she was the better businessman.

He looked over at Jack. The kid was also looking out the window and drinking in the sights of the city. Black Hall was on the outside edge of the Elysium district, and while it only rose a few stories high, the building was massive. The building the Invictus held their balls and ceremonies within paled in comparison to it. Black Hall could hold thousands.

And when the limousine pulled up to the red carpet – an actual red carpet – there were guards in suits and unknown pedestrians who'd gathered to watch. They didn't know what was going on, as Black Hall events were never announced to the public, but still they gathered. The guards weren't Kindred, but Julias didn't think they were ghouls either. Antoinette had her fingers in everything.

Once they were out on the carpet, he stopped to admire the sight. The carpet didn't have any stanchions; the guards standing around it were enough to keep the random pedestrians from storming the carpet. And even without the guards, the look on the kine's faces was clear: intrigued but intimidated.

They took pictures, and recorded with their smart phones, but the pictures would always come out just a little too blurry or at the wrong angle. Such was the way of the Kindred beast.

The building itself was made of massive columns of that black marble the Prince seemed to love so much. Subtle curving dragons of long body were carved into the pillars, and the pillars themselves were part of a overhang half-circle that the carpet was underneath. The walls of the building were a similar, weird mixture of ancient and modern architecture, with more of that black marble color and cracks of white throughout its surface, like lightning. The windows were as tall as the walls, which was at least thirty feet, but they only showed the dark curtains on the other side.

To a kine, the building must have seemed like some sort of dark, mysterious, but grand and majestic Taj Mahal. To the neonates showing up, it must have seemed like the Queen's palace. They stood in awe, with their mouths hanging open and staring up at the grand entrance. It was the first ball the Prince had held openly for all covenants in years, and it was for all members and all ages; that meant a lot of neonates who'd never seen those massive doors, with black gates before them coiled with white dragons.

Jack too stood in awe, but maybe not as long as the other neonates. The kid regularly went deep into the Prince's tower after all, and Julias assumed such architecture was common within its depths.

A ball, a big fancy party, for Kindred was always an interesting affair of sizing each other up and trying to predict each others motives, strengths, weaknesses, and vices. They didn't mix or mingle like kine, but circled each other and faked social niceties. It was the Danse Macabre after all, and while he tired of the webs of deceit elders weaved, he had to admit he enjoyed the more innocent play of a gathering. He was good at it. Poker on a larger scale.

When the guards opened the massive gate, all eyes were on him and the small vampire at his side. He gave his childe a wink and just smiled at the crowd of Kindred before him. He was Julias Mire, youngest vampire of the Invictus council of Dolareido. They knew who he was, every last one of them, and that really stroked a Ventrue's ego.

The crowd was already well over a hundred. He recognized many; Maria and Michael were already there; so were Natasha and Jessy, and even some high ranking Carthians were already there. The dress code was hard to pin down, as it was both a black tie event, but everyone brought their own mixture of their era. Maria and Michael were dressed in proud and obvious throwbacks to their time, which from the eighteenth century meant corsets, jackets, frills on dresses and jackets alike. The other Kindred, not so old, wore clothes more suited to the nineteenth century, such as vests and fancy dresses with exposed shoulders. The difference compared to the younger Kindred, such as Jessy, was that of modern tuxedos and sleek white dresses.

And then the fresh neonates dressed for sex, with the new, suit-like tuxedo, and the modern dress's exposed thighs. He couldn't blame them; they were young, and young Kindred usually found solace in their new ability to fuck with impunity.

The Prince wouldn't be there yet; it would be a social faux pas for the host to arrive on time. But he was curious to see how the ancient Kindred would dress.

It had been years since he last stepped into the Black Hall. He'd forgotten how massive it was inside, as the gate opened into a large stairway that spread outward and down into a colossal room. There were no windows; instead, there were giant walls of white marble cracked with black lines, and the walls had ornamental arches carved into them. Always dragons. From the ceiling hung massive cages of black with the same dragon decoration as the front gate, but within the cages was white fire. Columns were spread throughout the ballroom every twenty feet, like a forest of kingly marble. At the other end of the room, a split stairway rose to reach a balcony that lined the upper wall of the massive room in a complete circle. The walls curved in to join the ceiling where, in the white and obsidian marble colors the Prince held so dear, there were two dragons painted coiling in each other.

It truly put the Invictus ballroom to shame.

He recognized another Carthian: Mike, the young neonate he'd bent to his will only months ago. He offered the young man, so clearly out of his element at the ball, a small nod of acknowledgment. Not an apology, but an offering of respect. It was better.

“Presenting Mister Julias Mire of the Invictus Triumvirate, and his childe Master Jack Terry of the Invictus, companion of the Prince.”

Julias looked over his shoulder at the marshal of the court, and raised a brow. A ghoul, the sheriff's he believed, was standing beside the gate entrance from within. And someone had given him special instructions for Jack's introduction. The Prince, evidently, was content to throw Jack into the deep end of the Danse Macabre.

And the kid froze. For just a moment, there was fear in his eyes, that petrified fear from a quiet, shy person suddenly asked to speak to a crowd of their peers. Everyone was looking at him. He looked at Julias, and Julias just looked back at him like nothing was wrong. Because nothing was wrong. Come on kid, you've got this.

Jack gave Julias a subtle nod, loosened his shoulders a little, and started walking again. Like nothing was wrong. Like he was the center of attention because he deserved it. Like he was a mother fucking Ventrue.

And then everyone went back to their work under the guise of social mingling.

“I’m going to talk with my peers. Try and enjoy yourself kid. The other neonates could learn a thing or two, and though I’m sure you’re loathe to admit it, vice versa.” He gave Jack a small salute, and turned to walk toward the stairway where Michael and Maria were gathered. Natasha and Jessy were nearby, sampling the different blood being catered by more of the Prince’s servants.

Julias had no idea who these servants were. They weren’t Kindred, but they didn’t seem like ghouls either. Were they all under her spell? Elder Daeva were terrifying, powerful creatures, when they wanted to be.

Maria was dressed up nicely, in something that looked more like a wedding dress that belonged on an English queen from over three-hundred years ago. It also included a veil – again something that belonged on a wedding dress – that she wore over her face to hide her Nosferatu features. “Mister Mire.”

“Madame Turio, I see you and Mister McDonald decided to show up after all.”

The ghost woman shrugged. “Madame Vola insisted it would be valuable. Apparently, Tony’s death has caused more of a power vacuum among the young than we had anticipated. And since the young are invited,” she motioned to the ballroom full of anxious, excited neonates, “I thought it best to observe.”

“I see Master Terry is taking a more hands-on approach.” McDonald nodded his head in the direction of Jack. The kid was talking with the other Invictus neonates. “Are you afraid he’ll mimic the few other Invictus neonates, and join the Lancea et Sanctum?”

Julias shook his head. “No. It would never happen.” If anything, one conversation with the religious covenant would drive Jack to murder. Logic and science were his world.

The conversation died there. Michael nodded and turned back to resume talking with Maria, and Julias headed over to his old comrades. “Madame Vola. Madame Herrington.”

“Mister Mire,” they said in unison. Natasha was dressed in a quiet dress, black and slim but with no features or exposed skin. Jessy, on the other hand, had taken to some nice, blue evening gown with an open back, and must have cut the thigh open to expose as much leg as possible. She was an attractive woman, sure, and her rather warrior-ish build reminded him of Beatrice, but she was taller, broader at the shoulders, and wore her blonde hair very short.

They were talking with a few younger Invictus, a pair of neonates only embraced within the decade. They bowed to him, but refused to make eye contact with anymore than his boots. For a moment, he considered trying to alleviate their concerns, but as always with the Ventrue, the sight of others averting their gaze from respect, or fear, was intoxicating.

He would never take advantage of it, like Viktor would, but it was harmless to indulge in the presentation of the position, wasn't it? Careful Julias, power corrupts and that goes double for a Ventrue.

“How goes? Are you—”

“Now presenting Mister Garry Tones, leader of the Carthians, and companion Beatrice of the Carthians,” the court marshal said.

Say what?

---

~~Beatrice~~

She thought she looked ridiculous, but her new witch mates had assured her she looked gorgeous. Jennifer, in particular, made a couple of efforts to get her naked only moments after helping her put on the dress. She had no idea that monster chicks like her had become a sexual fad in the new world, but apparently it was a thing.

And it really was a nice dress. Hanging out with Julias was rubbing off on her, and awakening some weird, fucked up desire to wear super luxurious and classy stuff. The dress Jennifer and Othello helped her pick out was a long, slim black thing with a skirt that went down to her toes. She refused to wear high heels though! But the dress did a nice job of hiding that she was wearing black, open-toe shoes instead. It exposed the claws of her toes, but it was subtle.

The dress also only covered half her torso. It was one of those weird, asymmetrical ones that was long sleeve on one half of her, and covered her shoulder as it cut down across her chest on an angle to leave the other side of her bare. And Jennifer had picked the most skin-revealing version, so the half of her torso exposed was exposed all the way down to the hip. The chest of the dress was so tight and formfitting, she could actually see her nipples poking against the fabric, and she thanked the devil she'd remembered to remove her many piercings.

And of course there was her face. The party was not so secret that kine couldn't see Kindred, so it was better for Nosferatu to hide their disfigurements. Her claws and green snake eyes were not a problem, but the huge array of crocodile teeth along her cheeks required some intuition. Jennifer had proposed something pretty simple: an Arabian black face veil. It tied together behind her head, over her ear, and covered her nose, all the way down to her neck.

Jennifer said it really highlighted her eyes. Green snake eyes that, according to her witch mate, were extremely fuckable. And then the Ventrue had taken out her make-up kit and painted up Beatrice's face with eyelash curlers and enough mascara and eyeliner that she looked like she'd walked off of an assembly line ready to give blowjobs.

And Julias was already there. Good. She looked over at Garry, and gave him a nod. He returned it, but with a weird look in his eyes. Sadness, maybe? Things were never the same between them, since she left the Carthians – still a secret – and she doubted she'd ever be able to mend that bridge. But the Circle of the Crone were her new home, for better or worse.

Focus on the party Beatrice, or 'ball' as the elders liked to call it. Bunch of peacocks showing off their feathers.

Well, she had some nice feathers too.

She walked down the stairs and looked around. Nothing but Carthians and Invictus, but that meant over a hundred faces. There were a dozen Nosferatu, and she did not envy any of them their disfigurements, but they all managed to hide it in some way. A lot wore gloves, many had their faces covered, or wore cocktail masks, and others just wore more layers.

Had it always been like this? Were Nosferatu accepted so easily among other Kindred? She really, really, really hoped she didn't spend a couple decades hanging out in a catacomb just because she was too stupid to see it. Hanging out with kine was out of the question, sure, but that didn't mean she had to isolate herself from Kindred too.

"Surprised you showed up." Joe, an old Carthian fellow, walked up to join her as she stepped off the stairs. "I haven't seen you around much."

She smirked under her veil. There was a look in his eye she hadn't seen on him before, not pointed at her anyway. That mix of intrigue and arousal that suddenly had her wanting to flirt and jerk him around.

But she wasn't that bitch. "Hey Joe. Cya Joe." A small nod, and she was off. Sorry Joe, but she was on a mission.

Alright, first encounter was a success. Blowjob mascara and sexy-but-classy dress were working. Some of the tattoos she had were exposed, but the coiling snake tattoo and the chainlink tattoo and the skull tattoo, none of them caught any eyes. In fact, when she looked around, many of the Carthians had various tattoos exposed by their dresses. The men and their tuxedos hid them better, but some still had art on their faces.

It really was a weird ball. Everyone was invited, and the only dress code was a vague somewhere-between black tie and formal. That meant interesting dresses, interesting tuxedos, and everyone bringing their own flavor. And the Black Hall! Fucking building was huge, and she felt like she'd walked into some colossal, ancient, mysterious ... Taj Mahal or something.

She looked back to Julias. Natasha and Jessy were standing next to him, and they were in some conversation with other neonates nearby. Whatever Julias had been doing with them though was paused, and he was looking at her she was someone else. As if someone new had taken her over. His mouth was hanging open.

She smirked, licked her massive teeth, and walked up right to the group of them. "Mister Mire," she said, and did her damndest to keep the chuckle out of her voice. She even gave him a small bow. "Madame Vola, Madame Herrington."

"... Miss ... Beatrice," they both said in Unison.

She did chuckle a little there. Her last name was Damor, and it wasn't even a secret, but no one bothered to know it. That would change.

Julias looked mesmerized. "Beatrice. You came."

Natasha, Jessy, the neonates, everyone's jaws dropped when Julias stepped up to her, and reached out for her hand. They dropped even more when she took it.

"As you requested."

"Ladies, paiges, if you'll excuse me. My date has arrived." He turned to the others, gave them a small nod, and walked off with her. The way he moved, held his shoulders, stood up straight, proud and dripping with confidence, it had everyone staring at both of them in surprise.

She hooked her arm with Julias, looked back at the onlookers, and winked. That's right bitches. He was hers, all hers.

Julias took her up the stairway and up onto the balcony. There were few other Kindred up there yet, and it meant they could talk a little more privately she assumed, while still being on full display for everyone to stare at them with confused expressions. Glorious.

"Quite the entrance," he said.

"Ch'yeah. Fully admit, that was fun. The look on everyone's faces? Worth."

"I'm glad you enjoyed it."

"Politics right? Good for covenant relations to see an Invictus hanging with a Carthian."

"Fuck the politics." Julias stepped in closer, reached out, and eased his fingers up and down her arms. His gaze was glued on her eyes though. "I didn't know you even owned make up."

She fluttered her eyelashes at him in the most exaggerated, ridiculous way possible. "A friend helped me out."

“Snake eyes.”

“Yeah. And you know I love those snake eyes.” He leaned down, and with his raised hand reached down just enough to get a finger under her veil and lift it. And then, with a grin in his eyes, he kissed her.

And when she thought it was just a sweet, innocent kiss, his other hand drifted down to the small of her back, and pulled her in. It was one of those long kisses. A kiss more than long enough for everyone to see, and for her to really get into it. With her veil up, people could see her shark teeth, but fuck them, Julias was a great kisser.

“You know ... you’re not an elder, you’re an ancilla.” Quick kiss. “First on the Invictus council of Dolareido ever.” Another quick kiss. “And now you’re kissing a Carthian, a young neonate, and a Nosferatu monster.” She counted off the weirdness on her claws in front of his eyes, but then gave him another kiss. “You’re really risking your position.”

“It’s a good thing I’m really, really good at what I do then.” He lowered her veil then, took a small step back, and just looked at her, up and down.

“... Mister Mire, your gaze is most unbecoming your station!” She tried to keep a straight face while faking her more uptight accent, but failed miserably. The veil hopefully hid it well enough.

“Sorry.” He leaned over the railing of the balcony, but kept his gaze on her. It was obvious he was drinking her with his gaze, and he didn’t hide how much he was looking at how the dress hugged tight to her hips and ass.

“You really want a piece of this already? I just got here.” She leaned out over the railing too, but made sure to stick her ass out a bit toward the wall behind them. “You’d think you just ate and had a full belly getting you riled up.”

He laughed. “Sorry, but the way you strutted in here? If I didn’t know better I’d think you were a Ventrue.”

“It’s the dress. It was sewn with the souls of a thousand dead children, I’m sure.” She looked down at the way the dress crossed her torso at an angle, shoulder to hip. “Is this why Ventrue always wear suits and gowns and shit? Cause just wearing it is really making me want to boss people around, like I’m some kind of queen.”

“Indeed.” He kept his elbows on the railing, but slid closer to her until they were touching hands. He hooked his pinky finger around hers, and she was glad the veil hid most of her face, cause holy shit everything he did was so hopelessly romantic and it always worked so damn well on her.

“You came with Garry.” Julias gestured out to the group of Kindred below them on the floor. “He hates these parties more than anyone.”

“Heh, he does kind of look like a bulldog someone’s forced to wear a tux.” The visual had her grinning madly behind her veil. “He needs a bone.”

“What’s the metaphor?”

“A bone! A lay. He’s so busy all the time trying to run the Carthians. Typical edgelord with no social life. No ghoul to keep him company even.” She shrugged and turned around, put her shoulders back on the railing again, and re-hooked pinky fingers too. Fuck it, full romance mode.

“He seems like he’s lived a hard life.”

“Hey, what kind of life did you have? You know, when you were alive.” She motioned toward the crowd beneath them with her head. “Something like that?”

“No. Well, maybe a little. Just a young banker who managed to work his way out of poor family. Long story short, I had a rise to power, Viktor noticed, became my friend, groomed me for the embrace, and turned me without even asking.” He shrugged. “The US was about to conscript for World War I, and he didn’t want me in that.”

“Silver lining?”

He nodded.

World War I. Fuck Julias was old. “Wife and kids?”

“Wife.”

“Oh ... well damn, man. What happened to her?”

“You really want to know?” he said. “It was a long time ago.”

“Yeah, I think I do. We’ve never really talked about your past. You know mine, just a single girl with a vampire stalker.”

“My wife, she...” He reached up and scratched his neck. Nervous was he? “I vanished from her life, but kept an eye on her. She moved on, found a new husband, had children. Lived happily ever after. Without me.”

Shit, maybe not so good a question. That somber, brooding look he sometimes wore was back on his face, and she had to reach out with her free hand and touch his chest to break it. “Hey, sorry. So uh ... when’s dancing?”

That put some spark into his eyes.

“Dancing?”

“Mhmm. Nothing fancy! But I can at least slow dance in this dress.” Of course she wouldn’t tell him she had to relearn how to slow dance cause the last time she did it was prom back in 1980.

“No dancing until there’s music ... You seem to be warming up to this life pretty quick, Beatrice.”

She shrugged and fluttered her dark eyelashes at him some more. “Every badass woman has a princess inside her just waiting to be pampered.”

---

~~Natasha~~

What the ever living fuck.

Julias and Beatrice? What? Since when? Why? Fucking ... how? She watched them walk past her and up the stairway, up onto the balcony, and then proceed to kiss, touch, talk, all like it was second nature to them. So they must have been together for months by now. Think. Analyze!

She had no idea. She never kept any feelers out on Beatrice, because there was never a reason to. She was just a punk Carthian, and with her shark mouth, it wasn’t like she could just walk into a building and not be noticed by someone. Anyone. Was she that skilled at the cloak of night? And why was Julias so interested in her?

Arg, so many questions. She looked over at the others, and they were just as confused as her. At least the young paiges had the sense to not stare.

Worst of all, the two of them looked really, really, really good together. Julias was a smart, wise, confident man who always had a certain aura of sadness. Beatrice was fairly young, volatile, full of attitude, and angry. Just watching them was making her envious. They laughed together, flirted, held hands, touched, kissed, like watching yin and yang swirl.

Natasha could only shrug. “I had no idea. Wh ... wh ... what could Julias be thinking?”

“Thinking with his dick.”

“No. He’s t-t-too smart for that. He’ll ... just look. They like each other.”

Jessy looked up at the two of them, stared for twenty seconds, and then looked at Natasha before mock gagging. “I bet they fuck all nice and gently too.”

Natasha rolled her eyes, and made sure Jessy saw it.

What did Garry think of the couple? She looked out to the center of the room where Garry was still walking. The scary brute was just as scary in a tuxedo, largely cause of how off it looked on him. The young Invictus avoided him, not because he was particularly grotesque – hell Garry was a sexy man – but he was a loose cannon. Other Carthians came up to him, talked to him, but even then Garry seemed out of place.

And he was keeping an eye on Beatrice, Natasha could see. Constant glances. He was worried about her.

“Julias never ceases to amaze.”

Natasha and Jessy jumped. Maria had drifted up to them, quiet as always.

“Madame Turio, he ... I had no idea,” Natasha said, and looked down to avoid eye contact with her master.

“Nosferatu need companionship as much as the next Kindred, Madame Vola.”

What? That was weird. Maria never talked like that. Natasha forced herself to take a peak at her master. The ghost woman was looking up at Julias and Beatrice, and she had the smallest of smiles on her lips.

Natasha put up her hands in defense, complete with wide eyes. “No! No Madame, just ... surprised us.”

“No offense about the Nosferatu thing, ma’am. Just surprising to see a Mister Mire with such a no name.” Jessy gave a small jerk of her thumb toward the two on the balcony. “Beatrice is just some punk Carthian who gets in our way sometimes. And honestly, I never pictured Julias with any Carthian, let alone shark-mouth.”

Natasha clenched her teeth and stepped on Jessy’s foot. Damn it Jessy, you’re already on Maria’s bad side.

“It’s true. Mister Mire,” Maria said, with extra emphasis on the proper Invictus address, “does seem like he would prefer a proper individual. But then, you seem like you would prefer the company of dogs.” And, of course, the ghost woman said ‘company of dogs’ with just the right inflection to make the sexual connotation obvious. “We are all capable of surprise.”

Jessy lowered her head. Just let it pass Jessy, before the Nosferatu woman rips off your head.

“ ... if ... you’ll excuse us ... Madame Turio.” Natasha reached out for Jessy’s hand, gave Maria a small bow, and walked off to join a different crowd of Invictus.

“God I hate her,” Jessy said once a decent amount of distance and noise was behind them.

“D-don’t ... poke the bear.”

“I wasn’t po—”

“Shark-mouth?”

“That wasn’t—”

“You two talking about Beatrice?” Jack had walked up to them. That young neonate had grown quite bold, but it wasn’t unwarranted. He was quickly gaining responsibilities meant for older vampires, and according to his sire, it was entirely on his own merit. “Sorry. Madame Vola, Madame Herrington.” And a bow to follow.

Natasha smiled and nodded in return, but Jessy laughed.

The boy smirked at Jessy. Natasha had assumed the boy would be quite anti-social and have difficulty talking, based on what she knew of him, but Jack talked with a confidence befitting a Ventrue. Was it Julias, or the Prince rubbing off on him? Or that Ventrue bloodline?

She envied him and his sire both.

“Yes, Master Terry,” Natasha said. “We were a little surprised to see Mister Mire and Beatrice were involved.”

“I ... suppose you don’t know Julias like I do.” Jack looked up at the two love birds on the balcony, rolled his eyes, and looked back to

Natasha. “Mister Mire was just going through the motions of this second life, like he was on auto-pilot. Lacked a spark of his own. She’s that spark.”

Natasha tilted her head to the side, and looked Jack up and down again. He gave her a quick glance and when he noticed she was looking at him, he had his own shy reflex and avoided the eye contact, like she did. He was just a kid after all, not even a year embraced, but ... he saw things with self-awareness. He was smart. Julias’s childe, he was.

“I ... think you both look quite beautiful tonight.”

Natasha blinked. Jack dripped awkwardness, uncomfortable giving the compliment, and was struggling to keep eye contact, but he was standing his ground like he was fighting a battle.

Jessy erupted into laughter, and wrapped an arm around the boy’s shoulders. “Kid, I like you. Flirting like your sire? Nice. You got a thing for older women?”

If Kindred could blush, she was sure Jack would be bright red. Just the topic was making Natasha uncomfortable.

“He is the Prince’s companion, Jessy. You’ll get your head torn off before the night is over.”

Jessy immediately let him go, but frowned hard enough it probably hurt her face. She was really on a roll.

“Sorry, about the horribly delivered compliment. Just ... trying out this socialize for fun thing. Not really my thing.” He looked back up at Julias for a quick moment before back to Natasha. “I’m not sure how he does it.”

“Well, socialize, dance the Danse Macabre, and not become exhausted.”

“He’s a natural,” Jessy said. “Which is why we were all kind of surprised when he sired you.”

“Hey...” Natasha leaned over to give Jessy a sharp elbow in the side. “Be nice.”

“No, it’s alright.” Jack help up his hands. “I don’t exactly bleed confidence and royal demeanor, it’s true.” Despite his words, he gave them both the most subtle, sly grin. “And it’s ok if that’s all people see. Julias sees different. So does the Prince.”

“Very true kid. You got me stumped. Hey! Waiter!” Jessy flitted off – with no limit to her unending rudeness – and stopped one of the waiters to grab her and Natasha a glass of blood each.

Her friend was rude, an idiot, and obnoxious, but when Natasha looked down at the glass Jessy put in her hand, none of those things really mattered. She really did miss having Julias in the Invictus right hands though, to offset Jessy’s bluntness.

“Shit. You want one kid?”

“I’m good, th—”

“Now presenting ... Alder Jacob, leader of the Circle of the Crone ... and companions Othello and Jennifer,” the court marshal said.

Say what?

---

~~Jack~~

Jack looked to the door like someone had slammed it shut. Jacob? Circle of the Crone? They never came to the parties, gatherings, ball, none of it. They hid in the dark and stayed there, like the boogiemer. What the hell were they doing here?

Jacob was obvious. The man had salt and pepper hair to ear length – grey hair on a vampire was practically unheard of – and he wore dark robes made of leather, fur, and ornate in complexity of straps and weaves. It was kingly, and scary, as if Attila the Hun had dressed for a ball. And the black bandage wrapped around Jacob's eyes completed the ensemble. The oldest Kindred in the city looked the part.

Othello, a huge man with dark skin and long black hair, was dressed quite extravagantly and beautifully, as Daeva did. Jennifer was a young Ventrue, not as young as him but young still, and dressed in something he'd expect to fall off of her and leave her naked at the slightest breeze.

He didn't notice at first, but everyone had stopped talking. Everyone was staring at the trio, or Jacob at least.

"Friends!" The Nosferatu made a sweeping gesture. "Please, continue with your evening. I am here only to visit, as you are." And just like that, the ancient Kindred stepped down the stairs and joined a crowd of Carthians.

They were all frozen stiff with surprise, or fear. Both, definitely both. Garry moved to Jacob though, and the two struck up a conversation, as if they'd done it a million times. Had they done it a million times? There was a strange ease between them, something that had Garry relaxed and comfortable.

Julias's lessons about reading body language were paying off.

"What's he doing here?" Natasha said.

Jessy stepped up beside her friend, and her brow was furrowed. For a second, she reminded Jack of an angry lion. "Yeah. What's a witch doing at a ball?”

Natasha shook her head. “There’s a ... an unwritten rule ... the P-Prince doesn’t like witches ... at her ... events.”

“Oh?”

“Yeah,” Jessy said, “they make other Kindred nervous. At least you can trust a dragon to be smart and logical. A witch? ... ever seen Battle Royale?”

Jack lowered his head. Yeah, he’d seen it.

“Jessy exaggerates ... a little. Alder is an Invictus title, and Jacob brandishes it like a joke.” Natasha took a moment to smooth out her dress before looking at Jack. “Be careful with them. They would let the city rule under survival of the fittest, if they had the option.”

“They don’t have the option.” A surprise grin hit Jack. “My girlfriend would crush them.”

The words had come out of him before he even knew he’d say them. Both Jessy and Natasha looked at each other, then at him like as if he’d turned into a different person.

And it was sort of true. Something about everything Julias and Antoinette had been telling him was starting to ring true in his skull. The other Kindred were looking at him with interest, intrigue, even a little fear or awe. It was not even one hundredth the shock and awe that Jacob or the Prince inspired, but it was enough to stroke his ego and set that Ventrue blood in him aflame. He wasn’t so stupid as to let hubris destroy him, but the Danse Macabre was not a passive game. He had to get in there if he wanted to stay on top of the invisible war before him.

So he gave Jessy and Natasha small nods of departure, and walked off to find Jennifer. Start at the bottom, and work your way up.

He knew nothing about her. The beast in his gut told him he didn't need to be afraid, and that she wasn't much older than him. And, upon closer approach, the way she stood up straight and met his gaze was a clear signal; she was Ventrue.

The first one he could talk to since Viktor and Julias, and the only one near his age. There was value in that. Her dress made things difficult, as it was barely more than a few pieces of silk strung over her shoulders and dangling from her hips. The strips were just barely see-through, so he could see the slight change in color of her nipples. Normal height, with a lean and firm build with raven hair at her shoulder. For a second, Jack thought he was looking into a mirror of what Beatrice looked like before her Nosferatu disfigurements.

“Good evening,” he said. “I am Master Jack Terry, young neonate of the Invictus.”

Jennifer blinked at him, took another sip of her glass of blood, and lowered it to her exposed stomach where her other hand ran a finger along its edge in circles. “Jennifer, Circle of the Crone. You'll have to forgive me Invictus, us witches have little use for last names.”

She was looking him up and down with a single brow slightly raised, and a tiny smile. If Julias was correct, that meant she liked what she saw.

For a moment, he wondered if he spent his entire first life missing what were now fairly obvious signals of interest.

He liked what he saw too, of course, and no amount of Ventrue stature could hide his aroused gaze in front of the nearly naked, beautiful woman. But fear of Antoinette ripping him in half set him straight. “Jennifer. Are you enjoying the ball? As I understand it, Circle of the Crone rarely join these affairs.”

“Yeah.” She shrugged, like it were the most innocent of things. “The Prince doesn’t want us here, and we don’t really want to be here. But tonight’s special, right? First time a ball’s been held here in a long time. Hell, first time I’ve ever been in this palace.”

“Special?”

“Yeah special. To celebrate peace.” She rolled her eyes and waved off the word like it was meaningless. “Or whatever.”

“Not a fan of peace?”

“Not a question of my taste, young Ventrue.” One of the servers walked by, and she scooped a glass of blood from their tray like she’d been living the served life her whole life. She passed it to Jack as if the thought of him not taking it were impossible. “Just an illusion. Struggle is the nature of existence, after all. If peace were truly a thing, it would be something to avoid, because without struggle we’d all atrophy, devolve, and fade away.” Another sip. “And even the dragons can agree with us on that.”

Definitely a Darwinian view, but logical. It made him smile. “I can agree with that, if we accept the premise we are creatures bound by natural selection.”

“Aren’t we all?”

“Self-awareness comes with perks. A wild animal with no understanding of self is molded completely by its environment and genetics. But with sentience, we can step outside that paradigm. A conscious, aware choice can be the basis of guided evolution, rather than natural evolution.” He mirrored her sip. “We can choose different goals to be what we sharpen our claws on, instead of sharpening them on each other's bones."

She tilted her head to the side a little, smiled wide, and chuckled. "A good counterpoint. I'm impressed. I disagree that that choice can be made, but hey, what's a second life without disagreements?" She stepped a little closer then, and looked him up and down again. Her grin remained. "You're Julias's childe, right?"

"I am." He stood up a little taller.

"Lucky man." The fellow Ventrue nodded up with her head toward the two on the balcony, Julias and Beatrice. "She's a beautiful monster, that Beatrice. Bet she fucks like a wild cat."

He managed his own grin, but she'd surprised him. He'd assumed a Ventrue would talk proper, but this one had no issue getting her words dirty.

The way she was looking at Beatrice though, there was a little more to it than casual lust. Did she know Beatrice? Why would a witch know a Carthian? But then, why did Julias? He was probably reading too much into it, but Jennifer's gaze lingered on Beatrice for quite a while.

"So tell me, why are you asking?"

"Huh?"

"About the Circle. Why are you asking?" She'd started talking before she lowered her gaze back to him. Crafty.

"Well ... there aren't many of you. It's rare to get to talk to one of you."

"Talk to Carthians often?"

“Touché, but their goals are obvious, understandable, and I know plenty about the Carthians from talking to other Invictus. You though, the Circle are a mystery and an intriguing one.”

“Everyone so damn interested in us lately,” she said. “There’s nothing complicated.” She stepped closer again, and leaned down to blow a little bit of air at his face. How rude. “We’re the monster in the woods. We hunt, we kill, we eat, we survive. Where you worship money and real estate, we worship ancient gods and the elements of nature they represented. You guys spend your time looking for a good contract, we spend our time looking for a good mark, to kill or to fuck.”

Wow, ruthless with the description. “Um, thank you.” Everyone was interested? What did that mean? It was like she was purposefully dropping hints to tease him about what he didn’t know, complete with sly grins.

“Getting to know the young prodigy, Jennifer?”

He froze. Jacob was approaching, with a sly grin that echoed Jennifer’s, except times a thousand. He was a walking, talking comic book character who put his ridiculous and exaggerated expressions and emotions on display like life were a play. But then, to an elder as old as Jacob, second life was probably a grand stage.

He tried to ignore the beast in his gut. It could handle Maria and Michael and Garry, and even Antoinette, without cowering to its knees, but there were two Kindred in the city that just being near was enough to make every fiber of his being want to run. The sheriff, and this psycho fucker. The Joker comparisons were not unwarranted.

“Yes, the young Master Terry here is carving himself quite the career path. Bloodline of Viktor Honors, childe of the Julias the youngest Invictus Council member I've ever known, and himself a proficient Invictus businessman with his own connections. Not many share the arm of the Prince." He said it all so perfectly, fluidly, without stutter or wavering of his huge smile, that it made Jack's feet tremble.

But fuck that. Enough of these fucking elders and their fucking games.

He raised his eyes and forced them to look at the wrap where Jacob's eyes should have been. "You know a lot about me."

The Nosferatu chuckled. "I know a lot about many, but you little Ventrue are a curiosity." He circled Jack then, like a wolf eye preying.

Jack managed a quick peak over his shoulder up at Julias. His sire was watching Jacob with enough intensity that he was surprised the elder didn't burst into flames. Another peak showed that more than Julias were watching, Natasha, Jessy, and Maria were as well. So he was the center of attention. Again.

"What makes you say that, elder Jacob?" Fuck any 'your excellency' bullshit, and fuck calling him Alder. He wasn't Invictus.

"I'm not exactly sure." He stopped around in front of Jack again, and leaned down a little to bring his face in close. Having no eyes to make eye contact with was making the conversation very unusual. "I only know one other Kindred who has that weird, unknown quantity. Unpredictable. Hard to guess. I like it!" He leaned in even closer until their noses were almost touching.

Jack gritted his teeth and stood his ground. "You believe so?" He didn't ask about the other Kindred who interested him. That would tip him off that he didn't know. The Danse Macabre was a disgusting game.

“I know so,” he said. Jennifer watched, entranced by the exchange between them. “Why else would the Prince be interested in you, hmm?”

“People can like each other for simpler reasons than that.”

“Kindred aren’t people, Jack.” The monster’s grin disappeared. “Never forget that.”

“Now presenting, the Prince of Dolareido, Voivode Antoinette, and her sheriff Daniel,” the marshal of the court said.

Oh thank god.

Chapter 19

~~Antoinette~~

Her Black Hall had more faces than she'd expected. Wonderful, that meant tensions had lessened between covenants and individuals alike. There would be lasting peace in her city, even if it meant she had to drag the idiots into the peace like kicking, screaming children.

She took a moment to look around. Garry, Jacob, Maria, Michael, and Julias up on the balcony. Delightful, all the primogen were there. It was the first time in a long time the primogen had come to a ball of their own accord, all at the same time. She had to extend her invitation twice to Jacob, to insure him he was truly welcome, but she did not expect the witch to attend. Yet there he was, standing with Jennifer and Jack.

What was he doing with Jack?

She began her slow descent down the stairs, with the sheriff at her side. While Daniel wore the most boring tuxedo ever devised by Kindred or kine, she would never wear something so dull. This was her ball, her building, and her city. She would dress the part.

Her dress was blue, in stark contrast to her red lips and eyes. It wasn't as slim or revealing as she normally wore; the evening was not about blatant seduction. Instead, it was an off-shoulder mermaid gown with a skirt that tightened at the knees before spreading into a beautiful array of heavy curves where it barely touched the floor. The fabric had the most subtle sheen, and its smoothness was perfect. Along the collar and along its base, the most tiny threads of dancing silver framed the color perfectly.

It was most definitely not a dress from her time. Instead, it was a modern thing, and a beautiful example of the elegance of simplicity. The only jewelry she wore to compliment it were tiny drops of black from her ears, and a single necklace of chained silver and obsidian.

She gave a small nod to Daniel, and reached out to touch his arm. “Try and enjoy yourself old friend.”

“Yes Annie,” he said, but all he did was adjust his glasses and then find a corner to stand in, alone.

Ugh. She would break him. It may take a couple hundred more years, but she would break him, and find something that would make him happy.

She took a moment to run her fingers through her long, lush white hair, and gave the watching Kindred a knowing but gentle smile. “Guests, please continue. There are no announcements to be made, or agendas to be had. Peace is a rare thing, so let us celebrate it while we can.” She dismissed her own words with a small flick of her wrist, and continued to step down the stairway. Each step only momentarily exposed the tip of her black shoes; a short heel, as there was no need to stand taller than everyone even more than she already did.

They kept watching her, and they would for the rest of the evening, but at least everyone went back to their conversations. That was good. It was such a rare thing for Kindred to let their guard down, even a little, and if she could foster that trust just a touch, then efforts she made were worth it. If everyone had that same honesty as Jack did, her job would be easy.

Jack. The boy looked absolutely adorable in his fancy little tuxedo. Julias knew his childe well, and when she met Mire’s gaze with a look upward, he gave a knowing nod of his own. Thank you, Mister Mire.

Then she looked to Jack. He was staring at her with wide eyes, and looking her up and down. The dress did not reveal much skin, and it hugged her breasts tightly enough to contain her bust. What drew his eyes so?

“ ... my Prince,” he said once she was near, and bowed.

“Silly boy.” She reached out and flicked him in the head. Nearby Kindred gasped, and some chuckled. That was fine, a little humor was exactly what she was looking for. “You are my lover, not my servant.”

“Heh, sorry Prince Antoinette.”

“Have you been talking with Jacob?” She moved in closer to Jack, stood beside him, and faced the two witches he was talking with. Her nod for Jennifer was genuine – quite the sexy creature that Jennifer – but her gaze was barely better than a glare for Jacob. Careful what you say here, witch, or your antics will get you more trouble than you can handle.

“Jacob expressed some interest in me.”

“Did he?”

The ancient Nosferatu made a dismissing wave of a hand. “An innocent curiosity, I assure you. Master Terry has been making a name for himself, and for one so young, I just had to see what all the fuss was about.” Jacob gave her a nod, but as always his idiot grin and weird movements buried his words in sarcasm.

“Terry surprised many. I am glad Julias made the choice he did.” She furrowed her brow, and glared daggers into his eyeless face. If you touch the boy, you worthless fool, I will rend you limb from limb.

Jennifer was silent, and standing beside Jacob much in mirror of Antoinette and Jack. Two elders and their two young companions. It made for a strange parallel.

“I am glad the Circle of the Crone decided to attend,” she said, and she combed her fingers through her hair until the long mane was hooked over her shoulder and in front of her.

“Are you?” Jacob said. It could have been more sinister or angry, but he said it with that touch of quiriness to offset the potential insult. Because that’s what he did, never direct, always dancing around his own words.

“I am. You’ll have to forgive me if I do not always accept the Circle into my gatherings, but you have a history of stirring up trouble, Jacob.”

“Oh?”

She stepped toward the ancient Nosferatu. “Do you not remember the chaos you caused twenty years ago, with Viktor and Tony?”

“Oh yeah! Aha, that was grand.” Jacob roared a laugh, enough to have the rest of the Kindred looking their way again. “Fuck they really wanted to kill me for that.”

Jennifer was looking at her like she was insane. Jacob had surely scared the young Ventrue with his dark arts, and she probably thought Jacob was the strongest Kindred in the city. Antoinette suppressed one of many smirks the night would surely summon. Someday she would have to put Jacob back in his place.

Jacob did not bother to suppress his smirk. How fitting. “I can be subtle.”

“Dressed as a royal Hun?”

Jack burst into laughter next to her, but was quick to cover his mouth. She did not realize what she said was so humorous; the boy was the only one laughing.

Jacob gave Jack a harsh glare, as much as a one could give with a bandage wrapped over his eyes, but his anger passed quickly. “With all due respect Prince ... can you imagine me in a tuxedo?”

It was her turn to chuckle. “Touché.” The image of the older, crazy Nosferatu in a proper tuxedo did indeed not sit at all. “If you’ll excuse me Jacob, I would like to walk with my lover.”

Such a wonderful word, lover. It held just the right note of attraction and appreciation, of sexual imagery and emotional attachment. And to a heartless creature like Jacob, it must have sounded disgusting. It made the old man cringe and scrunch up his nose, but Antoinette smiled at him, put a hand on Jack’s shoulder, and started walking. No need to look back, let them think what they will.

Jack fell in beside her, and walked like her companion, not her servant. Good. She smiled down at him, and he returned it with beaming eyes.

“Thanks,” he said.

“However did you get pulled into a conversation with that beast?”

“I was talking to one of his fellow witches, Jennifer. She seemed ... intelligent.”

“And rather forward and feisty, I imagine?”

“Yes! I had no idea witches were so direct with their belief. Carthians wax poetic about modern government, but the Circle surprised me with their conviction.”

“Indeed.” She put her hands on the boy’s shoulder again, and pulled him a little closer, so they nearly touched bodies as they walked. “Intelligent and dangerous. Jacob is both a valued member of my primogen council, and a thorn in my side.”

“Like Tony?”

Bile was upon her lips in seconds. “That fool was most certainly a thorn, and valuable as a primogen, just not for intelligence. But,” she took a deep breathe for effect, “let us not dwell on thorns. Are you enjoying the ball?”

“I kind of am.” The young thing shifted his feet from side to side for a moment, looking down, until he raised his gaze back to the witch Jennifer. “I’ve learned a lot.”

“That is good then.”

She raised a hand to her lips and chuckled. It was a delight that the boy tried to compliment her, but such a bold and direct compliment just did not come naturally from him. Julias could, but poor Jack could not. Still, the effort warmed her.

“Thank you.” She put both her hands on the boy’s shoulder then, leaned down, and kissed him. His eyes went wide of course. How could she risk such behavior in front of everyone, he probably thought. But then she drew the kiss out, tugged on his bottom lip with hers, and nudged her nose into him.

It took a little while, but eventually his own eyes closed, and he kissed her back. Satisfied, she pulled away and grinned at him. Others were staring, but many were smiling. Perhaps they thought it sweet?

She did not care. He was hers, the Black Hall was hers, and the city was hers. Let them think what they would.

“Come.” She started walking again, but took a quick peek behind her to see if the boy was was going to join her. Apparently she had shocked him, but after a moment to get his bearings the boy skipped after her to join her side again.

Everyone kept glancing at her, especially the young neonates. She could hear them whisper, some in fear, some in wonder, many simply wondering about her hair and its white color, and others intimidated by her height. The usual. But the whispers were also different, as many giggled or chuckled between themselves at the sight of Jack next to her. He intrigued them. The neonates, she noticed, looked at Jack with a curiosity and wonder not to dissimilar to how they looked at her.

Good. Good. Everything was going smoothly. If she could make everyone comfortable with each other, and not spend every waking moment conspiring to kill each other, there was hope for their damned race.

“No thank you my dear. Jack?”

“Uh, no. I’m good.”

She waved off the servant, and the man nodded before returning to the one of the side doors of the Black Hall.

Jack nudged her side and motioned his head toward the server. “He didn’t seem like a ghoul.”

“He was not.”

“Then just a regular kine? You trust him?”

“Mon chéri, all the kine here are slaves to my will.”

“Oh, wow. Like what a Ventrue does?”

“No. They are still of their own mind, but I have cast my spell upon them. They wholly desire to serve me.” The Daeva discipline of majesty. She knew it was how Rebecca has enraptured the poor boy when she had stabbed him, and nearly taken away this precious creature she now coveted.

“Oh wow ... how long does that last?”

“For a young Daeva, she or he may enthrall a kine for the night. The servants here at the Black Hall are mine for weeks, and I will enchant them again before it fades.”

“Jesus, and I thought Viktor’s dominate was impressive.”

She grinned. Now that was a compliment Jack delivered well.

Their stroll came upon Maria Turio and Michael McDonald, the two Invictus primogen. Predictable and dull those two were, but at least still of a sane mind compared to Viktor. “Madame Turio, Mister McDonald.”

“I am. Your young master is a joy to my second life.” She liked Jack, a lot. Is that so hard to comprehend, you soulless husks? At least the boy stood proud next to her, despite the unbelieving eyes of his superiors.

“It seems there is much intermingling between the covenants.” Maria stepped forward, and the ghost woman lightly motioned toward the two on the balcony.

“Mister Mire and Miss Damor,” Antoinette said.

Both Invictus looked at each other with momentary confusion. They did not know Beatrice’s last name of course, and why would they. But they would now, if only because now they knew she was with Julias. Jack said nothing, but she saw a smirk on his lips.

“I do hope Mister Mire remembers his position.” Maria shook her head a little, and it made the white veil that covered it sway. “She is just a rankless neonate.”

Antoinette shrugged lightly. “Carthians do not care much for rank.” And the fact she was no longer Carthian. She wondered if Beatrice had told Julias yet of her change in covenants. So far, she had done an excellent job of hiding the information, and Antoinette doubted anyone knew except the Circle themselves, and Garry. It would be an interesting conversation, she imagined.

She knew though, of course. She was very good at her job, as was Daniel.

The Prince looked back at Maria. “I do not believe Mister Mire would ever betray his position or his allegiance, Madame Turio.”

Maria squinted her eyes through her white veil, but Antoinette just smiled. She remembered the Nosferatu’s relationship with Lucas. A gentle reminder, a little deterrence, to keep her in her place.

“Of course.” Maria bowed her head somewhat, but there was a scowl there hidden under the veil. Maria did not like her, but that was fine. She did not like Maria.

“I think I will say hello to the good gentleman and his companion.” Antoinette gave Maria and McDonald a dismissing nod, and began to walk up the splitting stairs the two Invictus leaders were near.

Jack was beside her a moment later. “You two don’t seem to get along.”

“You and I are the only Invictus who do.”

“Oh ... is that normal, between covenants?”

“It is. Fundamental views shape and mold who we are, do they not?”

“I guess.” Jack reached up and ran his fingers along his buzzed head. “But I don’t really think of disagreements as not getting along. I enjoy a debate as much as a friendly conversation.”

She smiled down at the boy beside her. Oh Jack, oh sweet Jack. Were the rest of vampires as genuine as you.

Soon, the two of them were upon the balcony. She took a moment to look upon the crowd of Kindred that drifted around the floor of her Black Hall. The hall could house a thousand, but Kindred would not mingle so closely as kine, so it was better for them to have their space. They drifted around in small cliques, sticking to their own covenants and even their own age groups. But, she noticed, diversity was spreading. Some Invictus were talking with Carthians, and Jack’s example had more Kindred even talking with the witches. Julias and his now blatant relationship with Beatrice was also sparking a lot of intermingling between groups. Good, good.

“Mister Mire,” she said. Julias had already turned to face her, and he bowed with her greeting. Beatrice did too, though the poor woman was obviously uncomfortable with the movement, or with her.

She had never talked with Miss Damor one-on-one. That should change.

“Prince,” he said.

Then Antoinette smiled at Beatrice. “Miss Damor.”

That made the Nosferatu blink. “ ... Prince,” she said.

That’s right little Nosferatu, I know you, and your secrets.

“It is quite the gathering,” Julias said, and he looked back over the railing. “I never thought to see so many getting along.”

Jack took a step forward to his sire. “Was it always so bad?”

The Prince also took a step forward, and leaned over the railing the same as them. “Once, this city was as violent as most cities still are between Kindred. War in the shadows. Pointless death.”

Beatrice looked her way. “Sometimes a cause is worth killing for.”

Everyone turned to look at her. It was like she had taken a knife and cut through the air until it bled.

“ ... I would speak to you privately for a moment, Miss Damor.” It wasn’t a question.

She stood back up, walked past them, and ignored their confused gazes. Beatrice was staring at her like she was the devil come to take her soul, but the young Kindred started to walk after her. Antoinette’s beast delighted in its blatant domination of Beatrice’s.

“Are you enjoying your time with Julias?” Antoinette said, once they were a ways further down the balcony. She kept her voice hushed.

“Um, yeah ... uh ... Prince.” Beatrice was trying to keep eye contact, but the fear was obvious. Antoinette had spent so much time cultivating a little fearlessness from Jack, she had almost forgotten how most young Kindred responded to her.

“Do give my compliments to Jennifer. You look lovely tonight. And from the way Julias is looking at you, tonight I am sure he will be after you like a young boy and his fist girlfriend.”

Now the Nosferatu was looking at her like with wide eyes, so wide Antoinette could see the startling detail of their snake features.

“ ... how much do you know?”

“It is my city, little Nosferatu. Daniel and I hold this with our own hands. Do you think I miss such things?”

“Fuck, uh ... have you told anyone?”

Bold of the young woman to ask questions of her so directly. She liked that. “No. It is of no harm to my kingdom. Yet. But that is not why we are speaking.”

“Then—”

“I wish to speak of Julias.” This time she turned to look out over the crowd of Kindred below them. She knew at just what volume to speak for only Beatrice to hear, and if any Mehket had bright ideas to spy on her, she would notice.

“What about him?”

“He is key in my plans for this city, little witch. You see the peace below us? Nearly two hundred Kindred, and none of them are plotting to kill each other, at least in the immediate. I have worked hard to arrive at this point. And Julias is the fruit of my labor.”

“I’m not following.”

Antoinette took a moment to think her words over carefully. Could a young Kindred such as Beatrice even understand the utopia she was trying to craft?

“Julias accepts without issue that Kindred of different covenants can befriend each other, even love each other.”

“Whoa whoa no one’s said the L word.” Beatrice put up her hands and waved them around as if to stop some great wind.

Antoinette chuckled. It had been centuries since she had said the word with any intent to another. Old, forgotten, covered in rot and decay. But the language between Julias and Beatrice was clear and obvious. Julias probably knew it too, but he was wise enough to not scare off Beatrice with it. How would that conversation go, Antoinette wondered.

“My relationship with his childe is also a delightful, if unexpected fruit of those labors. Julias is the first of many minds I hope to mold into something both wise, intelligent, and with an inkling of awareness. He knows what future awaits Kindred, and that only with a little cooperation are we to weather that storm.”

Beatrice, the poor thing, was shivering next to her like a scared animal. Antoinette had unknowingly risen to a full stand and was speaking down at the woman with her public speaking tone. She sighed, and let herself relax.

“I mean no ill will toward you, Miss Damor, only to warn you. Jacob and his brutal views may not mold so well to my ideals. Were Julias not interested in you, I would say nothing and let you suffer the consequences of your choice, come what may. But Julias appears to value you, and so will I.” That made Beatrice blink in twenty sorts of confusion. “So I warn you now. Please listen to Julias when he brings wisdom. He may be a sad creature, but he has found a spark in you, and I would hate to see your choices destroy you, when the man you love could prevent it.”

She placed the love word again like an immovable flower, wrapped in context and weight so the Nosferatu had no choice but to accept it.

“Alright alright. I’ll ... yeah, I’ll do that.”

“Good.” She leaned on her elbow and faced the woman before her again. “You have had a much harsher life than most, Beatrice, considering the circumstances of your embrace. I appreciate that it has not warped you into a monster.”

So many words. It was a bit of a gamble, dumping so much information on the new witch. It was nothing Antoinette could not spare to say, but that did not mean she was doing herself any favors handing so much information to Jacob’s newfound pet.

“What do you know about my embrace?”

“Nosferatu can be such tragic figures. And one such tragedy, Jerem Montallia, obsessed over a woman who embodied everything he wanted, both before and after his embrace. But he did not have my permission to sire – I do not let my city grow uncontrolled – so he acted on his own. I was the one that decreed he would die his second death for his unsanctioned action, remember?”

“Yeah, I remember. So you think you know me now, hmm?” This time Beatrice stepped closer. Antoinette could see the young thing was terrified, and the beast in her gut was shaking with fear, but rage pushed her through it. “I had nothing and no one and your utopia was hell on Earth for me.”

“Then imagine how much worse it would have been, if someone such as Lucas had taken advantage of your misery, brainwashed you with fool notions of purpose in a God’s divine plan, and then used you as cannon fodder in a true war between covenants?” Antoinette kept the words soft. She did not want to defeat Beatrice in this conversation, merely enlighten her. If Julias enjoyed Beatrice so, it must have meant the woman had depth to her, a depth Antoinette could encourage.

“I imagine I’d be dead.”

“Indeed. So think carefully when Jacob preaches of his ideals, of a world where the strong rule the weak with tooth and claw. Do you think such a society could last?”

“No, but that doesn’t mean there isn’t a lot of value, and wisdom in old views. We’d be fucking idiots to just dismiss what we are ... Prince.” Beatrice was standing only a couple feet from her, and was looking up at her and meeting her gaze. The Nosferatu had courage indeed.

Antoinette nodded and looked back toward the crowd beneath them. “True. I battle against our own nature. And it is a long fight, but I think I will win.” She gave a dismissing wave, and turned to start walking back toward the boys. But first, a quick glance over her shoulder back at Beatrice. “I always win.”

Beatrice frowned like a chipmunk, with a scrunched up nose that almost had Antoinette break into another chuckle. But she did not want to offend the woman. The young Nosferatu had power to her; it was why Jacob had scooped her up. A seed of thought planted in her mind would, Antoinette hoped, yield fruit.

“You two ok?” Jack said once she was near.

Julias gave her a quiet look with a raised brow, but said nothing.

“Yeah.” Beatrice shrugged and stood next to Julias again, a little closer than necessary. Fear, perhaps? Or had Antoinette’s words of love broken into the stubborn child’s skull?

“I bid you both a good evening then. Come Jack, I would speak with Mister Tones.” A nod for the couple, a nod returned, and she walked back down the stairs.

Jack joined her. He too said nothing, but glanced back over his shoulder at Beatrice, and then to Antoinette. When she looked at him, he did not break her gaze, but met it with a couple of telling blinks and a nod in the Nosferatu’s direction. Antoinette smiled down at the young man, and shook her head. Women keep their secrets, dear boy.

“Mister Tones,” she said once near the Gangrel. “You look ... please, if you would give me but a day, I could have crafted for you the most luxurious tuxedos and suits. Something more to your size and facial shape.” The man was a dark, brooding, sexually alluring beast, but he did not know how to dress for it.

Garry frowned at her. Her teasing, it appeared, would not ease his fury. Lucas and his return were on the man’s mind, no doubt.

“Prince.” Despite his anger, the man gave her a small bow. “Enjoying the evening?”

“I am. Have you ever witnessed so many Kindred under one roof? Delightful.”

“Yeah, I—”

But then the doors opened. The marshal of the court said some words of defiance, but the growing group of figures overwhelmed him with their numbers. Soon the marshal was forced to step off the stairs to make room for the large group of black-robed vampires.

---

~~Damien~~

But there were none, there was only the pure white fury of the Prince. The rest of the Kindred in the Black Hall parted like the Red Sea, and they even bowed their heads like beasts cowering before their pack leader.

Damien kept to Lucas’s side, but he would not cower. While he was dressed in black robes of a modern make, Lucas had worn his old robes from when he was a true Archbishop. The hood was raised, the whole of it was worn with dirt, and it was colored dust and brown on its edge. It was stitched together with dirty, thick thread, and a rope of twined human thread circled his waist. Not everyone knew, but Damien could see it so close; the robe was patched together layers of human skin.

“Prince Antoinette.” Lucas gave a small bow. “I have come as invited.”

“The invitation was not for you!”

“I had heard all Kindred were invited.” His sire tilted his head to the side. “We are Kindred.”

“Do not play coy with me, vermin. I have postponed dealing with you, and you spit on the last shred of kindness I offer you.”

“Kindness? The Lancea et Sanctum has a right to practice in this city, Prince, despite your views as to otherwise.” Lucas began to pass side to side, with a lowered head and fingers netted behind his back.

“And despite losing several Kindred mere weeks ago, we have not retaliated. We wish only for peace.”

“Lies.” Antoinette kept marching up toward Lucas, alone. The sheriff was nowhere to be seen, and everyone else in the room had backed off. The Kindred that Lucas brought also backed away, and it took everything Damien had to stand his ground beside his sire. It was her, the woman who’d butchered so many Bishops and priests. The beautiful dress did not detract from the fury that poured out of her, washing over everyone in close proximity and crushing them.

“Lies? I have sat quiet for fifty years to let anger fade and wounds heal. We can start fresh, and coexist. That is what you want, is it not?”

That stopped her a good ten feet before she reached him. Her hands were so tight by her side, Damien was sure they’d snap at the fingers.

“Everything I have done was for peace,” she said.

“Then why can I not attend this ball meant for all Kindred?”

“Because you are not capable of peace, monster.”

Lucas lowered his head, and with a slow, heavy motion, he lowered his hood and exposed his dark skin, short curly hair, and his tired eyes. “Fifty years of torpor can change one’s perspective. We clashed in the past, and I do not wish to repeat history.”

Garry stomped forward from the side with enough weight in his step to draw everyone’s eyes. “Fuck you. Repeat history? Mother fucker I’ll rip you to bits you fuck—”

Antoinette put an arm in front of him to stop him from passing her. Damien relaxed, slowly, and let go of the sword in his robes.

Garry was a different problem; one wrong word and that psycho mutt would be a much harder fight than Jessy ever was.

When Damien looked past them though, and saw the two Invictus by the stairs, he focused his gaze on them. Mehket eyes could see how McDonald was watching intently, but a white veil was over Maria's face. The way she moved though, the body language, subtle shifts and a sway of her hips, he could tell there was anxiety there. Lucas and Maria had something between them, but he had no idea how far that went.

“Garry Tones, there was a lot of anger between us.”

“Is that some sort of bad joke?”

“Not at all.” Lucas shook his head. “I am here in hopes we can move past that. It was fifty years ago, and I have done nothing to seek vengeance for the deaths of my flock at your hands.”

Garry was shaking, grinding his teeth, and staring daggers into Lucas. “I lost as many to yours.”

“And ... for that, I can only apologize. It is a different time now, and I realize the iron fist of the Lancea et Sanctum will no longer create peace. We must adapt, and we will maintain the peace for as long as you will.”

Damien quirked a brow. They would? As far as he knew, Lucas had every intent of taking over the entire city in a slow crawl, like a mighty plague of Egypt. At least, that's what his sire had told him. In all his sermons, Damien realized, he never heard Lucas speak of their plans for domination to the congregation, like it were some sort of vague secret of an idea.

The congregation nodded at each other, and quiet murmurs of agreement spread throughout them. They liked they idea of peace. What was Lucas doing?

The Prince did not seem too accepting of the idea. “Peace? You?” She walked closer. Lucas did not move, but every Kindred stepped back as she approached. Even Damien took a step back, as if a tidal wave of aggression was pushing against him. The beast in his gut struggled against the dominant force of hers, but it was just a puppy standing its ground against an alpha wolf.

“Please, Prince Antoinette, I—”

“You do not want peace! You want submission, and blind faith.”

How Lucas could stand against this woman’s fury was beyond Damien. In a distant memory, Damien could recall when Lucas commanded a dozen Bishops and many priests, and had many Kindred bow to him, but never did the man raise his voice or use rage and fury. Always Lucas was gentle, and intelligent, and talkative about the ways of Longinus. There was no blind faith here.

“The ... the Archbishop doesn’t want blind faith! He teaches us, we learn!” one of the Kindred with them said.

The look the Prince gave the innocent vampire shut her up, hard stop. Those red eyes of the dragon’s were like fire.

“ ... will you not let us stay?” Lucas asked. Begged. The tone was almost enough to break Damien’s withered heart. Half for the sadness of it, and half for lie of it.

Damien peaked around the deadly creature and to Jacob. The oldest Kindred in the city, Jacob and Lucas. There was a friendship there, a weird one, one that Damien knew nothing about, but Lucas had said they were friends.

But Jacob was just grinning. The Nosferatu met Damien’s gaze, as much as he could with no eyes of his own, and his grin only grew.

The only friend they could have possibly found in this den of sinners was Maria, and she remained silent.

Lucas let out a sad sigh. “I—”

“Enough! You will leave the hall immediately, and you have three days to leave my city. Three days, you stupid, tired old fool, or I will wipe clean the sewers you hide in of you, your ashes, your ghouls, and every single Kindred who dares call you Archbishop.”

The entire Hall, already silent, somehow grew even more quiet. A pin drop would have shattered the walls.

She was talking about war, another war. Damien gritted his teeth, and did everything he could to keep his voice from escaping. Lucas had to know this conversation would have gone this way. The other Kindred were younger, and ignorant of the massacre fifty years ago; they didn't know what the Prince was like when confronted by the Lancea et Sanctum.

What was Lucas doing goading her? What would this madness possibly accomplish?

The Archbishop lowered his head. “... as you wish, Prince.” Then he turned, gave a tiny dismissing wave to his congregation, and walked through them to leave the Black Hall.

Whispers erupted. Everyone started talking at once, the congregation and the rest of the hall alike.

“What's going to happen to us now?” Damien's flock asked. “Are we leaving? But how ... where?” With heavy heads, they all left.

Damien was the last to leave, and he stood his ground before the Prince with a harsh eye. She returned it, but with no where near the rage of before. In fact, she looked sad. Morose.

It infuriated him. How dare she, how fucking dare she look sad. This was all her doing! She was ruining their lives. She was ruining his life and Lucas's life a second time.

He was fast, and she was unarmed. He could try and kill her there. Maybe, just maybe. She was so close too, only ten feet away; might as well have been nose-to-nose close, and the sword in his robes could cut her head off the same as any head. She would fall apart in ashes, and right there in a single strike, he could stop this madness and Lucas could resume his role of a true Archbishop, and even Prince himself.

But that look in her eyes stopped him. Sad, but confident. She knew what she said, and it had hurt her? She stood her ground at looked at Damien with enough weight in her own eyes to press him into the earth. He couldn't meet those eyes of hers anymore. Red, ancient, knowing ... mournful.

He turned and left.

The walk back to their underground network was depressing. Lucas kept the congregation under the veil of his cloak of night, so they could walk among the kine uninterrupted, but despite their privacy none talked.

Once back into their deep metal hole under the city, they entered the room they treated as their church, and sat in their pews without so much as a word from anyone. Lucas, with fingers netted together behind him and head lowered, hood raised, walked with heavy feet toward the podium, and did not stand behind it with any enthusiasm. And when he raised his head to expose his grimace, Damien's heart sank even more.

“We can’t leave! This is our home! Some of us have had lives here for decades,” someone in the crowd said.

“This is crazy. We can’t just leave.”

“Yeah, we have to do something! She threatened us and we haven’t done anything!”

“Even when the Invictus attacked us, we didn’t retaliate! We just want peace.”

Damien watched his flock grow louder and louder. There were no ghouls there, it was only Kindred, and the Kindred were rising from their quiet composure and growing into a mob.

“Please my children, the only way we could stop the Prince is if we struck first. We do not have the numbers or territory for war.” Lucas shook his head and ran his fingers down the edges of his Testament of Longinus. The book overwhelmed the podium with its size, and Damien was sure it was bound in human skin, like the Archbishop’s robes.

Someone in the crowd stood up. “Then ... then we strike first!”

Lucas shook his head, stepped around the podium, and reached up to lower his hood. “You know not what you ask, my flock. War is why I spent fifty years waiting. The Prince’s hate and insanity was to be avoided.”

“But we can’t avoid it.” Yet another voice.

“And if we leave, we could die on the journey, or find ourselves oppressed again! Tony left us all behind, and now we have to defend ourselves from her!”

The congregation were all getting up, looking at each other, exchanging words of violence and intent, and looking to Lucas with expectant eyes. Damien just watched the madness and fury unfold around him, and he nearly let his jaw drop. Was this really happening?

Lucas put up his hands and lowered them. "Please! Children! Calm yourselves."

It took a minute, but quiet eventually fell upon the flock.

Lucas let out a long sigh, and then sat upon the stage of the podium. "Gather close then children."

A little confused, the Kindred rose from their pews and stepped in closer, and as they gathered, they got to their knees so everyone could be near Lucas. He was sitting, and his face carried the most gentle look Damien had ever seen, like Jesus Christ himself talking with his disciples.

"Do you truly wish to risk our lives, to save our home and our faith?"

Some of the congregation went quiet and looked between each other with hesitation. The three Invictus they had recruited stepped back with bowed heads. But many, even most, were all too eager to nod and vow to their cause.

Damien just watched.

Lucas smiled at those that stepped back. "If you do not wish to come, we understand. Do we not, my children?"

The rest of the flock hummed their confirmation.

"Then ... we are in agreement."

More hums and grunts of agreement.

Damien said nothing.

“Then we must strike fast, and hard. We must make preparations now, and tomorrow night, we will unleash the vengeance of Longinus upon this unbeliever.”

The crowd cheered. Damien blinked in disbelief.

---

They were alone again, in their sealed alter room. Lucas was leaning over the alter of artifacts, and the grin was on his face lit by candlelight. Damien was next to him, but he dared not touch anything. His hands were not worthy.

“The shield of ash and flesh is ready. They will gather arms, and tomorrow night we will do the unthinkable, my Bishop.”

Damien grimaced. Their congregation were going to be that shield, and that meant they were going to get slaughtered. “You plan to attack the Prince head on.”

“I do indeed. You, and I, and our flock, against the Prince. We will flood her home and crush her there, where she least expects it.”

Damien avoided the now almost psychotic gaze of his sire. “What of the sheriff?”

“Thanks to you, we know his weakness. I have many times battled minds with that dragon, and I know he has a weakness for someone. His childe, it is. Now, I must go talk with Maria, and the arrangements will be made.”

“But...” How could he say this without insulting his sire? “You ... are still weak, from torpor. And the Prince has shown to be truly brutal.”

“Faith, my good Bishop.” Lucas reached out, put both hands on Damien’s shoulders, squeezed, and shook him. “Faith! Come, practice your eyes and set your touch upon this.” His sire grabbed the antique sword from the alter, and placed it in Damien’s hands.

The younger Mehket quirked a brow at his sire, but did as commanded. A Mehket was a creature of secrets, of shadows and speed. But they were also the only Kindred who could see with more than eyes.

When the sword entered his hands, it took little effort to cast otherworldly eyes upon it. The vision attacked him with viciousness. Like lightning, it cracked against his closed eyes and tore into his mind. There were men. Soldiers. Guards? There was a garden. There was a man standing between the guards and another man, and he’d drawn this sword. For a moment, Damien was that man, and in a flash, he cut off someone’s ear.

Damien dropped sword, took a step back, and fell back with hand grasping at his chest. Lucas was quick to catch the sword, and the Archbishop gave him one of now many odd grins.

“I may not be able to fight with the same strength as before, not for months, even years. But I still have my faith. I will call upon God’s help, and he will smite the dragon for us. The sheriff will not move against us while I hold his childe captive, and you will have many Kindred at your side.”

His side? He would be fighting the Prince? Damien forced himself up. Analyze. Think. “God will smite her for us?”

“There is power in faith, good Bishop, and I will show it to you. The Prince will still be a threat though, but with God on our side and our congregation throwing themselves at her, you will have the opportunity to end her. I trust in your skills, Damien.” Lucas put his free hand on his shoulder, and kept the sword in the other. “And we will triumph.”

Damien nodded, but his mind was going a mile a minute. It was all planned. Lucas was looking for an opportunity to strike with a zealot's madness. A suicide mission. A kamikaze mission. This was not the Lucas he remembered. Where was the gentle man and his soft voice who taught them to respect God and guide kine into his embrace? This new Lucas, his eyes were wide, his gaze was frightening, and any softness was an act.

He was going to sacrifice his flock to kill the Prince. And Damien was getting pulled into the insanity right along with it.

Chapter 20

~~Beatrice~~

The ball didn't last long after that. Antoinette left, and she took Jack with her. The poor kid looked pretty scared as the most powerful Kindred in the city dragged him off with a firm grip hand-in-hand. He'd looked Julias's way, with 'she's angry' printed on his face. Julias gave a small wave, and Beatrice did too, but hers was far more teasing. She had no idea what Antoinette did when she was upset, and Jack probably didn't either, but he was going to find out.

"Fuck man. Just ... fuck." Beatrice was leaning over the railing next to white knight. "So much for peace."

Julias nodded. "Quite the gamble of Lucas."

"Yeah. I wonder what the fuck he thought was going to happen?"

"Maybe catch Antoinette on a good day?"

They both managed a nervous chuckle, but Beatrice knew there was more to it than what they had observed. Lucas was up to something, her nightly exploits had discovered that. Hell, this whole visit by Lucas and his 'flock' seemed really out of place too.

But it wasn't her problem. Lucas probably had his eyes on the Prince, not her. And the Prince could take care of herself. More importantly, Julias kept giving glances, complete with juvenile smirks while those eyes of his kept falling to her ass.

"Hey. So, should we go?" Beatrice said. The word love was ringing in her head, another secret in her pocket.

"Mm? Yeah sure, let's."

He took her arm, she took his, and they walked down the stairs into the atmosphere of unknown. People didn't care about either of them anymore, they cared about what hell Lucas had just unleashed on himself. And she kind of liked that. She could just hold arms with her man and no one gave a shit anymore.

Julias gave a shit, apparently. He walked a little faster, and a little faster, and she had to almost jog to keep up once they were outside.

He looked over his shoulder at her. Those eyes of his were hungry, starving even. He took them around a corner, away from the crowd of leaving Kindred and wandering kine. The living who were watching the coming-and-going crowd talked with wild confusion. Who were all these people and why would they attend such a short party?

But with the way Julias was pulling on her, she was pretty fucking happy the party ended short. When was the last time she'd run off with a guy after a party – not a ball of course, but a real party with booze and open-minded people – to go home for a good fuck? It made her smile.

But they didn't get home. Julias took her down one of the alleys, pristine and clean because everything was in this neighborhood, pinned her against the wall, and pressed his body against her.

Oh wow. He'd literally pinned her against the wall, hands about her wrists, body against hers, and his voice had grown dark. He was so much taller than her, wide shoulders burying her, and his hands were huge against hers. Tall, dark, handsome. Since when did her Superman have a dark side?

She blushed. One moment, she was a lifeless husk of pale skin and cold bones, the next her skin was warm, her lungs breathed air, and her color returned. And her body was on fire.

He blushed too, and she found herself pushing her body against him a little.

“Hey,” she said, and smiled up at him from behind her veil. “You uh ... you’re being awfully aggressive.” She was stronger than him, at least in a pure physical strength sense. It wasn’t like she couldn’t push him off, but look in his eyes was animal. No way she was going to douse that fire.

“Seeing you stand up to everyone like that? Show off to everyone like that?” He pushed his body closer to hers until she had practically vanished from sight underneath him. “A lot of eyes were on you. A lot of eyes wanted to fuck you.”

Had they? She knew Joe was startled by her makeup and stuff, and definitely had a look of lust on him. But a lot of eyes? “I didn’t ... I know I saw you staring at me, but you’re a freak.”

“A lot of eyes,” he said again, and he let go of her wrists. His hands moved lower, and she put her claws on his forearms while those hands reached behind her to cup her ass with tight, squeezing fingers. He was kneading the meat of her ass, digging the fingers into her, prying apart and pushing cheeks together like a young school boy who didn’t know what he was doing, just driven by sheer arousal.

And she really liked how Mr. Perfect’s composure was thrown to the wind by her. Antoinette had guessed it perfectly; that bitch was too damn smart.

His hands went further down, and then Julius was lowering himself down her. A moment later he was on his knees. Superman on his knees, in a dark alley, with his hands sneaking under her long skirt and lifting it higher, and higher. Holy fuck.

“Hey what’re you doing? Someone will see.”

“Let them see.”

It was dark, and she was still wearing her face veil. No kine would be able to see her extra teeth in the black. Julias knew it, and the man had every intention of taking advantage of it apparently. Her skirt was up to her hips in no time, her back against the wall.

“Where’d you get these?” he said, and he hooked his fingers around her panties. Before she could say anything, he’d slipped them off. She was forced to step out of them as he brought them to her feet.

“I ... um...”

They were black lace panties, bikini style with the extra straps that went over the hips. Completely unpractical, and definitely what your typical rich slut wore when she wanted to seduce businessmen. And she really liked them.

Julias pocketed them, but he kept her skirt up. “You kept this on.” He leaned in then, and gave the piercing in her clit hood a light kiss.

Fuck fuck fuck. Just the sensation of his breath on her clit was enough to send sparks up her spine, and he didn’t stop there. His lips were on her and he wasn’t wasting time. Normally he would go excruciatingly slow, warm her up, work her and build her up before he even touched the good stuff. But right now she was already worked up and more than willing to have a quickie in the alley. She was just so damn surprised it was her man doing the pushing.

A second later, tongue. His tongue found her folds and spread her open before running up to stroke her clit. He didn’t take long with that either. She had her hands in his blonde hair, her claws circling his head, and just held on while the man buried her pussy in kisses. His one hand kept her skirt up to her hip, and the other stroked up and down her thigh.

And those fingers of his were already getting wet. Her juices were starting to drip down the inside of her legs, to the point she was embarrassed. All he had to do was touch her these days and she'd get wet if she was blushing life, but tonight she was a soaking wet mess.

Those fingers of his found her cunt, and he sank them up into her while he lifted his lips up further to suckle on her clit. That's when she started mewling.

“Hey what's ... oh my.”

A couple. She'd heard them coming, but it took everything she had to even glance their way instead of staring down at the man between her legs.

“Julias ... some ... kine are...”

“Honey? What's ... um...” The husband. Beatrice could see the subtle twinkle of a ring on his finger, and the woman's.

A couple in their early thirties, wearing nice clothes and nice perfume and nice cologne. Beatrice could smell just the touch of it mixed with alcohol.

“Julias, come on, they're – nng!” Her man didn't stop. He only started to finger her harder, until the noise of sloshing flesh was audible. They could probably hear every splash of her juices on Julias's palm.

She looked at them. They looked at her. They couldn't see much, in all the dark, but they could certainly see her silhouette, and the man eating her out.

And they just kept looking at each other. The two kine were tipsy, and from the way they touched hips, held hands, and looked between each other, were quite aroused themselves. Perhaps they too had come to the alley for a quicky, or were just on their way home for a good fuck. But she could smell the arousal on them, growing. The woman's nipples were hard against her dress, and the man's dick was hard against his pants.

As much as she wanted to look down at the big guy opening her up and making her squeak, she couldn't look away from the two kine staring at her. They weren't going away. Maybe they were waiting for her to say something? Maybe they were just shocked. But the two of them just stood there with quickening heartbeats.

She motioned for them to come closer.

They were hesitant, but they did come closer. The woman was a curvy blonde creature, short with large breasts, wearing a black dress with a plunging neck. Her husband was a black man with very short hair, stubble, and the sort of glasses a powerful lawyer might wear. He didn't have the shoulder span or height of Julias, but he looked fucking delicious.

And both of them were licking their lips watching her.

Julias managed a quick peak at the onlookers, but she put both her hands on his head again and turned him to face her. Don't stop. He grinned up at her, and fingered her faster, harder, hard enough to hurt. His tongue pressed harder and harder, until that was painful too, but the man knew what she liked. Sometimes she liked it soft, and slow, and lovey dovey and all that crap. And other times, like right the fuck now, she wanted those fingers slapping against her g-spot hard enough to make her body shake against the wall.

"She's wearing a veil. That's so exotic," the wife said.

For a split moment, Beatrice almost panicked that they could see her. But the veil hid her teeth and the darkness did too. She was free to just indulge in a set of eyes watching her.

“Yeah, I ... damn.” The man was staring right at her. Like, right at her. The woman was looking a lot at everything, at Julias between her spread legs and at the dress Beatrice was wearing and at the way Julias was making her move and mewl, but the man was just staring at her eyes.

She looked right back at him with her snake eyes, and came.

Julias had to grip her ass and thigh hard with his other hand just to keep her from falling. His lips finally let go of her clit but he only fingered her harder, hard enough that her clit hood piercing bounced against her swollen flesh while more of her juices leaked out of her. More moans forced their way out of her, and she had to brace her claws to the wall behind her to keep from falling.

“Julias, wait ... wait ... please.”

Finally, the man stopped, and he looked up to her with a tilted head. He managed a small smirk at the two humans watching, but his eyes were drawn back to her.

“Hey,” he said, “you want to try something?”

---

~~Julias~~

It was the most luxurious bathroom in his mansion. A moderately large room, with candles on the walls – all lit now – in bronze candle holders. The floor was hardwood, cabinets and dressers rested against the wall in many numbers, covered in even more towels, oils, and all sorts of things a Kindred would not need. A kine on the other hand would consider it a paradise of pampering.

The tub in the center of the room was equally impressive. Large, long, with an old style faucet on the side out of the way. And now that he thought about it, Viktor probably had this exact circumstance many times. A couple of kine, naked, under the spell of his dominate discipline and ready to give their blood the moment he asked for it. But he didn't ask for it yet, and instead just laid there in the tub with his arms hooked over edge.

“Valerie. Jonathan.”

They looked happy, excited even. Whenever he looked in a different direction, he could tell they were sneaking touches on each others bodies, and he could not blame them. Valerie was a short, curvy blonde creature with teardrop, heavy breasts and swollen, large nipples. She would frequently have her hand around Jonathan's member, and her husband would sneak kisses onto the tiny woman's neck. He was a bit skinny, but certainly nothing unhealthy. A lean man with a bit of muscle to make it look sexy.

He met their eyes. They met his. They were under his control, but unlike his sire Viktor, his control would be gentle; he had no desire to crush them and reduce them to mindless pawns. Instead he would bend their minds and memories only enough that they would enjoy the night with gusto, and then forget all about it tomorrow.

“Please,” he said, and motioned for them to step closer to the side of the huge tub, “wait to start touching each other. It would be rude to Miss Damor.”

“Fucking eh!”

Beatrice stepped into the room, completely naked. In the light of the room, and with her standing around naked, Julias got to take a long look at her tattoos. He did absolutely love how fit and lean her body was, with muscle and thick legs. Better yet, he loved how that large snake tattoo coiled around her stomach, her abs, and up her body before it coiled one of her breasts and bit into her nipple. He had traced that snake many times.

Both the kine whistled, Beatrice practically glowed with pride; it must have been the first time a kine had ever admired her with her face exposed. It was part of the reason Julias had made her this offer.

“Like what you see?” she said, and she plucked at her pert breasts with her claws. She’d put on some of her piercings again, not all of them, but a lot of them. In particular, she’d put on a nipple chain, which she seemed rather fond of, and she plucked at the heavy thing so it made her breasts bounce for a moment with its shaking weight.

Valerie took a step around the tub toward her. “Wow ... you’re so fit!”

“Anything to say about my teeth?” Beatrice reached up and plucked at her huge crocodile teeth that she had where a normal person’s cheeks would be.

The husband stepped up behind his wife. “Terrifying ... but strangely hot.”

Julias couldn’t help but laugh; the man had guts. He’d nailed Beatrice perfectly, but his tongue might land him in hot water with his vicious girlfriend. She laughed though, and walked to the nude couple.

Then she put one of her clawed hands on Valerie’s breast, gave it a gentle squeeze, and did the same thing with her other hand around Jon’s cock. The two of them went rigid for a moment, maybe a little scared of the deadly creature, but Julias’s mind control made sure they were both acclimated to the scary claws and teeth of a Nosferatu. Instead of panicking or running, the two of them squirmed a little, obviously aroused, and did nothing to remove her hands.

Beatrice looked at Julias, and smiled the most playful smile, like a kid with a new toy. Like a kid with a new Christmas toy, on the magic of Christmas morning, was probably the better comparison. It occurred to Julias that not only was this the first time she'd ever shown her teeth to a human, but also the first time she'd ever engaged in sexual fun like this with a human. It was something Julias had taken for granted so long ago, but Beatrice had lost the option when she was embraced.

She really was a kid on Christmas morning with her new toys. It made him a little sad that the Nosferatu had been denied one of the very few pleasures Kindred normally had: to do with kine whatever sexual whim came to them. But it also made him happy he could give it to her.

Beatrice walked over to the tub, leaned over it, and dangled her nipple chain in front of Julias so it touched his chest hair. "Thanks."

He winked at her. She rolled her eyes.

"Hey," she said, and motioned for the two kine to come near. "Come here, get down on your knees, and eat me out."

The married couple were more than happy to oblige. They got behind her, Beatrice spread her legs while still leaning over the tub, and a moment later two humans were on their knees between her thighs. Julias took a glance over her arm to see that delicious toned ass of hers, and from the angle, he could tell Valerie was licking her ass and Jon was licking her pussy. So blatantly erotic, but Beatrice just kept leaning over the tub and smiling at him, even as the telltale signs of arousal crept onto her face again.

"Enjoying yourself?" Julias said.

“Fucking ... yes I am.” She leaned in closer, and touched her lips to his. “They’re ... so warm. I can smell their blood, and ... feel their warmth. Christ.” She lowered her head then, set it to rest on his shoulder, and the further arm reached down to grab his cock through the water. Her claws, large and sharp, wrapped his girth and guided it into her softer palm and fingers, before she started to stroke it in slow, deep movements.

Her grip was a little shaky, what with two people devouring everything between her legs, but she made it work. He had both hands free though, and he raised one to cup her nearest breast. He was already getting hard, and the feeling of her pert breast filling his palm, along with the heavy chain dangling over the palm’s side, was speeding the process even more.

And there was the look in her snake eyes, that look of sexual bliss. God he loved to watch her when those green snake eyes with their vertical black slits raised in pleasure. She squeezed him harder, and for a moment he was worried she’d slip and cut him open, but the Nosferatu was an expert with those claws. No harm, no foul, she kept stroking him and squeezing him and letting out quiet moans in front of him until he was so hard he’d thought he’d burst.

“Valerie ... that lube over there ... prepare my man. Jon, prepare me.”

“Yes mistress,” they both said.

The look of glee on Beatrice’s face was so precious, Julias almost laughed. But, better to just smile at her, and savor the expression.

Both kine came back with bottles of lube. It was rather expensive stuff, silicone based and made for working under water. Val stood next to him, and waited with a huge blush on her cheeks. She was staring down through the water at his naked form, and how Beatrice was still stroking him.

Julias stood up, and Val groaned. She filled her palms with the thick liquid, reached out, and grabbed his girth with both hands when Beatrice let go. The Ventrue grinned down at his victim, and reached out to put an arm around her. The short woman shivered, and smiled up at him with that delirious look of overwhelming arousal. She exchanged a quick grin with her husband before she started to spread the lube onto his cock. And when she was done, she didn't stop.

“Hey you, you better not ... fucking ... nng.” Beatrice gripped the tub with both hands and let her head sink. Her ass was in the air, legs spread, and Jon was scooping his fingers into her. She must have guided him a moment before, because from what Julias could see, Jon was working the lubricant into her ass.

Valerie pouted but let go. “Sorry Mistress, he's just so ... big. I want to squeeze him.”

“Heh, I know right? But hands off.” She brought the backside of a claw down on Val's hands like a gentle punishment.

Beatrice was warming up to having her own servants like it was second nature. All the things that Julias did but had lost a taste for, Beatrice was doing for him. When he had finally moved on from having to leave his wife behind a century ago, it had been a slow, tortured walk back into a sex life. And he never really embraced using his powers to indulge in it. Beatrice, on the other hand, was eating it up.

She really had that spark.

“You, back in the tub,” she said, and pointed down.

Julias grinned at her, but did as she said. The lubricant held against water well. And the tub was deep, very deep, so deep it went up to his chest with him leaning back against its curved edge. It was a tub designed to sit in while someone else washed you. But Beatrice had other things in mind.

“Ok, that’s enough,” she said to Jon. Her face had that rush of arousal on it again, and grinned it at Julias as she stepped around the tub. “Gonna be a tight fit.”

“I’ll slide back and—”

She stepped into the tub. It really wasn’t made for two people, but she put her feet down by his waist, straddling, and lowered herself facing him. Her claws found his cock, guided it upward, and she squatted down onto him through the water.

The imagery was amazing. He reached out, set his hands on her waist, and watched the lean warrior ease herself down onto him with one set of his claws around his cock and the other gripping his shoulder. With her leaning forward over him, her nipple chain slid down his chest the lower she got, and with her flexibility, she wasn’t going to stop. The head of his member rested against the rose of her ass, loose from Jonathan’s fingers, and with the ludicrous amount of lube used on both of them, it wasn’t long before the glans of his cock started to spread her open.

He could still see the sparkle of her clit piercing through the water.

“Is ... that going to fit?” Val asked. Jon had stepped behind her again, and his hands were holding her stomach.

Beatrice only managed a quick glance at Val before her eyes rolled upward. “Fucking tight. Fucking ... so tight.”

It was. Julias was a well endowed man, and that usually meant anal sex was too difficult to make worth it. But the monster straddling him felt differently. She squeezed the rings of her ass in spurts around him, and sank him in just a little more between each squeeze. Her fake breath came out in pants the deeper he went, and her grip on his shoulder tightened.

“Julias ... knows better ... than to ... just pound a girl. Right Superman?” She fell forward then, put her face against his chest turned to the side, and held onto his arms with both of hers as she kept getting deeper. “Anal sex like this? Slow ... deep ... with a big cock? Just ... so fucking deep until ... you can feel it ... pushing against your belly.”

At last, the firmness of her toned ass found the groove of his hips. She sank into him, shook on him a little, and then leaned back to hook her arms around the back of the tub. He did the same.

Just two vampires, leaning back in the tub, facing each other, with their two kine bloodbags ready to do their bidding while the two vampires made love.

Careful Julias. Love was a dangerous word, especially to a Kindred. He would hold onto it for now, and with time and a gentle touch, lay bits of it before Beatrice like a trail of candy. He did not want to scare the beautiful creature with any sudden, poetic, and likely sappy declarations of amour.

Beatrice let out a low groan, and wiggled her ass up and down a little against him. Just the sight of her bare, exposed pussy shifting around above where his cock spread open her ass was enough to get his juices rising. With how her muscles squeezed around the base of him, and with how the woman clearly knew just how to bend her body, it was going to be a short-lived bout.

But then she stopped moving, just leaned back, and relaxed against the tub.

“Hey,” Julias said, and put his hands down on her hips. He started to move her, but she reached into the water and poked at his hands with her claws.

“Nope nope. You’re going to just sit there, balls-deep in my ass, and watch.”

That watching fetish of hers. No doubt, if he had controlled a dozen kine and had them stand around to watch, it would have driven the Nosferatu creature into a sex frenzy.

But he liked to watch her, and it was delightful.

She gave him a little mercy, moved around danced on his cock for him in gentle motions. Then she tapped a claw twice on the tub to get the kine’s attention, and motioned for them to come near.

“You, massage,” she said, and pointed at Jon and then to her shoulders. “You, massage.” This time she pointed at Val, and then down through the water to her cunt. “You.” She pointed at him this time. “Hold still and enjoy it.”

And then the display began. It took all his willpower to let go of her hips and instead put his hands on the tub side, but the payoff was amazing. When Jon started to dig his fingers into Beatrice’s shoulders and upper back, the woman melted down onto Julias so her ass sank onto him as far as it could possibly go. It was when Val reached down, and started massaging the lips of Beatrice’s slit though, that Julias started gripping the tub just so he didn’t let go.

He could feel her muscles squeezing in spurts. She started to shift her hips back and forth in timing with the set of fingers working the outside of her pussy, and Julias was forced to watch and feel it but not allowed to participate. He really, really wanted to take her hips and start fucking her, but Beatrice wanted to lay back and let their servants take care of them. It was really cute.

Val was almost drooling while staring down at Beatrice's body. "You're so lean! You have abs..."

"And amazing breasts." Jon lowered his hands down Beatrice's body, slipped his fingers underneath the Nosferatu's breasts, and cupped them in his palms. His index fingers and thumbs massaged and tickled along her areola, and every so often plucked at the piercing to draw the nipple outward slightly.

Beatrice just basked in the attention. Julias could see that pampered princess look on her face, and it was a little weird with how her crocodile mouth was drifting open and exposing her extra long tongue. She was a monster getting treated like royalty and she was already loving it. Her head drifted back and came to rest against Jon's chest while the man continued to massage her breasts.

For a moment, Julias felt jealous. It was never really his thing to dominate kine like this and have them pamper him, but seeing how Beatrice was enjoying it was making him wonder. She was being treated like a queen. Maybe she was the more Ventrue of the two of them. The thought made him smile.

Jealousy faded when Val started to massage Beatrice's clitoris, and the Nosferatu started to squeeze and squirm and mewl. The double rings of muscle around the base of his cock milked at him, like a vice, but it was how Beatrice arched her back and pushed her body down against him that was stroking his swollen glans inside her. Each motion she made made her insides rub the head of his cock and send little pleasure waves down his length in rhythm with her movements.

Val reached down through the water with her other hand, and pushed down on Beatrice's flat stomach right below the navel, feeling for Julias's cock through the vampire's abs. "... that's so deep."

Julias groaned. He could feel Val's hand pushing down.

“Very. Feels like he’s in my stomach. I just ... gotta ... move ... slowly.” Beatrice gripped the tub edges for support, and danced her pelvis back and forth on Julias, all while the two kine massaged every sensitive bit she had. “Thankfully, Julias has one of those big dicks that doesn’t get super hard.”

Julias frowned. “Hey!”

“Hush you.” Beatrice raised her feet this time, and put them on his chest. The claws of her toes, almost big enough to be talons, grazed against his skin.

Then she squeezed him some more, outright moaned, and Julias winced. He could feel her tremble around him in orgasm, even as her head rolled back into Jon’s chest again and her feet rubbed against Julias’s chest. It hurt a little, how tight she was squeezing him, but seeing her cumming and squirming while having her pussy massaged and his cock in her ass made it more than worth it.

Val slipped her fingers inside Beatrice, and giggled with exhilaration. “Master, I can ... feel you inside her.”

The cliché dialogue alone was making Julias smirk, but Beatrice was loving it. The Nosferatu raised her feet off of his chest, hooked her ankles on the sides of the tub, and started shifting herself back and forth an inch against him. And that felt good, really good. He so very much wanted to touch, but no touch. No, he was going to just watch, and let his princess cum her brains out on him.

He could feel his own cum started to build underneath his cock. The warm, almost subtle sparks of pleasure that told him his fluids were rising. Watching Beatrice getting fingered and massaged by strangers was a little odd at first, but seeing her cum yet again with him inside her firm ass was more than enough to get over that hurdle.

“And your piercings.” Jon’s hands hadn’t stopped massaging her breasts, and every so often he stopped just for a second, to give her nipple chain a few playful tugs.

Julias smiled. His instructions to his two slaves of the night were simple: enjoy the sex, do whatever Beatrice asked, and pamper her. It was written into their minds now, like a hypnotic suggestion; they couldn’t do otherwise. He was just a bit surprised at how much Beatrice was enjoying it. Like Egyptian royalty, just laying back and letting her slaves feed her, stroke her, fuck her, make her cum. Her life as a human must have been one of attention and rich vice. People must have fawned over her.

Well, he was happy to do just that for her.

His cock was getting harder. The rising pleasure of impending orgasm was starting to send that warm, thick liquid up between his legs, ready to escape. Every instinct told him to start pushing up into her, but she wanted to edge him toward orgasm, and the slow pace of it was dragging out each wave of pleasure. The way her ass grinded against him, the way her hips shifted around like a belly dancer, was driving him closer. The way she started to bounce when Val stopped being gentle and started to finger fuck her hard was euphoric.

He came. He couldn’t keep his fingers away anymore, and they slipped into the water to hold onto her hard thighs while he came. His groans were quiet, and his movements were subtle, but no matter how much he tried, he couldn’t help but push up into her, just a little, with each squirt of his thick cum.

“Hey you,” Beatrice said, voice barely more than a moan. “Cumming? Fuck man that is ... so...” She stretched out her arms and legs over the tub edge in a big, whole body stretch, and then let herself sink against him again while Val fingered her cunt yet again.

It wasn't long before he could feel her clench around him and start trembling with orgasm again. The stimulation was painful. His cock was swollen, and had just finished gushing cum into her when she started to grind her body into him again. The head of his member was ripe, hard, and her shifting and squeezing and squirming was milking every last drop from it.

But at last, she collapsed back, and reached down to remove Val's hand. "... fucking ... love ... to cum like that."

"Was it good, mistress?" Jon asked.

The Nosferatu reached up with her other hand and stroked the man's face, then took his hands off her breasts with gentle claws. "Yeah, you got nice hands. Must play with your wife's breasts every day."

Val giggled. Julias watched. The difference between the harsh, aggressive woman he met in the catacombs versus the woman before him now, kind and relaxing in post orgasm with kine pampering her, was huge. Hell, she was full-on smiling.

Beatrice took the edge of the tub in hand, and wiggled herself off of Julias. He moaned with how the rings of her sphincter muscles squeezed along the length of him. She did it on purpose he realized, when she gave him a grin. Her legs were a bit shaky though, and she had to hold onto the tub for a few moments before she could step out.

"If I didn't know any better, Miss Damor, I'd think you were Daeva, with your thralls tending to your every sexual whim." He stood up as well, and stepped out of the tub after her.

"Heh, guilty." The monster stepped around Jon, and standing behind him, she peaked her eyes up over his shoulder at Julias. "It's so much fun though. I had no idea. Enjoying yourself Jon?" She wrapped her claws around the kine's member, and right in front of Julias, started to stroke the meal's cock.

"Y-yes," he said. A little afraid, sure, but it certainly wasn't affecting his erection.

Was she trying to make him jealous? Well, two can play at that game. He stepped around the tub to Val, and got behind the short, busty woman. She looked up at him with big doe eyes, and he grinned a dark, vampire grin down at her. That alone was enough to get her trembling.

One hand reached down for neck, and his fingers enclosed it in a gentle grip; her blood was pumping hard, fast. His other hand reached down in front of her, and plucked at a swollen nipple. Val mewled. His hand went lower, creeping down her stomach before finding her pelvis, and eventually down between her legs. Her thighs were soaked.

She had all the signs of a woman who liked to be dominated and controlled. Julias preferred a woman who liked to take charge, like Beatrice, but there was still something appealing in taking charge himself. Something primal, and satisfying, in making someone cum on your hands, whether they wanted to or not. Val was melting in his grip, her dainty grip on his wrists, and her cunt boiling against his fingers.

He tightened his grip around her neck, just hard enough to make breathing a little difficult, just hard enough to slow the blood reaching her head. Her breaths turned into tiny pants, and they grew even shallower when he slipped two fingers into her dripping insides.

Beatrice and Jon were both watching him. Her hand around his cock was working faster, and the look on Jon's face was obvious: he was going to cum soon. Jon's eyes lowered to Val's, but Beatrice kept looking at Julias. Jon was taller than her, so it was just her eyes peaking over his shoulder at him, but that didn't stop her from grinning at him with those snake eyes, and stroking faster.

Val tightened her grip on Julias's wrist, but only because the poor creature had already started to cum. "J-Jon," she said, but her hips were pushing into Julias's hand, and her juices were dripping from his knuckles.

Then Julias leaned down, and bit into the woman.

"No ... nooo..."

The result was explosive, as it always was. He'd made so many women go through this, fingers on their insides and teeth in their neck. The combination of orgasm and the Kiss, for the kine, always had the most powerful result, to the point the kine would shake in spasm, no longer able to stand, and their noises would completely stop from lack of breath. Val was no different, and he had to hold onto her tighter just to keep her from falling as the orgasm worked through her. The mix of orgasm and Kiss even changed the taste of blood with the wash of hormones.

Beatrice did the same. It was her first time treating a kine such a way, Julias was sure, and he didn't want to miss it. He watched her stroke the kine faster, and watched how she had to wrap her arm around the man's chest to keep him from also collapsing when she sank her fangs into him. Cum came out of the man in thick bursts, and splattered over the floor of the grand bathroom.

Jon started to lean forward with exhaustion, but Beatrice pulled him back, and she milked his cock with a grip Julias knew all too well. Soon the kine's cum was dripping off her knuckles, and she slowed her strokes, but she was determined to milk the man, even as she milked more blood from him. He could see it in her eyes; it was the first time she'd ever drunk blood from a kine in orgasm.

Eventually, both kine were spent. Julias removed his fangs from Val, loosened his grip, and set the woman to lay down on the floor. She'd passed out, as many kine did after a full Kiss. Beatrice mimicked him, and set the husband down like a feather.

“Holy ... shit ... it tasted different.” Standing there, naked, body flush with the bliss of the Kiss, it was as if all sexual arousal had been rekindled. If she wanted, and if Julias had wanted, they could have gotten back in the tub and had sex a couple more times then.

But, he was content to step up behind her, place his hands on her stomach, and put his chin on her head.

She leaned back into him, even as she took a towel from a hook off the faucet and started wiping the kine's cum from her fingers. “No wonder all you fuckers create harems and just fuck and drink all the time. That was great.”

“Daeva in particular grow quite addicted to it.”

“Think ... think next time we could get like ... more?” She looked up at him over her shoulder, and gave what he was sure was her best attempt at little girl begging eyes.

It just made him laugh. “How many do you want?” Maybe he'd regret opening this avenue of vice to her.

“Fucking ... like, get a fucking dozen. All guys. I want to try a full on orgy, you know? Something I never did when I was alive. A bunch of dicks all just lined up and ready to cum in me and on me.”

She grinned. Fuck, she was playing with him. Or was she serious? Probably both.

He knocked her skull a bit with his chin. “How about we start small? Maybe ... three guys?”

Her eyes went wide. “You’re going to spoil the shit out of me.”

~~Natasha~~

Natasha sat alone, in her apartment, in front of her laptop.

She took a moment to consider that. Alone, surrounded by quiet darkness, her face lit up by the light of a computer screen. Perfectly at home.

On her laptop were pictures of Vivienne — blurry of course. Her childe had been rarely seen since joining the Lancea et Sanctum, with only the occasional sighting. That’s how it had been for many of their group, once proud members of Tony’s anti-covenant ways and now hiding in the city holes of the dead elder’s memories.

Vivienne. They had been good friends, when the girl had been hired to work the books at Xnomina. She was just a human, shy, small, a mirror to Natasha. When Natasha revealed the truth, about vampires, Vivienne had digested the information with cold practicality. It was a trait Natasha could understand. It was not long before she had sired the girl.

Vivi was the closest thing she had to a friend. No, that wasn’t true. Jessy was her best friend, and Vivi was her childe. There was always that to connect them, and separate them. Something like a mother and child, but not quite. Never quite explainable, except as sire and childe.

Her mind drifted back to the ball. It had ended abruptly, once Lucas had left.

She shivered. Lucas. She had never seen a Mehket who could stand up for himself with words, to a crowd, to enemies. The way he had confronted the Prince with calm, controlled points was beyond admirable. No wonder so many were flocking to him.

She thought of Julius and Beatrice. Miss Damor. Yet another detail she had missed. Madame Turio couldn't be thinking of her in very high regard, at the moment, with the information her right hand kept missing. How had that Nosferatu shark-mouth seduced a man like Julius? Jack had said she was his spark, and she could understand that to a point. Julius carried a weight of sadness with him, he always had since she'd known him, and Beatrice was the first Kindred she had ever seen put a real smile on the man's face.

She bet they were fucking, right now. Julius had probably dominated a few kine, and they were having an orgy, plugging all of Beatrice's holes and making a mess of cum everywhere before the two vampires drank themselves full. Yeah, she was jealous.

It made Natasha's withered insides ache. Kindred were such stupid creatures, lone predators who craved companionship like any kine did. A cosmic joke. She wanted someone to hold in her little arms. Someone to make her smile. Someone she could have genuine, deep one-on-one conversations with. Someone she could enjoy exploring all sorts of sexual kinks with, if at least quietly. The ball had introduced no one. Maybe she would have to find a ghoul, and indulge her need for a little contact that way? Maybe a few ghouls, so she could indulge her more ridiculous kinks?

The door knocked.

"Jessy?" No response. Natasha mumbled, got up, and headed for the door. She talked as she opened it. "Jessy, you—"

"Hello my dear." It was Lucas, and Damien. The two were just standing there, arms folded together under their robes on their chests.

"Uh ... um..." She started to back away. She was in shorts and a t-shirt, her sword was in another room, as was her pistol. No way to defend herself.

Panic flooded her, but she forced it down. She wasn't a fledgling, she was a right hand of the Invictus. Don't panic. Don't let the the ancient elder at your door make you panic.

She inched her way toward her bedroom. "You can't ... touch me. The Invictus won't allow it."

They both stepped in. Damien looked sad, but Lucas smiled. "Madame Turio knows how to play the game well, Miss Vola. Come with us. Your life will be spared."

"Maria ... she..." Betrayed? What? He said her life would be spared, but then why did they break into her apartment building to come for her? Did they even have to break in? Did Maria let them in?

Too many questions! Too much risk. She had to get away, had to get out.

"... um, wait, hold on..."

"Please, Miss Vola, if you do not come with us then I am afraid we will have to make you," Lucas said. He walked after her, a gentle smile on his face. From so close, she could see the final details of his oddly colored robes, and she could smell just a touch of the weird fabric's ancient origin. Skin?

"You c-can't expect me t-t-t-t-t ... to just ... come."

Then Lucas's smile faded. "Very well." From beneath his gentle gaze rose stern eyes, a harsh glare, and a deep anger that had her trembling. "Damien, take her."

Damien was next to her, between her and the door. She hadn't seen him move! Fast. So fast. Faster than her. He wasn't this fast when she had shot him.

“How did you—”

The stake hit her heart fast enough that, when she looked down, she couldn't really understand that there was a piece of wood sticking out of her chest. It took a moment for the paralysis to kick in, just long enough that she could look back up and at Damien.

He looked so sad.

Chapter 21

~~Jack~~

The drive back to the Prince's tower in Elysium was terrifying.

He didn't say a word. She didn't say a word. They both sat in silence in her limousine while one of her bewitched kine drove them. The woman behind the wheel, Jack noticed, was visibly nervous and made sure to keep her words short, concise, and polite. Perhaps she had never seen Antoinette angry? Her hands were shaking and stuck at the two and ten.

Jack had never seen the Prince angry, not really, and being in the limousine with her felt like being trapped in a shark cage with the shark. She looked out the window, but the beast aura she radiated crushed down against Jack with enough weight he felt his own beast being forced down into his bowels. Is this how ancient civilizations felt, when a great storm was upon them, and they all assumed they were suffering the wrath of their mighty and fickle gods?

When he dared to look at her red eyes, he had to look away quickly. She never broke her gaze from the window, but just seeing the fury in her face was enough to strike him still. Like a stake through the heart, paralyzed.

It didn't get much better once they arrived at her glass tower. The lone receptionist gave them a nod, but the man was quick to also notice the anger pouring out of every motion of the Prince. He looked away, and resumed typing with the softest but fastest typing Jack imagined possible.

And with how Antoinette was stomping forward, she didn't even check behind her to see if Jack was following. But, she'd taken him from the ball, so, into the lion's den.

They went down, and down, down the black marble of the basement levels of her great tower, past the multiple levels of complex, interwoven layers of her underground facilities, and down toward the giant vault door.

She opened it with enough snap to her movements, Jack was sure she would rip the huge thing from the wall before it slid open, and she stepped inside.

“In.” Her words left no room for debate, or even a word of his own. Absolute obedience was his only option. He looked down, afraid, almost trembling, and stepped past her into the room.

He had never heard someone slam a giant vault door before, and the way it rung metal in the room created a weird roar of vibration.

“I will kill him! Kill him! I will rip out his throat, remove his limbs, and let the sun take him! I will roast his screeching body over fire! I will grind his bones into powder and – you, sit!”

He squeaked, and sat down on the edge of her giant bed. Antoinette paced back and forth in front of him, fists clenched, and when her shoes failed to handle her stomping well, she took them into her hands and threw them at the wall so hard they flattened.

“I will open his gut and pull out each foot of his insides and feed them to him while I burn his testicles with a blow torch!” She turned then, and punched the wall. A wall of solid marble, but she punched it, and the wall cracked open for several feet in several directions. The impact forced her back several feet across the floor, but her stance did not waver, she just slid. Bruce Lee would have been jealous.

“ ... Antoi—”

“What!?” She threw her gaze at him then, and he had to dig into every fiber of his being to not crumble like her shoes.

“A-Antoinette, I ... do you ... want to be alone?”

“Yes! But I will not let you leave the tower. That monster, that delusional sadist will do whatever it takes to ruin me, to destroy me, to tear away at everything I care for and he will start with those I care for.” She walked over to him, and he pulled away onto the bed a few feet to give her room while she started to stomp back and forth in front of him. “Not this time. I will not let him this time. Ashley and Julee rest within their private quarters, and there they shall stay as well until this madness is over.”

Not this time?

He opened his mouth, stopped himself, and considered. She said she wanted to be alone, she didn't want him here, but wanted to keep him safe. And from the way she was moving, his question would be poking the bear with a hot iron.

“ ... what did Lucas do to you?”

He never was good with people.

She came to a stop, and turned to face him with heavy, slow steps. Her fists did not relent, and her eyes were wide with frenzy. She came closer, until her knees were touching the edge of the bed, and her great height cast a shadow over him.

And then he forced himself to look her in the eye. Terrified, trembling, probably would have pissed himself if he could, fucking scared to a second death, but he looked her in the eyes and kept it. He actually started to shake like a petrified, injured animal, with how intense her gaze was. Was that all he was to her right now? Just a scared mouse?

Well, fuck that, he wasn't going to just leave her to her misery, not after everything that had happened. “I can't ... even begin to understand what you're going through and angry about. It's beyond me. But I can listen."

"Understand? Listen? You are not even a year embraced!" She put both hands onto the bed and leaned toward him. Her fangs were bared, like some sort of cat ready to tear him open. "Decades, decades I worked to remove that filth! People were killed! My ... my..."

With agonizing minutes, Antoinette calmed down. He was sure they were staring at each other for years, and all he could do was try his best to not panic or crumble as he tried to smile. A sad, pathetic smile of a scared young man, but he gave it to her nonetheless. He expected a punch, maybe a harsh verbal beating, but she kept his own gaze and slowly released her fists. Her steel gaze softened, her shoulders slumped, and her mouth parted.

"You would ... you would tempt fate so?" she said.

Now she was the one who look shattered.

He gulped on nothing, inched across the bed toward her, reached out, and took her hand. She let out a small cough, as if she was holding back a sob, and gripped his fingers with her own once they were intertwined. She even tried to pull away with a weak, half-hearted effort, but he kept her hand in his, and tugged on it. Her attitude had changed as quickly as wind.

"I am sorry, my little Ventrue. What have I done, I ... must seem so horrible."

"Not horrible! Just angry. Come on, you're beautiful. Scary, terrifying even, but beautiful."

His dumb words managed to pull a chuckle from her. They held hands, like a lovey-dovey couple, and she even rubbed her thumb against his. After a while, she sat down beside him, and leaned over to rest her tilted head atop his. He could still feel rage pouring out of her, but undertones of mourning and sadness joined it.

“Ashley and Julee are precious to me. They are close friends who I share my feelings with, gossip with, and blood with.” She talked, kept her head on his, and continued to stroke his thumb with hers. “Do you understand?”

“Y-yeah, I think so.”

“Lucas is one of many branches of the Lancea et Sanctum beliefs and doctrines. His particular views are very ... anti-relationships with kine. His belief is that kine and Kindred are to be kept separate, and that you must not lay with them. He made an example ... of ... the ghouls I...”

He squeezed her hand. He didn't need to hear anymore, he got it. Lucas killed her ghouls.

The thought sounded so plain in his head, but when he pictured Ashley or Julee being killed – in very likely a horrific manner – just to hurt Antoinette? That gave the image weight, context, and it made his insides burn.

“There were others, Kindred too. Lucas sacrificed and tortured and ... it was not just a war for him. It was a holy crusade.”

Pictures started to form. Torture on Kindred? The sort of things you could do to a vampire before they died were limitless.

“I'm sorry that ... yeah. I didn't know. Julias never really went into the details and ... yeah.”

“It is fine, little Ventrue.” She lifted her head, and looked around with a weird expression, like she were checking to see if they were safe, before she pulled herself up further onto the bed. In the center of it, she reached out, plucked Jack up like he weighed nothing, and set him down laying beside her, away from her.

She'd grown quite fond of the large spoon position, apparently. Her arms wrapped around him, her fingers squeezed his, and she just held him to her.

“The sun will be up soon,” he said.

“Yes.”

“Um, should we—”

“Just ... do not leave the tower, Jack. Until Lucas is dealt with, please, stay here.” Her grip tightened until he was squished against her breasts. They were still both dressed in their ball clothes, but the Prince didn't seem to mind. She even slipped a leg over his, and held him down.

She was terrified.

It hurt to see her so afraid. To see her afraid at all was barely something he could wrap his mind around, but she was clutching him like a girl and her teddy bear.

“I'll stay ... as long as you want.”

---

He awoke in her arms.

The jolt of Kindred vitae pumping through his corpse woke him with a startle, like it always did, but Antoinette's grip was still on him, and she woke with grace.

“It will be a sad night. Knowing my little Ventrue is here waiting for me will make me eager to end my affairs, but my affairs are many, and important.”

“Very understandable. With Lucas and Dolareido and ... yeah, I can’t even imagine.”

“It is not all horrible, Jack. Before the morning, I will be back, and I will make sure this cage I have forced upon you is a gilded one.” She squeezed him harder, hard enough that he felt her breasts through her dress and his jacket. “When my affairs of tonight are dealt with, you will have me. I do look forward to the warmth of your body upon my breasts.”

Oh god. “Sounds ... wow.” What did he ever do to deserve a woman who enjoyed breast play so much?

“Good.” She gave a chuckle, got up, and headed to the wall on the side of the room. It held a door with a very subtle indent handle, and she slid it open to reveal her changing room. Built so deep into the earth, metal, and marble, it was the most secure changing room on the whole planet probably.

She stripped, sat in front of her mirror, and took the time to apply her make-up, comb her hair, and peruse her selection of dresses. Jack watched, mouth open with how gorgeous the nude creature was when just going through her morning routine.

“Jack, forgive my teasing, but your gaze softens me. I must steel myself for the night’s horrid mess of decisions to come.” She grinned at him, but it didn’t last. The ancient Daeva resumed her dressing, and with no ceremony or dance, put on a power suit for the day.

The whole business of getting ready for her day took her only a few minutes. She put on her mask and her clothes with such efficient speed, she must have been doing it for centuries. The dumb thought made him chuckle; of course she'd been doing it for centuries.

“Hey, Antoinette ... why don't you ever talk about yourself? You know everything about me.”

“I...” She was on the way toward the vault door, but his words stopped her. In fact, they stopped her cold. When she finally did turn around and looked at him, her eyes were torn somewhere between a frown and sadness. “They are painful memories, little Ventrue, as you heard with Lucas.”

“They can't be all bad! Come on, I—”

“Another time, Jack. Please.”

He was pushing his luck, but something about last night's conversation had made him realize something. He knew absolutely nothing about Antoinette except for what Julias had told him, which wasn't much. No knowledge about her tastes, her past – what she remembered of her ancient history anyway – or her hobbies. Did she have hobbies?

“ ... ok.” He forced away his frown. Now was not the time.

Antoinette gave him a small nod, opened the vault door, and left.

Jack watched after her, but did not follow. She probably had business upstairs, in her grand tower of mystery business, and he couldn't exactly walk into that and absorb the secrets.

His mind drifted back to that angry, terrified look she had last night when she locked them both in her room. “Christ those eyes. She looked terrified for me ... for me. Fucking scary, but...” But it had been so powerful, even moving, how she protected him with so much emotion behind it. Like love.

He thumped himself in the temples with both hands before he started to caress his buzzed head. Do I love her? Damn it, now is not the time to get romantic, Jack. Shit was on Antoinette's doorstep and there was a good chance it was going to get on his shoes too.

Too late. The thought was already there. She was holding onto him so tight yesterday, and that look in her eye, like as if the thought of him dead petrified her. Love, or Daeva obsession?

“Does she know how to love?” He paced around in her empty room. “Julias warned me it may be beyond her, with how old she is. But ... those eyes certainly spoke otherwise. I have to dig just to get any information about her though; she won't open up to me. And if I dig too hard I could really piss her off.” Fuck, he wished he'd had some real relationships in his first life, just for a little practice. Antoinette being the first love of his life was like learning how to swim in the deep end of the ocean in a storm.

On the way up and out of the deep vault levels of the tower, he checked his phone for a signal. Finally, after a few floors up and out of the deep bowels of the dragon tower, he dialed his sire. “Julias?”

“Yeah Jack?”

Jack moved the phone away from his face and grimaced down at the device. Beatrice was there, with Julias. He could only wonder what sort of kinks shark-mouth had.

“What's up Jack?” Beatrice again. She must have taken the phone.

“ ... right, wanna tell Julias that I'm going to be staying with the Prince until Lucas is dealt with?” He'd already spilled his guts to her earlier, about Viktor and Tony, no point in worrying about minor shit now.

And then she sent a picture of herself, topless. She was wearing a nipple chain, and grinning the biggest grin, with all her crazy extra teeth on full display. Julias was in the background, face in palm, embarrassed.

Jack took maybe a couple seconds too long looking at the picture. Beatrice was really ripped, and he had to admit, he liked the nipple chain. He put the phone away, rolled his eyes, and walked out in the main lobby of the tower.

All the glass walls scared him. If the sun came out, it would be death no matter where he moved, but Antoinette assured him many of the floors were capable of blocking out sunlight in an emergency. Still, it chilled him right to the bone.

He wandered around. Normally he’d hang out downstairs with the Prince and her ghouls, swim in the pool, browse the internet on a computer between conversations, but none of that really interested him then. It was such a weird situation to be in, just wandering the Prince’s tower while he waited for her to deal with what could become a war.

War. How did vampires fight a war? The act of killing a Kindred was not easy. You either had to burn them in fire or sunlight, cut off the head, or do so much damage that all that was left is pulp. He tried to imagine how you could do that; a fully automatic assault rifle and several clips? A dozen shotgun shells? Or a sword?

He shuddered. The front lines of battle were not for Ventrue. Julias and Viktor were, according to others, unusual for how comfortable they were with combat. Ventrue usually controlled, manipulated, and dominated servants into fighting for them. And he could see the appeal of that, instead of risking your neck.

He wandered toward the front doors of the glass tower. The receptionist – just a kine – gave him a nod, and resumed his work.

“ ... whatcha doing?” Jack said.

The man was a portly fellow, balding, but he had one of those nice faces, and Jack found himself wanting to talk to him.

“Good evening Mister Terry. Organizing the Mistress’s assets; she has a mountain of them.”

Mister Terry. Not his Invictus title, but it was nice to be called Mister anyway, better even.

Assets? So not a receptionist then. Weird, considering he had a circular counter desk in the front of the otherwise empty lobby. “How did you come into the Prince’s employ?”

“Ah! It was thirty years ago. Prince Antoinette was using one of her old disguises, and playing the cello at a concert. I had to meet her, so I got a backstage pass and—”

His voice faded to white noise. Antoinette played the cello? How had he not known? So much, so damn much the ancient vampire never told him. Why so little about herself? He bit down on his teeth just to keep himself from saying something in anger before he focused on the not-receptionist again. Mr. Chunk according to the nameplate on the desk. Really?

“—the few of us got invited back to the glass tower here in Elysium. There’s no way we could say no to a lifetime of servitude. Right? Right?”

Jack thought he was joking for a moment, but Chunk looked at him with awaiting eyes.

“Uh, yeah...” Chunk was another kine under his Antoinette’s spell then. “Cya then Chunk.”

Terry drifted to the back of the tower where the elevators were, and leaned against the marble wall between them. He didn’t know what to do. Cello? She played the cello?

Maybe ... maybe ask her to play for him? He smiled. He would love to hear it. He should ask Ashley and Julee if they knew anything else too.

~~Damien~~

The next night, it was just him and Natasha. He looked down at the woman who had put a bullet through his skull.

It was only the two of them, within the sealed and room of sacred objects. No air or sound could escape. With the door sealed, no one but an elder would be able to escape it. It was a tomb, now that he thought about it, of metal walls and godly artifacts.

He made a small sneer at the girl. At her apartment, she’d been quite surprised at how fast he was; he remembered the look in her eyes when he staked her in the heart. “Because this time I did not underestimate you. I thought you were just a stupid, weak little girl. I should have known better. Stupid stupid stupid.” He turned, and smashed his head into the wall. Pain. Pain was recompense. He couldn’t make mistakes, not before God, not for the Sanctified.

But this whole night was turning into a mistake.

He reached down and removed the stake from her heart. The wound closed quickly, but the stake had left a hole in her shirt. It was the least of her worries. She sat up a moment later in that sudden-but-controlled way Kindred do.

“... you.” She put both hands to the floor and started to push herself away from him. No panic though, he noticed. She was thinking, analyzing the room she was in, just as he would if in the same situation.

“Hello,” he said, and he squatted down in front of her with the sheathe of his sword in hand, tip on the floor, its grip resting against his shoulder. His fingers rotated the sword against his palms.

“What ... what do you want? Why am I here? Where’s here?”

“Deep within the underground network Tony left behind. This is the Archbishop’s alter room.” He made a sweeping gesture to the alter with its artifacts, the couple of lit candles, and the various paintings. “God’s dark little corner of this hellhole.”

The tiny Mehket looked down, then around at the array of Godliness around her. Damien managed a small smirk. She wasn’t panicking, but he could see she wanted to.

“What and why,” he continued, “is because we need to disarm the sheriff. He won’t stop us while we have you.”

Her eyes went wide, and they flickered around in the same way his did when thinking at extreme speeds. Yes, little girl, that’s right, we know.

“... and ... Lucas said ... Maria is letting you d-do this?”

“Indeed. We promised her you would not be harmed.”

“Harmed? What are you ... you’re...”

He nodded, but his smirk vanished. “You will be going with us when we assault the Prince.”

Her eyes opened so wide, he could see far more than he wanted. It hurt. He hated that it hurt.

“B-b-b-but the Prince ... she’ll...”

“We will see, we will see.”

With that, they both went silent. He watched her, she watched him, and like edges of sand in the wind, the tension faded. Just two Mehkets sitting in the dark, thinking, analyzing, just like home. After a while, he got up and began to look around the small room, at the paintings and the artifacts, and the sword on the alter he had touched earlier, Saint Peter’s sword. He dared not touch it again; the images and emotions the ancient relic had scarred him with were terrifying and powerful.

“Damien,” she said. He looked at her, and motioned for her to continue. “D-did Maria, did she ... really just ... betray me?”

He sighed and shrugged. “Lucas talked with her, not I. It is the two of them who care for each other.”

“She betrayed me...” The little girl pulled her legs up to her chest and lowered her face to her knees.

“Your safety was promised.”

“You can’t promise that! If you’re going t-to use me and force Daniel to stand d-d-down, you’ll have to take me there and ... show it.”

“Yes.”

“And ... you’re all just going to ... attack the tower?”

“Yes.”

“That’s insane. Crazy. Lucas is crazy! I read a lot about Lucas, and ... he was always ... brutal. He—”

“Archbishop Lucas was a beacon of purity of God’s purpose, Invictus.”

Natasha blinked at him, like he was speaking insanity. “You ... you’re only as old as me.”

“And?”

“And ... you don’t know. You don’t have access to the records.”

“I know enough!” He stomped toward her, and she cowered backward into the corner. “We serve the church, we serve God. The Prince and Garry and the sheriff, they marched in here and slaughtered the priests, the Bishops, even the faithful who dared stand against them!”

“They d-did that b-b-b-because ... Lucas was taking over, and killing ... everyone.”

He froze. What?

“It’s true,” she continued. “He ... and the Bishops, they ... killed ... a lot of people. They were t-taking over, and ... a lot of Kindred died.”

“Then they must have deserved it.”

“They did not! This was ... it wasn’t what you think, Damien. Your sire was ... slaughtering p-people b-b-b-b- ... before the war began.”

Anger rose up through his body. He slammed the sword down between her legs; he didn’t even remember when he’d drawn it from its sheathe. They locked eyes. She was ready to cry, but like a chipmunk, she scrunched up her face and glared at him.

The tiny girl shook her head. “And ... and now you’re going to ... attack the Prince directly. K-kindred will die. Do you ... do you think Lucas is ... innocent in this?”

He gripped the handle of his sword hard enough to hurt. He wanted to cut her head off right there, but he would not. He needed her, not a pile of ash.

But it wasn’t just that. Truth ate at him, terrible in his gut, cockroaches on his skin, burning behind his eyes. The way her pathetic eyes glared at him with defiance ringed so loud it threatened his mind. He was just a child back then, not yet embraced, and he had looked up to the vampires and even ghouls around him with nothing but envy. Every word Lucas had said, that his Bishops and priests had said, he had absorbed with need.

And it was all falling apart. Was it all an act? Like with how Lucas had spoken with the Prince at the ball, calm and wise. All an act? Fifty years, did he spend fifty years serving a sleeping master only to have such madness greet him? Like a twisted black play, and he was the tragic figure to be undone by his mistake.

He really wished he could stop thinking. Stop analyzing. Stop questioning everything and just accept faith. But dark, disgusting thoughts were laying bits of trail before him and he could not look away. Mehket were creatures of secrets; he gobbled them up and put them together whether he wanted to or not.

“He is—”

The door opened.

“Bishop Damien, how is our prisoner?”

It was Lucas. He had a warm smile on his face, one that reminded Damien of the old days when he had first met the man. Natasha frowned though, and Damien found he had to look away from Lucas's face now. The subtle smirk on his sire's face and twitch of the eye, they were like cracks in a porcelain mask.

"She is ... fine."

"Is she then?" The ancient Mehket got down onto a knee before the tiny woman, and pulled back the hood of his robe. "If you would turn around please? So that we may detain you. The effect of this presentation will be stronger if you are awake, but I will stake you again if I must." The Archbishop produced some black rope, and gave it to Damien.

"How ... d-d-d-d-..."

Her stuttering made Damien grit his teeth. He wanted to slap her hard enough to drive her timid nature out of her skull.

"Speak, child," Lucas said. His warm smile never wavered.

"... How did ... you find out about me."

"Divine intervention!" Lucas got up and raised his hands in a praying manner. "Damien has been my scout for my entire slumber, Miss Vola. He has devoured information about all the covenants, and he has kept an eye on all of you in that time."

"... when ... Daniel visited me."

"Indeed." The Archbishop stepped over to Damien and patted him on the shoulder. "He observed it all. My Bishop has served God well."

Damien smiled, but it was hollow. Natasha looked at him, with a quiet begging in her eyes, but also a glint of awareness. She saw the doubt. She saw the cursed thoughts he could not shake.

He got down next to her, she turned around, and he tied her hands behind her back. The rope was strong, strong enough for Natasha, or any Mehket for that matter. He made sure to use a knot a crafty creature like her could not slip either, something that would have ruined her hands for lack of blood if she were alive.

She said nothing, but looked over her shoulder at him, and stared into his eyes with little bits of fury in her gaze.

He looked away.

~~Julias~~

“Did you just send a topless selfie to my childe?”

“Bah, he’s seen my tits before. Besides, kid probably has his dick between those giant tits the Prince is sporting every night.”

Well, he was certainly happy his childe was enjoying himself, but the image was unneeded.

He reached out for the woman and hugged her closer to him. They were both in the master bedroom, cozy under the ridiculously luxurious blankets, and naked. Beatrice wasn’t even trying to act disgruntled or anything; instead she was snuggled against him with a cat’s grin, rubbing her breasts and nipple chain up and down the side of his torso in teasing circles.

“So,” he said, “I know you’ve been up to something.”

“Oh?”

“Garry tipped me off. Said you were in some shit? And I can see you’ve been rather ... sneaky lately.”

She sat up, smiled a wicked smile, and dragged one of her monster claws up and down his chest. “I have been. It doesn’t have anything to do with you though.”

“Keeping secrets from me?”

“Oh, mountains. I’ve been making friends, moving up in the Danse, but it’s nothing to worry about.”

The wording was weird. Nothing for him to worry about? “Can’t tell me?”

“I could ... I just ... I don’t want to ruin anything. I’m pretty happy and call me paranoid but I’ve had a pretty shitty life up until now. I’d like to stay happy.”

“Same boat.”

“Ha! You’ve been fucking bitches and living in luxury your whole second life.”

“Yeah, but I’ve never been happy with it.” He took her claws in his hand, and his other reached out to caress her cheek. She hated his romantic gestures, but he didn’t care. Right then, just holding her hand and touching her face, brushing her hair aside, even running his finger down her giant extra teeth, it made him happy. “You think I’d give you up?”

“Well ... no.” She tried to ignore his touch, but he was no child. He knew just how to touch her, how to read her expressions to see what she liked, even if she hated that she liked it. “Just, I don’t know, it’s pretty big.”

“Something you can’t tell me because of the Carthians?”

“Ah, uh...”

He stroked her thumb with his. The huge claw that excited where a thumbnail normally would was terrifying in its own right, but he was used to it. Thrilled by it even, with how its sharp tip ran along his chest on its smooth side. Like coaxing a scared animal to him, he just went slow, and continued to slide his fingers along her jawline. “Yeah?”

“Um ... I’m not a Carthian anymore.”

He didn’t see that coming. “ ... really?”

She nodded, and looked away. The expression was hard to read. Embarrassed maybe, but happy? Proud? Like a little girl with a secret, but one she was dying to share.

“I joined the Circle of the Crone.”

Jaw drop. “ ... you’re a witch?”

“I don’t think they like being called that. I’m an Acolyte,” she said. His hand had dropped from her mouth from sheer surprise, and it earned a frown from her. “What do you think?”

“I think ... I think ... I don’t know, honestly. Really, not sure what to think. You work for Jacob?”

“Work for isn’t really what the Circle does, you know? Jacob is the alpha, I guess, but we all sort of ... follow his lead.” Her eyes fell, and she sat up a little straighter, away from him. “Don’t approve?”

“I have no love of Jacob. I can’t deny that.” He sat up with her, but when she tried to pull her hand in his grip away, he did not let go. “But ... tell me about it.”

“Yeah?”

“Yeah. All I know are the hard details, not the experience. And ... you do seem happier, as of late.”

She grinned a huge grin and slid back in closer to him again. “Part of that is because of you, and your stupid white knight bullshit that I can’t seem to shake. And part is because ... life in the Circle just makes so much more sense to me.”

He quirked a brow down at the creature as she pushed her shoulder against him. The Carthians were dangerous, but predictable. Jacob though, he thrived on stirring chaos, just because it served as a culling. The ancient Nosferatu liked to keep the Kindred numbers from growing too large; he wanted them to be few, and strong. If Beatrice was a witch – Acolyte – now, then she was among those Jacob prized.

He thought back to when Beatrice had saved him, and had torn Rebecca apart with her claws, a vampire much older than her. Yeah, his girlfriend was very dangerous.

He liked that.

“I had no idea. Does anyone know?”

“Just Garry, the Circle, and ... the Prince. Cause she’s too fucking smart.”

“Agreed. So you’re an Acolyte then? How does that work? What secrets am I privy to, dark creature of the night?”

That made her chuckle. “I can tell you whatever I want, hell I can do whatever the fuck I want. There aren’t any stupid rules. I’m given freedom to be my own animal.” She crawled onto him then, complete with a cat crawl arch in her back, and she slipped onto his stomach to straddle him. “No stupid ideologies, no stupid power structures of complicated red tape. We worship ancient gods that have been around for thousands and thousands of years!”

Holy shit. He had no idea Beatrice had such a primal side to her. “You worship gods?”

“Not really, but Jacob points to all the creation myths, the vampire parallels of many entities in these myths, and the myriad of gods that have existed since well before written history.” She shrugged, and slid her claws up and down his chest. “I’m not going to say I believe it, but I’d be stupid to ignore the possibility. Have you seen what blood magic can do? Cruac? Fuck, Julias, the things ... like, ancient things. Things so old it defies explanation. Things that lived in the Earth for ages. Things old, dark, things done with blood, death, and sex.” Her hips were moving back and forth, and she blushed for him. In seconds, he could already feel her wetness on his stomach.

Her new covenant life agreed with her. It really scared him, the lack of rules, the religious views of ancient gods and old ideas like blood sacrifices, but ... it reminded him of the first time he’d really talked with Beatrice. Back in the catacombs, when she had both saved and captured him. Something about that dark, scary, beautiful monster straddling him was just so damn arousing.

“I uh ... have to admit ... that is a whole new level of scary stuff from you.” He blushed too, and he was right behind her in arousal. His erection raised, and she slid herself back so it rested between her ass cheeks.

“Good.” She leaned in closer, and placed her fangs against his neck, just hard enough so he could feel it before she started kissing his jugular.

“Fucking hell. Should I send more pics?”

“No, no I think if you did, and the Prince saw, she’d deal with him.” He sat up and reached for the phone. “And then she’d deal with you.”

“Ha yeah, good point.”

He hit the button on the phone, but had to pull it away from his ear when the loud cracks and explosions of noise assaulted his ear. “Jack?”

“Julias! Get help, get fucking help! Here! Now!”

~~Antoinette~~

It was just her and the sheriff.

All alone in her office, she had her wall converted to a digital touch display. The idea had been planted by her Invictus primogen, and she had to admit that she enjoyed both the compromise of digital and tactile, and the ease of its use. Before her, she had her city map displayed, but also the mappings of its sewers, the underground network Tony had built, the Circle of the Crone pit in the rock canyon, the districts of feeding zones she had given to each covenant, and the Elysium zone where she deemed violence was not allowed.

But there was more than that, things only she and Daniel knew. There were the various colored circles around various places, places where the Carthians, Invictus, and the expunged Lancea et Sanctum housed influence. Also were every Wurm’s Nest in her city circled, places of mystical power that only she could appreciate. She, her sheriff, and that infernal witch Jacob.

She reached out and touched one such circle of power. A ghost had haunted a mansion there. She touched another; catacombs where, deep in underground layers far below what Beatrice had explored, undead and mindless corpses roamed. Another Wurm’s Nest was a spring beneath forest and rock, and the strange energies there attracted things that she did not understand. Ghosts, but not ghosts. Spirits, entities, things that did not speak but existed. It was where she spent much of her secret life learning her Coils of the Dragon.

But her eyes were on Tony's underground network. Tony knew it was also a place of power, a gentle one, but one that created a point of influence. It gave power to voice, and neither she nor Tony could figure out why. But Tony did not need to know why, he was content to abuse it. And now, she imagined, Lucas too was abusing it.

That idiot fool would not understand why his words would resonate with such power in Tony's old nest, and he probably did not even realize it was unnatural. The nest did not brainwash, but it just a touch more influence to any preached message. "That fool will have every wayward soul serving his delusions by the end of the year, Daniel. I should have sealed that nest shut when Tony was killed."

"We didn't know. Lucas's childe raised him only days after Tony's death," Daniel said. Voice quiet, monotone, dressed in his long coat and wearing his boring glasses. But at the moment, she could use his predictability. He was the rock she could rely on in their conquest.

"Do you think Lucas will leave, as I demanded?"

"Perhaps. Even if every covenant-less childe and more than that joined him, he would not have the power to stand against both us and the Carthians."

"I do not want the Carthians involved. Garry will bring fire, explosives, bullets upon bullets, and destruction. I do not want that again. We need to be surgical."

Daniel stepped up to the map, reached out with a gloved hand, and pointed at the entrance to Tony's underground nest. "Perhaps we should not wait? If we move now, we—"

Red lights started to flash on the screen. Not just the main screen though. She moved around to her desk and down at her laptop, where the screen displayed more flashing red. Daniel blinked at her, and she clicked a few prompts on her software. Multiple camera feeds appeared on the wall display, and they all showed the same thing.

Lucas, surrounded by at least fifty robes, walking up to her doorstep.

“He ... he cannot be serious,” she said.

Daniel stepped closer to the wall display, adjusted his glasses, and then reached into his robes. The sword he carried was long, something that belonged in ancient warfare, unlike the shorter and more intimate swords used by Kindred in the modern age. The blade was thin, it had a subtle curve, and Daniel had to reach behind his neck to draw it upward and out to the side. She would have said it was something from Japan, but the blade had no ornamentation or even layers to its grip. The blade was as lifeless as the man himself.

Panic hit her. Jack. For a split moment, she had forgotten her lover was downstairs. She could only hope he had stayed within the the basement of her tower.

She stomped after Daniel, and moments later they were both in the elevator. “He is insane.”

“Probably.”

“This carnage could summon the police!”

“Perhaps.”

“He is only recently revived from half a century of torpor! He cannot hope to face us in combat.”

“He’ll have a trick up his sleeve.”

She nodded while she flexed her hands in front of her. Here and now then. Here and now, on her own doorstep, the madman was going to bring his fate. She did not fear for herself or Daniel, but her ghouls were downstairs, and so was Jack. Losing her ghouls a second time would be a horrible tragedy, one she was not sure she could withstand without leaving many, many Kindred tied to her rooftop for sunrise. But losing Jack was not acceptable. She would not have it, could it not have it, she would burn her whole city to the ground to kill Lucas if it came to that.

The elevator was not a slow elevator, but every second was a wasted one, and by the time it finally dinged open, she was ready to tear through the door. But just as it opened, Lucas stepped in through the front doors of her glass tower, at the opposite end of the Lobby.

“Jack, my Jack, please get downstairs, you must—”

“Antoinette! Daniel! How lovely to see you both here.” Lucas made a grand sweeping gesture with his arms. He was wearing the same sick, disgusting robe from last night, and just like last night his crowd of robed followers fell in beside him.

Her assistant Chunk backed up and away like someone had laid Ebola at his feet. Jack inched to the side, back to the wall, but he too was just as shocked as her assistant.

“Lucas. How dare you. How ... dare ... you ... Do you think I will let you leave after this?” She stepped forward, and with the grace of a feline, stepped out of her shoes. Shoes were a mistake for any creature that planned to move quickly, with force. With intent to kill, you needed to feel your ground beneath you, so you could tell how fast you were moving before you crushed someone’s face in with your fist.

Daniel followed beside her. He said nothing, but his sword was still drawn and at his side. He kept his shoes on, but when the violence began, he would not even touch the floor.

“No, I did not think that you would. But then, I will not be leaving as you instructed either. My flock and I have, with heavy hearts, agreed that the only course of action is to remove you from your position.” He stepped forward a little closer. She noticed he was carrying a very old looking sword; how quaint. “Will you step down as Prince?”

She laughed. “You are pathetic, Lucas. You have only recently awoken from half a century’s sleep, do you honestly expect me to fear you? Daniel, would you please disp—”

Lucas held up a hand. “Damien, if you would?”

The crowd of robed Kindred stepped aside like water, and the young protégé who had stalked her streets for fifty years stepped forward. He seemed like such nice a young man, with an average if athletic build, and a half-shaved head that combed long black hair to one side. He was the one Daniel had spared in their purge.

And he was the one who held Natasha in front of him, with his sword against her throat.

Oh no.

She stopped walking forward. Daniel stopped walking forward. They both just stopped, and stared at Damien and Natasha each. The girl was awake, bound, and glancing around with panicked eyes. She knew what was coming.

“Daniel,” Lucas said, and he moved over to stand beside Damien, “I don’t suppose you could save us all the trouble, and execute the Prince for us?”

Fear. For just a second, just a passing moment, fear hit her. Fight Daniel? Could she fight Daniel? She could not win against her sheriff, not in a straight fight.

They looked at each other. Daniel's eyes downcast once they met hers, and flickered up to meet them again several times. He was ... sad. A lifetime of conversations, of actions, of events, of decisions and anarchy and vengeance and justice and conquest and secrets and learning flashed before her eyes, of her and her friend Daniel. Her quiet, monotone friend, supporter of all her endeavors, was torn. More emotion than she had ever seen on his face in the centuries that she had known him.

His eyes flickered to her, then back to Natasha.

"Sire, you..." Natasha twisted to get free, but Damien held her strong. "Sire, you c-c-can't-t-t-t ... give int-t-to these ... monsters."

If only it was that simple, girl. Daniel had only ever sired two, one long long ago, and that was tragedy for him. Antoinette could not imagine what sort of emotional wreckage her friend had to dig through to build up to siring Natasha. It was not a choice she envied.

Daniel, with sadness etched into his face with pain, fell to his knees. Jack gave a tiny gasp, echoed by the host of terrorist in her home.

"Ah, it is the way of things is it not?" Lucas stepped around in front of the crowd of cultists, and made another sweep of his arm with the old sword. "Our childer, our future. And for some, our weakness."

Damien winced. Antoinette noticed it, just that quick snap of the lip edge, but she noticed.

Lucas smiled. "I knew it would be too much to ask you to kill the Prince for us, but understand that if you intervene, sheriff, your childe's ashes will scatter the floor."

"You ... you will all die if you touch her." Daniel's voice was a broken thing, wavering and cracked.

"We have faith, sheriff. You should try it sometime. And you," the Archbishop said, and he pointed that silly sword at her once again, "you, I suppose, will not step down just because I hold your friend's childe hostage?"

"I think not. She is not my childe, and this is my city." She took another step forward, and unfurled her fingers like claws at her side. "I am going to kill every last one of you."

Jack was still around. The fool boy had at least moved aside and out of the way of the inevitable carnage, but he was poking his head out from behind one of the pillars near the stairway to the depths of her castle. The boy was still wearing the tuxedo he wore last night, and a Ventrue was nothing without weapons or servants.

She, on the other hand, found herself looking forward to finishing this with her bare hands. As long as she kept herself between the zealots and Jack, this would be easy.

"It is ok Daniel." She set her hand on her friend's shoulder; he did not move. "He will not touch her if you do not intervene."

Daniel did not even move, he simply knelt there, head lowered, eyes flickering between the floor and the feet of the mob before them. To see her friend so ruined was enough reason for her to tear Lucas's teeth out, force them through his eyes and into his withered, worthless insides.

Better yet, she was going to make Lucas's flock do it for her.

She stepped forward a few more times, reached out her hand, and pointed it at the crowd of Kindred. “Kneel.”

She dug deep into herself, far into the endless reservoirs of vitae she had to muster. Elder Kindred harvested blood, coveted it, held it dear inside them and pooled it into oceans within. And when they wanted to, they could draw on that ocean to unleash the absurd.

Forgive me Jack.

The aura was invisible, but not subtle. Like a goddess, like a succubus, her presence filled the room, overflowed and overwhelmed everyone within. As if a divine spotlight was on her, and only her, every mind would bend, break, and succumb to her allure. The beast in their guts would bow, beg, and their every desire would be replaced with a need to serve her.

And it was working. She grinned at Lucas when, like a choir preaching to their new god, his flock began to fall to their knees. One by one, they went wide-eyed at the sight of her as she broke them with something they could not see, but only feel. Lucas was out of her reach, as was Daniel, but everyone else was enthralled, enslaved, and defeated. She was their goddess. If a choir of angels had joined the sudden silence to announce her presence, it would have been only too perfect.

Damien and Natasha were beginning to fall, and Jack beside her was already on his knees with gaping jaw. It broke her insides to see him enslaved, to see his honest face ruined by such fake admiration. Those beautiful eyes of his were empty of anything but total love for her, but like a perfect doll, devoid of anything real. She would make it up to him later, if the poor boy could look her in the eyes again. It would kill her, if she damaged the normal look in his eyes she cherished so much.

Lucas noticed, and reached down to pluck Natasha from Damian before Daniel had the opportunity to act. The elder’s grip was more than enough to pluck Natasha's head from her body in an instant, if it was needed.

"This serpent is strong. Step aside children," Lucas said. "And behold the glory of God." Then the damn idiot zealot held the sword high, and started to hum a hymn.

Antoinette rolled her eyes and stepped closer. "You cannot be serious." He was just a Mehket. His were the powers of speed, secrets, and shadows. He had no way to stop her majesty.

But then the sword started to glow.

Everyone stopped moving. The Lancea et Sanctum backed away, gasped, and froze. Jack's jaw dropped even more. Daniel raised his head, and even his mouth parted. Natasha and Damien gazed up at the glowing sword with stunned faces. Even Antoinette, despite herself, raised her gaze in surprise and watched, shocked.

Only Lucas was smiling. "I pray unto thee, O Lord, to smite the wicked. Your will be done."

She would have gagged, if not for the increasing glow of the sword. Soon, the lobby itself was bathed in so much light, she worried that the sun had risen and she did not notice. Many vampires raised their arms and covered their eyes, but not Lucas, and not her. They both gazed at the searing light, blinded but unable to look away.

For a brief moment, she thought she was looking at the sun again. Old, dead memories of ten lifetimes ago flooded her. She remembered standing on a street, horses with carriages were trotting by, and a man was holding her hand. The air was filled with the sound of hooves on cobblestone, calls of the crowd chatting about their day, wearing frilly dresses and fancy vest tuxedos. She could smell the sea.

And like lightning, the light cracked white and streaked outward into the air. Then thunder that vibrated the glass tower and the earth it rested on, until it nearly cracked. A wave of invisible weight pushed against them all, as if the air was water, and it threatened to crush her. All she could do was stand there, confused, dazed, eyes wide, and let the madness consume them.

A second crack of lightning, but this time the sword Lucas held incinerated from the explosive crash of white energy. The lightning smashed into her chest, and she fell to her knees as the weight increased a hundred fold for a single moment. Everything went black before coming back as blurry shapes, so the crowd of robes before her were blended together like mist.

They were getting up, her majesty discipline broken. She reached out with a hand and dug deep into her insides, but the vitae would not rise. She could still feel the vitae coursing through her fingers, toes, through her chest and her eyes, but when she tried to use it to engulf the lobby in her majesty, it was blocked.

With time, her vision started to return, but nausea and pain coursed through her. She reached out and steadied herself against a pillar, and her other hand rested on Jack's shoulder.

“ ... Jack? Jack please, you must ... get ... downstairs.”

“He just hit you with lightning!”

“A miracle, boy!” the Archbishop said. All that remained of Lucas's sword was dust at the zealot's feet.

Antoinette scoffed, and dug her nails into the rivets of the pillar to try and stand straighter, but for all her proud posturing, it was taking effort to not lean on Jack. “Sorcery. Theban sorcery.”

“Strong are the miracles of God, Dragon. Now my children, bring her down. She cannot enchant us with her serpent gaze any longer.”

Lucas chuckled, a dark chuckle, something a cartoon villain would do. Did his flock not hear it? Could they not see how deranged and psychotic their leader was?

The crowd of Kindred started to stalk forward toward her, like hungry but desperate animals. They had crazed looks in their eyes, and they lowered their hoods when they got closer to her.

She pushed out against Jack, hard, and sent him flying back against the wall toward the stairwell and down. There was no way to escape her tower's deeper levels, as such escape routes often backfired an elder. Now, all she wished was that she had such a route for that damn fool boy who should have been running.

And poor Daniel was forced to watch it all from only ten feet away.

“Wow, she looks wrecked!”

“Yeah, this’ll be easy.”

“Faith. Reward for our faith.”

“The Archbishop will be Prince before the night is done!”

They had knives, large ones, they had pistols, they even had shotguns. Nothing military, nothing extreme. If they had taken more time they could have perhaps armed themselves appropriately, but in their hubris they came unprepared. Their mistake. She had no sheriff, she could not use her majesty discipline, she was outnumbered, but she was going to kill every last one of them herself.

At first she feigned weakness, trembling, her body against the pillar like it was the only thing keeping her up. For a moment it was true, but she found the strength in her bones. Once they encircled her, that confidence in their eyes like poison, that was when she struck out. She did not need to enthrall these fools to destroy them, no, she had all the strength and speed of any Daeva, and that speed was a blinding blur of motion and force. The first one, she grabbed by the throat and slammed it back into the pillar she was leaning against. If the Kindred had any intentions of protest, they were rendered meaningless by a destroyed larynx.

But she did not stop with merely crushing the enemy's throat. With no time to play with her prey, she struck hard. The vampire's throat crushed inward, then into the spine, and then apart as Antoinette's hand cut through withered vampire flesh and bone until her grip found the marble of her tower's pillar. The body fell away, and the girl's head sat on her hand for a moment before it rolled off to the side. She glared anger into the young Kindred's face even as the woman she just killed blinked at her. Then the dead vampire fell apart to ash.

She turned to the three Kindred who surrounded her; they jumped away, but not before she managed to grab the one with the shotgun, the dangerous one. Her first kill had forced her right hand against the pillar, but she spun with the motion so her left hand could grab the other in a reverse spin. Her hand was open palm so her fingers sunk into the Kindred's skull, through bone, into teeth and ashy flesh from the strength of the impact. The grip was more than enough for her to pull the arm in as fast as she could, and smash the Kindred's face into the same pillar.

There was a split moment where the Kindred she had caught could not understand that Antoinette had driven her fingers into their skull, eyes wide with shock, but it all went away when their face crumbled against the pillar.

The result was explosive. For a single second, she could feel bone resist, but then it collapsed and exploded in a mess of dark, Kindred blood, hair, bone and eyes. She didn't bother to keep her gaze locked with his as he dispersed into the tiny flames of death before ash was all that was left. There would be more than enough death eyes tonight.

She slowly turned to face the stunned crowd of onlookers, curled and uncurled her fingers, and growled. Thick clumps of warm ash fell from her palms like death's tears. The Kindred closest to her were terrified. Good.

“Come then.”

She could faintly hear Jack calling out for help into his phone as the hail of gunfire began.

Chapter 22

~~Julias~~

“Natasha is here! Lucas has her held hostage! Everything is—”

More gunfire, and the line went dead after a single, static snap.

“Shit shit shit shit shit.”

He wasted no time. He jumped out of bed and got dressed while he walked toward his office. Office was a strong word, it was just a room with a computer, and all the weapons he preferred up on the walls. A pistol, a small shotgun, another pistol, a large knife, a small sword, all slipped into various places on his body once he started putting on his belt, vest holster, and suit jacket over top the small armory.

Hold on Jack, I’m coming.

He started dialing his phone when Beatrice grabbed it from him.

“The fuck are you doing?” she said.

He almost echoed the words. “Summoning the Invictus! I’m going to save my childe.”

Beatrice kept the phone at bay when he reached for it. “Fuck man, you’re a fucking Invictus triumvirate! If you get between the Ordo Dracul and the Lancea et Sanctum, shit is going to get ugly.”

“Ugly? You have got t—”

“Lucas is there for the Prince, and no one’s going to agree to fight a war because of the death of one young neonate.”

The urge to smash her face into the wall hit him with enough force to surprise him. He had to blink a few times and shake his head to dislodge the compulsion.

“Natasha is there too! She might die as well. And since when did you care about any of this?”

Her eyes dropped, and she handed him back the phone. “I don’t want a war. I wasn’t here for the last one but I bet a lot of Kindred will die if there’s another. Just let those two fight each other and the strongest one will come out on top.”

Was she serious? He glared hard enough to crucify her, and she looked away like a guilty child. He didn’t buy it. Beatrice enjoyed violence; maybe not to the level of a war, but she was always one of the first ready to throw a fist.

“And if Jack gets killed in the process?”

She winced. “Hey I don’t want the kid to die either.”

His grinded his teeth down inside his mouth until he could practically feel them falling apart. “I have to do something. How the fuck are they even managing an attack? The sheriff is there.”

Beatrice tilted her head to the side and started to pick her teeth with her claws. She leaned against the wall, wearing absolutely nothing, and let her eyes roll upward in thought.

“I...”

“I what?” he said. Bitterness was in his voice, and he didn’t care. She was the one stopping him from interfering, and that meant his childe could die. Worse, she was right. If Jack did die, it was doubtful the Invictus would go to war with the judges over it, even if he was a childe of one of the triumvirate.

“I ... guess it might be because of Natasha.”

“What, Natasha? Why? Why is she even at the tower?”

She was hesitating, he could see it all over her. Why didn't she want to tell him. Even with him staring at her, she started to walk back into the master bedroom. He followed after her, and glared at her while she got dressed. She was stalling.

“Look, this is exactly what I was worried about. Shit is—”

“The fuck. About. Natasha?”

Enough games. He tried to keep calm, to be polite, kind, to try and understand it from her perspective, but his patience was tightened to nothing but a wire strand. Jack was in danger. Right the fuck now, Jack was in danger and everything was between him and doing something about it.

“Maria and Lucas are old flames, yeah? And Natasha works for Maria.”

“Mhmm.” He folded his arms across his chest and leaned against the door frame. There was that little kernel of Ventrue inside him that wanted to reach out and force her to tell him everything, force her to obey. He wouldn't do that, he wasn't Viktor, and he loved her. But holy fuck every bit of him was being torn in half.

“Natasha is the sheriff's childe.”

Glass shattered in his mind. “Natasha...”

Tiny, skinny, little Natasha. She was fast, and she had great Mehket eyes. Secrets and shadows were her world, and Julias knew she was always a step above the typical Mehket her age in that regard. But in a fight, she was only as useful as the gun she was carrying. Her stuttering, her shy demeanor, her inability to even look someone in the eye, it always threw him.

But then, there was the sheriff, the most quiet man Julias had ever known. It fit so well, it made him nauseous that he never pieced it together. It hurt that she never told him; they'd worked together for decades. Questions and questions and more damn questions ate at him.

And then, how did Beatrice know? He'd have to ask her, later, when everything stopped burning to cinders around him.

"You ... you think..."

"Yeah, I do," Beatrice said. "I haven't seen Daniel much, but he ... he had that somber look in his eyes, you know? Like you used to all the time." She walked up to him, wearing the dress she was last night, and poked him in the forehead with a claw. "In that sad way that just begs for someone to come along and fill it. Someone who could have their heart strings tugged at easily, if you knew where to tug."

That stung, but she was right, and he knew it. Just like that, he was the one getting a lecture.

Then she put her hand on his. "So I'm thinking Lucas is holding her hostage and forcing the sheriff to stand down while he deals with the Prince."

"I can't believe he has her! He can't just take an Invictus hostage, not unless he wanted to risk war with the Invict—"

Maria. That bitch. The fucking stupid, vain, twisted bitch. She gave Lucas permission to use Natasha, she must have!

He turned around and headed down the main stairs.

“Julias? Hey! Where you going?”

“I am going to the Elysium tower. Alone.”

“Without the Invictus? Are you fucking insane?” The Nosferatu jumped straight over him and landed between him and the door of his mansion. “You could get killed!”

He tried to push past her, but the damn Nosferatu put her claws against his chest and pushed him back. He was bigger than her, tougher, but she was much stronger, and pushing him back was easy for the little monster.

“Get out of my way Beatrice.”

“No.” She backed herself against the huge door, and put herself dead center between its two sides. “Lucas is there to kill the Prince. You heard the gunfire! Jack could already be dead!”

“Get out of my way.” He approached her and tried to push her aside, with strength this time, but the Nosferatu twisted his grip away and pushed him back like he weighed nothing.

“Come on Julias! You’re going to get killed, and I don’t want that!”

He tried again, grabbed her wrist, put one hand against her shoulder, and put his weight into a throw. She struggled against him, lighter than him, but she got a foot behind his and pushed him backward hard enough that he flew backward ten feet. The monster wasn’t going anywhere.

“Damn it Beatrice, I have to help him!” He yelled at her from the floor, but didn’t bother to get up. She’d just knock him down again.

“What about me? Huh? What the fuck about me? You’re going to get killed and I’ll be alone...”

“I—”

She stomped forward and slammed a clawed foot into the floor in front of him. “No! No you don’t just throw yourself into the middle of shit like you have a death wish.” Then she kicked him in the boot, hard, hard enough to send him back a bit and send a spike of pain up his limb. “I thought ... you wouldn’t ... cause I’m...”

He was down on his ass, glaring up at the Nosferatu trying to stop him from dying. If a Ventrue’s weakness was hubris, a Nosferatu’s was loneliness. The look in her eyes was heartbreaking, gut wrenching, and every part of him wanted to get up and hold her. God he wanted to hold her, stroke her hair and promise her he wouldn’t leave her like it was some sixties movie.

But he had to save Jack.

“ ... Ok.”

“Ok?”

“Yes, ok. I won’t Rambo in there.” He held out a hand to her.

“Fucking good.” She reached down and plucked him up with enough force to almost yank the shoulder from his socket.

He looked at her, looked down, looked at her some more, and he could feel his face range from sorrow to fury, back and forth as he struggled with it. He could feel Jack pulling at him, like some invisible thread that caught his throat and was pulling him toward his childe. It was as mindless and powerful as a mother’s idiot urge to sacrifice herself to save her child even when it was hopeless.

But Beatrice was glaring up at him, and when she put her claws on his shoulders, her snake eyes penetrated him like knives. Her expressions mirrored his own, half angry and half terrified.

“I have to do something though, anything,” he said.

“Then just ask.”

He blinked. “What?”

“Just. Ask.” She stepped in closer, lowered her hands to his sides, and hugged him. Actually hugged him, complete with her face pressed against his chest and her body close to his. “I can help, you stupid fucking cunt fuckhead.”

“I di—”

“Yeah I know what you didn’t want to do, fuckwad. But fuck you and your white knight bullshit.” Even as she tore into him, she kept her face buried into the jacket of his suit, like a little girl holding her teddy.

He really was fucking stupid. It was only a year ago when he was alone, with no child and no love, and that’s how it had been for decades. Now this woman was hugging him, holding him, squeezing him like he’d vanish in a puff of smoke if she loosened her grip. He didn’t know what to do, all he could think to do was protect the new things he’d been given.

“Hey,” he said, and he raised his arms to hug the creature buried against his chest. “You’re right.”

“Yeah.”

He laughed. “Yeah. It’s just been me for a while since I’ve had anyone. And now...”

She pulled her head away, looked up at him, and clicked her teeth side to side. “And now you’ve got a girl and a kid. Yeah, I get it. But do I look like a fucking trophy wife?”

“No, no you most definitely do not.”

“Hey! Calling me ugly?” He should have seen that coming. One moment she was frowning at him, the next she was punching him, but then she smiled. “So, you going to ask?”

“ ... will you help me save Jack?”

“Of course I’ll help you save your childe you stupid god damn fuckhead.”

---

~~Jack~~

“Julias! Get help, get fucking help! Here! Now!”

“What’s going on?”

“Natasha is here! Lucas has her held hostage! Everything is-”

The phone exploded in his hand.

He didn’t see who shot the smartphone, but whoever they were they were was one fucking crack shot. And worse still, the other Kindred started unloading bullets upon bullets upon bullets toward Antoinette at the same time. He wanted to jump in there and do something, but dozens of robed Kindred swarmed across the lobby toward them both.

The mob started to march forward, and with them came more and more bullets. The marble pillars of the lobby chipped and tore apart, and the walls around Jack showered him in chipped rock and metal. The gunfire was no longer just pointed at Antoinette, but him as well. He’d survived getting his body nearly cut in half once, but it was a very close call. He wouldn’t be able to survive what Antoinette could, what Viktor could. So he did the only thing he could do as more robed Kindred approached him: he backed away, down the stairway and out of the lobby.

Below him was the underground network of the Prince's facilities. Black marble walls, a stairway, multiple floors, and deep rooms filled with all sorts of luxuries. But there was no escape from down there. Secure to a fault. Still, it was either that, or deal with the two Kindred who were now at the top of the stairs. They wouldn't kill him, like they wouldn't kill Natasha, unless they had to.

But that didn't mean they wouldn't put twenty bullets into his feet just to make sure he didn't interfere. And he really wanted to interfere. He could hear the gunfire, he could hear the odd sound of bullets colliding with ash with his vampire ears, and he could hear the screams of terror of Kindred. He'd only seen Antoinette kill two of them before he was forced back into the stairway, but the sheer speed and brutal strength of it was sickening.

This time, he got a clear view of the brutality when his lover attacked the two approaching Kindred from behind. It was almost comical when both her hands appeared through the Kindred's robes, out through the chest straight through the center. Her hands were flat; she used the tips of her fingers like some sort of blade so she could jam her hands through their bodies.

That wasn't enough to kill a Kindred though, and Jack had to look away when the Prince swung her hands outward to either side of her with such force, the two Kindred ripped in half.

It only took a couple seconds, but both Kindred had just enough time to start screaming before their bodies fell to ash. One of them didn't fully turn to ash, but instead turned into a husk of withered skin and bone. A young Kindred, like him.

"Jack!" Antoinette said. "You must—"

A bullet tore through her face. One moment, Antoinette was standing at the top of the stairs, looking down at him, and the next she was missing a large chunk of her cheek and some teeth. The flesh ripped open, and her teeth provided just enough impact resistance that the bullet continued forward and ripped one half-side of her lips to bits. The pieces of her flesh splattered outward, and turned into tiny flashes of cinder, then ash in a single second.

Before Jack could even say anything, she was diving forward and out of the line of fire. She scooped him up with enough force that he could feel a rib break, but he was too shocked to even react. All he could do was blink as she carted them down the stairway and into the first level of her underground facilities.

“If only I had listened to Tony,” she said. Her voice was quiet hisses between clenched, ruined teeth. “His network had many escape routes. Mine has none; I did not think them worth the risk of invasion.” She got around a corner and put her back to it, Jack still held to her chest. “I never thought someone would risk a kamikaze assault through my front door.”

He tried to speak, but instead he just gazed at the sight of her shredded face. It was healing before his very eyes, pale flesh reaching out with the thick, dark blood of Kindred and weaving strands of skin and bone. He could actually see her teeth reforming – not regrowing, reforming – in her mouth.

She set him down, and pushed him further behind the wall with her hand to his chest. “Stay down.”

“I—” As if they were waiting for him to speak, gunfire started tearing into the wall corner they were hiding behind. Bits of black marble chipped away in small explosions of impact again and again and again until the air was filled with dust and rock.

He looked around, panic creeping up his legs. Hiding wasn't an option, not really. They'd find them eventually and there was no escape route. They could hide until the police showed up? That would only lead to a mountain of dead police. They could fight? But then he was useless, and whatever that lightning did to Antoinette had gutted her ability to enchant.

Fuck he really wished he had a gun.

“Prince,” a voice called out. “Come out and die with honor.”

Antoinette scoffed. “There is no honor in death, worthless boy. Daniel should never have spared a zealot such as you.”

---

~~Damien~~

He gritted his teeth until his jaw cracked. “Spare me? I was just one of many fledglings, innocent and weak. I had assumed I simply escaped your notice as you slaughtered the priests we looked up to!”

He crept further along the wall, sword in his right hand, pistol in his left. The ridiculous weapon combination worked well for a Kindred who could handle the recoil with one hand, and he had spent fifty years mastering it. All for this moment.

The Prince stuck her head out from around the wall, just enough to take a peak, and he wasted no time taking a shot. He was fast, faster than any Mehket his age should be; fifty years of constant vigilance saw to that.

But she still managed to dodge it. She was an ancient creature, filled with oceans of vitae, and with far more experience than he and the entire mob he brought with him combined.

It was a good thing the mob were going to be his shield, to give him the moment to strike when it presented itself. With a low sigh, he sneaked a peak at his fellow Kindred. Some were still with Lucas in the building’s lobby, but many had joined him down the stairway into the snake’s tunnels. Thirty robed vampires.

Thirty meat shields.

He went silent, absolutely silent, like only a Mehket or Nosferatu could, and approached the corner of the wall. The others though, he motioned for them to approach with no such subtlety, but out in the middle of the hallway the stair had opened up into. He could drink in the strange sights of the Ordo Dracul architecture later; the long, coiling dragons carved into the black marble with white streaks could wait.

Three of his mob jumped around the corner, all with pistols at the ready, but they did not fire.

Damien frowned and stuck his head around the corner. Nothing. Just a long, empty hallway that went on for some distance, with several doors along its sides.

He could keep going down the stairway, or turn around and go in the other direction of the hallway, but it was a fool's hope that they would connect behind the hallway the Prince had fled down. He stepped into the only option left and walked down the hallway with slow, testing steps. His army did the same.

"I see where Tony learned to love tunnels," he said.

"Tony learned much from me." Her voice carried in the hallway, and despite his ears he could not pinpoint it. There were vents, no doubt for the ghouls the Prince pampered to breathe. Perhaps she was using those to send her voice? That meant the snake was hiding in one of the rooms. He grinned. The hell he would unleash upon her once he found her would be all the sweeter if she was trapped like a rat.

The first door, he had one of his Nosferatu kick open, but inside laid only ornamental things. Paintings, drawings, and old, occult objects he did not understand. He grunted, and moved on.

"Tony was a vile snake," he said to the air.

"Agreed." Again her voice echoed off the walls. It had to be coming from down the hallway, but beyond that he could not tell.

“Don’t act like you’re so above him. He was your childe, and like you said, he learned much from you.”

The robes around him nodded and hummed agreement. He could see the fear and worry in their eyes, but also that powerful righteousness of a child of the Lancea et Sanctum. He tried to take pride in that, but found only bile.

“Tony is dead, and I have only regret for his actions.”

“Bullshit! Do you regret when he killed priest Marken? Or Bishop Vance?”

Silence.

“That’s right, your anarchist childe killed Sanctified! But his acts pale in comparison to what you, your sheriff, and that fool Garry Tones did.”

More silence. His anger was starting to creep up into his fingers now, up into his skull until it blinded him. He was very much aware he was letting his fury force him to speak, instead of controlling his tongue, but he no longer cared.

“Speak, demon! You killed so many of us! Servants of God!”

The mob at his side hollered and grunted and cheered, but instead of joining them, Damien only managed a quiet groan. They hadn’t been there, none of the Kindred at his side were old enough to have been present for the purge, and their enthusiasm for this snake hunt saddened him. A lust for violence was in them just as much as any belief in their God, but they had no reason to be so enraptured in the hunt, not like him. They were just thugs following Lucas’s orders, with an ache to fill their cravings for brutality.

They were his shield for God?

Again the voice whispered through the hallway. “You act as if Lucas is innocent. Your sire is a monster.”

Damien didn’t say anything. Natasha, now Antoinette, they both said the same thing. All Damien could remember from so long ago was a caring family of priests and Bishops, the great Lucas and his mighty word.

Not now, later. He could rebuild the shattered pieces of that serene painting later.

Another door. The muscle at his side tore this one open as well, with Nosferatu strength and claws and mutations working through metal and marble. A host of his bodyguards stayed out in the hallway with guns at the ready, but those that followed him into the room came to a stunned stop just as quickly as Damien did.

The room was massive, circular, like a stadium built into the earth. The floor was covered in white lines in what could only be described as a complex weave of mathematical patterns. Circles upon circles upon circles drawn in joined spirals at perfect angles, with every trigonometric math pattern he recognized, and many he did not, connecting into a tapestry of language. The walls of the room were painted with the same white dragons that were found in much of the Prince’s inner domain, and the ceiling held a hanging chandelier of twinkling crystal dangling below blue flames.

“What ... is this?” one of the Kindred asked. The Nosferatu approached the blue-lit room, got to a knee, and put his claws against the floor within the circle.

Everyone jumped back when the floor rippled, like water.

“What insanity is—”

“A Wurm’s Nest.” Damien put his hand onto the Kindred’s shoulder and pulled them back. “I am sure the serpent studies this, and attempts to circumvent God’s curse. Let us begone.”

“What’s a—”

“Do not ask.” He ushered the few Kindred who followed him back out into the hallway. What power the Prince harnessed there, he would let Lucas handle it. The Ordo Dracul held more secrets than any covenant, and their twisted, hidden ways were beyond him.

“You built your tower upon a Wurm’s Nest, snake? How arrogant do you presume to be?” he said to the walls.

The voice mixed a whisper with a chuckle. “Tony did the same.”

They all stopped. “W-what?”

No answer. Tony’s nest was built on a Wurm’s Nest?

“Bishop Damien, what does she mean?” A woman, Gangrel, came up to him and stared at him with scared eyes.

Damien shook his head. “Focus. She deceives, like the snake in the garden. Focus.” He pointed ahead, and they all started to march again.

Deep and deeper still the hall went into the earth, much as any of Tony’s tunnels did. Despite the loud march of his army’s boots, no words or actions from the Prince came. Eerie silence was all that awaited them. But after a time, the hallway came to a stop, and a single door remained at its end.

Damien motioned with his fingers, and again his mindless muscle tore the metal apart. Or rather, tried. The deformed Kindred wrap his claws around the handle of the rather flat and unceremonious door, but it did not budge.

Considering a Nosferatu or Daeva, even young ones, had the strength to throw a person like a baseball, this did indeed surprise Damien. “Zed, Karla, Casey, Mark.”

Two Daevas, another Nosferatu, and a Gangrel stepped up and joined their brother. Hands, claws, and animal ferocity join in. The Gangrel Zed, in particular, managed to morph his hands into monstrous claws that were just as strong as the dark metal they were trying to tear apart. With five sets of Kindred muscle, devoted and faithful, prying at the door, it finally began to bend. Metal and marble screeched in pain, specs and sparks tore at its structure, and the dark hallway of black was opened up to a cast light from the room that waited them.

It was like watching a group of monsters peel open a particularly stubborn can of sardines.

But with time, the door opened. Damien held his sword at the ready with one hand, gun in the other, and watched with careful eyes. She was in there, in this room. He could feel her. He could smell her. The light that crept around the corners of the peeled and bent door beckoned him like a beacon. She was right in there.

And once the door was open, it was the others who rushed past him to secure the room. His shields, Lucas had said. His brainwashed, sad, pathetic, idiot shields. His new friends. More of them were going to die, in the very room they were rushing into. Don't think about it, don't worry about it. Focus.

Before them was a large room with all the amenities any kine could hope for. Again it was black marble, but the color of the bed, the furniture in the corners, the desks and dressers and the fancy sink, all of it had the tone of life. Now that he was in the room, he could smell it too, the smell of flesh and blood.

The Prince's ghouls were in here. He couldn't see them, but he could smell them, and he could almost hear the sound of heartbeats. This was their room.

“Her two ghouls are here. Find them. Kill one, and hold the other hostage,” Damien said. That would bring her out of hiding, and enrage her. A foe blinded by anger was an easy kill. He knew that all too well, and was doing all he could to keep his own rage from boiling over.

“You got it, Bish—”

A fist collided with Zed’s face so fast, the Kindred was left a headless corpse one moment, then a pile of ash and burning robe the next.

~~Antoinette~~

Jack and the girls were in the bathroom of the ghouls’ room. To think that all that stood between the death of those closest to her was just a flimsy bit of metal without even a lock, made her whole body vibrate with rage. She would not have this, could not have this.

The door to Ashley and Julee’s bedroom was strong, but it was not the vault door of her room. She could have tried to run past the mob and hid in her room when they had first attacked, but to do so would have doomed her ghouls and potentially her sheriff. This whole ordeal made it painfully obvious that she should have listened to her childe Tony, and used connected tunnels with more modern defenses, something that could be used to counter-attack. A giant vault door was useless for protecting those you cared about.

She was not in the bathroom. She was above the entrance to the bedroom, back to the wall and nails sunk into the marble, just beneath the high ceiling. The cost to repair all this damage was just icing on the cake for her hatred.

The sound of a group of Kindred peeling open the huge door was a screeching announcement of the inevitable.

They poured into the room, arrogant and bloated with defiance. Robes upon robes, guns of varying sizes, and every blood clan of the Kindred flowed into the bedroom of her ghouls like locusts. Once they were all inside, contained and within arm's reach, she would slaughter them. Patience. She did everything in her power to suppress her presence the way Daniel taught her, but she was no Mehket or Nosferatu; they would find her above the doorway sooner or later. All they had to do was look up.

Then Damien walked in last, her target. The other robes were pressed too close together, too many knives and swords at the ready, for her to jump into the middle of the swarm without losing her head. Just step away from the crowd, little Mehket, and I will clean up the mistake Daniel made fifty years ago sparing your worthless second life.

“Her two ghouls are here. Find them. Kill one, and hold the other hostage.”

A flash of red drenched her eyes. Rage so thick it blinded her, coated everything blood red, and had her body tremble with anticipation. Kill them. She was going to kill every last one of them. She would not let them kill her precious ones, not again, not this time.

One of them was turning around. He was going to see her.

“You got it Bish—”

Her fist found this one's face. One moment she was on the wall, and the next she was on the floor, on her feet and hands. She landed with enough force that her claws dug into the floor, and she skidded along it from the inertia. Her fingernails left trails of ruined marble where they scratched through the floor. She had already turned around when realization dawned on everyone's faces.

To her, it was slow motion, a dance of ages. The Kindred she had killed was crumbling beside her, his head was rolling on the floor already, and in the moment he burst into the smallest spark of flames in second death, she pounced. Thirty robes entered the room, twenty-nine remained.

“Kill her!”

The bishop. Damien. His face seemed determined, yet morose, and split with bitter anger, but it was no matter. He was going to die along with the rest of them.

The nearest Kindred had a knife, long and shining; it even had a cross carved into its blade. There was just a flicker of awareness in this enemy Daeva's mind that they were not going to survive, just a blink of sadness, but Antoinette did not care. What sympathy she may have had was buried in centuries of shell and concrete, well beyond the reach of this poor fool, even as her hand snapped out with a whip crack and her fingers sank into his skull. She did not bother to hold eye contact as she drove her other hand into their chest, and ripped their head off.

Bullets. A swarm of shards of metal fell upon her, each with their own crack of lightning and resounding thunder. She was fast though, and she did not stop moving just to kill one Kindred; that was done in a flowing motion of momentum.

One bullet managed to clip her shoulder. She could feel the metal tear through her pale flesh and into withered, dry insides, but her vitae was quick to repair and close the hole. It did not matter, she could barely feel it with all her focus on the kill, and she kept pushing forward into the crowd of confused and panicking vampires. Another clipped her leg; again she ignored it. Once she was close to the sea of robes, the bullets stopped, and they had no choice but to engage her in melee.

A Nosferatu with a classically deformed face came at her, and she reached out to grab their jaw. But with all the impatience and lack-of-skill of a brawler, the Nosferatu did not try to engage in combat so much as throw himself at her. The weight of their large body was enough to hinder her forward movement, and then it only got worse when a large Gangrel jumped in beside Antoinette and reached out with her protean claws.

She would have none of it. It took both hands to keep the Nosferatu from pushing her over, and she dug both sets of her fingers into their hair and scalp before driving their face downward and into her rising knee. The pressure was enough to crush his nose and force her knee into their skull, like crushing a pumpkin with a mallet. The Gangrel got his claws onto Antoinette, but they were not strong enough to stop her from demolishing their friend's skull.

But now she had animal claws, huge and powerful, wrapped around her arms while two more Kindred stepped into the chaos and slashed at her with short swords.

She slammed her foot down onto the one holding her, straight into the middle of their own foot with her bare heel. There was a satisfying crunch sound from how the bones in the foot arch snapped, and the scream that followed signaled the Gangrel's grip loosening. She slammed her elbow back, hard enough to split the Kindred's chest open and break the bones of the sternum; not enough to kill a vampire but enough that they were out of the equation.

The two Kindred taking swings at her with their weapons found her arms were free, and she stepped into their swings to get her fingers around their hands, with the grips of the weapons trapped in their palms. Then she squeezed. Fingers snapped, wrists twisted, and twisted even more when she yanked her hands back with enough force to send both Kindred flying backward. The force was enough to rip their hands from their wrists, and their mangled digits fell apart into ash within her grasp.

There was a third one with a sword. She hadn't noticed; so many robes, they all blended together like a cloud of fabrics. This woman got her sword straight into Antoinette's side, deep into her waist and intestines. The sensation of smooth metal passing through insides was cold fire. Idiot girl was young and didn't understand how to kill a Kindred. Antoinette backhanded her with a closed fist, which sent the unlucky assailant spinning down onto the floor, only to have the Prince step onto her skull and slam her foot down to pop her head with explosive force.

“Get her, get her!”

Antoinette turned to face the crowd, and she smiled at the sight of fear in their eyes as she plucked the foot of metal from her side like an annoying splinter.

But then two of them pulled out shotguns. A stab wound was nothing. A bullet wound was only slightly more inconvenient. A shotgun turning your torso into splatter art was another thing entirely. She put all her energy into a side leap, but the sea of robes had already started to circle her. Her body collided with several Kindred, and then everything became chaos.

Limbs piled over limbs. With robes in the way, everything became a mess of cloth, but it was alright as long as she felt flesh where her hands and feet were. She sank her claws into something, someone, and ripped whatever it was off of the body that held it. No time to know who or what, just tear and rip until she heard the screams of pain.

During all this chaos, Damien was watching. She managed glimpses of him between the Kindred as they swarmed her, but if he did not want to join the madness, that was fine. She would kill him last if she had to.

A few seconds of killing later, her hand found someone's face, and she sank her elder claws into their eyes before slamming their head into the marble floor with more than enough force to crack bone. She used the momentum to push herself into a stand, half-covered in robes and ashes, but rising from the mess of limbs only earned the remaining Kindred a free shot at her with their weapons.

She tried to jump up and out of the way, but one of the injured at her feet grabbed her ankle. There was only enough time for her to curse. "Salaud!"

Bullets tore into her like paper. She was no elder Gangrel or Ventrue, she had no way to prevent the bullets from cutting into her and rending flesh from bone. The several Kindred that were near her were firing pistols as fast as their fingers let them, and another who had somehow acquired a fully automatic rifle was holding down the trigger. Even Kindred strength could not keep their panicked shots from firing wide, but from so close, all that meant was many of the bullets aimed for her chest hit her arms, her legs, and her face.

She reached down, plucked up the injured Kindred who had grabbed her leg, and held their body in front of her. Just a second, just a moment to force her vitae into her wounds to close them.

She had to keep going, kill them all, slaughter them, anything to stop them from taking what she held dear. Hers! They were hers, she coveted them, held them to her and took care of them, Jack and Ashley and Julee and even Daniel. Hers. She had to save them.

The Kindred shield in her arms fell apart into ash and sizzling robes. Their comrades had destroyed their body with such ceaseless gunfire, that the young Kindred simply died. She pushed through the ash and pounced at the one of the assault rifle, even taking yet another array of bullets into her stomach as she did. Her suit was nothing but tatters, and much of her bone and insides were exposed.

It did not matter, she could not stop.

She swung her hand out toward the Kindred's neck in a slicing motion, but she came up shallow. Her strength was more than enough to make her fingers and fingernails cut through flesh, but only the first half of the vampire's neck was cut open. They fell to the floor and held their ripped open neck in their hands where vitae started to drip out. They were young, and would not last.

Some Kindred were trying to help each other, to cover up wounds that were so massive that dark Kindred blood was pooling out onto the increasing pile of robes of ash and cinder. She would kill them later, but more Kindred circled her, and what few bullets they managed to land on her moving form were no longer healing quickly.

When the bullets stopped, another vampire came at her, this one with a fire axe. The approaching Ventrue looked both determined and terrified at once, but Antoinette could only feel the violent need of the beast within her chest. She stepped in toward the axe swing, caught the idiot Ventrue by the throat, and sidestepped the axe before shifting around behind the Ventrue to keep a wall of flesh between her and any more potential bullets. Her grip was enough to crush the girl's throat.

The chaos only got worse. One of the Kindred with the gun ran at her – panicked reasoning no doubt - and another with a sword came toward the side she kept her new flesh shield. She snapped out with her right leg, cracked the one in front of her in the temple with her bare foot, and sent the Kindred spinning sideways through the air with a broken neck. Antoinette went with the momentum of her leg, spun around, threw the one she was clutching by the neck behind her – her finger nails tore the assailant's neck to shreds – and brought the foot down into a sweeping kick. The Mehket running at her fell, only for Antoinette to run over his body and use it as a step. She made sure to crush the fool child's skull into a splattering mess of bone and ash, and used the force to vault herself into the crowd that stood between her and Damien.

They were all just young Kindred. None of them were even over thirty-years embraced, not even ancillae, let alone elders. None of them were a threat, not really, not with this meager assault of nothing but guns and claws and knives. They had no speed, no strength, none of them had even attempted a true discipline against her. The bullet holes, the stab wounds, they would heal, and she could heal faster once these puerile infidels were exterminated. These cockroaches, these 'judges' needed to die.

She bolted for Damien; if she could kill him then maybe the others would crumble under the loss of their Bishop. But the circling robes caught onto her plan like a hive-mind of ants, and overwhelmed her from the front.

The first one got her fingers in his eye sockets. The second she grabbed by the throat, but a shotgun shell clipped her wrist and tore it open before she could squeeze. With the bone of her arm exposed, the muscle simply wasn't there to constrict, and the Kindred she had caught managed to pull away.

But she landed a kick hard enough into their side that they bent into a pretzel.

She ripped her fingers out of the other's skull, with flesh and ash clinging to her fingernails, and punched outward into the one with the shotgun when she triple-stepped toward them. Her whole body was a blur of force and velocity, and the punch crushed the vampire's jaw inward into an explosion of bone shards and teeth.

Movement. A blur, like her. She twisted, turned, did everything she could to pull back from her hasty movement, but it was too slow. The shade of dark was just enough to flicker, like a crack of black lightning between the robes that flowed around her, and just a glint of metal.

It past her and came to a hard stop, landed with a grace not dissimilar to Daniel, and turned around to face her with sword in hand. Damien.

Antoinette looked in front of her, down, and blinked at the sight of her arm falling onto the floor. She did not feel it, she barely even noticed it, but from the center of her bicep down, her arm was gone. Thick, dark vampire blood came out of the smoothly cut flesh in slow drops.

Pain arrived a couple seconds later, a tidal wave of mind-splitting agony. Move. Do not stop. Her other hand was starting to replace and regrow the shredded wrist, but where once it would have been almost instantaneous, now it was taking time. The oceans of blood in her were dwindling more and more, and each bullet that found her made it that much harder. It did not matter. Move.

Two more Kindred, seeing an opportunity no doubt, rushed toward her. Balancing with only one arm was beyond difficult, but she spun around and kicked outward with sheer brutality into the closer one's chest. Elegance was gone, all that was left was the frenzy of the beast inside her. She even bared her fangs and hissed – how disgustingly juvenile of her – as she sent the Kindred back with a crushed rib cage.

She tried to switch feet on the return and do the same to the other Kindred with follow-up kick, but with only the one arm, the balance was flawed and the spin was slow.

Damien must have seen it. The boy was fast, so fast for one only fifty-years embraced. He came at her again with the same speed she used, but she was broken, bleeding, tired and blinded with pain and rage. She could not withdraw her leg fast enough.

This time, she fell onto the floor with a thud. For a second, she felt embarrassed at having fallen over; so unbecoming the Prince of Dolareido. But when she looked out across the floor, and saw that her leg was there, separated from her, it seemed silly to be embarrassed.

She looked over her shoulder at her removed arm; it had fallen to ash. When she looked back at her removed leg, it too fell to ash. She looked down at herself, and the realization crept up her spine with a sickening chill.

She was a mess of bone, holes, vampire blood, her suit was ruined and left in tatters, and her hair was awful. With only one arm and one leg left, she could not even get off the floor. Failure rested in her guts like acid, and joined the new layers of visceral pain. She could not stop herself from grimacing.

Damien walked over to her, stood over her, and glared with a sickening mess of anger, exhilaration, sadness, disgust, and chaos on his face. "You underestimated me."

"... I did." It was true. The young man matched her speed and struck at just the right times. So much like Daniel.

Damien growled. "Say it, snake. Say it again, say that Lucas is a monster. Say it!"

She coughed on the vampire blood in her guts until it was on her tongue. What did he want? Why was he doing this? The robed figures around her were as confused as she was.

Part of her wanted to cry. She could not save her lover, could not save her ghouls, could not even save Daniel. She had grown complacent and weak in the half-century of peace, had let weeds grow around her city and in her tower. But then, even if she had known, she felt she would have done it again. How else would she have met that fool boy Jack she loved so much?

She coughed on a chuckle. Love. How droll. The idea was such a faded thing, crumpled and worn, and only now was she taking it out of the garbage, straightening it, flattening it out, and holding it under the light to see if she could still see what it once said. It was—

A boot to the face woke her from slipping into torpor.

“I said say it!”

“... you already know, stupid child.” She raised her only arm, winced at the pain, and gazed at the mess of torn open muscle, skin, and chipped bone. “And ... to a stupid child I beg. Do not hurt my loved ones.” Jack and her ghouls had no way out of the bathroom they were hiding in. They were at the mob’s mercy.

Her pleas earned another kick to the face. Kindred kick hard; she felt the bone in her cheek crack, but more pain was meaningless on top of her ruined form.

“What do you know of loved ones!” Damien stood over her and kicked her again, and again, this time in the chest. His boots were more than enough to crack her ribs. “You slaughtered my loved ones!”

The other Kindred had backed off, and were looking at each other in bewilderment. They must have never seen this side of Damien. Hate could change anyone at a whim, after all.

She no longer had the strength to even block his kicks. All her power, all her strength and speed, whittled away by hundreds of bullets, a damn Theban sorcery, and the conviction of this deluded fool. All her effort for peace, intelligence, awareness, all her trials and tribulations to grow Dolareido so Kindred could exercise some wisdom, all gone.

Her head turned back toward him, and she glared. “The Bishops, the priests, and Lucas himself, they all manipulated you. Under their thumb, your peers were fodder for a war and pawns in the Archbishop's ploy to rule my city with massacre." She scoffed with the little bit of energy she had left, and let her head drift to the side with surrender. It was far more information than the idiot man deserved, but with her second death only moments away, she could not resist one last insult for his master. "Now end it. I have lost."

"No!"

Oh no. No, Jack please. Get out, get out while they circle her!

But her wishes were useless. Jack, the tiny boy, shorter than all the robes he forced through, found his way to her, and even pushed aside the other Kindred to get to her. All of them were older than him, stronger than him, and armed to the teeth. He could die, and she could not do a thing to stop it.

She could hear the faint sobs of her ghouls in the bathroom. Everything was crumbling.

"You won't touch her." Jack slammed his boot down beside her, and stood between her and the swordsman.

The mob laughed, but Antoinette could see it on Damien's face. No laughter, no joy, no glee or passion there. Just anger and misery.

"Jack ... please..." She reached out with her useless, ruined limb, but she could no longer even squeeze his ankle. "Go..."

"Listen to her, Terry." Damien pointed his sword at Jack, and stepped close enough that the tip of the blade touched against the boy's chest. "I have no quarrel with the Invictus or you. Begone."

"Fuck you. You aren't touching her."

This was not happening. Damien, showing honor, gave Jack an out, and the boy threw it away without hesitation at some fool notion of saving her. If she could, she would be tearing Jack a new orifice.

The other Kindred stepped closer still, like circling sharks, but Jack did not back down.

Damien was practically vibrating with anger. “How dare you. This snake ki—”

“Shut up!” Jack brushed the sword aside. His words alone had everyone stunned, and his arrogance had them looking at each other bewildered. “You aren’t touching her. The fuck do I care what a brainwashed cultist says?”

Antoinette went rigid when Damien slashed. Jack stumbled back a single step, and half-turned just enough so she could see the massive slash that cut him from shoulder to hip. Jack, take the hint, please. Leave!

Jack fell to a knee, holding the huge wound, coughing and choking on small drops of dark Kindred blood.

“You try my patience, child!” Damien stepped closer and stared down at Jack. “Now get out of the way.”

Please Jack. She reached out, and managed to only lightly touch the boy’s leg with her ruined, only arm. Please, go. “Just ... go ... please...”

But he didn’t listen. He stood back up, trembling, but on his feet nonetheless, and stared right back at Damien.

“Fuck off.”

Antoinette coughed on her own blood, straining with all her might to grab Jack’s leg and push against him. The boy would not budge.

“Bishop Damien, we don’t want a war with the Invictus. Let’s just put him out and deal with the Prince.”

“You may be ri—”

Jack punched Damien, hard. The young man summoned some strength and put a knuckle into the other man’s face hard enough to make a cracking sound.

The silence that filled the room was colossal.

Damien stumbled back, rubbed at his jaw, and glared daggers into the boy. But Jack stood his ground all the more. He was a trembling mess, Antoinette could see that, but he did not move. Her last shield before death.

“You’re a brainwashed zealot. You’re worse than scum.” Jack spat Kindred blood at Damien’s feet. “You’re a tool, someone else’s tool at that. Can’t think for yourself, can’t think at all, can’t—”

Antoinette tried to cry out, but nothing came. She had nothing left, not even for when Damien’s sword stuck through Jack’s chest and out his back.

Jack looked down, and she was sure purely out of reflex, he grabbed the sword that was skewering him, but Damien gave his gun to a nearby Kindred, and used the now free hand to reach out and grab Jack by the shoulder. He kept the sword buried through Jack’s chest.

“I do not think the Invictus will go to war over a single fledgling,” Damien said. Antoinette could hear the venom drip from his tongue. “You die with your snake mistress.”

Jack, please ... run.

Jack raised his head from the blade, reached out with his hands, took Damien's shoulders, and pulled him in closer. Before she could see what madness would befall her love, the black of torpor pulled her under.

But she heard it.

"... look into my eyes."

~~Natasha~~

She had never felt so useless in her whole damn unlife.

She was on her feet at least, but Lucas had her neck in his fingers, and every so often the Elder gave her neck a bit of a squeeze to remind her. He may have been weakened with his long torpor, but that didn't mean anything compared to her. He could pop her head off like a cork with a moment's effort.

And there was still at least a dozen other Kindred around. They all had their guns pointed at her sire, and they kept taking quick glances at her to make sure she didn't try anything. Not that she could with her hands bound behind her.

"So, sheriff, what will you do once your Prince is dead?" Lucas said.

God he spoke just like a preaching zealot.

Daniel didn't move though. He just sat there at the other end of the tower lobby, kneeling, head hanging, and eyes raised just enough that Natasha could see them. He looked so broken.

"I imagine you have delusions of revenge, or justice, or some other ridiculous notion." Lucas tightened his grip, and raised Natasha up so her legs were dangling. She didn't need to breathe, but that didn't mean his fingers digging into her neck didn't hurt.

“But know that I will keep your childe hostage. If you force me, I will stake her and leave her buried deep underneath the city where only I know.”

No response. Her sire was a statue. He wasn't even holding his sword anymore; it was just discarded metal at his side.

It made no sense. They hadn't spoken in years, and even when she was just a fledgling, they could never connect. Not after she was embraced. Not after losing her life.

It made her sick. After leaving him, joining the Invictus, and just cutting the man out of her life, he was rendered broken and useless just by her capture. Her weakness, his liability, was going to get the Prince killed. Her self-loathing approached new heights.

She managed to look around at the robed figures. None of them were as old as her, and she was sure she could take any of them in a proper fight, if she had her sword and her gun. Any of them except Lucas. Think, think, don't stop thinking. Find a way out. Put that Mehket brain to use.

Her thoughts came to a grinding stop when Damien stepped out from the doorway that lead downstairs. He was covered in ashes.

“Damien! My childe, my prodigy, you live! Is the snake defeated?” Lucas lowered her and let her rest her feet on the floor, but his grip did not waver.

Damien was hunched over, tattered and worn, with bullet holes and cuts and gashes through his robes. He walked with a limp, and the sword in his free hand was a mess of Kindred blood that was fading to ash. When he came into full view, the cultists around her cheered, and Lucas's grip tightened with what was probably pure joy.

The Bishop was dragging the Prince by her hair. He'd won...

Daniel's head raised, and he stared at the body of the Prince. She wasn't dead yet, or there'd be nothing but ash, but Natasha was shocked at how Antoinette was still alive. She was missing an arm, a leg, and much of her flesh was missing. She was practically naked, as her clothes had suffered far more bullet holes than Damien. Why did Damien have any bullet wounds? Did the Prince have guns hidden away? Did she even use guns?

Damien came closer, his head lowered, his fingers wrapped into Antoinette's ruined hair. Natasha could see ribs, torn open pale flesh that exposed the cold and withered organs of a vampire. She could even see where a sword had cut clean through the bone of her arm below the shoulder, and the leg at the thigh, with enough speed that the cut went through clean. Damien's work, no doubt.

A part of her was relieved. It was over. They'd won. But the relief washed away the next second; she'd be a hostage until Daniel either died or left the city, or maybe Lucas would let her go once he had the entire city under his thumb and all the powers of his age returned to him.

Either way, it was not a city she wanted to be a part of. Christ, if she could just get away, right here, right now, Daniel would be free to slaughter them all. Poor Daniel. The man was looking at the ruined body of his oldest friend, and he looked even more broken. His eyes were shattered.

"Come closer my dear friend! I am most surprised you have managed to capture the Prince alive. And I see that you are alone. Most tragic, that so many of your brothers and sisters perished." Lucas raised Natasha again, but it was just so he could gesture with both his hands and preach to his group. "But rejoice my children! We have won! Only Garry remains an enemy, and that young fool will be no match without the Prince or the sheriff's aid."

Damien stepped in closer.

Lucas kept talking. He went on and on about the future, about building a new regime, about serving God as the damned children they were, about Longinus and monsters and their eternal duty. The Kindred around Natasha cheered more, and they raised their guns in the air, their swords and knives. They even jumped a few times. The Archbishop just couldn't shut up though, and went on about a future in God's plan. He walked over to Antoinette and put a foot on her torso to stand victorious while he gave the final words of some idiotic speech Natasha eventually tuned out. Disgusting.

But Damien only stepped in closer. Natasha didn't look at the mob, she looked at Damien. His eyes were still downcast, and the more she stared at him, the more she couldn't understand what he was doing. The Prince fought with her hands, so why were their bullet holes in Damien's robes?

Damien got so close, he could have reached out and touched Lucas. He finally let go of the Prince's hair, and just stood there. Natasha tried to glare at him, but his eyes were barren. No anger or turmoil or any of the depression she had seen when she was his prisoner in the altar room. None of that inner conflict that she had tried and failed to appeal to. She could tell the Bishop was not in agreement with Lucas's plans before just from the frustration on his face, but now, his face was void of anything. Like a doll.

“Bishop Damien, you shall be handsomely rewarded. You all shall be! This was the first step in our new church. The Lancea et Sanctum shall turn this city into a monument to—”

Natasha fell to the floor.

She sat there, on her ass, blinking in confusion and looking around in panic. Lucas was no longer holding her, no one was holding her hostage, no one was pointing any shotguns at her or running at her to try and cut her head off. No one was doing anything. Everyone was just standing there, looking at Lucas and Damien.

A loud thunk made Natasha squeak. She looked beside her, and for just one fleeting moment, Lucas looked back at her.

His head rolled back and forth on the floor a couple of inches, eyes locked on Natasha, a shocked expression burned into his face. And then, he fell into ash.

Another thunk earned yet another squeak from her. Damien had fallen to his knees with no grace, and dropped his sword beside him. The blade clinked a few times on the floor, and in the dead silence of the lobby, it was like resounding thunder. For a single second, he looked identical to Daniel, a broken man with their weapon beside them, useless. His sword, however, was covered in a fresh coat of vampire blood.

The Kindred around Natasha freaked. They screamed in horror, looked at each other, screamed some more, and pointed their weapons at the sheriff, at her, at Damien who had just betrayed them.

“D-Damien killed the Archbishop!”

“Fuck! We—”

“N-no one move!” One of them said. A Ventrue, Natasha could see. Ever the first to try and control a situation. The Ventrue pointed their gun at Natasha. “Move and we’ll ki—”

Natasha screamed. The Ventrue split down the center, from the tip of his head to the crotch. The cut was so fast, so clean, that the Kindred just fell apart like two sticks that were leaning against each other. A shade, a shadow, just a split moment of an image of Daniel was there, and then he was gone.

The next Kindred to die was the one closest to her. A side swipe of the sheriff's sword cut through their waist, and then into the waist of the Kindred that was next to them. No one had even realized what had killed the first Kindred before the next two died. No one but her; they didn't have her eyes.

She couldn't use her hands, but she pushed herself across the floor, away from the panicking mess of robes. Another one of them fell apart, and again it was the closest one to her. Kindred blood splattered everywhere. Some of it turned to ash quickly, some of it took its time to fade, some of it even turned into light embers. But it was everywhere.

Now the Kindred knew what was happening. The sheriff was attacking, and they couldn't even see him. Natasha could, just barely, using her Mehket eyes to spot the fast movement of her sire. Even then she could only pierce his cloak of night and speed for that moment he stopped to cut one of the robed figures into nothing but limbs.

"R-run! Ge—" This one lost the top half of their head, between the teeth. Daniel had put his blade between their teeth and pushed through their spine, below the skull. What few Kindred remained, screaming and hollering in terror, unloaded all their guns at their now dead friend. Bullets and shotgun shots ripped them apart, but Daniel was just a dark blur, already gone.

Natasha couldn't watch anymore. It was slaughter. She rolled over onto her knees, got up, and sprinted for the other end of the lobby where there was a stairway down to the Prince's basement.

Jack! The boy was peaking his head out from behind the wall where the doorway to the stairs was, and once Natasha got close to him, she ducked herself around the corner to hide.

Jack managed a smile at her. He looked exhausted. Worse, he too was cut up. There was a hole in the back of his suit, and when she had passed him she saw his front had been slashed open.

But the kid didn't sit down or take a breather. It looked like he was watching Daniel's slaughter, but when Natasha traced his line of sight, he was in fact staring at Damien and Antoinette.

The boy was dominating Damien.

"Madame ... Vola..." he said with a heavy voice.

Her jaw dropped. This kid, not even a year embraced, was dominating Damien? That's how the Bishop got all the bullet wounds; he'd been forced to kill his own.

"... Master T-t-erry. I'm glad t-to see you live."

Julias's childe, he definitely was. And it was scary. Julias was a very strong Kindred for his age. But this little boy in front of her was far stronger than any young neonate had any right to be.

Finally, the screaming stopped. Natasha poked her head out like Jack, and the beast in her gut at last relaxed. Daniel was standing there, sword at his side, surrounded by nothing but the robes of the second dead Kindred. Before him was Damien, still on his knees, but something was different.

The Bishop was trembling.

Jack collapsed against the wall and fell onto his ass, hands between his legs, and a smile on his face. Exhausted. Natasha looked past Jack toward the Bishop, and her heart sank.

Damien had reached out for Lucas's robes. He was holding the fabric in his hands, clutching the dirty and ruined fabric to his chest, and sobbing. Daniel stood over him, sword drawn, ready to strike, but Damien didn't seem to care. He just held the robes to his chest and rocked back and forth on his knees. His wails were loud, screams of pain, filled with tears and cries. They tore into Natasha's ears, and she couldn't even raise her bound hands to cover them.

"Wait!" Natasha said. She got up again, but stayed by Jack. "Wait ... don't ... k-k ... kill him."

"I spared him once. I won't spare him again." Daniel threw his gaze at her, and Natasha stepped back. The ice there hit her hard, and the fact the man was covered head to toe in more Kindred ashes.

"P-please. Please he ... he d-doesn't..."

The front doors swung open. "What the hell?"

Everyone turned to face the front entrance. Julias was there, Beatrice too, and they both walked in looking ready to fight. Julias was decked head to toe in weaponry, and had a shotgun at hand. Beatrice, upon seeing the mess before her though, shifted to stay behind Julias.

Jack reached out for Natasha and braced himself using her shoulder. "Julias ... awesome. If you don't mind, could you ... yeah."

The boy started to fall, and Natasha turned to catch him. Her hands were still tied though, and the poor boy collapsed into torpor.

Chapter 23

~~Julias~~

There were robes and ashes everywhere.

Julias just stood there, eyes wide, and his gaze panned over the room of dead silence so profound, he could hear the rubbing of fabric from Beatrice as she stepped behind him. Damien — he presumed based on Beatrice’s description — was kneeling, crying, and holding a unique robe to his chest. Daniel was standing over him, ready to execute him before the lake of ash-ridden robes.

Antoinette looked like hell had chewed her up and discarded the bones.

He could see Natasha in the back of the lobby, hands tied behind her, and Jack, standing on his own despite a nasty gash across his torso. Thank god the kid was still alive.

“Julias,” Jack said. His voice was labored, like he was running on fumes. “Awesome. If you don’t mind, could you ... yeah.” And then he collapsed like a sack of heavy sand. Even Beatrice winced when they all heard the loud crunch of what was probably the kid’s nose.

“Mister Mire.” The sheriff gave him a nod. “If you don’t mind, could you help Madame Vola?”

He quirked a brow. This wasn’t exactly what he was expecting to find. Though, looking at the remains of what was clearly a slaughter, he managed to piece together what happened. Or at least, that Lucas had lost and that Jack was still alive.

He walked past Damien, Beatrice still beside him, and kept his eye on the Bishop as he did so. The young vampire was pretty beat up himself, but the sheer noises of the destroyed Kindred was what shocked Julias to the bone. He'd never seen a Kindred look so broken.

“Natasha,” he said once he reached her. He looked down at Jack, knelt down to roll him over, and grinned down at his childe. The kid was in torpor; he'd be fine once he got some blood in him.

“Julias,” Natasha said. “I guess you came t-to save Jack?”

“Yeah, but I guess the sheriff handled it?”

“Uh ... no, n-not really. No it ... it was Jack.”

He raised his head back to Natasha, eyes wide. “What?”

“He, umm – thank you ... Miss D-Damor.” Natasha gave Beatrice a thankful nod; the Nosferatu had stepped behind her to tear the binding off her wrists. “I didn't get t-to see the fight between the group and Antoinette, downstairs, b-but Damien came out dragging the Prince, and we all thought-t-t-t ... he had won. But ... Jack was ... c-controlling him. And used him to k-kill Lucas.”

Holy. Fucking. Shit. Julias just shook his head in utter disbelief. God damn it Jack, that's three elders now. What was it with Jack and Elders? Of all the problems a fledgling – not even a neonate – could have, killing off the city's Elders should not have been one of them.

Laughing, Julias scooped the kid up into his arms, and shook his head some more.

“You came with Julias,” Natasha said, and she smiled her little smile at Beatrice. “I trust his j-judgment.”

She may have thought differently when she found out Beatrice was a witch now. Natasha's words had Beatrice blinking in her own surprise though, which earned another chuckle from Julias. Everything was coming up better than he could have hoped for. Part of him was waiting for the hammer to drop, but fuck that, the hammer could wait, wherever it was.

Damien, on the other hand, was a harsh contrast to the rest of them. The Mehket Sanctified, a bit small and lean looking man, hadn't moved from his spot. His cries and wails were starting to fade, but they were replaced with quiet sobs and a petrified pose. If Jack had dominated him and forced him to kill his sire, that was indeed something he could imagine breaking someone's mind.

Why hadn't the sheriff killed him yet?

"I uh ... I asked the sheriff to spare him." Natasha started walking with him as Julias made his way to the front door of the lobby. "I think ... I d-don't think ... he deserves to die. He was just ... he..." She turned the words around; Julias could see her struggle with thoughts through her eyes as she considered how to explain. "He was..." Whatever it was, she couldn't articulate it, and she eventually lowered her head and shrugged.

He nodded, but he couldn't understand. He had thought he knew Natasha, but he missed her sire being the sheriff, and he certainly didn't expect her to ask Daniel to spare their assailant, after what he did. The whole situation was making Julias feel like a fifth wheel.

"The fuck you letting him live for? He attacked, you guys won."

God damn it Beatrice, smooth as sand paper.

Natasha frowned at his lover with a strange determination on her face Julias had never really seen before. "Lucas manipulated him. He ... he deserves a second chance! I saw it! I saw it in his..."

Beatrice put her hands up in surrender. “Your choice, your funeral.”

The group of them reached Damien and Daniel. The man was just sitting there, clearly with no intention of moving, and the sheriff looked ready to cut his head off if he tried anyway.

The Prince was still next to him. Christ, she was missing a leg, an arm, and a lot of her was torn up, split open, ripped and shredded with what looked like a million bullet wounds. But she was still alive; she’d heal once she got some fresh blood in her. A lot of blood in her.

Julias almost dropped Jack at the sound of two girls screaming up into a high octave. Ashley and Julee, the Prince’s two ghouls, came running out from the back stairway, and they fell to their knees by her body.

“She’s still alive. Still alive!”

“Mistress, oh god. We’ll—”

Daniel took a step toward them while putting his sword away in a smooth motion behind his back. “Ashley. Julee. A moment, please.” Adjusting his glasses, he looked to his childe. “If you could take the Prince to her chambers, Vola? Ashley and Julee will guide you. Girls, you will have to feed her yourselves.”

Daniel and Natasha looked at each other for a little while, like some sort of opaque wall was blocking their view of each other. They glanced at each other’s toes, then each other, then their toes again.

The barrier between Natasha and her sire was all too familiar to Julias. When was the last time Viktor had called him by his first name? Had he ever? It was a barrier he fought to make sure never rose between him and the unconscious kid in his arms.

“Julias?” Natasha said.

“Go ahead. You can report to me tomorrow.” He let his gaze linger on her, with some extra eye contact to get across his meaning. Let him deal with Maria, Natasha. No doubt the girl was smart enough to have put together Maria’s involvement herself, and he didn’t want his friend getting herself killed by saying something she shouldn’t.

Natasha lowered her head, and nodded. The little girl was only the same size as the Prince’s two ballerina ghouls, but she scooped up the tall woman’s battered and broken body without issue. Even a Mehket had some strength to them, and she used it to hold Antoinette to her. It was a strange sight indeed, how the small Natasha wasn’t tall enough to stop Antoinette’s hair from reaching the floor with how her head drooped, but it was more than telling that Daniel had asked her to help the Prince. The sheriff really trusted her.

Then she turned, and left, with Ashley and Julee guiding her. They were panicked; they had never seen Antoinette injured like this, or injured at all, Julias was sure. But she’d be fine with a couple days rest and a lot of blood. More blood than the Prince’s ghouls could provide themselves, but the sheriff could handle that.

Julias frowned at the weeping man on his knees, and looked to Daniel. “What about him?”

The sheriff reached down and grabbed Damien’s wrist. The young fool didn’t fight him, didn’t struggle, he just dragged like dead weight.

“We have cells more than capable of holding him. Madame Vola insists we spare him.”

“Sheriff ... we all know about Natasha.”

Daniel raised a brow at Julias, adjusted his glasses with his free hand, and looked past him to offer Beatrice the tiniest frown. The Nosferatu almost squeaked, and again stepped behind Julias to keep him between the two of them. He couldn't blame her.

“I was a fool to hope it ... never mind. I will handle things here. Take care of your childe, Mister Mire.” With just the faintest smile, he turned and walked off. Julias wasn't sure if he was seeing things; he had always assumed the sheriff's face was carved from stone.

From the back, he just looked like a plain guy wearing a trench coat, dragging some punk kid by the hand across the floor. For just a moment, Julias swore he could see the weight of centuries on the man's shoulders, something that shined through his quiet demeanor.

Then the sheriff stopped, and looked over his shoulder to him. He really was smiling. “Mire? Your childe ... thank him, for me.”

And then he walked off.

Julias and Beatrice just blinked at each other, like someone had slapped them both with a hand buzzer.

“Yeah. Definitely, yeah. I uh, I'm going to take Jack back to my place.”

He turned and walked out of the lobby. The last thing he wanted to do was try and explain the mess behind him to the authorities. Despite the gunfire he'd heard on the way, there wasn't a single police officer in sight though. Of course not, but who was to blame, Maria or something the Prince had done? He'd find out later.

“Beatrice.”

“Yeah man?”

“You, you um...” It was just the two of them in the Elysium garden. No young Kindred fledglings or neonates were around, and the sound of gunfire had probably scared off nearby kine. The night sky was open, cool, and the silence was golden.

If it wasn't for the unconscious, cut open kid in his arms, it'd be a really romantic moment. But at least Kindred didn't make any noise when in torpor; Jack was as quiet as a corpse.

Julias stepped out a little further into the Elysium garden, stared at the sky for few moments, and closed his his eyes. “Thanks for coming with me, and ... and I wanted you to know ... I wanted to tell you—”

But Beatrice took a step in closer to him, and reached out to put a clawed hand on his chest. “You don't have to, Superman. The Prince spoiled it for me.”

“ ... what? Spoiled?”

“Total spoilers.” She stepped around Jack, leaned up, and gave Julias the most girlish peck on the cheek he never thought her capable of. “So we can bypass the awkward first time ‘I love yous’ and jump straight to the good stuff. I'll see you in a couple nights, k? Take care of the kid in the meantime.” She winked, gave a wave with a little curl of her clawed fingers, and walked off by herself. One moment she was there, the next, her cloak of night hid her from his view.

And he was dumbfounded. Spoiled? What? What had the Prince said to Beatrice?

He frowned down at the kid in his arms. “Your girlfriend is too damn smart. And she ruined my moment.”

But, as he left the garden and started down the street, with humans giving him a wide berth with confused looks on their faces, he smiled. Beatrice loved him too. She loved him. The damn psycho he loved so much loved him back.

His Nosferatu lover had never been in love, and for that he was jealous. It’d been a century of loneliness for him, and he wore it on his face despite his best efforts. She saw through it, called him out on it, and she was the first to do so.

He laughed. People were already looking at him like he was weird, carrying a boy in his arms, but now they openly stared at him as he called for an Invictus taxi with more laughter. Damn he was really looking forward to her next visit.

---

~~Jack~~

He woke up with blood on his tongue. More than just on his tongue, it was in his mouth and going down his throat. Warm, fresh, and whatever sense of taste he’d developed from becoming a vampire ached for the taste of that blood. Hell, he could tell he was drinking it down as part of his waking reflex, no conscious effort necessary.

Memories slammed into him like a truck. Antoinette! Damien. He looked around in a panic, expecting to see the chaos of the Prince’s tower, but there was only a giant bed, curtained walls, and Julias.

“Julias! Christ I ... yeah, I remember. You came, but ... shit, is Antoinette alright?”

“She’ll be fine. Most Kindred would have died from that much damage, but she is an elder.”

His sire was sitting next to him, his suit jacket undone, leaning forward with elbows on the bed, and his fingers netted together to brace his chin. There was a subtle smile there, a smile Jack rarely saw on his sire, a weird and kind of young looking one.

Beside him was a kine Jack had never seen before, some man also in a suit.

“Uh, who’s that?”

“Just lunch for you. You were pretty beat up. That Damien sliced you open.”

Jack chuckled, and winced with the pain of it. “Heh, not nearly as bad as Viktor had.”

“Viktor. Yeah, so that’s three now, Jack. You’ve killed three elders.”

“Um, the kine wi-”

“I’ll wipe his memory later, don’t worry about him.” Julias dismissed worry about the man beside with a simple flick of the wrist. The kine just nodded. Total drone mode. “You killed Viktor and Tony with some quick thinking and a lot of luck. But Lucas? How did that happen?”

Jack’s smile faded, his head lowered, and he put his hand on the huge gash on his stomach. The wound was closed, but his clothes were still cut open, just like that time he woke up in Antoinette’s office after Viktor.

“It was ... Antoinette was fighting Damien and his mob, down in Ashley and Julee’s bedroom. We were hiding in their bathroom. We could hear the slaughter...”

And just like that time when he'd awoken from a frenzy, on that rooftop alone with Mrs. Pavala's body, nausea flooded him. He pulled his knees up to his chest and hugged them to his body. Every time it came, he never saw it coming, but just a bad thought, a bad memory, and the nausea of murder ripped into his guts and made him want to vomit.

Julias called it humanity, something Kindred lost with ages, but to Jack it was just ache. Screams, the sound of gunfire, and the sickening crunch of bones. Him and the two ghouls, they were hugging each other and hiding in the corner of that bathroom, listening to the mayhem.

Flashes of memory hit him, and he hugged his knees closer. PTSD maybe, but to a Kindred, what was that? His family, Rebecca stabbing him, decapitating Mrs. Pavala, and worst of all, the way Viktor's face changed when Jack had defied him.

Where was all this coming from? He'd go days, weeks without thinking about this, and now it was hitting him in the gut. Again.

It sucked more because, for that split moment when Julias told him Antoinette was safe, he was so damn happy. And he still was. But now that the battle was over, and the beast inside him was calm, he did not like the black thoughts that crept up onto the edge of his consciousness. His eyes in Damien's eyes. His mind in his mind. His hands, Damien's sword, cutting through robes and Kindred. Seeing through Damien's eyes Lucas's head falling off of his neck.

It wasn't like in the movies, where a quick cut meant the head sat there on the neck before rolling off. And Lucas didn't stand there for a few seconds, like a headless chicken either. The man just fell apart, with Kindred blood splattering over the—

"Hey, you ok?" Julias said, and he put a hand on Jack's shoulder.

Jack shook his head, and hid his face in his knees. “Just ... remembering things.” He shrugged. Don’t dwell on it, Jack, don’t worry about it, just ... don’t.

“Jack, come on.” Julias reached out, took his wrist, and pried it away from his knee to force him to look at him. “I know kid, I know. The beast in your guts keeps that shit down, but just a moment of vulnerability and it hits you so hard you want to puke.”

He knew what it was like? Jack coughed on a half-sob. “I have a hard time picturing you feeling like this, Julias.”

But his sire rolled his eyes. “Jack, I didn’t have anyone when I was turned. Viktor didn’t care about things as ‘trite’ as empathy. I lost my wife, and I lost my life, same as you. You don’t think I hid in dark corners of the city and just cried for days? You don’t think I accidentally killed a human or two in my youth?”

The idea of Julias, tall, confident, and classic mobster, crying in a dark corner emo style was too much for Jack. He started laughing, but tried to hide it as best he could with his other hand. It was the sort of laughter that gently broke through quiet sobs, and turned them into more chuckles.

“Laugh it up,” Julias said, but he chuckled too. “But I’m not going to put you through what Viktor put me through. Talk to me, later tonight. Right now though, I need to know what happened.”

“Ok, yeah.” He lowered his knees, took a deep, unneeded breath, and thought back. “The sounds eventually stopped, and I heard Damien and Antoinette arguing. He was going to kill her, and ... and I ran out to stop it.”

“I don’t know ... fifteen? I didn’t care, man. I just ... I just had to save her,” he said. Julias groaned with obvious frustration, but Jack could only shrug. “So I stood over her broken body, and got in Damien’s face. He slashed me, and then he...”

“He what?”

“He ... he was cracked, Julias.” Jack put his fingers on his chest, and pointed where the slash had ruined his suit jacket. “I could see it when he slashed me, when he stabbed me, when he argued with me. He didn’t want to be doing what he was doing. He had ‘torn and unsure’ written on his face. So I ... broke him.”

Julias tilted his head to the side. “You dominated him?”

“Yeah. I saw the crack in his gaze, and I took it.” Pride rose up in him, Ventrue pride that was well deserved, he felt. “I grabbed his mind and controlled him and used his body to ... kill the others.” And the nausea returned. “I saw it through his eyes, but I just focused on taking advantage of their surprise. It was ... yeah, you saw the aftermath.” Despite the sickness in his gut, he could feel the beast in him stand proud for his accomplishment, and he straightened his back up to mirror that. “Then I tricked Lucas, made him think Damien had defeated Antoinette and was taking her unconscious body to him. I got him.”

He lowered his head again, and choked on another half-sob half-chuckle. “I ... got him. He won’t threaten her anymore. He...”

Julias nodded, but let out a long sigh to go with it. “On one hand, I am both very impressed with you, and very sad that you had to go through that. Full dominating anyone is difficult, and a thousand times more difficult on a Kindred much older than you. And you had to kill ... you even killed Lucas.” Then, much to Jack’s surprise, Julias frowned at him. “On the other hand, that was a mistake.”

“ ... eh?”

“You killed an elder, but this time more than just the Prince knows about it. I know, the sheriff knows, Beatrice knows, Natasha knows, and the Bishop Damien ... Worst of all, if any of them tell Maria...”

Shit. Shit shit he forgot about Maria. “Oh fuck, fucking god I ... oh no.” He put his hands on his face and clawed at his cheeks. “Even after Garry told us about those two! I ... I had to save Antoinette! I had to, and ... shit!” He reached out, grabbed his sire’s jacket, and started to shake the much larger man. “If she finds out, she’ll kill me! She’ll do more than kill me!”

There were no lack for stories among the other young Kindred who worked for the Invictus, and many of them spoke of what Maria did to her enemies. She had, apparently, the grandest mastery of the nightmare discipline of any Nosferatu in the city, including Jacob. She could make you live your worst nightmare, make you think it was real, make your brain tear itself apart.

Now he was really panicking.

“Don’t worry about it for now. No one’s going to rat you out, except for maybe Damien if he gets the chance.”

“You guys spared him? He cut off Antoinette’s arm and leg! He ... he...”

A flash of memory from the ball flashed in his brain. Epiphany hit him so hard, he blank stared at Julias with his jaw hanging.

I only know one other Kindred who has that weird, unknown quantity. Unpredictable. Hard to guess. I like it!

Damien. He meant Damien! No one had seen her heard of this vamp for fifty years, and the way his face looked when Jack stopped him, that man was beyond conflicted. And Jacob knew it.

“Jacob...”

“Jacob?”

“He knew about Damien. He ... he...” He could picture it so easily now, so easily that it was sickening. That old monster, manipulator, arranging events in the Danse Macabre, just to see ... just to see what Damien would do? What would happen to him, maybe? The fuck was that guy’s end game?

Julias got up and started pacing, hand on a chin, other hand under his elbow, with that classic thinking look on his face. “If he knew about Damien, then he probably was in communication with Lucas before their suicidal attack. They were friends before.” And then he punched his palm like a classic courtroom drama. “And he probably convinced him it was a good idea.”

His sire stepped near the bed and leaned back against the wall with arms folded across his chest. “That does sound like something Jacob would do. And now that Beatrice works for him, he—”

“What!?”

“Yeah. You can trust her, but ... yeah even without her, he’ll have some way to piece this together, eventually. Maria and Jacob aren’t enemies, but if Jacob sees a way to turn this info into something he can use, then—”

Jack put up his hands and called for a time out. “Wait wait wait. Antoinette and the sheriff are alive, right? I like to think I’m on their good side. If Jacob moves against me, he’ll be signing a death warrant.”

“You think she’ll fight for you, if it comes to that?”

“I do.”

The words were out before he even thought about it. Julias blinked at him, and Jack blinked at himself, but there it was, he just knew.

“ ... you love her, don't you? Not just kid stuff, but really?”

“Yeah.” He smiled again, and his mind drifted back to what he'd done just hours ago, himself standing between Antoinette and Damien. There had been no hesitation there either, once he realized she'd lost the fight. He just put himself there, between her and death.

Then Julias got serious. He walked up to the side of the bed, reached down, and held out a hand to pluck Jack up onto his feet. “Viktor was a very powerful elder, but I knew I would outmatch him if I survived the centuries. I'm good Jack, I am very good.” Then he put an arm around the kid, and gave him a half-hug while walking him toward the bedroom door. “And you'll outmatch me eventually too. I picked you for a reason, and you're proving it was the right choice.”

“Arg, my ego, it's going to explode.”

“Laugh all you want kid, but if you thought you had a bulls-eye painted on your back before, you're in for a surprise. I hope you're ready, because you're in the Danse Macabre deep now.”

---

~~Damien~~

He woke up with a scream.

The twisting world of black, death cries, and blood flashed in front of his eyes with the torrent of awakening. He tried to jump, to run like a terrified rabbit, but the chains that held him snapped with enough force to nearly break his ankles.

“Ah ... ah...” He looked around. Wrists were bound to the wall behind him, as were his feet. The room was just a metal box, not unlike Tony’s room they used to hold their Lancea et Sanctum objects. The only light source was one of the LED wall lights the Prince seemed so attached to. Was it because the light was white? Faux sunlight? It always was an interest to the dragons, he knew, to explore how to obtain what was lost to them in the embrace. The ability to see the sun was perhaps the most romantic fool’s hope.

The twisting of his flesh brought his attention back. Skin and muscled bound over each other to close the wound in his literal heart, and it was a painful process. Healing from the stake that someone had just plucked from his chest. Better than dying a second time though.

He looked down at himself. His clothes were full of bullet holes. Had he been shot?

Right, that’s right. He’d been shot by his own followers before he killed them. Before Jack, riding his mind, killed them.

Before his body had been used to kill Lucas.

The reality of that fact sat on him with so much weight, he couldn’t appreciate it. His sire was dead, and he had killed him. Jack, that tiny fledgling, had killed Lucas, but if Damien had been stronger and more secure in-mind, the Ventrue would never have gotten his hooks into his body.

They were disgusting memories, blurry images of his friends dying by his sword — not friends, he thought they were thugs. At the worst of the flashback, he saw his sword cutting off the head of his mentor so that it fell to the floor — mentor? He had never taught him anything, and Damien had spent fifty years alone.

Damien gave a small grunt. “ ... you spared me.”

“Yeah, we did!”

Natasha. The girl’s voice had found a volume Damien had not expected. She was no longer bound, and someone how given her some proper clothes, something quiet and boring of course.

“ ... then. Not now, then,” he said.

This time it was the sheriff’s turn to grunt, barely audible. “Oh, during the purge. Was that a mistake?”

“Of course it was.” Fifty years, fifty fucking years he slunk around Dolareido like a weasel. For God, he had told himself. He was suffering for God.

Now he was suffering for nothing and no one and it was all meaningless.

He raised his head and forced himself to look around. Natasha and the sheriff were standing next to each other, close enough that their similarities were all too obvious. They were in the room with him, and behind him was a simple metal door, closed. They wouldn’t be able to get out unless they were let out, so one of the Prince’s thralls must have been on the other side.

They treated him like he was dangerous. That made him smile a little, but it didn’t last. All that work and now he was just a trapped rat with nothing left. Lovely.

“Perhaps. You did nearly kill Annie,” the sheriff said.

Annie? Ugh. Even Natasha looked at Daniel with a quirked brow. To hear the cold and quiet sheriff use such a cute nickname was very odd.

“But I failed.”

Daniel stepped in closer, but his expression was as blank as always, with monotone eyes behind boring teacher glasses. “Because you’re too smart.”

“ ... excuse me?”

“I spared you because I saw that look in your eye, kid.” Daniel raised a gloved hand and put a finger to his own temple. “When everyone else was just mindlessly following orders, Lucas’s orders, I saw your eyes. You were thinking, analyzing, trying to figure out what was going on, how, why, who, and where to go.”

Damien had never expected the sheriff capable of so many words. Had Damien been like that? The memory was a lifetime ago

Daniel reached out and put that tapping finger against Damien’s temple.

“And I knew you were worth sparing. The Prince does everything she can to encourage self-awareness in our kind, and when I saw you had those eyes...” This time, Daniel poked him in the chest hard enough to nearly break bone. “I saw the same look Natasha had. I embraced her only weeks before we started the ... you know the rest.”

Damien wanted to vomit. This waxing about self-awareness was garbage ... wasn’t it? He looked back, and thought of his sire, standing in front of over a hundred Kindred and giving a rousing speech about God, being God’s monsters, and serving in his grand plan. It had all made so much sense, without any real, concrete evidence to support it. And Damien could remember trying to push down that voice in his head that demanded he question it, and instead just accept it.

“You’re a very powerful Mehket for your age, Damien.” The sheriff reached into his trench coat and pulled out something wrapped in leather straps and old strings. With slow fingers, he unwrapped a small blade. An innocent looking thing, small, a knife you’d store in your sleeve. “So I know you have the sight. Auspex.” Daniel put the innocent blade into Damien’s hand, and leaned in a little closer, close enough that Damien could see past the glasses and into the man’s eyes. “So see!”

Both Natasha’s and the Bishop’s eyes went wide at the sound of the sheriff raising his voice. They didn’t recognize it, so completely alien.

Damien looked at the small blade between his fingers. He knew this blade; he’d seen the Bishops and the Archbishop with them, so long ago. Damien had never managed to get his hands on one. They carried them on their belts, and every newcomer had just assumed they were for protection, or decoration.

But the emotion that poured from that blade into his mind was not so innocent. For just a single moment, all he could see was the flash memory, blurry, a mirage of hazy faces and moving bodies. He recognized the church he used to go to after hours, after the sun had set, after the living had gone home and the dead came out to preach of their unholy mission.

Then the vision changed. One of the Bishops, and the Archbishop Lucas, standing about with a Kindred between them. Someone tied up, someone with their hands and feet cut off, someone they were killing.

“The city is ours,” Lucas said. “It is mine. And all will bow to me.” His voice sounded like one of those classic cartoon villains, complete with the blatant laughter with head raised to the sky.

Time froze on that single moment. He didn’t want it to, but the vision, the sight felt otherwise. His vision passed between each

Bishop and the Archbishop, all looking at each other and the Kindred they were butchering. They were all laughing. Arrogance was on their skin like boils. Pride dripped from their teeth. Righteousness and delusion soaked into their bones.

It made him want to vomit from his dry, empty stomach.

Damien dropped the blade. Again, the dead of silence was all that greeted him of the metal room, until the blade tinked against the floor. It might as well have been thunder.

He looked down at it, at the two other Mehket in the room, and then away. Everything was a joke, just one big fucking joke.

“Some will say Lucas only grew so desperate tonight because his half-century torpor damaged his mind.” Daniel shook his head, picked up the small, once-innocent blade, and stared at Damien from only inches away. “But we know different. Your sire was a monster long before then, and he slaughtered dozens of Kindred to spread his churches.”

“I ... he...”

“He sired you for the same reason I spared you, Damien. You have potential.” The sheriff poked him in the forehead, and eased his head back to keep it upright with his fingers. “You have a brain. So tell me if I’m wasting my time, and should I just kill you?”

“Longinus ... was it all a lie?” His faith, his beliefs, God, Longinus, the afterlife, damnation, was it all just Lucas and his plans for control?

Daniel sighed, stepped back, and started wrapping the knife up before handing it to his child. “The Lancea et Sanctum are in many cities, and many are just as violent as Lucas. Many are not though, and some even preach of tolerance. And ... you saw what Lucas did. His faith had some merit.” The sheriff winced then. The sight of the Prince getting struck by a blast of lightning from the now-disintegrated blade had been nothing short of godly.

Even the sheriff was admitting to the possibility of God then? But Lucas was just a zealot with typical aspirations of control? Damien coughed on the laughter trapped in his throat.

“God should have struck my sire down.”

“Yeah, but they didn’t. So I ask again, should I just end you? Do I need to kill you to protect Jack?”

“The boy? ... no.” Damien shook his head again, and let out a blatant sigh of exhaustion and defeat. “I have only myself to blame for that, and...” And the kid just took advantage of the crack his doubt had already put into his walls. “... but all I have are my words.”

“My childe seems to trust you, and I trust her judgment more than mine.” Daniel sighed, shook his head, and stepped up to the door. A small knock-knock later, and it opened from the outside. “I’m leaving you here for now. We’ll be back later to discuss it.”

“... ok.”

What else was there to say? They were letting him live. Or rather, Natasha was keeping him alive.

He tilted his head to the side when he looked at her, eyebrows furrowed with confusion. It didn’t make any sense! He mouthed ‘why’ at her, and she returned his gaze with a timid smile.

“I saw your eyes when you k-kidnapped me, and ... when we were alone in your alt-t-t-er room.” She squirmed a little. Such a tiny thing, weak and pathetic, and...

No, not pathetic. Not weak. Lucas was still in his head, preaching about strength of faith, courage to follow orders. It made Damien squeeze his eyes shut to force the reflex down. Lucas was dead. Think for yourself.

If he wasn't chained up, he'd probably have fallen to his knees and starting weeping again.

"My eyes?" he said at last.

"I could t-t-t-ell you didn't want to be d-doing ... what you were doing. You ... you have..." She looked down, frowned, and stepped toward Damien. It was the first time he'd ever seen the girl look so certain. "You have nice eyes."

Eyes. All in his eyes? The image of Jack's eyes hit him then, big, green, and ripe with humanity.

Damien chuckled. He thought he'd crushed his own doe eyes long ago. Apparently not. He managed a nod then, smiled, and let his head droop.

"I'll see you tomorrow," she said, "I want ... t-to t-talk." She even giggled, a sound that had Damien's eyes wide even as they were still looking at the floor. "I won't shoot you this time."

"... ok."

There was something peaceful about defeat. He couldn't really fight or struggle anymore, all he could do was accept it. He'd been wrong to listen to Lucas, and it had taken all this fucking insanity to make that finally click. Maybe ... maybe he could start over.

A second chance? Sounded like a miracle.

~~Natasha~~

One of the Prince's many thralls closed the door behind her. How many kine worked for her? How many was she capable of keeping seduced with her Daeva disciplines at once? It was scary just how strong she was.

Scarier was how just a couple hours ago, the Prince was a mess of flesh and ash and bone on the floor. Natasha shivered at the thought.

"... are you ok?" Daniel said. He'd been looking at her, and only managed to ask once he looked away, hesitant to ask probably.

The two of them were down in the tunneled halls of the tower. It'd been a long, long time since she had ever seen these halls. She was impressed that the Prince had managed to update the lighting.

"I'm ... ok, yeah. Ok." She hugged herself, nodded, and started walking. "... sire."

"Yes?" He didn't turn around to look at her, he just kept walking.

But before she could stop herself, she had reached out, grabbed his hand, and forced him to turn around and face her. She was frowning too, even glaring. She tried to tell herself to stop, but it wasn't working. Frustration was overriding her ability to think and calculate, but she didn't care.

"You ... you ... you idiot!"

"... excuse me?"

"Idiot! Y-you ... you d-didn't ... you shouldn't ... you're not my master anymore. Why did you let Lucas ... nearly ... k-k-kill the Prince!" Her other hand trembled, but she kept her grip on him with the other. His actions made no sense, and he had to answer for that!

She couldn't have been the reason. Daniel and her hadn't spoken in decades, not really. So why?

He looked at her, and the weight in his eyes struck her cold. Her hand fell away from his, and her eyes were trapped in his own. The sheriff removed the glasses too, as if he was trying to break her heart when he gazed at her. But, despite the sadness on his face, the lanky man offered her a small smile.

“Sorry. Sire and childe. You know the tale.”

“That t-tale doesn't ... it doesn't apply to us! I left ... left the Ord-d-do Dracula when I was young. We haven't ... we don't...”

Then, he turned around, and got down on a knee. Like some sort of knight, he reached out for her hand that she had let drop, and put it back into his.

“W-w-what are you-”

“I am old, Natasha. Four decades of us separated is not long. I watched you grow from a distance, kept my eye on you, and let the years go by. You grew into into a very intelligent Kindred, extremely useful to the Invictus, and ... someone the Prince and I want to keep around.”

They had been watching her? Both Daniel and the Prince?

“ ... I do. The Ordo Dracul seeks to transcend our curse, to understand it, and that is a scary thing to consider to someone like you, who prefers hard facts, numbers, money.” He chuckled.

Who was this man holding her hand? He never chuckled before, not ever. He never even used to smile, like he was now.

“I remember the work you showed me ... at ... that nest.” She motioned with her free hand to the tunnels behind her, where somewhere they had stashed away a Wyrms’ Nest. “It was supernatural!”

“Kindred are supernatural.”

“But—”

“You saw what Lucas did, Natasha. Do you still think we are nothing more than parasites, or a disease?”

She frowned and lowered her head. Truth was a harsh mistress, and it had slapped her in the face when Lucas had somehow called upon something divine or magical to attack the Prince. The lightning strike was seared into her memory.

“I...” Take a moment. Think it through. Be careful with what you’re thinking, Natasha. “I ... I want to know ... how he did that.”

“He called upon—”

“No, no I mean ... really understand.”

Daniel tilted his head to the side, got back up, and turned to put his back to the wall. His gaze was quiet again, but at least he kept his glasses off.

“The Coils of the Dragon, the Cruac of the Circle, the Miracles of the Sanctified. They do not easily fit into tidy boxes that you can file away, Natasha.”

“That’s fine! I ... want to learn.” She stepped toward her sire again, and offered her best ‘I’m sorry’ face. She knew how to look apologetic. Maria had encouraged that skill.

“You want to rejoin the Order?”

“Yes!”

“ ... what of Vivienne?”

“I ... she...” With a sigh, Natasha joined her sire against the wall, hands behind her and one foot kicking at the floor. “She ... she’s moved on.”

“Like you did with me?”

The parallel was definitely there, and it hurt. “Maybe. She’ll ... she’ll ... either she’ll rejoin the Invict-tus, or ... she’ll ... I don’t know.”

“Well, with Lucas gone, there’s no reason you can’t speak to her.” Sighing, Daniel looked down at the glasses in his hand, and mirrored his reflection in them. “Don’t do what I did, and just watch.”

Easier said than done. Natasha felt abandoned by Vivienne, betrayed even. But then, that was just perfect, wasn’t it? She knew how her sire felt now at least, and after a few seconds, she smiled up at the lanky man beside her. If this relationship could be saved, then hers and Vivi’s definitely could be.

“I’ll give her a few days and see what she does. B-but I will talk to her.”

“Good.” Daniel returned her smile – such a wonderful thing to see on his usually stone face – and gestured back down the hall with a nod of his head. “What do you plan to do about the Bishop?”

“You’re ... letting me choose?”

“Within reason.”

“I ... um...” She netted her fingers together, twiddled them in front of her, and chewed on one of her fangs. Damien deserved a second chance, she was sure. There was much more to him than Lucas knew, than the others knew, and probably anyone else knew except her and Daniel. But that’s how it always went; Mehket could see the truth behind the lies and the deception. That was what Mehket did. Mehket and secrets, moths and flame. “I think we should release him.”

“ ... you’re serious?”

“I am! You were right. And I’m right! He’s ... he deserves a second chance.” Saying it out loud was much more cheesy than she could have imagined.

But it only made her sire chuckle. “I understand, more than you know.”

~~Beatrice~~

Beatrice sat on the edge of one of the caves, deep inside the Circle’s cavern of total metal awesomeness; she really liked it. Ghouls wandered around, keeping the colossal underground cavern clean, changing the candles that sat on skulls in wall grooves, and dusting off the bones that decorated the rock. She was smiling.

Behind her, Jennifer was on her knees on the furs, and combing Beatrice’s hair. Behind Jennifer were a couple of male ghouls, sleeping, naked, and smelling of sex. Jennifer had just finished a bout of fucking when Beatrice had come back, and had insisted on chatting.

It was the first time a girl had demanded chit chat, and she really didn’t mind. Wow, how much had she changed? Soon she’d be wearing dresses – oh shit she’d already done that just a few nights ago!

“So you didn’t come back after the ball. Have a lovely night with Julias?” Jennifer grinned a sly grin, and kept combing.

“Yeah, I did.” The smile on Beatrice’s face could not be hidden, especially not with her massive crocodile teeth.

It had been a few nights since the ball. Memories of Julias eating her out in the dark alley were the kind of memories she was hoping to make, especially after seeing those hungry eyes in her white knight during the ball.

What she hadn’t expected was the night of being pampered like a queen, with slaves dotting on her, massaging and fingering her while she had her man’s cock inside her ass. Christ, the thought of that array of fingers rubbing her all over her bits while Julias watched her cum on him was enough to nearly have her running back to him.

But the guy could use some time with his childe. He deserved that.

“No details for me?” Jennifer leaned in closer, and wrapped one of her hands around Beatrice’s stomach. Yet she kept combing her hair, and damn it, Beatrice found herself loving having someone else comb her hair; it was new.

“You’re getting double penetration on a regular basis, slut. What details could possibly satisfy your curiosity?”

“Aww.” Jennifer pouted, but leaned back and resumed combing from a normal distance. “It’s not about me. Just the thought of that Mister Tall’n’Broadshoulders bringing you back to his mansion, you, Miss Scary’n’Sexy, is a real turn on.”

Beatrice rolled her eyes. Jennifer really was young, only ten years embraced, and it was starting to show. Beatrice knew it would normally irritate her, but not this time. What normally bothered her was proving to be fun when on the greener, happy side of the fence.

“He used his jedi mind tricks to get a couple to come home with us. Lots of sex ensued.”

“Oh my, a Kindred pair sharing a kine pair?” She leaned in even closer this time, and put her chin on Beatrice’s shoulder. “Were you perhaps doubly penetrated as well?”

Beatrice slowly turned her head away. There had been dicks, and fingers, and stuff. She didn’t need to say it though!

“Delicious.” Jennifer squeezed in a little tighter, and put her cheek against Beatrice’s. “Can I come next time?”

So friendly, this Ventrue. That’d be two Ventrue getting into her pants, too. Maybe she put out some kind of air of vibe that attracted overly-confident Ventrue types?

“ ... I’ll ask.”

Hey, Jennifer was extremely hot. There’d be no harm in asking Julias, right? And Beatrice was getting kind of attached to her fellow witch. It was nice to have a proper girlfriend.

“I’ve never shared my bed with another Ventrue. Does he fight for the top position? That could be—”

They both stood up with a jolt.

They hadn’t heard them coming, no one had. The ghouls were carrying on about their business, and all the other Kindred hiding out in the cave hadn’t stopped whatever witch things they did. No one had given warning. But just like that, like stepping out of the air itself, the Prince and her dog of war were in the cave.

“H-how...” Jennifer stood behind Beatrice, practically hiding, and kept a hand on Beatrice’s side. She was trembling.

Beatrice was trembling too. The sheriff was there, standing in the middle of the grand chamber. His hands were folded across his chest, and his trench coat looked as boring as ever. Hell, even the flat, monotone look the school-teacher sheriff gave everyone from behind his boring glasses was the definition of dull, but when his eyes met Beatrice’s, she took a step back deeper into Jennifer’s little cubby-hole.

She could feel the anger pour out of the beast inside the dull man, and it was more than enough to bury the whole of the Circle’s cave. She could almost see the sheriff’s inner beast, like a titanic, coiling snake of shadow and venom. The moment he decided to strike...

And beside him was the Prince. Tall, beautiful, and just as pissed. At least she was wearing something more interesting, a lovely power suit with loose pants, and for just that split moment Beatrice was intrigued by it. But then Antoinette’s wandering gaze found hers, and again the Nosferatu was paralyzed.

If Daniel was the serpent, ever still until ready to strike, Antoinette was the tiger. Quiet when she wanted to be, and more than willing to be loud when she wanted to be.

Othello came out of his hole, and so too did Aaron. She had never spoken much with Aaron, a Gangrel pale-skinned fellow of average height and build. But he too, like Jennifer, blinked in dismay at the sight of the two suddenly in their home, and backed away.

Jacob was in the further end of the grand room, closer to the wall that held the largest array of bones in a grand decoration of patterns. He was just in his robe, like usual, and he’d been playing with a new pile of bones when the two dragons arrived.

“My Prince, sheriff, I’m humbled that you’ve both decided to visit!” Jacob raised a hand through the air, like he was parting a crowd, and stepped forward toward them. “What brings you to the Circle of the Crone’s little hole in the earth?”

The Prince walked forward to meet him. Othello was about to join Jacob, but one look from the sheriff made him back off.

“I nearly died,” she said. Just a whisper, but the solid walls of the cavern made it echo in the dead silence.

“I’m sorry?”

“I nearly died.” She got even closer, until there was only two feet between the two titans. “My ghouls could have died. Jack could have died!”

“I’m not sure what—”

The sound of her fist colliding with Jacob’s face was just a quiet thud, but the following silence was colossal. The ancient Nosferatu fell back in a spin onto his hands and knees. Even caught by surprise, he managed to land with cat-like grace, and he got up with a casual nonchalance before rubbing at where the Prince punched him.

“I take it your date with the Archbishop didn’t go well?”

Beatrice winced. Antoinette was shaking, fists tight at her sides, and her body screamed ready-to-kill.

“Why would you do this? I thought—”

Jacob was the one to step in this time, and he laughed right in the Prince’s face. “I didn’t do anything! I—”

“You goaded Lucas! You knew what he would do! You arranged this, you knew he would bring chaos to my door. You knew Kindred would die!”

Two elders screaming at each other. The tension had Beatrice crouched down and ready to bolt like a scared animal. Hell, no use denying it, she was a scared animal.

When Jacob punched Antoinette right back, everyone gasped. Only the sheriff didn't make a noise.

“How dare you,” she said. “I will—”

“You needed a wake up call, Prince.” He used air quotes around her title, and snarled more rebuttals. “When Tony and Viktor were vying for power and looking for ways to usurp you, what did you do? You waited, and came to me when you wanted a way to end them with minimal damage. Minimal damage!” His voice was a scream, but it deteriorated into a laugh. “You forget what Kindred are!”

The two of them were throwing around secrets that could shatter the Danse Macabre if abused, but it was like neither of them cared anymore.

Antoinette rubbed at her cheek where Jacob punched her, but she didn't strike back. Instead, she glared daggers into him. “It does not have to be that way. It does not!”

“Bullshit. You know it, I know it, and you need to accept that! You spent over a hundred years trying to raise Tony ‘right’ and all you managed was to create your typical scorned lover, with a good dose of obsession. How long did you try and convince Viktor to change!” Jacob stepped in closer again, and he shoved the Prince back with both hands.

This wasn't the battle of wits Beatrice had always pictured elder Kindred engaged in when they fought. This was too familiar. This was no different than her arguing with Julias. And the sheriff was just letting it happen, but Beatrice could see the frown grow on him.

“Viktor was alone. Tony chose to be alone. But you, you had someone!” The Prince caught Jacob’s wrist, squeezed, and yanked him in until their faces were almost touching. “You had someone you loved! You know it does not have to be this way!”

“She’s dead!” Jacob yanked his hand free, and shoved her again. “She’s dead and you know why!”

“And you know it was worth fighting for! We do not have to devolve into savage beasts!” The Prince stood her ground, but lowered her head and looked to the side, toward Beatrice. Just a quick glance, just a small hint of knowing before looking back at Jacob. “Do you think Minerva would—”

Jacob growled, a real growl, a growl that did not fit a human’s mouth, and he punched the Prince again. This wasn’t the same as the others, the frustrated jabs and the childish shoving, this was a real punch, with all a Nosferatu’s strength put into it.

Antoinette went flying. She spun out of control in the air and collided with the front wall of the cave over the entrance. Bits of ash trailed in the air from where she’d been flying, and when she finally came to a stop, Beatrice could see much of the Prince’s face was destroyed by Jacob’s punch. The rock had cracked where her body smashed into it.

Daeva and Nosferatu were both very, very strong, but neither could take a punch like a Ventrue or Gangrel. Whoever got the first punch was liable to win the fight, and Jacob was the one who did.

But he didn’t follow it up. It wasn’t because of the sheriff, who just stood by and watched. Maybe Jacob didn’t want to follow it up, and instead fumed and snarled from where he was. He tore off the bandage that covered his eyes to expose the empty voids of permanently seared, ruined flesh.

“Shut your fucking mouth. Fucking snake, do you have ... how dare ... you fucking...”

Beatrice brought both her hands up to her mouth as Jacob’s speech fell apart. Minerva? She looked down at Jennifer and mouthed the name, but Jennifer just shrugged and mouthed ‘I don’t know.’

The Prince put a hand to the wall and forced herself up. Beatrice could only imagine the elder’s stamina; it was only a few days ago she was barely in one piece. But the Prince shrugged off the damage, put a hand to her half-ruined jaw, and shifted bone into place. It regrew in moments.

God fucking damn she healed fast. The fuck happened to her in the tower that had her so near death before?

“Jacob.” She walked toward him, confident in her stride despite Jacob’s attack, and stopped before him. “You may have your witches fooled, but I remember the days when we came here, the three of us. And now there is two of us. You,” she said, and pointed a finger at him, “I ... I do not want to see you gone, as we saw with Viktor. We do not have to be enemies.”

Jacob didn’t seem interested in a nice chit chat anymore. He took another swing, but the Prince was ready this time, and she ducked under it with speed that had Beatrice’s eyes sting trying to follow it. Daeva were faster. Antoinette got her hand around Jacob’s throat, lifted him up, and choke slammed him into the stone earth hard enough Beatrice could feel the vibration.

“So you will listen!” She slammed him down again, and Beatrice gasped at the sound of breaking bone when Jacob’s skull cracked against the cave floor. “You know there is only hard times in the Kindred's future, witch! You play your games and let us destroy each other, so only the strong survive, but your game makes us weaker! Soon there will only be a handful of us, strong, wise, and alone! What good is there in our second life if we are doomed to live it alone!"

"Not everyone wants—"

She cracked his skull again.

"You deceive yourself as much as anyone else! I remember how you laughed, full of joy and spontaneity when Minerva was alive. I saw what it did to you when she died. And now, like a child, you want to spread misery! Your culling is a lie, and I will not have it. I will see you dead before I let you risk everything I have worked for, for everything I have earned."

Beatrice got ready for the next hit. If the Prince really pushed it, she could probably punch straight through Jacob's skull and splatter his head; even Jacob couldn't survive that. But it never came. Antoinette gave a long sigh, let go of the Nosferatu in her hands, and stood up straight.

"I found someone, Jacob. Someone with whom I can lower my mask." She dusted herself off – comical considering the situation – and reached down to offer Jacob a hand. "You think us all animals, concerned only with survival. I think differently. Minerva thought differently."

Jacob tried to swat the hand away, but Antoinette caught his wrist and held onto it.

"Enough with your Daeva poetic bullshit, girl. Minerva is dead, and your—"

Antoinette yanked him to a stand with a hard grip and harsh glare. "You do not fool me, old monster. If you could just let your misery go, you could move on.” She got in closer, until they were almost touching noses. If Beatrice didn’t know any better, she’d think Antoinette was going to kiss him. “And, perhaps, you could find someone again.”

Jacob lowered his head, looked away, and gave a small grunt. The dude looked ashamed, and even a little broken.

“But,” she continued, “if you try to test my worth with more of your games, I will not be merciful next time.” She pulled away and started to walk off, but stopped after a few feet and looked over her shoulder at the old man. “We do not agree on much, old monster, but...”

“Yeah, I know. I remember our promise.” He shrugged a little, and rubbed at the back of his head where a cracked skull was healing. “Besides, I knew you’d come out on top.”

The Prince gave him a mix of a smirk and a glare, and left through the cave’s tunnel entrance with the sheriff behind her. No more words, no ceremony, she just walked out.

Really? Is that what this was about? Jacob used to have a girl, dead now, and now he was sour about it? And what promise?

Beatrice leaned forward to hop out of the wall cubby, but Jennifer grabbed her arm.

“Might want to—”

“Fuck mights and wannas.” None of that shit. Done with that. She was in the Circle now, and part of the reason she was here was because of Jacob’s words to her that they didn’t beat around the bush.

So she walked up to him, stood in front of him, and reached over to grab his eye bandage from the floor. “So, uh, Minerv—”

“Annie ... she would say Nosferatu are such tragic creatures.”

Annie. Beatrice could only imagine the ramifications of calling the elder by such a nickname to her face, if she said it. But the Prince and Jacob had a history she had no idea of, and a huge one, apparently.

Jacob didn't look her way, but held out a hand. Putting the bandage into his palm, Beatrice found herself sighing with the weight of it. Jacob put the bandage back on over his empty eyes; the metaphor of it hiding his beast and curse was grandiose and disgusting. Nosferatu's curse indeed.

“Triss. You seem to really like that Mire fellow.”

“ ... I do.”

Jacob gave her that crazy smile of his, but after a while, the insanity of it faded away, and she was left with a sad smile from a sad man. “Enjoy it while you can, you know? It's worth it.” He didn't wait to hear what she'd say back, but turned around and started to walk out of the cave.

Jennifer jumped down beside her, jaw dropped and eyes wide. “Holy shit, right? I've never seen the master so ... human.”

“Me neither.” Beatrice looked down at the claws of her hands, claws that, like all Nosferatu disfigurements, made Kindred wear their curse on the outside just as much as the inside.

Claws that didn't bother Julias one bit, and that made her smile.

~~Antoinette~~

To be kept in her basement, pampered by her ghouls and her sheriff, was sickening.

She wanted to be above the earth, in her tower, controlling her corporations and undoing the damage that fool Lucas had caused. But Daniel would have none of it. It had only been a few nights, and she had already undone the damage to her form, but for some reason her companions felt she needed more. Perhaps her visit to Jacob's domain had scared her friend? When they had returned, he had forced her to bed and brought her her ghouls, and more blood on top of that as well.

So she sat within the luxury guest room of her tower's depths, and worked on managing her city as much as she could from her large tablet. The wonders of technology made her ancient mind spin sometimes, but unlike others, she made sure to bury herself in the power of it. Today, she sat upon a bed with her back to the wall, her legs folded out in front of her along the blankets, and a host of tasks to accomplish on her woefully limited tablet.

Ashley and Julee were laying on the colossal bed, wearing their nighties, snoring, and very much drained of blood. They would not awaken for many hours, but she did not want to let them out of her sight.

She put the tablet down and smiled at the two creatures. Her two ghouls were such beautiful little women, but no one ever guessed how much she also enjoyed talking with them. They were ditsy things, but she had cultivated intelligence within them, and that self-awareness she valued so much. They were her sounding board for many of her frustrations, and they often offered simple but elegant advice.

And that idiot Bishop in her dungeon would have killed them, purely because his version of his beliefs of his archaic religion thought kine were to be kept separate from Kindred.

It took all her effort to not destroy the tablet in her hands. But Daniel had insisted. That fool man was being persuaded by his childe over his friend, but then, the thought of Natasha and Daniel sharing words quelled her anger. Maybe her old friend would start smiling again? If Madame Vola could bring that out of Daniel, then it was worth it.

She set the tablet down on her lap, and stared into the empty void of nothing. Her mind wandered to that night Daniel had saved Jack, and returned him with burns and a huge gash from Viktor's sword. Jacob had been there, and he had insulted her humanity by suggesting she could not care for a fledgling such as Jack.

When was the last time someone cared for you, witch? The insult she had returned to the old Nosferatu rang clear, and dug at her own chest like old claws. She had struck a sore spot then, talking about Minerva, and she had done so again tonight. The old monster was never the same since then, and it hurt that she could not help him.

Jacob was smart, self aware, even wise, and she valued that. But...

Footsteps. She raised her eyes to the door at the end of the room of marble and curtains, and the joy that flooded her threatened to drown her. Jack was there, dressed in the most casual clothing she had ever seen him set foot outside his apartment in, nothing but a simple t-shirt and jeans with socks, and she could smell blood on him. He must have just fed.

"..." No words. She even opened her mouth to try, but it all just seemed inadequate. So they just smiled at each other, and she reached out for him to coax him toward her with a curling finger.

While her lover was dressed casually, she was in her black kimono robe. It was a soft and elegant fabric, and just slightly see-through, just enough that it would be unbecoming to wear in public.

Jack's smile only grew, and he climbed up the bed to sit down beside her.

Again, no words. With a slow hand he reached out, and took her hand in his; no coaxing was necessary. The boy netted their fingers together, rubbed her knuckle with his thumb, pulled her hand up to his chest to hold it dear, all before he settled his head against her shoulder, hip to hip.

“You fed,” she said. He still had a bit of the glow Kindred received fresh from a feast; then he must have fed only moments before coming.

“So did you.” He motioned to the two snoring ghouls. “And you regrew your arm and leg. That was ... yeah.” His fingers tightened around hers.

More silence. For a moment, she thought perhaps some horrible, uncomfortable wall had risen between them because of the attack. She had enthralled nearly everyone in the room, and that included Jack. But when she looked down at the boy resting his head against her, his smile never wavered. He started to rub his cheek into her shoulder too, and he put a small kiss on the hand he held.

“Jack,” she said. She could hear the weight of her voice, no matter how much she tried to lighten it. “I ... am sorry, for that night. For so many reasons, but ... at its worst, I enthralled you.” The way Rebecca did when she stabbed you.

“Yeah. That was a shocker.” He chuckled, and unlike her, there was no weight to his voice at all. “For a minute there, I couldn’t understand how you weren’t being worshiped as a god by the whole world.”

She groaned and looked away. “Fake admiration.”

“Yea.” But the boy just smiled up at her, buried his face against her shoulder, and squeezed her hand all the harder. “It definitely felt different than usual. Nothing like how I normally feel. Nothing like love.”

The silence returned with a vengeance. For just a moment, she thought she would have to catch her breath, a reflex lost centuries ago and drawn up by the boy’s words. When she looked back to him, then away, then back again, the boy had put his face back into her arm. He did not look up to meet her eyes, and did not even tremble, as he always did before. He only waited, and squeezed her hand with a tighter embrace.

He was confident with his words.

She lowered her head, and started to comb her hair with her other hand. The phrase was like puzzles on her tongue, and every arrangement she tried in her mind was a failure. Elegance, eloquence, artful inflections, dramatic prose, nothing worked. This damn fool boy had rendered her speechless.

“I...” Her voice cracked. A quiet inhale, something like ... a sob? Was she crying? No, but there was just the hint of that emotion, rusted and forgotten, starting to fill her chest. The beast in her gut, her vampire instinct, was sounding howls of warning and vulnerability. Push him away, put up the wall, forget this insanity.

She pushed past it.

“ ... my little Ventrue.” She turned then, and Jack was forced to sit up straight when she removed her arm from his leaning.

She replaced it with her chest when she reached out, wrapped both her hands around him, and embraced him. He was perhaps a little unprepared, as her hug left him bent over in a weird arrangement, but she could not help herself. She had to hold him, squeeze him, bury him against her, feel his presence within her grasp. Her lips found the top of his head, and she kissed it.

“I love you too.”

“ ... wow,” he whispered, and he turned his knees about to face her. Her hug was returned, and when he looked up to meet her gaze, his green eyes swallowed her whole.

Another gasp from her, one she could not stop. Why were his eyes so powerful? They carried such emotion, such genuine openness and honesty, such brightness that it scared her. But they drew her in, and she was helpless but to kiss him.

Part of her felt cheated. There was no dramatic conversation or argument, no huge unfolding of secrets or opinions, no emotional music played by cherubs. But, instead of such fantasy, something real and tangible and heavy with truth was in her arms, kissing her, making her feel.

A tiny sob mixed with a sigh did escape her, and she did not care. Daeva were allowed a little lenience with emotional displays, she reasoned. She found her hands were trembling lightly, and with a moment to calm herself and settle her shaking fingers, she yet again squeezed Jack to her body with a constricting hug. Jack flailed a little, and she did not care, she simply had to hold him as close as possible, like a small child squeezing their favorite pillow to their chest.

It was an uncomfortable position for the two of them, trying to embrace in such an odd fashion on the bed. She chuckled at the silliness of it, let go of the boy, pulled her legs up beside her on the bed, and created lap for Jack. When she motioned to it, Jack’s eyes lit up, and he turned to lay down upon his back with his head upon her lap.

“How’d you know?” he said. He put his hands on his chest, and smiled up at her, beaming.

“Because you are a young man, and what young man does not yearn to rest his head on the lap of the woman he loves, oui?” Oh Jack, you delightful little boy, now she was using the L word. It was the first time it had been used for an age.

With a pleasant sigh, she put one hand on Jack’s chest to rest it there, and her other found his buzzed head and caressed along its curve. Such a tender position, her love laying down upon her bed, his head upon her lap, and her hands playing with his hair, caressing his ears and lightly dragging her fingernails along his scalp. The boy was melting under her touch, she could tell.

“I owe you for so much, little Ventrue. The last I saw before torpor took me, was you standing between myself and that vile Bishop.”

“Damien, yeah. That guy ... that guy was broken.” He sighed into her touch, and nudged his cheek into her leg as he turned his head, facing her. “I feel bad for him. I mean yeah, he deserved what I did to him, but ... but he was broken before I dominated him, let alone after I made him kill the Archbishop.” Jack coughed on the last few words, like he was trying to spit out poison.

“Do you wish for me to spare him?”

“ ... you’re letting me choose?”

“He is no threat to me, my love.” Ah, again, the L word. It made blood butterflies flutter inside her stomach; all the more, it made Jack smile. “He sits in my prison until I decide what to do with him. Natasha and Daniel think there is potential in him, but after what I did, and now what you have done to him...” She sighed, and continued to gently caress the boy’s head. “But as you said, he was broken before he attacked. They may be correct, and we should give him ... a chance?”

“I ... um...”

“Please be careful, Jack. If we were to go through all this hardship, only for some compassion to cost you your life, I would ... please be careful.”

He gave a nod, and nuzzled his cheek into her leg. “I’ll have to see him again, talk to him, before I can make a decision.”

“That is good. For now then, I will keep him locked away.” If Damien dare hurt her little Ventrue, she would not hesitate to use him to test every torture she had learned in her second life; half a millennium of undeath had taught her many tortures she had yet to try.

“But if Maria finds out I’m the reason Lucas is dead...”

“I would not worry about Madame Turio, my Terry. I will deal with this in the next primogen meeting. If she does manage to find out that you are responsible for Lucas’s death, she will know that only death awaits her if you suffer for it.” She grinned then, and the hand upon Jack’s chest picked up his chin and pointed his face up toward her. “Do you remember what I said, the first night we were together?”

“Um, mm ... you said you would ... kill anyone that threatens me.”

“And do you think that claim has changed, especially now?” She caressed his chin, and grinned down at him with her red eyes while her fingertip touched his lips. “After you have nearly died to protect me? After we have ... we...” More blood butterflies fluttered, but she closed her eyes for a moment and forced them to calm. “We love each other, and ... I am sure you must realize what ... what that means to me.”

“I wasn’t sure before, thought maybe I was just being a dumb lovesick kid.” He talked, but as he did she ran her finger lightly along his lips. More smiles from him rewarded her play. “Until ... until I was standing over you, and I dominated Damien and ... yeah.”

She winced. “That is the first time you have killed, is it not? I know you had an accident with a beastly frenzy your first night, and later you managed to kill Tony and Viktor. But to feel the death of someone with your hands is a different matter, even if you were inside someone else’s mind for it.” Her words were too vivid, she realized, when Jack winced after she said them. “My apologies, I did not ... that was rude of me.”

Everything their second life threw at them wore down on their humanity. That was what it meant to struggle against the beast, and that was the curse of the Kindred. And yet, while Jack had suffered enough to harden most, she saw no waning in his sincere nature.

“No no, you’re right. But ... no regrets though.” He kissed her fingers, and blew a little air against them. “And now I know what you meant when you said you’d do the same. Really get it and ... I...” He gave up on the words, reached up with a hand, took hers, and held it close to his heart. “No regrets.”

“None.” This time it was her that raised his hand, and she kissed it before placing it back on his chest.

Jack’s smile was so beautiful, it threatened shatter what composure she had left. She had no self-control left, so she leaned down to try and kiss him instead.

The position lead to a colossal failure. Her breasts were large enough and heavy enough that they had already been next to Jack’s face, with her robe grazing his cheek. Bending over just trapped the poor boy underneath them, head between her breasts and lap.

“Oh, my apologies once again,” she said, and she sat up again before smiling down at the young man.

Jack’s smile had turned into something of a sneaky grin. He scooted over across her lap so his cheek was directly against her stomach, and the underside of the breast closer to his face rested against his cheekbone and nose. Only the thin layer of silk of her kimono robe separated her skin from his lips.

“Jack,” she said, and a coy grin crept onto her lips, not too dissimilar to Jack’s. “Are you ruining this romantic, and emotional moment by rubbing your face into my breasts?”

In the past, Jack would not have realized she was only playing with him. This Jack though, the new one on her lap with the mischievous grin, he nodded a yes and hid his face under her breast. Literally. He slid in closer, as close as the position allowed, and worked his nose about to create some slack in her robe. Then he pushed his face underneath her heavy breast, and nuzzled his nose against it.

Now that she thought about it, she realized it was the first time Jack had ever truly made the first move. And she would be remiss if she did not reward him.

She blushed life for him. When he blinked at her, perhaps surprised that she was so easily persuaded, she took the neckline of her robe at the chest, and pulled it down to hook it underneath the breast closest to his face.

Whenever she exposed her body, Jack’s face lit up with such excitement and awe that it always managed to make her insides warm. They had had sex many times now, many times, but all it took was one of her breasts left to hang outside of her robe to make the boy hypnotized, aroused, and nervous. His nervousness was considerably less now though, and she did not even need to tell him to blush life for her. He did it on his own.

Now her breast rested against his lips and nose, with no fabric to stop him from giving her skin a kiss. And another. And another. He let out a quiet moan against her while he took his time covering the underside of her breast in petite, loving kisses.

“My little Ventrue, forever infatuated with breasts.” She talked as if it were nothing but playfulness, but those kisses were making her skin grow more sensitive. And the loving position of it, just holding the boy’s head in her lap and letting him kiss her, his absolute trust in her, was arousing her. Her nipple was growing harder, rising on swollen areola, and the boy had not even touched it yet.

“Sorry,” he said between kisses, “but I can’t ... just ... it’s so soft! And heavy!” He leaned into her, pushed his face up a bit, and her breast overwhelmed his visage. When he pulled away, her breast slipped down from his face, and her nipple was now at the level of his mouth.

The warmth of her own laughter surprised her; the silly fool had seen her breast a hundred times, and yet he was still enraptured. She took his head into the nook of her left arm and helped prop his neck up to keep his lips level with her nipple. Her right hand reached up to her robe, and pulled it down across her chest to hook it underneath her other breast, so now both were laid bare. Then, she took one of his hands, and placed it upon her newly exposed skin.

“No matter their age,” she said, voice a whisper now and filled with summoned sultriness, “men love to be embraced and held to a woman’s bosom.”

Jack groaned with obvious agreement, and lightly wrapped his lips around her nipple. The sparks of pleasure were immediate, tingling waves of gentle sparks that spread out from her chest and down through her body. His other hand squeezed, softly, fondly, and ran its thumb over her other nipple in caressing circles.

His skills had grown considerably. Countless times she had let the boy devour her breasts, and with time, he was learning exactly what touch worked best on her. Both nipples were now engorged, sensitive, and his touch was just the perfect level of obsessed but gentle to coax more of those sparks of bliss from her body. His lips pulled at her nipple in a slow, soft tide of gentle suckling, and between suckles his tongue massaged the swelling flesh with caressing circles.

She still had one arm free. While the left held the boy's head just slightly propped so he could suckle upon her, her right slid down to find his waist. With smooth dexterity, she undid the button of his jeans, and unzipped them.

“If you could remove your pants, little Ventrue?”

The boy nodded and reached down with both hands to slip both his pants and underwear free of his legs. As he did, she took his shirt at the collar and raised it up and over his head. He was left nude, and with a hungry sigh, she eased him back into the same position so he could resume suckling and massaging her body.

She did oh so love the lean shape of his form, small but defined. The fingers of her free hand found his chest, and her fingernails traced lines along his hard body down his stomach, across his abs, back and forth along his pelvis and apollo's belt, until finally her fingers eased around the base of his erect member.

“God...” He broke away from her breast to let out a moan, and he gave his own sigh of bliss to mirror her own.

“I am surprised we have never enjoyed this position before, my love. I imagine it is much to your taste?” She drifted her fingers down along his scrotum, teased the soft skin with her fingertips, and then brought them up the underside of his cock where its softest flesh was found. Then, she fondly wrapped her fingers about the base of him, and gave his hard member a slow, gentle stroke. The texture of his swollen shaft in her hands, that pleasant mixture of soft skin and hard girth, had her body craving his touch. She was growing wet with arousal already.

“I ... it’s ... I thought it might have been a little pervy? You know? Mother son fetish stuff?”

She laughed all the more. Oh Jack, how were you always so capable of making her smile?

“I offer my lap for you, my little Ventrue, because I wish to be where you place your head when you seek rest. I wish to hold you to my breasts because I want that place to be warm, soft, and inviting. I seek your touch upon my skin because it both comforts and excites me. And I seek to touch you, because nothing delights me more than your pleasure.” To emphasize, she squeezed his cock harder, just enough to make him wince in surprise, before she started to lightly stroke the hard flesh in a soft rhythm.

She cradled his head back into her breast, and blew a bit of air into his face to draw his eyes. “ ... could you ... say it.”

“Say what?”

“ ... what any woman wishes to hear.”

Jack blinked at her, removed his hand from her, and froze with bewilderment painted upon his face. But, after another moment, his eyes widened with realization, and that lovely smile of his joined it.

“I love you.”

Three simple words, so effective it was as if she had just been staked. Painful emotions that ached inside her, paralyzed her, blinded her with brightness, but she did not look away. She was embarrassed; they had reduced her to a lovesick puppy, only that was exactly what she wanted. Nothing else for now, nothing to think or worry about, just enjoy unearthed emotions she had left buried for so long.

“Thank you.” With a few second’s respite, she closed her eyes, sighed with euphoric release, and looked back down at the boy in her arms. “Please, continue,” she said, and she cradled his head back against her bosom. She started to stroke his length again as well. Romance was no reason to spoil the arousal they had both earned, after all.

He groaned into her skin, a quiet noise filled with vibrations that sent blissful sparks through her nipple, into her chest, and down through her body. She rewarded him with harder, faster strokes of his cock. Drops of precum started to form at the tip of his length, and with a fingertip, she spread it along his foreskin before peeling it down to expose his glans, ripe and swollen.

The poor boy was helpless under her touch. She knew just how to slide her fingers along the rim of the head of his cock to make his body tense and flex in need, how to make the pleasure spread through his length, and how to get his fluids to rise with the inevitable. Once she had him at the point where a few strokes would make him climax, she slid her hand down to his testicles, and cupped the softness in her palm while she gave the gentlest massage.

Jack trembled a little, the way he did when he was about to cum, but switching to caress his testicles let his fluids settle, and yet kept him on the edge. It was a familiar rhythm for them, but this time there was an emotional weight to it that made everything all the sweeter.

She was holding the man she loved in her arms, cradling him to her breasts, pleasuring him, and protecting him. He was hers, and not because she was his Prince, or his mistress, or his guardian, but because he loved her too.

She slipped her hand up onto his cock again, used her thumb to caress his glans and spread the moisture of his growing precum against the underside of it, while also stroking the inch of his length just below. Her technique was perfect, a constant but adoring caress of her thumb along the wetness of his glans while her palm worked up and down him a single inch, and her fingers gave tiny squeezes in between each beat of her loving rhythm.

She was milking him.

“God,” he finally managed to say. “You’re so ... damn ... good at that.”

“Indeed.” She got her voice low for him, husky, and drawn out in a whisper. “Now, please bring me some lubricant. I would like to try something.”

“Ok!”

And off he went. He rolled off of her and off the bed with a bounce in his step and naked butt wagging as he hopped over to the bathroom. She watched after him, and licked her lips a little at his bouncing; he had a great, tight little butt.

Antoinette reached down and undid the belt of her robe, spread it wide, and got onto her knees and derriere. She reached for a pillow too, one of the large fluffy ones her ghouls kept, and laid it between her knees. When Jack returned, he hopped onto the bed in front of her, lubricant in hand, and only when he went to get back in her lap did he notice she had changed position.

“Here,” she said, and reached out for the lubricant. He handed it over, perplexed. “I want you to lay here. Place your legs around my hips, and your butt upon the pillow.”

“I ... oh ... oh!” His eyes lit up yet again, and looked up and down her body where she had opened her robe. His lips and tongue kept trying to form words, but nothing came out, and eventually the boy gave up.

He oriented his pelvis toward her and put his butt onto the pillow between her knees. Her hands took his hips and pulled him closer, close enough that his inner thighs rested on her hips, and his testicles were resting against her stomach. The position put his pelvis up at an angle on her lap, and his lower back rested on the pillow while the rest of him laid back against the bed.

It was a glorious position, with her on her knees and butt, and Jack laying back with his butt on her lap. He was laid out before her like a board of meat she could not wait to dig into.

“I imagine this is also a position you have wanted to try, yes? My little Ventrue.” One of her hands reached down between her breasts, took the boy’s cock into her grip, and raised it from where it rested against his abs to place it into her cleavage. Her breasts were large enough that they rested against his pelvis on either side of his cock, and that was where the delight in the position was; all it took was a little lifting of his member toward her chest with her fingers, and it settled his length between her breasts.

“God yes, just ... I mean ... you know.”

Again she giggled, a sound so unbecoming her age, but her love’s utter inability to understand her desire to satisfy his fantasies was too precious. She had taken care of one fantasy tonight, and now she would take care of another.

While one hand kept his cock raised and pressed along her sternum, the other turned the bottle of lubricant to his glans, and let it pour. Only when the thick liquid had coated his glans, his length, all the way down to his testicles, did she start move the bottle to pour the liquid onto her breasts. Jack opened his eyes so wide, she was sure he would hurt his face; his jaw dropped in pure awe once she had thoroughly soaked all of her chest.

His erection stood upright, but also collapsed upon his abs; she had to use a hand to guide it between her breasts, and hold it there.

That was fine, it just made it all the more interesting when she used the other hand to massage the lubricant into both her breasts in playful, sweeping motions that lead between them. Her nipples had grown so sensitive from all this play, that every so often she stopped to take the time to massage them individually. Her fingers circled them slowly, tenderly, and buried their pointed, swollen tips in the viscous fluid.

Her eyes never left Jack though. She drank in his enraptured expression with hunger, and delighted with each sigh of bliss she pulled from him. After a moment of trying to watch her, he reached out for another pillow to prop up his head, and then set his hands on her knees. Yes, little Ventrue, get comfortable and enjoy yourself.

Her breasts and his member were both soaked now, so with one hand around his cock, she started to stroke his length with a tighter grip than before, and brought her fingers all the way up to his ripe glans to massage it with each stroke.

“Ah ... fuck...”

“Mmm, too tight? Perhaps this will be softer.” She loosened her grip, and with her other hand, pressed one of her breasts against his member while keeping it against her sternum. His cock was buried in her breast, and she rubbed it against the wet and slick weight of it while she continued to stroke his length, from the base to the tip. With one hand pushing her breast against his shaft, and her other arm hooked around her other breast to hold his cock in place, she had quite thoroughly squashed it between them until it was completely hidden.

Jack was paralyzed. He could not tear his eyes away, or move, or do much more than let out the occasional whimper of bliss when she took the time to guide his cock into the side of one of her breasts, and stroked the ripe glans into her wet skin.

“I had been hoping my little lover would ask me to let him enjoy my breasts so, but such a request never came.” She put her free hand against his hard stomach, so her breast was no longer pressed to his member, and traced her wet finger along the indentations of his abs. Her other hand, still wrapped around his cock and stroking it in a slow rhythm, guided Jack’s glans onto her nipple.

“I ... I just—”

“Do you not even realize that you saved my life, little Ventrue? I am more than pleased to indulge this fantasy of yours.” She slid his cock across her breast and onto the other to again repeat rubbing his glans along her nipple. It was all a slippery display of pure sexuality, and she bathed in the opportunity to put herself on display for her little Ventrue. “More than pleased.”

“I...”

His voice was mixed with layers of pants and quiet groans. He was so close to cumming, but each time he started started to involuntarily push his hips upward, or flex his cock in her hand, she eased her motions and grip until his pleasure settled.

She would not let him cum until she was satisfied.

“And I have told you I would love to indulge your fantasies before, yet you refuse to approach me with them.” Again she slipped his cock between her breasts, and used her arms and hands to keep it buried there in the slick, wet, soft skin.

“But ... but I...”

He started to inch toward climax again, so she slipped her hand further down to find his testicles, and caressed them in a loving, circular motion, until she was sure he was no longer in danger of cumming. The frustration, mixed with his awestruck eyes and begging expression was beautiful.

“So then, I will have to convince you.”

She pushed her breasts together around his cock with her arms, tightly and firmly, so to create a bed of cleavage that completely hid the boy's length. One arm wrapped them entirely, while the other only pushed one of her breasts against his cock so her hand was free to stroke, squeeze, and milk his soaked length. With her breasts pushed together so tightly, her hand did not have the room to work the whole length of his shaft, but with her fingers around around the bottom half of him, the top half of his cock was treated to the softness of her bosom.

And she did not stop this time.

The poor Ventrue had been on the edge for so long, the orgasm must have been painful. There was a small wince on his face, but it was washed away within seconds by raised eyebrows and rolling eyes of bliss as he started to cum. He flexed his cock, causing it to slide against her cleavage, which made him wince again in that perfect amount of stimulation: painful but pure bliss.

His cum started to pool between her breasts, warm, sticky, thick. Jack was struggling to stay still, and he had to grip her knees tighter as she milked more of him. She could feel his cock pull against her hand with each spurt of his fluid, a flex of where his length connected to his pelvis, and each time the boy trembled against her.

And there was his eyes. His green, open, pleasure-struck eyes that were gazing at her work. She drank them in and his overwhelmed expression. When she squeezed tighter and worked her hand up his length, his whole expression changed into that blissful state she craved. When she lowered her hand and squeezed her breasts around him tighter, his eyes locked onto how her bosom buried and overwhelmed his cock, while more of his cum filled her cleavage.

Eventually his cock stopped flexing in her hand, and the boy's eyes relaxed with the gentle glow of after-orgasm pleasure.

Then she let go of his cock, placed both hands upon the sides of her breasts, and pushing them together. Without her hand to hold his length against her sternum, his cock slipped free and fell against his abs, but that did not stop her. With his cum coating every inch of the inside of her cleavage, she pushed her breasts down against his pelvis and cock. His cum overflowed, spilled down all sides of her breasts, soaked her fingers, and dripped down onto his abs as she rubbed her heavy breasts into his body.

She took special care to make sure she massaged her hard nipples, and spread the boy's cum around her areola. When his jaw dropped, she blew him a small kiss, and gave a subtle wink.

"You ... uh..." He forced himself up onto his elbows, but his gaze never left her chest and the mess she was making across both their bodies. "You ... don't think it's gross? All ... everywhere." With how he was gazing at the mess, he certainly did not find it gross.

"No, because it is yours." She sat up straight, and jutted her chest out just slightly, just enough to arch her back and show off her figure for her little Ventrue. Then, with bedroom eyes, she again started to massage her swollen, sensitive nipples with his cum. Such fake fluids left by a vampire would only last a little while before fading, but for now, she continued to play with herself.

His eyes, hypnotized by her play, had more than warmed her body with need, but lightly pinching her nipples and stroking the outer edges of her swollen areola was also sending sparks of pleasure into her chest and down into her thighs. She knew she was soaking wet with arousal, but the longer she drew out the build up, the better it would be.

At last she let go of herself, and set her hands down onto the boy's stomach to gently caress his abs, wet with lubricant and cum. "Now please little Ventrue, share with me a fantasy." She licked her lips for him, slowly of course, and drifted a single finger up and down the underside of his cock.

“Fuck, I ... um...” Oh how he struggled, eyes closing and opening, body squirming. He was having trouble. What sort of fantasy could he have been dwelling on? “Could you ... um...” The boy pulled away and sat up in front of her. “Could you ... turn around ... get on your elbows and knees ... and ... not talk, or stop me?”

Oh my. It was a domination fantasy. She brought a hand up to her chin and touched her lip with a knuckle in pondering. Now that she thought about it, she realized she had never truly given up control during sex in a long, long time. Never with Jack.

“ ... as you wish,” she said, and she made sure to indulge the phrase with accented, sensual layers. A little roleplaying would be fun; even just the words were enough to make Jack’s face light up.

She put aside the now-ruined and soaked pillow, gave Jack a rather sultry and inviting look, and then turned around for him. It was not a position she was used to, being on her knees and elbows. With her robe still on, most of her body was covered, but she pulled aside where the robe covered her lower half and let it dangle off the side of her torso to expose everything behind her.

On her elbows meant her back was slightly arched, and her ass was raised. So she could not help but play with Jack a bit, twist her hips a little to move her body side to side, and squeeze the muscles of her soaked pussy. Her dance earned a groan from the boy.

She almost said something, but his fantasy was her goal. Instead, she looked up over her shoulder at him, and offered some girlish, embarrassed eyes. She exaggerated for him, but the truth was there; she truly was soaked already and he had yet to touch her.

That changed when he slipped two fingers into her, and she let out a tiny squeak at the sudden penetration. Already, she trembled with rising, dancing sparks of pleasure along her thighs.

She could not see what he was doing, and that did make her a little nervous, something she had not felt in ages. What was he going to do, would he know what she liked? And yet, not knowing what he was going to do at all was making her excited. Her muscles squeezed down on his fingers, and with two digits inside her, it was enough to make some of her juices drip onto the blankets between her knees.

It would take very little to make her cum. Perhaps this would be proof enough for Jack to indulge in some breast play more often? The feel of his cock between her breasts, rubbing his cum into her nipples, it had all set her body on fire. She looked forward to doing it more.

She shivered when Jack put a thumb onto her clitoris, and started to lightly stroke it in gentle circles. As he did, he also started to softly press his fingers down against her g-spot in a slow, loving curl of the digits. Just the right tenderness and softness that her orgasm started to build, but could not be reached. She squeezed down on his fingers harder, even pushed her ass toward him, but he was in control, and it seemed he wanted slow.

For five minutes, he caressed and massaged her clit while milking her g-spot with his fingers in slow, deliberate motions that she could feel in her pelvis. She grabbed another pillow, put her head on it, and let out a low moan as the pleasure coursed through her. The boy's delightful caresses did not stop at just her g-spot, as he also pushed his fingers in to the knuckle, and pressed down against the deep spot within until she could feel it in her belly. It forced the pleasure tremors to spread outward from her cunt, up into her chest, down her quivering thighs, and into her curling toes.

So very close. So damn close she could taste the building orgasm tremors on her tongue, but the damn Ventrue refused to let her have it. She pushed her ass back toward him – it was the only thing she could do – but Jack did not give in. She even moaned, loudly at that, and squeezed her cunt on his fingers hard enough to hurt him, but still he did not give in.

She was a fool to let a Ventrue have power. He must have been bathing in the control she had given him! She had even started mewling, tiny whimpers started escaping, and her insides were boiling. Like a cat in heat, she put on a display, arched her back, and pushed her ass back toward him faster, but Jack just kept her on that edge for longer, and longer.

Just when she was about to turn around and demand release, he started fingering her harder. Much harder. The thumb on her clit grew rough, and the two fingers scooping out her pussy started to move up and down with enough force to slap against her insides. The slap of fingers against the inside of her cunt and the mess of juices she was leaking made for a loud splashing sound.

Her toes curled tight enough to hurt, and her whole body went rigid with the waves of bliss that pulsed outward from where Jack was pressing deep down inside her. He eased his touch on her clit where it had quickly grown painful, but his fingers in her depths did no such thing. They pushed harder, worked faster, and made more of her juices leak from her until it was trickling down her thighs and reaching her knees.

He stopped, and she thought she would have a moment to enjoy the waves of orgasm spreading through her, but Jack resumed only a second later. Apparently, he had no intentions of giving her that moment's rest.

She looked over her shoulder back at him with wide, surprised eyes, but Jack was too engrossed in fingering her to look at her. The boy's eyes were glued to her opened slit. He finally let her clitoris be, and put the soaked hand onto her leg, but the fingers inside her only went faster; she could feel them push down toward her belly hard enough that she could feel it against her abdominal muscles.

When a body wave of muscle-contracting pleasure hit her, a tiny squirt of her juices escaped her. She did not normally squirt, but the boy had her whole body locked in orgasm and was hitting her insides hard enough to bruise. She was still on her elbows, and when she raised her shoulders so she could look down the valley of her body between her hanging breasts, she could see the juices she was leaking drip. Unconsciously, she inched away from Jack to try and escape the onslaught, but Jack's free hand reached out to hook her hip and trap her.

And he continued. She squirted again, just a little, and this time she managed to keep her eyes open to see the tiny splash of clear juices hit the boy's knees. Muscles squeezed and her body shook with the forced pleasure that was quickly growing painful, but her trembling betrayed her. Another sharp clench of her cunt and again, another little splash of her juices. She was not able to keep her eyes open this time, and buried her face in the pillow she had started squeezing without knowing. The poor pillow had become nothing but shredded material.

She tried to crawl away one last time, but Jack's grip was absolute. Normally she would have the strength to pull away, easily at that, but her body was trembling with sparks of pleasure forcing their way down her thighs and into her toes. She could not find a second's respite to dislodge him! All she could do was remain on her elbows and knees, ass raised for her lover, while he fingered her. The sparks of bliss spread out from her center, filled her, made her eyes roll upward and her thighs quiver. Pleasure tore through her curves with reckless abandon, making her toes curl and her body tremble. Her breasts swayed beneath her, and her muscles milked at the fingers prying her open.

When she squirted yet again, the amount was not so small. Her pussy squeezed like a vice, so hard that Jack was forced to stop for a moment while another splash of her juices hit him. Her eyes rolled upward, her usually quiet voice came out in squeaks, and her ass raised higher into the air on shaking legs and toes. Reduced to a shivering, whimpering thing, cumming so hard she could not speak even if she wanted to.

Finally, Jack let go of her hip. She collapsed onto her side, hip to the bed and one half of her face resting on the pillow. Laying there, she could not stop quivering as orgasm waves worked up and down through her. They started from between her thighs, rose up through her chest, into her breasts, and up to the back of her neck to make her eyes roll, before coursing down through her to legs and into her toes.

Her current state was very unbecoming a Prince, but trapped in orgasm aftershocks, she could not summon the will to care. She could only lay there and let the pleasure waves continue.

Half a minute later, she finally found the strength to lift her head, and look at Jack.

Jack had been watching, and the boy must have been waiting for it. The moment they made eye contact, Jack straddled her leg closest to the bed and hooked her other leg over his shoulder. He kept her leg there with one hand, while his other wrapped around his cock, and he guided it toward her opened, leaking pussy.

Her orgasm had only just settled, and her cunt was still suffering spasms of pleasure that made her tremble each time. Perhaps that was what the boy wanted. There was a look of ravenous hunger on his face as he prodded the dripping lips of her cunt, and when she shivered or squirmed with more sparks of pleasure, he groaned with obvious rapture.

She almost opened her mouth to tell him to stop, to let her rest, to let the spasms stop so she could take a moment to recover. Even if it was his fantasy, she was at her limit. But Jack eased his cock's head into her squeezing muscles, and slammed his hips forward.

She reached out with a hand to press against his chest, but her insides were beyond sensitive to his touch now. The feel of his hard girth opening her again and burying itself into her balls deep with no ceremony or gentleness blurred pleasure together. Orgasm coursed through her again, re-summoned by his aggression, and with each following thrust from the Ventrue, she found a squeak coming out of her, a noise she could not remember the last time she had made.

It was all a sopping wet mess of cum, juices, and noises now. Jack held the leg he had hooked over his shoulder with both hands, and used it to help drive himself forward into her, despite how she pressed her hand against his chest in silent begging. He ignored her, and continued to fuck her, hard. The look in his eyes was one of pure sexual need, and she found herself delighted – if a little shocked - that he wanted to fuck her with such animal lust. But a moment later, her mind went blank and her eyes closed as pleasure again turned her into a trembling mess.

Several thrusts later, she gushed all over Jack's cock. With her leg over his shoulder, and her on her side with Jack's knees on either side of her, the mess of her cum went down one of his legs and down her pelvis. Warm, wet, messy. She had lost all control and could only lay there while the small man straddling her other leg fucked her. He was so rough, her heavy breasts bounced up and down against her torso and along the bed, but he did not stop.

If it had been Jack's first orgasm, he would have cum sooner, she was sure. But she had drained him of his first before, so she laid there, squeaking with each thrust, cumming again and squirting again, for several more painful, blissful minutes. Vaguely, with what few thoughts she was able to muster, she was aware this was the sort of thing she often did to Julee, forcing her ghoul to cum herself into near unconsciousness.

She did not even realize when Jack had started to cum. Normally she would love to milk him of each drop, but she could barely control her position on the bed, and had no control over the powerful muscles spasms that had her trembling on his cock. He was gazing down at her, love and lust in his eyes, and perhaps a bit of surprise. He even kissed her ankle where it was resting against the side of his jaw.

Antoinette, on the other hand, did everything she could to get her body to calm down. Her cunt was squeezing down on his cock in the random spasms of orgasm, and had grown sore from his rough treatment. She had never expected the small man to have such an aggressive side, let alone to use it on her.

Jack had slipped free of her at some point; she had not noticed. The orgasm aftershocks were still working through her, and she delighted in their waves. Jack was still straddling her leg with one of his knees in front of her stomach; she put her hand on it, and rested her head on the pillow she had destroyed while the ebb and tide of climax drifted up and down her body, and finally began to settle once again.

“ ... yes ... my Prince?”

She turned her head enough to look at him. He was caressing her raised leg with teasing fingertips, and the look on his face was one of utmost guilt. And a little mischievous joy. The rascal!

“Your fantasy ... was to ... force my orgasm so?”

“Sorry! Sorry I ... I just always ... it’s just always been a huge turn on, the idea of a woman cumming super hard, a lot, over and over. And then to cum inside her when she’s down, trembling, defenseless, and stuff? That ... I ... yeah.” He set her leg down, shifted over to sit on his knees beside her, and grinned like a thief who had gotten away with the treasure. “ ... you soaked me too.” The pride that beamed from him was cosmic.

With an inviting smile, she slowly reached for his throat, gently wrapped it with her fingers, and then yanked him down to slam him onto his back beside her. A chokeslam, she believed it was called. His eyes went wide with shock, but she loosened her grip and leaned over him to place kisses upon his lips.

She smiled down at him, and kissed him again. “That was very daring of you. My legs still tremble.”

He smiled up at her all the more, but with a healthy mixture of fear too. Good, she did not want him to get too daring after all.

“Are you mad?”

“No. I do admit I prefer to be in control of my pleasure, and enjoy slower, more manageable climaxes.” She kissed him again, and edged herself across the bed so her arm and leg were draped over his body. To hold him so while the final tingles of pleasure worked down her thighs was pleasing. “But, I understand. I do the same to Ashley and Julee every so often, and delight in making them cum until they’re exhausted, soaked, and begging for a moment’s rest.”

“So hot.”

“Indeed. And, as you said ... I soaked you.” She reached down and ran her fingers up and down his now flaccid and relaxed member. It was hard to tell where the lubricant ended and the mess of juices began.

“So ... so hot.”

“Perhaps a small warning next time, little Ventrue? Such rough sex was a shock.” She hugged the boy closer to her, and nudged her nose into his cheek. “I am a soft creature, am I not?” To emphasize, she pushed her wet breasts into his side and chest. They were more than large enough to overwhelm his small torso.

He shivered underneath her. “So ... soft...”

“But I look forward to such a display of aggression in the future, my Jack, and will delight in indulging more fantasies. Though I do hope you realize I owe you for such uncouth behavior!”

“You, uh ... you do?”

“Indeed. Tell me, little Ventrue, do you know the pleasure of a prostate massage?”

---

The two of them basked in the warmth of her hot tub, with the blush of life still going so they could enjoy the tingling of hot water on skin. Perhaps it was the most cliché thing in the world, two lovers sharing a hot tub, but it was a luxury she felt earned. And it was the first time she had ever done such a thing with someone she loved.

Loved. She smiled, raised a hand to touch her lip, and put her other hand onto the boy’s chest. She loved him. He loved her. Just thinking it was making her giddy, young, and overwhelmed with a powerful ache to hold the boy closer.

But he could not get closer than he was. She was laying back on the slanted slope of the tub, and the small boy was between her legs, laying down and back against her with his head between her breasts, facing away. She did not raise her head though, instead she kept her eyes closed, smiled to herself at the feeling of the boy resting against her body, and roamed her hands upon his chest with caressing fingers.

He took one of her hands into his, netted their fingers, and kissed her knuckles.

“I love you,” he said.

Butterflies in her stomach, that ache that demanded she hold him, warmth on her fingers even without the blush of life, it all mixed for a delirious need that made her feel like a little girl in her man’s arms.

“I love you,” she said, and she hugged him to her chest with a gentle squeeze of her free hand. Those three words may have seemed trite, perhaps even overdone to the modern couple, but to Antoinette, they were honest and powerful. Jack knew her well to not play with it, like Beatrice probably would with Julias.

“Hey, I heard you play the cello?” he said.

“The cello, where did – ah, one of my servants?” She raised her head for a moment to look down at the head of the boy between her breasts, but the conversation held no danger to her anymore. If she could not talk about what she remembered of her past with her love, who could she? “I did, decades ago. But ... where I learned is a lost memory.”

“Oh.” He brought her hand up to his face and held it to his cheek. “God I’m a jackass. I get mad because you never talk about your past, but ... I remember you telling me now about fading memories. Yeah, sorry...”

“Elders are often insecure about our lost memories, and I apologize for being distant about your questions.” She drifted her hand higher, up along his sternum, his neck, and his ear, until her fingers came to rest upon his buzzed head, and she stroked the interesting texture lightly. “But, ask, and I will try to answer what I can.”

“Wow, ok! What music do you listen to most?”

“Do not ask silly questions. I listen to the greats, as does any elder Kindred. Beethoven, Mozart, and Bach, but the fingers of Chopin are perhaps the most intriguing.”

The boy laughed and turned halfway in her lap to look at her. “I could introduce you to some metal music.”

Oh no. “You will have quite the time convincing me to listen to such loud, vulgar noise!”

When she raised her head again and opened her eyes, she found Jack had turned around completely. He put his hands onto both sides of the tub, and leaned over her so he could lay upon her and nudge his nose into hers. Then he kissed her, with his mouth just barely open and a grin on his lips.

“Mmm?”

“That’s all I wanted,” he said. “That’s what was missing. A little banter, a little knowledge about you, a lot of touching.” Then the boy kissed her again, and again, no encouragement from her needed.

“Even more touching?”

“Yes! Yeah I ... want to do more things.”

“Oh,” she said, and she put her hands onto his back. Quite the ruttish little man, her Jack was. Good. “Now?”

“No, no not right now. Right now I want to just ... forget about tomorrow, forget about the Danse, forget about Damien and ...

forget about all that shit. Just want to lay here in heaven.” He turned around again, and slid back down into a comfortable spot between her legs.

She sat up and wrapped her arms around the tiny thing between her knees, her breasts to the back of his shoulders. Her hands found his again, netted their fingers, and she hugged him tighter while keeping his hands in hers. She kissed the top of his head, his ear, and pressed her legs together to push his together as well. He was completely wrapped in her limbs.

“You know I will not let tomorrow hurt you, my little Ventrue.” She rested her cheek against the top of his head and squeezed him a little more. That ache in her insides, painful, overwhelming, was only worsened the tighter she held the boy. And yet she could not bring herself to stop, she wanted more. “I will be the soft place you can rest your head, Jack, and I will be the force that destroys those that threaten you.”

He chuckled a little in her arms, but they were soft chuckles, and heavy. “I’m very grateful, but it’d be great if we could go a while without Kindred killing Kindred.” The young man turned his head enough to look up at her, and his eyes were also heavy, even sad. “Is it like this for vampires everywhere?”

“Often so. Usually the Invictus rule or the Lancea et Sanctum rule, as the First Estate and the Second Estate, and their rules are often stern, totalitarian, which leads to rebel violence. In most cities, Kindred often struggle to simply not kill each other.” She turned her head to meet his gaze from above, and leaned in to nudge her nose to his. “We dragons are rare, and dragon Princes are almost unheard of. It took the work of ages to give this city what little peace it has between Kindred.”

“Wow. I got lucky.” His silly smirk returned, and he pushed his nose back against hers. “Really lucky.”

“I am the truly fortunate one here, little Ventrue. Do you know how difficult it is for elder Kindred to find someone they can trust, let alone ... love?” That word ripped the confidence and control out of her like nothing else, but when Jack nudged their noses once again and gave her a quick kiss, he soothed her frightened soul. Even the beast inside her, ancient, patient, and never off its earned throne, was happy to share its seat with the little boy’s beast.

Like two purring cats, wrapped together in a yin-yang.

Her mouth opened, but nothing came out. What could she say? It was a waste to even try, to even attempt to describe the lost treasure that she had found, that this boy had dug up for her. Every time she closed her eyes, it ached inside her, reduced her to nothing but a young girl, and she was forced to open her eyes and hug Jack closer to her body as if he were about to vanish.

But he didn’t vanish, he just blinked up at her when she hugged him, and returned her kiss when she kissed him.

“Do you ... think you could play the cello for me later?” he said.

“Oh?”

“Yeah, I’d really like to hear that.” He nipped at her lip a little, something very playful compared to his usual nature, and nudged his nose up against her jaw before putting more kisses against her neck.

So long, so infuriatingly long since a man had put soft kisses on her neck of his own volition. She melted in moments.

“I will play you for, mon amour. My little Ventrue.”

Part 3

Chapter 24

~~Welcome to the world of Vampire: the Requiem~~

~~Two weeks later~~

~~Jack~~

He was in love. In love. He was in love he was in love.

Words failed him. He tried to capture the feeling he had in his chest, but love just seemed to come up short. No matter how hard he dug into the depths of his soul, he couldn't find some word to represent the blissful pain in his heart.

God Jack, you're becoming a fucking poet. He laughed and shook his head. Julias could have come up with something, something powerful and stirring, sobering but uplifting. Something undoubtedly cliché.

"Something amusing?" Antoinette said.

"Nope. No not a thing. Just ... thinking."

It'd been two weeks since they exchanged words. Two weeks since he'd told the ancient, deadly, Daeva Prince of the city that he loved her. Two weeks since she said it back.

And he spent most of that time in her tower. Even now he sat upon the black, silk sheets of her massive bed, deep in the underground fortress of her tower basement, her next to him. He'd visited Julias the next day of course, after Antoinette and him confessed to each other. He had to tell someone, and his sire was his best friend. And his boss. Julias had given him clearance to spend time away from the job, away from money management, resource allocation, contracts, shady deals, all the Xnomina stuff. Some time to get to know his love better. A honeymoon, sort of.

His love. His love. Still didn't do it justice.

He snuggled against the back of the beautiful, white-haired woman. He was behind her, spooning against her, while the much taller, curvy vampire was leaning over a book, head propped up on her fist, elbow to the bed.

The two of them were naked, and on top of the blankets. No risk of being cold, vampires and all that. And, with the blush of life not on, their pale skin was in no risk of suddenly arousing. But that didn't mean he wasn't attracted to the gorgeous Daeva, just that he physically didn't want to have sex with her right that instant.

Which was good, because they'd had sex almost constantly for the past fourteen days. Any time Jack even looked Antoinette's way, she pinned him, and did things to him. Poor Ashley and Julee, unable to participate in their mistress's play; Antoinette and Jack drank them both dry during the past two weeks, thrice. The two girls spent most of the time asleep and exhausted, and if not for a ghoul's ability to regenerate, they'd have died from blood loss. Course they enjoyed it, the Kiss was pleasurable. But then the two were basically unconscious while Antoinette and Jack had fun.

Fun was not the right word. They made love. Love. Love...

He leaned in over her, reached out with his free hand to pull her hair back, and kissed her neck.

"Mmm." Her voice sent a chill down his spine, but it also warmed him at the same time. Her devious, powerful, confident smile, her red eyes that cut through him when she turned to look at him. "Again, my little Ventrue?"

"No. No I uh ... well, I mean if you want."

“I do believe my lust has been sated. For now.”

There was a sternness to her words, even when she flirted. A bite, something dangerous that made him shiver. Even now, after all they'd been through, he was still afraid of her. A little afraid, at least.

Antoinette turned over onto her back. Naked, smiling, she ran one of her feet up and down her other leg with a teasing toe, and with her further arm, reached across to touch his. He was still on his side, pressed up against her, nuzzled into her arm and leg.

Ashley and Julee were gone today. They had lives of their own, despite their servitude to the mistress. University lives, according to Antoinette. He wondered what sort of classes they took, but as his mind drifted, a finger and thumb against his chin guided him back to look down at the woman before him.

So. God. Damn. Beautiful. She was smiling at him, meeting his gaze with her own, with subtle shifts and grins of the eye. His hand reached up for her neck, her chin and cheeks, his fingertips lightly caressed the shape of her face, and her smile remained.

No words. No god damn fucking words for the feelings.

His hand walked down her neck and collar, and down along her sternum between her breasts. He'd be lying if he said he wasn't really, really into her huge breasts, the way their mass pulled to the sides of her ribcage, the way her dark nipples contrasted against her pale skin. No blush of life, so everything was a little less ... lively. But he'd gotten used to seeing a dead thing in the mirror, and dead or not, Antoinette was beautiful.

And the most amazing part was how she let him. She just smiled, purred, and combed her hair over her shoulder with one hand as his fingers danced down her flat stomach, wide hips, her slender waist, long curvy legs. Even as his fingers teased over her bare mons, between her thighs, and back up along her waist, she only smiled; grinned a little too. If he wasn't careful, he'd provoke the playful feline and be quickly reminded that she was a tiger, not a house cat to pet.

He never did know when to quit. His fingers drifted up to her breasts, and he slid them underneath where the nearest one was flattened to her ribs with its weight. He cupped it, let the soft mass spill over his palm and fingers, and offered a couple of gentle, massaging squeezes. Fingers drifted up to her nipple, and he traced her areola with a slow touch, before he reached out to cup her further breast and do the same. He stared at how the weight of it made it shift and flow, jiggle lightly when he nudged it with a little more force, and how, despite its weight flattening it to her body, it was still full of volume and shape.

She had enormous breasts.

Each touch along her body was tempting fate. Would she pounce him now? Later? Pin him and do things to him? Threaten him with delights for tomorrow night? Or torture him sexually for crossing a line? He shivered with the memories. He was playing with fire, touching her so directly, obviously, without even asking. But she liked it when he did that, even as she apparently loved to punish him for it too.

But, for now, she did nothing. He shifted around a little to get in the nook of her arm and body, underneath her shoulder, and set his head against her chest above her breast. With his body still against her side, him on his side, his free hand held her waist, and hugged her close as he buried himself in her.

With one of her arms now behind him, her fingers drifted up and down his back, and danced along his spine before stroking his buzzed hair.

“You return to work tonight, do you not?” she said.

“Yeah. I ... really don’t want to. Madam Turio will—”

“Maria will keep her claws to herself, or I will rip out her innards and feed her the ashes.”

Jack gulped on nothing. A split moment of ice in the ancient Daeva’s eyes, and then gone a moment later as she smiled, and pushed Jack onto his back. Positions reversed, she was the one cuddling into his side, him lying down on his spine. Being much taller than him, she leaned over him, pressed her heavy breasts into his chest, and planted a kiss on his nose.

“I do not lie,” she said. “Maria knows her place. And besides, little Ventrue, she does not know you are the one who killed Lucas. She assumes it was I, or my sheriff, and that is an assumption she should continue to make.” Her hands drifted up and down his body, same as he had her, caressing fingers teasing along the indentions of his small, lean body, his abs, and down his legs before tickling back up to his chin. Each touch sent more shivers up his spine as she made the smallest growl.

The beast inside him trembled underneath hers, but at the same time, welcomed her.

And she knew it too. She put her lips to his ear, and sneaked soft kisses along his earlobe while her hand circled his navel. He dared not move, not when she was in this mood, unless he wanted to upset the ancient Prince. And he liked her in this mood.

Two steps away from a BDSM kink here, Jack. Nothing wrong with that though. Being tied up and at Antoinette’s mercy? He basically was every night anyway. It was a far cry from whips and chains, but that didn’t change that he was a slave to the whim of an erotic, deadly predator every time he stepped into her tower. And he loved it.

“Tomorrow night, I expect you to be here once more, two hours after dusk.” The Prince sat up, still leaning over him, and with one hand holding up her weight, traced invisible circles around his nipples with the other.

“Oh? Something important?”

“Not important, no. But Ashley and Julee are quite sad, and upset. They are my pets, but also my friends, and have had little contact with me as of late. So they shall be there as well.”

Oh. He nodded, and tried to hide his smile. The girls were fun, in many ways.

“But,” she said, “while it is a Daeva’s nature to favor and covet who they drink from, a Ventrue has no such need. And I would not be offended if you were to feed on strangers more often, my Jack. My pets need respite.” Fingers found his chin, and stroked it with teasing nails. “Though I do ask that you do not sleep with your prey. While other elder Kindred may not hold sex in such import, I do feel it serves as a bond between us.”

“Definitely, I ... definitely. I mean, I uh ... can’t really imagine wanting to sleep with anyone else, in any circumstance.”

“I did not expect us to spend many nights together, and for my pets to enjoy you as much as I.” She laughed, nodded, and slipped her finger into his mouth enough to pluck at his bottom lip. “I am elated, and would prefer you remain mine in affairs of the bedroom, and mine alone.” Another pat on the chin, and then she was up and off the bed. She reached for the corner of the huge mattress, plucked her silk robe — always silk — from the edge, and slipped it on with a casual but practiced flare. She didn’t tie it up though, but stood there, the hem of the robe against the sides of her exposed breasts. And when he looked her up and down, cause god damn he had to, she smirked.

“So, I um ... guess we’re different than what most vampires do?”

“Perhaps in some cities, controlled by other Princes. In Dolareido, I do hope to encourage physical pleasures as much as other joys.”
And finally, with a tiny flick of her wrist he barely noticed, she pulled the robe over her and tied it before moving toward the door.
“For now, I have business to attend to. I do expect to see you tomorrow night, Mister Terry.”

He nodded, and scampered around for his clothes. “I’ll be here! Definitely.”

“And ... you should speak with Damien at some point, my little Ventrue.”

He froze; bad timing. He fell over onto his knee and shoulder with one leg in his pants.

“ ... yeah, I should.”

---

Xnomina. A black tower, monolithic, and strong. He stepped through the glass doors into the lobby, offered a nod to Madam Jennings, and made his way to the elevator in the back. Top floor. Every time he pressed it, the cold metal gave him a little shock, a jolt of memory he didn’t want.

The first night he’d ever seen the inside of the building, the elevator, that number pressed, the first night he’d fed on a human. Mrs. Pavala. Her dead eyes staring.

He shook it off, pushed the memories down, and waited. Hard to keep memories from running through the mind while waiting in an elevator though, and he grumbled as he started to pace. He’d managed to keep the ugly thoughts away when he was with Antoinette, but now that he was in the tower again, they crawled out of the grave to haunt him.

Haunting memories. Other Kindred suffered manias of all sorts as they aged decades, often caused by the memories permanently scarred into their minds. Try to let it go, or you'll become just like Damien.

When the ding announced his arrival, he shook his shoulders again, and walked into the meeting room.

The triumvirate. The council. The heads of the Invictus. He'd heard other names too, from the other Invictus neonates. The brains of the operation. The voices from on high. The overlords. A strange mix of respect and typical employee annoyance for their superiors; far better than at a typical job, at least. Xnomina was a company in good condition, despite Viktor's death.

He shivered. Now was not the time to remember Viktor; standing in front of the triumvirate was bad enough. He was happy his sire had replaced Viktor, but Michael considered him nothing more than an ant, and Maria probably even less. Probably a traitor, considering his relationship with the Prince.

But his relationship with her was purely romantic. He had no secrets of the Invictus to give her, and she gave him none of the Ordo Dracul's. A good arrangement really; he didn't want to get torn apart by the two covenants. If Michael and Maria continued to think of him as nothing more than the Prince's boy toy, all the better.

"Master Terry." Julias nodded to him. Maria and Michael were standing beside him, but their attention was elsewhere, namely at the devices in their hand. Like always. A neonate wasn't worth their time.

"Mister Mire. Mister McDonald. Madam Turio." He bowed to each, and they offered a subtle nod in return. Titles and formalities, the language of the Invictus.

Julias opened his mouth, but as he raised a hand, the elevator outside dinged.

Jack raised a brow and glanced over his shoulder. Amanda Pol stepped out from the elevator, though as she noticed the door to the main meeting room was open, she squeaked, looked down, and scampered into the room to stand next to Jack.

Amanda was a very thin creature, and as tall as Jack. A black woman with long black hair, a petite frame and shape, and a soft face. The two of them looked pathetic in their suits compared to the three Kindred before them.

Amanda shrunk.

Julias sighed and shook his head. “Miss Pol, I’m glad you could arrive before this meeting ended.”

Jack hid his grin, but he managed a quick glance at Julias to catch his gaze. Jack was better at this than her, and Julias knew it.

“Please excuse my tardiness, Mister Mire! Madam Turio. Mister McDonald. Sire Jennings had—”

Julias raised a hand and waved it aside. “Save your excuses and your apologies. I understand you normally deal with Madam Jennings, but we are the council. Be on time or you will be disciplined.”

And she shrunk again. Jack could see the slightest hint of a grin on Julias’s lips though. His sire was doing his best to save her from said discipline, rather than threatening her with it. Viktor wouldn’t have bothered with a warning.

“You two have been handling many of our contracts and dealings with Xnomina.” McDonald, barbarian in a suit, stepped forward and started to pace with hands in the small of his back. “But, it is time for you to earn your titles in the field.”

“In the field sir?”

“Yes. We’ve had reports of disappearances in the South East corner of South Side.” McDonald brought up a hand to the giant touch screen wall, and exposed the overhead camera shot of the entire city. Satellite imagery, terrifying. “Here.”

“That’s ... Devil’s Corner, sir.” Jack squinted at the map, and shuddered a little. “I assumed disappearances were normal.” It wasn’t a place he’d ever been; his mother had expressly forbid it. Prostitution and drug use were rampant, and not the high class, devil-in-a-suit type found in his current place of abode in South Side. Devil’s Corner was on the corner of Carthian and Invictus territory, and neither covenant wanted it. Sort of neutral territory, in a way.

“The devil’s in the details.” Julias tapped the side of his nose once, and took a stand beside McDonald. A small wave of his hand, a few taps, and he brought up police reports. Classified material. “The area’s fairly wide, a five mile radius, the whole of the Corner. And with each disappearance, there’s been ... marks.”

“Marks, Sire?”

“Yes, police reports indicate that many of these sites have had odd slash marks on nearby walls, or the asphalt.” Julias glanced back over at Maria, but the ghost woman said nothing. “It could be a vampire that has succumbed to the beast, and are no longer capable of escaping its frenzied hunger. Or it could be a serial killer with a strange modus operandi.”

“We are unsure.” McDonald swiped the screen, and pictures appeared. Slash marks indeed, and far thicker than a sword could cause.

Amanda opened her mouth, but one quick glance from Jack got her to close it. He knew what she was thinking, what everyone was already probably thinking. A Gangrel like Jessy could make claw marks like that. But if she said it, McDonald was liable to tear Amanda’s head off.

“Investigate.” Julias sat down at the table edge again, and made a sweeping gesture. “Find out what’s happening, find who’s behind these disappearances. If they’re human, find out how they’re making the marks, then you may do what you wish.”

Do what they wish? Jack made a tiny frown and looked down. He didn’t like the idea of a human going around kidnapping people and killing them; so Julias was offering him the option to stop them. He could do that. Play the hero role for once, could be just what the soul needed.

“But, if they are Kindred, report back to Jessy. She’ll handle the investigation from there as she sees fit.” McDonald nodded, gave his own dismissing wave, and sat back down to resume gazing at his tablet.

Julias nodded, and gave Jack a wink. “Speak to Ricardo if you need supplies. Dismissed.”

Both neonates returned the nod, bowed, and left.

Once the door was closed behind them, they both looked at each other, and took deep, unneeded-but-relaxing-anyway breaths. Amanda hit the button for the elevator, and they waited.

“So, working together,” Jack said. “Guess we’ll get to know each other.”

“Y-yeah ... I guess.”

And as typical for talking with the other neonates, they got nervous. Being the boyfriend of the Prince made conversation difficult, and being the childe of a council member didn't help; every attempt was met with anxiety and defensiveness. He was getting sick of it.

“Look, Miss Pol ... Amanda, just treat me like what I am, ok? A neonate, like you. Younger at that. My relationship with the Prince and Julias is of no consequence.”

Amanda eyed him, squinted, and looked him up and down.

“ ... no consequence?”

“No consequence. The Prince would dump me in a heartbeat if I used our relationship as a way of bullying you, or vying for a promotion.” Probably. Maybe. Maybe not. “So, I mean, unless you plan to literally stab me in the back, you're good to say or do whatever, ok?” He offered a nod and a smile, just a small one; wasn't good at the big, powerful ones like Julias. But a little could go a long way.

Amanda returned it, and nodded. “So ... Jack.” Struggled to say his name, instead of Master Terry. Cute. “Um, how has your unlife been treating you?”

Uh, god. Small talk. Shoot him now. Why'd he have to open his mouth?

“Fine Amanda, just fine.” Ding. The elevator doors opened, and the two little neonates stepped into the cage of awkward conversation.

---

Well, maybe not so awkward.

“I loved the part at the end where Rick breaks down and starts crying on Villa’s knees. So romantic, how that hard, stone man breaks when he finally realizes he’s got her back. You can see the lifetime of anger and hardships melt away!” Amanda hugged herself, and swooned. Audibly.

“I am a sucker for a good romance.” Jack nodded, and rounded the corner of the next street.

The lovely nights of Dolareido. Not exactly lovely tonight, with the growing heat and humidity; not a problem for a Kindred though. The people, on the other hand, looked worn out, sweating, and struggling to keep up their usual pace as the heatwave rendered even the nighttime air unpleasant. It meant lighter suits, often with the jackets off, and women wearing far skimpier dresses, backs exposed and cleavage as well. Even the pimps were taking it easy, sitting around in the outdoor seating of restaurants, smoking cigars and having pleasant conversation with their near-nude employees.

“Hey now, unfair. I’ll let you in on a secret.” He leaned toward her a little as they walked, and lowered his voice a touch. “Guys love romance stories too, just not when it’s self-indulgent garbage.”

“I don’t follow.”

“Well ... you know how a lot of guys enjoy movies that are nothing but explosions, car chases, and gunfights?”

“Yeah.”

“They’re pretty awful, yeah? Just testosterone candy in movie form.”

“Yeah.”

“Well, you can do the same thing with romance. Page one, introduce your two characters destined to be together. Page two through five hundred, have them be drawn to each other with attraction, desire, emotion, and have the writer throw every possible hurdle you can think of to make it so their relationship seems doomed and impossible. Have them get together in the end. Bam, you have the same idiotic, indulgent crap as a movie that’s nothing but explosions, just of the romance flavor instead of action flavor.”

Amanda blinked at him, and he smirked. He did love a good rant, and he loved it more when people actually bothered to listen. In love with the sound of his own voice, such a Ventrue trait.

“So On Morrow’s Break is—”

“Not garbage, because it has a combination of action and romance, and also quality pacing, introspection, meaningful character growth, and events that aren’t just formulaic cliches.” He laughed when she smiled, his whispering voice gone. “So yeah, I loved that scene too. It had weight.”

Some people glanced at them a few times as they walked by, but it passed. Just a young guy and girl on a stroll through Dolareido, middle of the night, wearing suits and looking quite dashing. Jackets on, to hide their shoulder holsters, pistol, some magazines, and a huge knife. Unlikely Jack would ever use them, given his Ventrue approach; words over violence. Powerful words.

But while the two Kindred kept their jackets on, the kine didn’t. And as they got further and further into the darker shadow of Dolareido, the clothes people wore changed. Less dress shoes, more sneakers. Less suits, more jeans. And as they went deeper, less shirts, more men shirtless and women in tiny tank tops. Pawn shops with bars on the windows, police sirens for background noise, and instead of restaurants with outdoor eating areas, convenience stores with parking lots and loiterers.

Soon, where people barely noticed the two little vampires in suits before, now everyone noticed them.

Amanda leaned over to him as they walked under the streetlights. “Think maybe ... we didn’t dress appropriately.”

“Can you hide us?”

“No. It’ll be years before I can hide us when we’re out in the open like this. But, let’s find a dark place, and I can.”

With a nod, the two neonates turned a corner between two buildings, only five feet apart, and went into the darkness. Where his neighborhood’s streetlights were in pristine condition, and the buildings had plenty of space, tall as they were, in the dark alley of Devil’s Corner the buildings were near each other, cramped, and only one light over a handleless door was lit. A couple people were sitting, torn jeans, sneakers with the toes worn open, tattoos of guns and faces on their shoulders, and a couple of fake-silver chain-link necklaces.

They looked at him and Amanda, shrugged, and returned to their conversation about music. A band he recognized!

“I love Russel’s voice.” Jack stepped up to the two strangers, men, probably in their thirties, and smiled at them. “That power! Oh god the compression he can put on his voice? That cord closure too! Fucking shivers every time I hear it.”

They blinked at him, looked him and his suit up and down, and said nothing. Jack looked to Amanda, and she blinked at him the same way, and said nothing. Nothings all around.

“I uh ... nevermind.” Chuckling, scratching his buzzed hair, he managed a shrug and kept walking down the alley. He needed to find another metal music lover to talk about this shit with, later.

Once down the alley where it met with the other buildings that formed the block, they were in almost complete darkness. Good enough for Amanda. He could feel the blood change, but as subtly as a light breeze on the hairs of his skin. Not noticeable unless you were looking for it. The cloak of night.

She put her hand on his shoulder, gave him a nod, and pointed up. He reached out for a windowsill and climbed. The thrill of strength, of power coursing through his dried veins, of the balance and animal instinct to pull his weight up and balance. One foot on the window bars, one foot up high onto the metal beam of what was once an alley light, he pushed higher. A glance behind him showed Amanda was following suit.

Once they ran out of things to brace their feet down against, they had to reach out to the wall across, both hands. Two feet against one wall, two hands against the other, they crawled up the walls like spiders, until they were twelve floors up. No fear, none at all. They could fall, and the worse they'd get is a broken leg they could heal in minutes.

So god damn awesome.

Once he got his fingers onto the roof, he pulled himself up, crouched low, and poked his head out to look over the street. One of the taller buildings in Devil's Corner, they could see out and into the nightlife below, the shitty lights flashing horrible signs for bars, brothels — illegal, but still blatant — and everything in between. People walked, chatted, and breezed right on by without hesitation as cop cars with sirens blasting drove past. Just a night in the life of Devil's Corner.

There were worse places in the world, far worse, but he had to admit, he much preferred his life of high class. If he had to dine on the kine on a regular basis, he preferred the cocaine addicts to the disease ridden.

Disease ridden. Sounding awfully judgmental and full of yourself, Jack. Ventrue side showing through a little more than you'd like.

Amanda squatted down beside him on the roof, and looked out over Devil's Corner.

"You're ... kind of nice," she said.

He quirked a brow. "I uh ... what?"

"Nice. I don't know, after learning you and the Prince were an item, I thought you'd be scarier. And then after ... after I ... came back from the Lancea et Sanctum, I thought you'd..."

"That I'd criticize?"

"Well yeah."

"Antoi—the Prince told me the underground network, that section of it that Tony used, that Lucas took over, was some sort of special ... thing. A wyrm's nest, with magical mystic jumbo happening there. Made people very subservient, easily controlled. Hence, Tony's brood. Hence, Lucas's brood. Hence, his control over you." He shrugged and looked out over the city below, to the police tape blocking off an alley a few blocks down. The wyrm's nest, whatever that meant, had been destroyed and collapsed since then, nothing to worry about."We should—"

Her hand grabbed his shoulder, and pulled him down so he stayed next to her. "It ... it wasn't just ... that." Eyes down and lip trembling, she shook her head so her long hair fell over her near-obsidian skin, until Jack had to lean out a little ways to see her eyes. "He said a lot of things that make sense."

"Lucas?"

“Yeah! And Bishop Damien,” she said. Good thing she couldn’t see his eye twitch at the name. “They ... they talked about god, and the origins of vampires, and our purpose. A lot of it ... rang true, you know? Maybe not all of it, maybe Lucas got a little zealous, but Damien talked about ... finding your purpose in God’s plan.”

Finding your purpose. Jack grit his teeth, and turned his gaze back to the street below. They were still wrapped in her cloak of night, so he could talk and move, as long as he stayed near her, and they didn’t get out into the open lights or close to people. Good enough for him to vent a little.

“A lot of circumstantial evidence, a lot of hearsay, a lot subjectivity, and a lot of blind concepts like faith. You’re talking to the wrong person about this, Amanda, I’m a scientist at heart. Got some evidence you want to talk about, or maybe analyze some deduced reasoning? I’m there. Want to talk about what you feel”—he air quoted—“and what you know in your soul, and your heart”—more air quotes—“then you should talk to Damien.”

A long sigh from her made Jack wince, and he stuck out his hand to touch hers.

“Sorry,” he said, “I uh ... threw that impression you had of me right back to where it was, didn’t I?”

Flirting? She couldn’t be flirting, girls did not flirt with Jack, he wasn’t Julias.

“So, you a devout believer?” he said.

“I ... don’t know? With Lucas, it was easy to believe I was. Now, I guess I’m just agnostic.”

“Ah, me too.”

“You too? Thought you said you were a scientist.”

He laughed and scratched his buzzed head. “A good scientist knows when to reevaluate the hypothesis, when new evidence is brought to light. I’ve seen some ... strange things, since being embraced, that I’d be a fool to ignore. Being dead and still talking, for one. The Prince’s wurm nest thingy, for two.”

Amanda laughed too, and smiled at him. Another one of those fun, sly little smiles. Maybe she was flirting? Was Julias rubbing off on him?

“Exactly! Others just ignore all the mystical, the magical. I mean, we can regenerate from bullet holes through the skull! I’ve seen my sire hide us from dozens of eyes. I’ve seen Damien read the history of items, just by touching them! It ... it—”

“—Would make anyone wonder if there’s more at work here than we can see.” Yeah, no denying that. After seeing Lucas disintegrate a sword with his hand, and then a bolt of lightning strike Antoinette? He had to question a lot of things that night. “So, how do you want to do this?” He gestured to the police tape down the street.

“Let’s stay up on the roofs and climb down into the scene. I won’t be able to keep us hidden if I’m scanning the area for evidence. If anyone notices us, can you make them go away?”

“No problem.” Brainwashing Dracula style, bending people’s minds to his will, turning them into puppets? He could do that. He could do that easily.

Cocky, Jacky. Pride comes before a fall. But a little pride was good for the soul, too.

The two of them resumed their journey, and started jumping across the rooftops. Neither had the proper strength to make enormous leaps, but they were vampires, jumping five feet across building tops was easy enough. A few seconds later, they were passed the police tape sectioning off an alley on the other side of the street. They made a quick climb down, across into another alley on the other side of the street, up onto the buildings, and down into the sectioned-off alley.

Not exactly the best entrance, but an entrance nonetheless; pretty damn good for a couple of rookies. The officer standing by the tape was a good thirty feet off, with the turn of a building corner blocking him off from the two Kindred. It gave them the room to wander around the dark alley, each bringing up the smartphones and taking pictures of things that looked unusual. What qualified as unusual, he had no idea. That's why Amanda was there.

"These claw marks are massive." She squatted down next to a blood splatter, and snapped a few pictures. "Look here. They cut in at a curve, and go a few inches deep. The slash itself is ... six feet long? Either the person was moving forward while attacking with a huge claw-like weapon, something with a pointed tip, or they held still, and attacked with such a weapon of absurd length."

"Former sounds like Gangrel behavior. Latter not so much," he said.

"Yeah. But in either case, I don't see a human cutting into asphalt like this. Or ... this." Another claw mark, on the wall. "Cut through brick like it was butter ... I've seen Jessy make marks like these, when she was upset and in a fight."

"I've never seen a Gangrel transform." How big could their claws get? Beatrice had some claws on her, but nothing that could make these marks. And it was hard to imagine a Gangrel sporting a transformation nastier than what the Nosferatu had all the time.

Amanda shuddered, stuck out her hand to touch her fingers along the gash, and traced it as she walked. Deeper into the alley, where it was almost pure black, Jack turned the light on his phone and started scanning the walls as well. Careful to avoid stepping in blood, but not for fear of leaving evidence; the Invictus owned the police. The shoes were too expensive to get bloody.

So damn snobby, Jack. Heh.

“They have lots of transformations, generally warping the body in a single way. They don’t normally do a proper transformation like a werewolf, usually just a body part or two. Gangrel like to give themselves massive claws, more than capable of gashes like these. And ... blood splatters like these.” She motioned to the red dots and lines along the wall. Not exactly red anymore; the blood looked a day old.

“I wonder if McDonald and Garry have ever gotten into a fight. I wonder how that’d go.”

“Probably bring a building down on them,” she said. They both chuckled.

The claw marks stopped, and so did the blood, as they neared the end of the alley. Only a manhole waited for them where the blood trail ceased. He stopped and looked down at it, then at Amanda, then back at the manhole.

“ ... shit. I really liked these shoes.”

---

It could not get anymore classic horror than this.

Tunnels. Lots of tunnels, large ones, with cement bricks and a shallow amount of water at the base. No light to see by except for their phones. If there was one way he was going to die, it’d be by getting torn apart by a sewer monster.

And his shoes. Oh, his poor shoes. The water was over his ankles, and it most definitely did not smell nice.

“Neither have I. I know when Antoinette, Viktor, and Jacob first came to the city, when it was just a tiny town of log cabins, they started digging.” She started walking, and he followed. At least she was a little more comfortable with the dark than he was, Mekhet and all. “They made sure that, as the town grew and more of it came under their control, that there were always tunnels for vampires. Lots of them, big, sturdy, with places to hide. Complex. Sire Gloria and Natasha, they know the sewers well.”

She chuckled and pressed on, scanning the light around up at the manholes above, the drainage pipes that ran across the concave walls, and the various large holes along the walls that lead to ladders. Occasionally there was a twinkle of light as his Kindred eyes adjusted to the dark, but nothing more than a glimmer of streetlight getting through some manhole covers.

The further they went through the sewers, the more lost he got. He was sure he’d figure out where he was once he climbed out, but until then he was just a rat running around in a maze. The noise above was muffled, cars and chatter, quiet enough he could hear actual rats squeaking and scurrying. They walked for a good while too, following some unknown trail. Amanda seemed to know where they were going, and she was the senior.

Let a Mekhet lead. He could just imagine Viktor’s reaction to that. But he wasn’t Viktor, thank god.

Stop thinking about Viktor. Stop thinking about Tony, or Lucas. Stop thinking about Mrs. Pavala, just focus on—

“I can ... smell perfume,” she said.

“You can smell perfume? Down here?”

She looked over her shoulder, grinned, and tapped the side of her nose. “You can keep no secrets from a Mekhet.”

“ ... can you tell me what cologne I’m wearing?”

“You’re not wearing cologne.”

Amanda stopped, and looked around. When Jack made eye contact, she held up a hand and put a finger to her lips, before she started on once again. But as she did, she reached into her suit jacket, and withdrew her pistol.

Jack gulped, and did the same. The two of them were not so dumb as to not bring flashlights though, and better than their smartphones. Pistol lights, leaving both hands free to aim the gun, and see what they were aiming at; nothing but concrete brick and water dripping down the old walls. But he could feel the tingle on his arm hairs as Amanda once again enveloped them in the cloak of night. She was no Natasha, her skill with the discipline was a far cry from who Jack was used to working with. He wouldn’t be able to rely on her if something horrible happened.

Not that he’d do any better, especially in the dark. And it was better than nothing, maybe that one extra second they’d need to respond to whatever rotted zombie limb reached out from the black abyss around their feet to drag them into a second death.

The tunnel opened up into a junction, a large room with flat walls and half a dozen other tunnels connected. There were a few holes, large ones capable of fitting a person on their knees; probably opened into rooms with ladders to the streets, or down deeper into the maze. Massive pipes crossed the open ceiling in a dizzying array of zigzags and twists, and metal doors lined each wall. At the end of a couple of the tunnels, he could see tall metal grates, bars thick and tight. Any second, he expected a wave of rats or cockroaches to pour out of the tunnels and swarm over them. Even the drip drop of trickling water in the black sent chills down his spine.

No place a beautiful redhead.

He blinked, looked at Amanda, and she looked at him, before the two pointed their pistols at the woman. Someone wearing jeans and a jacket, a decent looking leather one too, made for traveling. A bit short, curvy, with long red hair, a mane of frizzy curls. Her hands were in her jacket pockets, and her pale skin sported many freckles.

The beast in his gut growled, a cat with its fur standing on end. A quick glance at Amanda showed hers must have been doing the same, as she kept her gun pointed at the stranger, eyes locked and wide. Her cloak of night was gone too; not that it'd help much with the light of their pistols shining out.

No one said a thing. Just silent stares as the two vampires quivered. Who the fuck was that?

The stranger moved first, turning to face them straight on, and tilted her head to the side. Squinting, perplexed, she looked them up and down, before she gasped and took a step back. "Vampires!"

And she bolted. Panicking like she'd seen ghosts, she swung open one of the nearby metal doors and ran through it. The following slam of her closing it resonated through the sewers until the echo rang in their ears.

And then silence again. Jack stared at the door, then at Amanda.

"Um ... should we follow her?" she said.

“Dunno. You ever felt a vampire like that? ... or heard a vampire freak out at the sight of other Kindred?” First experiences with elders aside.

“No, and I don’t recognize her. I ... maybe we should report back.”

With a sigh, he stepped toward the door, and motioned for Amanda to get on the other side. She was quick to act, and pressed her shoulders to the wall, pistol up. He pointed to his ear and looked at her, but she shook her head. No sounds coming from inside then. Well, no use in waiting any longer. Get a bit more info, get out, report back to Jessy. Don’t do anything stupid. Not that what he was about to do wasn’t very stupid, but he needed something to report, or it’d look badly on his standing in the Invictus. Gotta play the game. Dance the Danse Macabre.

He pulled open the door, pinned it to the wall with his shoulder, and poked his head in along with enough of his hands and arms to point his gun into the darkness.

Nothing. He aimed up, down, left and right, but found only pipes. Not big pipes either, little ones, all connecting to varying junctions of other pipes, connected to a few large metal bins; no clue what they were for. There were dials, rusted and dirty, and everything was covered in a generous helping of spiderwebs.

A lot of spiderwebs. But no girl.

He stepped in, sweeping the walls as he did, eyes on the beam of light the pistol light gave. Amanda behind him, he trusted her to watch his six as he moved through the small room. No doors, no connected tunnels, no holes or vents or anything.

Amanda frowned, approached the walls, and started touching various bits of the concrete, the pipes, anything that looked like it could be moved or twisted. Nothing did.

“Ah, damn.” Spiderweb clung to her hand, and she tried to shake it off. “Wow, this is—damn it, this is really strong.” A few attempts to get off the spiderweb only lead to her hands being coated in it.

“She’s gone.”

“Looks that way.” Amanda stood beside him, pistol pointed with one hand, the other pulling out her smartphone. Talented, or a major smartphone addict, she started taking pictures of the room with the one hand.

“Mekhet eyes see anything?”

“Um ... I ... no?”

“No?”

“Kinda no? There’s something, but ... it’d be like ... asking me to tell one cloud of fog apart from another, in the same fog cloud. There’s something here, but it’s in the sewer too, and ... I don’t know what it is.”

“ ... well, I vote we call this excursion over, and we report to Jessy. Also, shower.”

“Agreed.”

Two hours after dusk the next day, and the walk back to the Elysium Tower. Elysium was a great place, the classy and pretty center of South Side, and the great glass tower stood before a garden of decidedly Gothic design. Antoinette was an artist.

Even the people were dressed for a ball, or cocktail party, or other extravagant events, so everyone was wearing grand suits or tuxedos, and all the women were showing off their greatest gowns or cocktail dresses, with as much leg and back and cleavage they could get away with. The heat was only getting worse, after all. He could smell the difference in people as they walked passed, the sweat mixed with an overall increase in sexual smells. Lot of skin on display; he couldn't blame them.

Through the great maze garden, and up the stairs of the Elysium tower. He made a small nod to the receptionist, received a salute in return, and walked toward the back elevator. He could feel his ego inflate with every second, and his smile grow. Not taking the normal elevators, no no, he got to take the private elevator down to the Prince's inner chambers; it'd be a long stair walk down otherwise.

The black marble with white veins, the glorious staircase that lowered into many floors, going deeper and deeper into the Prince's beautiful home, it all made his dead heart flutter when he looked at it. A massive lobby, hallways, giant rooms, all decorated with coiling dragons, and the same black marble the Prince loved so much. It'd become his second home.

He had a really nice second home.

Giggling drew his eyes. The great vault door at last, the final barrier to the Prince's sleeping room, where she put her head down for the day, deep and safe from the sunlight or would-be assassins. Perhaps too safe, as their meeting with Damien showed; no way out once you were down in its depths. But other than from kamikazes, it was a place anyone could feel safe. And the two ghouls felt quite safe.

He stepped through the vault door and stopped, gaze falling on the grand bed, and the two ballerinas sitting on it. The colossal room carried equally massive black drapes along its walls, standing lamps emitting quiet white light, and the floor marble was colored with black and white dragons coiling each other. In the center of the room was the bed, enormous, ten feet on each side, and covered in black silk; pillows too.

For all his pride and inflated ego, the sight of Ashley and Julee on the bed ripped it right out of him. The two were wearing chokers, black necklaces snug around their neck. And were wearing nothing else.

He gulped, and started to walk toward the bed.

“Jack! We’ve been waiting for you.” Ashley slid up to the edge of the bed and sat, legs dangling. Devil grin, or impish smile, he couldn’t tell. The two girls were definitely getting more comfortable with him; pity he couldn’t say the same.

He’d be nervous around girls for the next century at this rate.

“You have?” he said.

“Mhmm. Mistress said you should wait here.” She gestured to the chair.

Chair? He blinked and looked beside the bed. There was a chair. Hard to notice with the two nude ballerinas on the bed, but indeed, there was a chair, a black leather one with no arms and wood legs.

He sat down, and smiled at the girls. They smiled back, and Julee slid up to the edge of the bed to sit next to her friend. Naked but for their chokers, he couldn’t take his eyes off their bodies, their lean little frames, small and pert breasts, smooth skin. He’d been inside each of them, more than once, and had drank their blood while doing so. No amount of willpower could stop the memories from rising.

And for them too. They both blushed, and snickered a few seconds later when his eyes still couldn't pull away.

What did Ashley and Julee do with their free time, when they weren't with their mistress? In all their times together, Antoinette controlled the conversation, and he never really got to ask them what they did. Were they her eyes and ears, spies for the Prince, or did they also pursue more human goals? They went to university, but what else?

"If I did not know better, I would think you are here for my pets, little Ventrue, and not I."

He looked to the vault door, and gulped again. Antoinette.

"I ... I uh—"

"Shh," she said, wicked smile adorned and red eyes devouring him. The Prince of Dolareido stepped into her bedroom, and started the slow dance of walking toward him.

Her clothes, oh god her clothes. She was wearing a corset, an underbust one, so her breasts were free to hang over it. The corset went down to the hip, tight against her waist the whole way, and it looked like it was made of leather. Black straps connected to high top leather boots that went all the way up to her thigh. Black lace underwear covered her privates, and her breasts were exposed but for the black, see-through robe she wore over her shoulders, with string at the neck and chest keeping it over her bust, but spreading out behind her at the waist. Like a queen's robe.

She looked like a dominatrix, a high-class, royal dominatrix. Now, he was officially scared.

"To me, my pets."

Julee and Ashley hopped off the bed and pranced over to join their mistress, each with beaming smiles. While Antoinette's long boots sported a few inches of heel, Julee and Ashley were barefoot, and being Jack's size, they looked like ants next to the tall, curvy creature of the night. Each took one of the Prince's hands, and held it to their chests with both of theirs, before the three of them started to walk toward him.

He managed a few quick glances around. No whips or paddles, thank god. But the look in Antoinette's eye had him shaking, and the closer she got, the more his beast struggled to keep still. She really did look like she was going to devour him; tiger metaphor taken a bit far.

He kept his mouth shut as she approached, and he stared. Two naked ballerinas, and one very tall, curvy queen, approaching him like he was about to be sacrificed in an ancient ritual. At any moment, they'd pull out daggers, and he'd have to watch as they cut itty bitty little pieces off of him. The dragon statues she kept around would come to life, eat him up, and he'd spend a thousand years in eternal torment in their fiery stomachs.

"Jack," she said, "stand." So close now, only two feet separated them, and she smiled down at him from above. The black robe she wore over her shoulders, tied closed across her chest, actually went out for a good ten feet along the floor behind her, like a majestic gown of night. And from so near, he could see the corset was not of simple make, but engraved with coiling black lines, with little spikes on them that made them look like dragon tails. The boots too.

He stood up, and stared up at the beautiful woman of his dreams.

"Arms out to the sides little Ventrue, while Ashley and Julee undress you."

Arms out to the sides then. The two ballerinas let go of her hands, stepped up to him, and reached out. Their small fingers found his jacket, and slipped it off his shoulders. Then his tie, and shirt, and belt. Then his shoes, and socks, pants, and finally, his boxers. He hadn't blushed life yet, so arousal would not happen, at least not physically. Mentally, he was doing his best to keep his eyes on the dangerous woman in front of him, and not the two nude girls touching him all over.

"Blush for us, Jack," Antoinette said.

A little Vitae, a little mental effort, and his body renewed itself with life, with a fake heartbeat, with fake saliva and fake blood. Fake still worked, and as he stared at the tall woman with long white hair and red eyes, he could feel his erection growing. Her robe was see-through after all, and her underbust corset only emphasized her breasts, until he couldn't help but take quick peeks at them, eye-level as they were.

She blushed as well. Life came to her red lips, a shade darker than she normally wore. Her dark nipples looked amazing through the robe against her alabaster skin, and the very subtle veins on the underside of her breasts, little things that went with the size and weight of them, made him groan.

"Sit."

He sat.

"Hands upon the small of your back."

He put his hands behind him.

"Good. Ashley, do the honors."

Ashley pranced over to the bed, reached into the nightstand drawer, and withdraw handcuffs. Handcuffs! Jack gulped, and gulped three more times as Ashley handcuffed him. Not to the chair at least, but his hands were indeed cuffed, and he jingled them a bit to test them. Normal metal, he might be able to break through them if it came to that, but that would upset Antoinette. And a part of him was interested to see where this would go. Scared shitless, but kind of thrilled.

Got a screw loose, Jack.

“Tell me Jack Terry, do you enjoy your nights with me?”

Trick question, careful how you answer!

“Most amazing nights of my life.”

Ashley and Julee, now standing in front of him and beside the Prince once more, nodded to each other. His response seemed satisfactory for this new triumvirate.

“Ah, little Ventrue.” With a sly smile, the Prince reached out for the back of his chair, and slid it across the floor until the chair was only a couple feet from the bed, and facing it. She stepped in front of him, long legs on display, boots past her knee, and she sat down. “I do hope you will indulge us. The girls have been asking to spend a little more time with you.” He blinked, and she smirked. “You may speak freely.”

“ ... with me?”

“Yeah,” Ashley said, and she climbed up onto the bed. On her hands and knees, she arched her back like a stretching cat; the choker made the image complete. “We see the way you look at us. Mistress always gets to spend time with you, but we only get to sometimes. Mistress has said all erotic play with her must include her love, the little Ventrue.”

“Um ... we uh...” Time with him? They were Antoinette’s ghouls, not his, they wanted her. He was a byproduct of that, attraction by proxy. Or at least he thought so, but the two girls were looking his naked body up and down, and grinning. Maybe Amanda really had been flirting with him. “ ... why?”

Julee came up on Antoinette’s other side, and spent some time adjusting the Prince’s long, long robe, so the royal cape was settled on the bed instead of the floor. With some room now, the brunette climbed up onto the bed beside her mistress, and sat down with her legs dangling off the side, facing Jack. She slipped a hand around Antoinette’s waist to hug her, and her mistress did the same for her shoulders.

“Because we like you,” Julee said. Blush sparkled her cheeks, and she pressed it to Antoinette’s arm as she smiled at Jack.

Antoinette spread her legs. Jack stared at her black lace lingerie for far too long before he raised his eyes to her devil smile. And as she smiled at him, she reached over for Julee, picked her up like a weightless feather, and set her down between her thighs. The ballerina, facing Jack, blushed all the more, especially as Antoinette slipped her hands underneath Julee’s shoulders, down along her sides, and onto her stomach. Unlike Antoinette, Julee had some abs to her, the lean physique of an agile gymnast, like Jack. A bit skinnier than him though; he could probably fold her in half and she wouldn’t even blink.

“Hands down, my pet,” the Prince said. Her hands roamed high to find the small, pert breasts awaiting her, and her fingers cupped them to offer gentle squeezes and presses. She trapped the girl’s nipples between finger and thumb, and massaged them with tiny twists and pinches.

The effect was immediate. Julee squirmed and wriggled a bit, and put her hands on Antoinette’s legs, along the top of her boots. Groped by a queen of the night, in a leather corset and boots, wearing a robe that was more like a grand cape, and Jack to watch every bit of her from only two feet away. No use in trying to avoid letting his eyes do what they wanted, not when Antoinette was actively trying to make it happen. He stared at the naked, lithe creature as she started to sigh with blissful moans, as her skin started to flush, and her breathing quickened. Horny in a single minute. Damn.

“I ... I uh ... why the handcuffs?” he said, once he managed to lift his eyes back to the Prince.

“So you do not accidentally begin touching yourself.”

“Acci...” His jaw dropped as Antoinette moved both hands down to Julee’s legs, slipped them in between her thighs, and pushed the ballerina’s legs apart. With Julee sitting between the far taller woman’s legs, Antoinette had little issue getting the girl’s legs wide enough to put her smooth, tiny pussy on display for him, and show off the girl’s growing arousal.

Yeap, he’d probably be masturbating right now, and not even realizing it. He managed a glimpse down at his naked self, and winced; so hard he felt like his dick would burst. Cock pointing up at forty-five degrees and demanding attention, but no one was giving it. All he had for stimulation was the feast for his eyes Antoinette was giving him.

“I spend much time as the focus of your gaze, little Ventrue, and I do adore it, truly. But my pets are my cherished friends, and they too wish to spend a little time under your gaze.” Antoinette’s hands reached down, and found Julee’s clitoris. The ballerina shuddered for a second as her mistress started to massage the little bud, and Jack felt a bit of drool on his lip as he watched the naked woman squirm under his lover’s touch.

“My gaze?”

“Yes my love.” Antoinette’s other hand raised to Julee’s chin, and she pointed her pet’s face at Jack. The ballerina’s eyes, barely open, managed a heavy, pleasure-filled peek at him, and she kept them upon him as the Prince played with her body.

Ashley sneaked a bit of the Prince's hair, and she curled it around her finger as she leaned forward a bit to watch Julee. She had no shame, the blond ballerina, and as she coiled Antoinette's hair, she slid her other finger down her body, between her thighs, and started touching herself. When Jack glanced her way, she made no reservations about what she was doing, and lifted her leg to put her foot up on the bed, knee bent, everything on display. He met her eyes for a moment, and she winked at him as she slid a finger down the crease of her small, puffy sex.

"For tonight," Antoinette said, "I felt Ashley and Julee deserved more time in the bed with you and I. Are you comfortable with that, my love?"

"I ... god ... yes." It was always a bit strange, how Antoinette used her pets as a conduit for affection. He'd learned to take it as a sign of trust and love, since she was so extremely attached to her ghouls. And that she wanted them to join them during sex, was her way of saying she really lusted for him, and trusted him. Maybe his mind would work in such indirect ways when he was five hundred years old.

For the love of god, focus on the naked girl in front of you being jilled off. Focus he did, and groan he did as Julee kept her legs open for him, her hands on Antoinette's legs, and her eyes drifting between closed, and gazing at him, pleasure palpable on her face.

"Also, perhaps, a little hero worship, oui ma petite? My love risked everything to save me." Antoinette let go of Julee's chin, and roamed her hand down over the girl's naked breasts, all while without pausing her caressing fingers over Julee's clit. "Jack, quite valiant, jumping between myself and fifteen zealots."

"Well, I mean, we would have been next, and ... and..."

Antoinette pulled Julee's leg up, opposite of the other ghoul Ashley, and hooked it over her much longer leg. Now, everything was exposed, and Jack felt his inner muscles squeeze with need, causing his shaft to twitch and bounce upright. Ashley giggled, but Julee gazed down at his cock, at what she was doing to him, and mewled, squeaky little sounds that made him ache with need.

And her ache too, Jack could see. Antoinette used both hands to spread Julee's pussy apart with teasing fingers, and her juices trickled out of her clenching opening. Pink, swollen flesh squeezing in spurts, each causing a tiny drop of her fluids to leak out of her and down along her folds. From so close, he could see everything, every shiver, every muscle contraction as the goddess sank two of her fingers into Julee's gripping lips.

"And we have robbed these two of their blood far too often these past two weeks, my little Ventrue. They have not had the pleasure to stay up all night with us, as of late." Antoinette motioned with her head to Ashley, and the ballerina slid off the bed to walk behind Jack.

"Tonight, mistress said we get to play with you." She leaned down, put her chin on his shoulder, and set her lips to his ear as her hands slid over his chest, down his abdomen, and to his pelvis. "The whole night this time."

"I ... I uh ... umm ... don't know if I'll be able to ... last that long." Three girls, all night, and if he wasn't going to feed on the ghouls for the aphrodisiac, he couldn't see himself lasting.

"That is why we will take our time," Antoinette said, "and make sure to treat my pets well tonight."

Treat the ghouls well? He was on board with that idea, but Ashley's hands were all over him, fingers caressing and lining the muscles of his chest and abdomen. Her fingers eventually slid further down, along the smooth skin of his pubic area, and down to his testicles, where her fingertips pressed into and teased him. Her palms cupped his scrotum, and with very, very gentle squeezes, started to massage him.

But it was hard to focus on her fingers touching him, when Julee was so close, their toes almost touching. Antoinette's fingers sank deeper, curled up into the girl's body, and forced more whimpers from her. Probably why she wasn't wearing long black gloves to join her ensemble; she wanted to be able to feel and touch with all the delicacy of skin.

She was so fucking beautiful. Much as Jack's eyes were drawn to what Antoinette was doing to Julee's pussy, his gaze drifted up to his love as well. Her white hair had fallen over the side of her neck as she leaned over Julee's head, so damn tall. With one of Julee's tiny legs draped over Antoinette's thicker, toned and curvy leg, Jack found his eyes on his love's leg as much as anything. Those boots. Damn those boots.

Antoinette started to finger the girl harder, hard enough Jack could see the juices on her knuckles, and could see Julee start to shake. The brunette was having a very hard time keeping her hands on her legs.

He was one to talk. Five times now he found himself, through pure reflex, trying to get his hands out so he could touch himself. The sounds, oh god the moans of the little ballerina as the tall devil fingered her more, and more. Ashley's touch never left his balls, gentle and playful, cupping and massaging, but not enough to provide any real stimulation. He'd never cum like this; by design.

All he could do was watch as Antoinette drove the brunette to orgasm. Julee raised her hands at last, one to her chest where she hugged herself, the other to hold onto Antoinette's wrist. The Prince didn't seem to mind. She continued, pumping the girl up hard enough to make Julee lean back into her, and squeal. Hard enough to make a growing wet spot on the bed.

“Julee,” Antoinette said, as she at last removed her dripping fingers from the tiny, gripping lips of the girl’s pussy, “she does enjoy having your eyes upon her naked body.”

“D ... does she?” he said. Every word was a struggle with Ashley’s hands teasing him, her touch growing a bit more bold and sliding her fingertips up onto the base of his shaft. She never squeezed though, never gripped him or stroked him, only caressed with a soft touch. He managed a glance at the girl leaning over his shoulder, and found the girl’s eyes were locked on his body, his cock.

The two girls had their own unique kinks.

Antoinette set her wet fingers upon Julee’s mouth, and the exhausted girl spread her lips to let her mistress slide them into her. A practiced motion, from what Jack could see.

“I mean, I uh ... I’m just me. Little me. I was a virgin before you girls came along.”

“And that is perhaps why she finds your gaze so enticing.” Antoinette lowered her grip down to Julee’s neck, and wrapped her throat. Julee’s eyes opened wide for only a moment, before she melted back into her mistress’s body, and moaned. The girl’s body changed, her facial expression changed, and her noises changed. She got louder, looser, and let her grunts and groans come out more clearly as Antoinette kept a nice grip on the girl’s neck.

Until she squeezed harder. Julee went rigid for a second, and loosened up again as Antoinette fingered her, while choking her. Grip around the girl’s choker necklace, the Prince brought the girl’s face to redden as she sank her digits into Julee’s pussy, and pushed up.

What had taken ten minutes before, took twenty seconds now. The brunette managed weak whimpers through the Prince's grip, but her arms hung limp and her legs quivered with spasm until the wet spot on the bed was huge. Thighs spread and body leaning back, Jack was hypnotized by the convulsions of the ballerina's muscles, each making her back arch before collapsing against the Prince's chest once more.

She let go. Julee gasped, sitting upright again, and turned away as she shivered.

“He's ... staring.”

“Indeed.” Antoinette, smiling a devil's smile at Jack, leaned down to put a kiss atop the girl's head, before she let Julee lower her leg again. She picked up the ballerina, set her on the bed beside her, and motioned for Ashley. Julee, panting and exhausted, leaned against Antoinette's side, and she combed a bit of Antoinette's hair again as she set her cheek against the Prince's shoulder.

Ashley was very much not exhausted. The blond giggled, and slid around him to sit between Antoinette's legs, facing Jack. So little room between them, only a couple feet, she had a little trouble getting around him, but soon she was snuggled back into her mistress's lap, and she had no issues spreading her legs. Without waiting, she opened her thighs and exposed the small, smooth pussy she seemed very proud of. It was wet.

“Ashley, on the other hand, is a rascal, a mischievous creature. She enjoys play.” Antoinette set her hands on Ashley's shoulders, slid them down her arms, underneath them, and to the girl's gymnast stomach. Ashley didn't even blush. Shameless, far more so than the first time they'd had sex, Ashley reached out for the underside of Jack's chair, and pulled him forward.

The chair made a quiet groan as the wooden legs slid across the marble, before he was a single foot away from Ashley. She smiled at him, grinned a grin he'd seen on Antoinette a thousand times, before she put her legs up and onto his shoulders. The angle put her butt up a bit, between his knees and on the edge of the bed.

“She does love to test me.” With a roll of her eyes, Antoinette reached out, set her fingers upon the girl's smooth, lithe legs, and traced her thighs. And from this close, there was no way Jack could miss a single moment of it. Antoinette slid a hand down the girl's mons, and started to caress her clitoris; a different rhythm than with Julee, more bounce and less depth. But it worked, and within seconds, Ashley started to pant, started to blush, and started to whimper. Her sounds were far less submissive sounding than Julee's, far more excited, and where Julee had looked like she was being tortured with bliss, Ashley was smiling and giggling between mewls.

“Can I, mistress?”

“Only if Jack agrees.”

“Agrees? Agrees to ... to...” He stared as Ashley put her legs down, stood up in the small crevice of space between the chair and the bed, and reached out to put her hands on his shoulders.

“Sex.” She leaned in closer, lips grazing his forehead, and she let her hands drift down upon his chest to nuzzle them into the lines of his muscles once more.

The ghouls were in their bed all the time, but actual sex with them, penetration, was a rarity. But whenever it happened, they always asked, and every time he double checked that it was actually something Antoinette wanted. A glance to her showed no signs of anger or jealousy; she looked enamored with the idea, even. Watching her pets fuck her love was a huge turn on for her, he could see.

Which of course made it a huge turn on for him. He looked up at the ballerina, up her smooth body, the subtle lines of her muscles, her flexible and lithe form, her tiny frame. Not as small as Natasha — no one was as small as Natasha — but small like him.

“You sure?” he said to Antoinette.

“Of course my sweet,” she said, same as always.

Though today, she felt like doing a little more than saying. She reached out with her hands, put them onto Ashley’s hips, and guided the girl forward. Ashley spread her legs around Jack’s, and lowered herself down to sit on his lap, almost bouncing on his legs. Her clit pressed up against the underside of his cock, and she slid herself forward across his lap — or Antoinette pushed her — to press the wet lips of her cunt to his testicles. She stuck out her arms to hook them around his neck by the hand, so she could lean back and smile at him while Antoinette’s hands continued to move over her body. The Prince grinned from over her pet’s shoulder, slid herself a bit closer so it was her sitting on the edge of the bed. And from so close, she let her hands roam up and down Ashley’s naked body, along her small, beautiful breasts, along her stomach and navel, along her back and shoulders.

Jack groaned as he felt the light creature’s liquids grow until his testicles were warm with them.

“Y-yeah ... I’d love ... to have sex with you.” When he said it, Antoinette let out a long sigh of satisfaction, and her smile returned, brighter. Seeing her smile like that, made his insides warm and his own smile show. Her ghouls were hers, and she was sharing what she cherished with her love.

And of course, beautiful naked girl, plus sex. Just a guy after all, barely an adult! Antoinette knew his weakness, and she was exploiting it. He was the victim!

Victim!

Ashley stood up again, reached down to take his aching cock into her fingers, and guided him. Her squeezing muscles found his glans, and she giggled as she clenched tight while lowering herself. And he groaned, louder than he wanted, as her tight, wet muscles found the already swollen-to-burst head of his cock. Hot flesh wrapped around him, squeezing the whole way down, until the little imp was comfortable on his lap. She nudged herself in a little, and sighed as she wriggled around until her lips were pressed to the base of him.

“Mmm.” She raised her arms like she was stretching, before she set them out again to hook her fingers around the back of his neck while she leaned against the Prince’s stomach. Her head settled between where Antoinette’s breasts hung over her corset, still partially hidden behind the royal robe. “I never really get to make this last, you know? Never get to just sit here, and ... look ... and feel...” Her hands slid down his chest again, down along his abs to his shoulders, and up to his neck, before finding his buzzed hair; more giggles as she ran her fingers along it.

Jack managed a glance at Julee, but it only made things worse. The brunette was masturbating, though she was trying to hide it. Hard to hide when she was sitting against Antoinette’s side, leaning against her, and had a hand between her thighs.

“Hey,” Ashley said, “look at me too ... please?” She slid her hands up her own body this time, found her pert breasts, and kneaded them with a few caressing presses before she put her fingers back against Jack’s chest.

“S-ssory ... just...” Just holy god fuck mother sweet fucking ham. Don’t cum, don’t cum. Gods she was so tight, and wet, and warm, warm with a kine’s blood. Biting her was off limits for the night’s plan, if the ghouls wanted to be more involved, but he could feel his desire to sink his teeth into her neck growing. Focusing on the pleasure wasn't helping; his cock was so hard and already leaking precum into her, any sudden thrusts and he'd probably cum. The warm, tingling waves were building up underneath his shaft by then, demanding release.

And the Prince knew it too.

“To torment poor Jack is ... I admit, something she and I both delight in.” Antoinette settled her chin on Ashley's head, and let her hands roam down the girl's body, down to her thighs, and between her legs where the ballerina was taut around Jack's cock. Her fingers, dancing little devils, found Ashley's clitoris, and began to massage it.

Jack winced as Ashley clenched down. Her juices renewed, and only grew as Antoinette caressed the girl's budding clit with what must have been five centuries of practice. And far as Jack could tell, it was more than enough to rip the energy out of Ashley in seconds and leave her a squeaking, squeezing mess. She tried to keep her hands on his chest, to keep touching him, feeling him, but the faster and harder Antoinette got, the more she mewled, and eventually put her hands onto her mistress's wrists.

Antoinette wasn't looking at Ashley though, she was looking at him. A succubus smile, with half-closed eyes that failed to mask the evil glint he found there. She was enjoying this torture, making him feel every clench and spasm and squeeze of Ashley's insides as the girl was catapulted to orgasm. And as Ashley came, her cunt convulsing and making him shiver, Antoinette continued to watch him.

He tried to keep eye contact with her; he knew she liked that, after all. But he had to look away, if only for a second, to keep himself from thrusting into the ballerina cumming on his cock.

“Oh ... I ... mmm.” Ashley leaned her head back a bit and pointed her lips upward, and the Prince met them with a kiss, and a wink for Jack. “I know you and the mistress, you’re in love, and ... and it’s romantic, and perfect! And ... and I hope we can be a part of that. We’re her ghouls, after all. We serve the mistress wholly.” Ashley leaned forward, hands out for his shoulders again, but this time she got in deep, put her head near his, and looked down. She watched where his cock was inside her, and where her clit pressed against his pubic area when she angled it right.

“I uh ... I mean...” Don’t cum don’t cum. “I love Antoinette with all I am, and ... and uh ... if she’s comfortable with this, then I am t-too,” he said. The girl refused to hold still, quivering on him, and grinding her hips a little. Antoinette’s fingers were still on her, and Jack couldn’t help but look down to see what she was doing that was making Ashley squeeze that way. Each one put a stutter or pause into his voice, where his panting tried to fit in.

And panting turned into more groans when Ashley came again. She bounced a little this time, squeaking and mewling, and squeezing his cock until he thought she might break something. So warm, so damn warm, and every little motion she made sent waves of pleasure down his length from his engorged glans, until his own muscle clenching caused more of his precum to join her wet insides.

But at last Antoinette stopped, and Jack collapsed back against the chair, panting not with exhaustion, but just trying his hardest to keep his cum inside him. Ashley seemed less tired, even energized, and she giggled as Antoinette picked her up off of him, and set her down on the bed edge beside her, opposite of Julee.

“On the edge, my little Ventrue?” Antoinette leaned in, put her hands on his legs, and brought her lips to his nose. From so close, her breast hung with their weight, like giant teardrops, and he made no effort to hide his staring.

“Y-yeah...”

“My love, I am feeling neglected, and envious of my pets.”
Antoinette stood up, and pushed his chair back a couple feet so she had room. He stared up at her, jaw dropping as he watched the busty vixen from so close, the tight corset that was emphasizing the amazing hourglass curve of her figure, and the boots increasing the height of her already very, very, very long legs.

She turned to put her profile to him, lowered her hands to her hips, and starting sliding off her panties. Black, on the outside of the straps that connected the high boots to the corset, and she grinned at him every second of the slow process of sliding them off. Taunting, teasing, when she got the underwear down to her heels, she let go, stepped out of them, and arched her back as she raised herself to stand up straight once more, before turning to face him again.

He gulped, his cock twitched, and another drop of his precum leaked from the ripe glans.

“N-neglected?”

“Indeed.” She raised her right leg, put it on the chair next to his butt, and stepped around the chair with the other. So close, so tall, and with her one leg up and knee bent — oh my fucking god those boots — it put her smooth lips and bare mons only inches from his face. “Do take care of me, my little Ventrue.” She pushed her hips in, just a few inches, just enough so the bud of her clitoris was grazing his lips.

He opened his mouth, and devoured her.

Her moans, husky and deep compared to the ballerinas, sent shivers up his spine. He’d heard them so many times, over dozens of nights of sex, and they always got him going. A tiger’s groan, a dragon’s moan, a dangerous and deadly creature pushing her pussy against his lips, and awaiting satisfaction. And he gave it as best he could, suckling on her clit and bathing it in his tongue. She was already wet.

Her hands found his head, and she ran her fingers over his buzzed crown. He felt a little bad for Ashley, because the Prince's caress along his head felt so much better. Like melting into a warm embrace, her fingers settled him and begged him at the same time, soothed him and lit a fire between his legs at the same time, made him want to touch her so damn much. Handcuffs made that hard, but using only his mouth was half the fun.

So damn beautiful. It wasn't just the proximity, of tasting her juices on his tongue, of feeling her clenching muscles nudge against his mouth as he licked, it was the view! Oh god the view, staring up at her, her heavy breasts hanging over his head, and the corset that would have probably left a human unable to breathe.

Ashley and Julee joined Antoinette, put their hands on the chair and his shoulders, and leaned in to watch.

"That looks amazing," Ashley said. Julee said nothing, but Jack could see her blushing in the corner of his eye, her eyes locked on where Antoinette was pushing her mons against his nose. The Prince moved one of her hands too, probably to give the girls a better view of what he was doing to her.

And they both let out long, deep sighs as Antoinette came. More of her wet warmth trickled into his mouth and onto his tongue, each renewed by a clench of her muscles he could feel against him. Lips locked around half of her pussy, he licked and suckled until he felt her shudder; she rarely moaned during orgasm, the Prince, but came with controlled pleasure and practiced bliss. He settled his tongue, and let her enjoy her orgasm for a few moments, before he licked again.

But the Prince had had enough. She lowered her leg, backed away, and sat down on the bed; Jack grinned when he noticed her legs were shivering a little.

“Much better,” she said, and she raised her hands to comb back her hair, elbows high to show off her body. Such a showoff. “Much much better. That was delightful.”

“Thanks.”

She chuckled, as did the two girls still standing beside him.

“Come, we have tortured you long enough.” She motioned for him to come join her, and he had to fight the urge to jump and throw himself onto the bed. So hard his dick hurt. But, with a little—lot of mental effort, he walked over to the bed, and sat down beside the Prince.

She smirked at him, reached out, and lifted him. Just a feather to her no doubt, and she placed him on his back on the sheets.

The ballerinas, one giggling and one blushing, climbed up onto the bed, and lay beside him, one for each arm. With his hands trapped in the small of his back, he had to shift around a bit to get a comfortable position for his cuffs, and the two girls grinned as he did. They put their hands on him, on his chest and shoulders, and teased their fingers up and down his abs, and down to his shaft. Never up it though, never stroking him, just their fingertips dancing along where his cock met his pelvis.

“I’m all over him,” Ashley said, and she traced some of her wetness from his pubic area, up onto his abs. “And ... he looks like he’s about to burst.”

Jack looked down at where his cock was pointed up and toward him at an angle, at his cock’s head, so swollen and engorged. Fuck he needed only a little stimulation, just a little touch, anything, and he’d be over the edge in seconds.

Antoinette crawled over to him, her long robe dragging along the bed behind her as she straddled his legs. She got comfortable, put her knees on either side of his waist, and set her ass down against his thighs. Jack quivered up at the sight of the busty succubus straddling him, her pussy only inches away from the base of his cock from where she was sitting.

And then she disrobed. Ashley and Julee were quick to join her, and as Antoinette undid the many knots of where her robe was connected around her neck and chest, the two girls slid it down from her shoulders and back to fall behind her on the bed. Like servants disrobing royalty. Which she was, basically. He had the Prince of Dolareido sitting on his legs, straddling him, with her bare breasts now hanging free and visible before his eyes. The clothes emphasized everything, and he stared at where the teardrop shape of her tremendous breasts fell over the corset and pressed against where it hid her ribs.

She kept the boots on too.

“I ... I um...”

She chuckled all the more, leaned forward, and put one hand to his chest. The other reached down to wrap her fingers around his wet cock, and pointed it up toward her. With a slow, tantalizing cruelty, she started to slip him into her dripping, clenching pussy, so slow he found himself fighting his urge to thrust.

Eventually, the curvy vampire set her ass down against his thighs and pelvis, and got comfortable yet again, like breaking in a new chair. But she refused to squeeze or clench, refused to grip and shift and move, refused to do any of the things he'd need in order to cum. All he could do was stare up at the woman as she settled on him, and did nothing.

At least at first, but when she caught his eyes, she grinned her devil's grin at him, and started to sway her lips. Slow dips of her body to the sides, and then back and forth, a figure eight dance that made her corset move like a snake. Such a beautiful contrast against her pale skin, and her long white hair. She raised her hands, ran them back through her hair, and jutted out her breasts a little, showing off her physique.

And she squeezed, hard enough to make him gasp and squirm, more than hard enough to make each shift of her hips massage his ripe glans with her gripping insides. The pleasure sparks flooded his cock, poured down his length until it was between his legs, before his body returned it with a gush of warm, tingling waves.

He started to pant, and started to cum. The first wave always made him shudder, and he stared at the dance of the vixen as she clenched down on him in spurts. Between each clutch, his cum flowed into her, coating his cock and her insides, until his white fluid was dripping down his testicles.

“Ah, there. I trust that is better, my love?” Antoinette leaned over him, put her hands against his shoulders so her hanging breasts swayed over his head, and she squeezed more. Her dance never ceased, though it did slow a bit, and she used it to milk the waves of cum out of him, each sending jolts of bliss down his length while her pussy tightened on his cock. Julee and Ashley were staring, the blond groaning, the brunette blushing bright. Antoinette drew his attention back, her hair falling over the side of her head and tickling along his cheek.

“Much ... much better,” he said between pants. She was still dancing, just very slowly now, emphasizing each sway with a deep dip of her hips, and another clench of her insides to milk him. The pleasure started to fade, but it still lingered with little sparks of bliss that made his cock twitch, and Antoinette made sure to pull every last spark out of him; she always did.

And when the white of his cum started to trickle out of him where everyone could see, the two ballerinas let out their own moans. Julee stared, while Ashley reached out again, touched where Antoinette's pussy was pressed to his body, and ran her finger through his cum and up onto his abs.

"You are still aroused," Antoinette said. A little dip and sway of her hips proved it, and he shivered as her cum-soaked insides gripped and squeezed. Still hard, body wanting more. How could it not, with two naked, nimble women running their hands up and down his body, and the love of his life riding his cock.

Best he could manage was a nod.

"Good. My pets would prefer this last, I am sure," the Prince said. As she did, Ashley and Julee sat up and put themselves next to her. Tall as Antoinette was, with her sitting on his pelvis, her breasts were at eye level with the two ghouls.

"W-what ... do they want ... to do?"

Antoinette chuckled. "Ashley, Julee, Jack has given you permission to do as you wish, within reason. Please feel free to indulge."

Ashley thought the situation was perfect apparently, with her giggling and smiling and her roaming hands. Julee got closer to Antoinette, but Jack could see her looking at him, biting her bottom lip, thinking. Ashley wasted no time though, crawled over to his head, and straddled him. Facing down at him, she leaned forward, set her hands on the blankets, and lined her pussy up with his lips.

"Me too?" she said.

"Y-yeah, sure." He tried to return her smile, but half his mind got yanked away by the touch of roaming hands on his abs. He couldn't see anymore, with Ashley blocking his view, but he could feel hands on his stomach, his chest and hips, four hands at that. Antoinette's touch he recognized, her confident and practiced fingertips teasing along his lower abdomen. But Julee was touching him too, a lighter and wavering touch that ran up to his chest and traced the lines of his pectorals.

Yanked back again to the ballerina hovering over his head as she lowered her pussy down onto his lips. Soaked, warm, full of blood. A heavy urge to bite hit him, but he pushed it down. He didn't need blood, so resisting was a bit easier, and he didn't want to ruin the ghouls' fun. He was the intruder in a bed they'd been sharing with the Prince for years, after all, least he could do was play nice.

A long, slow, deep lick earned a mewl from Ashley. She spread her legs out further, sinking herself down onto him and getting more comfortable as his tongue reached up to probe at her entrance. But it was her clitoris that earned whimpers of bliss. He suckled the nub out of its hiding place from within her puffy pussy that hid her lips, and he bathed it in faster strokes of his tongue. No need to build her up to it, she'd come twice before already, and was already panting with bliss. From between her thighs, he could see the contractions of her hard stomach, the gymnast abs, and the shudders of her shoulders. She gazed at him, smiling bright, and nudged her hips toward him.

He did his best to ignore the hands on his body from the other two women, and the noises they were making. Something that sounded like kissing, or suckling, and something that was making Antoinette move very, very slowly. The succubus wouldn't bring him to a second orgasm, not until she was satisfied, and she was bound to make every minute to it torturous bliss.

Ashley squeaked, and lowered herself down to rest her weight on one hand on the blankets. Cumming again already. He liked to think it was because of his expert skills, but he knew it was more because Antoinette had cultivated some serious sex drive in her two friends.

It never took time to bring them to orgasm; his only saving grace, or they'd have sucked him dry instead.

He smiled up at the ballerina as she shuddered, touched her breasts with one of her hands, and gripped the blankets with the other. She managed to return the smile, but it shattered as he suckled her swollen clit into his mouth, and again bathed her hot flesh with his tongue.

“Nn! Sensitive ... slow ... slow down,” she said. He did, but only for a moment, only long enough for her to think he'd stopped, and then he started licking again. “W-wait!” Ashley erupted into mewls, and her hands grabbed his head as she quivered. Her poor clit was probably a little sore, and very sensitive, from the abuse it'd been taking that night, but with each lick, he could feel the tiny creature tremble on his face, and leak juices onto his lips.

She rolled off of him, and lay down on her back on the blankets, hugging herself as she quivered. He managed only a quick glance at her, a second to admire the rise and fall of her small, pointed breasts against her lean form, before a quiet, deep, husky moan pulled his gaze back to Antoinette.

He almost melted. Julee, sitting on her knees and buttocks next to him, was leaning over him, one hand pressed to his abs to brace her weight, her other hand reaching around behind Antoinette and holding her waist. Her lips were on the Prince's nearer breast, suckling on her nipple. The Prince had one hand on her own hip to rest it upon Julee's fingers, and the other was on the small of Julee's back, returning the half hug while the ghoul gently feasted on her bosom.

“Thank you,” the Prince said, “for pleasing my pet.”

He didn't respond, eyes glued to Julee, and how she was nuzzling her face into Antoinette's breast, burying her nose and lips in the woman's massive tit, and suckling. He'd never watched this, never got to see what it was like for the ghouls to play with her body the way he did; the two ghouls rarely got past the first ten minutes of sex, since they'd become food for two Kindred instead of one. But now, Jack found himself mesmerized. Antoinette smiled at him, and squeezed. Jack winced with the strength of her grip on his cock, but as she relented, he shivered as her caressing insides massaged him. She didn't move more than an inch in any direction, tilting her hips enough to make him groan, to make his cock sing with blissful friction from within her cum-filled pussy.

Julee took a quick peek at Jack, before she turned her head back to hide her eyes from him. As she did, she raised her hand from his stomach, set it on Antoinette's other breast, and started to squeeze it. Just like Jack would, Julee let the weight of the Prince's ample breast overflow her palm as her hand cupped it from underneath, before she let it fall under her hand, so her fingers could slide up its shape and caress the engorged nipple. Jack stared at Antoinette's breast and her facial expression alike, gulping as he watched the curvy succubus close her eyes and sigh with bliss.

"Julee, what do you wish to do?" Antoinette said. Julee's body went red, and she leaned up to put her mouth to her mistress's ear. Another chuckle from the Prince, and she slid herself off of him; cum and juices trickled out of her onto his abdomen as she did. Like a prowling cat, she crawled forward and lay herself down beside him. Once she was at eye level with Jack along the blankets, she pressed herself up against his shoulder, leaning over him a bit to press her breasts to his chest, and nudge her nose against his while her long legs hooked one of his.

"Enjoy yourself," she said, and she kissed him. He kept his eyes half-open, as did she, and she smiled at him with her red gaze as she plucked at his lips a little with her teeth.

He wasn't sure what she meant, until Julee took his cock into her hand.

“Ah, it’s ... wet.” Her grip slid up and down, slowly, and gave him curious and experimenting squeezes. Reminded him of the first time they’d had sex, outside the tower’s underground pool. Ashley had grown infinitely more comfortable with him since then, Julee not so much. But, as she held his hard, dripping cock in her hand, he could see bits of her shyness melt away. He knew the feeling; at a certain point of arousal, you were basically drunk, and nothing gave courage quite like being drunk.

She climbed over his hips, straddled him, and with a guiding hand, set his glans against her soaked entrance. Whimpering, she eased herself down onto him, and settled herself upon his cock. Jack panted, doing his best to keep his groans under control, especially with Antoinette’s lips against his cheek. But Julee shifted around as she looked for a place to get comfortable, ass and hips moving until she found a comfortable spot on his thighs and pelvis. Her insides were quivering, and Julee let out quiet whining mewls as she started to shift back and forth on his shaft.

Each stroke, each inch sent more blissful waves down his length. She didn’t dance or sway like Antoinette, but instead, she rocked back and forth with her hands on Jack’s waist. Her mouth was open, her head hung a little, and her legs squeezed against his sides.

As he struggled to keep from cumming, Antoinette put her lips to his ear, and plucked at his earlobe with her kisses and teeth.

“She is delightful, is she not?” The Prince let out a low growl into his ear, and reached out with a roaming hand to run her fingers along his stomach. “It pleases me, that my ghouls please you.”

“H-how could they not?”

“I have trained them well.” More chuckles, and more kisses, this time along his defenseless neck. “They only wish to repay the man who saved their mistress.” She pressed her breasts against his chest, and with her leg hooked over his, he felt her wet folds nudge against the side of his leg. “And they find you very attractive.”

His turn to blush. Again. For the millionth time.

Julee leaned back, put her hands on his legs, and arched her spine. Apparently she found a position she liked, shifting her hips forward a bit while leaning back, to guide his cock toward her belly. Her mewls returned, louder, and she started to shift her weight into the new position. Jack couldn't help but stare at how her arched body highlighted her limber frame, and made each clench of her muscles visible.

Antoinette pointed at Ashley. The other ballerina had sat up at some point, Jack hadn't noticed when, and she crawled around them to come sit beside Antoinette, behind her butt. She lowered herself, and hid from view.

But when Antoinette started to shake a little, and her calm, confident demeanor started to crack with little moans and husky pants, Jack could guess what Ashley was doing.

Even with a ghoul doing things to her, Antoinette continued to tease Jack, continued to nuzzle her nose and lips against his jaw and neck, against his earlobe, against his shoulder. She knew what her body did to him, what pressing her breasts against him did, and she smiled her tiger smile while doing so. Eyes struggling to stay upon him as more quiet, husky moans escaped her, the Prince leaned over reached across his chest to his further shoulder, and hugged him.

Trigger. That deep, seductress voice slew him, melted him into the bed. His fluids built to burst, each clench of his muscles shooting sparks of pleasure into his length. Antoinette smirked at him, but smirk faded as she too started to shake a little, and her hair bounced against his shoulder. He could hear the wet noises of slapping fingers from behind Antoinette, and each was accompanied by a silent shudder from the Prince.

His eyes switched back and forth between the red-eyed devil leaning over him, and the ballerina riding him faster. Julee was squeaking, and bouncing with a backward angle, making his cock almost bend as she started to slam her butt against him. Wet, and getting wetter, warm liquids dripped out of her and coated his cock all the more as she started to buck, and squeak. Too much.

He came, and quivered as the bouncing ghouls' clenching insides forced almost painful bliss through his length. She didn't stop, didn't look his way, far too lost in her own pleasure to see what she was doing to him. So tight, and rough, rougher than Antoinette liked to get. Julee pounded down against him, her light body springing up and down, back and forth upon his cock, as he started to fill her with cum. He winced with each bounce, the waves of pleasure met with her hot juices, and her gripping flesh.

Antoinette leaned in, her red eyes devouring him, and her grin ready to as well. "A little rambunctious, perhaps?" Chuckles and kisses. She nudged her nose into his cheek, lowered her lips down to his ear, and groaned. Not one to make noise during her orgasms, he knew that well enough after so many bouts with his love; if she was making noise, it was specifically to entice him.

And holy fuck it enticed him. The sound of her moan, the feel of her shuddering body pressed to his chest, everything. He made his own tiny groan, a pale comparison against hers, and squirted more of his cum into the bouncing ballerina.

It wasn't until he was done climaxing that Julee came to a stop. Unlike Antoinette, the brunette was a bit loud, and let out some whining mewls as she started to quiver. She sat up straight, eyes closed, and squeezed her cum-soaked insides hard enough to make him gasp as she came. Her juices dripped down onto his abdomen to join his, and the juices of the Ashley and the Prince.

Ashley came out from behind Antoinette, around behind Jack, and lay herself down on his side the same way Antoinette did, chest against his arm and one arm reaching out to hold him across the chest. Julee stayed on him, quivering, whimpering, and she leaned forward to rest her hands against his stomach as his softening cock at last started to fall out of her, only for his cum to drip down onto it and down his testicles.

Three woman, on his body.

“I uh ... I’m reminded of a certain vampire that had three wives. Pretty famous guy, had a book about him and everything.” His hands squirmed underneath the small of his back. No good, trapped unless he was willing to break free. Which would probably seriously ruin the scene; if his words already hadn’t.

But Antoinette laughed, and kissed his earlobe. “Mon amour.”

She set her cheek down on his shoulder and neck, and nuzzled into him; like a girl with her teddy bear. Julee and Ashley, they wouldn’t get this comfy, this loving with him; this was her place. Even if the two ghouls were Antoinette’s pets and had shared her bed for years, to hold each other like this was for the two Kindred.

Ashley and Julee smiled down at him, but instead of joining, Julee slipped off of him and lay down with Ashley. With more room available, Antoinette hugged him tighter, and kissed his neck a few times before she resettled. Jack managed a quick peek at the two ghouls, and blushed all the more. They were both staring at him and Antoinette, and he could hear their minds swoon ‘awe’ at the two of them as they smiled.

He probably would have thought it too.

Chapter 25

~~Jack~~

“Oh ... god...”

He couldn't cum anymore. Just the thought of another orgasm made his insides ache in pain. No more, his balls cried. We're dry!

The devil and her two imps didn't seem to agree. Ashley and Julee had both let him drink them, just a little, just enough to spark the arousal in his Kindred body once more, without either of them succumbing to exhaustion for it. And they took advantage.

“One more?” Antoinette said, smiling up at him. The Prince was on her back on her bed, head propped up on a couple pillows, and still in her corset; she'd taken off by the boots then.

He was straddling her, his knees under her arms, his butt on her abdomen and corset. Hands still cuffed behind him, and utterly helpless against the attack of the two ghouls.

They were kissing his cock. The two of them, at the same time. Ashley grinned up at him as she slid her lips back and forth along the swollen head of his shaft, while Julee managed a couple of quick peeks, each earning a huge blush from her. But she too was kissing the glans of his member, suckling, licking, sharing the wet of their mouths over the sensitive skin.

And more than once, the two started kissing. Ashley laughed the first time it happened, but the next time she did it on purpose, and angled where her lips met his cock so they'd meet Julee's lips too. And Julee reciprocated. Blushing so bright he thought she might die, Julee nudged her lips around to the front of his cock, and tried to keep his shaft along her mouth as she met Ashley's. Every so often, his cock fell away as the girls drifted, and they continued to kiss each other without him.

The Prince chuckled. With her on her back, the two ghouls were on their knees on each side of her, leaning over her to come at Jack from left and right. It gave Antoinette a perfect view of everything that was happening. And gave Jack a perfect view of her as she watched her ghouls. She was smiling, laughing, and she reached up to guide her two ghouls back toward his cock.

And again, he found his shaft in the middle of their kisses. Julee slid her lips further down the side of his length, lips traveling his girth until she planted her kisses along the base of him. Ashley went in the other direction, and shifted around more toward Antoinette's head so she could lean at Jack more directly. From straight on, she put her lips over the whole of the sensitive, engorged flesh of the head of his cock, and licked. Her tongue slipped out from her lips, went around and around and around, before she started to suckle as she settled her tongue along his member's underside.

"I ... going to cum soon."

"About time." Ashley lifted her head and reached out to poke his chest. "Been at this for fifteen minutes!"

Fifteen minutes of pure heaven. Painful heaven, but heaven. Another orgasm was liable to kill him, or at least hurt a bit, but that didn't change that having two sets of lips kissing his cock was nirvana. Each lick, each suckle sent powerful waves of pleasure down through his length, and each made him quiver with the impending orgasm still building up. If not for his previous orgasms, he wouldn't have lasted fifteen seconds.

Antoinette slid her hands out along her corset, between the two girls, and out to his hips. She pulled him a bit closer, sliding him across her a few inches until his cock was over her sternum. She wanted to see everything.

He gulped and did his best to keep the building warmth from exploding. Too good, he wanted to keep this going, even sucked dry as he was. Julee once again found her lips upon the head of his shaft, and again Ashley was there to meet her, trying to kiss her and him at the same time. Julee returned Ashley's affection, kissing her friend more obviously, more directly, but doing her best to keep his cock against their lips as they did.

He couldn't last against that. The familiar waves of bliss started to spread upward from between his legs, up his length, and a drop of precum joined the lips of the two ghouls. Julee pulled away a little, eyes going wide and staring at where the clear fluid dripped out of his cock, thick enough to ooze from him instead of falling like water. Ashley on the other hand had no such reservations, and she caught the precum along her tongue before putting her mouth back onto him.

Pure stimulation on his glans. With no one stroking his shaft, his orgasm came through only the sharp pleasure sparks along the tip, each forcing his muscles to squeeze down and build up the fluids. Almost painful, but oh god so fucking good, the ghouls suckled and kissed as another drop of precum leaked onto their awaiting lips. Julee didn't pull away this time, and she looked up at him as she slid her tongue out to caress the underside of him once more, spreading his precum over the skin.

Too much. Another squeeze, another flex of his length, and the fluid came pouring out. Warm and thick, the white didn't squirt out of him this time, but trickled out in thick, dripping waves. Each flex of his muscles caused another wave of it, and it flowed out of him onto the awaiting lips of the two ballerinas. Ashley smiled into the kiss, and angled her head to make sure his cum landed along her lips. And from her lips, onto Julee's lips. The blond made sure to kiss Julee as much as she was suckling around the bulbous, engorged head of his shaft, until the thick white coated both their lips. When the cum started to pool along their kiss, no room left for the copious amount of fluids, Ashley slipped more of her mouth around his cock, just enough to cover the tip, and licked up the dribbling cum as it fell onto her tongue.

He collapsed. Two girls, kissing, licking, suckling his dick. Couldn't handle it! He fell back and lay between Antoinette's legs on his spine, hands still cuffed and pinned behind him. But the girls were relentless. Ashley, giggling like a maniacal villain, crawled over to where he fell, and reached out with a hand to grab the base of his shaft. Pointing it up, she again put her cum-covered lips around it, and pulled half of his shaft into her mouth. Julee crawled over as well, but she sat beside him, and gazed down at him as she licked her lips clean.

But as Ashley cleaned him, Antoinette moved. She slid her bare legs out from around him, and got onto her knees over him between his legs instead. Kneeling, she touched Ashley to nudge her aside, before she put her dark red lips along his shaft, and while gazing along his body to catch his eyes with her ruby gaze, she lowered her lips to swallow every inch of him.

He started panting as the goddess licked and suckled at the base of him, while the whole of his length met the wet warmth of her mouth and throat. Julee reached out to move the Prince's hair aside to keep it out of the way, while Antoinette managed to milk a couple more drops of his cum out of him with painful bliss. The ghouls leaned in to stare at how the white-haired succubus kept the entirety of his length in her, and how her lips and tongue pulled at the base while she sucked him dry.

When his panting turned into whimpers, Antoinette lifted her head and wiped her lips with a single finger.

“Satisfied, my love?”

“Y-yes ... god ... yes.”

“Wonderful. Julee dear, please undo his shackles.”

Julee hopped off the bed and started digging around in the nightstand, for a key probably. Ashley on the other hand knelt beside him, and brought a finger to wipe her lips, the same way Antoinette had. Cute.

A minute later he had his cuffs off, and he was sitting up while leaning his weight back onto his hands behind him. The three women smiled at him, Ashley giggling, Julee blushing, Antoinette eating him with her gaze. Scary and thrilling at the same time.

“My pets, it is time for you to go. My love and I must spend time alone.”

Both girls whined their dissatisfaction, but turned and left as Antoinette shooed them away. Naked and bouncing, Ashley jumped off the bed, Julee close behind her, and the two strolled out of the inner chamber. Ashley made sure to take a peek behind her though, and sway her hips a little more than she usually did, before disappearing around the enormous vault door.

“Jack, if you would.” Antoinette turned around, and showed him her back, hand up to pull her hair out of the way over her shoulder. The corset was laced up from behind, with a layer of black between the strings and her skin.

He reached out and started to undo the knot, but not before he took a second to admire how absolutely, fucking amazingly hot the curvy Prince looked with the black corset emphasizing her hourglass shape. “So, tonight was ... yeah, wow. So many fantasies fulfilled.”

The corset was so beautiful, and tight. Damn tight. As he undid the crisscrossing layers of it and at last exposed the naked back of the Prince, he touched her where the clothes had left an imprint along her skin. It healed quickly, vampire and all, but it couldn't have been comfortable.

"That couldn't have been fun to wear," he said.

"I disagree." She turned to face him again, reached out, and set the corset down beside them on the bed. Her eyes lingered on the fabric, and her fingers traced the lines engraved on it. "Kine would struggle to wear such a thing as tight, but, I am well versed in such attire. And we do not need to breathe; it is no concern." With a grin, she crawled toward him, and nudged him onto his back again. Her body soon lay upon his, her breasts squished to his chest, and her kiss on his lips.

"Still, couldn't have been comfortable," he managed to say between kisses.

"It was to your delight, was it not?"

"It was! God damn, you looked ... you look ... you always look amazing, you know that."

Chuckling, she set her lips to his earlobe again, and kissed it as she settled atop him. So much taller than him, she covered him almost completely, her legs between his own and her arms around him, elbows to the blankets.

"Such is the way of Daeva." Another kiss. "But, are there are other reasons you visit my chambers, my love?"

Ah, fishing for compliments. In another context, it would have irritated him. But for the mighty Prince to be doing it, and so blatantly, made it both adorable and fun.

"Other reasons I come here. Well, I like that you're scary and deadly," he said. More chuckles. "I like that you're smart." Less chuckles, more satisfied purrs. "I like that you can play the cello."

“Ah, the cello. One of the few skills I retained through the centuries.” She raised her head until she was looking down at him, long white hair spilling onto the bed next to his neck. “What else?”

“You’re introspective, and wise, and ... and ... delicate when you want to be, brutal when you need to be.”

Found what she was looking for. Her smile brightened, curling her cheeks more than he was used to seeing, and she lowered her head to put her lips against his once more.

“Come, let us bathe.”

---

The shower again. They often took baths, but she had a really awesome shower, and he enjoyed it immensely. A large room connected to another room, one for changing, one for showering. No need to stay under a tiny shower jet here, hot water fell from almost the entire ceiling area along deep, sloped slabs of black above, so big and wide it was like walking under a waterfall. Black marble of course, with the cut holes above that held white LEDs.

Antoinette stepped under the falling water first, and he stared as she did. The wet hair, long and now slick to her spine, drew his gaze as she combed it back over her head with her fingers. Elbows up as she did, he stared at her breasts too; he was obsessed, and there was no denying it.

Kindred ejaculate was the same as dandruff or skin particles or hair, it all turned into the faintest hint of ash within five, sometimes ten minutes, once it was separated from the vampires body. They weren’t showering for that, they were showering cause Ashley and Julee were all over them. Which, Jack had to admit, was really hot.

Not fifteen minutes since you came four times in one night, with three women, and you’re already thinking about sex. Get a grip on yourself man.

Course, once he was looking at Antoinette again, his mind went right back to sex. The body, the long legs, the slim waist, wide hips. The huge breasts that weighed on her ribs. Such a perfect, defining example of a goddess, tall and curvy and strong.

Her makeup washed away as she rubbed an odd-looking cloth along her face, and let the water pull the colors into the drain. Beautiful, even as she exposed the pores and blemishes of her skin. Looked more real, less fantasy, now that he could see she had a tiny mole along her jaw line, the hint of a wrinkle along her forehead, and her skin was no longer perfectly uniform in color. Still so damn fucking beautiful.

“Jack? Ja—oh.” She caught his wandering eyes, smirked, and reached out to him to pull him under the water. The hot shower blasted his skin, and even with the blush of life off, he could still feel it warming him to the bone. “Dozens upon dozens of times you have shared my bed, little Ventrue. Dozens of times, you have climaxed within my body, upon my lips, my breasts. And yet your eyes stare with the same infatuation as the first night we spent together.”

“Then I am delighted. Kindred are eternal, and our bodies unchanging.” She hugged him from behind, set his head along her sternum and her breasts against his shoulders. Water fell from her face onto him as she leaned over him. “Truly, sometimes I fear my height may dissuade you. Juvenile fears, I admit, but they come nonetheless.”

“Your height? I’m a little short guy.” And Beatrice teased him enough about it too. Well, everyone had, growing up. Nothing major or problematic, but enough teasing to make it a sore memory.

Antoinette laughed, and slid one of her hands down his body to tease along his abs and the leanness of his stomach.

“And yet, it is your small frame I wish between my legs.”

“ ... god I love your legs.”

This time her laughter erupted, and he blinked up at the queen of the night as she shook with the warm sound.

“Jack, my love, you are too sweet, and too sincere. And I love you for it.” Her hands reached out for some soap and a loofah, and once it was lathered, she ran it down his chest and long his arms.

She was washing him. He had to fight the urge to fall back against her and relax into her embrace. Maybe when they were in a tub, but not a good idea standing.

“Have you spoken with Damien yet?”

Damn.

“Please do. It is important.”

He nodded, and turned his head a bit as her soaping moved over his neck before down his chest again. No qualms about washing his sex or under it either. Well, she was half a millenium old, no reason to be shy about anything.

She got down onto a knee, and turned him around. He blinked down at her, at how the water fell atop her white hair and flattened it along her back, at how her hand worked the loofah up and down his legs, at everything. The Prince on her knee in front of him, as if it was a perfectly normal or natural thing for royalty to bathe him.

“Ashley and Julee,” he said, once he found the willpower to stop staring. “They uh, I know they go to university. But, what other sorts of things do they do?”

“Are you interested in them?” She looked up at him with a quirked brow. And maybe a bit more than that too, maybe a hint of jealousy.

“No, I was just curious. Julias has talked to me about ghouls, and how to turn someone into one, and ... I dunno, part of it sounds a little tragic, you know? Addicted to Kindred blood, and slaves, and —”

She held up a finger, and stood. Uh oh. Too far. Abort!

But when she saw his panic, she sighed, and patted him on the head.

“Your concerns are justified. And there are Kindred who do abuse their ghouls, force the addiction upon them, turn them into slaves against their will. But do not worry for Ashley and Julee, they chose to become what they are. Ghouls do live for eternity, little Ventrue. As long as they taste a Kindred’s blood within a month as routine, they will remain ghouls, forever my pets, and friends.” Her hands reached down for his, and she put the loofah in his palm. “And for your first question, my ghouls live social lives. They enjoy education, and they enjoy artistic pursuits, when they are not with me. That is their life to enjoy, so that I may enjoy it through them.”

Oh. Ooooooh. Well, now he felt like shit. From borderline accusing her of owning slaves one minute, to sympathy for her cruel world and how she never got to enjoy the simple things of life the next. He blinked down at the loofah in his hand, then up at her, loofah again, her again, before he stepped in and hugged her, cheek against her collar.

“Ah, little Ventrue?”

“ ... I love you, so damn much.”

Silence, at least for a few moments, with only the noise of the waterfall rain around them as Antoinette slowly returned the hug, and squeezed.

But after a few moments again, she took him by the shoulders, and pushed him away a foot.

“Come, clean your Prince.”

He smiled up at her, and pressed the loofah to her belly. Didn't last long at the belly though, and his hand, as if possessed by some alien entity, guided the loofah up to her breasts. She laughed at him, and watched as he soaped up the valley between her breasts, up along the curve where they hung from her torso, and then underneath to soap up where they met her ribs. And again he pressed the loofah into the soft, heavy weight of her bosom, until one of them molded to conform against the loofah, before the weight slipped off his wrist and jiggled. So huge, so supple and cushy. Again, he soaped her large, dark nipples, and pressed his loofah into her breast to feel it give into his—

She bopped him on the head.

~~Julias~~

He didn't like this.

Him and his childe wore dark suits meant for foot work, and with pistols and knives holstered underneath their jackets; he was cool with all that. What he wasn't cool with was going to see Damien.

“Yeah, me neither.”

“Compassion could cost you your life here, kid.”

“Compassion’s also how you win allies, and break molds. And,” the kid pointed a finger at him, “correct me if I’m wrong, but you’re looking to break some molds. Or did I read you wrong, and you’re content with the way covenants are handling things here in Dolareido?”

Smartass. Julias frowned down at Jack, but frown turned to smile.

“I’d prefer we make changes on the backs of the ancillae and elders, not a neonate like yourself.”

“Yeah well, that’s why science advances one funeral at a time. Scientist’s motto. Old farts refuse to let things change, until they’re dead.” A shrug and smirk, Jack looked out the window of their drive at the passing sights. The car was taking them deeper into South Side, along the outskirts of Devil’s Corner.

Thinking of Devil’s Corner.

“So the woman just disappeared, hmm?” Julias said.

“Yes! Yes she did. I know it reads weird on the report, or whatever Jessy told you, but I’m telling you she disappeared.”

“Vanished.”

“Vanished!” Up went both hands. “We scanned that room thoroughly, every brick and pipe. Woman just vanished. And ... and I’m telling you Julias, she wasn’t normal. I mean she looked normal, and she reacted with as much fear as you’d expect a human to, seeing a vampire for the first time. And I don’t know how she knew what we were! We weren’t doing anything remotely vampire-ish.”

That was peculiar. He rubbed his chin, looked out the opposite window, and watched the streetlights and people pass by. Hot weather, getting hotter every day; unusual for this time of year. The Kindred didn't mind, but the kine did. And it did make everything smell of sweat and musk, which did all sorts of things to a Kindred's senses. He didn't look forward to a trip down into the abandoned subway.

A few miles later, Julias and Jack got out of the car in front of the subway entrance. People walked by, but no one went up or down the stairs that cut into the street. No reason to, the base of the stairs held thick metal doors, locked tight.

The two Kindred stepped down the stairway, stopped at the door, and unlocked it. The Invictus held all the keys, after all, and the old subway was no exception. They had a lot of Mekhet and Nosferatu who needed to get around, and that often called for a little stealth.

With the door locked behind them, they stepped out into the subway, and started to walk along the platform. The subway train was there, but empty, long abandoned; perfect for the Invictus to re-purpose. The power was on too, or at least whatever circuit the lights were on, and enough still worked to provide them a little light while Jack and Julias started the trip toward Damien. Assuming he'd be there.

He'd better be there.

"... so disappeared?"

"Yes!" Hands up again, waving about as he got enthusiastic trying proving his point. "Like, gone. Poof. Completely. If she had touched anything, the cobwebs everywhere would have given it away."

"A short woman, curvy, long frizzy red hair." He shrugged and hopped down onto the subway track. "I know of no Kindred that looks like that. You said she had a Scottish accent?"

“I think? Hard to tell from one word.”

“It’s enough to work with. Foreign accent, probably European, body description, and you’re sure she’s not human.”

“Very. I ... it was a little startling. She wasn’t human, but I didn’t get a Kindred vibe from her. Just ... just enough to ... to make me weirded out, you know?”

Julias blinked, and looked down at Jack. The kid shuddered, rubbed his arms, and looked up and down, left and right, and over his shoulder. Scared. A little fear was good, it kept you alive, but for such a tame encounter to leave Jack still afraid was enough reason for Julias to take this more seriously. He’d already put Jessy on the case, but if Jack was still shook up like this, he better give her back up.

Back up. Normally that’d be him, or Natasha. How quickly that changed. The right hands of the council were down to only one in just a short window, and Natasha had joined a different covenant. And with Viktor dead, the upper echelon of the Invictus was down by two. They had to be careful moving forward, especially with the Carthians stirring up trouble.

“Hey, Julias. You’re doing it again.”

“Oh?”

“That thinking thing. I can see your eyes wandering on the ground the way they do when you’re thinking.”

He smirked at the kid, and motioned to the tracks. “Just watching my footing, jackass.”

Jack rolled his eyes, and hopped up onto the metal of the subway track. Like on tightrope, he stuck his hands out to the side and balanced as he walked.

“You really want to see him?” Julias said.

“Yeah. Been a couple weeks since the incident.” Kid shuddered and shook out his arms, like throwing away heavy weights. “I ... guess I feel responsible. You saw what happened to him, after I ... yeah.”

After you made him cut off his sire’s head.

“You don’t think he’ll just attack you on sight?”

“Antoinette said she and the sheriff had him locked up, but dropped him off down here when I said he could live. Far as I know, she told him it was my choice.”

Well, probably not only the kid’s choice, Julias was sure. Antoinette was in love with him, but she wasn’t stupid. There must have been another deciding element. Natasha, maybe? She’d been kidnapped by him after all, used as a hostage, and now a member of the Ordo Dracul. Her words must have meant a lot to Daniel.

Skittering. Both Kindred raised their heads to look down and into the shadows of the subway tunnel, and listened for the subtle scratches of rats and bugs against dirt, rocks, and concrete. There was light, but not much, not enough for him to feel comfortable on a stroll, especially now that he was a member of the council. He’d never thought of it before, of being afraid of simply walking around; he took and dealt his lumps fine as a right hand of the council. But as an actual member, he had a much bigger target on his back. God he missed having Natasha to watch it.

Or Beatrice.

Maybe he could recruit her? No, she’d never. Going from the Carthians to the Circle was a step in the opposite direction from the Invictus. Now she was dancing around bowls of bone, naked, filling them with blood and drawing blood symbols onto herself. He had no idea if that's what members of the Circle of the Crone actually did, but that was the stereotype.

And it kind of fit her, he had to admit, with the massive crocodile teeth and the snake eyes, the tattoos and the visceral attitude. It'd be a dance he'd like to see someday.

The two Ventrue went deeper, down into the tunnels, and then down into more tunnels, and then down into more tunnels. The network of connections was beyond complicated, as the Prince and Viktor insured the tunnels were expanded beyond what was needed. For each tunnel made, two more were made that were never used, or explained to the general public. The joys of having Kindred run your city, with all the money to support the role; they turned its underground into a haven for creatures of the night.

The topside was a Kindred paradise as well of course, with the city's blatant embrace of nearly every vice, often in large congregations of drug use, prostitution, and other sins that ranked low on the list. It made finding a meal easy, especially in the Invictus half of South Side, where people partied constantly, and no one bat an eye when someone else initiated sex in the dark corners of a dance club.

But not everyone had finding a meal so easy. And as Jack and Julias walked through the tunnels, they found them.

Nosferatu.

Not everyone with the cursed blood had disfigurements they could hide like Beatrice. Many were as damaged as Maria, but she was an elder, more than capable of hiding herself in plain sight with her obfuscate disciplines. These neonates could not.

One Kindred, wearing dreary, gray, stained robes over his body, was crouched into a high alcove of a platform. The waiting area had never been finished or set up with ticket gates or anything. Just a big, empty room where Kindred could gather. And as they walked by it, still on the subway tracks, Julias spotted a few more vampires hanging out in its shadows.

Another one stepped out from the black to peer at them, but once she recognized Julias, she gasped and stepped back into the black. He didn't recognize her; must have been a Carthian. A huge growth covered half of her head and neck, tinted black. Another Kindred covered in a filthy sheet reached out to put a hand on her back, and offered Julias a harsh glare. Another man he didn't recognize, one with six, long, dangling fingers, with odd curling claws on each tip. Given time, they would have the power to leave the sewers and tunnels, when they could hide in shadow in plain sight. Until then, they hid here.

There was no use in denying it; he found them ugly, and revolting. The thought of someone like Maria naked and in his bed made him want to vomit. Part of him hated himself for being that vain, but a part of him also accepted it as natural desire. How Lucas had loved Maria, physically, he could not understand. And he dare not ask.

Beatrice's snake eyes, and the crocodile teeth instead of cheeks, were all interesting, and even sexy. Scary, but sexy. He doubted things would have gone so well between them if she'd had grotesque deformity. If a third arm had been growing out of her neck, or she had a giant mouth where her stomach was, that first night in the South Hill Cemetery crypt could have easily ended with him as dust.

Damn. Walking through the dark tunnels really made his mind wander. And as reflex, it drifted into self-loathing territory. But he smiled, and let images of Beatrice fill his mind instead. She'd tell him to accept the reality, get over it, and move on. Easier said than done, but it was nice to hear it anyway.

It took a little time to get to where they were told Damien was, a place Damien told the sheriff was one of his most common hideaways. An old monitoring room, supposedly, along the tunnel between Barker and Denver street. Sure enough, they found it, just a metal door up on a raised platform with some metal stairs to lead to it. A drawing of a spear had been carved into the metal, etched. Did Damien preach to the Nosferatu that hid in the tunnels and sewers? If there was any bloodclan that needed help finding a purpose in their second life, it was them.

Was that so wrong? Not like you can prove or disprove god, Julias.

Jack knocked.

Julias quirked a brow at him. “He’s forfeited his life, Jack. You don’t have to knock.”

“Don’t have to not.” He shrugged, and smirked at him. A nervous one though, with fidgeting fingers and glancing eyes.

“If he tries anything, I’ll deal with him.” Fast and brutal as Damien was, Julias was confident he could crush his mind, if it came to it.

The door opened.

Damien didn’t bother to say hello, or nod, or make eye contact. The man, haunched slightly and letting his arms dangle, sauntered back over to his corner, and sat down. In the dark. And dust. And rat shit.

“... Damien,” Jack said. No response. Jack looked to Julias, but he could only shrug, and motion for his child to try again. “Damien.”

“I can hear you. What do you want?” The young man was wearing jeans and a black t-shirt, each tattered and torn. Worn-out shoes, and head hanging between his knees completed the ensemble of a broken man.

Around him were the old computers and dials of the monitoring station. Pipes cut through the room, across the ceiling before coming down against the wall, and Damien made his home under one of the larger pipes. Water dripped into a puddle next to him, but the Kindred didn't seem to notice.

He had a book in his hand, a large thing, black, a tome that Julias was sure held a plethora of ancient, dark things.

“Still reading the Book of Longinus?” Julias said.

Damien frowned up at him, and set the book down between his knees, against the damp floor. So much for a sacred object.

“I have read it a hundred times in my unlife, Invictus. I asked you a question, what do you want?”

Julias returned the frown, and made to step a little closer, but Jack put a hand up to his hip to stop him.

“Here to see you,” Jack said. Kid dug up enough courage to speak straight to the killer, but he was quivering a little, the beast inside him shaking. Julias could feel it, and Damien no doubt could too.

“... why?”

Shaking his shoulders out a little, Jack stepped in where Julias hadn't, and squatted down in front of the killer.

“Because I let you live, and after what happened ... guess ... I feel a little responsible.” Jack said. Damien glared at the boy with enough venom to kill, but after a moment, lowered his gaze back down to the closed book in his hands, and said nothing. “And after what what happened, I feel ... I—”

Damien raised his glare again, a bit of speed to the motion, enough to make Jack fall back and for Julias to reach for his pistol. But the Mekhet stopped, and turned away again. Fire one second, ice the next.

“I ... assume the Prince told you I let you live?”

Damien said nothing.

“Just trying to extend an olive branch here, Damien. I saw the look in your eyes, you—”

“You know nothing about me.” Damien shook his head, picked up the tome, and threw it the floor. A bit closer to Julius, he could see it was ripped and torn, edges frayed, corners bent, and the damage looked recent.

“I was there, remember?” Jack, shivering and fidgeting, got in a little closer to the assassin. “Heard every word Lucas said, every word you said, every word Antoinette said. Give me a little credit Damien, I know you better than most.”

Julias blinked, and looked down at Jack as the silence settled. Damien didn't throw back an insult or anything, but eased his head back until it was against the wet wall, and his unkempt hair fell over on his shoulder, half his head shaved smooth on one side, long hair dangling from the other. But no words.

“... the sheriff said you said you wouldn't kill me, if he let you go. I appreciate that,” Jack said.

Damien choked on a quiet, bitter laugh, and fell back into silence.

Jack didn't seem interested in the hint. “Everything that happened is on Lucas's head. No one blames you for what happened, hell barely anyone knows. Natasha does, and she seems adamant that you can change.”

Natasha, that got something out of him, a flinch and a clench of a couple fingers. Damien took a deep breath and forced his eyes open to stare at Jack.

“You do not understand, Ventrue. I have had my beliefs taken from me. The Prince has banned the practice of the Second Estate, and my mentor and guide was a ... a...”

“Well he wasn’t a fraud, if that’s what you were thinking.” Jack sat down next to Damien, and shrugged. “A zealot, sure, but I saw that attack on Antoinette much as anything. That sword disintegrated. Not exactly normal shit, you know?”

Julias smirked and took a step back. No use in interrupting the conversation, Jack had control. But seeing him in control was a bit of a shock, and Julias folded his arms across his chest as he slid his hand away from his pistol. Mostly.

When did Jack get so confident? Spending so many nights with the Prince, in her tower, with the sheriff nearby, could harden anyone he supposed. So could having slaughtered a group of Kindred using an enemy’s body. But seeing it with his own eyes was a little different, his childe sitting down — oh god the poor suit — next to an assassin, one who’d tried to kill him at that, with a sword through his gut. The kid had a way of talking that disarmed people, Julias always knew. What was different was, despite talking to a killer, his shivering was mostly gone, and the kid spoke with a solid voice, an ambassador’s voice.

“The sword, it ... it tasted the blood of Malchus. Lucas held it long cherished, and ... and destroyed it, to kill the Prince.”

“Malchus?” Jack said.

Damien turned to the boy sitting near him, and managed a small chuckle. “Read the Bible.”

“This thing? You have got to be shitting me, it’s bigger than a regular bible.” Jack reached out for the tome. Julias tensed as his childe picked it up, but Damien only watched with a raised brow.

“That is the Tome of Longinus. I meant the Christian Bible.”

“Ah, right.” Jack slipped his fingers along the dirtied pages. “You really are devout huh?”

“ ... I am.”

“And the Lancea et Sanctum, what’s your goal, your mission?”

Julias raised a finger to wipe away the growing grin. Kid really had a diplomatic side.

“The Sanctified seek to play a role, to fulfill our duty in God’s plan. He is the shepherd, kine are His sheep, and Kindred are the wolves. We hunt and kill the sheep who stray too far, and scare the others back into the warm embrace of the Lord. If Kindred are to ever be free of eternal damnation, the doom of hellfire, we must ... do you even care?”

“Course I care, Damien. Last thing I want is for us to be enemies. I mean fucking hell, I didn’t want any of that to happen! And ... and neither did you.” He closed the book, and put it onto Damien’s lap and chest. “Natasha saw it, and I saw it. Just today I was talking with Amanda, and she—”

“Little shook up over bouncing between covenants, questioning her purpose in life, all the typical first-year university student stuff. Fine otherwise. Went out with her just last night.”

“I know.”

“You ... you know?”

Damien nodded, and looked at the book back in his lap. “Little escapes my notice in the Devil’s Corner.”

Of course Damien would know, but the way he said it, sounded like he was watching them. Part of Julias could forgive him for spying, Mekhet did that as naturally as kine breathed, but part of him couldn’t. He stepped in closer, and squatted down in front of Damien.

“Jack may have let you live Damien, but no one has claimed sanctuary for you. Don’t—”

The man sighed and raised a hand, palm up and open. “I meant nothing by it, Julias Mire. I was investigating the disappearances in the Devil’s Corner, and noticed that Mister Terry and Miss Pol were doing the same.”

No secrets from a Mekhet. Julias nodded and stood, but kept his eye on the man as he took a couple steps back to give them room. His childe offered him a nod and shrug, but otherwise seemed unfazed by the threat Julias had just thrown at Damien.

“So you’ve seen the redhead?”

God damn it Jack. Don’t be so loose-tongued with everything.

“I have. There is something that connects her to the disappearances, but I do not know what it is.” Damien shrugged and smirked up at Julias, with just an edge of I-know-you-wish-I-didn’t-know-what-you-were-up-to in his eyes. “I have observed her from afar, but when I pursue her, she disappears.”

“Same.” The kid reached into his jacket, pulled out his smartpone, and started thumb-typing nice and quick. The joys of growing up in the digital age, taking notes took mere seconds. “Any ideas?”

“ ... you’re asking me for help?”

Jack lowered the phone. “Yeah. You don’t want to?”

It was Julias’s turn to smirk. Jack reaching out with more olive branches, and this time Damien would look the petty one if he didn’t comply.

“ ... she’s disappearing from within Devil’s Corner, but I don’t know how she’s doing it. And I know the underbelly of this city better than anyone.”

Julias looked out the doorway into the abandoned tunnels. “Better than anyone?”

Damien motioned to the door. “These are my tunnels. I knew you were coming. I decided to see what you had to say.” Another subtle smirk, but after a while it faded. “I’ll help, Jack. Natasha and the sheriff assure me you deserve it, and after what happened, I ... yeah, I’ll help you.”

Likely story. But considering how the conversation was going, the Mekhet deserved the benefit of a doubt.

A sigh drew their eyes to Jack.

“Thanks,” he said. “I half expected you to try and fight us when we got here, or just not be here.”

“The thought had occurred to me.” From the shadows beside him, Damien pulled out a sword, a small thin thing like Viktor’s had been. More than strong and sharp enough to cut off limbs, Julias was sure. “But I ... I was shown something that...” Tripping over his own words until Julias felt his grimace start to fade. “You killed my sire, Jack. Using my body.”

“ ... yeah.”

“But I now know it was necessary.” He shook his head some more, put the sword down, and cracked the black bible open. “So forgive me, if I still have the impulse desire to cut your head off. I know it is because of the Arch ... Lucas’s false teachings. Fifty years I spent coveting them, just a fledgling at first and younger than you when Lucas and I disappeared into the sewers come the purge.”

Jack’s jaw fell. “ ... wait, what?”

“I wandered the city underbelly for fifty years, Jack, with my sire sleeping and all the other bishops dead and the covenant scattered and ash. I read this, and ... and fell on Lucas’s words more than what I could gleam from this.” Eyes broken, Damien raised the book and held it in front of him. “And his sermons were ... more than a little biased, and manipulative. No wonder the Prince unleashed the purge upon us. Lucas was ... was ... a monster, a vile man.”

The air turned to ice. Damien was trying to smile, or at least maintain some sort of composure, but his head fell, and his shoulders shook a little as he struggled with it. Struggled with having a monster for a sire. Struggled with the brainwashing of your master, your mentor, the person you think you can trust the most only to realize far too late they’re not trustworthy at all.

God fucking damn it. Viktor. The parallel was nauseating.

“ ... I’ll talk to the Prince,” Julias said, “about the Lancea et Sanctum.” The two men looked up at him, as surprised as him, but he shrugged and offered his Ventrue smile. “You’re not Lucas. Your covenant deserves a chance if they have a new bishop, someone who doesn’t think killing other Kindred with differing beliefs is proper recourse.” He squatted down in front of the smaller man, and glared down at him. “And you don’t think that, right?”

“ ... no, I don’t. But you have only my word.”

“Natasha vouches for you. Jack vouches for you. It’s enough reason for me to bring it up to the Primogen.” Especially considering Jack had been in the man’s mind. He’d controlled him, turned him into a puppet, butchered his congregation and killed his sire using the man’s body. Jack was too trusting, but after all that, Julias had no choice but to take his childe’s recommendation seriously. Julias wouldn’t have trusted him, and he could tell it was the Danse Macabre making him paranoid already.

Paranoid, or just smart, Julias? Trusting this man could mean your death, and Jack’s thereafter.

“I ... I don’t know if ... lead the Lancea et Sanctum? The Second Estate? I’m barely a bishop, just a—”

It was Julias’s turn to raise his hand, and shut the man up.

“A devout man of god, a believer of the message of Longinus, and the childe of the previous Archbishop. I can think of no one better to write the wrongs of your sire. Can you?” He stared the man down, glared at him with the weight and gravitas etched onto his face. His best Ventrue face, the face he took when crushing the will of others, molding them to his. At least Viktor had taught him something useful.

Damien stared at him, eyebrows furrowed but eyes open and considering. “I ... I would have no congregation.”

“Baby steps. Let me talk to the Primogen first and see if the Prince allows any of this,” Julias said.

Jack raised a hand. “Should I mention it to her?”

“No.” Probably a bad idea to bring political affairs into Jack’s bedroom. “Let me handle it.”

“... the Lancea et Sanctum ... allowed to practice once again in Dolareido.” The man smiled, and let his spine relax against the wall behind him. “The irony.”

“You don’t want to?” Jack said.

“I would love to. I would ... love to speak of Longinus to those who would listen once more. But I fear the wrath of the Prince. I did much to offend her.”

The little Ventrue stood up and tried to wipe off his pants, to no avail. “Lucas offended her. She blames him, not you. But she does have a hate-on for the Lancea et Sanctum. You’ve got your work cut out for you Damien if you want to try and change that image.” Jack turned to Julias and smirked up at him. “You too, if you’re going to convince her of this at all.”

“Maria will be glad for the return, at least,” Julias said as he stood up. “Speaking of, has she spoken to you at all, Damien?”

“No. I ... I do not know what she would say, nor would I.”

“She’ll ... she’ll be around eventually, but it may be best if you just let her say her piece.”

Damien stood as well, looked down at his tome, wiped off some of the floor water, and looked up at him with a strange, subtle smile.

“I’ve survived a long time in this city, Mister Mire. I can handle myself, in many ways.”

“Good. I’m putting the Invictus out on a ledge here, bringing this up to Primogen. The First Estate seeking to support the Second Estate? It's a song they've heard before, and I'll have to work to convince them it's benign." If it was benign.

Maria's home, if it could be called that.

The Grand Cathedral of Dolareido. Gothic was not strong enough a word for the towering monolith of old windows, spiked towers, and enormous archways showing statues of angels. Not sweet little cherubs, but real angels, with swords and shields, with six wings, with eyes that cut into your heart. The church Lucas had commissioned long ago when Julias was still kine. Commissioned wasn't the right word, more like, coerced the populace into making a proper cathedral for the faith.

He'd manipulated the kine for his purpose, without talking to the Prince about it first. That'd been the start of the trouble.

Julias closed the car door behind him and waved off his driver, before he started the walk up the stairs toward the beast of a building. No denying it, it was a majestic and imposing edifice. Every inch he came closer, he could feel the eyes of the gargoyles on the high ledges staring down at him, the glare of the angels baring his soul, and the angry demons that held up the pedestals the angels stood upon glared with just as much malice. The crucifix upon the archway, the doves carved into the stone of the pillars, every step he made up the stairs made him feel like he shouldn't be here. Like a vampire shouldn't be here.

He opened the giant doors, massive and heavy, and stepped into the nave of the church.

The church had stopped seeing use since Lucas's disappearance fifty years ago, and police kept loiterers from breaking into the church come nightfall, at Maria's request; no one wants their bed covered in graffiti. Not that people liked to hang out at the Dolareido Cathedral in the dark, as close to the Three Kings Cemetery as it was.

The sound of the organ greeted him, a powerful sound that almost shook the walls. Thick walls kept the sound from escaping beyond the vast empty gardens that surrounded the cathedral. A perfect place for someone who liked being alone, for someone who believed in god, for someone who loved Lucas.

He walked up the aisle toward the dais, the podium, the lectern that sat upon it, and the bible upon that. The apse back end of the giant, tall nave held the organ, and a magnificent one at that, with pipes big enough to crush the pews behind him if they fell. And someone was playing them.

There was only a little light, just a few lit candles on the railings and such near the ghost woman, just enough for her to see as she danced her fingers up and down the complicated instrument. Some old Gothic piece to go with the Gothic church that made him feel like he was living in a time from hundreds of years ago.

“Madam Turio.” He walked up to join her, stood beside her and looked down as her fingers worked along the various levels of the pipe organ’s keys. Her feet too had keys to play, deep notes that Julias could feel in his bones when the sound filled the enormous room.

Beside the little woman, a glass of red was set upon a small wooden table, something for her to drink while she played no doubt. The instrument was glorious, a shine of ivory keys with silver-looking pipes. The pipes themselves bore statues of angels and demons, again with angels standing upon their prostrated bodies, many with swords drawn.

The music was very complex, but he didn’t recognize it.

“A piece by Louis Verne, Mister Mire.” She glanced over her shoulder at him, but continued to play, with each note driving home a harmonic sea of pain and sadness. But her voice was deadpan. “Why have you come?”

The corpse woman, with her small body, her long black hair, her white dress, the scarred and crinkled skin, the cold, almost invisible mist that fell from body, it all gave him chills. It was probably random sightings of Maria that stirred the rumors Three Kings Cemetery was haunted. But he’d gotten used to her, dealing with her for so long. Mostly. The raspy, dead-girl voice sent a shiver down his spine every time.

“I wanted to talk about Damien, and Natasha.”

She stopped playing.

“ ... why?”

“Because you owe it to me.”

The ghost woman turned her head to stare up at him, and he had to fight the urge to grimace. A corpse, someone who’d died from thirst, had their skin cut on, maybe drowned. Chills.

“ ... you grow more like Viktor every day.” Sighing, she turned back to the organ, the dozens of white keys, and the large wood-colored console that held them. “Speak quickly.”

Like Viktor? He could feel the bad mood crawling up his leg.

“You let Lucas take Natasha hostage.”

“Lucas assured me she would be safe. Lo and behold, she lives.”

Not good enough. He leaned in and set a hand on the organ console.

“She could have died, easily, and you know it. It was a kamikaze attack on the Prince’s tower, and you let it happen.”

With her black hair hanging over her cheeks and down over her chest, he couldn’t see her face with her head turned to the organ, but he could see her twitch.

“It wasn’t supposed to be a kamikaze attack. The Prince was to die, the sheriff too, and Madam Vola was to live. Lucas wasn’t ... he wasn’t ... supposed to die.” Her shoulder started to shake, just a little, a subtle thing that he wasn’t used to seeing on her. No stone face, no cold ice gaze, the typical council act.

Damn it.

“You really loved him, didn’t you?”

“ ... yes.” For a moment, there was silence, and stillness. But the organ erupted into noise as she slammed both her hands down on the keys. “And I was ecstatic he’d returned from his slumber. I thought he had somehow left the city. I didn’t realize he was in hiding until his childe...” Another sigh, and her shoulders slumped as she leaned forward so her hair fell over the keys. “Madam Vola is better off with the Ordo Dracul.”

He blinked, and stared. Where was the ice, the cold glare, the bone-chilling death that normally radiated from her? Just a few minutes of conversation and his vision of her shattered.

She was sad.

“If I had known about Daniel and Natasha—”

“You didn’t know Daniel was her sire?”

“I had my suspicions, but the Prince avoided a direct response when I asked her, long ago when Natasha fell into the Invictus embrace.” With a deep sigh, she started playing Moonlight Sonata, gentle on the keys. So cliché, and yet so perfect for the ghost woman. And Julias did love a good cliché. “If I had known, I would never have taken her under my wing.”

“She wasn’t involved in the purge, Maria.” Forget the titles. “Far as I know, at that time she was just a fledgling, and Daniel’s little secret. You have no reason to hate her.”

“And yet I gave her to Lucas, knowing full well whether my love ... whether the Archbishop succeeded or failed, Natasha would leave. And I would do it again.” Her fingers continued to play, despite her head slumping and her hair shifting over the keys.

He gave his own sigh, and shook his head. “Lucas was a dangerous man, Maria. And violent.”

“He was. I had asked him once, to stop pushing against the Prince so hard, but ... but it only spurred him on.” She peeked up at him from behind her black hair. How quick her corpse features reminded him she wasn’t a gentle little girl, despite her words. “Over the years, I saw him deteriorate, as Viktor did.”

“And yet when he came back, you let him have Natasha?”

“I wanted him back!” Her voice punched through the melancholy melody of the song, but she didn’t stop playing, or break the mournful rhythm. “I wanted ... the Prince and the sheriff dead. The Lancea et Sanctum did not deserve the purge.”

“Maybe they didn’t. A lot of bishops, a lot of Kindred died. But Lucas was the most violent of them all, Maria.” Careful Julias.

“ ... he was.” Her eyes fell back to the keys. Silence but for the song, for several minutes.

“ ... and Damien?” he said.

“What about him?”

“He’s Lucas’s childe.”

“I’ve never spoken with him. He is a stranger to me.”

Well, no love there. No pulling on that heartstring.

“I have. He’s an intelligent man, and a strong believer in the Testament of Longinus, as you are,” he said. She stopped playing, and let the vibrations of the sound dissipate along the cathedral walls. But said nothing. At least she was listening. “And unlike Lucas, he’s willing to cooperate with the Prince.”

“ ... what are you getting at, Julias?”

“I talked to him, and he’s willing to bring back the Second Estate.”

She raised her head and looked at him, back straightening. “Public practice of the faith of Longinus? The Prince would never allow it.”

“Maybe. Maybe not. The Prince had issues with Lucas, and for good reason.” Every time he insulted Lucas, the little corpse woman flinched. He was playing with fire, but he had to drive home that Lucas was a violent, horrible man. She already knew it, but she wasn’t internalizing it.

“What do you plan to do?”

“I’m going to bring it up at the next Primogen meeting.”

She snarled and looked back to the keys of the grand organ, before she started playing something with a little more darkness to it. Bach.

“It will be as it was before, the First Estate attempting to justify the Second Estate. The Prince alone will fight to prevent it, let alone Jacob and Garry.”

“Things are different this time. Viktor isn’t trying to shove an agenda down their throat, and it won’t be Lucas leading the Lancea et Sanctum, it’ll be Damien.”

“You said the boy is but fifty years embraced? Hardly an appropriate age for an Archbishop.”

“I think Bishop will be enough of a title for now. Give it a hundred years and when he’s old enough to be a true member of the Primogen, he can have that power, assuming the nearby city bishops recognize him.” Giving her a smirk and a nod, he reached out to start tapping keys on the organ. “Besides, not all of us are as old as our station demands.”

She slapped his hand, hard, and returned his smirk.

“Perhaps, but Viktor fostered your growth for that time, Julius. Who is Damien? What do we know of him? The others were as surprised by the developments as us, that this boy had been hiding under our noses for half a century. Skilled, but unknown.”

“The Prince let him live. He must have made an impression.” Steel face, don’t let her know what you know. “I went to talk to him not long ago, and was surprised, Maria. He’s devout, a good man, just a ... a broken man, right now.”

“The Dark Prophet would laugh at your description.” And she did too, her raspy voice coming out in tiny chuckles that sounded more like quiet, dying gasps. “Perhaps ... perhaps it is time for a change. I would like to see this boy before I agree to this proposal though.”

A risk that Maria would find out Jack killed Lucas, not the Prince, but that risk was unavoidable either way. Trust Damien. Hard to do, even after having that conversation with him. If anyone misspoke, it’d be Jack’s head on a plate. Or worse, Maria would lock him up in the depths of the Cathedral, and torture him with her Nosferatu disciplines.

Steel face.

“Please do. I will interrogate Lucas’s childe, and I will see if he’s worthy to bear the title of his sire.”

Julias did not envy the man.

~~Natasha~~

You can do this. You can do this. You can do this.

Chanting a mantra wasn’t helping much, and the closer she got to the front door of the Elysium Tower, the more she felt herself shaking. The more she felt like people were staring at her, when she knew they weren’t. The more she felt like eyes were on her, dark hidden eyes, when she knew they weren’t. The more she felt like something was crawling up her leg, even though she was damn sure something wasn’t.

She was wearing a gray suit, open jacket with a black shirt and shoes. Business casual, sort of. Jessy had assured her she looked cute as a button, but also ready for her first day as a member of the Ordo Dracul.

Jessy. She hadn’t told her best friend what Maria had done, afraid it might put Jessy in a bad position. But, she was bound to find out sooner or later, and the longer Natasha put it off, the worse it was going to be. The harder it was going to make being her friend. Just telling her she’d joined the Ordo Dracul had been tough enough.

Mind racing, eyes unfocused, hands fidgeting, all the classic signs of anxiety. Just another day in her life, just another day for Natasha Vola, just another day being turned upside down.

She stepped into the garden of the Elysium Tower, and looked around through the curving walls of stone that were the garden maze. The benches were stone too, and stone vines curled and connected them with the walkway and walls. Bushes and trees dotted the garden, and within its walls many young Kindred grew familiar with their new lives as vampires. New being relative; some of the Kindred were several years old, and still struggled with the reality that they were now immortal, and blood leeches. In the Elysium district, where no Kindred feeding or violence was allowed, the young vampires—

Focus, Natasha! It's just your sire. Your sire. You knew him before he sired you, a quiet man who knew a lot about books. You talked to him in the university library, remember? He had a soft voice, and he gave the littlest smiles when you asked him questions about Twain and Hemingway.

And Antoinette? The Prince? So tall, so utterly tall compared to her. The French seductress was well over six feet tall, while Natasha was a four eleven on a good day; just being around her made Natasha feel like an ant.

Voivode. An Ordo Dracul title, and it alone was enough to make her shiver on top of her quivering. But the Prince had never been anything but nice to her, and Daniel had been nice ... if insistent, in his passive aggressive stops-talking-the-moment-you-argue sort of way.

She could handle the two of them, at least enough for conversation. It was the secrets deep in the tower she was afraid of.

She stood before the glass building, and started up the steps. The lobby awaited her, and she grimaced as she looked around at the glass walls of her new place of work; one mistake and she'd be fried in the sunlight. But the Prince assured her that was basically impossible, so she shook off her shivers, and came up to the receptionist. A heavy, balding fellow named Chunk. How drôle.

Oh god she better not make a French joke around the Prince by accident.

“Hello,” she said.

“Oh hello there Miss Vola. You can take the stairway in the back down. You could take the VIP elevator in the back there too, but that’ll take you down to the bottom floor, past the Prince’s research floors.”

Research floors. Gentle way to put it.

“Thank you.” With a nod and a fake smile, she started down the lobby, past the normal elevators, and toward the stairway in the back.

She didn’t get far before she ran into Daniel.

The man raised a gloved finger to his glasses, pressed on the nose ridge, and offered her a small smile.

“Childe.”

“ ... Illuminus of the Void, K-Kr—”

He raised a hand and shook his head. “Just call me Daniel, Natasha, when we’re alone. Sire when we’re with the Prince is fine.”

First name basis it was then, when alone. Common titles when together. Had the Prince softened in the past half a century?

“What should I c-call the Prince?”

“Master. Or Prince.” A nod and a small dismissing wave of his fingers. “Or Voivode, if you prefer.”

Voivode made her think dark thoughts. Prince was better.

Daniel turned and started to walk down the stairs into the dark tower, but after taking a couple feet, he peeked over his shoulder at her, and waited. A change from the past, where he would have kept walking and expected her to follow. Had he softened too? Or was he going easy on her because of the nastiness with the Lancea et Sanctum and Lucas a couple weeks ago?

She could use a little softness for her first steps back into the Coils of the Dragon.

The two of them made their way down the stairs, and she looked around at the deep hallway she was moving down. Jack had spoken to her before of the black marble, and how much the Prince enjoyed it. It'd been a vague memory for her from so long ago, but it all came back to her as she smiled at the cracks of white veins, like lightning across the obsidian surfaces. She enjoyed the decor, much as it frightened her.

They turned into a hallway, and she frowned as she noticed the scratches along the walls. Some of the repairs weren't complete then, and bullets ricocheting down the halls had left damage. The flash memories of gunfire made her shivering worse, trapped in Lucas's grasp while a sortee of Kindred with guns unloaded ammunition upon the Prince. And then of course, the Prince ripping several of them to literal bits with her bare hands.

Natasha wasn't a stranger to violence. And when push came to shove, she knew she could handle it. Putting a bullet through Damien's skull just one example. But the sight of Kindred becoming an angry mob, and the following act of carnage and brutality, still made her stomach turn.

The two vampires walked down the hall, past the LED lights from carved holes above in the marble, past the quiet humming vents, past the various doors, before stopping at one particular door. She remembered this one, and she hesitated as Daniel reached out to open it.

“It’ll be fine,” he said, voice calm, face deadpan like always.

“Easy ... for you t-t-to say, you ... you’re...” You’re hundreds of years old and are comfortable with this insanity.

“You are not the child you once were, Natasha. And I ... perhaps a little different as well?” He managed a slight raise of the brow, caught between question and statement.

Natasha had no choice but to smile at his sad attempt at persuasion. Cute, adorable even, but horrible.

He opened the door, and the two stepped into the wyrm’s nest.

A giant room, tall but especially wide, and round. The walls were covered in white dragons painted onto the black marble, and a chandelier of crystal hung from above, a giant thing to match the giant room. The chandelier was lit with blue flame. How it made blue flame, if blue flame was toxic, if it was magical or scientific, she had no idea. But it was damn beautiful.

Perhaps more beautiful, or frightening, was the floor of the room. Upon the center, a white circle perhaps fifty feet wide was drawn, lines thick and arranged in patterns. Many, many patterns. As if someone obsessed with trigonometry had had too much caffeine and decided to draw every symbol they knew. Spirals, stars, pentagrams, cascading shapes of different sizes, to the point it was like trying to identify shapes in the stars.

Just being near it was enough to get her shaking again.

The Prince was standing by the circle. In front of her she held a large tablet, and beside her was a grand, half-circle desk covered in laptops and many objects Natasha did not recognize. As her eyes lingered on them, she winced as she realized one of the objects was a shrunken head. Other things on the desk also looked like shrunken body parts, fingers and hands. Some seemed attached to dolls that looked like dried-up humans, others attached to wood carvings like bowls. There were tied bags that looked like they were made of skin, and from within them stuck out bones that looked like they belonged on birds. Some feathers and sticks stuck out from the bags too, arranged deliberately.

“Miss Vola, how delightful to see you.” The Prince set the tablet down on the table, walked up to her, and reached out with a single hand to touch her shoulder. A light touch, momentary, before she pulled it away. “I am glad you have returned to us.”

“I am as well ... my P-P-Prince.” Miss Vola, not the Invictus title Madam Vola, but a regular way of saying a woman’s last name. She had decades of habits to change.

“We are colleagues, Miss Vola. Prince is fine, no need for my.”

Yeap, she’d definitely softened in the past fifty years. Or maybe since she’d starting dating Jack?

“Yes ... P-Prince.”

Antoinette chuckled, and reached over her shoulder to comb her white hair for a moment, before she turned back to the table before her.

“As you know Miss Vola, we are few in number here in Dolareido. I may be Prince, but I have not let the Kindred run rampant, nor do I wish for our order to become ... mainstream, as my Jack would say. There is much to be said for fostering refinement and an eye for subtlety, for detail.” The Prince started to circle the table, walking around it with her tablet up, taking pictures and jotting notes. “And such a keen eye is lost, I find, when swimming in swaths of colleagues. Objectivity is destroyed, and keeping an open mind not long thereafter.”

Natasha froze. There was a but coming up. Where was the but, what was the but.

“But ... I agree with Daniel. It is time for a change. With Lucas gone, as well as Viktor and Tony, perhaps I can stand to be more welcoming to newcomers, to those interested in the secrets of the order.” A sly smile and a small gesture with her hand to Natasha followed. “Or welcoming back those that left before.”

Oh. Maybe she was bitter about Natasha having left the order.

“I ... I must apologize, Prince, for leaving! I ... I had t-t-t-t-to ... get away from...” Try as she might to not look at them, Natasha found her eyes stuck on the disgusting things on the table. Some of them had eyes! Little beady eyes that stared at her no matter where she moved.

“And that was our failing, Miss Vola. Do not worry, neither I nor your sire blame you for leaving. We introduced you to the secrets of the realm before we should have. But, you are much older now, are you not Miss Vola?”

She was older, much older. Half a century under her belt as a Kindred, and a lot of sights. A lot of things, a lot of misery and pain, a lot of victories and money. Stronger, faster, not necessarily braver.

But she could try to be, right?

“ ... what would you have me d-do, Prince? Sire?”

Daniel made his little smile, and the Prince mirrored it.

“For now, observe. There is power here in this room, Miss Vola, power of a sort beyond the simple understandings of science. Other members of the Ordo Dracul would perhaps say it is an act of god. But I know otherwise, little Mekhet. We shall explore these realms, you and I, and dip our toes into rivers sacred and forbidden, until secrets from the nether fill our minds. No mystery unexposed, no enigma we have not scrutinized.”

Natasha could already feel the tremors come back, the shaking in her knees that vibrated up into her skull. The dead heart in her chest felt like it wanted to beat, just so it could burst. Why did the Prince have to make such a grand show of this sort of stuff, this mystical insanity?

Daniel raised a hand, and walked over to stand beside the taller woman.

“Prince, perhaps we should ... ease her into this anyway?”

The Prince lowered her hands. Probably didn't even realize she'd started gesturing, like speaking to a crowd.

“My apologies Miss Vola. Needless to say, the studies of the occult fascinate me, and every night I am excited to see what arcane knowledge I can glean. And I am excited that you are here to help, as my time is fought for from many directions; some I enjoy sharing it with, some I do not.” She smiled, a mischievous smirk fit for a succubus. Definitely enjoyed sharing her time with Jack.

Trying to picture the little guy with the tall vixen was just impossible. Not that Natasha was one to talk, being so much shorter than an already short guy. Still, looking up at Antoinette made her mind wander, picturing the small, fit kid between her huge breasts.

Oh god she was turning into Jessy. She needed new friends.

“P-Prince, it's ... I ... it fascinates me too. And scares me.”

“Fear will take you far in this life, Miss Vola. Too much, or too little, and you are either paralyzed or dead.” Or both; it didn’t need to be said. “But with a proper amount, you will be cautious and observant. Take this, for example.” She set her tablet down on the table, and reached out for the shrunken head. No qualms about touching the dead flesh, the wrinkly skin or the old, frayed hair. “The Jivaro of Ecuador and Peru, famous for their practice of head shrinking. Again, mainstream. Now the power of this act, the implication, the belief of it, has lost weight. Wherever you go where the odd and peculiar are sold, fake bobbles next to fake shrunken heads rest.” She walked toward Natasha, and held out the small thing on her palms, seated so it was looking at her straight on. “To find a real one is difficult. To find a real one, made from a human, on the night of a full moon, of the chief of a tribe, with a Kindred soaking the head in his own vitae during the ritual? There is but one, and this is it.”

Natasha gulped on nothing, and stared at the little thing. Quite the resume.

“Touch it.”

Oh god damn it.

The little Mekhet reached out, fingers quivering and arm shaking, and touched the thing’s forehead. Immediate jolts of something cold hit her, something colder than room temperature would suggest, like prickly bits of ice. The head sat there, eyes closed, sewn lips unmoving. Her imagination ran away with her, made her imagine it opening its eyes, or trying to speak through the sewn lips, but it remained lifeless. But the touch was real, as if electricity had been reborn as a dead spark, and danced against where her fingertips touched the thing’s ruined skin.

Intriguing and terrifying.

“Is it not?” the Prince said.

Natasha opened her eyes wide and looked up at her. No, not reading her mind. Natasha just wore her expressions on her face, and the Prince was good at reading people in general.

Now that she thought about it, she'd never talked with the Prince one on one, not really, not even when she was a member of the Ordo Dracul, protege of mentor Daniel. The Prince was talking to her like a proper colleague. What changed? The fifty years embraced, maybe?

“So it's uh ... m-magical?” she said.

“Magic is a horrible word, Miss Vola. There are secrets to the world we do not understand. Hidden things, machines of divine scale, realms that run the currents of many realities, lying on the edges of our own. In the Ordo Dracul, some of us hunt secrets of the flesh, others the mind, others the world. And I hunt the secrets of the worlds beyond.” The Prince walked into the heart of the circle, and placed the tiny head upon its center. “Energies, not magic. If we view them as things beyond understanding, we will never understand them.”

Made sense. And she did want to understand how people like Lucas were able to call upon lightning. The disciplines of the Kindred were odd enough, but after enough time, she'd grown to view them as nothing more than aspects of her race, evolved predators. A bolt of lightning though? That was eye opening.

“Is that what this room is for?” Natasha said. “Finding secrets?”

“Indeed.” Antoinette walked to the wall by the door, closed it, and reached over to the dial to dim the lights. The white LEDs faded away, until there was only the gentle blue glow of the chandelier fires above. “For today, you are to observe, and become familiar with the process.”

What sort of process did one use for analyzing the occult and the mystical elements involved? Like asking someone who’s been blind their whole life to describe color. But sure enough, Antoinette got the tablet again, and started to film the shrunken head.

Or at least, Natasha thought she was just filming it. But as the little Mekhet stepped closer, she realized the Prince wasn’t using a common tablet. No brand on it, and it was very thick. She got around onto Antoinette’s side, and looked through the picture being shown on the weird device.

“... infrared?” she said. The picture did look different from what she was seeing with her naked eyes. Lot of orange.

“No Miss Vola, but you are close.” The Prince smiled at her and returned to the picture. She lowered it too, enough so Natasha didn’t have to crane her neck to see. “Watch closely.”

After a glance to Daniel to catch his nod, she set her eyes on the device, and watched the tiny head sit in the circle center. It just sat there of course, lifeless, because that’s what dead things did. The irony.

Motion on the picture made her gasp, and she leaned in closer to stare harder at the picture. There was movement! Tiny, little wisps of color, a glint of blue mist that drifted with invisible currents. She snapped her head up to look over the device at the shrunken head, and where it sat upon the grand symbol. Nothing, just the quiet blue light from the odd chandelier above. But when she looked back at the tablet to watch the feed, she gasped again at the faintest wisp of moving blue against an otherwise very dark, orange-tinted image.

The wisps started to make a shape. Eyes glued to the screen, Natasha got closer until she was right next to the Prince, but she barely noticed. The wisp of blue was making an actual shape, a thing, something that stood on two legs. A person! A ghostly image against the orange background of the tablet's image, the blue shadow gestured, or at least looked like it did. Natasha could see what seemed like a head, legs, and arms, but no features, no eyes or fingers or toes. Still, with a few more minutes of staring, the image settled into something that did indeed seem human, and it started to walk around.

It came toward them. Natasha squeaked and jumped back, but the ghost thing didn't react. It turned around and back toward the circle center, and proceeded to pace around within it.

“ ... is ... is it-t-t trapped?”

“Yes, but not by the circle. Whatever it is, it is bound to the head.”

Chuckling, the Prince handed her the tablet. It was heavy, and thick. Expensive. Whatever technology the Prince had put into its development was not normal, not something the Invictus had, and probably not something any kine-run organization had. And, Natasha had to admit, there was a thrill to having a fortune at her back to fuel her new covenant's interests. The Invictus had money, but all they ever did with it was make more money, and vie for positions of power, to make more money. With the Ordo Dracul, they had a purpose.

But the purpose was terrifying. She could see a thing, an actual, real ghost thing, blue against the orange of the screen. Maybe blue because of the strange chandelier?

“D-do you know what it is?” she said. “ ... who it is?”

“I do not. Communication has been difficult. It does not see us or hear us. At least, not until I do this.” The Prince reached out over the table of occult objects, grabbed a small, brown, flannel bag on a string, and hung it around her neck.

“What’s in that?”

“The bones of children, and the dust of graveyards. The cloth is a burial shroud.”

“ ... w-w-what?”

The Prince nodded, and stepped into the circle. “This charm was made a millenium ago.”

Oh, not of her own making then. Good. Well, don’t put it past the Prince to do something that gross in the pursuit of secrets either.

The white-haired woman walked up toward the shrunken head, and stood before it. As she did, the blue figure in the screen reacted, stepping aside to avoid touching her when she came before the head. It circled her, reached out to touch her, but its arms went through her body and found nothing. It tried again, but the ghost thing was slow to do anything, and each gesture and movement took many seconds.

But it did react to her, specifically her and her location. It wasn’t just a weird movie on playback, or some afterimage of ... something. Whatever it was, it was aware of her.

“It-t-t ... it can see you?” You sound like straight out of a horror movie, Natasha.

“Or sense me. But it does not respond to my words, or my gestures. Only my location. And only if I am wearing the witch’s charm.”

Witch’s charm? Oh god what crazy world had she let herself get pulled into. Just as she started shivering again, Daniel put a hand on her shoulder. He too was looking at the screen, and despite his glasses and deadpan face, she could see the same hint of intrigue there she knew she was wearing too; just without a bunch of a fear mixed in.

They were staring at something beyond the realm of the physical. There was a real, existing thing, moving and reacting to Antoinette as she walked around in the circle. Real. It was real.

Her knees started to rattle, and Daniel gave her a little shake of his own. A nod and small smile from him, and back to the display.

“Hidden things that Mekhet disciplines cannot see.” Daniel let go of her and walked toward the table, where his gloved hands drifted over the many objects and items. “Just a handful of the strange objects we’ve collected over the centuries. Other members of the order have given them to us, hoping we can discover more about them. A daunting task, but we’ve been diligent.”

Natasha raised a brow. Her sire, talking, for more than two sentences. He did that rarely.

“Tell me Miss Vola, what did you observe?” The Prince left the circle, returned the shrunken head and necklace charm to the table, and turned the lights back on.

Natasha looked back down at the tablet in her hand, and aimed it at the circle once more. Without the shrunken head or the dim blue light, all the screen showed was what her eyes could see.

“... whatever that was, it-t ... it didn’t leave the circle. And when you put the shrunken head down, it t-t-took time to appear.” She looked back to the circle, then to the Prince. She wanted more. “It reacted-d to you only when wearing the charm, and it tried to touch you. It ... it only appeared through whatever wave spectrum this device is listening for, and only when the only light visible was from the chand-d-d ... d-delier. The ... thing, was the color of the blue fire, despite the filter on this device being very orange. So the d-d-device was filtering for something that only the blue light can expose. But I cannot tell if the symbol on the floor is ... relevant.”

Tough, to talk that much. Each stutter was an annoyance, each pause an embarrassment. But the Prince waited, nodding with each statement, patient.

“A thorough breakdown to be given in such a short time. Excellent. That is what we need, what I need, in a new member of the Ordo Dracul. I cannot abide Kindred throwing subjectivity and bias into their analyses.”

“B-bias?”

“Yes. Can you imagine the sort of drivel I would have to contend with if your friend Miss Herrington were asked to make an objective report of what she saw?”

Natasha giggled, and swung a hand up to her mouth to cover it. Probably something along the lines of ‘blue ghost thing danced around the Prince and tried to cop a feel’.

“Do you have the gift of spirit touch, Miss Vola?”

“Spirit touch? You mean, see an object’s past? Secrets? No. Sire can, and Damien can, but it isn’t a skill I’ve learned.” It came easier to some Kindred, but never her. She wanted to see things clearly, and her brain just didn’t like the vague imagery of what the auspex showed.

“Just as well, such images can be misleading. And your sire explains that you have an unnatural talent for clear sight, even in the darkest corners?”

“I d-do ... Prince. I can ... I’m good at that.”

“Excellent. With the recent deaths of three elders, I am afraid the climate of the city has changed.” The Prince walked around the table a bit, sliding her finger along its edge, before picking up another one of the strange objects. This one was a human hand, a dried and wrinkled thing but still at full size. An eye was tattooed onto its palm, and string was wrapped tight around the cut wrist. And of course, a stick the size and length of a forearm was fixed to the wrist. Because that’s what people wanted to wave around like a wand, a human hand on a stick.

Daniel looked down at the hand, face deadpan save for a small twitch of his right eye, before he looked back up to the Prince. “As always, I see a woman wearing silk, laughing, bathed in blood and surrounded by corpses, a sword in hand.”

A woman, sword, silk? No historical figure jumped to mind.

Daniel held it out to her.

“ ... I uh ... I shouldn’t.”

“Come now.” The Prince gestured to her, and her eyes betrayed no mercy. “Hold the object. You must become comfortable with these affairs if you are to become a member of the order; they are not always so bloodless, or dead.”

So much for only observing. Shaking hands and trembling fingers found the object, palms up, and Daniel set it into her grip.

Gross. But, even with the grossness, the skin of the object on her skin sent little sparks into her. Unlike the shrunken head and its icy touch, the dried hand felt alive. Odd, considering it was a dead thing just like the head. Natasha turned the hand about to point the palm tattoo toward her face, and she stared into it.

And as she stared, it stared back at her. She couldn't see for sure, couldn't tell, but it did seem like the eye was adjusting itself to keep eye contact with her, like a creepy portrait might. The longer she looked at it, the more it felt like staring into the eye of something alive.

“Should ... should I start wearing gloves like you Sire?”

Daniel smirked, and raised a hand to his face to adjust his glasses, middle finger against the bridge. “It helps.”

Mental note: buy gloves, multiple.

The Prince took the hand, and set it back on the table. “We will do much of our experimenting in this room. It is the only locus within a hundred miles that is stable enough, and it is why I have built the tower here.”

“Locus?” Natasha said.

“A tear, Miss Vola. But, the details should come later. For now, let us focus on the occult, and the ways early kine and Kindred managed to see the hidden and touch the incorporeal in ways we have forgotten.”

“Forgotten.” She followed the Prince back to the table, and stared down at the objects. So many creepy things. “I wonder if ... the Circle of the C-Crone remember any of them?”

The Prince smirked at her. “If you can convince Jacob to share his secrets with me, I would be delighted.”

Yeah, fat chance of that ever happening.

The next few hours were a blur of lectures and demonstrations on various occult items. The Prince seemed to be an intellectual at heart, which she already knew from when she was first in the order for a paltry time. But it was Antoinette's passion for the items she described that surprised Natasha.

There was a vase with Egyptian hieroglyphs on it. Ashes were inside, and when placed upon the circle and viewed through the display, again they found blue wisps, this time two people, walking around the vase, holding hands. There was a mask with many lines of silver drawn on its black surface. Said to possess the powers of doom, and when put into the circle, it showed a black — not blue — cloud of some sort. There was a voodoo doll, which Natasha thought looked a little silly with pins sticking out of it, until that too was put into the circle. Another ghostly image was found, lying on the ground, with what could have been swords or spears sticking out of its chest. Hard to tell with wisps of cloud, but it looked dead.

Most disturbing, Natasha found, was the wedding dress. The Prince removed it from a garment bag and laid it out over another table in the large room. A few hundred years old, dirty, tattered, and with a very obvious blood splatter along its front. But when she put the dress into the circle, the viewed image froze Natasha solid. The ghostly images were clearer this time, as if the youth of the object compared to its older siblings affected them. And the image was of a woman wearing the dress, stabbing two other people, a man and woman, while they were in bed. It was all in blue wisp and fog, but the dress's images were so detailed, so exact, Natasha found herself mesmerized by the vividness and brutality. Whoever wore the dress stabbed the two in bed, and stabbed them, and stabbed, and stabbed, for ten minutes.

Hell hath no fury. Damien would probably say something like that.

After each event, the Prince asked Natasha to recite it back to her in detail. Now that she knew what her master was looking for, it got easier for her too, and lots of little details she'd normally leave out, she started to add in. And each one earned a smile and nod of approval from either her sire or the Prince. They wanted her to embrace her attention to detail and obsession with accuracy, instead of summarizing things into neat, inaccurate little boxes like Maria would. And as much as she was glimpsing into something disturbing and horrifying, she was enjoying herself. The nightmares would be worth it, hopefully.

“You may leave now, Miss Vola. I do expect you back tomorrow night. We have more to show.” The Prince offered her a nod and a tiny dismissing wave, before she returned to her table of occult objects. “Daniel, you may escort her.”

Escort. She didn't need an escort, but she really wanted one. Maybe the Prince noticed?

Natasha returned the nod, made a small bow, and as Daniel came up beside her, she turned and left the room of ghosts. Out into the hall, her knees started to shake again, and she forced herself to smile up at her sire as they re-entered the large stairway and started up to the tower lobby.

“That was t-t-t-terrifying.”

“Indeed.” He didn't return her gaze, hands in his pockets and glasses pointed forward. “The first night the order introduced me to the experiments they did, I was also terrified.”

“What sort of experiments?”

“The branch I was introduced to was not interested in the mystical, they were interested in blood and vitae. Experiments were performed on the bodies of Kindred, some willing, some not. Scalpel's were a common sight.”

Oh god. She clutched her stomach at the old vomit reflex. Vampires cutting into other vampires was a sickening prospect. You could cut into a vampire, cut deep, without them dying.

As they rounded the corner of where the stairway connected to the lobby at its peak, she blinked and glanced down at some moving black dots along the wall and floor. A few spiders. Funny, she doubted the spiders had much to eat in as sterile and lifeless a place as the tower.

The walk back to her apartment building was not so fun. If she'd been alone, she would have run it rooftop style, not to enjoy being juvenile like many young Kindred did, but just to get home faster. Every shadow seemed like it was moving, every kine walking past looked like they had some dark, disturbing history, and the crescent moon above gazed down on her like it was watching her. There were things that existed just beyond what her eyes could see, and now she had proof of it.

If she were kine, she would not be able to sleep. At least a Kindred never had to worry about insomnia. That didn't mean she wouldn't be imagining dead girls crawling out of her TV, or rotting limbs grabbing her from her closet.

"You look worried," Daniel said, once the two of them had walked a few blocks away from the tower and were exiting the Elysium zone.

"Course I'm worried! Now ... now I know there are ... I had no id-dea! No idea. I ... ugh. Ignorance is bliss."

The sheriff chuckled, only for a second, and adjusted his glasses before slipping his hand back into his long trench coat.

"Sorry. Your fears are mostly unwarranted, but only mostly. Ghosts, spirits, the stuff of ephemera? You don't stumble into those sorts of things, Natasha, you have to go looking ... and we will go looking.”

Ephemera? Ghosts? Spirits? Hearing it put into words was the knife that jammed home reality. Her shaking only got worse.

Outside her apartment building, deep in Invictus territory, Daniel put a hand on her shoulder. She really needed to move out of the Invictus half of South Side, find a place more neutral.

“You will be fine, Natasha. Before long, the secrets we hunt will no longer frighten you as you master them. As much.”

“I ... I hope I can live up to that expect-t-tation.”

“You dealt with Maria for decades, Natasha. You’ll find the Prince and I easier to deal with.” And again, her sire gave her a smile. So many smiles in a single night. Was he really that happy working with her again?

That made her smile too.

Daniel adjusted his glasses, nodded, and turned around.

“W-wait,” she said. Wait, wait what? He turned around, head tipped to the side. Waiting. Well, at least he was listening, a far cry from how things went back then. “We uh ... we should ... c-catch up somet-t-t-time? Maybe ... get a drink together?”

Another smile. “I would like that.”

Chapter 26

~~Beatrice~~

Climbing down into the cavern was getting easier. But no matter how good she was getting at it, if the clouds decided to cover the night sky, the obsidian shadow below her was an easy way to get some broken, mangled limbs. God damn the canyon was a bitch, with no good footing anywhere, and enough jagged rocks to kill any kine who fell down, guaranteed.

But she was familiar with it now, knew where the good rocks for grabbing were, knew where to put her weight into a crevice to get a foothold. Easy does it, easy does it. Through the sharp stone and sharper twigs and brush.

The tunnel into the cave was far more forgiving. Hard to find, but smooth and inviting compared to the canyon it connected to. And once through that, she was greeted by the colossal cavern of the Circle of the Crone. So damn metal, with bones on the walls for decorations, a blood bowl of bone in the center, and with rooms and hollows carved into the rock walls.

“Hey.”

“Hey.” She gave Aaron a small nod as she stepped in. The pale-skinned Gangrel returned it, but his eyes were busy, looking the contents of a book up and down. Not sure what kind of book had your eyes going up as well as down, but she didn’t bother to check.

“Mission go ok?” he said.

“Yeah. Garry’s got people riding the Invictus edge on purpose, like I thought.” She shrugged and raised a claw to pick at the crocodile teeth along her cheek. “He knows it’ll cause trouble. Thought he was done with trouble.”

“Carthians, done with trouble?”

“Hey fuck you, we didn’t all just look for trouble all the time. Dickhead. Carthians just try to change old stupid shit. Or do you enjoy that Dolareido is practically a monarchy?”

He mirrored the shrug and smiled. “Prince lets us do what we want. Mostly.”

“Yeah when the mostly part changes, you’ll understand.”

She really had no business getting in Aaron’s face. Man was nice, for a Gangrel, but a bit naive, and kind of the odd man out in their weird little cult. Too nice.

Ugh, for a second, she wanted to use the term ‘beta’ to describe him. Joe was the sort of moron to think in terms of alpha and beta; and if she was turning into Joe, she’d be better off ash.

Moans grabbed her attention. At this point, moans when entering the cavern were more common than silence, since Othello and Jennifer often liked to bring their meals to their rooms, instead of showing a little decency and fucking them where they found them. Want to fuck them in the club? No one would even blink. But bringing them back to fuck in the cavern, where the stone walls captured sound so everyone could hear everything, was rude.

And she was too weak to not sneak a peek. As long as she didn’t do anything, it was alright. Right?

Definitely do something nice for Julias later, Beatrice, you guilty bitch.

Smirking to herself, she walked over to Othello's room, and stood in the opening of the large alcove. Othello was lying on top of a woman, and beneath them was a bunch of blankets, with a pillow underneath the girl's hips. And of course they were fucking, with a deep and heavy, fast-but-not-too-fast rhythm. Anal sex of course, Othello's main interest, and the girl underneath him didn't seem to mind.

In fact she barely seemed to be aware. Her arms were limp along the blankets, and her moans were quiet, exhausted things. Othello must have already drank from her. Poor girl was borderline comatose while the muscley, dark-skinned Daeva sank his cock into her ass. Comatose or not, the kine was soaking the pillow underneath her cunt, and her body was trembling, toes curled and thighs quivering. A long, deep, slow stroke, and the girl squirted onto the pillow, with a wavering, weak moan to follow. Another one, and another little squirt; girl was cumming her brains out.

Ok, enough staring. You have a boyfriend, and this is very uncool.

She kept watching for another ten seconds before she moved on. Course then she was just watching it in her head, and she raised her claws to her hair as she shook her skull.

Jacob was sitting in the back of the cave on a chair, a simple thing of wood with a leather cushion. For some reason, it went well with the bones that covered the rock wall behind him. The ancient Nosferatu was wearing some old brown pants, black shoes, and an open brown vest, with nothing underneath. She could see his chest and arms, and found herself a little surprised; the man was in good shape for what would have passed for a fifty-year-old kine. A bit thin, but strong. Whoever had sired him had picked a weird time for the embrace.

He had the usual bandage over his eyes though, to hide his empty eye sockets.

“Beatrice, how goes scouting?”

“You were right, Garry’s stirring up trouble. I know the Invictus have been taking more territory with Xnomina on the border, but it’s not like that’s a declaration of war.”

“If your neighbor, someone you know doesn’t want you around, starts marching troops up and down your fence line, would you not respond?” Garry smirked his crazy smirk at her, and leaned back into his chair to bring a leg up onto the other. Knife in hand, and a piece of wood too, he started carving. He’d only just started working on it, so all he had was a block of wood the size of a brick.

“I guess I would. And didn’t know you did wood carvings.”

“Good.” Another grin for her, before the eyeless vampire started back into the wood with the blade. “What is Garry up to, specifically?”

“He’s got multiple cells causing mayhem for the encroaching Xnomina institutions. Breaking down machinery, causing accidents for the kine, shit like that. He has other cells, his older Kindred, roughing up Invictus who walk the neutral line. No one’s been killed yet thank god, but some kid is going to go too far eventually.”

“Undoubtedly.” The old Nosferatu worked quick, shavings of wood falling and exposing a knife-like shape from the block. “Probably what Garry is hoping for.”

“Say what?”

“Two dogs, one bone. Garry and Michael butt heads a lot, and overtly.” The bastard smirked at her and waved his small stick around. “It’s in the nature of women to sneak and manipulate, in men to break down walls with their skulls. In this case, each other’s skulls instead of a wall.” He chuckled and resumed carving, with the occasional pick of his teeth with the blade. “Both see an opportunity for power and growth, at the other’s expense, and they’ll pursue it.”

“I guess, yeah. Just didn’t expect Garry to do something so juvenile.”

“The Invictus want to control all, and the Carthians want a democracy, no matter how foolhardy the notion with Kindred as your populace. Both see their ways as correct, both see them worth fighting for. Wars are fought for less.”

Yeah, but that didn’t mean it wasn’t stupid.

“Feel like I should do something.”

“Oh?” He threw a sly, toothy smile her way.

She nodded and stepped in closer. The old bastard did love to try and intimidate her, and she resisted every time, despite the shivering beast in her gut. Besides, she had bigger teeth.

“Feel a bit guilty about just watching the catastrophe waiting to happen.”

“Understandable.” He carved a couple eyes around the center of the piece of wood. What had seemed like a blade was turning into a bird beak. “Your lover is an Invictus and your old boss and friend is a Carthian. Quite the pickle.”

“Fuck you.”

He laughed. “No judgment here, Beatrice. We all have our baggage. And you are free to do what you want, you know that.”

“Unless you want something.” Snarl and hiss.

“I think I’m entitled to a little request every now and then.” The monster leaned in closer, enough so this time she did take a step back as his smile turned into a grin. “Aren’t I?”

Yeah yeah, he was the leader of their fucked up little pack, after all.

“So, I can do what I want about this?”

“Sure. Just don’t throw the Circle into the middle of it, and you’re free to fuck Garry and help Julias all you want.”

Fucking bastard knew he got that backward too.

“And ... about Maria?”

Jacob put the knife and wood down to his knees, and looked at her. The bandage wasn’t see-through. You couldn’t see the empty eye sockets. But she could tell he was staring right at her.

“What about her?”

“She’s been pushing on Carthian territory too.”

“Her motivations are much simpler, and deadlier.”

“ ... you mean about Lucas.”

The eyeless nodded, and resumed carving. Where he’d once been enthusiastic and speedy with the crafting, now he was slowed, and each incision was deliberate.

“He’s dead, and she blames Garry on some level. Much of what happened during the purge happened because of him, because he sided with the Prince, because he...” The old man sighed, and slit some random lines into subtle curves along the sloped back end of the wood. Barbs of feathers? “Now that he has truly perished, Maria no doubt feels unhinged and looking to start trouble. That may change as she calms ... it may not.”

“Fucking wonderful.” She threw up her hands and started pacing. Two dudes having a pissing contest was a stupid thing she could get behind stopping, but a woman angry about the death of her love wasn’t exactly an easy thing to fix.

“Take my advice, Beatrice: stay out of her way.”

Not the first time Jacob told her to avoid Maria. Jacob was so much older than her, why did he fear her? He was twice her age, fucking twice. He was ancient. Maria wasn’t even alive when Jacob became elder.

“Fine, fine, I’ll avoid her.” Hands down again, she turned and walked away. Didn’t bother to wave or anything, not the Circle’s way. She liked that.

Ok, maybe Jennifer would have something different to say. And, well, she kinda wanted to see Jennifer. The two of them were getting along more and more; probably cause she reminded her of Julias. Damn Ventrue.

Her friend had a fur blanket hanging from her alcove, but she’d given Beatrice permission to walk in whenever she wanted, even if the blanket was pulled across to cover the hideaway. So Beatrice walked in.

“Jennifer, we—damn it.”

Of course. Of fucking course. The Nosferatu was too busy running scenarios about Garry and the Invictus through her head to be paying attention. She’d thought all the moans were coming from Othello and his girl, not Jennifer; which was pretty damn stupid of you Beatrice considering Jennifer has sex almost every night.

Sure enough, the woman was nude, and straddling a man who was lying on his back on some fur blankets. No wonder Beatrice hadn’t heard their moans, they were having really gentle, slow sex.

A surprise, considering there was also a man behind Jennifer, kneeling behind her, and though Beatrice couldn't see from the angle, he was definitely penetrating her.

Jennifer smiled at her, and slowly rocked herself back and forth. The man underneath her held still, hands on her hips, while the man behind her met her rocking with gentle thrusts of his own. No one had issues getting in there, nice and deep, and everyone was smiling.

“Hey Beatrice,” Jennifer said. Her hands were on the man's chest beneath her, or at least they were. But when Beatrice entered, Jennifer always changed her body language, got a little friendlier, a little more inviting. She put her weight onto one hand, still on the man's chest, but the other raised to her breast, and she cupped it into her palm while finger and thumb caressed her swollen nipple. All while looking at the Nosferatu.

Beatrice couldn't help but stare a little. Catching the girl mid threesome was routine at this point, a routine Beatrice could probably break if she really wanted to. But damn, seeing Jennifer surrounded by legs sent a thrill down her dead spine every time. Something about how Jennifer looked just like her with the shoulder-length black hair that framed her face, the confident grin, the lean-and-mean body; all that without the Nosferatu disfigurements.

Watching her reminded Beatrice a lot of her fun days back when she was kine. And, evidently, she really turned herself on.

“Jennifer. I uh...” Focus damn it, stop staring. “Wanted to talk about Garry.”

“Go ahead.” Smiling at her, Jennifer leaned down to squish her breasts against her ghouls' chest, and arched her back to show off the curve of her spine. Not doing it for her ghouls either, definitely doing it to entice Beatrice.

Or maybe she just liked showing off? Cause you love to do that too, Beatrice. You love the look in Julias's eyes when he watches you do anything sexy. Maybe that's all it was, Jennifer getting off on being watched, same as Beatrice did. She'd prefer Jennifer enjoy such a vice with her ghouls, not her, but at least she could understand it, if it was true.

"He's up to something. I know Xnomina is buying up territory near there. Maybe they're going to expand the police force in the area, and McDonald will probably point them in Garry's direction." Much as Garry was a great guy, Kindred did illegal things all the time by kine rules. Where Invictus broke the law through manipulative lawyer garbage, Carthians broke it in much more direct ways. Easily caught ways, usually, if you knew where to look. And the Invictus knew where to look.

Jennifer nodded, and her eyes looked up as she considered, before she pushed against her ghoul's chest to sit up straighter again. The woman had the same slightly tanned skin tone as Beatrice, but no tattoos or piercings. The clean look was good on her.

"Do you suspect Maria, or Michael?" she said, face calm and straight. Or it was for a second, and then the man behind her gave her a little thrust, harder than the ones before, making Jennifer squeak. She reached back and slapped the man on the hip, but she didn't really seem like she minded. Her nipples looked so damn hard and swollen, despite her putting on her business face. Her rhythm never stopped either. Girl was damn comfortable with sex.

Which was weird, now that she thought about it. Beatrice slept around a lot as a kine, but she never got as comfortable with sex as Jennifer. The Ventrue was only ten years embraced; must have been a sexual animal while still alive.

"Thinking Maria mostly? Since Lucas is dead, and she might think Garry had a hand to play in that; she could be looking to start something. But then McDonald hates Garry too.”

“Any evidence for either?” She sat up straighter still, and the man behind her had to lean back to make room for her. But he just rolled with it, reached his hands up from her waist, and cupped her breasts. And with more room, the man underneath reached down to where her smooth pussy was wrapped taut around his cock, and started to rub his thumb along her clitoris.

Both men earned some quiet moans from the Ventrue, and she tilted her head a bit to catch the man behind her with a kiss on the jaw. Just another ordinary day for Jennifer.

“Not to call them out individually, no.”

“Why would you call them out?” She reached down for the man beneath her, and pulled him up to sit, his head against her collar. Her fingers found his hair, and she combed the curls of them as she gently fucked her ghoul. “Let them fight it out. You’re not supposed to interfere, just have the information.”

“A war will benefit no one, Jennifer.” She had to leave out the ‘when you’re older you’ll understand’ speech. Beatrice had a couple decades as Kindred, but that wasn’t a lot. Besides, it was people older than her trying to start the wars.

“You sure about that? I don’t know about you, but I think it’d be nice if the Circle could pick up the pieces left over from a silly Invictus Carthian war. Take the city for our own, let the Crone run free.” Jennifer smiled at Beatrice over her ghoul’s head. Still fucking, even as she moved her legs out so she wasn’t on her knees, but had them wrapped around her ghoul instead. Which meant the ghoul behind her had to sit down on his butt too, and get in close, legs out to the sides. Everyone so damn comfortable with each other, the guys didn’t mind touching legs and bits to make sure their master enjoyed a proper, deep, double penetration in a leisurely bout of sex.

“I have friends in the Invictus. You know that.” Julias of course, her big shiny white knight. But there was Jack too. “And the Carthians.”

“Split loyalties. You’re lucky this isn’t like other cities, Beatrice. A lot of places, the Kindred act in open war of each other.” Her hands drifted up and down her ghoul’s back, even as she grinned at the Nosferatu. Legs locked tighter, and her rhythm increased; now everyone had a bit of motion going in their hips. Like watching gear cogs work together, the three bodies kept rubbing up against each other in a perfect, synchronized dance.

Beatrice had been in threesomes before, when she was kine; they never went this smooth. Jennifer must have spent time training her ghouls, just so she could get a proper good fuck every night.

Yeap, Beatrice was jealous. Course, the grass was always greener on the other side of the fence, right? She had a great man in her life now, a powerful, rich man at that. They were sexually compatible too, and sometimes had fun with their meals. Be satisfied with that. Just hard to think straight when staring at your body double having oddly romantic sex with two guys at once.

“I like that I can go out into the street, even into Invictus or Carthian territory, and I don’t guarantee a fight.”

“Not a guarantee,” Jennifer said, “but always a possibility. We’re animals, Beatrice, trying to share a food source. Violence is inevitable.” As if to make her point, Jennifer rolled her eyes up into her skull with a low groan, and sank her teeth into her ghoul.

The effect was immediate. The man shuddered, let out his own groans, and started to fall back. He lay upon the fur blankets once more, and his hands fell to the sides as well. Whole body, trembling and shivering, as Jennifer sank her fangs deep into him and started to drink him. Course, the woman had been working them up to it with sex, so Beatrice couldn't help but stare as the two also climaxed.

Ok, maybe she could watch just a little longer.

As Jennifer drank the man, Kissed the man, her ghoul behind her roamed his hands up and down her curved back, and started to thrust into her ass a little harder. Couldn't thrust hard, now that he was on his ass, but more than enough to get some mewls from the woman. But she kept her fangs deep in the other man's neck, and suckling and drinking, as he himself quivered. Beatrice could tell he was cumming inside her, no doubt absolutely pouring into her; no kine could resist the pleasure of the Kiss. And a Kiss with an orgasm to go along with it must have been amazing.

Finally, Jennifer sat up, and leaned back against the man behind her. With their bodies out of the way, Beatrice bit her lip, staring at where Jennifer's smooth pussy was spread open on her ghoul's cock. White drops were leaking out of her, onto the wet skin of the man's pelvis, wetter than sweat would cause. Course, sex addict that she was, Jennifer had soaked the man in her girl cum, and the kine's fluids mixed into it as he slipped into a post-Kiss coma.

Jennifer leaned back even more, and let the ghoul in front of her fall out of her body. With her legs spread, there was no hiding the dripping white that spilled out of her lips and onto the softening cock of her pet. The remaining ghoul backed up a foot to give them more room, while Jennifer remained in his lap, leaning back and up to kiss at the man's neck. Her ghoul slipped one of his hands between her thighs, and sank his fingers into her cum-filled snatch.

A couple thrusts earned some mewls from Jennifer, and her exposed lips dripped more of her juices as the man behind her started to cum as well. Without the Kiss to render him comatose, he was free to keep thrusting, his own groans coming through as the two climaxed. Jennifer made sure to push her ass back into the man, her back too, and spread her legs so Beatrice didn't miss a thing.

God damn it.

After a minute of gentle thrusting and cuddling, the man fell out of her, and she sat down on his legs, cum dripping down her ass and thighs. But she barely seemed to notice as she got comfortable straddling his knees, and stretched out her arms above her head.

"Thank you," she said. "You watched a lot longer than normal. I like that."

Course she did.

"I really shouldn't. I have a boyfriend, Jennifer."

"Did you ask him yet? About my proposal?"

"... no."

Jennifer frowned and folded her arms across her bare chest. "Why not?"

"Can ... can we just focus on the problem, please?"

"Fine." Beatrice's clone leaned back and pat the man behind her. "Be a dear, get the wash ready?"

The ghoul nodded, and without so much as wiping off the cum still on his cock, got up and headed out of the room into the main cavern. Beatrice quirked a brow and watched; no one else reacted.

"So, Invictus and Carthians. I do happen to know that it is Maria being a thorn in Garry's side in the Mirrden area, where all that construction is happening. She's pushing to have old homes in the area torn down, and for the Mirrden company to set up some quote-unquote business facilities." The Ventrue raised her fingers to literally quote 'business facilities' before she crawled over to the comatose ghoul still on the blankets, and straddled his chest.

"Any idea why? Not like she couldn't expand Xnomina into other areas."

"Well you know about them and Lucas."

"Yeah but, is that it?" Beatrice said.

"Hmm. A friend of a friend of a friend said Garry was found in Tony's old tunnels, the ones Lucas took over, and he destroyed some pretty important objects to the Lancea et Sanctum."

God damn it Garry. Dude really had a hate boner for the Longinus lovers.

"Thanks Jennifer. I'm gonna go talk to him."

The Ventrue frowned at her, nose scrunching up and lines creasing her forehead.

"... be careful."

Beatrice again raised a brow. But nodded, and left.

---

The Carthian half of South Side. Bars, steak restaurants, hardware stores, garages, a pleasant mix of crime and old fashioned grit. Neighborhoods with people sitting on the front porches, drinking beer or smoking cigarettes. Old cars parked on the streets, and grocery stores with signs in the parking lot advertising food on sale.

Much as she liked the high-class half of the Invictus territory, there was something more real about the Carthian half. People here weren't full of themselves, at least not in the same way. They knew the price of milk, they knew doing cocaine could get you arrested, they knew what noodles and ramen tasted like, they knew the names of local cops. A place where your neighbors had names and faces, even in the apartment buildings. You didn't necessarily like them, and some you probably hated, but you knew them. A far cry from the nameless, faceless, weightless anonymity of the richer half of the city.

She stuck to the rooftops. In the middle of the night, only streetlights were going to expose her, so the rooftops made traveling easier for a Nosferatu; better than having her face spotted by a kine. It took a while, but she found the familiar rooftops of the Carthian district, of old schools and old homes, old apartment buildings and older corner stores. The further she went out, the more rundown everything got.

Damn she missed this place. She missed the cars with the cracked windshields and dented bumpers, she missed the homes with the stained siding, she missed the roads with the asphalt patches. Hell, she missed the noisy loiterers who liked to hang around on street corners with a stereo playing. Course over the past twenty years of her embrace, it went from boomboxes to cars with loud stereos to the latest incarnation, jackasses taking selfies doing stupid shit. And yet she still missed it. It was home, for a damn long time.

Been a while since she'd left these people, would they just let her in again? Other Kindred stood around, talking with each other, leaning against walls and streetlights and gesturing and nodding with enthusiasm. Some sounded angry, some sounded happy, everyone did a double take on her as she passed by once she got back onto the street. A few of her acquaintances managed some nods, and a few of the people she'd bashed horns with growled or groaned, depending on how much she annoyed them back in the day. But at least they were a familiar pain; she knew them, they knew her. Good enough to let her go on through.

She found the apartment building Garry lived in. The one she used to live in. Front door was never locked, and she stepped in, but not before a little hesitation.

Couldn't help but smile as she looked at the walls with peeling paint, the cracked windows and water-damaged stairs and carpet. No, it wasn't home anymore, and she honestly preferred the badass metal cave of the Circle of the Crone; didn't mean she didn't miss this one too.

“Beatrice, the fuck you doing here?”

Ah, Joe, of course. Guard dog.

“Here to see Garry.”

“About?”

“Fuck off.” Joe frowned at her and pushed her shoulder hard enough to make her take a step back. Mr. Big-n-Bald wrestler man getting some major balls on him.

Whatever, she could take him. He had maybe five or ten years on her, nothing she couldn't handle. She reached out, and pushed him back, foot against the wall behind her so she had something to brace against. Dude was double her weight.

“How about you fuck off? I want to talk to Garry.”

“You can't just—”

“I'm not some random fuck off the street, Joe! You know me well enough to know you can trust me, so how about you get the fuck out of my way?”

Mistake.

Joe punched her, hard. She expected he might throw a swing, but not that he'd throw a swing hard enough to smash her head against the lobby wall. Bone nearly cracked when her skull collided with wood and drywall, before she fell down onto her knees and hands.

“Damn right I know you. Two fucking decades you lived here with me, working for Garry when the Invictus were breathing down our necks. Two fucking decades you were part of this family, and we looked out for each other.” The brute stared down at her, hands in fists at his side, eyebrows furrowed to the point he looked like an angry rodent. “Now you think you can just waltz in here? Fucking an Invictus, that was strike one. Leaving the Carthians for the Crone? That's strike two.” He reached down and picked her up by the neck.

“Where's strike three?” she said through the pain and groans.

“Never could count very high.”

Again, fist collided with her face, crushing her nose and sending her into the wall again. She rolled like a bag of sand, heavy and bending until she settled on her back along the floor by the door. Leave it to Joe to put a damper on her nostalgia.

“I'm still your ally,” she said. Jaw still working, but the nose was definitely a flat smudge on her face. Vitae was quick to start healing it, but actually realigning a nose took some physical force, and she groaned as she put her hands to her face, and twisted the cartilage back into place.

“Says you. I say fuck you.”

“And Garry? What does he say?”

“Garry ain't said shit. And I figure it's better to ask for forgiveness than permission.” He started walking toward her again, and along with a very inhuman growl, inhuman claws started to grow from his hands. Long claws, thick, massive, and heavy. “So I’m going to smack you around a bit before then. Hope you don’t mind.”

Well, at least he didn’t plan to kill her, that was nice of him.

“Joe, asking you one more time, get the fuck out of my way.”

“Oh I hope you can stay so confident when I’ve got a few claws jammed up your cunt. I’m going to—”

Fuck. Him.

“What?”

“You’re alone.”

“I ... I...”

She stared at the man, at the big, dumb man, and stood up. Joe had stopped moving, and the frown of his eyebrows faded as he met her eyes.

“You’re alone. Everyone’s abandoned you. Alone in an empty city, with no one to talk to, no one to feed on, no one anywhere.” The power poured up into her, through her, into her fingers and claws, into her spine, and up into her eyes. But it was her words that carried the weight. “All. Alone.”

“Alone...” Joe fell to his knees. The Gangrel claws of his hands faded away, and the anger along with them. Open eyes stared up at her as she forced the nightmare upon him, drilled it into his Kindred mind, and down into his stupid bald soul.

Sighing, she shook her shoulders out and dusted herself off. Fuck that hurt. Fuck Joe. Fuck him. Fuck him fuck him fuck him. She stood in front of the kneeling man, and waved a hand in his face.

He didn't move. Didn't blink. Didn't look at her in any way. Just stared into the distance, with fear etched all over his face.

"Someone ... anyone?" he said. "Someone help me ... someone ... anyone..."

Fuck, now she felt horrible. The big guy was just one of the guard dogs for the Carthians, and dogs were pack animals. He cared for his family, to a fault, just like all dogs did. And now he was trapped in his mind, thinking they were gone, that everyone was gone, and that he was alone in the whole god damn world.

Sympathy passed as she rubbed her jaw and where her nose was struggling to heal. Fuck him, he'd be fine come tomorrow.

She started up the stairs of the apartment building. There were over a hundred Kindred in the Carthians, last she knew; would she have to fight more of them? Did she piss off everyone as badly as Joe?

Garry's door. She swung it open, smile on her face. Maybe she could surprise him, delight him with a visit from an old friend?

Surprised was not the right word.

The man was on his bed, naked, and someone was underneath him, someone the fighter was giving an anal pounding.

Mike?

"Beatrice, what the hell?" Garry said.

"B-Beatrice?" Mike started squirming. Garry had his hands on kid's shoulders, keeping him pinned on his stomach against the bed. But Mike didn't seem like he was unhappy about the situation. The young hacker punk looked at her, blushing bright with life and embarrassment, and arousal, before Beatrice finally managed to come to her senses and close the door.

“Just uh ... getting some things I forgot,” she said, before she started to head toward her room. The groans in the room resumed, and she smirked; she must have been trapped in her own damn mind again to not hear them before opening the fucking door.

Back in her old room, she started digging through her things. Laptop, smartphone, some USB chargers and shit, and some headphones. None of it would last long without power in the cavern, so she'd have to charge things somewhere else. Maybe—

Oh fucking god, she just found Garry fucking another guy in the ass. She never wondered about his sex life or orientation, it never came up. But now she had a very real image of Garry, naked, on top the scrawny punk Mike, and giving him a thorough anal fucking. Like she'd seen two other people already get tonight!

Don't think about it, don't think about it, don't think about it.

Do anything but think about it.

Not like it wasn't a sexy image though. Mike was in decent shape for a scrawny kid, and Garry was like her, lean and mean and built for fighting. Dude was the definition of street rugged. Seeing him, naked on another man, dick inside him?

She took her old booklet of CDs and started smacking herself in the face with it. Fuck, her nose! Pain, oh fucking gods pain. She clutched her damaged nose and sat down on her ass by the bed.

Few minutes later, Garry stood in her doorway, a raised brow on his face and arms folded across his chest. Man was wearing some torn jeans, and nothing else. Went well with the shaved head, facial scruff, and steel jaw.

“The fuck you doing here Beatrice? And don’t say it was for your shit, you could steal this from anywhere, any time.”

“ ... yeah.” Ass on the carpet, she leaned back against the bed’s side, and threw the booklet away. “Came to see you. Not like that, mind you ... so you and Mike, eh?”

“Kid’s got a great ass.” Garry shrugged. And unless she was seeing things, he made a small grin.

Too much. She burst into laughter and fell onto her side, muscles refusing to cooperate. Too god damn much. Garry kept watching her, that tiny grin still there, and when she took a peek at him, she broke into laughter again, until she was on her back and waving a hand up at him.

“Oh fuck, god damn it Garry. Fucking ... god I needed that.” She climbed up the bed and got to standing. No way to behave in front of the leader of the Carthians after all.

Leader of the Carthians. He was always just Garry before, badass and her boss. Now he was a title and representative of another group. Hard to think of him like that though. He was ... Garry. Guy hated that shit as much as she did.

But she was a witch now. And she had good reason for being one.

“Sorry about barging in unannounced. Overstepped my bounds.”

“ ... and sorry about fucking with Joe. He started a fight, so I left him in a nightmare.”

“You what?”

“Down in the lobby.”

“Joe that fucking...” He frowned as he stared down, and folded his arms across his chest. In the past, he’d have shrugged and said it was his own damn fault, but before he got there, she saw the hesitation in his eyes. “Next time, let me deal with mine, Beatrice. You’ll start an incident doing that sort of shit.”

There it was, a cold wall. And now that it was right in her face, she realized it was the thing she’d been avoiding, the reason she hadn’t come back to pick up her old things.

“Yeah, my bad. I apologize.” Ugh, the words tasted like vomit. “I wanted to talk with you about the Lancea et Sanctum.”

“Why?”

“Little birdie told me you might have an issue with them. Maybe destroyed some of their artifacts and shit?” The birdies were more than just Jennifer. Sometimes they were her. She’d gotten very good at the spying thing the past couple months.

“... and if I did?” Cold wall turned into steel.

Beatrice held up her hands, and started to pluck at her earing chain that connected to her nostril piercing. “Just keeping an eye on things, Garry. We do that in the Circle, and ... and it looks like a storm’s brewing between the Carthians and Invictus.”

“A storm’s always brewing.”

“How so? Far as I know there hasn’t been a real war between them since before the purge. I—”

Garry raised a hand and wiped her words away. “You weren’t there.”

“I know, and I’d like to keep it that way. I’m on your side Garry, witch or not.”

The Gangrel frowned, turned, and started walking to his office in the same standoffish way he always did when upset. She followed behind him. Office was a hilarious word to describe the rundown room with peeling paint and bending ceiling; it had a desk though, at least that was office-like.

He sat the desk, and she closed the door behind her.

“Shit’s going to happen at this rate,” she said, “and for once I can see it coming before it does.”

“Enjoying your new position with the witches then?” He leaned back in his chair, put his boots up on the table, and started picking his fingernails with his knife. Classic business pose.

“You can say I enjoy having a bit more freedom, yeah.”

“Freedom like wild animals.”

She walked forward and slammed her hands down on the table. “You really want to make this about the Circle? I came here to talk about the Lancea et Sanctum, and an obvious shitstorm about to happen.”

“ ... alright Beatrice, shoot.”

“You know Damien survived Lucas’s death.” She twisted a bit to put her ass up onto the desk edge. Garry could try and hold her at a distance if he wanted, she wasn’t about to let him get all imposing. He may have been an elder, but he was still Garry.

“I do.”

“Another little birdie told me he might start reviving the Lancea et Sanctum.”

Bam. That got a small eyebrow raise out of him.

“The kid is going to revive the Second Estate in Dolareido?”

“He might, depends on if the Prince agrees.”

“Then she’ll bring it up at the next Primogen meeting, where I can politely tell her and Damien to fuck off.”

“ ... I don’t think you should.”

Garry raised both brows this time. “Why the fuck not?”

Because I’ve seen Damien, I’ve seen that kid before and after Lucas’s death. I’ve seen the broken man’s eyes.

“Because he’s not Lucas.”

“The First Estate and the Second Estate, at the same time, Beatrice. We have enough trouble with the Invictus breathing down our throats as is.”

“I know McDonald’s being a pain in your ass, and probably pushing for a fight. Maria though? She’s coming up right behind him, and I think she’ll ease up, maybe get McDonald to back off too, if you let the Longinus dude start preaching again.”

“Sounds a lot like a concession, Beatrice.”

“Yeah well, you might think differently if you talked with Damien.”

“ ... how much you know about this kid?” Garry stabbed the knife into the table, and glared. “He’s Lucas’s childe. You weren’t there Beatrice, you didn’t hear the sermons, see the bastard murder and slaughter anyone he thought was a risk, or anyone he could somehow accuse of being against god.”

“I get that, I fucking get it, but Damien isn’t like that.” He’s something, but he ain’t that.

“You really sticking up for this guy just because you want to avoid a war?”

“I ... I’m not sticking up for him, not really. Just saying he ain’t Lucas. Talk to him.” She shrugged, grabbed his knife out of the desk, and started cleaning her claws. “You might not think so, and apparently Joe doesn’t think so, but I still care about you guys. Last thing I want is to see the Carthians stuck in a war with Maria and Michael. And Julias.”

It was the truth. She had friends on both sides at this point; well, friends on the Carthian side, and her lover on the Invictus side. Even that dumbass kid Jack would get put into a dangerous spot if the Invictus and Carthians went at it.

“ ... I’ll think about it. Message received. Now get out of here.”

“What?”

“Did I fucking stutter? Show up uninvited, unannounced, fuck with Joe’s head; you crossed the line.” He glared, and reached out to snap his knife out of her hands. “I could bring this up with the Primogen, but I won’t. Now get out.”

She stood up, and stared at him, but the man was looking at his knife and picking his nails with it again.

Oh, she got it. Like a fucking classic movie, with the ‘shoo the dog’ scene. He was trying to get rid of her cause he cared. And he did care, much as the fucking bastard was trying to show he didn’t. But if he wanted to do the drama thing, put on a scene, everyone pretend they were enemies now, fine.

She stormed off, flipped him off, and slammed the door behind her, grin on her face once she was outside.

Back in the cemetery. When she wasn't hanging out in the Carthian half of South Side, she was here, South Hill Cemetery and the catacombs it contained.

Or at least that's how it used to be. Now she was either hanging out with Julias in his mansion, or hanging out with the witches. No wonder the Carthians didn't care for her anymore, hanging out with two other covenants, one of them a long time enemy. The other, loose cannons who'd probably destroy the city if Jacob ever got to rule it.

"I like the witches." She shrugged to no one, and started to walk the walls of the catacomb. Kine avoided the place, for various reasons; her scaring people off being one of them. It meant she got to enjoy the shelves of stone, the bones they held, skulls, and a couple of candles she brought and lit.

"Jennifer trying to get into my pants can be a little annoying, but other than that, I do like her a lot, and them." Othello was a nice guy, and he had a Carthian background too. Sometimes they talked about what it was like to be a rebel, fight the man, push for more rights. Aaron was usually a quiet guy, liked to read, made her think of a pale owl. Most Gangrel came across like angry dogs, but she supposed a Gangrel could emulate an owl too.

And Jacob. Bastard had a habit of saying things that grated on her, only for her to realize he was poking at the truth. He liked teaching her, but he also liked for her to learn things the hard way.

Her new family, and she did like them.

She smirked and licked her crocodile teeth as she grabbed a candle, and started to wander the deep halls of the catacombs. The Circle of the Crone would love this place, but their cavern off the edge of North Side was better, and even more metal. These catacombs were hers though, and if she was going to take a trip down memory lane, she might as well visit it too.

“First came here when I was, what, a month embraced? All alone, all the fuck alone.” Laughing, she went deeper into the furthest room the catacomb had to offer. It wasn’t a huge thing like the one in Paris, but it had enough to hold a few dozen coffins, enough for someone to get scared if they went all the way to the bottom. Where she normally hung out.

But now she hung out in the Crone cavern, or at Julias’s mansion.

“Julias.” She tapped a claw against one of her larger crocodile teeth. Being in his arms, feeling his kiss on her lips, waking up in his bed, getting into his bed, she loved it all. Wanted to feel more of him, listen to his voice, analyze the things he said; bastard loved to act dumb when he was actually really fucking smart.

If the Invictus started fighting the Carthians again, it would not be a good thing for Julias. Was she really trying to stop the two covenants from fighting, just cause she loved him? Ugh. Ugh! Objectivity out the window. Now she was being a juvenile brat who thinks their love is more important than lives.

It was easy to be a bitter asshole who wanted everyone else to die when she was alone. A lot of Nosferatu are alone, hideous and cursed. But now she had someone, and she was getting out of her shell, meeting people, making friends, being a sociable and productive member of Kindred society.

She laughed again, and set the candle down on one of the shelves. When had she become so introspective? What the fuck happened to her? Julias happened to her, the handsome bastard. Owed him a lot.

She blew out the candle, and headed out of the catacombs. Julias would be back at his mansion in a few hours, she should surprise him.

~~Antoinette~~

Weary, jaded, and as Jack would say, burned out, elders suffered such inevitabilities as they grew in years, and so too they suffered a growing bloodlust. Only a torpor of decades could settle the bloodlust into manageable levels, but she would not need such sleep for many years yet. Weariness and losing the joy of unlife, on the other hand, were a constant danger for her.

Jack was like fresh air on embers, rekindling her soul. She felt like a young woman once more.

The two of them were in her hot tub, the same room where her pool was. The room where Jack had first tasted the insides of Julee and Ashley, her cherished pets. Her two ghouls were not in her tower tonight, but in their apartment, sleeping hopefully. They needed rest from the frequent feedings; they had two feed two vampires now.

That was an interesting point. Her Jack did occasionally hunt on his own, but Antoinette was guilty of practically forcing her ghouls upon him, so they could experience the bliss of the Kiss during sex. And him, to experience the Kiss while within them as they succumbed to its pleasure. Kindred were not to feed on Kindred; they could not experience such bliss with each other. And she wanted him to feel such bliss that she once indulged in, centuries ago.

She relaxed back along the seat of the tub. The hot water was up to the underside of her breasts, and the jets massaged along her bare skin. To truly enjoy the tingling sparks of hot water on the skin, both she and her love had performed the blush of life, and were both letting the tub wash away their stress and woes.

Her mind wandered back to the Kiss, and how to enjoy it during sex. When she was ancillae during the 1600's, she had enjoyed every conceivable act of sexual bliss she could imagine. The memories were such hazy things, blurred from centuries of daily sleep and powerful dreams even her dragon coils could not completely settle. But she remembered some of her greater nights where she had experimented, let her desires guide her, pushed her limits to see what joy lay beyond convention.

At the height of her obsessive pursuits of sexual madness, she had fifty men and ten women at once, all night. Enough fluids and sexual pleasure to satisfy a nation, contained to a single night of ceaseless heat.

And it had left her hollow. Centuries more, pursuing greater delights had failed, and as she fell into her elder years, she found as many did that sex, contact, skin on skin, would never entice as it once could. But she was Daeva, and Ordo Dracul; to fight against such a fate came back to her with time.

But neither Daeva or her order were the source of her new delight. It was the boy, a small man, snuggled into her side with his lips wrapped around her nipple, that made her shiver.

While the water stopped shy of her nipple, it almost reached the boy's shoulders when he was sitting next to her. And it did when he'd decided to lean in, sneaky as a house cat, and began to kiss her breast. Jack's courage had grown, substantially, and she let out a low moan to encourage him as he suckled upon her and her areola. His skills had grown as well, and each time he set his lips upon her skin, she found his touch, his tongue, his suckling and licking, warmed her in mere minutes.

Without a word, she let her closer arm slip behind him so her hand could rest upon the back of his head, and cradle him to her breast as he fed upon her. He returned her touch with his own, arm reaching across her stomach to find her other breast, and began to caress along its underside beneath the waves. It was a dance they'd played many times before, but one of the few times Jack had initiated.

She melted into his kiss. Nothing for her to do, no guidance needed anymore, she was free to close her eyes, rest the back of her head against the tub's wall, and let the boy enjoy himself. And for her to enjoy it too. His constant, unending obsession with her breasts had been a delicious way to tempt, tease, and pleasure her lover, but with time, she found his kiss upon her swollen nipples more and more pleasurable. With each night they shared, her body ached with a growing need to feel his touch upon her skin, to feel his caressing tongue along her areola, and his lips pulling her into his mouth.

Her moans persisted, and no longer of her own choosing. Gentle waves of bliss, each a subtle but delightful shiver, danced along her breasts. The pleasure sparks started to build, spreading from her nipples and into her chest, each causing her inner muscles to gently clench with need. Never powerful, never sharp enough to bring her to orgasm, but consistent, tender, and playfully euphoric. Her moans grew deeper, quieter, and some turned into sultry purrs as she basked in the gentle fever of his kisses.

His lips ceased. She smiled, head still pointed up and her eyes still closed. Her skin was on fire, demanding something to touch her between her legs, and were she younger, she would have grabbed Jack's head and forced it under the water to satisfy her. But she waited. What would her lover do? She grinned, eyes still closed.

Jack began to move, and her hand upon his head moved with him. Oh, the little rascal. His lips found her other nipple, and she groaned as he bathed her puffed areola with his tongue. He'd gotten off the seat of the tub, and stepped around her leg before slipping between her knees so he could lean into her bosom from straight on. She let go of his head, hooked both hands onto the wall of the tub, and sighed.

Even her ghouls would be looking for her to touch them in return by now. But Jack, obsessed little Jack, seemed more than content to continue kissing her body, suckling on her, and massaging her. Every so often, he trailed his lips down from her nipple and onto the underside of her breasts, along their outsides, their insides, kisses planted along her sternum and collar, and up to her exposed neck as her head continued to tilt back and rest to the tub wall. His fingers drifted down her sides, touching and caressing the curves of her hips and waist, her legs and thighs, before they again drifted up to her breasts, cupping their weight and coddling them with light strokes along their contours.

Her nipples could not swell anymore, aching with the stimulus of his suckling, her areola standing tall from her alabaster skin. For so long, so blissfully long, the boy massaged her body, never rough with her, but growing a little firmer as time went on, until his suckling was strong enough to make her quiver. Playful fingers caught her exposed nipple, and pinched it lightly, barely more than a caress that twisted with a teasing, kneading motion.

Her sex begged to be touched, to put her over the edge, but she waited. She was ancient, and patient; to indulge the boy his obsession was a treat, for the both of them. That he could carry on for so long doing nothing but massaging and kissing her breasts surprised her, but when she looked down, his eyes were closed, an aroused, glowing smile danced on his lips, and every so often, he moaned into her skin. He was enjoying this as much as her.

So she smiled, leaned her head back again, and let him pamper her.

His hand upon her breast at last let go, and drifted down her stomach. Fingertips along her ribs, her navel, along her bare mons, and onto her clitoris. Swollen as it was, just the smallest touch sent powerful sparks into her body, and made her groan. She didn't raise her head though, more than content to feel rather than see what her lover would do to her. And the excitement of not being able to see only made it all the more delectable as Jack used two of his fingers to begin massaging her clitoris.

The climax tore through her quickly, and suddenly. She closed her mouth, tensed, and let the pleasure spike run down through her legs and up into her chest. Jack knew to cease his caressing and suckling as she came, and to keep his lips and fingers upon her too. The still contact and heat of his lips around her breasts, and his fingers around her clit, let her enjoy the tingling muscle clenches that ran down her spine and into her toes.

When the quivering past, she sighed, and relaxed once more with post-orgasm bliss.

Relaxation vanished as Jack slid his fingers down further, and into her squeezing insides. She almost raised her head to say something, but melted back into the tub seat as the boy switched breasts again, suckling her tender nipples as his fingers curled toward her g-spot. He wasn't done.

Her poor breasts, forever the fixation of the young man. Were she not Kindred, his almost nightly play would have left her sore, but come the day her body reset such minuscule irritation, and welcomed his touch every night with renewed desire. His dotting, loving, indulgent touch. She spread her legs, and shivered as she let the boy finger her pussy, until the pleasure waves started to build once more, deeper in her body. With his lips around her nipple, tongue caressing her engorged and puffed areola, the fingers within her caused the sparks of pleasure to meet, and fill her whole body.

A second orgasm took only moments. Jack's lips ceased once more, kiss still upon her breast, but holding still as she came. His fingers did no such thing, and they continued to curl and press against her inner walls, harder. Her back arched, her toes curled, and her mouth parted as the tingling pleasure coursed through her, each earning tiny muscle spasms that made her shudder. Jack only fingered her harder, enough to make her ass bounce lightly in the water as his digits slapped against her inner walls, and her insides squeezed like a vice.

It took effort to not look, to keep her head back, eyes closed, arms up on the tub wall, and simply let him finger her again, and again. Part of her wanted to grab his wrist, to give her a moment to recover. A different part knew to spread her legs more, and relax her inner muscles for a moment before clamping down on his fingers. Her wet, flowing orgasm lost to the hot water made her tremble, blanked her mind, and reduced her to a quivering mess as her squeezing insides tried to stop the boy's hand. But as they tried, Jack fingered her through her waves of bliss, and earned more squirting orgasms that filled her core with explosive, sweet agony.

Only once she'd risen and fallen upon several tides of bliss did the Ventrue stop. He let go of her body, her breasts, slid his fingers out of her, and stood up to look down at her; though, not down by much. He was a petite creature after all.

She raised her head, and smiled at the boy standing before her. He looked so proud of himself, beaming, and delectably cute.

"Merci," she said. "I had expected us to relax. That was the plan, non? To sit and let the warm water wash our troubles away."

"Yeah but, I mean ... damn." He gestured to her, all of her, no doubt eying how her body still quivered, and her nipples were still swollen.

She looked down through the water, and smirked. As the boy was standing in front of her, his erection touched the surface of the water, most of it submerged but standing at an angle. The water didn't hide how swollen it was, and how at some point the boy had peeled back the skin to expose the engorged head of his cock. He deserved a reward.

“Come,” she said, “relieve yourself however you wish.”

His smile brightened. “However I wish?”

“Indeed.”

“Uh ... um ... can you ... sink down a bit?”

Ah, she thought this might happen. With a wiggle and shift of her legs and butt along the tub seat, she sank herself down a foot, her lower body coming forward so she was sitting back at an angle. She let her arms fall into the water, and the waves of the hot liquid splashed along her collar. Low enough to have the water almost over her shoulder, Jack grinned down at her, leaned in, and stepped in closer between her legs.

Antoinette grinned up at him. Such a delightful body on her little lover. She set her hands on his legs, squeezed the hard muscle, and raised them to dig her fingers into his ass a bit. He squirmed a little, and she licked her lips in a slow, blatant manner as she gazed up at him while kneading the hardness she found; her little lover had a great derrière. Her hands roamed higher and back in front of him to touch his abdominal muscles, to trace the lines of his defined stomach, the navel, the Apollo's belt his small body carried wonderfully.

Her fingers found the scars of where Rebecca had stabbed him, unable to ever truly heal due to his embrace minutes later. Her eyebrows furrowed and her touch grew lighter. If she had known back then what she knew now, she would have ripped the girl open and set her aflame.

“You ok?” Jack said.

“Oui. Please, enjoy yourself.” She leaned back again, let her arms dangle beside her, and relaxed into the tub wall. Do not dwell on the past so much Annie, it ruins many an elder. And besides, the delight of your life is in front of you now, bathing you in both sexual pleasures and doting love at once. There was no reason to be upset.

She smiled to herself. None at all.

Jack leaned forward, put one hand against the tub wall behind her, and the other grabbed his shaft. From so close and leaning in, he had but to take a single step forward to press his cock against her breast, her nipple, and rub the red, swollen glans along her skin. She watched, eyes drifting up the lean form of the creature, and then back down to where his hand wrapped his girth. He was stroking himself as he caressed her breasts with his cock.

For a moment, she thought perhaps the boy would want her to help, to touch him, lick him, maybe tease and join in stroking his girth. But he looked positively enthralled as was, grinning one moment, jaw dropping in bliss the next.

“Can you press your breasts together for me?” he said.

More chuckles. Of course. She slid her fingers underneath her bosom and did as her lover asked, until her breasts overflowed her fingers, and created a large bed for the man’s member.

“It does surprise me my love, that you would prefer to cum here, when you could ask to cum within me.”

“Sorry! I ... just...” He groaned, his stroking growing faster as he slipped the head of his cock between her breasts, and pushed it into the squished walls.

The water, hot enough to almost sting, was a delightful sensation on the engorged, aching parts of the body. And while she was letting her arousal settle, no doubt the heat was providing the boy with a delightful combination of pleasure along his ripe shaft, and the swollen head that sat between her breasts. The boy probably thought such acts as lewd, lecherous, obscene, and that perhaps she would not indulge him his fantasies, no matter how many times she proved him wrong. She smirked to herself at the memory of a dozen men doing the same thing he was currently doing to her, at once. If only he knew.

But it wasn't the dozen men she wanted to touch her, it was the young man before her, the pleasure on his face palpable, the unabashed joy pouring off of him. To see his eyes drift closed with bliss, to hear his quiet groans, to feel his muscles flex in spurts with rising orgasm, it all sent warm waves through her body that made her lightheaded, and perhaps even a little giddy. Such was love, unearthed and laid bare.

Unable to stop herself, she started to knead her breasts together. A little force was all it took to massage the heavy, supple pillows against the ripe head of his cock. Jack's groans turned into little pants, and Antoinette grinned up at him and encouraged his masturbating with her rubbing presses of her skin along his glans. Water made for a poor lubricant, or the little Ventrue would have undoubtedly started to fuck her breasts properly. But there was a distinct tone and joy to simply letting him masturbating into her cleavage as she squished and rubbed her bosom along the plump head of his cock.

She let out a low growl mixed with a sultry moan as the boy started to fill her breasts with his cum; for his pleasure, of course. The sound of a woman moaning had power, especially over her little Ventrue, and she exploited it. Another moan, quieter, teasing, as she pushed her breasts together harder to catch the pooling cum that now coated along her sternum and where the pillows were squished.

Her poor Jack struggled to stay standing. He continued to masturbate, though he had only enough room on his length to stroke at the base of his cock. It was enough, and his frantic pace slowed to a slow crawl as he squeezed, milked his length, and pulled several more waves of his cum into her cleavage. The hot water helped wash it away, but much of the boy's fluids were trapped between her breasts, perfect for her continue massaging his twitching length.

As he finished, he slid his cock out of her, and she chuckled as she let her breasts go. He was still masturbating, drawing out those final drops of his cum, and with her arms at her sides once more, he was free to rub the head of his shaft along her breasts wherever he wished. Such a joy her little Ventrue. No matter how often, no matter what she did, the young man gazed upon her and her body with such ravenous need, he had no choice but to rub his cock along her breasts as if possessed.

He guided the twitching length along the undersides of her breast, let the weight of it rest upon his glans so its softness overflowed his cock and nudged his masturbating grip. Groaning, he moved his cock up onto her areola, and gently pressed his engorged glans against it as he squeezed his girth. A final drop of his cum found her, collecting along her hard nipple, before at last the boy let go of his cock.

Once he was done, she sat up so the water stopped at her sternum. Jack, smiling like a smitten kitten, sat down next to her again.

“God you must look amazing in a bikini.”

She laughed, and peeked down at Jack.

“Is that a not-so-subtle hint, little Ventrue?”

He grinned up at her, a cross between shy and coy. “Yeah.”

More chuckles. She would have to indulge his fantasy, later.

“How fair your hunts?”

“Ah, well, since Beatrice showed me a few tips, things are alright. Taught me how to trap someone in an alley, someone small enough for me to scare a bit.”

“Perfect. And gentler ways to feed?”

“Well, I can dominate a person easily enough with the discipline, but—”

“Without using a discipline.”

“I uh ... you mean ... seduce?”

“Indeed.”

Jack looked down, and squirmed. “Haven’t tried that yet.”

But of course the little Ventrue had yet to. And you are partly to blame, Annie.

“I know I said to not have sex with the kine, Jack, but you are permitted to seduce them. It is the way of many Kindred to lure unsuspecting humans into their arms, and to drink of them when their prey expects a kiss.” She touched him on the nose, and let her finger slide down to find his lip and chin before pointing his gaze back up to her. “Will you not try?”

“I, I mean, I could try, you know? Just don’t think it’ll turn out all that well. Not exactly a big guy, can’t pull off dark and sexy, can’t really do any of the things I'd need to do to seduce someone in a single visit to a bar or club. Not without using a discipline at least."

And it was true. Much of what attracted her to the little Ventrue were not the most obvious qualities to the typical social woman. Julias's were. The boy's sire could walk into a club, make eye contact without fidgeting a moment, and say hello to a stranger without a stutter or break in his voice. The confidence that so many women craved, her lover did not express. At least not on the surface; she knew his confidence was there, hidden underneath his squirmy anxiousness, fidgeting, and head rubbing.

He reminded her of Natasha. She did so enjoy the shy girl's thoughtful mind, and timid nature.

"Then, perhaps, I could help?"

"Eh? How?"

"My love, I will teach you in the fine arts of seduction."

"... what?"

~~Damien~~

From his tower well above the city, he looked through his telescope at the buildings below, a city he knew like the back of his hand. He knew the face of every Invictus and every Carthian. He knew the faces of their ghouls. He knew the locations they gathered for their secret meetings; hardly secret. He knew the underground network of tunnels and sewers better than any of them, lived and breathed them, made the forgotten undercity his home.

But he didn't know what tomorrow held.

Lead the Lancea et Sanctum in Dolareido? Could he do it? He knew how to teach the word of Longinus, preach to those who would listen, but the role of a proper bishop included more than that. It included political elements, dealing with contracts, places, permits, licenses. He didn't know how to do any of that.

He looked through the telescope at the windows of nearby buildings. He could see Jessy Herrington, a woman trapped in the 90's with her short blond hair and love for leather. Built though, tall, with enough muscle to her she could have been a professional fighter when kine. From tower eight, he could see through her window without issue, as the window was almost the size of the wall, and Jessy rarely closed the curtain. And like usual on her Saturday, and Monday, and Wednesday, and Friday nights, Jessy was standing in front of her window, naked.

Exhibitionism was a common trait in vampires. When you no longer have to worry about getting pregnant or impregnating someone, no menstrual cycle, no bowel movements, no urination, nothing, everything between the legs became free for sex all the time, every night, constantly. And vampires melted into it, latched onto it, women in particular. Not that the men didn't bathe in the debauchery of their new sexual freedoms; more like, the women joined them in total sexual obsession.

And that was fine. Kindred were not under God's rules for kine. Longinus's testament had different rules for the first dead. So, Damien shrugged, and looked through the telescope at the Gangrel. She was very attractive, no doubt about it, but her crass and dramatic attitude annoyed him. Too many 90's action movies.

Four ghouls joined her, men, tall with broad shoulders and defined abs. All naked, and all aroused. Damien rolled his eyes and pulled his face away from the telescope. Lucas had taught them that ghouls were kine, and kine were not to sleep with the dead. But, Lucas taught him a lot of things that were archaic and draconian, and he had to learn to let them go. So he looked through the telescope at Jessy, and watched as the blond woman put her hands against the glass, spread her legs, and let two of the ghouls get down on their knees around her. One began to devour between her legs from the front, the other from behind.

Ok, he may have to undo his sire's brainwashing, but that didn't mean he had to watch such a blatant orgy. Not that it wasn't an arousing sight to see the fit woman being devoured by two mouths between her thighs, but perhaps a bit too much for Damien.

He moved the telescope to Natasha's window. Closed curtain, but he could see her shadow cast upon it by her laptop.

Natasha. Such a little thing, fast with a pistol. And intelligent. He should talk to her, apologize to her properly, do something to alleviate the growing frustrations in his chest. Guilt was a heavy cross.

His mind drifted back to the conversation with Julias. About the future, about the Second Estate, about the Prince and Maria and...

The disappearing woman. Easier to focus on the disappearing woman than the future. Who was she? She didn't feel like Kindred, but there was no doubt something was strange about her. Every time he got near, he could feel the beast in his gut get ready for a fight. But, not like with other Kindred, where the animal within could recognize the other's, and size them up accordingly. His beast didn't know what to make of the redhead.

Plus, she kept disappearing. Literally. Only an elder would have such a powerful cloak of night to be able to hide from him, and elders didn't exactly grow on trees. Maybe she was of a unique bloodclan? Lucas had mentioned there were other bloodclans, rare offshoots of the primary five he was familiar with.

No. She was not a vampire. He smelled her blood, could see the skin pulse with life, and not fake life. She was alive, whoever she was.

Damien pressed his eye a little closer to the telescope, and smiled lightly at the sight of Natasha. She'd gotten up and moved her curtain aside. Like a typical vampire, she gazed out over the city, arms across her chest, face tense. Something on her mind too, no doubt. What sort of secrets was the Ordo Dracul showing her? Blasphemous concepts of mysticism, of science that questioned God.

Lucas talking in your skull again. Damien sighed, and forced the tightening knot in his sternum to relax. If you know it's Lucas talking, you can make the active decision to not act on it. Don't let a dead man control you.

"You're just trying to avoid dealing with the Lancea et Sanctum issue," he said to the night sky. "It'll be on your head this time. Your time, your hands, your efforts. Got to lay it out for the Prince to accept, and then you have to build the foundation from nothing. It'll take years of hard work."

He let his head fall from the telescope. Years of hard work, what a joke. He spent fifty years wasting his life on a cruel man's ambition; a few years spent on his own would be easy.

The problem wasn't the effort, it was the fear. Fear of failure, of his own weaknesses, of all the typical garbage that stopped someone from pursuing something they wanted.

He climbed down the ladder, and took the elevator back down to the street. His mind could wander while he looked for the mysterious woman.

---

Devil's Corner was the perfect example of everything his covenant wanted to fix. The Prince seemed content to live and let live, despite the growing cesspool of sin. But, that was an old reflex, to think this was her fault, and that she had the power to fix it; the reflex deserved to be reexamined. Antoinette would not be able to wave a wand and fix the ingrained life of over a million kine, after all, and that was Devil's Corner's population alone. Wouldn't hurt to give the local churches a little support though.

He smirked, and combed his half-shaved head's hair back with his fingers. Maybe, if Julias's motion passed, he could ask the Prince to aid the local churches of Devil's Corner? They had no Kindred roots, and were legitimately trying to help their neighborhoods with charity and benevolence. Respectful kine who deserved help, regardless of their religious motivations.

There was a busted streetlight up ahead, with a dozen men and women standing around it, smoking and talking. Tattoos, torn clothes, piercings, and an air of boisterousness that made nearby kine nervous. Damien walked past them, and give them a nod as he did. They returned it. Some recognized him, the stranger and bible thumper who occasionally helped deal with truly unsavory folk. A preacher who didn't mind getting his hands dirty, or bloody.

He kind of liked the reputation, juvenile as it was.

He let his legs take him through the city, into alleys, into the darker corners of the already sin-filled city corner. Part of him hoped he'd get mugged, so he'd have an excuse to tear someone apart. Maybe put the fear of God in them, if they were open to the concept. Perhaps he'd kill a rapist or murderer, hang their body on an alley wall, and leave a message in blood: for He cometh to judge the Earth.

Such shows of blatant violence rarely turned people to the church, but it would satisfy an itch in his head nonetheless.

He slipped into an alley, and bound his way up rusting fire exit stairways. Just a few seconds, and he was up on the rooftops, free to look down at the people below, and scan the streets for the disappearing woman. He drew his binoculars as well, and peered deep into the alleys of distant blocks. The cloak of night kept him hidden from anyone who bothered to look up, and let him observe people who thought they weren't being observed. Knowledge was addicting.

It took time drifting around, hours, checking alleys, more alleys, more alleys, and more alleys. And there was a good chance he wouldn't find the disappearing woman. She had a habit of disappearing after all. But many of the victims he'd discovered were drunks. Loud, angry drunks. A motif, perhaps?

He settled above some of the rowdier bars, and waited. Nothing to do but think about the Lancea et Sanctum, and Lucas, and God and Longinus, and—

There she was. Wow. Divine providence, saving him from his sinking thoughts? He stared through the binoculars, down into one of the alleys outside Joe's Hole.

No doubt about it, it was her. The woman was backing away from a man, deeper into an alley. Frizzy long red hair, a bit short, curvy, jeans, and an open brown leather jacket. Pretty, in a girl-next-door sort of way. He always did like how she looked, but he'd never been this close, never enough to see her freckles.

He focused his hearing as best he could, and tuned out the background noise of the distant street crowd.

"I didnae say that!" She backed away, one hand on her lips, one hand out in front of her to keep the drunkard at bay.

It wasn't working very well. The man, a big man with a balding head and stains on his t-shirt, chased after her, swaying with every step.

“I said get over here! Think you can shoot me down like that?” He threw his bottle to the shadow of the alley around him, and it shattered over torn garbage bags and rusting dumpsters. “Should teach you a lesson! Insulting me in front of my friends. The fuck does wee scunner mean?”

Damien choked on a chuckle.

“I didnae mean it! Just ... dinnae have be such a jerk, aye? Let me go, an’—”

“Shut up!” The man picked up a peice of wood from the asphalt, and started to tap it against his other palm. “I’m going to break your nose, then we’re going to have a little fun.”

The woman, panicking and squeaking, continued to back into the alley. Damien could almost see tears in her eyes.

“Stop! I ... I have ... tomorrow, I have ... ye’r blooterred, an’—”

The wood cracked her on the head, hard. She went down with a thud, body slumping to the ground before she started crawling away.

Damien hissed. He should intervene. But then, the girl might disappear the moment he jumped in; he’d have to wait a bit and see what happened.

Pouring his vitae into his cloak until he was nothing more than a wisp of shadow against a night sky, he put down the binoculars and jumped across the rooftops of bars and convenience stores. He had to be careful, the girl had good eyes and had spotted him a few times in the past. Back then, she’d squinted at him from a distance, and then ducked around a corner, only to vanish. This time, he wouldn’t underestimate her.

And it was easy to underestimate her. The drunk grabbed her jacket collar, lifted her up, and looked behind him. Not far enough from the streets, people could still hear. Deeper they went then, into the shadow of busted lights and handleless back doors. Only when no one would be able to hear muffled screams did the man pin the short girl against a wall by the neck, one hand around her throat, the other groping her breasts through the jacket.

Damien grit his teeth until his jaw clicked. He sat upon the building the redhead was pinned against, and stared down at the bastard and his blatant abuse. There was no excuse for people like him. He’d killed dozens of such lowlifes in his fifty years in Dolareido, but dozens was nothing in a city of millions. His sword sung its desire for blood, until Damien put a hand on its grip and readied himself. The girl was still squirming, groaning, and trying her best to fight off the big loaf molesting her.

She slapped him. The big loaf took a step, glared fury at her until murderous intent dripped from his limbs. But when he tried to yell, all that came out was a muffled word.

His mouth was covered in white webbing.

He blinked, hands reaching up to pull at the webbing, but it didn’t come off. Nose clear though, so he could breathe, and scream and yell through it, but the sounds weren’t loud enough to attract attention.

“Ye’v been a naughty wee jimmy, Mr. Tenmer. Abusive. Hurting folk wha dinnae deserve it.”

Mr. Tenmer, apparently, turned and ran off. But the man managed maybe five feet before a long slash of force cut through the ground in front of him. Something invisible, unseen, something massive and heavy that cut a few inches deep into the alley along the asphalt and the brick of the building opposite of the girl.

For a moment, for just a split moment, a giant, curved thing of black had struck out from the girl's position, and had rend the street and wall. But then it was gone.

What the fuck.

Damien stared down at the Scottish woman, and she stared ahead at the man. The crack of the cut asphalt had sent him back onto his ass in alarm. He raised his head to stare at the girl, eyes in a panic like hers had been. Sweet sweet revenge, her body language said as she smirked.

"I have to murder ye, Mr. Tenmer; ye dinnae deserve to live. Ye'r a minging excuse for a man." She stepped forward, and reached out for him.

The man bolted in the other direction. The alley was a four-way corner with building walls on every side, some of them with zigzagging. If the man ran, he could get out onto the street, and get away from her.

But again, maybe five feet before a monstrous claw-like shape erupted from the girl. Damien kept an eye on her this time, and his jaw dropped. She'd pointed her hand at the ground in front of Mr. Tenmer, but the shape didn't come from her hand.

From her back and over her head, like a hidden limb, a blurry, see-through wisp of sharpness snapped out, and sliced across the wall once more, cutting off his retreat. And cutting off significant chunks of brick and shattering asphalt. A spray of the debris landed upon Mr. Tenmer's fallen body, and he screamed through his nose as he got up and tried to run away again.

This time the girl stuck out her hand from underneath, like low-pitching a baseball. The enormous claw-like shadow appeared again from around her feet, and tore through the ground before stabbing into the man's leg. The sound of something visceral, hard, and angry piercing his calf muscle and shin bone was very real, even as the see-through appendage vanished once it'd made its mark.

The woman snorted, walked over to the fallen man, and picked him up. Up, like he weighed nothing, up by the shoulders where she squeezed. He tried to grab her, push her away, but two of the colossal spikes emerged from the quivering shadow, and skewered his shoulders, front to back. Again the man screamed, but the webbing prevented enough of the sound from escaping the alley into the bustling night streets of the local bars.

The claw-like shadows had come out of her back, gargantuan, seven-segment things that reached back before skewering forward, only to disappear once they had put holes through the man's shoulders and bones. Like insect legs maybe, curling back before stabbing forward as smooth, sharp blades.

The redhead ran her hands over his shoulders, and legs, and around and around. Webbing, lots of it, coated around his limbs and body. Seemed to stop some of the massive bleeding, far as Damien could see, but his body was also immobilized. Like a spider wrapping its prey.

Not an insect. An arachnid? But she looked perfectly normal! Normal, and yet, Damien's insides were ice, his eyes wide and jaw dropped, his inner beast reeling. What the fuck was going on? She wasn't Kindred, and Gangrel couldn't do any of this anyway.

The man fell to the ground, and the girl sighed before she reached down, and started dragging the bleeding fool along by his ankle. Dragging him toward the sewer. It'd all been a ploy to get the man alone.

Obvious, now that he thought about it.

“Much as I hate men like ye, Mr. Tenmer, I’m glad minging, abusive folk like yerself exist. Who would I eat otherwise?”

Damien kept low, low enough he had to peek his head up over the building roof edge to see the girl. Not normal, this wasn’t normal, something wasn’t right, what the fuck was going on. Every time he took a peek at her over the roof, cold ran down his spine, lead filled his stomach, one hand gripped the sword tighter, and the other forced himself to a complete standstill lest she notice him.

She wasn’t human, and she wasn’t a vampire.

He kept after her. Because he was an idiot. A curious idiot. The weakness of the Mekhet. His smirk was momentary, wiped away as he watched the blood trail left behind by the cocooned man. His head was exposed, and the abject fear in his soul was bared for Damien to see. Tears streamed down his wide eyes, and his cries never ceased. No one was coming to save him, and he knew it. Save him from what, he didn’t know.

The sewer manhole. The redhead reached down with her free hand, and lifted it just as easily as she was dragging the big man behind her. Each weighed two-hundred and fifty pounds easy, but a couple fingers into one of the holes, and she slid the thing out of the way. The man went in before her, lowered down until she could follow him in with him dangling from one of her hands.

The last thing he’d see of the topside world was the blood trail in a dark alley he left behind.

The girl pulled the manhole over them, and was gone. But not completely gone. Damien jumped down, light as mist, and squatted over the manhole. Ear to the iron, he listened, and waited. The girl said a few more things, Scottish colloquials he didn’t understand, some he did. But he could hear her, and that meant she was still around.

A minute later, he pulled off the manhole cover; took him two hands once he got his fingers into the holes. Holy shit she was strong. He shivered, and shook off the growing bits of ice along his skin. You're a Kindred, Damien, an undead creature of the night. Stop being afraid.

He crawled into the darkness of the sewers, sewers he knew well, and looked down into the black depths. There was noise ahead, some patter of feet on the shallow water on concrete. She hadn't vanished yet. Taking a deep, unneeded breath, he let go of the ladder and started along the path.

The sewers weren't the same when you had no light. Normally he'd have something, a little flashlight, a phone, something. He had none of these things, and even if he did, he wanted blackness. Kindred eyes could see much in near dark, but they saw little in total blackness. He had to put a hand out to the curved wall, and walk on the tips of his toes. At least he was wearing decent running shoes for quiet; black of course. No self-respecting Kindred would wear colorful sneakers.

He was making gains on her though. How she moved without a light source, he couldn't tell. How she moved through the sewers at all without getting lost, he didn't know. The underground network was massive, complex, a maze of modern connecting to archaic tunnels. You were lost without a map, or a few decades of experience. The little redhead didn't seem to mind or need either, and she continued along, occasionally stopping to yell a few more slurs at the man. Bawman, fud, dobber. Sounded like she was both happy, and upset.

Hard to be afraid of her, cursing like that. But he was. Before, from a distance, he hadn't felt anything out of the ordinary, anything weird except for the odd texture to the air in places she disappeared. Now, every step closer put weights on his feet. The beast in his gut was screaming at him to turn around.

But he kept moving, because he was an idiot, and that's what idiots do.

The tunnel curved around and caught some light, a bit of flicker from a grate opening above. Her shadow ran along the shallow water and the curve of the sewer wall, and it looked human enough. Looked human. The guy covered in spider webbing disagreed.

“Friend of a friend told me a Mr. Tenmer liked to hit women, men too, wee ones. Like to throw yer weight around, pick on folk.” The humor in her voice was gone, replaced with an edge. “Folk like ye deserve to be punished.”

She went past the grate, and into the darkening tunnel beyond. Where the sewers connected between North Side and South Side was a change in architecture, as the older half of the city met with the newer half. Much as Damien rarely ventured into the North Side underground network, with as little to offer as it did compared to South Side, he had on occasion. And that's where they were going.

Or that's where they should have been going. But he didn't recognize the tunnel ahead. It was dark, the tunnel a bit larger than he remembered, and quieter. Normally there'd be some machinery to hear, but all was quiet, as if a heavy blanket had been laid across the city streets to block it out.

He tripped.

Too quiet, too dark, he fell forward onto his hands, complete with a bit of a splash in the water, and an obvious sound to match it.

“Damn!” The redhead stopped, threw her eyes back his way, and looked through the darkness at him.

Damien had to squint, and only the tiniest bit of light along the water from the open grate above let him see her enough to know she was looking at him. Straight at him.

“Vampire!”

She threw the massive man onto her tiny shoulder, and ran into the black.

Damien stood up and ran after her. She knew he was a vampire with just a glance, and where he'd fallen, there wasn't a scrap of light. How did she know? What was going on? His light feet almost skipped the water as he sprinted, while hers made heavy thuds, each landing hard with a big man on her shoulder.

Or at least they did, but as he ran after her, the sound of her footsteps splashing turned into muted splashes and the groan of opening mud. Mud? A second later, he almost tripped again as the toes of his sneakers sank into the wet earth. And then he did trip again when they caught on something sticking out along the ground, high enough to get his foot under, low enough so he flew over it and landed onto his hands and chest and face.

Mud greeted him. Soft soil, with bits of spongy things that crumbled when he pressed down on them. He raised his hands and wiped off his face and shirt as best he could, but it was all soaked to the skin with warm water and dirt and twigs and bugs.

He grabbed one of the little twigs and held it out in front of him. Enough moonlight cut through the new darkness for him to see; yep, a twig, covered in mud and insects. Which seemed kind of normal for a sewer, except for the amount of mud. And the chirping insects and birds.

Damien quirked a brow, and slowly stood up as he looked around. Moonlight penetrated through the dense array of black limbs above, like a canopy of a jungle.

He blinked, and looked behind him. He'd tripped on a vine.

He gulped, and looked in front of him at the ground. The mud left an imprint of where his body had smacked into the soil, and around it were twigs and vines, much of it decomposed so it was soft enough to crumble upon touch. When he kicked out with his foot to move aside a rock, a myriad of crawling things scattered from their upturned refuge, and vanished into the underbrush that surrounded him.

Chirping, bird calls, insects, distant high-pitched howls, it all filled his ears as he drifted forward into the ... the ... jungle?

He turned around. There was no tunnel, only a black wall of shadowy, dense trees and God knows what, and a spread, convex section of trees that could act like a path if one wanted to walk through it. But it was a forest, not a tunnel; it only looked like a tunnel.

The heat was like fire on his undead skin, and the humidity drenched him along with the mud water. A breeze swept past, dense with the smell of trees, rotting leaves, fecal matter, and the heavy moist air made each scent stick to his nostrils. And clothes. And skin.

“What ... in God’s name...” He took more steps forward, and into a sliver of light that cut through the black ceiling of branches and leaves. It was moonlight like he thought, but the canopy wasn’t his imagination playing tricks on him, it wasn’t actually the sewer grate, the sounds weren’t actually pigeons, crows, and city crickets, and the smell wasn’t human shit.

He was in a jungle.

He drew his sword, and crept forward along the wet jungle floor. Every step required a glance down, and he made each one with his toe first, testing the earth he could barely see. The only light he had was what little moonlight reflected against the soaked leaves above. The only guide he had was moving in the opposite direction of where he came in.

His foot touched something more solid, at least for a second, before it cracked and gave way. His body tensed hard, pulled his foot away, and looked down. A skull, half buried in the soil, and soft enough for his sneaker toe to break in the forehead.

And more skulls. He squatted down and poked at them with his sword. The bones were discolored, rotted and soft, and several cracked from the slightest pressure. A couple did not. A valley of skulls, and only skulls, with centipedes the size of his sword climbing through their eye sockets and out from underneath their jawless mouths. Why only skulls? He looked up again, and winced.

Bodies. A lot of bodies. A dozen in view, each a silhouette against the canopy, each wrapped in spiderweb, each with clothes still on, clothes you'd expect from city dwellers, from people in Devil's Corner.

His heart wanted to beat faster, but it couldn't. His lungs wanted to seize and constrict, but they couldn't. Only saving grace from a panic attack; he was already dead. That didn't change that he could feel the sickly warm of the water around those skulls and mud soak into his shoes. He could smell the blood in it too, once his nose adjusted to the rot and foliage.

"It followed me," the darkness whispered.

Damien spun around, sword out and cutting through vines. No one there. The voice held a hiss to it, a layer of rasp over top another human voice. But it didn't sound like the girl. The accent sounded ... Portuguese? Almost, but not quite.

Focus, you dumbass!

Damien started to back up, but the trees and black changed with the breeze, vines swaying for only a moment, but a moment enough to destroy what little sense of direction he had. He glanced down to find his footprints, eyes in a frenzy, looking in every direction between scanning glances to find the mud that marked his path.

“Vampire,” it said, “you ... you followed me. Vampire!”

Louder, the voice cracked against the trees, and he jumped to turn around again, slashing at the black. Nothing.

“I ... I followed a redheaded woman,” he said.

“Me!”

The blackness struck back. A long blade of onyx snapped through the space between the trees and vines, aimed for his chest.

He ducked. Mekhet reflexes kicked in, vitae pumping through his husk, but the massive limb cut across his shoulder and sliced along the flesh and bone. His shoulder split open a couple inches deep, and he fell backward, rolling onto the ruined arm. Pain tore through him, made him scream into the bones and mud around him.

“Stop!” He forced himself back up to his feet, and started running. His arm dangled on muscle and torn tendon, each step sending searing pokers through his flesh and into his fingers. Holding onto the arm with the other arm didn’t help much, and his good shoulder crashed against trees and brush as he tripped again. Skin tore like saran wrap as his ruined arm smacked against another tree.

He was going to die. In a fucking jungle.

No light, dropped his weapon, arm dangling on exposed tendons and bone. He couldn’t see anything except for a bit of moonlight against the muddy puddles he was soaking in. Dirt and rock ground into the exposed flesh, and bugs buzzed around it and his face.

Kindred blood was thick and heavy, and it stuck to his wound like liquid glue, but it did nothing for the pain of pebbles rubbing on severed muscle.

He could hear something move. Twigs snapped, vines rustled, and the canopy shifted, letting bits of moonlight sneak in through the dense branches and leaves above. A hiss, a snarl, getting closer.

Up, up, get the fuck up! Get the fuck up and get moving.

He pushed against the ground with his arm, ignored the scorching agony of his opened shoulder, and started running again.

He got maybe ten feet before something caught his body. Something soft but strong, a rope like a vine across the chest, and stomach, and legs. Across his face. He tried to pull away, but it stuck to him, gripped against his clothes and skin and hair. What the fuck what the fuck what the fuck. He couldn't see it in the black, until the rustling mass above him pushed aside the canopy for a moment, enough for moonlight to strike the white threads.

A spider web.

He pulled against it, but he couldn't anchor his weight against anything, feet no longer rooted to the muddy ground. He twisted and turned, and screamed, jaw wrenching against the thread as the web pulled back against his ruined arm. The bone wasn't in the socket anymore, and it twisted into the coiling white until he thought his arm was going to tear off.

He was going to die.

“Vampire.” The voice drifted around him and over him, still a hiss with snarls layered underneath it, and a woman's voice underneath that; but not the redhead's.

There were no shadows; everything was already black. The only light was the occasional flicker of moonlight, each giving him a tiny glimpse of his surroundings. Of the thing approaching him.

It moved on long, smooth, black blades, or legs? He squinted through the black and stared at the long blades, each segmented at several feet with ... joints. Legs, very long legs. Well, that made sense, with the webbing he was currently trapped in, and the webbing the girl had cocooned Mr. Tenmer with. He was going to die to a giant spider monster.

Lovely.

Chapter 27

~~Antoinette~~

“Oh god oh god oh god.”

Jack, trembling and ready to sweat — though thankfully unable without the blush of life — looked out over the crowd. The two of them were in Bloodlust, one of her fonder establishments to enjoy. The pulsing music, and the dark red lightning with the occasional white light strobe made for a combination of sinister, sexual, and theatrical visual stimuli. Everyone in Bloodlust felt as if they were partaking in a movie.

Everyone except her poor little Terry, who more likely envisioned himself trapped in a comedy for his current predicament.

The two of them sat on the ground floor this time, in one of the booths near the bar. Her lover was wearing a button-up white shirt, black pants, a loose, black jacket, and some nice Chelsea boots. She spoiled him with her shopping, and so did Julias, but the boy was utterly incompetent with fashion. That was ok, she enjoyed dressing her man. She had undone the first few buttons of his shirt as well, to expose his lovely skin and a little of his muscle. As much as her Jack felt self conscious over his size, he was a lean and strong little creature.

“You uh ... really want me to do this?” he said, once he’d leaned in so he didn’t have to yell. It was a club after all, and while perhaps not as loud as many, still loud.

“Yes. As we practiced.” Winking, she pointed to the bar, and to one woman in particular. “She will make for fine prey.”

“Ok ... ok. Ok, I can do this, I can do this.” He stood up, rubbed his buzzed hair a few more times, and walked toward the bar.

Oh her little Ventrue. He did not notice how he swayed a little with his walk, how he cast nervous glances, how every motion spoke volumes of his anxiety.

But he went, and that was something.

They had talked much, her and her love, about how to approach women. The art of eye contact, the subtle smile, the push and pull of body spacing. She explained to him how to thread conversations, pull a woman’s — or man’s if one wanted — interest into a story. How to break the ice with gentle humor, or with a tactful use of criticism; a little insult with a coating of intrigue worked well to disarm a stranger. She taught him how to look for signals that the boy seemed utterly blind to: adjusting the hair over the ear, turning to face you, smiling with the eyes.

It was a dance for women, and men did not learn it easily, Jack more so than most. But it was a skill she felt he should learn, and trusted him to learn. What would happen if Jack was left without enough vitae to perform the Ventrue discipline of domination? Unless he was willing to wrestle and pin a kine, seduction was the most common second option.

And besides, she found it oddly enjoyable to watch her love squirm as he approached the stranger. Perhaps she did have a bit of a sadistic side? How drôle.

The stranger was a woman of similar height to the little Ventrue, a sharp chin, and long blond hair with streaks of blue, though lost to the red light of the club. A thin thing, barely a curve to her, but Antoinette could see in the girl’s posture, in how she sipped her drink and looked about, that she was an experienced woman. On the prowl, perhaps. She was wearing a black dress meant for a club, with a short skirt split at the thigh, and tiny straps for shoulders. Simple, elegant, but sexy and refined. She knew what she liked. The perfect prey for Jack.

Jack, fidgeting and squirming, stood beside her and met her eyes. The stranger returned them, and looked him up and down for a second. The face first, and then the shoes. She liked what she saw, as Antoinette knew she would, and she turned to face the boy more. Eye contact, with one brow raised. Just a hint, just a small thing, but the Prince could see the spark of intrigue in the woman's face as she looked little Terry in his green, beautiful, honest eyes. She was interested in him, his cuteness, in how odd he looked in the setting of a club.

Jealous, Annie?

Daeva are jealous of everyone and everything; curse of her bloodclan, to desire. She knew better than to let it control her. And Jack needed to learn.

Jack rubbed his buzzed hair, and made a remark, something about the music from what little Antoinette could read of his lips. Of course. But it was enough to make the girl laugh, and she turned to face him fully, still in her seat. And as she laughed again following another remark, Jack laughed, and reached out to lightly touch her hand in the sharing of laughter.

And that was it. A little physical contact from someone you thought was appealing, intriguing, and it was over. As long as Jack did not say anything colossally offensive or foolish, the girl would grow more and more fond of him, until he could deliver the twist: he had a lover, and was looking for someone to join them.

Perhaps an unnecessary trick in his bag, now that she was watching him. The plan had been for him to use Antoinette as a spicy treat for an interested kine, to propose a threesome for them to enjoy. And once the prey was in their booth, she would be easy to drink. But the Prince had chosen their target well, and Jack's disarming, genuine dialogue and expressions were working beautifully.

Her eyes jumped from her love to the door past them, and her joy faded away. The evening was coming to a short end then. Such a shame.

Daniel. The man could not have looked more out of place, still in his trench coat, still wearing his dull glasses. If only he would listen to her, and dress for his outings. But no, the stubborn man refused to listen. It was charming, in an infuriating way.

He walked past everyone at the bar, past the various tall tables with people standing around, drinking, talking. Not even a glance for the kine. Her sheriff walked past the booths and into the main area, where the booths lined the walls before the dance floor. Annie laughed at the image of Daniel dancing. Could he? Was it something the machinery of his mind could perform? More chuckles.

Jack didn't notice him, too busy with his prey; they were both quite enraptured with their conversation. The boy looked elated, shocked by the ease of his task no doubt. Perhaps she had unlocked a new, social side to him? Alas, it would fade she was sure, once they left the club. But, that was a good thing, was it not Annie? As much as you wish to teach him the skills he needs to survive, less time spent seducing kine, more time spent with you, was a good thing.

Or are you just concerned he will become another Tony?

Daniel sat down next to her, adjusted his glasses, and set his elbows upon the table, fingers netted together and placed under his nose. Ready for war by the looks of him, but that was as always with her sheriff.

“Yes Daniel?”

“Annie. Azamel has returned.”

Straight to the point then. Antoinette sighed and combed her hair back.

“Azamel has returned? Why?”

“I don’t know. She says she wants to talk to you personally, in her home.”

Her home? Another leech content to suckle on the marrow of Antoinette’s hard work, of her city, of her triumphs.

“She has gall.”

“Indeed.” Daniel leaned over the table a little ways to look through the dark red of Bloodlust to Jack. “Your love seems to be committing adultery.”

She looked back over at Jack, who was having a pleasant conversation with the stranger. Certainly not adultery, but she knew Daniel was teasing her. He said it without a smirk or smile though. He would be a genius comic, if he ever pursued the craft.

“You came here to tell me of Azamel?”

“Athalia seemed insistent. I can see her myself if you wish?”

“... want a moment with Athalia alone, old friend?” she said. Daniel twitched. A slight thing, a subtle shift of the eyebrow, but it was more than he normally gave, and Antoinette smiled her best devil smile with her victory. “We should go now, before Azamel comes to think that she is welcome. Egotistical woman.”

“What of Jack?”

“Yes, I should wait for my love to finish, but I must also deal with Azamel immediately.” She tapped her finger against her lips. What to do what to do. “I will be along shortly Daniel, maybe twenty minutes. Azamel can wait a little while longer.”

“As you wish.” The man nodded, got up, and walked out of the bar as simply as he had entered. He knew how to balance the cloak of night so the eyes of others glazed over him, slipped off of him, and let him pass by without notice. A talented man, her sheriff.

Antoinette looked back to Jack. He glanced her way a couple of times, no doubt waiting for her signal. Laughing, she raised a hand, and motioned for him to come join her. That was the plan after all, for Jack to propose the three of them get to know each other intimately. Once the kine was securely enthralled and in the booth, Jack could kiss her neck, and then Kiss her neck.

And it was going according to plan. The Prince was shocked. She loved her Jack, but seducing a kine on first approach? To see it happening made her laugh, and she smiled her Princely smile as Jack walked over to her with the woman following behind.

“This is your friend? Daaaaaamn.” The girl slid into the booth and stared at her. She had a tattoo on her neck, one Antoinette had not noticed from her angle earlier. And from how the woman was speaking, she was more than a little drunk. Perhaps that had been the key to Jack’s success?

“Hello,” Antoinette said, grinning her devil’s grin at the woman.

“This is Alex,” Jack said, sliding into the booth. “She listens to that god awful dubstep crap.”

Alex punched the Ventrue in the arm. “Sorry my stuff makes you want to move your body, instead of put in earplugs.”

A bit of that playful banter Jack enjoyed, when criticizing. Bite. Antoinette liked that.

“Have you been enjoying the conversation with my love?” she said.

“Love eh? Didn’t uh ... didn’t think kid here was serious when he pointed you out. I mean ... damn.”

Antoinette slid in a little closer to the prey. Jack did the same once he realized, and the Prince could see the anxiety fade, replaced with hunger.

“Quite serious.” Close enough for her leg to be touching Alex’s, Antoinette got in closer still, so the stranger was pressed against her. She hooked her arm around the back of the booth as well, to completely trap their prey.

Jack got in closer as well, and smiled a devious little smile of his own. Such a rascal, when he felt comfortable.

“I uh ... Jack wasn’t kidding eh? About you two looking for a third for the bedroom.”

“Truth,” she lied.

Alex laughed, a warm and fun sound. There were small sways in her movement, in her fingers, and her eyes had trouble focusing. Pleasantly drunk no doubt, and riding the waves of courage such levels of alcohol brought.

The prey adjusted her hair over her ear and smiled up at Antoinette, but it was Jack she offered a true smile. More interested in the small man, perhaps, now that his story about his date turned out to be true.

Antoinette tapped a finger on her lip, before settling the hand on the table in front of Alex.

“It is.” Not a fake name, but a part of her had considered them, a fun way to add some spice to their little hunt. At the same time, it was interesting to share her real name with prey; it had been a long time since she had hunted normal prey at all.

Experiencing the thrill of youth through her little Terry. Shallow of her perhaps, but Jack enjoyed it, and she enjoyed it.

“Jack and Antoinette eh? Pleasure to meet you. I uh ... so you two ... you’re looking for ... a little more fun?” Alex looked nervous, now that Jack and Antoinette were both leaning in toward her. A rabbit between two foxes? No, much as she was starting to glance between the two of them with faster eyes, and her breathing was getting faster as well, her skin was starting to flush, and her small breasts poked against her dress.

Antoinette looked to Jack. Let the boy lead. It was his hunt, after all.

“Yeah,” Jack nodded. His eyes were looking the girl up and down, but not with the lust of a drunk or high clubgoer, no. Antoinette knew that look from long ago, the ravenous hunger that worked through the body the closer you grew to your prey. Like a salivating wolf. “And we both thought you looked beautiful.”

Ah, the direct compliment. Bold, and too much when strangers. Just right, when the ice was broken and intrigue had rooted.

“Beautiful?” Alex said. “You’re just saying that.”

Alex glanced up to Antoinette, and Antoinette grinned at the prey. The woman was clueless as to what was happening to her, no doubt surprised at the sudden luck to be invited into the bedroom of two handsome strangers. And she did not move away from Jack; if anything, she was craning her neck more for him to find it.

Antoinette leaned in closer. She wanted to see this.

Jack, following Antoinette's teachings, put a little kiss on the girl's neck. She went stiff for a moment, a split second of indecision, before the combination of alcohol, arousal, and the power of present circumstances melted her into the booth seat. She looked up at Antoinette, blush growing, nipples hardening, and her hands drifted around until one found Jack's leg.

A touch of jealousy once more for Antoinette. But, Jack was not Tony. He would not sleep with his prey, would not indulge his sexual desires without her, his love. She could trust him, wholly, completely. Such was love. All Antoinette had to do, was stop thinking about the bastard her love had killed, and instead, focus on the pleasure before her.

When Jack finally opened his mouth, and set his fangs upon Alex's neck, Antoinette moaned quietly, lost to the noise of the club music, and the noise of Alex's own moan. The prey gasped once the moan was done, only to moan again as Jack suckled upon the woman's neck.

"Oh ... god..." The prey met Antoinette's gaze, and the Prince smiled as she returned it. The delight of watching kine succumb to the Kiss, of their bodies going limp, of the relaxing bliss that washed away every tense muscle, every sore joint, every worrying thought. There was such joy on her face, with her mouth open and her breath turning to pants.

No words needed, no explanations required. Humans melting into the Kiss were as concerned with explanations as anyone mid orgasm. Such things became irrelevant against the simple pleasures of the body, of finding your energy gone and your mind lulling you into gentle sleep with the waves of contentment. Some, such as

Alex, started to touch themselves, unable to resist the pleasure. One of her hands pressed to her chest, weak touch and wavering hand groping her breast and nipple through the thin fabric as Jack drank her.

But her aroused and delightful play lasted mere moments. Her hand fell, and her eyes drifted closed. Only then did Antoinette tap Jack on the shoulder, and smiled.

“Did you enjoy that, my love?”

The boy lifted his fangs from the woman’s punctured neck, offered it a couple licks to heal the wound, and wiped his mouth with a finger. There was exhilaration in his eyes, pupils dilated, fangs out and long. The smell of blood on his tongue.

“Wow ... she um ... wow.”

Alex had fallen into the typical post-Kiss coma, breathing deep, head heavy against the booth seat.

“You succeeded.”

“I ... I did, didn’t I? Didn’t use dominate on her or anything.”

“Impressive. And you looked like you enjoyed yourself. Perhaps there is a social side to you yet my love?”

Jack chuckled and rubbed his head. “I like socializing! Sometimes. With you, and Julias, and ... yeah.”

“The unlife can be long, little Ventrue. Learn to find friends where you can.” Or you’ll turn into Jacob. “But, you did succeed. With but a few jokes, some pleasant conversation, a smile, and eye contact, many women would be more than willing to talk with you.”

“Sure it didn’t have anything to do with me telling her I had a girlfriend, and we were looking for a third member for the bedroom?”

“Did she not seem intrigued before then?”

“I ... I mean, I guess she got interested when I started talking about music.”

Silly boy. She reached out, and stroked her love’s ear, Alex between them and almost snoring.

“Learn to be confident when speaking, and women will find you appealing. Speak to women as people, instead of legs and breasts, and they will find you intriguing. The combination is the key, little Ventrue, to seduction.” She tapped her lip with her finger, and hmmm’d. “That said, everyone is different. Some women do prefer to be approached with a more sexual tone. Some women prefer to be seduced over several days or weeks, rather than moments. To read the signs before your approach is another key to the game.”

“The game. Not exactly a strong suit of mine.”

“You will learn, my love. You will learn.” And he would. Jack was, as Minerva would say, cute as a button. “I do hope you will not abandon me for such frivolous exploits.”

For a moment, a split second of shock, Jack’s eyes widened. But as he realized she was teasing, his eyes settled and his smile grew.

“Never.”

Smirking, she looked back to the sleeping woman.

“It is no wonder so many Kindred become addicted to sex in their younger years, non? But a Kiss and she is defeated in bliss. If you had wanted, you could have stopped the Kiss early, left her exhausted but awake, and very aroused. A whisper, and she would have climbed into your lap, slid your shaft into her wet insides, and relaxed upon you as her ripe body forced her to cum with but the smallest thrust. She would drench you, soaking you in her juices as you rocked her hips back and forth. Some of the other people nearby would come closer to watch, drawn by the quiet whimpers and mewls of the woman trapped in pleasure. Only once you had filled her with your own fluids would you bite her again, and in the darkness of the club, be free to drink her a second time, until she was a trembling mess. She would slip into a deep sleep, but not before her clenching insides had her cum dripping down your testicles. Then, you would ease her off of you, set her next to you, and with your cum-soaked shaft resting against your abs, you would smile at the nearby onlookers. One of them, a more daring woman, one enjoying a delightful mix of drugs and alcohol perhaps, would slip off her underwear, pull up her dress to the hip, slide into the booth next to you, and sit on your cock. And you could enjoy it again, indulging in pure gluttony as you drank a second woman for the night, until your belly was full, your beast satisfied, ears buried in the sounds of her pleasure, and your body singing with the joy of the Kiss and orgasm combined.”

Jack’s jaw had dropped open at some point in her little story, and his cock pressed hard to his pants. If she had had the time, she would have played the role for him, slid off her underwear, climbed his lap, and milked him dry. But, even with little time to spare, his blatant arousal was her own doing, and she should help him.

Grinning her Daeva grin, she slid out of the booth, walked around, and slid in beside him.

“I know that grin,” he said. “You ... you uh...”

She put a finger to his lips, and slid it down his chest to his pants. The poor boy’s crotch looked tight enough to be painful, and she could not have that. With grace and precision, she undid his button, eased the zipper down, and slipped her hand into the fabrics.

Jack blinked, several times, and his eyes wandered the Bloodlust club with a touch of panic. People could see what she was doing, even if the booth table blocked a direct line of sight with her hand from distant onlookers. But people near the sides of the booth could.

Poor Jack was helpless to stop her, trapped between lust and panic, eyes darting around over the club, the people dancing, the couples in other booths. And some eyes were indeed cast their way, as she slipped the boy's cock out through the flap of his underwear, and started to stroke him.

“People ... they're uh ... looking at us.”

“Let them look. This will take but a moment.”

She didn't necessarily wish to indulge in exhibitionism like many Kindred did, but a little taste every once in a while was fine, and it was a first for Jack.

She blew him a little kiss, and lowered her head down to his shaft. His went rigid, no doubt surprised, and she smirked as she put her lips to his cock while enabling her blush. His body full of fresh blood, his blush had already begun, and she was free to begin milking her love. A little moistness to help expose the ripe, swollen head of his shaft, and then her lips found it all. Her tongue caressed along the base edge of the bulbous tip, and lapped up the precum already forming. Her story had aroused her love greatly.

He was squirming. Poor boy. She smiled around his shaft, and worked faster, stroking the base of him harder while suckling, pulling, kissing the tip. More precum spread along her tongue, and she worked it along the engorged flesh filling her mouth. It must have been quite the sight for anyone who decided to watch, the taller woman giving a blowjob behind the booth table to the small man. And his facial expressions must have been delicious.

He started to pant, his cock started to flex in her mouth, and a moment later, his cum started to flood her. She drank it down, and slid her lips back and forth along the edge of his glans between each spurt, driving him close to painful stimulation but never reaching it. Perfect for encouraging his groans, his twitching, and milking every last drop of cum from his length.

She sat up, adjusted her hair, wiped her lips with a finger, and kissed her love on the cheek.

“Far be it from me to tempt you with tales of sex with the kine, and then leave you aroused, surrounded by kine.” She pat her finger on his cheek. “While other Kindred will indulge sex with kine in ridiculous excess, I hope I can keep you satisfied.”

“I ... oh god, you do! But, I mean, even if you didn’t ... I wouldn’t do something like that. Never without you.”

“You would not, I know.” And it was true. He would not, her little Ventrue, honest to a fault. She loved him for it. “Now, fix your jeans, and let us be off.”

Alas, she had trouble to squelch. So, she leaned in, kissed the boy’s lips, and motioned them toward the exist. A smile and a nod later, the two stood up, and began to walk out of Bloodlust.

“She going to be ok?” he said while gesturing to the unconscious woman in the booth.

“She will awake in several hours, and with the amount of people nearby, she will be fine. Come.” A hand on her lover’s back, the two stepped out into the street. “I am sorry Jack, but I must go.”

“Go?”

“Indeed. Daniel has requested my aid, and my duties cannot be squandered.” Much of her time that had once been spent plotting, scheming, was now spent with Jack. While her joy in her unlife had increased dramatically, so too had its risks with her neglecting her role. Lucas’s kamikaze attack on her tower had been a perfect example.

Kindred did not kamikaze. That was simply not a thing they did. Kindred fought, manipulated, controlled, built, and conspired to gain every advantage they could in insuring their second life, their food sources, their power. Not in five hundred years of her embrace had she ever seen such an absurdity from a vampire! She was a fool for thinking it an impossibility though. And now that she had her precious Jack to protect as well, she would have to make changes. A vault in her tower that could protect herself was no longer sufficient. She had to be proactive once more.

And that meant dealing with Azamel, now. One of many things she would have to do sooner rather than later.

“I have been eating up a lot of your time, haven’t I?” he said.

“Oui, but that is my burden to bear, little Ventrue, not yours. I would love to talk more, but I must go. Shall I see you in a few days?”

“Unless the Invictus tie me up and pin me with a job, a few days it is.”

---

Antoinette and her sheriff walked down into the subway tunnels of her city. It had been some time since she had walked these tunnels herself. Not since during the purge had she run their lengths, hunting and killing the bishops, searching high and low for Lucas so she could rip his insides out through his mouth. But the labyrinth of tunnels had grown into its own city for its size; and the city had cockroaches.

Not the Nosferatu, they were not the insects that plagued the undercity. Poor unfortunate souls. When they saw her and her sheriff, they disappeared into shadows and other tunnels, some giving a gasp of shock at the unexpected visit. There were perhaps thirty, maybe forty Nosferatu who chose to live their second lives in the tunnels of her city, the ones with extreme deformities, and she gladly let them. Other Nosferatu, ones with smaller deformities, or ones strong enough to hide themselves in plain sight, walked the streets of Dolareido, but down in the tunnels, the rest of their brethren lived.

But, as Maria showed, you could work past your deformities, and become something more, with time.

Her mind wandered, and she could not help it. How rare it was to be on an outing with her sheriff anymore; quite rare, since her fingers had grown long and rooted into the corporations of her city. Xnomina did not know which corporations she controlled, which banks, which facilities, which companies, and they did not know which kine she had enthralled into her service. Many services did her bidding, some willingly, some not, some unknowingly. During the purge, she had brought hundreds of kine to her side, police officers in particular, armed and ready to fight the Lancea et Sanctum at her whim.

And they did fight. And it had been bloody. Many kine had died, as many as Kindred, and in the end, such souls were mere sheep lost in the crossfire.

Would Jack think her cruel, if she indulged him such secrets? Would he look at her the same way if she explained that there were dozens of kine in the city enthralled in her spell, serving her, risking their lives? Well, few lives risked since the purge. But that did not mean her kine were so lucky as to escape notice from spying Invictus or Carthian eyes on occasion. Some had lost limbs or kneecaps in such dealings. All for her.

She did not normally feel guilt. An antiquated emotion for an elder. And yet with Jack, with his terribly honest soul, she did feel it when her thoughts drifted toward her role as Prince. How—

“Annie?”

“Ah. Apologies, my friend. You were saying?”

Daniel raised a brow, barely, before he pointed his small flashlight down toward the older tunnels.

“Athalia said Azamel would be hanging out at the stage beneath Morning Street.” A flick of the wrist lit the tunnel. “This way.”

She turned and followed beside him. The stage was one of the earlier, deeper areas Viktor had built, a place where he could speak over a crowd when he wanted, before the Kindred had found ways to stay above ground in Dolareido.

A smile forced its way onto her lips. There was a time when she, Viktor, Tony, her lovely Daniel, and Jacob had sat around in a tunnel they had dug underneath the village, and talked of their vision. A city where Kindred could live in peace, and where the very city itself allowed for vampires to feed and rest without fear of the sun or dangerous hunts. Where kine would gather en masse and crane their necks for them. A new era for a new world in America, where Kindred could live long lives filled with vice and delights and where violence was unnecessary.

Such fools they'd been. Successful, but with each success, their paranoia of each other grew. Battles were fought, skirmishes at first, but sometimes full on war between two covenants. Lucas's arrival had not helped.

Sighing, she shook her head, combed back her hair, and dusted off the sleeves of her suit. She had changed her clothes; she could not visit Azamel wearing a dress meant for a night out on the town, after all.

The stage was actually a large room of concrete with little in the way of ... anything, except for connecting tunnels, and a few light sources that were ancient. But the Invictus and Antoinette did like to keep the tunnels maintained to some degree, so such lights were replaced when they broke. A fact Azamel and other cockroaches liked to exploit.

And sure enough, there she sat on the raised platform. It stood a foot off the concrete floor, a slab of yet more concrete, a literal stage for the room. And while before there had been nothing, Azamel had decided to decorate much of the room like a cottage in the 1800's. The woman had confidence, Antoinette had to admit that. And nerve.

She was a small woman, very old, with wrinkled white skin hanging off her face and arms. Skinny and frail. It was hard to see her eyes, partially closed with age, and her long silver hair was thin.

So much older than the last time they had spoke.

“Time,” Azamel said, voice quiet and filled with rasp and groan, “is not as kind to us as it is to the vampire.”

“No, it is not.” Antoinette stepped up onto the stage and stood before the small woman. She sat in a recliner, one with red and blue flowers, and covered in a horrible, horrible shade of green. The sort of chair you might expect to find in your grandmother's house, with an ashtray on the arm, and cigarette burns along the cushion. Underneath her was a rug, a circular thing with color patterns of maroon, brown, and olive.

“But, I should be happy with what I have done with my time. For over two hundred years I have lived; I should be content. Shouldn't I?”

Antoinette glanced toward Daniel, who returned it with a small shrug while adjusting his glasses.

“We did not part on the best of terms, Azamel,” Antoinette said. “Why have you returned?”

The old woman looked up to her left and right.

Athalia nodded to them, arms folded across her chest, eyes heavy and the hint of a frown on her lips. A slender woman, somewhat tall, with a soft face that did not match her steel gaze. Black skin and long black hair that reached her hips, with some baby blue jeans and a nice white sweater.

“We’ve met.” Daniel nodded her way, and offered a tiny smile that lasted only moments.

There was a small spark there, Antoinette knew. Athalia had showed up a couple decades ago, when the change had struck her. The Begotten often had no one when it happened, and through sheer dumb luck, Daniel had stumbled upon her. Friends for only a short time before friction ruined the friendship.

Another with dark skin, though his hair was curly and cut short, tapered, with a clean-shaven face and a harder glare than Athalia could muster. But where Athalia looked to be in good shape, Mark was overweight, but with a decent amount of muscle to go with it. He too was in jeans and a white shirt, forgettable.

He didn’t feel forgettable. Antoinette found her eyes lingering on the Begotten, and despite herself, she frowned. She did not like him. Being near him made her skin crawl, and she could not tell why.

The three beasts before her all made her skin crawl and her inner beast growl and posture. But Mark made her take a small step back, for fear he might touch her.

“Athalia is welcome in the city,” she said, “and if Mark has lived here and managed to not cause issues despite his condition, then he is as well. But you Azamel, you are not welcome. You cause trouble every time you stay within my walls. My walls.” Antoinette took a step toward the old woman, and glared down at her, even as she felt a little bit of ice run down her spine. “Why are you here?”

“I seek my inheritance.”

“... your inheritance?” She looked over her shoulder to Daniel, but he offered nothing more than his usual deadpan gaze.

“It is not something you would understand, but know that I plan to seek it here, within your walls.” Azamel smiled, and leaned back into her grandmother’s chair.

“You try my patience, Azamel. Do you not think I will force you out?”

“Why would you? You did not banish me from your city, only expressed a strong dislike to my presence. Are you escalating your claim?”

Antoinette grit her teeth. She did not want to fight Azamel. A fight with a Begotten would not end well for anyone involved, and the old woman was not incorrect, Antoinette had not banished her.

Maybe she should have, instead of risking the trouble her kind could bring.

“You have requested my presence, Azamel, as you squat in the underbelly of my city, knowing full well I do not want you here. You try my patience.”

The old woman put up her hands, and offered what she probably thought was a heartfelt smile, and not the sinister sneer it was.

“I’m here for my own purposes, true, but I asked to speak to you for two reasons. First, I’m not here to start a war with you, Antoinette,” Azamel said. The Prince twitched at the lack of title use. “But the city is large, and prime for my goals. Second, something has been stirred, and I offer you that knowledge as a peace offering.”

“Stirred?” She looked at Daniel, but he could only shrug.

“Yes, something has come to the city, recently, and has been killing your precious ‘kine’ in the tunnels. No bother to you, I’m sure, but I fear it will attract unwanted attention. And neither I nor you want such attention.”

Antoinette sighed, and stroked her chin. “You know who has been behind the recent disappearances then, Azamel?”

“I do. But there’s more happening here, vampire, than the disappearances you are aware of. So, I propose a deal.”

Azamel was sounding more like Viktor every minute.

“A deal?”

“Nothing horrible, I assure you. I simply wish for an exchange of information. I will tell you who has been behind the disappearances, if you can tell me where the spiders have been coming from.”

Antoinette quirked a brow and looked the old woman up and down. Hard to read her, old as she was, and the Prince’s beast could make little understanding of whatever Azamel was peacocking. If she was peacocking at all. Such a deal sounded harmless, but it was not; a fact of history.

Azamel's expression was solid, and she waited with a finger tapping on the arm of her chair. Antoinette was the one in the dark in this conversation, not her. And she was not used to being in the lower dealing position.

"I can tell from your silence that you don't know about the spiders." Azamel shrugged, and motioned her head toward Mark. "Mark is the one who has spotted them, and he is the one who assures me a threat is growing."

Again the man stayed silent, but a dull glance from him set her on edge all the same.

"And he is sure there is weight to this fear?" she said.

"He is."

"... does he not speak?"

Azamel chuckled, coughed, and wiped a bit of drool from her mouth. "Only when he has to. Better for everyone that way."

Delightful.

"You are correct Azamel, I do not know of these spiders." It took her hundreds of years of practice to hide the contempt in her eyes. Admitting ignorance was painful at any age, and potentially dangerous in her position. "But I will investigate, if you are concerned."

More laughs from the old woman. "You sound like you're doing it for my sake. This is a warning for you, Antoinette, not me. If the spiders are not dealt with quickly, a rain of fire will land upon your city. I don't want that, you don't want that, but it's you that will have to scoop up the ashes."

~~Natasha~~

A few days later, and the nightmares only got worse. Now she was dreaming of muddy hands reaching out from under her bed, grabbing her ankles, and pulling her down under the bed into god knows where. Now her nightmares hinted at eyes in the shadows, faces behind the mirror, movement in the darkness, of souls forever enacting their final emotions. Usually murderous anger.

So she had Jessy over. Because Jessy was big and strong and could scare off the monsters under her bed.

Fifty years embraced, Natasha. You're over seventy years old in total. What the hell is the matter with you?

Ghost in the walls was what was mattering her! The shrunken head sat outside her room, she was sure! Sometimes when she awoke with the passing of dusk, she opened her door just to make sure she was indeed alone, and no shrunken head or hand of glory was there waiting for her.

Worse was the wedding dress. Such a classic tale, and that the whole scene was permanently scarred into the dress? All those stories about ghosts and poltergeists she'd heard throughout her life started to sound a little more real. She knew other monsters existed in the world; Kindred weren't the only humanoids with special teeth. But ghosts? Ghosts!?

Ok, different topic, different topic.

Natasha sat at the counter, browsing on her laptop as per usual. Or at least trying to. Jessy was on the couch, watching TV, some MMA fight.

"So how're things with the crazies?" Jessy said.

"They're ... g-good. Just scary."

“Scary?”

Not a different topic!

“Um, so, how about you? How are things with the Invictus?”

“Not gonna lie, pretty fucked up. You gone and Viktor gone means we’ve lost a lot of senior staff. There’re like twelve Kindred we could promote, they’re as old as us, just not used to how shit rolls at the top level.”

“Yeah, I guess. Mister Vanna maybe? He—”

“Hey, Natasha, come on. Tell me.” Jessy turned around on the couch, got on her knees on the cushions, elbows on the back, and looked at her. “We’re best friends, think you can tell me.”

Tell her why she left the Invictus. She hadn’t yet, and she really should, but she didn’t want to create a problem. Or she was just afraid of how Jessy might react, maybe disagree with her choice, maybe back up Maria? What about Daniel, how would Jessy react to that?

If you want her to stay your friend through all this Natasha, you’re going to have to throw her a bone.

“ ... Mada—Maria, she ... let Lucas use me ... as a hostage ... when he attacked the Prince.”

“Huh? What? How’s that make any sense?”

“ ... the sheriff is my sire.”

Bomb dropped.

Jessy raised a brow, looked at her, looked down, looked at her, looked down, looked over at the kitchen counter, then back to her.

“Fucking ... wow.” Jessy sat back down on her butt, and threw up her hands before hooking them on the couch back. She leaned back, let her head dangle over the back of the couch, and looked at Natasha upside down. “Fucking wow.”

“ ... yeah. Sorry I never t-t-told you.”

“Maria? ... what a bitch.”

Natasha laughed. Damn it, the serious of the situation was gone. Jessy never could take things seriously for long, but that was a good thing with Natasha brooding all the time.

Brooding all the damn time now, and being scared, and alone. Not really alone; she could always rely on Daniel. But it wasn't the same as having a friend, and she didn't want to ruin that when she moved. Hell, she'd given up the Invictus and made a major life change, time to stop brooding and do other new things. Now was the perfect time, wasn't it?

“Hey, Jessy.” She reached deep down into her gut and looked for some courage. Something about the whole mess had left some in there, she just had to look for it. “I'm ... hungry.”

“Cool, I'll hold the fort.”

Arg. Jessy was going to make this difficult without even realizing it.

“I mean ... can you...”

“You ... know...” Natasha just squirmed like a fish on a hook. How could she say it?

“What?”

“Last time you ... offered.”

“Oh. Oh! Ooooh shit.” Jessy rolled over and hopped off the couch to join her at the counter with such speed, like a dog with a treat. “You want me to get the boys over? For serious?”

She couldn't even look in Jessy's direction, let alone in her eyes. “... yes.” As if to finalize the decision, she put her hand out on her laptop and closed it.

“Fuck yes! Um, what day is it? Yeah I can get them over!” Jessy jumped up and down. “Fuck I'm getting horny just thinking about it.”

“Slow down! I ... p-p ... p-p-p-”

“I getcha! I know, I know. Come on Natasha we've been friends for decades. You think I'd just throw you in head first?” The blond slid up onto the counter to sit, and put her hand down on Natasha's laptop, as if she'd somehow conquered Natasha's love for solitude. “Slow as you want. No rush.”

“Ok. Ok I...” She frowned at herself. They were just ghouls. Kine! She was fifty years embraced and still, the thought of having sex made her extremely nervous. You're in control Natasha. They're just ghouls, Jessy's ghouls, your friend's ghouls! There's no reason to be nervous.

Except for the typical, stupid reasons; she was a short, flat-chested pale skinny girl with no figure. The idea of a ghoul not wanting to have sex with her because she was—

“I can already see where your mind is going Natasha. And I can officially confirm for you that the boys all very much want to fuck you.”

Natasha's jaw dropped. Since when was Jessy so perceptive? And ... really? "Really? They ... you know." She looked down at herself.

"Hell yes. You got that little yoga girl body that drives them nuts. No worries there." And then the phone was out in her hand.

"Wait! Wait I ... um..."

Jessy held the phone in her hand, but did stop. Thank god her friend was her friend, and not some bully. Well, a bit of a bully, but not a big one.

"Any time you want to stop we can stop, you know that girl! But we'll be in charge, and I'll be right next to you the whole time."

"... the ... whole time..." She nodded, and gave Jessy the go-ahead.

Right next to her. Jessy had said that every time, but it never really occurred to Natasha what that would entail. She'd never run through the thoughts to that point. They were just words before, but now, now she was visualizing what that meant. Her and Jessy, next to each other, while having sex.

And that, she admitted only to the darkest corner of her mind, was enticing. So much of her porn collection focused on group sex, but for some reason she just couldn't picture herself in that scenario. At least until Jessy finally dialed the number.

"Hey Brad, get the boys together. Got a treat for you tonight. I expect you all here in thirty minutes." Beep. "There! Done and done. Oh man this is going to be great ... hey, c'mere." Jessy hopped back off the counter, reached out, and took Natasha's hands to pull her off the stool until they were both standing.

"... w-what?"

Jessy blushed life, so the darker colors of permanently tanned skin filled out her cheeks, and darkened her lips. “Blush for me.”

Natasha sighed. She was in it now. But she did as requested and blushed life. Her skin barely changed.

“You are so pale!” Jessy said. Now Natasha blushed with embarrassment, and the fake life immediately made her face glow red; she could feel it in her cheeks. “And now you’re blushing! Oh my god that is so adorable.”

“Don’t t-t-t-t-t-tease ... me...”

“Sorry. Really. I’m being an ass. Come on.” Jessy pulled her along and into Natasha’s bedroom. Just a simple king bed and a closet. “You’re probably wearing some boring underwear though. That’s the only thing you’ll have to fix.”

“My underwear isn’t...” Yeah, it was boring.

Jessy started opening her drawers and digging through clothes. Jessy was always at Natasha’s apartment just hanging out, and was quite comfortable digging through her things all the time. They didn’t share a size but that didn’t stop her friend from being nosy.

“Aha! Here, put this on.” She tossed Natasha pair of boy shorts. Tiny, tight purple ones. “Boys see you wearing only that and they will get on their knees begging for a piece of you.”

“ ... just this?”

“Yeah! Nervous? It’s no big, come on.” And like it was absolutely nothing, Jessy threw off her t-shirt.

Natasha’s mouth fell open. She’d seen Jessy naked before, but always in a more professional setting, generally when having to quickly change when doing Invictus work. But this time, Jessy was facing her, and standing there in nothing but a pair of jeans, Natasha couldn't help but stare.

Jessy had a lot of muscle for a woman, and her stomach was a cut figure of bumps and grooves of definition. Her breasts were larger than Natasha would have expected on a powerful, ripped figure like her friend, and her nipples were small and dark like her lips.

Jessy hardly noticed Natasha staring. Instead the Gangrel whipped off her pants too, and was now standing there in absolutely nothing but a thong, one of those black ones made to go with gym wear; when exercising wasn't enough, but you had to look sexy while exercising too.

“ ... you ... you're um ... you wear that? All the t-time?”

“This? Hell yeah.” Jessy turned around, slipped a finger under the thong's waistband at the hip, and gave it a snap. “Hugs the ass, emphasizes the shape.”

“But it looks so uncomfortable!”

Jessy shrugged. “We all have things we're vain about, right? I love my ass and legs. I bet Beatrice is probably the same. Fit girls love their legs and butt.” The Gangrel turned around a little, did a one-eighty, and stopped when facing away so her ass was on full display for Natasha. “You like?” The girl was devolving into a teenager right before her eyes.

Natasha's whole body was blushing. She could actually see her own fingers turning red. “T-t-too much!” It did really emphasize the shape though, and Jessy was a fit woman. She had a large, toned butt.

“Aw come on. You know you're going to be having sex right? With four guys? You have to get at least a little comfortable. Come on, strip. It's just me.”

She wasn't a virgin. She had sex before. Decades ago ... but still, she did not appreciate Jessy's patronizing.

"Ok just..." She couldn't say don't look, because it made no sense. So she forced herself, with shaky fingers, to start undoing the buttons of her sweater.

Jessy moved over to sit on the bed, and watched. She made no efforts to cover up her breasts, and in fact, she let one hand's fingers drift up and down her legs, then up her stomach, and eventually up to her breasts to caress a nipple in slow circles.

Apparently, just getting undressed was turning on her friend. "Are you ... always ... so horny?"

"Yes! Come on Natasha, you don't get it. You're a Kindred, fifty years embraced! If there's one thing, just one thing that makes this second life worth it, it's the sex. Can't get a disease, can't get pregnant, anal is on the menu twenty-four seven, and I don't know about you but I haven't had my period since being turned. And every stupid hangup from society is gone. No one cares if you fuck everyone on the planet. We can fuck whenever, with whoever, however, and we can go as long as we want. Free to be as sexual as we want."

The moment Jessy realized she was in charge of her sex life in a way only a Kindred can be, the girl had apparently become ravenous. And, had never stopped being ravenous. When Natasha was young and had just left the Ordo Dracul, she'd joined the Invictus and befriended Jessy. From day one, Jessy was a sexual creature, brazen and open about it. And while it made Natasha squirm, other Kindred didn't flinch when Jessy mentioned orgies and double penetration and orgasms so powerful she soaked her kine in her juices. The male Kindred often engaged in conversation with her to share similar stories. And women sometimes did too; perhaps not with stories as absurdly extreme as Jessy's regular trysts of ten legs, but with stories of seducing kine, and engaging in sex with a man under their control. And how powerful it made them feel, how orgasmic.

Natasha had missed that bandwagon. Only elders or older ancillae seemed to stop talking about sex, while everyone Natasha's age seemed content to delve into sex with unending fervor.

“M-Maybe you can be that sexual, but for me it's ... hard.” And she most definitely didn't want to fuck everyone on the planet.

“Girl, I am telling you, you are sexy as fuck. Is this a Mekhet thing?”

Maybe it was a Mekhet thing, a little. It was in her bloodline to prefer shadows. Jessy and her Gangrel blood on the other hand, seemed to thrive on being a pack leader of a group of ghouls.

“Hey, don't stop. Come on.” Jessy, impatient, got up and reached out for Natasha's buttons.

Natasha smacked her hand away. “I'll do it!” Grumbling and muttering, she kept going, and eventually removed her sweater. Underneath, she was wearing a soft fitness tank top. Comfort over fashion.

Jessy licked her lips and reached out again, but got nowhere when Natasha slapped her hands twice.

“Aw come on. Please?” Jessy gave her the biggest pair of doe eyes she'd ever seen.

It was comically out of place on the rough-loving Gangrel.

“ ... fine.” She raised her arms.

Jessy's face erupted with so much cheer, it was like Natasha had just given her a surprise party. She reached out, slipped her fingers under the sides of the sports top, lifted it up and off of Natasha, and tossed it aside.

“God damn! Your breasts ... fucking god that's hot.”

“Yeap, and that is very fucking hot on you. And your nipples have that bright pink color!” Jessy reached out yet again, but stopped herself short this time of groping Natasha's breasts. Her hands went lower, and with ninja fingers she undid the zipper of Natasha's skirt and slid it off of her in one fell swoop. She was still wearing her simple white underwear.

“Jessy! You're ... not being nice.”

“Can't help myself. And I know you need a little push, y'know? The guys aren't here yet, it's just us.” This time, she scooped her fingers into the sides of her panties and yanked them down before Natasha could stop her.

“Hey!” Both Natasha's hands went down to cover herself, but were grabbed by Jessy's hands. Natasha squirmed to try and hide her privates, but Jessy was so much stronger. “You're ... you said ... you wouldn't push me.”

“I won't, really. But it's just us and I really have to see ... I have to.”

Natasha blinked. Jessy was just ... staring at her, between the legs, as if entranced. Her friend's voice had sort of faded too, as if something had taken her breath away. If Natasha didn't know any better, she'd think it was lust and admiration both in the Gangrel's eyes. And the way she was staring at her sex was making Natasha's whole body blush red. Jessy was getting aggressive like an aroused animal, and it was a bit scary.

But knowing her friend was getting so worked up just because of her was sending all sorts of signals to Natasha's body.

“ ... god,” Jessy said.

“What?” Natasha squirmed some more, but the way Jessy was staring at her was making her strength fade. She knew that look, but she never really thought about it. Jessy joked a lot about it, sure, but they were just words. To actually see her Gangrel friend staring at her exposed parts with her ‘I want to fuck that’ eyes was shocking.

“It's smooth.”

“I ... shaved it years ago, and ... d-decided to not regrow it.” Kindred could choose what parts of their body to revert to natural state in their daily sleep. It's how Kindred kept their tattoos and piercings gained post embrace.

“And it's so small! Barely any lips. It's ... so tiny, and it's just this tiny little slit! Fuck I'm so jealous.”

Jessy analyzed the anatomy of Natasha's vagina like it was perfectly ok to say those words. It was so crude and blatant, but ... jealous?

Jessy just kept looking at her with arousal painted on her face, and the way her eyes were glazed over and drinking in the sight of Natasha's body, it was starting to make the Mekhet feel warm. Jessy wanted her. That was why the Gangrel kept bugging Natasha about sleeping with her ghouls.

Glass shattered, and the night took on a different feeling. Natasha was no longer nervous about the ghouls, or at least not as nervous, instead she became nervous about the blond creature gazing at her exposed parts.

“Jessy, um ... the guys...”

“Right! Right ... yeah, here.” She finally let go of Natasha’s wrists, and fetched the boy shorts before handing them to her. “Fuuuuuuck you’re going to look so hot in these.”

“This girl t-talk is horrible!” She stepped into the boy shorts as quick as possible, then stood back up and folded her arms across her chest again. Stark naked except for the boy shorts, she waddled over to the mirror and took a peek. Not even five feet tall, with black hair reaching halfway down her back, and pale skin. She was very thin, but at least you couldn’t see her ribs. Much.

Jessy’s phone buzzed. “They’re here. Come on.”

“Wait! W-wait I...”

“Natasha, they’re just my ghouls. Bloodbags. Don’t like what they do? Tell em to stop or to change it up or whatever and they will obey like dogs. And I personally guaran-fucking-tee all four of them want to bone you.”

From a hermit’s life to an orgy. She was really in it now.

“ ... ok.”

“Fuck yeah.” Jessy took her hand and pulled her out into the living room.

Just ghouls, just ghouls, they were just ghouls. Kine that were bloodbound to Jessy. She fed on kine all the time. This was no different, she’d just get to enjoy it a little more. Maybe. Hopefully.

“Hey guys, get in here!”

Fuck, she was lost in her thoughts again, and didn't notice Jessy opening the door, or ushering the ghouls in. Natasha did her best to hide her body with her arms, but also appear nonchalant. It most definitely was not working.

“Hey boss, topless already? Hey—whoa! Holy shit it's Madam Vola.”

“Vola? Holy fuck ... look at that.”

The four men were all tall, broad shouldered, with muscles, scruff and military cuts. Two were black, two were white, and all of them looked like they'd spent their lives in the gym. Jessy definitely had a type, but at least she enjoyed a little racial diversity.

Jessy stepped over to Natasha and stood beside her. “Guys, my partner here normally doesn't do this sort of thing. If you ever want to touch her, you will do exactly as she says and no more, no less. She says eat shit I expect it done. Got it?”

“Got it boss!” they said at the same time, like some sort of squadron.

“Go ahead Natasha, give em an order.”

Natasha blinked up at her tall friend next to her, then back at the quartet before them. Orders. Orders orders. “Um ... you two,” she said, and pointed between two of them.

“Chris ma'am.”

“Isaac ma'am.”

“Chris, Isaac, you two ... kiss each other.”

The other two guys laughed, but Chris and Isaac didn't hesitate. They didn't half-ass it either, and in moments had locked lips. And kissed. And kissed some more.

“Ok, you c-can ... stop.”

“Ha,” Jessy said with a laugh, “I do that all the time.”

“Yeah?” Suddenly, ideas of having the four men, naked, doing things to each other, were dancing through her mind. Hehe.

“K boys, follow us.” Jessy snickered, took Natasha’s hand again, and walked her back into her bedroom. Once back in Natasha’s room, she slid onto the bed and put her topless body on display by lying on her side.

Natasha, unsure of what to do, sat down in the middle of the bed with legs folded, arms across her chest, and watched the boys walk in and line up side by side.

They were all blatantly aroused, with erections poking against their pants and eyes drinking up the sight of Jessy’s body. But, they were staring at her too. A lot. Natasha couldn’t stop blushing.

“Strip!” Jessy almost shouted.

One of the boys put down something. Lube, it looked like. And then all four of them stripped down. Belts, shirts, jeans, all were removed until four nude men were standing before them. And all of them were just as muscled and ripped as she expected.

“You ... definitely have a pattern,” she said.

“Ha! I know right? Lot of muscle means a lot of blood. Hey Brad, get over here.”

Brad walked up to the edge of the bed and waited. Natasha, realizing that she was the only one in the room hiding her body, suddenly felt awkward for doing it. She lowered her arms to expose her breasts, and blushed all the harder when Brad started to stare at them.

“Lie down on your back right here,” Jessy said.

“Yes boss.” Brad crawled up onto the bed, turned over, and lay on his back along the bed between Jessy and Natasha. The bed was full of bodies now.

Jessy sat on her knees beside him, and put her hands down on the boy’s chest and stomach. Abs, pectorals, he was a valley of meat.

“Taking care of yourself? My blood won’t stop you from getting fat!” She pinched his nipple hard enough to get a yelp out of him, and Natasha had to cover her mouth to not giggle.

“Boss! I am taking care of myself, boss!”

Oh wow, she treated them like it was boot camp. But all four guys were smiling; they seemed to enjoy it.

“You better.” She reached over, and wrapped her hands around his member. The man’s pubic hair was kept short, trim, and his member was quite large. Jessy probably picked these ghouls based on their proportions, penis included. So vain. But, now that the man was just lying there in front of Natasha, naked and smiling up at her, she couldn’t deny a certain primal appeal to it.

And it was all making her very hungry. Her eyes went down to where Jessy was lightly stroking the man’s shaft. Jessy herself looked more than aroused by now, to the point her dark nipples were standing on swollen areola. Both of them were hungry in more than one way.

“So I can ... eat?” Natasha said.

“Sure! And I always get the guys to pop some blues before coming over, so you can fuck em, bite em, and even when you’re done they’re still hard for a good while.”

Natasha put her hand on her neck. “Oh ... my.” She was going to protest about the health concerns with constant use of erection aid drugs like sildenafil or such, but ghouls would regenerate from such potential harm.

“Yes boss, I—”

Jessy put the finger of her free hand on Brad’s mouth. “Shut up.” Despite that, she continued to stroke the man’s cock, and Natasha found her eyes locked on the sight of Jessy’s hand squeezing, gripping, working the length in the slow massage. “Come on Natasha, do whatever you want.”

“O-ok.” It took a lot of courage just to keep her arms from covering her breasts, let alone touch the big naked guy on her bed. But Jessy was right, she was Kindred and they were kine and that meant they were bloodbags. Delicious, beautiful, warm, sexy bloodbags. Jessy bossed them around like slaves, and they enjoyed it. And Jessy had given her full license to do whatever she wanted.

And that was finally sinking into her mind. Full freedom to do whatever she could possibly want with the ghouls. She had the power in the room. If she wanted, she could have all four of them lay upon her bed on their stomachs while she stood on their backs and danced. Is this what it felt like to be a Ventrue?

Bolstered with courage, Natasha slid over to sit across from Jessy, with the man’s pelvis between them. Jessy noticed, removed her hands from Brad, and with trembling grip, Natasha put her hand around the man’s cock.

How many years had it been since she wrapped her hands around a man’s dick? Decades. She gave it a tiny squeeze, and Brad let out a small moan. Warm, hard, and now that she was looking down at it, she could see the moisture building at the tip of his glans. Brad was circumcised, and his glans looked so ripe, full of blood and need. Her other hand reached out, touched a finger to the tip of his cock, and started to spread the single drop of warm precum that had started to leak.

“Fucking god that’s hot,” Jessy said.

Natasha grinned like a satisfied kitten. This wasn’t so bad. When she glanced over at the three men still waiting, they were all gazing intently at her. Not Jessy, but her. They were eating her up with their eyes, and doing their best to keep from masturbating while watching what she was doing to their friend.

It was all making her so damn wet. She could feel her juices start to cream her boy shorts. She had left her breasts exposed, and she no longer cared. Being the only shy one in a room full of sexual extroverts was making it a little easier to just give in, blend in, ride the sexual waves. Drunk with arousal.

Then of course Jessy upset the status quo. The fit vampire lay down on the bed again, motioned for two of the boys to join her — Chris and Isaac again — and right before Natasha’s eyes, they got down on their knees and leaned over the bed to put their heads against Jessy’s thighs and ass. They reached up, shifted the woman’s thong aside, and began to bury their faces into the crevices of Jessy’s butt and pelvis.

Jessy kept her eyes on Natasha though. Lying on her side as she was, she took one of Natasha’s pillows, put it under her head, and got comfy while watching. Her mouth was already parted, and small moans escaped the Gangrel while the two men devoured her. Natasha couldn’t see exactly what they were doing with their heads and hands in the way, but it was obvious that Jessy was enjoying two sets of lips and tongues against both of her holes.

The image of two tongues, one on her pussy and the other on the rose of her ass, had Natasha's fake breath quickened in no time. She dared not speak of her porn habits, and how much of that frequently involved double penetration; she was already overflowing her embarrassment quota and anymore might make her explode. It's not like a vampire needed to worry about cleaning themselves before some anal play, so of course she'd experimented! And ... kept experimenting. A lot. Privately.

Jessy mewled, and Natasha was struck dumb watching her friend reduced to the most sexual sounds she'd ever heard come from the Gangrel.

Unable to take it anymore, Natasha slipped her fingers into her boyshorts and forced them off. Clumsy, but done. The look of absolute bliss coming from Jessy sent tingles up Natasha's spine. The fact that Brad and the remaining ghoul both groaned at the sight of her naked sent more.

"Brad, uh ... um ... I want you t-to ... lick me." Just ghouls, they were just ghouls. Hell, Brad seemed overjoyed at the chance to touch her, and he helped her when she started to shift down toward his face. In fact, he picked her up. She was such a tiny thing, a light and skinny little girl, and the large kine had only to slip his hands under her thighs to lift her and ease her down until she was sitting on his lips, facing his stomach.

She was sitting on his lips.

Before her was a valley of blood-filled muscle. The big kine's huge phallus was lying across his abs now, begging to be touched, rising a few inches every so often as he flexed it. But when she put her hands on his chest, her knees on the blankets around him, ideas of touching him vanished, replaced with pleasure when his warm, wet tongue found her pussy.

“Ah ... nn...” She put her hands to her mouth to stop the sounds, but it didn't help much. Tongue, someone's tongue, on her clitoris. Something warm, warmer than her, and wet and soft and moving and wriggling and nuzzling into her. Licking her. The sparks of pleasure shot out from her clitoris into her legs and core, sharp and hot, until she was forced to put her hands against his stomach to keep from falling forward.

With her fingers on his body, she dug them into the dents and shapes of his muscles a little. Warm, blood, alive, breathing. God she wanted to bite him, drink him. But, she wanted him to keep licking her too. The little bumps on his tongue, the wet heat that coated her tiny labia, the flicking and massaging motion. Don't stop.

She looked to Jessy again. The woman was still on her side, one leg up, two heads between her legs. Her mouth had opened, and guttural groans were coming out of her, closer to an animal than a woman. One of her arms was wrapped tight around the pillow her head was against, and the other was holding the hair of the man in front of her.

And she was looking at Natasha, staring at her. There was hunger in her eyes when she looked at her, and it only grew as the two men devoured her. Natasha managed a little wave at Jessy, and her friend returned it with a chuckle. With the tingling sparks of a coddled clit warming her body, Jessy's primal gaze stirred something in Natasha. From uncomfortable, to enticing.

The little Mekhet looked at the final ghoul. The man looked like he was going to die from sheer arousal, with his cock twitching and jumping every so often, stuck out from his pelvis at forty-five degrees. The head of the shaft was swollen, ready to burst, and Natasha could see a drop of moisture on the opening.

“W-what's ... your ... name?” she said. Little squeaks got into her voice, try as she might to hide them. Her whole body was blushing bright red, and her pink nipples stood from her petite breast, defiant against her small bosom. The mixture of embarrassment and arousal was already making talking hard, but to look at the big man in front of her, talk to him, while another man was suckling on her clit? Overload.

“Vincent ma’am.”

“V-V-Vincent, you ... come ... here.” She gestured to the spot beside her. No room left on the bed, but that didn’t mean Vincent couldn’t get closer.

The man came and stood beside her, hands at his sides. His cock was only a foot away from her now, and she turned to look at it. The height and angle put it all directly beside her face, and she stared at the engorged glans, then at the man above her. Like Jessy, he had hunger in his eyes, locked on her and her body.

Everyone wanted to have sex with her! Jessy included! So ... so...

She came. Her back arched toward the man beneath her, and she dug her fingers into his muscles as the tingling waves hit her. The blissful muscle clench, the pleasure sparks that worked down into her legs, to her toes, made her voice come out in short squeaks, she did it all. Any sense of self control she had, she knew was gone, washed away as the tingling clenches worked up through her squeezing muscles.

Natasha looked over at Jessy. The tall woman was getting comfortable on top of her ghoul now, pulling him up to lay on the bed, the same as Brad. Without so much as a glance, Jessy grabbed the man’s shaft, guided it toward her entrance, and sank down onto his cock to the hilt. Once she was comfortable, hands on Chris’s shoulders, she smiled at Natasha.

“Looking good,” she said.

Really, straight out of a bad action movie. Natasha tried to roll her eyes, tried to dismiss Jessy's compliment for the cheesy thing it was, but Brad started to lick her sensitive clit once more, and she squeaked.

Jessy laughed, and snapped her fingers. Isaac grabbed the lube they'd brought, and with a practiced hand, began to apply it along his length until it was glistening. Natasha stared, a little dumbfounded as Jessy leaned forward toward the man beneath her so Isaac could begin to apply the lube to her ass.

Then he set his swollen cock's head between Jessy's ass cheeks, and started to step in.

Natasha looked at Jessy, eyes wide, drinking in the facial expressions of her friend. Jessy's mouth was open, and as much as she was trying to look back at Natasha, her eyes drifted up into her skull as Isaac sank an inch into her ass, and then another, and another. And once he was completely within the vampire, Jessy growled, a deep animal sound, and began to ride her ghouls. Both of them, at the same time, on her own. The two men barely had to do a thing, just hold on as the woman started to shift her hips back and forth, with a small bounce too.

Ok, that might be a bit too far for Natasha, especially for her first time trying the orgy thing. But that didn't mean Natasha didn't want to watch Jessy, her bouncing breasts, her large ass molding to Isaac's body with each impact, and the pleasure dripping from her friend's face.

Natasha crawled off of Brad's face, turned around, and sat on his stomach facing him. It'd been a long time since she'd had sex, decades. Orgasms were a frequent part of her life; she had the internet after all. And vibrators. But actual sex with another person? It'd been so damn long.

She leaned forward to raise her butt, reached down between her legs to find the man's cock, and guide it up to her wet slit. Fingers around his girth, she shivered over the size of him, and squeezed the hardness with more experimentation. Why did Jessy have to get such big ghouls with such big dicks? A girl didn't need to feel like she was giving birth every time she had sex!

A glance over to Jessy told Natasha otherwise, at least in Jessy's case. Girl was arching her back and groaning more as the ghoul behind her gave her long, deep plunges of his huge member into her ass. She still had her thong on too, pulled over onto her ass cheek. And it looked so damn amazing, how the strong woman fit between the two big ghouls, and took both of them into her at the same time.

Small bites first, Natasha. Nodding to herself, she smiled down at the subservient creature underneath her, and started to sink herself down onto his shaft.

The sensation of being opened, of wet, hot lips being spread taut and the bumps and ridges of flesh rubbing on flesh made her mewl. Her squeezing pussy found the base edge of his glans, and she shivered at how much his cock's head opened her tiny body. Her fingers grew wet as her juices trickled down his length, and wetter as she sank more of his length into her, until her liquids collected between her fingers. Deeper again, her little canal filled to the end, and she shivered as the man's tip pressed to her cervix.

But she was so aroused, what little pain it brought was replaced with a deep wave in her core that made her groan, tremble, and sink down further. Still a couple inches to go, and she started to gasp and pant, no matter how useless oxygen was, as the ghoul's oversized phallus pushed her insides deeper. Everything was stretched to the limit, and her poor muscles were quivering as she shifted on the girth rubbing along her g-spot. Mental note: if you ever get a ghoul for a sex slave, check penis size. Any bigger than this and she was liable to break.

But, as her little lips found the base of him, she leaned forward onto the man's chest, hands to his pectorals, and she moaned, loudly, as the man started to move. Just a little, just enough to make her squirm.

Poor Vincent, forced to watch. She wasn't up for something as lecherous as what Jessy was doing, but that didn't mean she should ignore him, right? She reached out for his cock with her hand, and pulled him a little closer, until his phallus was in front of her face again.

"Brad, you um ... t-take my hips, ok? And ... and ... keep it gentle! While I..." While I pleasure Vincent.

The big guy beneath her nodded, put his hands on her hips, and started to rock her back and forth. Certainly not like Jessy beside her, who had cum again, and collapsed on her ghoul's chest. Chris and Isaac slowed down, gave her a break while she recovered, and fucked her in a slow, delicious rhythm that had Natasha watching, and mimicking. Brad caught on quick, and shifted her hips back and forth in that same, slow, perfect way that had his cock rubbing against her insides while her clit tickled along his body.

And Vincent, she squeezed his girth, one hand wrapped around it, the other pressed to Brad to keep herself balanced. But, as she squeezed and caressed his cock, she opened her mouth, and wrapped her lips around the swollen tip.

She hadn't thought about it, hadn't meant to, but it was right there in front of her, with her fingers around it and its smell of sex and blood and life. And she'd never tell anyone, but ... she really wanted to. It always seemed like such a carnal thing, so salacious, so ... empowering. The look on Vincent's face, the deep, quiet moan, the way his cock flexed in her grip as she licked the ripe flesh, made her head swim.

"That ... is so ... fucking hot," Jessy said, staring.

Natasha managed a small, coy smile at her. Coy? She never did coy. But, she couldn't help herself. Everything was making blood rush to her head, fake life or not, and her whole body was tingling with impending orgasm. This was fun.

“Hey, Chris.” Jessy pat the man beneath her on the cheek, and slid off of his cock. “Go join Vincent.”

Natasha let go of Vincent, and twisted to look at Jessy full on. “W-what?”

Jessy, smirking and grinning, raised a knee so Chris could get out from under her. The man got on a knee beside Natasha on the bed, one leg off and on the floor so he was half standing, and he waited. They had self control, she had to give them that. He looked ready to burst, with precum dripping from the tip and down the cock's underside. Even more so, his whole cock was dripping with Jessy's cum.

Just as Natasha was about to protest, Brad found a perfect, oh god so fucking perfect rhythm, enough so she could feel his thickness drag along her swollen insides. She was soaking him, a copious amount of her fluids leaking onto his cock. Never, in all her masturbating sessions, did she ever get this wet. But having the man rock her with a gentle sway, while two other men waited for her to pleasure them? She was sinking into a pit of pure, lecherous sex.

And as much as she thought the night would be spent with her telling the ghouls what to do, she shivered when she put her lips onto Chris's cock, and heard him groan too. The power of it, of holding his pleasure in her hands, of a single suckle along the fat, swollen tip forcing the man to shudder, it made her feel ... high.

Or it could have been Brad, and the man's perfect rocking of her small body on his cock. She weighed nothing, and he was more than strong enough to lift and move her enough for the both of them.

The constant, blissful stimulus was making it hard to think straight, to do anything other than mewl, squeak, and moan.

One hand around Vincent's cock, the other around Chris's, she forgot about her new covenant, her issues with Maria and Daniel and Damien, her need to find a new apartment, all of it. Just let herself go, and stroked the two men faster. Every so often, she changed who she was kissing, suckling, but she managed to keep her hands moving on the two men, enough so the both of them were smiling down at her with voracious eyes.

She didn't have much practice with this sort of thing, but she'd seen enough porn — the good stuff, the stuff that indulges in slow, sensual, detailed scenes — to know what a good blowjob looked like. With suckling lips she slid the moist folds along the man's ripe flesh, down to the rim of the bulbous tip, and worked her lips back and forth along the base edge. Chris put a hand on her shoulder while his other struggled to find something to hold onto. Vincent also put a hand on her, and she smiled, giddy and drunk, before putting her lips onto his cock instead.

Natasha looked over at her, at her hard body of lean muscle and beautiful curves, at her smooth legs, her smooth pussy, her breasts jiggling against her body as Isaac fucked her. He'd slowed down, a little at least, and hooked her leg further from Natasha over his shoulder. Her other leg was out to the side so everything was visible, and Natasha found her eyes locked onto where the man slid his cock into her ass.

Jessy was loving it. With her back arched, butt on the pillow, and hands underneath her head, she was relaxed and perfectly at home with a man fucking her ass, sinking himself into her until every inch was gone. The woman's pussy was leaking juices down onto the man's shaft, and leaking more as he worked his length back and forth inside her. More than enough apparently, for Jessy to groan and shift her hips as another orgasm went into her legs and curled her toes.

Look at you, she'd said. In a small amount of time Natasha had gone from sheepishly touching a man's cock, to riding it while stroking and blowing two other men. There was no word to describe the depths she'd sunk to, and the freedom she felt.

She stroked Chris faster, and put her lips back onto him, licking and suckling. Couldn't imagine her skills were any good, but it didn't seem to matter to the boys, who were all making tiny moans and groans as she played with them. And their eyes, their hungry eyes spurred her on, until Chris started to shudder and his cock flexed within her mouth.

His cum flooded her. She was most definitely not prepared for the taste of it, which she'd never tasted in her whole life, dead or not. Some salt, some bitterness, and most definitely not Kindred friendly; she wouldn't be able to digest it. If he'd been a vampire, it'd have faded to nothing before that became a problem, but a ghoul was flesh and blood and life. So she opened her mouth, and let it fall back onto the man's cock, down her chin, and onto her chest.

Everyone groaned. Natasha blinked up at Chris, but glanced at the others in the corner of her vision. They were all staring at her and her breasts, where she felt the warm drops of cum land. Thick, heavy globs of the white liquid fell from her lips, some of it trailing along the corner of her jaw before sliding down her neck and onto her chest. And she wanted more. She licked along the man's glans, suckling and kissing the swollen tip, until more gushes of his cum were falling onto her chest.

Only when Chris had to back away, overstimulated, did she let go of him and turn toward Vincent. She gave him the same treatment, suckling, kissing, doing everything her mind told her she should be embarrassed about. But that little voice was gone, and the beast in her belly was happy to indulge in raw, sexual freedom, before the meal.

Vincent came quickly, and she peeked up at the kine, at the muscles and blood before her as she worked her lips back and forth. She let it spill from her mouth the same, and down her tiny body until it was trickling down her stomach. Two hands free now, she put the other on his leg to brace herself in toward him while she milked him of his cum.

When he was done, she let him go too, and both men sat down on the other end of the bed, looking over the lying Brad and Jessy to her. Bodies squashed together on her bed. They looked at Jessy a little too, but mostly her, and the cum dripping down her body.

Brad started to thrust up into her. She hadn't asked him to, and if he'd said he was going to start shoving his hips up to meet her, she probably would have stopped him. But the big ghoul started to pound upward, and she was left to bounce on his cock as he held her hips and pulled her down to meet each thrust.

She turned into a squeaking mess, weight falling forward and hands grabbing his chest as best she could. Didn't work very well, and soon she was on a hand and elbow, almost falling over but unable as the huge ghoul drove his cock into her little body, just enough to hurt a little. More than enough to make her start to tremble as her insides squeezed and the pleasure ripped through her. Composure — not that she had much left — was out the window, and she collapsed completely onto Brad's chest as he sank his cock balls deep into her with a hard thrust, again, and again. The audible splashing sound was her cum, and she knew it. It was on her pussy's lips, on Brad's pelvis, and all along her thighs until it dripped down to her knees.

“Brad, you dickhead, ease up. She said be gentle.” Jessy gave him a slap on the shoulder, and he stopped.

Thank god. Quivering, tender insides clenching with each wave of orgasm, she set her hands against Brad's chest, and forced herself to sit up. Didn't help much. The tingly waves, right down into her toes and up into her shoulders, every one had her trembling and her squeaks coming out. She sounded like a mouse, but she couldn't help it.

When she at last got control of her muscles again, she looked down at Brad, and giggled. Another very, very not-Natasha sound, but the man had cum on his stomach from when it'd dripped off of her. Damn she was a giddy mess. A hungry, horny, giddy school girl. Ugh.

Grinning, wiping her wrist across her lips to clear them of cum, she reached down, and let the beast take over. A different sensation to a forced Kiss, and one she hadn't experienced in a long, long time. The beast in her gut was normally content to stalk from the shadows, grab someone with her Kindred strength, and drink of them. But now, it was getting a taste of sensual feeding, sexual feeding, with all her nerves firing bliss as a precursor for the impending meal.

Brad sat up as she pulled on his shoulders. He had to slouch a bit, big as he was, petite as she was, but with a little work, he managed to get down low enough so she could get her lips up to his neck. Big, muscled neck, filled with warm blood, something she could bite, drink, devour.

“Hold still,” she said. The moment before the Kiss was like edging an orgasm, and the sweet release of sinking her fangs into skin and blood and life was every bit as sweet.

He may have held still, but she didn't. Moving her hips just enough to keep the friction going, a subtle and playful motion, she started to drink him.

It was enough to send the man into orgasm, and she grinned as she felt his whole body flex for a moment, before the man relaxed into her. Warm cum flooded her insides, but she was already stuffed to nigh painful capacity, and it leaked out of her by the second spurt. It wasn't the cum she was paying attention to though, it was the blood.

Sweet, delicious, warm blood flowing into her mouth. Each wave drowned her in a potent concoction of bliss, satisfaction, hunger sated, and muscles relaxing, only for the grinding of her pussy along Brad's cock to stoke the heat between her thighs. Part of her mind drifted down to the sensation of her pussy squeezing, pulsing, little spasms making her own cum drip into the mix of white oozing out of her. Most of her mind remained fixated on sucking every drop of blood out of her prey.

She slid her knees out from under her, and wrapped her legs around the man. So big compared to her, she fit inside his arms and legs, disappearing in his lap and embrace. But it was him that was trapped, unable to move, groaning, pumping seed into her until she was sure the man was going to drain himself dry. And still she drank down his blood. He was huge, he had a lot! And she indulged, gulping down the thick liquid as the two of them came.

It wasn't until he started to fall back that she let go. He went down like a bag of sand, back to the blankets, panting, exhausted. She was still sitting on his cock, and shifting her hips a little to milk her own orgasm aftershocks, taut muscles squeezing on his shaft.

Every motion, every inch of him she worked in and out of her, had her trembling, and her back arched and body spasmed as the sparks worked through her.

She looked over to Chris and Vincent. The two of them were on Jessy again, sort of. Chris was massaging her breasts, and Vincent was fingering her sex, while Isaac continued to fuck her ass. Three men, touching her and rubbing her and feeling her and fucking her. She'd just been in that boat! A foursome! The little Mekhet blinked down at her cum-covered chest, her hard nipples on her small breasts, and where her lips were spread open on Brad's girth. He was still hard; because of the drugs no doubt. So, Natasha, powered with a belly full of blood and unable to help herself, started to grind her hips a bit on the exhausted man. Six people on her bed, every bit of space taken up by panting, sweating, moaning bodies. And Chris and Vincent were hard once again.

No wonder Jessy was a sex addict. She could get used to this.

Focus on the ugly thing in your hands, Natasha. Focus. Focus.

No use, it wasn't happening. She had one thing on the mind, and that was sex. Sex. Sex. And more sex. Memories of Brad and Vincent and Chris, their warmth, their blood, their cum, covering her, surrounding her, one on each side and one underneath her, between her thighs. She couldn't stop thinking about it! But being a vampire had its advantages: without the blush of life on, her arousal was kept to the mind.

The mind was a powerful thing though, prone to wandering, exaggerating, and crafting little universes all its own. And Natasha's was a potent one. It had no trouble crafting glorious scenes of her and the four ghouls, and Jessy too, wrapped in lust and sex and cum and orgasms and flesh and heat and delicious, delicious blood. Many scenes, in many circumstances. Most of them with her in the middle, being lathered from head to toe in sex, pampered in some fantasies, held down and forced to enjoy it in others. She and Jessy had been the dominate ones, from beginning to end, but she had to admit, the idea of being pinned down by those men, and having things done to her...

Any minute now, she was going to buy a trash erotica novel, indulge in the trite romance, just so she could experience a little more of that heat that had somehow brainwashed her. And then after that, watch some porn. And then, maybe ask Jessy about doing that again, if she could muster up the courage. Now that she was out of the heat of the moment, she had trouble even imagining it'd been her in the middle of an orgy. Cum was all over her by the end of it when Chris and Vincent rejoined her. She Kissed Isaac too! Her belly was still full of blood, and she felt high on the energy, and the memory. Maybe—

“Natasha?”

“Ah, sorry Sire. Just, distracted.”

He nodded, and returned to his dictation. It was a nice room for quiet conversation, an office in the underground of the Elysium tower, with the typical black marble walls, but some normal chairs around a table for their laptops.

“This bowl was found in Egypt, from likely before 1000 BC, and as you can see from the bones, these belonged to a human child.”

Ok, thoughts of sex gone. She'd thought they were just animal bones, but human bones, a child's at that, soured her train of thought. Probably for the best, her distracted mind was ruining her focus.

“Why human? Why a child?”

Daniel shrugged, and reached for the bowl in her hands. More than happy to give it back now that she knew what it was, and her sire put it down next to the bowls holding other body parts. Next to them were carvings in clay, old old clay.

“Before the end of the classical antiquity period, we have evidence to suggest the Greeks and Egyptians practiced haruspex and other divinations from human bodies as much as the bodies of goats and sheep. The records are difficult to decipher, hieroglyphs and whatnot. But we do know that certain groups would practice this darker form of haruspex and bone studying, and from it, acquired knowledge considered evil.” Her sire raised his hands, and quoted ‘evil’ with his fingers.

Natasha laughed. “You are t-too old to do that, Sire.”

He managed a tiny smile, and returned to the table the two of them sat at.

“These are diagrams of the liver, created by ancient Egyptians, not dissimilar to those created by the Etruscan centuries later. Many of the symbols here a have never been translated; much of it hidden or lost to time.”

“C-Can we translate?”

“No. But, we can observe them through the same lens we use on the other occult objects. They have power, but what that power is, we do not know.” Adjusting his glasses, he peered down at one of the clay molds, and ran his gloved fingers along the symbols carved on its face. Make no nevermind he was holding a clay mold of a human liver or anything. She needed gloves.

“What does the lens show?”

“The symbols glow, but that’s it. There’s no chemical here that would make them do such, so whatever it is, is of the same nature as the ghosts the lens is also capable of showing.”

He said it so casually, ghosts, like they were normal things. They weren't! He might have accepted them as a factual part of life, but to her, they were just blurry images she could only see when looking through a weird device they called the 'lens' when the room was lit with blue flame light. Scary hands reaching out and grabbing her ankles whenever she closed her eyes.

Course now those thoughts were fighting for space against the plethora of sexual thoughts in her head. Chris's groans as she milked him. Vincent covering her breasts in cum. Brad filling her as she drank his warm blood down. Jessy, watching it all.

Enough. You're not a horny young man, you're a professional. Act like it.

"M-Maybe we should ... see about connecting items?"

"What do you mean?"

"Well, we have a lot of occult things, and ... and we know the lens shows something. We know certain items can interact, like the Prince showed with the charm and the ... the ... shrunken head." Bringing up the memory made her face scrunch up. "P-Process of elimination. Check each item against each item."

"Could take a lot of work. The inventory on these items is large."

Her bosses had a treasure trove of the world's darkest, vilest, vilest, most disturbing objects. Wonderful.

"If it's the only way we can look for other interactions, then—"

The door swung open, and cracked against the wall. Daniel didn't react, but Natasha jumped in her seat with a meep, and looked to the storming Prince.

She was normally so calm, so calculating, so strong and confident and everything a leader should be. The woman before her was a raging typhoon, and Natasha's beast curled up and whimpered inside her gut. This was a look behind the curtain she wasn't looking forward to.

"I should kill her," Antoinette said, hands in fists at her side.

Daniel shook his head. "You know it will only cause more trouble, Prince."

"She dares to squat in my city, and proceeds to taunt me with her bargaining? I should rip her limb from limb."

The sheriff sighed, put down the clay mold, and turned his head to look at her directly.

"Could you?"

Natasha smirked. Of course the Prince could kill ... whoever this person was they were angry about. Woman was five centuries old, and she'd seen the Prince slaughter Kindred with her bare hands, while being shot from several guns.

But Antoinette snarled and looked down.

"Perhaps, but ... perhaps not." She sighed, long and heavy, before she joined them at the table. "With Viktor, Tony, and Lucas all dead, I thought perhaps calmness would settle upon the city. But now that damn Begotten has—" She stopped short when her eyes met Natasha's. "Ah, I am sorry my dear. This is horrible of me, to lament to you and your sire like this."

"Ah, it's ... it's ok, Prince." Mental note: ask what a Begotten is later.

“You will get to see a side of me only Daniel is familiar with. And Jack on occasion.” She smirked, leaned back in her chair, folded a leg over the other, and rested her chin in her palm. Like a young girl, fantasizing. Like Natasha was just a few seconds ago. “Poor boy. I scared him terribly, that night Lucas arrived at my Black Hall uninvited.”

Natasha blinked, and tried to offer the ancient creature a genuine smile, but all she managed was a nervous tick. Genuine, one-to-one normal talk, with the Prince. Jack may have gotten used to it, but she certainly hadn't.

Silence followed as Natasha waited for the Prince to finish her thoughts. But that might have been a bad idea, as with a slow dawning of some hidden realization, the Prince eyed her, quizzically, and Natasha froze. Uh oh.

“My dear Natasha, I have a job for you.”

Daniel raised a brow, and looked between the two of them. “I thought the investigation was to be my concern, Prince?”

“I need you looking into Azamel more, old friend. She is hiding something, and that Mark fellow ... well, you were there.”

Secret information. Secret information. Natasha was tempted to raise her hands and cover her ears rather than listen. She was used to dealing with such things with the Invictus, but the Invictus were a large corporation of contracts and money and power, with one hand oblivious to the other's actions. The Prince was all that and then more, condensed into a single person; every limb knew everything. One misspoken sentence from her, and Natasha could be walking out of the office with information that could land her dead by sunrise.

Or you're just exaggerating everything because you've become a scared baby, Natasha. You used to be a right hand of the Invictus, what's the matter with you?

“Natasha,” Antoinette said, “we have been warned of an unusual threat. We do not understand its nature, or understand its motives. All we know is that our old acquaintance Azamel has warned of us spiders.”

“Sp-p-piders?”

The Prince nodded, and reached across the table to grab one of the bowls. This one had tiny bones in it, some feathers, and some dried up bits that looked like prunes that Natasha was pretty sure weren't prunes.

“Azamel is holding information from me, Miss Vola, and I do not appreciate her nerve, her bargaining, or her gall. But, in order to play the game, I need to know every detail.”

“Every d-detail?”

“Of course. How do you think I became Prince? To risk is to throw away what could be yours, if only you were to exercise patience, and cunning.” She leaned in, put her elbows on the table, and smirked at the tiny Mekhet. “And while Azamel may think I have grown lax or careless in my time, she will learn otherwise.”

Natasha wasn't so sure. The Prince was a softer person now, even with her anger. But then, she was ten fold older than Natasha, so perhaps it was the young Mekhet's ignorance. She couldn't imagine what sort of roots Antoinette had planted in the city, what sort of safeguards. The Invictus often suspected a corporation, a talented agent, an unusual city district, were all her doing, but they had no way to be sure. She was crafty.

“I ... I d-d-did see spiders.”

“Oh?”

“Just regular spiders! Regular sp-piders, my first day. On the stairs.” They were just regular looking spiders after all, and she dismissed the silly idea with a hand wave.

Daniel and Antoinette both hmmm’d their interest though.

“All the more reason I am giving you this task, Miss Vola. You have a great eye for detail, and that is what I need. Azamel told us the spider threat grows in the tunnels, beneath Devil’s Corner. You are to investigate and discover what you can.”

Spiders, ugh. She may have been a Kindred, but she was still a girl.

“Yes P-Prince.”

Maybe she’d get to see Damien again?

~~2010~~

~~Ashley~~

Ashley sat up. Her bed. Her lovely, awesome, comfortable, super amazing bed. And normally it'd be empty.

“Julee, get up.”

“Nnnng.” Her friend rolled over and sank her face into her pillow.

“Get up!”

“Nng. Nnnn.”

Ashley rolled her eyes, and pulled down the blankets to expose the brunette. Both of them were in pajamas, pink for Ashley, purple for Julee.

It was Ashley's bedroom, and the pink blankets were covered in pictures of kitties with big anime eyes. Julee preferred darker colors, and dogs instead of cats. Cause she was dumb. Cause cats were the best.

“Nnnnno. Professor taking day off.”

Lazy ass professor. Julee was breezing on through her writing class cause the man was content to let his students not bother with class. Ashley's Language Arts teacher wasn't so nice. Second year university introduced some odd professors with weird habits.

Ashley crawled over onto Julee's back, and straddled her. Her friend didn't respond with anything more than a whimper and groan, and tried to dislodge her with as much effort as a comatose bear. Pathetic. Ashley laughed and lay down on her friend, elbows to the blankets.

"Got a boyfriend yet?"

Julee groaned and shook her head. "No. I thought Rick liked me, but I tried getting his attention a little more. Smiled at him, batted my eyelashes and stuff. Nothing."

"He's just a man, dumbass. You can't flirt and expect him to pick up on it. Get some of those marshalling wands those airplane guide dudes use, and guide him right to your pussy," Ashley said. And she laughed. Julee didn't think it was so funny though, and she whined into the pillow. Ashley's extra pillow. "Well fine, if you're going to be a baby, go to your room."

"No. I'm lonely."

"Oh I get it. You want love." Ashley snuggled her chest into Julee's back, and squeezed her legs around her hips a bit.

"Not from you anymore! Meanie." Julee squirmed a little more, but gave up a few seconds later. As per usual, girl gave up on anything after three seconds, even escaping Ashley's advances.

"I don't believe that."

Ashley put a kiss on Julee's ear, before her lips lowered to find her friend's neck.

Friends with benefits. Neither of them had boyfriends yet, or had ever slept with a man. But they'd found each other when they came to university, and when Ashley had flirted with her a little, just for fun, she'd been surprised to find Julee receptive. University was a time for experimentation after all, and a little alcohol later, the two got naked and spent the night having sex.

And kept having sex. A lot. University had a way of destroying inhibitions. Something to do with all the alcohol probably. And the weed. And just being surrounded by horny young adults all the time. And it was easier than finding boyfriends, men they could get along with.

Ashley leaned her weight onto one elbow, and slid the other hand down Julee's body. The brunette didn't resist; never did. Much as Ashley was often the initiator, Julee was always ready to receive. She slid her hand under the waistband of her friend's pants, down the crease of her lovely dancer's butt, and down to the folds of her delicate little pussy.

Julee wriggled and squirmed, but only enough to give the pretense she didn't want this. Ashley was a hornball, but Julee was like paper in front of a fire. Normally, perfectly calm, but the moment someone touched her with a flame, Julee was primed for major fucking. Any guy would be lucky to have her; a kiss on the neck and she was wet. Literally. Ashley's fingers found just a hint of moisture budding in the entrance of her canal, and she'd been teasing her a total of one minute.

“God you are such a slut.”

“Not ... nice...” Julee's voice melted into little murmurs, and her wriggling ceased. Which was Ashley's signal to get off of her, and pull off her pants. Girl didn't resist, not even a little. Not even as Ashley flipped her over, and grinned down at her.

“Legs all nice and smooth. Pussy too. Looking to jump Rick on the first date?”

“ ... maybe.”

Ha. Ashley got down on her elbows between her friend's toned thighs, and leaned in to put a gentle kiss on her friend's clit. Immediate mewls. Ah, Julee Julee, acting so sweet and shy and innocent all the time, and craving sex more than any guy she knew. Ashley blamed the internet and all the porn.

Chuckling, she started to plant tiny kisses on Julee's swelling clitoris. But five seconds in, the door knocked, ruining what could have been an orgasm-filled morning.

"Yo, Ash! Come on, you're going to be late." Brad, yelling outside the apartment door.

"Shit, right. Coming! Twenty minutes!"

"What the fuck, twenty minutes?" he called. Yeah they were going to be late at this rate, fuckity fuck.

"Up up," Ashley said, and hopped off the bed. "Got twenty minutes to get dressed."

Julee sat up, and glared daggers at her. "Yooouuu bitch."

---

Ashley sat down in the seat, and grinned her biggest jackass grin at the old fogy next to her. He had no business staring at her like she didn't belong. She was dressed nice! It was a beautiful, strapless thing with poofy shoulders, black with black gloves, and tasteful cleavage. Probably just staring cause she was young; his wife stared at her the same way.

Julee sat down next to her, and Ashley leaned in to her friend.

"We're surrounded by old farts."

Julee giggled, and pushed her back into her seat. She was wearing a similar dress to Ashley, but she opted for white instead of black, and her dress went down to the heel while Ashley's stopped at the knee. They were a matching set, as per usual. She liked that.

"Yeah well, I hear the Pale Lady likes to mix things up with her playing. Attracts the young and old."

"Yeah." Brad, looking delightful in his tux, leaned in over Julee to join the conversation. "I hope Chris was right."

Brad's boyfriend. The man had great musical taste, and he managed to find something most people could enjoy. But Ashley and Julee were different, they listened to music for more than just background noise. So, a little skepticism was warranted.

It was a damn nice place though, and Brad had the tickets, so it was a free nice place. The Grand Manorla Opera House! Fucking massive, with rows upon rows of seats, and a balcony, box seats, a fancy chandelier, and glorious, grand, red drapes. Drapes that would kill a man if you dropped them on him. The seats were so soft and lined with the same red color, and the railings between rows were colored ivory. And the stage, oh god the stage was massive. The red drapes were down, lined with ivory thread, and above were ivory dragons carved into the decor. So beautiful.

The building housed fifteen hundred people, and from the looks of it, every seat was full. Lot of talking going on, everyone some degree of excited or worried the show would be bad. No one had ever heard of the Pale Lady before a few weeks ago, when she'd suddenly started doing shows. No advertising though, just pure word of mouth that spread. And while Ashley and Julee weren't really into classical music, they appreciated it, and a lot of their musical taste included music with a lot of depth and complexity. Just because it was played on a synthesizer instead of a cello didn't mean it couldn't have depth or beauty!

The lights started to dim. The crowd started to quiet. Ashley's legs started to bounce. What would she sound like? What would she look like? Didn't matter, so excited! Just visiting the Manorla was a treat.

The curtains parted, and the crowd went silent. A woman sat in the center of the stage upon an armless chair, a simple thing of wood and black cushion. The lights were dim except for a single one pointed at the musician from a distant corner, casting her shadow long behind her. The cello stood proud on the stage, and she held it by the neck with finesse. Ashley didn't know what graceful looked like, until she saw the pale woman holding the monstrous instrument.

Whoever she was, she wore a black dress, sleeveless, with tiny straps over the shoulders. The skirt was long, very long, longer than her legs so it hid her feet. But it was the black veil over her head that had Ashley staring. It was see-through, and the light exposed the shape of her, the long hair that fell behind. White hair? It went well with her pale skin. Maybe she was very old? She was too far for Ashley to see her skin well, but she certainly didn't seem old.

And she seemed ... majestic. She wasn't doing anything, just sitting there and waiting, bow in her hand and still upon the strings of the cello. No sound, no movement, nothing. Pure, distilled silence. Ashley listened, straining her hearing as best she could, until the sound of people breathing around her, and the sound of her own heartbeat was apparent. Everyone in the room waited, doing the same thing she was doing, until she was sure some people started holding their breath in hopes to hear the Pale Lady do something. Anything.

At last, she started to play. Slow, quiet, a deep note that she dragged out for a long time, with a touch of waver. Like a crying mountain. The urge to start writing danced on Ashley's fingers, but she'd have to wait until the show was done, then she could vomit words on the page until she had something worth sharing. Focus on the show for now. Another note, higher pitched, but still slow, shaking, a lamenting breeze.

The Pale Woman started to play faster. And louder. What were once quiet notes rose until the stirring and breathing of the audience was buried in the power of the instrument. Other instruments joined in, invisible until more lights joined the stage to expose the new musicians. A drummer, a bassist, a guitarist, and a keyboardist — definitely not a piano, as each note hit wasn't the typical vibration of piano string, but the digital-yet-beautiful sound of a choir. And the bass and guitar were electric! Electric, with distortion, but it was the cello that lead them with a louder, heavier sound. It was her show, and everyone else was there to support her playing.

And play she did. What had started as gentle melodies and eventual loud melodies, evolved into a flurry of notes that grabbed Ashley's ears, and pulled her into a skyward journey. The girl struggled to keep her eyes open; she wanted to close them so she could let the sound take her into the clouds in a rapid ascent before the turbulence and shredding notes spun her around. But she kept them open, desperate to see the motions, the way the Pale Lady almost banged her bow against the strings. The guitar was playing the classical melody, the cello was playing the shredding solo.

For an hour. Over an hour, the song went through movements, evolving the melody but keeping its structure. Key changes, time signature changes, tempo changes. For an hour, the Pale Lady and her four companions mixed classical music with metal with unique blends, with pinches of jazz, blues, and rock. But always it came back to the classical sound, controlled and dominated by the cello.

When it was over, the curtains came down, and the crowd roared with clapping. Not many cheers; such was the nature of the old and conservative. But when Ashley glanced their way, she could see they were smiling, nodding, looking at each other and chatting about the unique but enjoyable sound.

“Wow,” Julee said, “that was ... really good.”

“An hour is too short!” Ashley whined, threw her hands up, and collapsed into the seat. “I mean, I guess it was one song from beginning to end.”

“Yeah.” Brad nodded and got up from his chair. “I owe Chris. Come on, let’s get out of here, I want to tell him about the concert. And I got an essay to write.”

Bleh, no time to bask in the post-music bliss. Ashley nodded and got up along with Julee, and the three of them shuffled there way out into the isle.

“Excuse me.” A man came up to join them, an usher, dressed sharp and offering a warm, gentle smile. Guess he didn’t hate his job. “The Pale Lady noticed a few rather young faces in the audience, and she was hoping you could join the post-show reception.”

The two girls squealed and jumped up and down a few times, before they stopped, looked around at all the old people staring, and blushed.

“Fuck. I can’t,” Brad said, “gotta go. You girls cool taking a taxi home?”

“I am,” Ashley said. “Julee?”

Her friend nodded.

“Very good. If you’ll come with me.” The man bowed, and started walking toward the reception hall.

Night was getting better and better.

---

Wow. Wow. Wow.

Ashley couldn't stop fidgeting. Where to put her hands? Where do you normally put your hands!? She held them to her stomach, and squeezed on her fingertips, one at a time, as she watched the Pale Lady move down the isle. Still wearing her veil, but the lighting was strong enough to show her face through it, and expose the woman underneath as more than a silhouette.

She was beautiful. Ashley thought maybe she'd be the type to look great for her age, one of those sixty-year-old actors who still have smooth skin and great figures. How they did that, no one knew. Fountain of youth, deal with the devil, who knows. But the woman behind the veil looked to be in her thirties, despite her long white hair. Maybe she dyed it?

The Pale Lady did not do autographs. People tried to get them, but she smiled and shook her head as she walked past the rich and old, people dressed in all sorts of fancy clothes that had Ashley jealous. Not that she wanted to look like a plump old lady, but that she wanted to wear an expensive dress that looked like it came out of that Titanic movie, giant jewel necklace included. But the Pale Lady didn't seem to care about the jewelry, the dresses, the men attached to the dresses, or any of that. She looked only at the faces as she passed by, looking through them as much as anything.

The isle was lined with black stanchions with white ropes, easily knocked over if someone wanted to. But the Pale Lady needed little in the way of security; a couple of guards at each end was plenty. There was a man too, someone wearing a trench coat and glasses walking behind her. Husband? He wore gloves, so if he had a ring Ashley couldn't see it, and the Pale Lady didn't wear a ring anyway. Who was he then?

“She’s so tall,” Julee said, leaning toward Ashley to put her lips against her ear.

“I know. And ... curvy.” Possessed by evil gremlins, her eyes wandered up and down the woman’s body. She hadn’t really noticed it from so far, and with the Pale Lady holding the cello in the way, but the woman was voluptuous. Like, really. How did a woman with a small waist have such wide hips, and such a massive rack? Ashley snorted on a chuckle, and Julee elbowed her in the side.

The Pale Lady grew closer, and closer, and Ashley and Julee stared up at her as she started to pass.

But then she stopped, and turned to look down at the two of them. Ashley’s mouth parted slowly, and her eyes stared through the veil at the beautiful woman. Luscious red lips, and ... red eyes?

“You two are quite young to enjoy such an event, non?” she said.

Talking. The Pale Lady was talking to them. A subtle French accent, and a subtle smile to go with it. Ashley had to say something back. Say something back!

Julee tried first. “I ... um ... we’re...”

“We were really moved!” Ashley said. Or squeaked. She had to speak up to get over the volume of the surprised crowd; everyone had leaned in to hear the Pale Lady speak.

“Y-Yeah! It had layers, but also, catchy riffs. Instead of just being snooty, it was emotional, and accessible, and ... and...” Julee blinked, and looked left and right. The crowd had gone quiet in seconds once she’d started talking. People were leaning in for more than just the Pale Lady, they were leaning in to hear the two young girls talk about the famous cellist’s music. Some had taken out notepads, and others had taken out cameras.

Their pictures would be in the paper! Quotes taken out of context!

Ashley's palms started to sweat a bit, and she made her best fake smile.

"It was beautiful," she said. Something nice and quotable, right?

The Pale Lady chuckled, and turned to face them completely. "It is rare to find the young interested in such music. Would you like to return with me to my suite? I would love to speak with ones of your age."

"Back to your place?" Julee blinked, looked at Ashley, and gulped. "What do you think?" she said.

"I think hell yeah!"

---

She hadn't expect the night to go like this, not at all. By now she expected to be back home with Julee, texting Brad about the show, maybe eating ice cream and watching some TV. Definitely giving Julee that orgasm she'd teased her friend with. Hell, maybe getting one herself.

She did not expect to be sitting inside a luxurious changing room, complete with those silly old mirrors with the light bulbs fitted to them, and a purse on the desk. The room had little else besides that, some cabinets, a fridge, and a couple of very, very comfy couches. No dresses though, or all the stuff a performer might need access to. Whoever this woman was, she didn't like to expose herself or her wardrobe.

"I wonder what she wants to talk about?" Julee said. The two of them were on the couch, hip to hip, and rocking a bit with their anxiety.

“Guessing our lives and how they relate to her music. You gotta admit there weren’t many young people there.”

“Yeah but the old people looked like they were kind of surprised by the music too.”

Ashley nodded, got up, and started to pace, each step a little kick of the foot in front of her while she had her hands hooked behind her. The Pale Lady didn’t exist except for a few concerts. No CDs, no radio, no MP3s or whatnot to be found online, except for some shitty recordings from people who managed to sneak in some devices. What a weird combination of conspiracy and classic intrigue.

The door opened. Ashley squeaked and jumped onto the couch, put her hands on her knees, and beamed an awkward smile.

The Pale Lady came into the room, still wearing her veil, but alone this time. So tall and curvy, and the way she walked, so calculated and refined, so controlled and deliberate. Such a stereotype! The powerful, intelligent woman who controlled people’s desires with the sway of her hips, and their thoughts with the sound of her lips.

Ooh, she’d have to write that one down later.

Smiling at the two of them, the Pale Lady removed her veil and set it aside. Long white hair, not wrinkled or thin, came down to her hips, thick and wavy. Her skin was pale and her lips dark red. And she did have red eyes! Such fancy contact lenses. She looked like some sort of beautiful succubus with the red gaze, and she met Ashley’s blatant staring unwaveringly.

“Bonjour,” she said.

“H-Hello,” they said.

“Quite in sync you two are. Close friends?”

Ashley and Julee nodded, but only Ashley spoke up. “We are. And, uh ... we um ... we really liked the show, and—”

“Please, we need not speak of the music. I understand you enjoyed it, and your summary of why at the reception was fitting.” Nodding, the Pale Lady came and sat upon the couch that sat at an angle across from them.

Well, guess she didn’t want what Ashley figured she wanted then.

“Then, um ... what do you want to talk about?” Julee said.

“You two, of course.”

Ashley blinked several dozen times. “Us? But ... but we’re just a couple of university students.”

The Pale Lady smiled at them, and folded one leg over the other while one of her hands drifted down her leg. Ashley couldn’t help but follow the fingers with her eyes before forcing herself to look back up. The long skirt had some heft to it, and it molded to the woman’s legs enough for Ashley to see their curves a little as well.

“You two have a spark in you,” she said. “If I may ask, are you two artists?”

“We are, we are!” Ashley leaned forward and set her hands on her bouncing knees. “I write a lot, romance sorta stuff. Julee writes music, and paints. We also do dancing stuff, and sometimes gymnastics!”

“Delightful.” Her eyes scanned them up and down a few times, but they lingered on Julee for a little longer. One of her eyebrows raised inquisitively before the Pale Lady let her eyes drift with thought. “You two have passion.”

“Y-Yes,” Ashley said. She looked over at Julee too, but her friend was looking down, squirming. The Pale Lady’s look must have stirred something in her. “We both really like what we do. Julee’s trying to learn how to sing too. But she’s a quiet songbird, hasn’t found her wings yet.”

“Ashley!” Julee blushed and wriggled, like a worm on a hook. “I ... I uh...”

“Do not worry, Julee,” the Pale Lady said, “from one musician to another, I would not ask you to perform without planning for it. Such demands can be cruel, even from supportive friends.”

Oh damn, that was a really elegant way of calling Ashley mean.

“S-Sorry,” Ashley said.

Julee shook her head and smiled at her though, both of them. “It’s ok.”

“We may all be perhaps somewhat tense. Here.” The beautiful woman got up, and retrieved a bottle of wine from the cabinet. “To loosen our tongues and our legs.”

Ashley snorted on the laughter that jumped out of her. “Um, sure! But uh, you sure you want a couple of university students getting drunk? We have a tendency to ... I dunno, get rowdy.” Wow, no idea the Pale Lady could be this fun, or make jokes.

The Pale Lady smirked. “All the better.”

---

“Ok, ok.” Ashley leaned in toward the Pale Lady. Antoinette was her name apparently—French! So pretty. “Ok, I have a confession. This ... mmmay not be the first time I’ve been drunk ... this week.”

The three of them were sitting on the same couch now, Antoinette at one end, Julee at the other, Ashley in the middle. Even drunk, Julee was a quiet little butterfly, but at least she smiled a lot instead of being shy, more eye contact and more giggles.

“You are university students,” Antoinette said, “and artists as well. I expect some adventurousness from women your age.”

Adventurousness! Yes, awesome. “Yeah! Total adventurers. We do crazy things, like ... well, we came here!”

“Oui. Imagine my surprise that a few younger people were in my audience.” The beautiful, busty, gorgeous, crazy hot woman smiled down at them, and slipped an arm behind Ashley to set it on the couch’s back. Slick and suave.

“We do more than try out new things like this though!” Ashley took another long, long sip of her drink, and elbowed Julee almost hard enough for her friend to drop her glass. “Julee here poses for an art class! In some very skimpy clothing.”

“Shh ... you’re yelling.”

“I am not!” Maybe she was. “Julee and I both do gymnastics, so sometimes we’re asked to do poses. I got bored, but Julee, I think she likes it, everyone staring at her beautiful body.”

“Ashley!” Her friend frowned at her, but it faded quick as alcohol overpowered it with more smiles and giggling. Followed by more drinking of course.

“You two are delectable,” Antoinette said. “Your boyfriends must be quite enamored.”

“Psshaw. I’m single, Julee’s single. I mean we keep each other company in bed sometimes, but no boys in our lives yet. Ever. Sad!” She threw up her spare hand and lamented to the cruel universe. “We’re going to die virgins.”

“Ashley!” Like a parrot Julee was. “TMI.”

“It is ok, Julee. I find this all very endearing. And besides, you have had sex with each other, you are virgins no longer, despite what some may say.” Antoinette grinned down at the two of them, and dragged a finger along her lip in that slow, obviously seductive way. Wait, was she seducing them? God Ashley hoped she was. The Pale Lady was so fucking pretty. “And I am sure that, when you are ready and if you desire them, bountiful sex and fulfilling relationships with men will be yours.”

“Easy for you to say!” Ashley downed another glass, and started pouring another. The Pale Lady wasn’t having any though. Weird. “You’re so beautiful and curvy. You could have any man or woman right now if you wanted. And those boobs! Are ... are they real?” She leaned in, and stared at the enormous sweater-puppies filling Antoinette’s lovely dress. The tiny straps, lack of sleeves, formfitting bust, it all accented her breasts perfectly.

“Ashley! I think you’ve had enough.” Julee reached out for her drink, but missed, despite Ashley making no attempts to dodge.

“Me? Pffft you’re falling over in your seat.”

“You’re the one hitting on our host!”

“You’re the one—”

“Girls, girls, believe me, your honesty and joyfulness are a wonder and delight.” Her chuckles were sultry, and her gaze almost predatory. “But, yes, my breasts are real you silly imp.” The goddess lowered her gaze, eyes wandering, considering, before she looked back to the two girls. “Perhaps, you would like to confirm?”

“ ... w-what?” they said together.

“Would you like to see for yourself?” The gorgeous woman didn’t even blush with her words. Instead, the arm she had draped over the back of the couch slid down to find Ashley’s hair, and the curvy woman combed it with her fingers before her palm settled on Ashley’s shoulder. Touching her, the woman was touching her.

Ashley looked over at Julee. Her friend was staring at the two of them, dumbfounded. Good, it wasn’t just Ashley confused as fuck then. Confused, surprised, and very, very tempted.

“I uh ... I know I’m drunk, so correct me if I’m wrong, but I think you’re trying to seduce me.”

“Oh, you wish that I would not?”

“No! No no. God no.” She drank some more, set the glass down, and turned on the couch to stare whole body at the beautiful woman. Julee copied her, even leaned over her shoulder a bit to join in the staring. “Just ... d-didn’t think you’d be interested in a couple of girls like us. Or girls in general.”

“Quite interested. And quite hungry.” She licked her perfect lips, and turned to expose her back. “Please, unzip me.”

Ashley gulped, and reached out for the zipper. It moved out of the way and she missed. She tried again. It moved. Everything was moving, just a little, just enough to make it hard to aim her hands. Not her first time getting drunk, but it wasn’t just that. It was her pounding heart and her flush cheeks and panting breath and everything hitting her at once that was making it so very hard to concentrate. And that back, oh god the glorious back of the beautiful goddess. No bra; that’d clash with the perfect dress and its tiny straps.

She started to unzip it. Slowly, cause that’s about the only way she could do it steadily. But damn the zipper went down far, and far, until it passed the small of Antoinette's back and exposed the waistband of what was, evidently, very pretty lace underwear, black.

The tall, voluptuous goddess stood up, took her shoulder straps into her hands, and pulled them down as she also leaned forward to let the dress fall from her torso. With her fingers, she pinched on the waist, and pulled it down over her hips, and further until the dress fell to her feet.

Both the young women on the couch watched her with wide eyes and dropped jaws as Antoinette stood there, naked but for her underwear that hugged her curvy figure so amazingly, Ashley could feel her body respond just staring at her. She was so tall, and the hourglass figure was almost inhuman.

The goddess turned around, and smiled down at the two girls. "Please, make room."

Fucking god yes. Ashley slid over, and almost started to bounce as she waited for Antoinette to sit. She did, slowly, emphasizing each motion, making her long hair pour down her back, making her ridiculously huge, alabaster breasts hang beneath her for the moment she bent over slightly before her large, smooth butt hit the couch.

Ashley was so going to write some erotica about this, the moment she got home.

"It has been some time since I have enjoyed the touch of another." Again she looked at them, red gaze and red lips devouring them. She said she was hungry, and she looked it. "Touch me, if you wish."

Touch her if she wished? Fuck she wanted to. Yeap, going for it. Alcohol be my guide.

Ashley gulped again, and reached out for the naked goddess next to her. Her fingers found the woman's breasts, and offered some gentle squeezing, including a little lift and nudge to see them jiggle a little. So fucking real. So fucking soft, and heavy, and fucking huge.

Chuckling, Antoinette hooked both her arms on the couch's back, and smiled down at the two helplessly enamored women. Julee had reached out as well, and started caressing the woman's nearest breast, just as awestruck. Drunk Julee was fun Julee.

"You two remind me of boys," she said, devious and seductive smile never leaving, "to be so brazen, and captivated." Ok, so it might have been a little objectifying, and maybe a little boyish to obsess over breasts like they were, but how could she not? "I feel embarrassed, being the only one so exposed. Come, undress for me."

Oh god oh god oh god. Those red eyes were peering into her soul! Or something cheesy and romantic and sexual she'd have to write about later. But, damn, looking into those red eyes, Ashley couldn't stop herself from getting up, and starting to undress. Julee stared at her too, until Ashley frowned at her friend.

"Get up here too!"

Julee squeaked, but joined her, and the two girls started working on each other's dresses. Though, as they began to slip the fabrics from their shoulders, Ashley kept glancing at the Pale Lady watching them. Being under her gaze was sending all sorts of thrills and tingly feelings through her body, getting her hot, wet; no doubt accelerated by being drunk, but those eyes! Those dangerous, hungry eyes were eating the two girls up like a dragon.

The woman licked her lips, and her teeth plucked at them in that super sexy, hot, oh-god-melting way. "I will drink of both of you tonight."

---

~~Today~~

“What’re you gonna do this time?” Ashley said.

Julee shrugged, and rolled around a few times on Antoinette’s bed. “I dunno.”

“You never know! Come on, you gotta have something you wanna try.”

“I ... I don’t know. You know me, I like doing whatever the mistress wants.”

“Yeah but she’s letting us pick!” Ashley crawled on the bed toward her friend, and flopped down on top of her once Julee was on her stomach. Her friend squeaked, but surrendered quickly, as usual.

“I don’t like picking. I like letting her pick. I like letting Jack pick.”

Ashley rolled her eyes and straddled Julee’s back, weight on her knees, facing Julee’s feet. The two of them were wearing some silk boy shorts and some tight little tank tops. Lots of bubblegum candy sort of colors, blues and pinks and purples. The two of them enjoyed pairing colors off of each other, and Antoinette liked it when they did.

Ashley put her hands on Julee’s butt cheeks, and gave each of them a gentle slap. It didn’t jiggle much; the two of them were thin, lean things, after all. But, it did jiggle a little, with the small-but-toned shape of a small, fit girl’s butt. And she did love that butt, so she slapped it again, a little harder.

Julee groaned and kicked the bed a few times with her feet. “Hey, stop.”

“So I’m thinking, I’m riding Jack cowgirl style, and Antoinette can be standing in front of me, and I’m going to lick her and finger her while Jack is fucking me, and—”

“You’re being ridiculous. That position wouldn’t work, and it wouldn’t be easy or fun if it did anyway.” Julee twisted underneath Ashley until she managed to roll over onto her back, Ashley still straddling her hips.

“You’re right, you’re right. Got to think about this logistically. There are three girls and one boy. Already we’re at the issue of ... well, he’s a guy, he can’t go as long as we can.” Even if they gave him blood, eventually Jack would succumb to sexual exhaustion trying to satisfy three women.

“Unless they decide to drink us dry at the start,” Julee said.

“Not gonna lie, I’d be ok with that too.” Cause having Jack inside her when his fangs pierced her neck was a whole new level of bliss that had her quivering just thinking about it. Didn’t matter how many times she had sex during the Kiss, it was always a shock. “But it’s nice to try out new things.”

“Where are they anyway? Mistress said to wait here for her.”

“Been waiting fifteen minutes, calm down,” Ashley said. She peeked over her shoulder to find Julee frowning, and she laughed before lying down on her friend, back to Julee’s chest. “ ... you ever wonder if Mistress will ... you know.”

“ ... change us?”

“Yeah. She said that, someday, she might do that. If we really wanted her to.”

“Lot of negatives with becoming a Kindred.” Julee hugged her and pat her bare belly a few times. The tank tops were barely more than bras and didn’t cover any of their stomachs. “No sun for one.”

“No more getting Kissed by Mistress or Jack.”

“But, we’d be vampires. Immortal. And we could be the ones Kissing humans instead.”

“We’re already immortal, as long as we keep getting Kindred blood.”

Julee shook her head. “You know that stops the moment we stop getting blood. If we were vampires, we could take any human’s blood, and live ... live forever.”

Wait, when did the conversation flip?

“You sure you don’t want it?” Ashley said.

“I ... no, not yet at least. I like working on my music, my stuff, you know? If we’re Kindred, we can’t just have fun anymore, we’d have to ... be a part of their world, in a real way. The sort of way that ... has things like Damien at our door ... with his goons.”

Yeah, that had not been a good time. Not a good time at all.

“Not sure I want to be part of that world either.” But, at the same time, being Antoinette’s ghouls, awesome as it was, was a dead end. No need to say it, Julee knew; Antoinette had told them about the Kindred world not long after they became ghouls, and the potential for them to join it. And that while they were ghouls, she’d protect them from all things, and they’d be free to live lives pursuing their interests.

But once they were Kindred, the rules would change. They’d be subject to all the harsh realities Kindred faced. And maybe worst of all, they’d no longer be Antoinette’s pets. No more nights with Antoinette, no more cuddling into her arms and pretending all the problems Kindred had didn’t exist. She doubted Antoinette would ever share Jack with another vampire.

She laughed and shook her head. The worries of a ghoul. She had all the time in the world, literally, to make her choice. And that was even assuming Antoinette ever gave it to them. They'd become Kindred, young and easy targets for other Kindred to exploit, trick, and manipulate. Like Jack.

Ashley giggled again as she thought of the man. Lately he'd been hunting more on his own, coming to join them with more blood in his belly, instead of getting it from them. Meant he didn't have to drink from them as much, which meant more time spent having sex, which was always awesome.

Speak of the devil. Antoinette and Jack came down to the stairs, side by side, both in suits. Jack looked so adorable in his suit, a cross between manly and charming. Mistress on the other hand looked like a modern day queen in her gray power suit, long skirt, low-heel shoes, and a white shirt underneath. Ashley and Julee never wore business clothes, way too uncomfortable, and way too not-what-an-artist-would-ever-wear sorta stuff. She had her pride as a writer to think about.

"I am sorry we are late, my pets," Mistress said. "Jack and I were discussing manners upon which Kindred can hunt. My love is becoming quite the seducer."

Ashley blinked, looked at Julee, and blinked a few more times before she sat up on her knees on the bed.

"Um, you're teaching him to seduce people, Mistress?"

"Only so that he may feed when he wishes, when he requires nourishment. Jack shares his bed with no one but myself, and my precious ghouls." Mistress walked over to the wall, and hung up her jacket on a dragon hook. "Do not worry, I believe I promised you both that tonight, you would be in charge of the bed, yes?" Antoinette laughed, a lovely, angelic sound, before she started undoing the zipper of her skirt and slid it off.

“Y-Yes!” Ashley bounced on the bed a few times, until the bouncing made her drift into Julee and knock her onto her side. “Yes, and I have lots of ideas.”

“That is good.” Mistress nodded, and undid the buttons of her shirt, which always grabbed everyone’s attention. Her black bra was huge; it had to be to contain her bosom. “Jack fed on two kine tonight. I do believe he is quite satisfied for blood, and aching to indulge in the touch of a woman.”

“Two?” Julee said, and they looked to Jack. The man squirmed and shifted around, little smiles coming through.

Once upon a time, Ashley thought maybe his shy attitude had been a facade, but she soon discovered the boy was both shy and intelligent. And blunt, when outside the bedroom. A certain personality she knew had a brutal side; she’d seen such types at university, and when they got truly upset, their words destroyed people.

But in the bedroom, he was a timid thing. Slowly but surely, he was growing more confident in his sexual side, and every night Ashley and Julee spent with him, they could see more of it. Still mostly timid though.

Ashley grinned. Human blood was quite an aphrodisiac for Kindred when they let it, so if Jack was filled to the rim, they could have some fun with him, and perhaps coax a little more of his sexual beast out of its shell.

She hopped off the bed and jogged over to Antoinette, before standing up on her toes to lean in and whisper.

“I don’t think Julee wants to decide things in the bedroom.”

“Yes, I expected as much. And you?” Mistress whispered back, grinning a sly little devil grin. The ancient Daeva was more than willing to indulge Ashley her silly games, and she adored her mistress for it.

“Maybe ... you could drink her, but not too much. And when she’s super exhausted but still awake, Jack can pound her rough. Really rough.” Rough stuff. They rarely engaged in the rough-and-tumble sort of sex; Antoinette preferred a slower pace, and Julee was too submissive to challenge it. Not Ashley though! Nope, fuck that, she wanted to see the sheets move and the bed shake tonight.

Antoinette’s grin remained, and she pat Ashley on the shoulder before sliding off her pantyhose. Oh, those long long alabaster legs, thick and toned and curvy and smooth. And the Prince wore black underwear that bordered somewhere between work clothes, and sexy lace with a high hip, almost a thong. Such was the way of Daeva, to always look pretty, even if it was uncomfortable to wear all night.

The Prince walked to the bed, sat upon its edge, and motioned to Ashley.

“Ashley will be in charge tonight.”

Julee squeaked. “She will?”

“Indeed.” Antoinette reached out to pat Julee’s leg, and smiled her benevolent goddess smile. No need to say that she knew Julee didn’t want to be in charge; they’d known each other a long time. “Jack, please disrobe completely, blush for us, and come sit in the center of the bed.”

Little Jack — well, little for a guy — nodded, excited smile sneaking its way onto his face, before he started undressing. This was a pretty normal part of the routine, the girls watching him as he got naked, and then watching him as he blushed.

Such an attractive little man, Jack Terry. Ashley and Julee had been dancers and gymnasts when they became ghouls, and they kept up their physical activity to maintain their lean, agile bodies. Jack's body was similar, if more defined with muscle, abs, a beautiful iliac furrow on his hips, and pleasantly strong shoulders on his small frame. She'd worked with male gymnasts of a similar shape, though they typically stood three or four or twelve inches taller than the tiny Ventrue.

That didn't change how sexy he was. Every day he got a little more confident, and every day it made him a little sexier. Even now, as he crawled onto the bed with his shaft already hard between his legs, he offered Ashley a tiny grin. Not his usual, shy, quiet smile, but a real grin, a sexual I'm-looking-forward-to-this grin. Made her want to wrap her legs around him right there; but she had to wait. Not part of the plan. And she had to be careful. Jack was Antoinette's romantic love, and if Ashley got a little too bold, she might get a slap for it.

"Ok, Julee! Get naked, and lie down on your back."

Her friend, grumbling and giving her the evil eye, slid out of her underwear and shirt, and lay on the bed. On her back like that, she looked like a meal, and Ashley shivered when she looked at the mistress and the mistress's love. They were looking at Julee like she was, indeed, a meal, licking their lips and eyes roaming her body. Guess Jack could still eat, despite his full belly. Kindred could do that, she knew, eat until they were overindulged. Didn't do anything to a vampire other than give them more energy.

"Are we to enjoy ourselves, my pet?" Mistress said.

"Yes, yes! Feast on her." Ashley, vibrating with energy, sat herself by Julee's head, and grinned the biggest, vilest grin she could as Antoinette and Jack got onto their knees beside the meal. Girl probably thought she was going to feed both vampires in a glorious double-bite Kiss. Very pleasurable, but not what Ashley wanted to see tonight.

Antoinette leaned over, whispered something to Jack, and offered Ashley a sly, devil wink, before the busty woman knelt down over Julee's side. Jack took up a kneeling position on her other side. All three of them, smiling down at the defenseless Julee. It was enough to have her friend squirming, nipples hardening, and her thighs pressing together. A bona fide feast.

The Prince held up her hand, stopping Jack from joining in. Oh, oh! The Prince wanted Julee first, before Jack got to have her. She lay beside her ghoul, huge breasts squished to the prey's chest, and she set her lips upon Julee's neck while her fingers danced down the girl's naked stomach, before finding her clitoris.

Julee's moans were quick to come. The Prince was a true master, able to summon the girl's arousal in mere seconds with just the correct amount of pressure, the right motions, the gentle caress that trapped her clit between two fingers. Ashley bit her lip at the sight of Julee's bare, smooth pussy under the Prince's finger, and how her thighs rubbed together while she wriggled like a worm on a hook.

"Are ... you are all going to ... watch?" Julee said.

"No." Antoinette leaned in closer, and put her lips on Julee's neck. "I am preparing the meal."

Julee's moans turned into a squeal, and then quiet mewls, as Antoinette started to drink her. God, it was so hot how Julee's arms came up and half-hugged the Prince, even as her blood drained away, and the Prince continued to play with her clit. Far faster a jump to the Kiss than Julee was used to, no doubt. She probably thought Ashley was getting her out of the way, so Ashley wouldn't have to share the mistress and Jack with her friend tonight.

Oh how wrong she was.

Antoinette was so good. So good, and beautiful, and amazing, and so skilled! She drank Julee very slowly, slower than Ashley had thought possible, and she leaned over her friend to smile down at her as Julee melted away. All the while, the mistress continued to gently massage Julee's pussy, her labia, her clitoris, in that special way she did when she wanted to get the girl's horny, but not let them cum.

Until she got just a little rougher, and pushed her over the edge. Julee whimpered, almost sobbed, as her hips pushed upward against the Prince's hands, and her body shivered with the pleasure waves Ashley knew well. That sweet, delicious orgasm during a Kiss, the way bliss rippled through the muscles down to the toes, and the Kiss forcing the muscles to relax between clenches so the pleasure wouldn't stop. It just pulsed through you, flowed outward from between the legs up into your chest and forced you to feel every wave of the orgasm. Even a sharp, quick one from the clitoris was an exhausting experience during the Kiss. Exhausting, and soaking.

Antoinette raised her head, and smiled down at the victim. Ashley did too, cause damn how could she not. In only a few minutes, Julee had gone from zero arousal, to arousal overload. Blushing skin, wet thighs, panting whimpers, and half-closed eyes. The Kiss was so damn awesome. Ashley could have breathed on Julee's neck and probably made her cum again.

“Still with us?” she said to her friend.

Julee managed a wavering squeeeee.

Laughing, Ashley lay down by her friend's head, and waited. The Prince tapped Jack on the shoulder and motioned for him to move to Julee's legs. And as he did, Antoinette picked Julee up like a feather, and flipped her over.

“Mm ... what ... what're you...” Poor girl was totally exhausted, drained of blood, and oozing sex. Literally. Flipping her showed the copious amounts of her juices dripping down her bare thighs; damn girl didn't need the Kiss to get super horny in seconds. But the Kiss made it all the better.

Jack got behind her between her legs, and pulled up on her hips. Poor girl was soon on her knees, ass in the air, arms limp and strewn across the blankets, face and cheek to the bed.

"I know you've been wanting to ask Jack to give you a proper fucking," Ashley said. "Welp, you took too long!"

"Wha ... what? Nnnnn!" Her silly attempts to communicate disappeared into a loud squeak as Jack lined his cock up with her entrance, and yanked her toward him. Her tight little butt jiggled for a moment as it impacted against the boy's lower abdomen, complete with the wet smack of flesh against soaked flesh.

"Oh my," Antoinette said. She lay down as well, opposite of Ashley alongside Julee, so all three of their heads were next to each other with Julee between them. "A beast has taken you, my precious."

"W ... wait ... please, I ... can't..." Julee was too exhausted to do much with her arms. They were limp on the bed, but as Jack again slammed his cock into her hard enough to make her shake, she managed to slid them forward along the blankets, and grip them in her fingers. Trying to pull herself away from him.

God that was hot.

Ashley adjusted herself a bit so she was laying parallel to Julee and Jack. She leaned in, and kissed her friend on the cheek, the ear, the neck, the lips. Had to be careful with the way Jack was pounding her; each thrust made her whole body shake, and each earned a whimper from her. Normally, such rough treatment might have earned louder grunts and moans, but the poor girl was drained. Helpless. Unable to escape Jack's rough thrusts.

Julee's eyes rolled upward as she started to shake. Her whimpers turned into tiny gasps as she struggled to breathe, and her body started to tremble on its own as Jack fucked her harder. Ashley raised a brow as she looked over at the boy, and licked her lips as she watched his muscles flex with his thrusts. Such a sexy little man; couldn't wait to ride him after, assuming Antoinette would let her.

Familiar squeaks came out of Julee, the delightful, intoxicating sound of orgasm. Ashley set a hand on Julee's naked spine, and tickled her fingers up and down her body as her friend started to cum. The girl's hands squeezed the blankets with all the strength she could muster — which was fuck all — and Ashley giggled as she leaned down to kiss the girl's shoulder while Julee trembled. Jack slowed down, eased his rapid thrusts into slow, deep motions. He'd learned from Antoinette well.

Antoinette did the same as Ashley, sliding down a little so she too was parallel to Julee and Jack. "Already? My sweet little pet, I'm afraid the beast has only begun with you."

Ashley giggled. Calling Jack a beast. He was a Kindred, but he was a small man. Deliciously sexy, but hardly a beast. Antoinette was stroking his ego; the key to any man's loins, she'd told the girls before. And it seemed to be working, as Jack grinned down at the helpless ghoul, and started to pound into her again.

"P ... please ... need ... breath..." Again, her words were cut short as Jack's thrusts reduced her to a shaking mess.

Antoinette leaned in, planted a kiss on her ghoul's cheek, and set her hand along Julee's back next to Ashley's. She joined her in teasing the girl's back, her ears, her neck, her shoulder blades, the small of her back. All a pleasant juxtaposition to Jack's rough pounding he was giving the woman. Wasn't like a man would last very long fucking that hard and fast, but where Julee had already been reduced to a sopping wet mess of arousal before Jack had even touched her, Jack hadn't been touched at all. He still had a good few minutes of some hard fucking in him, Ashley bet.

He may have, Julee may have not. Her whimpers melted into gasping pants, and her legs started to tremble. She was trying to fall over, her last defense against the boy's relentless assault, but he had her hips tight in his grip, and he continued to plunge into her despite her attempts to escape, despite her begging, despite her blatant need for a break.

So. Fucking. Hot.

The sound of wet flesh slapping grew louder. Ashley craned her head to see under where Julee's torso was collapsed to the sheets, ass in the air. Hard to see with the shaking body parts and the darkness underneath her, but with a little effort, Ashley got to watch where Jack was penetrating her.

Juices were trickling off his balls and splashing over the girl's stomach with each thrust. A lot of them. Every so often, Jack slammed into her and stayed there, balls deep, and he groaned as a tiny trickle of fluids ran down his balls again. He withdrew until only the tip of him was still inside her, and then he slammed into her again. And again, Julee's cum dripped from his body. He pulled out completely and set his cock underneath her cunt. Without his cock filling her, Julee squirted another tiny stream onto the shaft between her legs, before Jack realigned himself and buried his dick to the hilt again.

Julee, squirting. She only did that when Antoinette decided to get really dominant with her, choke her and finger her into oblivion. Ashley had a sneaking suspicion her friend would let loose more in bed with Jack if she was rendered an exhausted mess from the get go. Plan successful.

Julee's hands were no longer gripping the blankets; they'd gone limp instead, fingers lax, just like all of her despite her quivering. Even her panting had grown quiet—but still consistent. And Jack had slowed down to a more manageable fucking rhythm. Guess he wanted to last a little longer.

Ashley got onto her knees beside Jack, and hooked one arm across his back, hand over his further shoulder, so she could look down at Julee and see what he saw. Damn, that tight little ass really was jiggling with the impact. She reached out and put a hand on Julee's butt, squeezed and gripped it, and her hand rubbed up against Jack's as he continued to pound into the girl.

“Y-Yeah, just ... she's ... soaking me...” His eyes were staring, on fire, penetrating the limp thing skewered on his cock. Almost looked like he was in a frenzy of need.

“My my.” Antoinette leaned down over Julee's face, turned it to look at her, and she planted a few kisses on her cheek. “Are you drenching my love, Julee? Naughty girl.” She slipped her beautiful fingers around Julee's neck; always a turn on for Julee. She didn't squeeze though, didn't tighten or choke, just wrapped the girl's throat in a gentle grip while Jack fucked her, fucked her into a wet mess.

They definitely had to do this again in the future.

“Jack,” the Prince said, “would you like to finish the Kiss upon your prey?”

The man needed little encouragement, apparently. He reached down for Julee's body, pulled up on her waist until she was kneeling upright, back to his chest, arms dangling, head hanging forward. A little maneuvering caused her head to lull backward onto Jack's shoulder, and Jack obliged with a bite to her neck.

Ashley crawled around to kneel in front of Julee. Watching her spasm, convulse, shake as Jack started to Kiss her, suck the last bit of energy out of her, was euphoric. Jack's hands were all over her, hugging her, desperate to keep her snug to him as he continued to fuck her. Fucking his meal, as he came inside her.

“Fuuuuuuck.” Ashley looked down, and felt her knees quiver as she watched the cum leak out of Julee. Both of their cum. The girl was slipping into full-on post-Kiss coma, but still barely conscious, free to moan as Jack suckled on her neck. Moan, and not much else. So weak, so tired, body collapsed backward against Jack's chest as she shivered, and more of her cum dripped from his cock. Every so often, she squirted a tiny splash of juices, making a great mess of cum along their legs as she trembled.

And even once she was out like a light, Jack continued to fuck her. He squeezed her body tight to his, licked the bite wound until healed, but the boy still had a few more thrusts in him. Poor, sleeping Julee, cum dripping down her thighs into a pool of wetness between her knees, unable to defend herself from the 'beast's' advances, from his lust as he spent the last spurts of his cum into her sleeping body and drenched pussy.

Definitely do this again, and film it, so they could show it to Julee ... and then do it to her again.

Jack set Julee down gently beside him, and looked down at himself. Some of his fluids were still on his cock and testicles, but really it was Julee who'd made the huge mess. Boy was still hard though; belly full of blood did that. And both vamps in the room had exactly that going on.

But Antoinette had more self control than the three of them combined. With a slow, hypnotizing sway of her body, she undid the clasp of her bra and let her massive breasts fall free. And then she tossed aside her underwear, leaving her curvy body naked for the two of them to gawk at. She pushed herself back along the bed until she put her back to the bed's mountain of pillows braced against the headboard. Sitting up like that, she spread her legs a little, and motioned for Jack to come to her.

“Come to me, mon amour,” she said, French accent dripping. So cheesy on anyone else, so perfect and earned on the mistress.

Jack crawled over to her, between her spread legs, and kissed her. She was so much taller than Jack, she was like a comfy bed Jack could lay into. And he did. Often. Ashley couldn't blame him, she did too. She crawled over as well, and cuddled up against Antoinette's side. Jack may have been Antoinette's romantic love, but she was her precious, her ghoul, her friend, all before she ever met Jack. She deserved some of the action too.

“Have I been neglecting you, ma petite?” Antoinette reached out with her closer arm and slipped it around Ashley's shoulder and back. Perfect for cuddling. It was also the perfect position for Ashley to nudge her nose into the side of Antoinette's breast.

She may not have been as obsessed with the mistress's breasts as Jack — typical man — but that didn't change that Antoinette had absolutely massive breasts. Like, ridiculously massive. And so damn soft, with just the right amount of firmness to keep a good shape and—ok maybe she was a little obsessed.

She smiled into Antoinette's breast, and planted a few kisses along the underside. Jack had to move a little to make room for her, still kneeling between the mistress's legs. But, he grinned at her as he watched, before he leaned down to plant his own kiss along the same breast.

“No, get your own.” She pushed at him with her arm, but only lightly, enough to inch him toward Antoinette's other breast. The mistress laughed, and ran her fingers through Ashley's hair. Mmm, fingers, in hair. She melted into Antoinette's touch, placed a few more kisses along the contours of her breast, before her lips found the Prince's nipple. Large, puffy, aroused.

Jack did the same with her other breast, though he cast Ashley a few glances as he did. She knew that look, that was a sneaky playful look. And getting a sneaky playful look from the gorgeous boy as he gently suckled on the mistress's nipple was god damn fucking arousing.

“Am I still in charge?” she said.

“Mmhmm. For tonight, you may do as you wish.”

“Then, uh ... can Jack and I ... play with you, for a while?”

Antoinette smiled, a loving, tender smile, and her roaming hand found the back of her head to cradle her. “Oui.”

Jack slid out from between the Prince's legs and lay beside her, opposite of Ashley. Antoinette brought her legs together, one knee slightly bent, and hooked her other arm behind Jack's back and neck to cradle him the same way she was with Ashley. Tall as she was, the two shorter people in the bed fit into the crevice of her arms against her sides, and suckled on her breasts.

Ashley peeked down the mistress's legs to Jack, and licked her lips at the sight of his cock rubbing against the Prince's leg. Still wet, still soaked in cum. But the boy was more than content to wait and shift the focus to pleasing the mistress, based on the look Ashley found in his eye. On his side, he set his free arm upon the mistress's stomach, and teased along her flat belly while his lips planted more kisses along the breast that fell toward him, spilling off the sides of Antoinette's ribs with its size and weight.

It was really distracting. He was just so into it, gentle despite the hunger in his eyes, circling Antoinette's puffy nipple with his tongue so Ashley could see it peeking out from under his lips. Then he leaned in closer, let the softness of the mistress's breast mold to his face lightly, and suckled. Like a baby. Like a sexy, lean, handsome baby. Weird train of thought.

Ashley did the same thing as Jack. She snuggled into the Prince's side, and started to suckle on the mistress's nipple. In the past, breast play with the Prince was always arousing and enjoyable, but it was a precursor to sex. With Jack, he seemed almost satisfied with nothing but suckling on the Prince's nipple, and Antoinette seemed ... overjoyed with it. Not overjoyed like giggling and squealing like Ashley or Julee might, but her subdued smiles and quiet moans had mountains of weight, mountains of bliss held within them. And arousal. There was no denying the Prince was getting very very horny as the two younglings suckled on her breasts, her body letting out tiny shivers every so often, and her nipples hard and engorged. Far more aroused than she normally became from having her breasts touched. Jack had learned to not squeeze breasts, but to instead caress the curves with his fingers, and to kiss more than just the nipple, but around it, below it, beside it, all around the areola and everywhere else.

Ashley giggled. Antoinette raised a brow when she looked her way, but Ashley hid her face in her breast, and resumed suckling on her body. A kiss here, a kiss there on and around the swollen nipple filling her mouth, and Antoinette again moaned. Those quiet moans were her real moans, the ones she gave when she was getting close to cumming. Testing her hypothesis, Ashley slid a hand down Antoinette's waist, along her bare mons — so perfectly smooth — and down the lips of her pussy. Completely drenched. Hypothesis was now a working theory, Jack's persistent and consistent breast worship was turning Antoinette into a hornball for breast play.

Unable to stop herself, she sank her fingers into Antoinette's pussy. Three of them, more than enough to stretch the mistress's cunt open.

“Oh. Little imp.” Antoinette’s hand gave her ear a little pinch, before resuming cradling the back of her head. The mistress melted back, and a quiet purr escaped her as she relaxed against the bed, closing her eyes, and letting her hands drift down until they too were limp along the blankets.

To see the mistress relax so was ... amazing. She never did that with her and Julee, but the woman’s body had gone completely limp along the blankets, and more of her delicious, sultry moans escaped her. And as Ashley pushed up against her insides in slow, gentle strokes, Antoinette started to shiver.

She was cumming. Ashley had barely done anything with her fingers, only probed up against her insides a few times, and the mistress was already cumming. Juices dripped between Ashley’s fingers, and Antoinette continued to quiver as her cunt clamped down on her fingers.

Ashley raised her head and looked at Jack. The boy kept his mouth on Antoinette’s nipples, but he’d stopped suckling during her climax, and he tilted his head enough to look at Ashley as Antoinette shuddered a few more times. Before long, Jack started to suckle on the Prince again, and the woman smiled as he did, eyes still closed. Antoinette raised her hand behind Ashley, and guided her head back to her nipple before letting her arm go limp along Ashley’s back.

She wanted more.

Ashley resumed her suckling, and got a little rougher, licking with a little more force, pulling her mistress’s whole nipple and areola into her mouth and bathing it in hungry suckles. Right about now would normally be when Antoinette would pin Ashley down, finger her, Kiss her, and tuck her in goodnight. But the Prince was too busy unwinding, keeping her legs spread while Ashley fingered her instead, and let the two small people suckle on her huge breasts.

Jack's hand drifted down the mistress's belly, and down her smooth mons to find her clitoris. The Prince tensed for a second, and relaxed once again as the boy began to gently massage the nub in the way the Prince had taught him. Slowly, gently, trapping it between index and middle finger and massaging it in a consistent rhythm. Ashley had to share room with him between the mistress's legs; totally hot, two people fighting for the space to get her off. The ghoul giggled into the mistress's nipple, and started to press up against her g-spot yet again. Like Jack's touch, she kept it slow, gentle, and focused more on the woman's breast instead.

Both she and Jack snuggled into the woman's sides, and started to suckle harder. Their fingers between the woman's thighs remained gentle and tender, but their kisses and licks grew rougher. They buried their faces into the massive, soft pillows, nudged their noses into them, and pulled the mistress's areola into their mouths with suckles hard enough to make her shiver.

Antoinette's hands cradled both of their heads once again, as her muscles clamped down on Ashley's fingers. Her juices trickled down over the ghoul's knuckles, and soaked the sheets as Ashley pressed up against her insides. The beautiful mistress shivered, even squirmed a little, all so very unlike the mistress, but she let out low groan and arched her back as her orgasm worked up and down her body. The mistress knew how to milk her own pleasure — half a millennium gave a lot of practice — and she squeezed down in rhythm with their fingers, until her juices were dripping off of Ashley's hand.

God damn she was soaked. At last she and Jack stopped, and Ashley sat up to stare down at her mistress. She looked totally relaxed, totally in the moment, leaning back on her mountain of pillows, melting into her bed and shivering with her climax. Her huge breasts jiggled every so often as a tiny tremble worked through her body, and Ashley and Jack both stared at how the heavy breasts weighed down on Antoinette's chest.

“Ok ok my turn!” Ashley hopped up onto her feet and pointed at Jack. “Jack, you lie down on the mistress!”

“Oh, I see what she plans,” Antoinette said, grinning up at her. “Let me move for a moment.” Still grinning her devil’s grin, the mistress pushed herself up a bit so she was sitting almost completely upright against the bed’s headboard, pillows moved aside. It was perfect for scooping up Jack, laying him down upon her stomach and between her legs, and setting his head between her breasts, him on his back and facing up toward Ashley.

“Yes!” Ashley, giggling and blushing and almost jumping up and down, got down on her knees straddling Jack’s thighs. Such a glorious display, handsome little Jack lying between Antoinette’s legs, with his head and shoulders propped up on stomach with her sitting and leaning back position. Perfect for Ashley to watch the two of them at the same time.

If she did a good job pleasuring Jack, that made the mistress super happy. And making her super happy made Ashley super happy. And horny. Seeing the mistress grin and smile at her with satisfied eyes was such a rush, such a thrill even after all these years. And seeing her hug Jack’s torso and trace his abs with her fingernails while watching Ashley, was too damn arousing.

Ashley shifted forward a little, and set the small lips of her pussy along the base of Jack’s cock. Still a little wet with Julee’s cum, and now, renewed wetness from Ashley. Cause she was wet, damn wet after watching Julee squirt her brains out, and feeling the mistress cum around Ashley’s fingers. Wet and horny and very much looking forward to indulging. Jack had drunk two people before even coming over, and then half again on Julee; perfect for a good, proper, long bout of fucking with her.

Giggling, she slid her cunt forward until her wet lips nudged along the boy’s swollen glans. He moaned. That look on his face, of bliss, of relaxation, of euphoria, no wonder Antoinette loved to pleasure him so much. The little blond ghoul felt her whole body warm and a thrill run up her spine as her simple act of rubbing her lips along the engorged head of his cock made him moan again. The boy had some sort of magic power that had seduced the mistress, despite their claims that it was Antoinette who had seduced him. And Ashley could feel the effects of such magic every time she looked at the boy's pleasure-laden face. She wanted to pleasure him, to see him squirm and wriggle, so she could hear more of those soft sounds and watch his eyes roll upward as they closed.

She reached down, took his wet cock into her hands, and slid it into her awaiting insides. The spread of her clenching muscles along warm, hard flesh had her moaning too, and she wiggled her hips the whole way down. Half cause that's how Antoinette liked to do, half cause it felt wonderful to stir her insides with his cock.

“... god damn,” Jack said, and his hands settled on her legs and hips. “You really are beautiful.”

Oh! Compliments! She giggled and leaned in, putting her hands on his chest and above where the mistress was still tracing his abs. A quick glance to the Prince showed that Antoinette was not jealous of Jack's attention toward Ashley; if anything, her grin suggested she wanted to encourage it.

“You're beautiful too!” She quivered as she pushed her hips forward a little, rubbing her clitoris against his body, while her hands slid up to press onto his shoulders. “You have a great body Jack. Reminds me of the boys in my gymnastics. Except even better. Mmmmm abs.” Her fingers found his abs and joined the mistress in caressing them, tracing them. “Hope you don't mind a little sexual objectifying. Just ... love ... abs.” She dug her fingers into them a bit, her thumbs especially, and Jack flexed them in reflex.

“I uh ... I'm cool with that.”

“Good!” More giggling, even from Antoinette, though hers were deeper, more sultry, more sexy. Ashley sounded like a squirrel when she giggled. But Jack didn’t seem to mind, and his smile remained as his hands held onto her waist. Like him she was a lean thing, and gymnastics and dancing kept her from getting soft. She had abs too! Not like Jack’s, hers were more subtle, but she could tell Jack was staring at them as much as the rest of her. And as his eyes roamed her body, she shivered; real magic eyes.

God damn she loved to ride him. She continued shifting her hips and ass back and forth, and angled them down so she could grind her clit on his body. Much as she was already horny as a bunny, she didn’t want to end this too quickly, so she kept to a slow motion with zero up and down movement. Didn’t want Jack cumming for a while.

“ ... fuck,” he said, staring at her movement, eyes wide.

“Ashley my dear.” Antoinette chuckled, and reached out to put a hand on Ashley’s shoulder; easy for her to reach with Ashley still leaning forward and touching Jack’s torso. “Are you trying to make me jealous?”

Ashley froze. “N-No!” Careful, careful, don’t get the mistress upset.

But Antoinette laughed again, and pat her ghou’s cheek lightly. “My precious, enjoy yourself. I am happy to see you being so seductive. Perhaps you can dance for my love? You are a lovely dancer.” More compliments!

The mistress did not have the edge Ashley was accustomed to, that hint of anger, a subtle pinch of jealousy and protectiveness. She really was getting soft. A good thing, or a bad thing? Ashley didn’t know. Jack was softening her, and that made Ashley a little worried. Just a little. It mostly made her super fucking happy! Antoinette may have lost a little of her dangerous side, a little of her tiger eyes, but they were still there, just buffered by Jack's touch. And since Jack was currently lying between the mistress's legs and breasts, it made Antoinette particularly soft. Perfect for Ashley to take advantage of. Muahaha.

Ashley sat up straight again, and beamed with pride. She did know how to dance, dirty naughty dances; she'd been practicing.

She put her hands on her hips, and started to sway. It was a dance the mistress had taught her; not that she didn't know how to sway her hips, but to do it during sex was a different beast. The goal was to put on a sexual display, to drive the man wild with the sight of you accenting all the curves of the female body, while at the same time providing only minimal stimulation for the man's cock inside you, but plenty to your clitoris and insides with the angles of your grinding.

She'd practiced on dildos and toys with Antoinette to guide her, but she wasn't prepared for the effect it'd have on Jack. Antoinette had done the dance for him before, and every time it not only resulted in pleasure for the mistress, it melted Jack into a puddle, desperate for his own release but unable to achieve it. And sure enough, as Jack's eyes settled on her stomach, her waist and hips, she saw the look of complete, utter surrender on his face. He melted onto Antoinette's body, and his grip on Ashley's hips went limp until his hands fell to the blankets. He was mesmerized.

Holy fucking god that was hot.

Ashley raised her hands higher and let them drift outward, riding the slow, gentle waves of an invisible beat. They came up to her head, and she combed her blond hair back as her elbows came up, and then her hands went higher, over her head, all in dance where her body moved like a ribbon. Waves, it was all about moving in a wave from the top to the bottom, and as the wave came down her body pulled in then came out in a roll as her hips followed, abs crunching with every weave, each motion rubbing her lips and clit all over Jack's body.

Jack was almost drooling. " ... holy ... fucking ... god that's hot."

She almost broke the dance when she started giggling. She'd thought the same thing!

Seeing the boy melt because of her was intoxicating, and addicting. Her muscles clamped down, and she sighed joy as the heat between her thighs grew; and the wetness. This wasn't just fun, it was blissful. Rubbing her bits all over the boy while he stared at her like she was some sort of goddess, it was too good. Everything was getting tingly and sending pleasure sparks through her pelvis, into her chest, and down into her legs. His cock fit so nicely inside her, and she could feel it shift with her as she moved, pressing against her clenching muscles.

Antoinette held out her hands for her. Oh, oh, fun! Ashley took her mistress's hands, and held onto them as she continued her dance. Back and forth, side to side, she leaned forward a little more to make sure she was feeling it all along her swollen clit. The mistress chuckled and guided her hands back down to hold onto Jack's shoulders.

Ashley took a good grip of the boy's nice shoulders, and started to move faster. A lot faster. At a certain point it stopped being a dance and started being her trying to get off. No up or down motion, just pure grind, and she could feel her juices soaking where her lips rubbed against the man underneath her. So sweet, delicious, shifting back and forth faster and faster like building a fire between her legs, desperate to build the embers.

She came, and she grinned down at Jack as she did. Release, oh god release, the clenching muscles, uncontrollable spasms inside her that gripped and milked at Jack's cock, while she trembled on him. Half the pleasure was seeing his face, how he groaned as she clenched his cock like a vise. The other half was the waves of pleasure working up and down through her body, to her curling toes and up into her chest. More of her juices joined their connection, and when she looked down, she mewled at the sight of her lips soaked. Jack was just as smooth as her, and she reached down to touch where her juices were coating the base of his cock. It was only a small orgasm, and she wanted more, now.

“Ok, ok, more!” Still trembly and shaky, she turned around. Jack groaned audibly; she didn’t bother getting up to turn around. Half the fun was the challenge of keeping him inside in the motion. Silly, fun. Once she was straddling him in reverse, she put her hands on her ass and looked over her shoulders at the boy trapped underneath her. “You almost always have sex with the Prince facing her! Women have asses too ya know.” And to emphasize, she lifted up on the meat of her ass, spread it, squeezed it together, and leaned forward between his legs, ass rising to expose where the boy’s cock was penetrating her.

“S-Sorry! You have an amazing ass.” Jack, nodding, grinning — he was getting the game now — reached out and gripped her glutes where they met the small of her back and around the tail bone. “A beautiful, amazing, toned little butt.”

She frowned and slapped his knee. “It’s not little!” To prove it, she raised her hips a few inches, and slammed her herself back down onto him. A good, hard fuck. It was enough to make her ass shake a bit in Jack’s hands, and earn some groans from him from the sudden fucking, wet flesh sounds and all.

“Hehe, I know!” She giggled, but mewls and whimpers were mixing into her laughter as she started to move her ass up and down. Like Antoinette taught her, she squeezed on Jack’s cock in rhythm with her motions, and after a few strokes, sank all the way to take him to the hilt, and wiggle around a few times. Good opportunity to show off her perfect ballerina ass. And fuck it felt good, squeezing her muscles on him nice and tight as his hard cock filled her.

Jack's hands again kneaded the buns of her butt, and she giggled between her groans as she bounced on him. She looked over her shoulder again, both to eat up more of Jack's pleasure-filled expressions, but also to gauge the mistress. But Antoinette looked quite happy, and her eyes were locked onto where Ashley's lips were spread around Jack's cock. That alone, seeing the Prince so enraptured by what Ashley was doing, was making Ashley shiver with excitement.

She bounced on Jack a few more times. Nope, wrong angle. She leaned forward a bit. Still not right. She leaned back, far back, until she had to put her hands on Jack's chest for support as she almost fell backward. But right there, with her almost falling back onto his chest, the angle put his cock against the front wall of her pussy, and she groaned like Jack did. Perfect, just perfect, feeling the hardness of his girth pressing toward her abdomen. Hit those spots she wanted just right.

She did not have the patience of Antoinette, not at all. The mistress could make this last, make it take half an hour of constant dancing, but Ashley could not. All she could think about for the moment, was cumming again, and she started to bounce on Jack in that perfect, delicious way that pushed his cock toward the front of her. The bed started to shake a little from how her light body managed to get a good, hard fucking rhythm. Jack and the Prince were often tender and gentle with each other; Ashley wanted some bounce!

After a couple more minutes of bouncing on his cock, she heard the boy start to cum. Felt it too, as he started to push up to meet her with his own thrusts; small, but very welcome. His groans, quiet but so very arousing, made her squeeze and clench on him extra hard, just so she could hear him groan louder. And push herself over the edge.

Her legs started to tremble, spasm, and her hands slipped out from underneath her. Almost about to fall onto his face, but Jack caught her, and gently lowered her down so she could lay on his chest. She set her head into the groove of his neck and shoulder, and quivered as her insides convulsed. That delicious, tingling warmth, right into the toes, into her chest, robbing her of breath and making each attempt nothing more than a squeaky pant. Her cunt squeezed on the boy inside her until she felt his cum dripping from her tiny folds, all joining her own. Quivering, smiling, and panting as the pleasure waves moved up and down through her.

She liked being in control of it, like the Prince did.

Once the pleasure settled, she opened her eyes and looked up. Antoinette smiled down at her and set her hands on Ashley's chest to lightly tease and caress her breasts. Delightful tingles to go with the aftershocks of orgasm.

“You do realize, my precious, that I must give Julee the option of revenge?” Mistress said.

“Bah, what's she gonna do? Worst punishment idea she could come up with is a firm spanking.” Which was hardly a punishment. Jack laughed; probably reading her mind.

Ashley sat up and looked over at Julee beside them on the bed. Girl was fast asleep, complete coma style. So cute.

Sitting up didn't last long. Mistress took her by the shoulders and pulled her back down.

“You, my little pet, need to learn patience, and to enjoy the moment. You and Jack have both climaxed. A perfect opportunity to lie down, and bask in each other's pleasure."

She wasn't on board with the idea. Didn't like to cuddle all romantic-like. But as the mistress began to touch her forehead, her lips, her neck, her ears, and comb her hair, Jack started to play with her breasts. And like he did with Antoinette before, the boy caressed their undersides, their contours, tickled along her swollen areola, offered tiny, gentle pinches of her nipples, and cupped them ever so softly. Gentle little tinglies worked through her breasts into her chest, and before long, she felt her body embrace the pleasure.

She melted. Ok, maybe some cuddly post-sex stuff could feel good too.

A few minutes went by, and she realized something: Jack was still hard. She looked over her shoulder at him, and made a tiny gasp sound as the man flipped her over.

"W-What the ... You can't be serious."

"Sorry," he said, "just ... lot of blood, really ... really feeling it." He lifted her like she was a feather, and set her down on her stomach to replace him as the one between Antoinette's breasts and legs.

"But this wasn't part of the plan!"

"Ah, ma petite." Mistress grinned down at her, and slid out her hands to run them down along Ashley's back and arms. "It is a Ventrue's prerogative to take control when they feel the need."

Kindred politics, in the bedroom! Not the plan. She frowned over at Jack, and tried to sit up, but the man put a hand to her back and pushed her back down until she was hugging the Prince, cheek between her breasts, hands against the blankets around her sides.

Jack lay upon her, between her legs, and slid his hard, wet cock into her cum-filled insides.

“W-Wait ... still ... a bit ... sensitive.”

Antoinette smirked a devil’s smirk, and shook her head. “If only you had paid such a courtesy for Julee. Jack my love, please, indulge yourself.”

Ashley managed only a squeak before Jack slammed his hips forward. Much as she liked hard sex, rough poundings, and really getting a bounce going, it was a different story when she was tired and still tingly from cumming earlier. And Jack was pounding into her as hard as he pounded into Julee too, straight down onto her butt and into the bed.

The angle drove his cock down against her g-spot mercilessly, and she looked up at the mistress with pleading eyes as she bounced against the bed. It shook with the impact of the boy’s body against hers, and Antoinette chuckled down at her as she shook.

“Wait! Wait wait. Not ... fair!” She was cumming. She collapsed onto the Prince again, and held on as she started to squeeze Jack’s cock, muscles gripping in random spurts, warm liquids coating him. He’d just came twice though; not going to be cumming again anytime soon. All she could do was hold on, and whimper as the pleasure started to get too much, started to make her legs shiver, her toes curl, and her breath reduce to pants.

He stopped. Thank god, a moment to breathe. But, Jack only stopped long enough to kneel up straight, and take her hips into his hands. Same thing as Julee. And just like Julee, he started to pound into from behind, holding onto her, and pulling her toward him as he jammed his hips forward. He was fucking her, hard, like a piston, each thrust met with the sound of wet flesh, his testicles soaked in her cum and slapping her clit.

She managed to stay in a doggy position, weight shifting to her hands between Antoinette’s legs as Jack took control. Ashley tried to reach out for her mistress, but the Prince just grinned and kissed the air as she watched her. No one was going to save her! Not that she really wanted saving, but too much! Too much. She couldn't breathe, every attempt turned to a useless whimper or squeal, and she was starting to see some white spots.

And again, the pleasure waves coursed through her, pouring out of her pelvis from between her legs. Her arms gave out, and she let her chest and face collapse to the blankets between her mistress's thighs. She could feel her cum trickling down her legs until she was sure it reached her knees. And Jack still wasn't stopping. She managed to look over her shoulder at him, to find an almost predatory glare in his eyes; he was devouring her, and she was his prey. The same sort of look the mistress gave her when the Prince got very, very, very aroused.

Sometimes it was easy to forget Jack was a vampire. He had that need, that bloodlust, that desire to hunt and drink prey. And now she'd gone and turned herself into prey.

She came again. Her eyes closed, and she felt her pussy clamp down as hard as it could, almost hard enough to give the boy pause. But he didn't stop, he kept pounding her, and pounding her, until she could only make the tiniest squeak with each thrust. She was wet, very wet, wet enough his testicles slapping against her were getting her cum on her stomach, joining the little trickles working down her legs. Even with her eyes closed, she was seeing more white spots.

And then Jack stopped. Breath, thank god oxygen. Short lived, as Jack reached down and grabbed her, one hand taking her waist, the other her shoulder. He lifted her to kneel up like he was, and pinned her to him, the hand on her waist rising to grab her breast instead, the hand around her shoulder slipping under the arm to hook it from underneath, and take her by the throat.

She was a bundle of nerves, helpless, quivering, shaking, as the boy sank his fangs into her neck as he held her to him. The Kiss. The instant, inhuman sensation of calmness, pleasure, bliss and relaxation flowing through the body. If she was helpless before, she was practically lifeless now. Her arms started to get heavier until they went limp, dangling. Her body stopped listening to her attempts to escape his grip, and she relaxed back against the boy as he found the angle to thrust up into her a few more times.

Warmth trickled out of her. Her cum, and his. She whimpered, almost crying as the boy continued to drink her, continued to draw out her blood as she came on him, as she trembled and milked his cock, as the magical sensations of the Kiss ripped away her senses until she was flying on a cloud of bliss. She managed to raise her eyes to Antoinette, and found the Prince grinning at her, eyes looking her naked body up and down as Ashley shivered.

“No ... fair,” she said, pouting at her mistress as the darkness started to take her.

“Ah, my precious, I fear you tempted Jack with, perhaps, too tasty a meal.” The Prince sat up, got in close to her, and planted kisses on her free breast, the other still in Jack’s grip as he kept her tight to his body. Antoinette’s kisses were always perfect, always the right level of suckle and nibble on her nipples to get Ashley’s body tingly. But right now, her whole body as sensitive as volatile explosives, Antoinette’s kissing on her breast sent her mind into fireworks as she slipped under the heavy draw of exhaustion. The last thing she felt was Antoinette’s lips rising higher before her own fangs sank into her neck, opposite of Jack.

Falling asleep on the waves of overlapping orgasm spurred by the Kiss was a great way to fall asleep, she had to admit.

Chapter 28

~~Julias~~

He still wasn't comfortable with the Primogen. Much as he had confidence in his abilities and intelligence, they were older than him, stronger than him, and, although he was loath to admit it, they were probably smarter than him. All his poker skills, tested every time he had a conversation. No wonder Viktor turned to stone over the centuries.

White walls, black ceiling, fancy leather chairs, and a glass table. A sight he'd grown to hate over the past few months. But at least the view from the glass wall out into the nightlife of South Side was beautiful; not that he'd get to look out it properly from his seat.

"Get your guys to back off, Maria." Garry, dressed for the street, threw some papers onto the table. "You're ruining good people's homes."

The ghost woman shrugged. "Only kine."

"My friends." The Gangrel glared at her, and Julias winced. Enough malice there to melt ice.

"Yes well, you make friends with kine and expect me to adjust my business strategies because of it. No."

Business strategies made Julias smirk. She'd said it with just enough inflection to imply the real reason: Garry had been seen destroying some of the Lancea et Sanctum's precious artifacts, after Lucas died. Not that Julias hadn't expect that. When your enemy dies, it was customary in many places of the world to burn everything they owned. But Garry had jumped on the opportunity to dig through Lucas's things in Tony's old complex very, very quickly.

The tunnel had since been sealed off, but too little too late. Would Damien care, once he found out? Maybe, maybe not.

Julias looked to the Prince. She was leaning forward to put her elbows on the table, fingers netted together and placed to her upper lip. Pensive. To Julias, it sounded like squabbling children, but maybe that was just something he'd have to get used to. When fighting over something, everyone turned into a juvenile delinquent, or at least pretended to be.

The sheriff wasn't here today though. Interesting.

"The Mirrden district is on the edge of our territories." Garry tapped the papers on the table. "And you're doing construction all over it. Not exactly a big leap to think Xnomina will push into the rest of the district."

And he was right of course. The corporation was run by Kindred, but it was a public and known corporation. Far as the humans knew, Xnomina bought the city rights to start construction on the Mirrden area. The process of moving who lived there out of there would be painful to them, no doubt, but Maria knew Garry was rather fond of the area and its people. Probably the tipping point on her decision.

"It may come to that. And if it does, perhaps the border of our two territories should be addressed? It ran down the middle of a small district; slide it over five feet and it will no longer." Maria reached out for the papers, the pictures, shrugged as she glanced them up and down, and tossed them back onto the table. "You have no legal claim."

"Legal? Who gives a shit about legal. I'm telling you Maria, you're stepping into my territory," Garry said.

Julias looked to Jacob. The Nosferatu was leaning back in his chair, wearing the dark robes he liked for meetings, and he was rocking back and forth a little with his hands hooked behind his head. Not bored though; the conversation seemed to interest him. Probably fuel for more of his games.

But before Maria could respond, Michael threw a finger at Garry.

“You have nerve. I had three Kindred report in of broken bones. One lost a finger. All caused by Carthians.”

“You had your people running on my side of the fence, Michael.” Garry snarled, a real, Gangrel snarl at his fellow Gangrel. “And not just exploring fledglings. You had dangerous people looking into my business, so I roughed them up. So how about fuck you?”

An unusual amount of heat from Garry. Julias raised a brow, and looked back to Antoinette. She was steel, but she did glance his way a moment before looking back to the arguing group.

“How about you Julias?” Garry pulled out some more papers and threw them onto the table. “Think I don’t know what you’ve been up to?”

His raised brow raised more. But feigning innocence with the man was a bad idea. Much as Garry was loud and loved to push for a fist fight, he was crafty. Maybe that was why everyone acted like children the moment they were fighting over something, to make themselves look more stupid than they were? An interesting strategy. Good poker players.

“What have I been up to?”

“Some eyes told me you’d been talking with Damien.” The papers were reports then.

Everyone tensed, a single moment of tightened muscles, before they hid their response. But everyone saw everyone’s reaction. Kid was a hot button.

“I have been.”

“Yeah well, not sure I agree with where that’s going.” He raised his hand and started counting off his fingers. “Went to Damien. Then went to Maria. Some eyes told me you’re looking to revive the Second Estate.”

It was Antoinette’s turn to raise a brow.

“Is this true, Mister Mire?” she said.

“... it is.” He put his hands on the table, and looked to Maria. A wince from her too, but she shrugged and motioned to him. “I’ve spoken to Damien, and Maria about this. But we didn’t plan to bring it up until we’d discussed it further.”

Jacob laughed, a hard chuckle that shut everyone up and turned them all to face him. But he said nothing, only smiled his eyeless smile, until Antoinette groaned, rubbed her forehead, and looked at Julias.

“Arrogant of you, Mister Mire. You were there during the purge; it was a difficult time for all of us. And now you undermine me? You?”

He’d expected either coldness from the Prince, or some fire. But she was looking at him with a mix of concern and pain, as if he’d hurt her.

Had he hurt her?

“I’m not trying to bring about another Lucas, Primogen. Even Maria does not want that.” And she didn’t. She didn’t want the violence and mindless destruction Lucas brought, none of them did; except for perhaps Viktor. Good riddance.

“Then what are you doing?”

“Trying to give people a chance. Damien is not Lucas, and it was Lucas who made the Second Estate so violent, to push for constant expansion at the cost of the other cove—”

“The Invictus profited, remember?” Garry leaned in close, and stared Julias in the eye. A little more sneer and Julias was sure there’d be dog drool on his lip. “The First and Second Estate, lovely bedfellows.”

He really didn’t want to have this conversation yet. Not enough information, not enough feel for the mental state of everyone, trying to play poker without knowing people’s quirks or habits.

“Garry, you know me well enough to—”

“Viktor’s childe? Think I have the right to be a bit suspicious, especially after what you did to Mike.”

Mike, the hacker kid. Right, Julias had wiped his mind of memories, invaded his brain.

Shit.

“Viktor’s mission, Garry, his orders. I did what I could to—”

“You violated him.”

“I didn—”

“Don’t give me that shit Julias. You act like the nice guy, but—”

Enough.

Julias snapped his hand out and grabbed the man by the neck. At some point, they’d both leaned in more and more, until Garry was in striking distance. And he wanted to hit him, god he wanted to hit him in his idiotic, short-sighted Carthian face.

No one moved. Everyone went silent, and stared. Jacob's jaw dropped, but that didn't stop him from smiling like a jackass. Garry could have retaliated, but he just stared at him with wide eyes.

"Stop. Interrupting. Me." He shoved the man back into his chair before he stood up, and slammed his palms down on the glass table. Fuck these elders and their pompous garbage. "Shut the fuck up, and listen, you simple, myopic fool. Damien is not Lucas, just as I am not Viktor. Damien is willing to revive the Lancea et Sanctum, with the sole purpose of preaching his religion. And not the 'dominate everything' version either." He offered Maria a small glance before looking back to Garry, and the Prince. "No power, just a voice. He deserves a chance, and the Lancea et Sanctum deserve a chance."

He sat back down, and glared. Not like him to get angry, but at that edge there was a flash of white in his eyes, and he just wanted to rip Garry apart, get into his head and force him to tear off his own fingers. Bastard was too strong for Julias to get into his brain, but the imagery was pleasing nonetheless; at least, until he noticed Jacob in the corner of his eye. He was still smiling, and looking straight at Julias.

"Boys," Antoinette said with raised hands, elbows still on the table, "let us not revive old hatred, especially now that many of the people responsible for them are gone. Mister Mire, Madam Turio, you have talked with the boy about this?"

Maria shook her head. "I haven't yet, and I would have liked to before we proposed this. But we knew others, Garry in particular, would balk at the idea."

"He is not the only one who would." The Prince got up, and walked over to the window. No one joined her, they never did. But then, she rarely got up from the table to stare out the window like that. "People died, Mister Mire. People close to Garry, and others close to myself. The purge was a horrible time for all of us. Not only the purge, but just a few weeks ago, I had the retired Archbishop, thirty of his subordinates, and Damien at my doorstep. Lucas died, I nearly died, and the blood of thirty Kindred soaked my hands, and my sheriff's sword. I listened to that man preach of Longinus's mission as he assailed my home with bullets. As Damien's sword tasted my blood. And you ... dare to ask Damien of this before speaking to me?"

No pause, no shift in inflection, nothing to give up the lie that she or the sheriff were the ones to kill Lucas. She'd be the sort to talk during poker, and dance around the lies she'd weave, the false tells, the fake reactions for each hand. Scary, when you were good at it.

And he didn't know what to say. He sat down, brought a single finger to his lip, and stared at the table. He was supposed to have a speech made, points to argue, evidence to overrule opinions. But Garry threw him a curve and he didn't have anything prepared. He—

"That is a good point."

They all turned to Jacob.

"What is?" the Prince said.

"Well, if Lucas and his little army got slaughtered, why is Damien still alive? Why'd you spare him?"

"I..." With a long sigh, Antoinette walked back to the table and sat in her Princely chair. What would she say? If it had been her choice, she wouldn't have spared him. The only reason Damien was still sucking blood was because Jack let him live. "I ... saw the broken look in the boy's eyes, before Lucas was dead. He was ... different."

Julias could feel his lip trying to smirk, and spent every reflex he had to keep it still. Jack's words.

Maria and Garry looked at her, then each other, and then lowered their eyes. Michael didn't look like he cared about any of this, but Jacob, the bastard Jacob was grinning as he listened, and waited.

"Then, you agree with Julias," Jacob said, "about Damien. He's different than Lucas. And you might not like the Lancea et Sanctum, but it was Lucas who lead to the purge, right? I say give the kid a chance. Worse comes to worse, you can kill him."

The Prince leaned forward over the table, and glared at Jacob. Oddly on the point of the Nosferatu. Did he know about Jack? No, he couldn't have, Beatrice wouldn't have told him. But the old bastard had a habit of knowing things he shouldn't; fact of history.

"... you make a solid point, Jacob. I will consider it."

Julias smirked, and leaned back in his chair. Woman was trapped. She could have exposed that Jack was Lucas's killer, and that she would have killed Damien otherwise, but it'd risk Jack's life to Maria.

She really did love him.

Back in his mansion in Rich Side. Victorian building, big fancy windows, classic colorful furniture with curving wooden legs, and white pillars. Too old fashioned, even for him, or at least he thought it was. But now that he owned it, and walked around in it, part of him enjoyed the silence, the space, the vast rooms with massive curtains and massive paintings. He stood there, sipping a glass of blood, while admiring them. It gave him time to let his thoughts drift, wander, and reflect. The mansion was growing on him.

Did Jacob know Jack was responsible for Damien's survival? Maybe, if he managed to eavesdrop on their conversation with him. The bastard was too damn smart too, like Antoinette. And where was the sheriff? He rarely missed a Primogen meeting. The Prince had seemed a little distracted during the meeting, but he'd thought it might have just been because of the typical Invictus Carthian bitching about territory.

He did wish his fellow council members wouldn't antagonize the Carthians so much, but their actions were reasonable, if aggressive. Xnomina was a corporation, it needed to expand, and it was in Invictus interest to defend its expansions, even if that meant rubbing up against the Carthian border. And it was in Invictus interest to guard itself against Carthian aggression in general; both sides itching for a chance to throw a punch, and the Carthians did love to throw that first punch. They could play victim all they wanted, the Carthians had a long history of starting wars.

The door knocked, the knocker resonating the whole building with its thunderous crashes. He sighed, walked down the curling stairway into the grandiose lobby, and opened one of the enormous wooden doors.

“Hey Superman.”

“Beatrice. Damn, I am glad to see you.” He stepped aside to let the Nosferatu in.

“Oh?” With a grin, she stepped into the lobby and over to the fancy couch. She had a big box against her hip, and was dressed in some jeans and a black tank top. He considered buying her some better clothes, but then, he doubted she'd be comfortable wearing a suit regularly as he did.

“Yeah. Mind stuck on work, need someone to yank it away.”

“I am good at that.” She put the box down by the couch, sat down, and hooked her arms over the back of the seat. “I mean, I could ruin it, and tell you I don't want the Carthians and Invictus fighting to get any worse, but I assume you're already fighting for that.”

“I am, ish. Turio and MacDonald have their reasons, and ... and...”

“And?”

“You remember what I said to you, that first night at my apartment?”

“Hit me.”

“That I was sick of Kindred scheming?”

She sighed, and nodded before motioning for him to come join her. “Yeah, I do. Didn’t take long to get pulled into it, did it?”

She knew where he was coming from, she must have. Becoming a member of the Circle of the Crone was a big change for her, and Julias doubted Jacob treated his people like Garry did. Girl was probably neck deep in his scheming, and Jacob played the long game, the big game. And now Julias was too, as a member of the triumvirate of the Invictus.

He sat down next to her, glass still in his hand, and eyes on the main door. “Life was simpler, back then. I miss it.”

“Do you? You’re making changes now.”

“I am but it doesn’t seem to be helping much. Viktor’s methods may have been brutal or manipulative, but they worked. I’m trying to play peacemaker with the Carthians, and Garry seems insistent on refusing my aid.”

“Can you blame him?”

“ ... no, I can’t. I ... let’s not talk about that. And sorry for dragging you into it.”

She laughed and shrugged. “It’s kind of nice, honestly. With the witches, every conversation I have I have to deal with their vices at the same time.”

“Mm?”

“Yeah. No group meetings, we just talk to each other when needed. Jennifer and Othello always have some kine between their legs or on their laps, mid conversation.”

He tapped a finger against his chin. Figures the witches were brazen about their lust, but actually having conversations about covenant matters during sex was a step beyond.

“ ... like what you see?” he said.

Again she laughed, louder this time, and her mouth opened further than a human would be able to. Much as he loved her, and thought she was sexy as all hell, she did have crocodile teeth along her cheeks, and her jaw could open like a crocodile’s too. Scary.

“Not gonna lie, it get can pretty hot sometimes. But hey, we’re an item right? Trust me?”

He smirked at her, and slid a little closer on the couch.
“Definitely.”

“Ok, good, cause I mean ... they have sex. A lot. And I’m just standing there, and, you know ... watching, and sometimes I watch for a little longer than I should, and then I feel guilty, and it’s very un-witch like. I’ll lose my license.”

She was showing a side he hadn’t expected. A dash of worry and sprinkle of shame. Adorable.

“As long as you don’t join in, watch all you want. I trust you.”

That put a smile on her face. “Awesome. And uh ... been meaning to ask you something related.”

“Mm?”

“Jennifer, she ... she umm ... she ... really wants to join us. In the bedroom.”

He raised a brow, and set his drink on a nearby couch side table. “Jennifer, the young Ventrue? Looks a little like you?”

“Yeah, she’s been pushing on that angle. Can’t help but say it’s a bit tempting.”

“Attracted to her?”

“Yeah! I mean, uh ... well, she is pretty hot.”

He chuckled and hooked his arm around the back of her neck and shoulders, so she lowered hers and slid into the nook of his chest.

“Sounds like I’d be a third wheel.”

“No! No ... well ... maybe?”

“Let me think about it. I don’t know her very well, barely ever said two words to her.”

“Perfectly get it if you say no. I really like this thing we got going here, and I’ve seen threesomes ruin more than a few relationships.”

The idea had appeal. Jennifer was a beautiful creature, and from what Beatrice said, it sounded like she had an attraction more to Beatrice than him. And that idea had even more appeal.

But Beatrice was right, it wasn’t a decision to make quickly. He’d have to think about it.

“Think it’ll take something a little more than a bit of sexual confusion to break us up, Beatrice.”

“I am a good catch.” She pushed against his chest until he was on his back on the couch, head on the couch arm, and she lay upon his chest, cheek to his sternum. He could feel the sides of her huge teeth touching him; scary, and thrilling.

He hugged her, hands to her back, one sliding up and down her spine. But, after a while, it slid up to her neck, along through her hair to comb it, before it slid to her jaw, and then along her teeth.

Such. Huge. Teeth. Terrifying sharp things that belonged on a crocodile. A normal, human looking mouth with normal teeth and lips from the front, and then monstrous teeth where her cheeks should be. Combined with her green snake eyes, she really had the monster girl thing going for her. She opened her mouth enough for him to slip a finger between some of her huge fangs, and he plucked at one of them with a fingernail.

She melted. Her mouth opened a little more, while her hands hugged his chest and tugged on his suit.

“I like that,” she said.

“Having your teeth touched?”

“That you like touching them.”

Maybe he was feeling a little guilty for this thoughts about the Nosferatu in the tunnels. Or maybe he did like her teeth; they were badass.

She pushed herself up a bit, elbows and arms on his chest, and opened her mouth while looking down at him. Open wide. He could see the long tongue she had, and its slightly serpentine shape.

“Jack used to describe for me a kink he had, involving monster girls. Things like snake women, or spider women, and such. Scary women, oddly sexy, powerful women.”

“Oh?”

“Yeah. I told him he needed to get laid,” he said.

She laughed, and leaned back down to put a kiss on his chin. “Is he why I turn you on?”

“Maybe a little? I thought about it after, and had to admit, there’s something alluring about it. Didn’t really understand though until I saw you.”

“Aw. Then I owe the kid.” She set her head back on his chest, and lightly stroked his arm as she got comfortable.

Just two lovers, lying on a couch. No drama, no issues. He was jinxing it, thinking such thoughts, but damn it was nice to be able to close his eyes and hold someone he loved.

“Ah, sexy fun times.”

“Of course.”

“Right? So, find me the fanciest room in the whole place, so we can defile it.”

~~Natasha~~

Find the spiders, find the spiders, find the spiders. Find a needle in a haystack, a poisonous, dangerous needle. Wonderful.

She walked the streets of Devil’s Corner the moment dusk arrived, and began exploring. A dangerous, horrible place Devil’s Corner come nightfall, especially for women, but she wasn’t afraid of the kine. And, like all Kindred, a part of her hoped someone would try and mug her or such, so she'd have an excuse to break some bones. No vampire was immune to the temptation to indulge in a little power.

But, all was quiet in Devil's Corner. A man had been taken according to police reports, a Mr. Tenmer. One disappearance too many, and people were starting to hide in their homes more come dusk. A lot of blood and damage had been left behind. Weird damage, like in the other disappearances. Related? The Prince didn't know, and from what her source told her, the two incidents were only related by proximity, the spiders and the disappearances.

Which could have easily been a lie. The source also said the spiders were in the tunnels of Devil's Corner. Also could have been a lie, but it'd be a weird lie. The Prince assured Natasha her source was likely serious, likely genuine, and also likely hiding something. Typical Kindred scheming.

She'd poured through the records of the police, examined every detail of the disappearances, and the odd marks left behind. The Prince had access to all the police files, even the ones the Invictus thought they had under their thumb. Sneaky. And their files showed all the details, all the pictures, all the shots showing the carved up street and walls. So, being a thorough investigator, she was going to look into the disappearances too. Not like the few spiders she found at the Elysium tower were a good lead; it was a building, and they were normal spiders.

She still had one option though. She descended a subway stairway, and with a key given to her by Daniel, she opened the door into the city's underbelly. The covenants all had access to it, which meant she had to be on guard for running into other covenants. Maybe she'd run into Vivienne? A smile sneaked onto her face as she thought of her childe back in the Invictus fold. The girl was too much like her.

The tunnels, dark and comforting; or at least they used to be. She could see well in the dark compared to most Kindred, which meant she could see in almost complete black. Sith sight, according to Jessy. She chuckled and moved along through the old paths, but the chuckle sounded forced even to her. Not too easy to be comfortable in the tunnels when she still had images of ghosts grabbing her legs from the shadows. To top it all off, now she had images of spiders doing the same, or leaving giant webs for her to stumble into.

A particularly scary dream she'd had had her trapped in a coffin — so quaint — while being eaten alive by hundreds of spiders; not so quaint. Some Kindred she was. Really have become a big baby, haven't you?

She felt for the pistol underneath her suit jacket. It was there. She felt for the small sword beside it. There. If she had a flamethrower, she might feel a bit better, at least until she set herself on fire and turned into a puff of smoke and ash in half a second.

She shook out her shoulders, and stepped onto the subway platform she'd found. A few Nosferatu liked to hang out here, members of the Invictus but otherwise too weak and malformed to join them topside.

“Miss Halla,” she said.

Liliana Halla pulled her tattered old blanket down from her head, and raised her eyes to look at Natasha. The woman sat in the corner of the big, empty place of abandoned booths and ticket gates. Half of her face was covered in eyes. Actual eyes, with eyelids and eyelashes and everything. Maybe twenty eyes fighting for space along her cheek, jaw, temple, and a few on her neck.

But Nosferatu were Nosferatu, and such disfigurements were just that, disfigurements. She'd long learned to look past them, enough for conversation anyway.

“Madam ... I suppose I can call you whatever I want now, eh Natasha?” The woman, a petite thing like Natasha, rubbed some sleep out of one of her extra eyes, and smiled.

“Yeah, that is true isn’t it? Liliana.”

“How are things in the dragon order?”

“Little terrifying, really.”

She laughed, and gestured to the Nosferatu beside her. “More than Bob?”

Ah, Bob. Bob did not look like a Bob. Bob looked like a classic vampire, the ugly ones with a dozen large fangs overlapping the bottom lip, pointed ears, bald, no eyebrows, and veiny pale skin. Pale eyes too. He had long fingernails that looked like they belonged on an old corpse, and he used them to fidget with the big, dark, dirty robe he wore.

He offered a small wave, before he looked back down and continued fidgeting with his robe some more. Bob was a quiet man, a nice man. She’d personally given him assignments involving information warfare, and it’d been a failure. But when she gave him some assignments involving violence, roughing up some ballsy Carthians, he’d performed well. He wasn’t happy about it, but you couldn’t argue with the results. At least, the Invictus wouldn’t. Ends always justified the means in the First Estate.

“Yeah, more than B-Bob. Prince is Prince for a reason, and I’m reminded daily. Not that she reminds me, just that ... yeah, the stuff we d-d-deal with is terrifying.”

Lil nodded, and Bob did too. “What brings you to Vander Street?”

“Looking int-to something. I assume you know about the d-disappearances?”

They nodded. Course they did, they hung out beneath Devil's Corner. She didn't follow it by asking though; they wouldn't be able to answer her. Invictus, not Ordo Dracul, they weren't supposed to share information.

But maybe she could get a little something.

"How about spiders?"

They both blinked, looked at each other, then back to her.

"What about them?" Lil said.

"You tell me." Natasha put up her hands, and stepped up to the Nosferatu before sitting down on a nearby crate. "I'm calling in a ff-favor. Point me in a direction, anything that's unusual and spiders are involved."

She was showing her hand. Now they knew she wanted information about spiders, and that she probably didn't have any information of her own. But the Invictus weren't her enemies, and these people were her acquaintances, former partners. She could get away with exposing her neck a little. Hopefully.

"Spiders. Spiders. Bob?" Lil looked his way with a shrug.

"... spiders." A deep, rough voice on the gentle Bob. "... I avoid the tunnel beneath Ronder Street. The lights don't work there, and before they stopped working, I found a lot of spiderwebs. Large, and a lot of them."

Not exactly unusual, but not normal either. A cozy middle-ground of lukewarm that would probably lead to nothing, but was still a better lead than the nothing she had.

"Thanks a lot B-Bob. Lil. I owe you."

“A strange thing for one of the few Ordo Dracul to be looking into,” Lil said.

“Strange is what we do.”

“Wait,” Bob said. “You asked about the disappearances? What’s the connection?”

Lil elbowed him in the side. “Hey.”

Natasha put up her hands. “K, I think it’s ss-safe to say we’re all a little in the d-dark here. Which is why I’m looking into it.” Grinning a sly grin, a grin worthy of the Prince, she stood back up and waved. “But ... sorry. Can’t tell you anymore. And I wouldn’t p-presume to call in anymore favors of you. Let’s just pretend this whole conversation d-didn’t happen.”

Lil and Bob sighed, but nodded, and returned her wave. She had a few more favors she could call in if she wanted, and they knew it too. But, that was a bridge she didn’t need to burn.

She couldn’t tell them she had no idea if there was a connection. There was exposing your neck a little, and then there was exposing all of it. Way too in the dark to be exposing anything really. It was a gamble.

Ronder Street. It was on the edge of Devil’s Corner, where the city came to a hard stop with only a few buildings before the dry forests and rocks beyond awaited. Most of the action in the city’s dirty hole happened in the center, like the disappearances; she’d have never drifted to the edge if it hadn’t been for Bob’s tip. Still, could be a dead end. Only one way to find out.

A long walk through the tunnels to the Ronder Street subway. And, to her surprise, no more Nosferatu were found. Well, it was a big city, the chances of running into more Kindred randomly in the tunnels were small, but walk long enough and you were bound to run into another eventually. And she walked a long time. Passed Ferning and Main Libera streets, passed Jameson, and Henmark street, and deeper into the older abandoned subway tunnels. Older and deeper both, because Jacob had a thing for them back in the day, according to the Prince.

And the lights did start to go out. At first it was just one, and one that could have easily been missed by the kine the Invictus hired to keep the tunnels somewhat lit. Missed or not yet examined. But then there was another light gone, and another light gone. Soon the amount of lights that didn't work outnumbered the functioning ones. And eventually, she stared into the darkness of the old tunnels.

Hard to see, but her Sith eyes could make out shapes enough for her to move. Just barely.

Her fingers started to shake. One hand had already pulled out her pistol before she'd told herself to draw it, and the other was holding her sword, digits tight around the grip. Very tight. Her fingers hurt, and her wrist locked hard, but she couldn't get the shaking to stop. Ice trickled down her spine into her toes. Her beast within bared its teeth and glared into the darkness, but for all its posturing, for all its growls and snarls, it too lowered itself to the ground and backed away.

But she pressed forward. Last time she'd done something like this, she had Jessy as backup. Now, she had only herself. And she was deep in the Earth, alone, on a mission to explore a threat involving spiders, warned to them by a strange source.

Kindred. You're a Kindred, Natasha, right hand of the Invictus retired. Member of the Ordo Dracul. Ancillae Mekhet. Grow a spine. And you can see in near total darkness, something no Kindred you'd ever known can do.

But she'd never explored the tunnels this deeply alone, especially not when the lights were out. Always with Jessy, or with Julias. Or with Vivienne.

Vivienne. She sighed, and pushed forward. Past behind her, future in front of her. Or some other ridiculous crap like that. Whatever, the ridiculous crap was convincing. Push on.

When the reflecting illumination of distant lights around several curving tunnels was no longer able to reach her, so only utter and total obsidian hell awaited her, she took out her phone and turned on the flashlight, weakest setting. Not in a hurry to give away her position, but she needed some light at least. Just enough for tiny flickers along the metal tracks to reflect onto the walls, enough for her to see the silhouettes of shadow in the unending black before her, and the tracks and concrete beneath her feet.

Dead silence. She didn't breathe, not even to enjoy the old reflex, lest she disturb the silence. Better the only noise was the gentle shifting of her soft-soul shoes against the dust and bits of powdered rock. So old, so damn old down here. If she shouted, she expected the tunnel to collapse on her. Bury her deep underground where no one would ever find her. She'd slip into torpor, and sleep, dreaming powerful dreams for millennia, until someone finally dug her up. Straight into sunlight.

The shivering got worse.

She stopped, and looked to the wall. It was sticky. She pulled her hand away, but the sticky remained on her fingers, and she rubbed her fingertips together trying to understand the unwanted texture. Stringy, soft, very soft. A little light from her phone pointed directly at it exposed some tiny white lines on her fingers.

Spiderwebs.

Ok, ok, no need to be alarmed. Just some spiderweb on your fingers, when you've been warned about a nasty, growing spider threat. Don't think about the scary jars filled with giant, dried spiders Antoinette has. Don't think about the ancient charms made with arachnid inscriptions on them. Don't think about the skulls she's shown you with spiders etched into their forehead. Don't think about real, gross, normal spiders, with their hairy little bodies, disgusting long, furry mandibles, and their eight legs and their fangs and their many eyes. The way their tiny legs itched on the skin when they crawled down your back or up your arm.

She wiped the spiderweb off on her pants, and kept going. But she turned up her light a bit, so her Sith sight could get a proper view of the whole of nearby walls and the ceiling and floor of the tunnel. Enough so another vampire would have seen her, and a white dot of light in her breast pocket. A human would have seen only a flicker of a light, like a firefly. More than enough to give away her position, more than enough to make her eyes dart around at the still shadows the light cast, expecting creepy legs to reach out from the black.

Only silence.

Did the Prince want her risking her life for this? Nothing Natasha had seen would suggest her life was in danger, but the warning was real, the Prince took it seriously, and that meant Natasha had to take it seriously. No idea what spiders meant though, as a threat. Creepy crawlies on her back, on her legs, tickling in her hair or on her face. Furry, spindly legs, those ugly long mandibles. The eyes! Fangs, biting. Fifty years as a vampire and the fangs of a spider were still creepy as fuck.

She could shoot an assassin in the face with a snap of resolve, but spiders stuck on her mind worse than their webs. Damn she missed Jessy.

She sighed, silently, and continued into the black. Dirty concrete above and below, and dusty, old platforms every so often greeted her. Stairways that led to nowhere, some sealed off with crumbled walls. Thick cables along the walls covered in grime, held to the old concrete with bent and failing hooks. The metal blocks of the tracks beneath here looked ready to fall apart; they wouldn't, but they had the look nonetheless. Every so often, an archway lined the ceiling and walls, decorated with faded colors and patterns weaved into the bricks. Doorways, empty save for hanging signs about danger: electrical equipment. Gaps in the walls like pillars.

All of it was covered in spider web, in varying degrees. Sometimes she could go fifty feet without seeing a web, and she was sure the previous was just a coincidence. Then she came upon a batch of it, thick, circling the whole of the tunnel walls, and stepping on it made it cling to her and drag along. Not strong enough to stop her, or even register as clinging to her shoes, until she looked behind her and found a few feet of it trailing her with dirt and pebbles in its sticky net.

Until she took a step, and fell. Kneecap hit the railing hard enough to make her petrify with the impact of metal against the joint, but she bit her teeth down to keep any noise contained as she brought up her other foot to try and stand. But the first foot took effort, and she had to try and lift it against whatever was pulling it down. Something springy.

Spiderweb. Big, thick, hard spiderweb.

She gulped, and twisted. A little effort to get her foot to fight the sticky material, but it wasn't strong enough to stop her once she was paying attention, and she leaned down over it. So close, the little light she had was enough for her to examine it.

Initial assumption correct. Spiderweb, but enormous. Spiderweb was a very strong material, but normally came so thin and light that it was a paltry amount. This stuff was a few millimeters thick, and it had enough mass to it that, when she reached down to pluck at it with her free hand, it had weight. A spider would have to be damn big to make webbing this thick. Really. Damn. Big.

She stood up, forced her foot free of the webbing, and stared ahead into the tunnel before her. Nothing, but now the shadows looked like giant spiders. Her hand on her phone refused to hold still, and her eyes darted back and forth between it and the path back. She hooked the phone back into her breast pocket, and squeezed her pistol. Go back for the love of god go back. But all she'd found was darkness, silence, and some big spiderwebs.

She sighed breathlessly and pushed on. Just like with the Invictus, going on dangerous missions, except now she was doing them alone. The Prince trusted her though, and so did Daniel; a far cry from the half-trust half-distrust attitude of the Invictus, of Maria and Michael and Viktor. But at least she'd have a partner. She wasn't sure which was worse.

She turned the brightness up on her phone a touch more, so the tunnel curves beyond the way had shape, and she pressed on. Leaning forward so the light pointed down at the tracks, her eyes widened as patches of the webbing grew larger, and she had to take big steps to avoid them. A few slivers of the sticky string caught on her pants, her face, her hair, and she pulled it off as best as she could until it clumped on her sword hand.

When the webbing started to scale the tunnel itself, from ceiling to floor, in intricate patterns, she stopped. This wasn't natural. No large spiders were creating these webs. With a slow hand, she reached out for one in front of her, strand almost half a centimeter thick, and nudged it with her fingertip. It stuck to her as predicted, and when she pulled away, the web fought her. It fought hard, and she pulled harder with a flailing arm as the beast in her gut panicked.

But she got free, and pointed the light up at the vibrating web. Where were the spiders? No spiders, anywhere, just webbing, lots of it. Where—

Footsteps. She ducked into one of the wall alcoves, fidgeted with the phone, trembling fingers struggling to find the dial on the brightness, before she hooked her back to the corner with sword and pistol drawn. No one had any reason to be down here. Kine wouldn't come down, they had no access. The other covenants wouldn't come down this deep unless they were tailing her, or Azamel had told others. Someone else was in the tunnel.

The footsteps were light, quiet, soft things that made less noise than any kine would. But there were a lot of them. And without her light, all she could see of the tunnel and its curves and walls were blurry silhouettes of black against blacker and blackest.

The corner she crouched in was covered in webbing, and she grimaced as the sticky material caught into her hair, along her face and ears, and over her back. Covered. She could still move, but now she had to sit there, frozen, and wait in a spiderweb as the footsteps came closer.

But once they grew near, maybe twenty feet away, they stopped. Didn't turn around, didn't leave, just stopped. Natasha froze, didn't move a muscle, didn't blink. She strained her ear until she could hear a distant cockroach crawl along the wall.

There was breathing. Not a single set of lungs though, or whatever he, she, they, it had. Deep, slow breaths, doing their best to blend into the silence of the tunnel like she was.

Joys of being a Kindred. No need to breathe. She'd vanished into the black, and unless someone could smell her, or brought a light, they weren't going to find her.

A deep, hard sniff. She petrified, and gripped her sword until her fingers ached. More sniffs, louder, filling many lungs with air, and getting closer. The breathing was louder than the footsteps, smelling the air. Smelling her.

Movement. She dared not move, not a muscle, not an eye, not a single fucking thing. Solid stone. Don't move don't move don't move. The blurry shape came closer, something long, thick, large, something maybe three or four feet tall.

“Itch ... k'ra ... krmerh.”

Voices. Noises. And they weren't human noises. Guttural growling sounds, buried in a dark whisper. Another blurry shape stepped in next to it, again maybe four feet tall, and twice that long.

“K'ra threenk ... Azlu.”

Natasha squeezed the gun, and she had the barrel pointed in their direction. The barrel was shaking. Stop shaking. Stop fucking shaking. They might see it, stop shaking!

The thing aimed its head toward her, and came closer. Closer. Close enough she could feel the heat from its face, and hear the inhuman breaths. Too dark for it to see her, and her powerful sight could only see a blur.

Until it was inches from her face. Heat, breath, against her skin, her nose, her eyes. Don't move don't move. Oh please for the love of god don't move. She was a corpse, just a corpse, a dead thing, move along. Please, move along.

It pulled its face back into the obsidian fog, and walked down the path of the tunnel once more. Other blurs of black followed after it, each mostly of the same size, though some of the creatures were taller. She couldn't tell how many feet they had, but their bodies were long, with heads level with their bodies, and they moved as silent as prowling death. A couple more came in closer to the alcove she hid within, sniffed a little louder, and each brought their silhouettes up to her as they sniffed. But she didn't reciprocate, and without pulling air in, she couldn't smell them in return.

Better that than they notice she wasn't really dead.

The last one moved on, and her body relaxed. Something was in the tunnels. Something alive. She waited for the gentle tap of their feet, legs, spider tips, whatever, to pass on, before she let her frozen body relax.

Get the fuck out and get back to the Prince.

She looked down at her gun. Couldn't see shit in the black, but she could see a blur of her hand, of the weapon. Her fingers had gone numb. She looked at the hand holding her sword. The metal was shaking again. At least she'd managed to hold still while those ... those things went by.

Lucky break. If they were smelling her, she must have smelled weird, like some sort of corpse hybrid. The thought made her smirk, and she shook her head, even as her legs struggled to push her back to standing. Get back to the Prince.

A soft tap ripped through the silence. She looked up to the tunnel, eyes wide, body rigid hard, and stared at the blurry silhouette. Another one of the huge creatures stood there in the tunnel, its head turned to face her, long body slowly turning toward her as well. A straggler?

She held still again, still as a statue, and stared at the thing. But it growled, and turned to face her head on. Fuck.

It dove.

Mass, enormous, heavy, crashed against her, threw her body into the wall, and slammed her against the old concrete. Her skull cracked against it, and she tumbled as the claws tore her clothes and ripped her skin.

It howled, a roaring noise that vibrated along the walls, shook the metal of the railings like death riding in on horseback. Burning tore through her as its claws and weight slashed her arms, and blinding white pain lit the blackness of the tunnel.

Bullet shots joined the roar. She fired the gun up into the thing's chest, six times in quick succession. Fuck this thing, she wasn't some prey to be devoured. Warm blood splattered over her chest, and she snarled her own beastly roar as it screamed pain. Its screams only grew worse as she swung out with her sword, and cut across muscle and flesh. More blood soaked her suit jacket, until the warmth of it reached her skin.

She tapped into her vitae, and jammed her hands forward. Kindred strength threw the thing back out onto the tracks of the tunnel, and she jumped onto the tracks. Her feet landed crooked, and she felt one ankle bend too far as the toes twisted over the metal, then down onto the metal blocks beneath. But the pain would have to wait, she had to get moving.

For a brief moment, she felt relief. To let the inner beast out, to let it guide her, let the panicked and scampering Kindred run through the blackness and away from the things behind her, was liberating. But the relief was short lived as the pain scorched her dried veins until the vitae flowed down into her twisted ankle. She ran on it, ignored the pain as best she could, and tore through the tunnel. No time to adjust the lighting on her phone, no time to fix her clothes or check her wounds, no time for anything but running into darkness.

And she could hear them behind her. They roared at her, and now their heavy bodies dug into the concrete and rock of the tunnel floor; she could hear their claws ripping up the subway tunnel. But she was a Mekhet. Fast. Agile. They weren't going to catch her.

But they weren't getting quieter either. She poured her vitae into her legs, forced her body forward, tripping and falling every so often and grinding ankle hinges as her weight drove down into her feet. The things behind her still sounded close. Closer. Growls and snarls on her heels, until she dared take a peek behind her.

Mistake. Toe crashed into metal, and she went flying. At her speed, she flew through the air thirty feet before she finally landed onto her hands, and came to a hard stop. Skin tore, palms shredded over the tunnel floor, and bits of rock ripped into her fingers. She got up, and kept running. The snap of teeth echoed from where she'd been a split moment ago. They were gaining on her.

Light. Oh sweet thank fucking god some light. One of the lights that still worked lit the walls of the curving tunnel, and she cried out with exhaustion and frustration as she sprinted toward it.

The wall in front of her, the curving twist of the corner, erupted. Concrete shattered and chunks of rock cracked against the neighboring wall. A rain of debris clouded the little illumination the single light gave, and the oncoming enormous blocks of weight and inertia drove into her side. She fell over and rolled, tucking tight as best she could as her body skidded and crashed over the tracks and up against the concave wall. The light flickered, flickered, and died.

Back against the wall, butt on the cold concrete, she brought up her pistol and started firing. Another light in the distance of the tunnel kept the obsidian from overwhelming her, but in the darkness and cloud of chaos and rock, all she could see was blurs. Tall, massive blurs. She unloaded the pistol, every bullet, into the colossal shapes, and grit her teeth hard with each shot. Each bullet hit, and each earned a screech of fury and agony. The sound of bullets tearing into flesh made her nauseous, but she fired, fired until the magazine was empty. She ejected it, loaded in another magazine, and fired.

They kept coming. These things weren't the same size anymore, and instead stood nine feet tall. As the dust settled, the flash of the muzzle lit their bodies, and she could see limbs, two arms, two legs. They weren't the things that'd been walking around lower to the ground. Were they?

One of them, she nailed ten bullets into its chest. Each sunk with a tearing thud, and the thing fell over with enough mass to shake the ground around her.

But then it got back up, snarling, roaring.

She forced herself up to her feet, and started running again. But one of the titans jumped in the way, and slashed out at her with strength and claws. She brought up her other hand and sliced along perpendicular to the arm, trying to cut through it. Might as well have been cutting a tree trunk with a pocket knife.

The hand and claws slashed along her chest, cut open her clothes and skin and muscle down to the bone, and sent her tumbling. Mind again went blank as the pain blinded her. Ground. Darkness. Sound. Get up.

One of the monsters near her raised its foot. But before it managed to bring it down onto her, she brought her sword up again, and slashed up, hard. Whatever it was her sword was finding, it was tough, and she had to push with Kindred strength to cut through to the blood and muscle underneath, or whatever it was. Don't stop, keep slashing. Get out.

Daniel taught her that. You don't stop cutting and slashing until you're out. Don't pause, don't stop to think when in the middle of chaos, don't try and predict. Just act, and act quickly. In the middle of a fight, when the bullets and claws are flying, smart is only as useful as how fast you can act on it.

She forced herself into a jump from the floor. The monsters swung out at her as she went over their heads, and she felt the snap of air along her split open skin as claws missed her by a single inch. Back on the ground, she forced her vitae into her legs, enough to get them working despite the shredded flesh. Enormous slash marks ran down her thighs and onto her calves, and each stab of dirt and air along the exposed muscle flooded her mind with misery.

But she kept running. Fast, Mekhet were fast. Use it, go faster.

She pointed her pistol arm behind her, didn't look at how the angle exposed some of the bone in her arm, and started firing. Bullets went wide, hit rock, concrete, metal, but flesh too. She managed a peek down at her sword, and found the thing dripping red. Only a split moment before she fired more bullets into the things chasing her. Click click.

She screamed at the empty pistol and threw it back at the things chasing her before she rounded another corner. The weight of the beasts pursuing her shook her, vibrations filling the concrete, working into her bones. Like being chased by tanks on legs. How could things this big exist? And they didn't look like that before. It had to be them though. There were around a dozen of them, and a dozen of them had passed her when she was hiding.

But what the fuck were they? They were huge, and so god damn fucking heavy. Like shooting grizzly bears with a BB gun. Whatever they were, she knew the tunnels better than most. She had to make use of that. Get moving, put some barriers between her and them, get back to the streets.

She threw open one of the doors along the tunnel wall, closed it behind her, and locked the bolt. A big door, heavy, metal, one of the doors meant to block off important equipment. And thankfully, dual entrance. She dashed for the other door, threw it open so it slammed against the concrete hard enough to shake the old pipes on the walls, and jumped down from the small stairway into the neighboring tunnel. Trently Street was above her. Right? So fucking lost, and no time to check the signs.

But there were lights again. She could see where she was going, and had a second to look down at her damaged body. Still in one piece, no limbs missing, nothing hanging off of her in bits. And this tunnel was abandoned too, old as it was.

She wished it wasn't. Maybe those things wouldn't chase her into the tunnels if the trains were still running. Maybe one of them could just get run the fuck over.

Noise. Explosions of force shook the tunnels harder than her door slamming ever could, as the open door behind her revealed one of the monstrosities bashing in the wall of concrete. Slam. Slam. Fists and claws broke through the gray, sending more debris in a mess of clouds and dust through the room. It couldn't fit through the doorway. It was making its own door.

She got moving. She knew her legs had deep gashes in them, and each step was trying to force the torn muscle to rip apart completely. Her vitae did its best to keep the flesh from opening anymore, thick Kindred blood filling the wounds and holding them together. But each slam of her feet against the concrete of the tunnel was a jarring bolt of pain up through her muscles and into her skull.

But there was light again, and that was enough to keep moving. She ran, ran as hard as her body could take her.

One of the monsters behind her stuck its head out through the doorway she'd left open. It roared, voice sending vibrations into Natasha's skull as it resonated through the tunnel. And then the thundering concussions of claw against concrete started again as it made its own door through the wall.

It was miles before she'd find another platform, and even then she'd have to dig out keys and open the exit. Or somehow lift the gate. Neither would be quick. No choice though. No fucking choice at all.

A quarter mile beneath her and she could no longer hear the crunch and roar of the monster tearing through the tunnel's concrete wall. Done making its door then. She let out a small whimper before she choked it down, grit her teeth, and kept going.

A train up ahead blocked her path. Maybe she could get around it? No, damn old tunnel didn't have enough clearance! Not unless she was willing to pin her back to the wall, or ... crawl under it.

She turned around. The beasts were closing quickly, and their steps weren't quiet. Like a herd of horses, galloping, thunder and earthquakes on their hooves.

Crawling it was.

She threw herself down onto her belly, groaned as her open wounds rubbed against the dingy water, concrete, and metal blocks of the old tracks. Not enough room for her to lift her head more than an inch, just enough so she could see ahead along the darkness of the train's belly.

The roars behind her reached the train, and she twisted her head sideways to glance behind her. The light showed their feet, the claws on massive feet ... paws? Not quite paws though, and the claws belonged more on a dinosaur than anything with a paw. They tore at the concrete by the train, and grew in number as more of the beasts came to stand by the vehicle.

And then the beasts tore at the train. Natasha winced as she heard claws rip into the metal, and start to rip into it. Several pairs of the feet behind her were up against the train, and they were digging into the concrete while they began to shred her only bastion of hope.

The train started to lift. She froze, and dug her nails against the metal of the old track as the massive train raised a few feet into the air. The beasts behind her reached in with their claws, stabbed at the ground where she used to be, and tore through the concrete of the tunnel floor. The metal rims of the train bent against their forearms, and ripped apart when some of the beasts turned their claws upward and tried to tear the train open from the underside.

Keep going, keep going, keep going. Listen to your sire, don't stop, keep going. Plan when you have the time, act when you don't.

She kept going, and kept her head to the ground. The train came crashing down, and her ears started to ring as the metal and wheels of the train ground and bent and twisted. She kept going, fingers clasp at the dirty shadows an inch over the tunnel ground to find more things she could hook her grip on. The train tossed and shook over her, and roars joined the ringing in her ears.

Finally she arrived at the end of the car. No proper gangway — old train — meant she had the room to climb up and get between the two car doors. Ahead, there were half a dozen cars. No lights or power in the train, but the tunnel had some light, enough for her to see ahead was clear. Behind her, the train bounced and groaned as the monsters ripped it open. They could barely fit in the car itself, but they forced their way in, shoulders and muscle breaking and spreading the bars and ceiling of the car.

The doors between cars were open, thank god. Some luck, some fucking luck, finally. She slipped between them and moved into the next car, and then the next. But behind her, the beasts had torn the front of the train open, and were forcing their way through the car.

Sparks flew off from where metal sliced against metal, and glass shattered like a symphony of doom coming her way.

But they couldn't work their way through the train as fast as she could. They screeched and roared, rip and tore, and warped the metal of the train with every heavy step, but all she had to do was run through its empty, dark content, and hop between each car. At least until she got to the last car.

The back door was closed, and locked. Shit. She slammed up against it, shook it, shook it until the door rattled the car. But it wasn't coming off. The beasts behind her were catching up, and two of them stood side by side ripping the car apart to fit the herd of beasts behind them. They were going to catch her in moments.

She slammed the grip of her sword into the glass of the door's window. Again, and again, until it started to crack apart and the shards of glass cut into her hand. Kindred strength drove each punch, or there was no way she'd be getting through it. When bits of her hand caught on the glass, she switched hands, and cracked more of it until the window was a flimsy shell of its former self.

And then she threw herself against it. Head and arms tucked in tight, the glass shattered around her like snow flakes, before the ground greeted her with a merciless punch to the spine. She rolled, and the rails of the track greeted each roll with walls of solid impact. But solid meant she could get her feet against it, and she broke into a run once more as the beasts behind her ripped the train into bits.

But it gave her time, and she ran into the tunnel ahead. There had to be a platform somewhere up ahead, somewhere she could get out of the tunnels. But the deep tunnels were so damn long, and it'd be a while before she could find a platform.

God, her mind was starting to empty. Her thoughts scattered, pulled away by the thud thud of her shoes against the concrete. Tired. So tired. More light up ahead, maybe she could—

Claws grabbed her shoulder, and yanked her back. Hard. Her body tried to follow through with its momentum, and whiplash forced her neck to wrench as her head, arms, and legs kept going without the rest of her. The concrete greeted her again, and claws pinned her chest to the ground. Weight pushed in, cracking ribs as the colossal beast pressed down against her, claws piercing into her skin, through her muscle, and into her lungs.

She screamed, cried, and slashed out at the furry arm holding her down, but as she sank the blade into the forearm of the titan, it slammed its other hand down against her arm. Bone cracked, and her hand jerked on stretched tendons before she let the thing go limp.

Done. She was done. Trapped. Captured. Dead. She thought about trying to kick out with her feet, but colossal hands held her down, and her chest had imploded with the weight of the thing pinning her. Claws pierced her deep, and her ribcage was ruined. She'd be dead twice over if she was human.

How? How had one of these beasts gotten ahead of her? How!? It must have reached out from an alcove in the tunnel wall, but how did it know? They couldn't have sent one of their group around when she jumped tunnels ... did they?

"Azlu," it said. Or growled. Somewhere in the layers of deep, roaring bass, and antagonized aggression, was a voice.

From the dark and cloud of dust, another came near. It rumbled over her, bits of drool falling from its chops onto her face. She didn't blink, only stared. A mouse staring at the cat.

The muzzle flashes of her pistol had ruined her night vision in the dark, but as the dust settled, her eyes adjusted to the darkness once more, and with a few lights nearby, she could see enough. And she whimpered at the sight of titanic fangs and teeth inches over her head. Heavy breath stinking of life and animal. Eyes that caught hints of the distant tunnel lights, and reflected them.

“No. Not Azlu.”

English. She stared up at the monster, and choked on a gasp as she noticed the ears, the fur, and the muscle.

“Hithim?”

“No. Nahaka.” The other monster shoved its kin. Natasha screamed as claws pulled from her flesh, and she writhed as the burning agony ripped through her spine.

But she was alive. She stared up at the monster as it raised its hand and examined the sword she’d stuck deep into its forearm. Growling, gnashing the teeth of its snout, it yanked the sword out and tossed it aside. There were holes in its chest, bullet holes, but they had already begun to heal over. Fur, soaked in red.

She forced her blurring eyes to focus. The titans stood around her, though with how big they were, only three could be near her while the others had to stand back so the monsters had room. A few of them had bullet wounds, or had, but the little holes were closing, and the blood was stopping. As if she’d done no damage to them at all.

The one who said ‘nahaka’ stepped over her, and knelt on a single knee. Not baring its teeth at all, and it pat her leg with the giant hand of claws.

“Kindred.”

Dead, so dead. Choking on agony, body shaking, inner beast crying its death woes. No one in the world was as fucked as her.

~~Damien~~

He was totally, utterly, completely fucked. Arm twisted out of its socket on split-open flesh, and his whole body trapped in a giant spiderweb. New levels of fucked that deserved new words to represent his unprecedented degree of fucked.

“Why do you hunt me?” it said. She said?

“I ... not hunting you.” He tried to turn his head enough to look at his ruined arm. The vitae was trying to heal it, muscles and tendons pulling to twist the bone back into the joint, but the webbing refused. All his body gave him for its trouble was pain.

“Lies! Many times I have had the undead in my sight, and they hunt me.” Snarling, hissing, the woman’s voice was there but hidden in the layers of monstrosity.

“Hunt you? They were just ... investigating ... who’s been killing in their territory.”

“Territory. You make it sound as if vampires mark territory.”

“ ... they do.”

The voice from the black stopped before him. Whatever it was, it was huge. Each step was quiet as a mouse, but moved multitudes of the branches and leaves, as if they were moving aside for an elephant. Which was possible considering he seemed to be in a jungle. Were there any elephants in jungles?

Pain ripped the thought from his mind and replaced it with searing white. She was tugging on the webbing, and making it yank on his ruined arm.

“Territory? You are vampires. Hunters.”

“Hunters mark territory.”

“Only if they want to be found!” She yanked on the webbing from the black, and he screamed as he felt the skin around the open joint tear. “Vampires hide!”

“Stop! Please stop, just ... stop. I’m not hunting you, I was just investigating. Lots of vampires are investigating the disappearances. You left ... evidence, unusual evidence that warranted it. And vampires run this city.”

“Vampires ... run the city...” She stopped pulling on the web, and came to stand before him. Still too dark for him to see; Natasha might have been able to, but he couldn’t. Just glimmers of moonlight that caught along her body, nothing he could make sense of. But there were legs, massive, long, blade-like legs. Lots of them. “You ... were not hunting me?”

Thank Longinus, she was capable of conversation.

“No, I wasn’t hunting you. I was investigating the disappearing redhead, and the disappearances of humans. Not just me either, a few vampires from different covenants have been.”

“Covenants?”

“ ... I’ll tell you more, if you let me down.”

The blackness stared at him, and said nothing. But he could hear her breathing, calming. He could hear her heartbeat slowing as well, though it was an unusual heartbeat, beating a quarter speed of any human. Not as loud as he’d expect from a giant monster either.

“How do I know you will not run away?”

“Run to fucking where? I’m in a jungle. Last I knew I was in a city tunnel.”

The creature hmmm'd, and raised some of its legs from wherever it was. The weird, long blade-like limbs caught the moonlight between displaced branches and vines, and the sharp tips found where the thread above connected to the black. Like a spider weaving intricate silk, the monster pulled strands from the vines, strands from the leaves and twigs, from the rock and dirt and tree drunks, and far more from the onyx of the jungle night. A huge web.

She lowered him down, and he grit his teeth until his jaw clicked. The arm bent and twisted in weird ways, and more of the skin threatened to tear from how it contorted as she lowered him. But soon he was on his knees, and he reached over with his good arm to twist the bad one back into place.

And he screamed as he did. The monster in the dark took a step back as his voice echoed through the trees, but the scream died away, replaced by groans as he held the arm in place while he poured his vitae into the wound. Heal faster, God damn it. Each moment of the tendons and muscles pulling on the flesh made his body convulse as the fire worked through his limbs. But the fire was passing, and the more he concentrated, the faster it passed.

It was hard to concentrate as the creature came closer. She pushed her legs through the brush and stabbed the colossal blades down into the earth near him, and lowered herself. He winced as her body came closer; he didn't like spiders. But he didn't know what she actually looked like, only that she had smooth, blade-like spider legs.

Some sort of shape came closer, something humanoid. Closer, and closer, until she was only a few feet away from him. The legs must have been thirty feet long, each in seven segments just like a spider leg, but the one nearest him looked as smooth and sharp as a sword.

“ ... your uh ... your legs ... are dangerous,” he said. She pulled the leg back, and some others ones as well, until she was again too far in the oppressive night for him to see any of her. “I mean, that’s ok, not a problem, I think? Just a little scary. I saw what you did to Mr. Tenmer.”

“You were watching me during the hunt?”

“Yeah. Trying to figure out who you were ... what you were, I guess. So that was you?”

“ ... it was.”

“But you were a redheaded Scottish woman. Now you sound ... Portuguese? Not the best with accents.”

“I...” The shadows moved, and the trees shifted as the giant creature shifted around, over him, and settled somewhere in the dark on the other side of his body. “I am from Scotland, from Barrhead.”

“Don’t sound like it anymore.”

“Now, I ... I...” One of her blade legs peeked out from the blackness, and nudged at the dirt by his shoes. “I am different in here.”

“Yeah, about that. I mean, thank you for not killing me, I appreciate it. But, can you give me some information? Where is here?”

“My home. My ... home.”

“A jungle. In Dolareido?”

“We are not in Dolareido.”

“Oh. Well ... I suppose that makes sense.” A little more sense than a jungle being in Dolareido, at least. “How about some quid pro quo? You don’t seem to know anything about the vampires in Dolareido, and I know I have a lot of questions about you.”

The darkness pondered, and hummed its consideration. One minute he was spider food, the next he was talking to the spider. Strangely thrilling.

“ ... ok.” Blades reached out from the darkness again, and he froze as the sharp legs started to pluck at the threads on his body. One by one, she pulled off the white web from his face, his clothes, his hair; the webbing seemed to lose all stickiness when she wanted it to. “Vampires, are ... are they hunting me?”

“No, I wasn’t lying. Vampires were investigating because it was an anomaly. No other reason I know of.” He didn’t exactly like being so truthful with the stranger who cut open his arm, but she was sparing his life for now, and that was worth some honesty. “My turn then. Um, your name?”

“ ... in the world I am Fiona. Here, I am ... Vrallar’trakla of the Eight Blade Arach.”

He raised a brow, and squinted at the dark shape he guessed was her.

“Quite the title.”

“I ... it was not ... I did not ask for ... My turn.” The web gone, she pulled her leg blades back into the darkness, and drifted around some more, a haze blur of black against black. “Your name?”

“Damien. Your race?”

The darkness hissed, and poked at the ground and trees a few times.

“You do not know?” she said.

“No. I have no idea how you were able to tell I was a vampire on sight either.”

“ ... I can see it. Can you not see mine?”

“Your what?” he said.

“My beast.”

Oh, she could actually see a Kindred’s beast. That was ... terrifying. Whatever it was that lurked in the chests of vampires, he’d never thought it an actual entity or thing to be observed. More like reading body language, like instinct given a metaphorical body. Not so metaphorical.

“Kindred can only feel the beast of others; not very good at getting details.”

“ ... I am ... a child of the Dark Mother, same as you are. Different, but the same.” It came closer, and a few of its legs stuck into the ground by Damien’s shoes. Enough so he could see the blur of her body shape closer now. Whatever she was, she didn’t seem huge or anything, once you ignored the titanic legs moving the branches. “I am Begotten.”

“Begotten ... never heard the word before. Vampires call ourselves Kindred.”

“My turn. You ... you say va—Kindred rule the city, and that there are covenants. What are covenants?”

“Political groups. There are four ... well, hopefully, soon to be five. They’ve been here for hundreds of years.” He rotated his shoulder. Working, but still hurt like hell.

“Maybe I should have chosen another city. I ... I came here ... because my friends, they said it was a horrible place full of horrible people.”

“Well, I don’t know if it’s any worse than other cities. The Prince, the Kindred who runs the city, has more or less built this city to be a hive of vice. But as far as abusive people go, it’s no worse than other places I don’t think.”

“ ... you heard much of my hunt.”

“I did.” He smiled a little at the darkness, and stood up.

A jungle. An actual, real jungle. Was it real? He reached out a hand and ran it down the bark of a nearby tree. Felt real. Felt humid, and hot, and covered in bugs. Smelled like disease and rot. Sounded like distant, howling monkeys, squawking birds.

“So, you uh ... you hunt abusive people?” he said. His turn after all. “I can relate, but it sounded a little more important to you than that. Sounded like food.”

The shadow drifted over him again, and the blade legs found rock and earth and vine and tree to step upon, as easy as he’d walk a sidewalk.

“The Begotten have different hungers. Mine is ... to punish ... greatly. The hunger is ravenous, and ... and I say too much.”

Damien held up his hands. “Secret’s safe with me, Vrallar’trakla of the Eight Blade Arach.” First try. No harder to say than the names he read on a regular basis in the Testament of Longinus anyway.

The creature hissed and moved past him with a few quick steps. “Call me Fiona.”

“Fiona it is.”

“My turn. Is ... is my presence a problem? Will the Kindred not tolerate me?”

He winced and scratched at the back of his head. “You’ve been killing a lot of people. The Prince won’t necessarily mind, but she’ll want to meet you. It’s her city.” Still hurt saying that, but he kept the second wince out of his face. No need for this creature to know about his issues with Antoinette. “My turn. So, we’re uh ... in your home? But I mean, it’s a jungle. Fifteen minutes ago I was in Dolareido.”

“ ... can I trust you?”

He shrugged, and knocked his knuckle against one of the trees. “I wouldn’t trust any vampire, not fully. But for the moment, I’m trapped and utterly helpless. So, I mean, you could leave me here and go back to the city, I guess, and confirm what I’m saying. I’ll be dead come sunrise though.”

“The sun does not rise here.”

“Truly?”

“Truly? It is my home in the dream.”

He raised a brow again, and poked at the wood some more. “Doesn’t feel like a dream.”

“It is my lair, here in the realm of dreams.”

“I ... don’t understand.”

The creature chuckled, a weird rasp sound, and it reached one of its great laws up into the sky. The vines and branches parted, and the moon showed itself in the canopy. Moons. Damien froze solid, and his eyes drifted from one moon the other. One was much closer, and it glowed soft red, unable to pierce the canopy compared to the smaller moon that glowed a strong white.

“It is a dream...”

“An old dream. I ... the Eight Blade Arach was ... it came from a time when the moon meant life and death to an old, forgotten people, hidden deep in the jungle. Vrallar'trakla took it as her home. Takes it.”

Damien turned around to look up at her. His jaw dropped, eyes locked to her body, to the massive spider legs, to her humanoid shape.

Humanoid, sort of. The eight legs were colossal, and they stuck out of her back before curving to stab down against the earth around her. The human shape they came out of looked like it had two legs and two arms and a head, but the color was hard to make out in the odd light of the two moons; a dark tint, but closer to steel than a human skin pigment. Her skin had a shine to it too, subtle, and it looked smooth like her blade legs.

But she didn't have toes. Or feet, for that matter. Her human legs ended in points, like her spider legs. She had hands though, but instead of four fingers and a thumb, she had three claws. Across her somewhat tall body, she had the curves of a woman, more slender than her human form in Dolareido, with a waist more slender than humanly possible. Across her body was a sash, something made of white; spider silk maybe. It covered her breasts and her sex — if she had that, she certainly had breasts — and it hung several feet past her blade feet. A dress.

For all her spider blade monster features, it was her face he couldn't stop staring at. She had a human looking face, with a sharp chin and small lips. But she had no eyes. Where there should have been eyes, was instead smooth, flat surface of onyx that curved into horns that coiled back over her skull like an alien crown. Enormous, black horns, serrated with tiny spikes, and a couple of horns that coiled down and out from where ears would have been to form tusks. No hair either, but more horns coming out of her skull.

Holy Mother of God.

“You’re ... you’re uh...”

“This is Vrallar’trakla of the Eight Blade Arach. Not Fiona. Not ... but is ... me.”

Multiple personalities? He stroked his chin, and looked her up and down a few times. Maybe a few too many times. She raised one of her many legs, and poked him in the chest with it. A poke hurt, the tip sharp enough to pierce the skin and hit the bone. Those spider legs were dangerous weapons, and not in the cheesy compliment way.

“S-Sorry, just ... you’re uh ... you look so much different than I thought.”

“What did you think?” She lowered herself down to the ground and stood before him, her blade feet hovering a few inches above the mulch. Her spider legs kept her from ever touching the earth, so her dress nudged along the jungle grass while her humanoid half hovered.

“Thought you’d look like a giant monster spider.”

“Is that not what I look like?” Her head tilted down. He couldn’t see where she looked without eyes, but she did seem a little sad.

“You ... well, I don’t know. Sorta look like what I suppose some cultures pictured a spider goddess to look like?”

Fiona smiled, and reached up to run her long claws along one of the massive horns curling back from her forehead.

“You are the first monster I have talked with,” she said.

“First?”

“Yes. I came to Dolareido because some friends of mine said it was infested with scum. They ... they did not know that I needed food. They do not know what I am.”

Quid pro quo was gone. Now they were just talking. A vampire and a monster, a Kindred and a Begotten. No idea what Begotten were, except that he was looking at one, and she was a scary, strangely beautiful spider goddess.

He leaned against one of the trees, but regretted it immediately. Bugs, fucking bugs, all over him.

“I’m probably not the best first Kindred to talk with. And, and ... and I don’t suppose we can find a better place to talk, somewhere with more light? I can barely see you.”

“You mean ... back in the city? I cannot, not yet, I must feed. Vrallar’trakla hungers.” Again, referring to herself in third person. “And ... and I would prefer you do not leave, until I can leave with you. You must prove to me what you say is true.”

“So I’m a prisoner.” He nodded and rubbed his shoulder. Clothes were ruined, but the wound had closed. “Understandable. I was stalking you, after all.”

“Good. Come with me.” The creature nodded, crown of horns moving branch and vine aside, before she drifted between the trees. “In these jungles, I prefer to feed. But there are other places in my lair we can speak.”

“Lair ... dream ... Vrallar’trakla. This is all a lot to take in.”

“I am not Vrallar’trakla, I am Fiona, but ... I am not ... I am Vrallar’trakla.” She shook her head, and sighed. “It is all so new to me.”

“New? How old are you?”

“I ... I am ... I am twenty-one years old. Born in Barrhead 1997.” Every so often, a little bit of her normal voice and casual speech patterns poked through the spider monster’s rather bombastic attitude.

“Wow. And you said it was new to you?” He walked after her as best he could, but he had to keep his eyes on the ground. Every step was a trap of vines, roots, rocks, and insects he’d be happier not having in his shoes.

“I ... suppose I can tell you. If it turns out you have been lying, I will kill you. But if it turns out you have been telling the truth, I ... I could use ... someone to talk to.”

Her speech was becoming less and less imposing with every moment. He didn’t know what sort of way a spider monster goddess was supposed to talk, but with the little hints she was dropping about multiple personalities, maybe it was something different between her human form and the spider form? Natasha would probably analyze it the same way, intellectualizing it, ignoring the reality.

He was in a dream realm with a spider monster. Just a few moments ago, he didn’t believe in either.

“I am a good listener,” he said.

“I was ... I was ... in a dream, you see, devoured. And I woke up ... and I was Vrallar’trakla.”

“In a dream?” More dream talk. Woman seemed to be all about dreams. But then, he was in a jungle with two moons, and he’d gotten there through a tunnel in a city. Easier to just let the absurdity of that roll off of him until he could process it later.

“In a dream. I used to dream of ... of things in the dark. Spiders. They would trap me, and ... and pull me into darkness.”

“Recurring nightmares are pretty common.”

She turned to look at him. Or, at least he thought she was looking at him. The crown of black horns that came out of her forehead was quite beautiful, if a little disturbing in that they also came out of where her eyes would be. A mask, not unlike a masquerade ball mask that happened to cover the eyes ... that happened to spread outward beyond the temples and evolved into enormous, majestic, terrifying horns.

“Powerful dreams, Damien. Powerful, deep, and ... and one dream ... I let the spiders take me.” Even without eyes, he could see the fear etched into her lips. “And ... I changed. I saw the Dark Mother, vampire. I saw her, and ... and ... and I hungered.”

He followed her, and she went on about the Dark Mother, about hunger, about needing to feed on abusive people, but not only their flesh. She fed on their pain, on their fear, on their misery, but only if they understood, only if they realized they were being punished for their transgressions, for being abusive. All very, very weird and intriguing stuff. Kindred needed the blood of living people. She, whatever a Begotten was, needed to feed on people she was punishing for being abusive. Something about her hunger needing the person to be aware of it being punishment. Nothing like what Kindred needed.

She was a demon? No, not a demon, if they truly existed. The Testament of Longinus made mention, but it was always strongly implied as a metaphor by Lucas. This thing was some sort of monster.

Pot calling kettle.

Eventually, she stopped. Damien had to squint to see her long legs reach down to pick up someone cocooned on the ground. Mr. Tenmer judging by his size. But he wasn't moving, and considering the size of his wounds, he'd probably bled to death.

"He seems to be dead," he said. "Do you ... do you still gain sustenance from him, now that he's dead?"

"A little. I admit you cut the meal short. I will need to feed sooner." She hung the body up, upside down near the others, and opened her mouth.

Like a vampire, she sunk her fangs into his body. Unlike a vampire, she started to drink like she was swallowing down gallons. Damien leaned in for a moment to see the reaction, and regretted it. Flesh was dissolving where she bit him. Not a vampire, definitely not a vampire. The skin and muscle of the dead man liquefied, melted away, mixed with blood, dripped down from the corpse and into the rot of the jungle. The spider monster drank most of it down, careful with where it found her lips so it poured into her awaiting maw.

He'd half expected her to be like Beatrice, open her mouth wide to expose hidden teeth, or such. But her mouth was a beautiful thing, tinted a brighter shade of the metal-like gleam of her skin. Chrome, almost, against the dark steel of her skin.

She drank, and drank, and drank. Drank until the man was gone, and all that was left was the skeleton, the web cocoon, and bits of skin and tendon. Poor Mr. Tenmer must have made for a big meal, big as he was, and Fiona sighed a happy sigh as she wiped her lips.

“He was not alive long enough for me to truly punish him, to feed deeply from him. Scum that he was. I ... I do not know,” she said, “how to ... to talk, here. I am sorry. It is ... new to me, to talk ... to someone else, when the horror and I merge.”

“Horror?”

“Vrallar'trakla. She ... she does not normally have visitors.” The monster shook her head, and wiped the bits of vine and leaf from her white dress. Or at least he figured; couldn't see much in the black. “But ... if the things you tell me are true, then I am very grateful to have you. And I am sorry to have hurt you so.”

He smiled. This wasn't so bad at all. Hell, this was a pleasant conversation.

“Is there a better place we can talk, not in the city?” he said. “I'd love to get to know more about you.”

“Truly?”

“Yeah. I mean, I came here chasing a redhead, and wound up in a jungle in a dream with a spider goddess. You can say I'm pretty damn curious.”

She smiled.

---

“ ... God damn.” He really shouldn't be using the Lord's name in vain, but really. God damn.

“I found this chamber in the dream, near the city Dolareido. Upon my first visit to the city, too.”

He was looking out over a city. Dolareido, in fact. But instead of the moon or sun, there was a red moon. A blood red moon. Literal drops of blood fell from it and mixed into the red clouds, and red rain trickled down upon the city below. The cars, the people, all were frozen as statues. Literal statues, with blood dripping down their stone faces. The people in the cars were statues. The streetlights were a normal color at least, but it was mostly lost to the red rain.

“You ... found this ... in Dolareido?” he said.

The two of them walked the streets, as if it were a perfectly normal thing to walk in the middle of the street instead of on sidewalks. But the cars were all still, so no fear of getting run over. The streets were wet with blood, and every step left blood tracks that washed away a few seconds later in the light blood rain.

“Yes. It ... it reeks of ... of fear. Someone who feared the city as a whole, who saw the blood rain, who ... who saw the city’s bloodlust. Perhaps in their last moments.”

“Blood.” He laughed, held a wet hand up to his face, and laughed some more. “Someone knew the truth about the city.”

“The truth?”

“Some of the most powerful Kindred on the planet came here when they were younger, and helped grow this city into a little utopia for vampires. Only half successful. The covenants have fought each other many times, and vampires have died for ... for ... differing beliefs.” He winced. No use trying to hide his anger over that. “And the kine — humans — have often been caught in the middle of it.”

“Sounds like Kindred are ... terribly human,” she said.

Damn, what an insult. He winced again, and stopped to lean against one of the cars. A woman was inside, just a statue like the others, eyes on the road. Eerie, but quiet.

“Yeah, I guess they do. We were all human once.”

Fiona nodded. While he had to walk around on the blood-soaked streets, the spider monster's human part hovered over the streets while her eight spider legs carried her. Every so often he got a glimpse of her from behind, and how the monstrous appendages hooked into grooves along her spine.

The blood rain was soaking her silk sash, and Damien found his eyes lingering on her. Much as she was a spider monster, she was oddly attractive. All the curves of a human female were there, just mixed with the dark steel-colored skin, the blade feet, the large claws for fingers, and the grandiose array of horns.

“So Kindred do not believe in the Dark Mother?” she said.

He shrugged again and rubbed where his shirt was torn open at the shoulder. All healed up.

“Not really. Many are atheistic or agnostic. The Ordo Dracul, the Invictus, and the Lancea et Sanctum generally believe in God, or something resembling Him.” The Dragons in particular were pretty odd with what they applied the word ‘God’ to. “The Carthians believe in whatever suits their whim, and the Circle of the Crone ... well, actually, I wouldn't be surprised if many of them did believe in the Dark Mother.” Another shrug, before he started walking again, and stared up at the blood moon that colored the city red. The metaphor was sickeningly correct.

Did Antoinette understand how much blood had been shed in her pursuits? A free city where Kindred could be left to their devices was a freedom bathed in conflict. Not that Damien felt his sire's plan had been much better, but peace of the sword was peace of a sort, at least.

“I would like to speak to these Circle of the Crone members then. I ... I know so little. Vrallar'trakla knew so much of an ancient time long gone, and knew of the other beasts that stirred in the shadows. But of Kindred, vampires, she knew little. And ... and I ... struggle, to...” She shook her head some more, and raised her claws to grasp the titanic horns upon her skull. “It is ... it is nice, being able to talk to someone. I talk to my prey sometimes, but mostly to taunt them for their transgressions as I kill them.”

Brutal.

“You’ve seen other Kindred?”

“Yes. But I always ran away. I was afraid they might be hunting me.”

“Why?”

“Because I am eating their food.”

He chuckled, nodded, and started to walk the center street line once again. The blood was soaking them both through, but it was cool on his skin, and surprisingly calming. He doubted kine would agree, but to a Kindred, and to this spider creature, this Begotten, the blood rain dream was oddly settling.

“It’s an understandable fear,” he said. “But the Prince of Dolareido has pushed for peace between covenants. Talk to her when you can. The longer you put it off, the more upset she’ll become that someone’s been hiding in her city.”

“I see.” The creature raised herself high, high, and higher until she was thirty feet above and her spider legs were mostly straight. Mostly. “But if it is as you say, and the Kindred have covenants and organizations, then I have made a mistake, thinking you were hungry, mindless leeches.”

“Well, every vampire has a bit of the beast in them. When we’re hungry, really hungry, we can frenzy and just go nuts. Drink anyone in sight.” He followed after her, glancing up every so often along her long spider legs. From behind, he smirked at the shape of her butt, and how the white sash did little to hide its curves. Especially with the blood rain soaking it tight to her skin. Tiny tiny waist, inhumanly tiny, with wide hips that exaggerated everything in a very pleasing way. Her legs had all the curves of powerful, fit, toned legs, and—

Stop looking at the monster girl's ass, you dumbass. She's going to kill if you if she thinks you're lying about the Kindred. You're not, but that doesn't mean it'll be easy to prove.

“I understand the hunger well. When Vrallar'trakla is hungry, and I am in the waking world, she will rampage through dreams. Create nightmares for humans, feed on their fear.”

“So Vrallar'trakla is ... I don't get it. You, not you, part of you?”

“She is the missing piece of me. And in that dream, when the spiders devoured me, she came to me. Replaced something in me that should not have been there. I feel whole now, but ... but Vrallar'trakla came with her own story. And it is hard for me to reconcile.”

“Are all Begotten this way?”

“I do not know. I do not think so. The Dark Mother, I saw ... images ... each Horror becoming one with their beast, but not like this, not with their own name, like Vrallar'trakla.”

“Do they all do what you do? Feed on punishing abusive people?”

“No. I believe many feed on ... many ... things. Many people, many reasons, many types.” She raised herself higher, spider leggings walking upon street lights, and then up on the sides of the some of the buildings. It was the South Side district, near Elysium, but as far as Damien could see, the streets that lead to other parts of the city were blocked by hazy walls of black fog. The dream wasn't the entire city then.

“Fascinating.”

“Is it?” she said.

“It is! There are many Kindred who’d love to do nothing more than bombard you with questions. I mean, look at this!” He waved his arm out to the blood city, to the statues on the sidewalks, to the blood moon. “It’s an actual dream I’m standing in. Or nightmare. Or, you called it chamber? Your lair is made up of these chambers? It’s amazing.”

“... thank you.” She smiled down at him, and lowered herself from her great height to walk beside him. Not really beside him, so much as her human, hovering half was beside him, while her enormous spider legs were everywhere. “I know there are other lairs, other chambers near Dolareido’s dreams. And I know some of them are inhabited by other Begotten in the city.”

“Wait, there are other Begotten in Dolareido?”

She nodded. “I can feel them pulling on the dream in their own way. One of them is ... is very old, very strong, and very hungry.”

Chapter 29

~~Natasha~~

She coughed. Talking wasn't working too well. Lungs punctured, ribs cracked, and while her vitae was doing its best to heal her so she could talk, the thick liquid caught in her throat and on her tongue. Best she could do was nod when it said Kindred.

The beast stood back up, and turned to face its pack. Each put Goliath to shame, and she winced as she looked at the claws of the one who'd been ripping her apart.

Werewolves.

When she looked down at her body, she let out a quiet groan. So much of her insides were exposed. Dead. So dead. Couldn't do anything to defend herself, couldn't stand up, couldn't run or fight or anything. It'd take hours to heal, and she'd need blood to complete the process; not like they were just going to give her some. Good as dead.

The chatty one turned to face its pack, and started talking. Harsh, loud words. Something about Kindred, but also kuruth, and other things she didn't get. The titans, some around eight feet tall, some over ten feet, each wide and thick with muscle and mass, growled and snarled at the talking one, but they nodded. The werewolves ran the gamut of shades of gray, from black to light gray.

One of the werewolves, also a lighter color, didn't seem so eager to listen to whatever the black one was saying. They stepped up, and shoved their shoulder. Her shoulder, now that Natasha looked closer. The animals did have humanoid features, and the woman had a hint of bosom and hip under their fur, where the males had broader shoulders. The third werewolf gestured to its friend, the one who'd suffered most of Natasha's bullets, before she barked her frustration at Natasha. No language barrier to understand 'fucking pissed'.

The black one didn't reciprocate. She waited, folded her furry arms across her chest, tail wagging in a slow, stiff manner. Dogs. Fucking dogs. Fucking gigantic dogs. Pack leader structure, complete with barking and shows of dominance. The black one stepped in closer, stared her female pack mate in the eye, and waited. Dead silence, even among the monsters.

The other snorted, threw up her arms, and walked away. And as she did, she started to shrink. The fur fell away from her body, the muscles, the height, it dripped away into the blackness of the barely lit tunnel. A woman emerged, and so too did clothes, fading in where the fur faded out.

The others began to change as well. Men and women, clothes on each of them, including the man she'd sunk a host of bullets into. Their clothes were undamaged, inside their bodies while they were transformed? What the hell?

The black one became a woman as well, a short one, only a few inches taller than ant-sized Natasha.

"I am Avery," she said.

Natasha squinted at her. Half to focus her blurry eyes, half to ignore the scorching sensations running along her skin. The woman was strong, fit, with a black ponytail down to her hip. Tanned skin, and unless Natasha was going crazy, she had silver eyes. Not extreme or obvious silver, but subtle, like a hue off of blue. Pretty.

"... I—" Blood, thick Kindred, heavy, sticky, caught in her throat again, and she forced it down. "... are ... you going ... t-t- ... t-t-to kill me?"

The werewolf shook her head. “No. You are not our prey.”

Natasha looked at herself, at the exposed bones, the ruined clothes, the tight muscle of a vampire’s pale body ripped open.

“ ... why ... d-d-did ... you d-d-d ... do this to me.”

She wanted to cry. God she wanted to cry. But she didn’t have the vitae to spare for the blush of life, so her dry eyes stared at the woman as best they could before rolling up when another scream started to bubble in her throat before she pushed it back down.

“Wrong place, wrong time. But you’re a vampire, right? You’ll heal.”

She coughed, and the agony swept through her again. But she was healing. The werewolves put her to shame for how quick they healed, but then, maybe they wouldn’t heal so quickly if someone had nearly cleaved off their limbs and stabbed a few dozen swords through their thorax. Closing the holes the enormous claws had created in her lungs, her chest and flesh, was a slow, agonizing process, and no matter how hard she tried, she couldn’t keep back the whimpers.

“F-F-Fuck ... you...”

Avery laughed, and motioned to one of the men beside her. “Take her. She’ll live, but don’t give her any blood. I don’t want her up and moving again. Fucking fast little mosquito.”

Fast mosquito. Fuck her god damn fuck her. If she still had her pistol, she’d put a few bullets through the bitch’s head. Apt insult.

---

They took her out of the tunnels and back topside; under threat of having her head ripped off if she attracted attention though. And they’d do it, she was sure. Considering the mess she was in, holes in her body and flesh torn open, she wouldn't be able to defend herself. If only she still had her sword. Or maybe a high-powered shotgun.

One of the men was carrying her in his arms, like a doll held across them horizontal. Comfortable enough she could focus on fixing her body, now that she wasn't putting so much effort into running for her life. The sickening sensation of bones realigning before they pressed groove to groove made her groan, and every so often as the tendons started functioning again, she whimpered. But her wrist was working again. Now all she had to do was put a sword in that hand and maybe she could stab someone.

Dumb idea. The rest of her was still a mangled mess. The tips of her ribs were poking into her lungs and other withered organs. Her arms and legs were shredded like paper. The back of her skull was split. So she lay there in the man's arms, and healed herself.

"How ... how d-d-did you catch me?" she said.

"Hmmm?"

"You ... you had ... someone ahead-d of me."

He laughed, and nodded. "We hunt in packs, but we're not mindless animals, Kindred. When we realized you had slipped into another tunnel, we sent our fastest man ahead, and we herded you toward them."

Herded. Well, she could have taken a right instead of left when she got into the second tunnel. So fuck him, not as herded as he was acting.

"Just t-to catch me?"

"We thought you were something else."

“ ... why?”

“You smelled odd.”

Smelled odd? She smelled faintly of blood and maybe a bit of flesh; Kindred didn't go around smelling like corpses, or even smelling like kine.

She frowned at the man holding her. He was a tall man, with tanned skin and an athletic build. Course all the werewolves looked fit and strong, but this one looked fast, and agile. His hair came down to his jawline, black, wavy and messy. Clean shaven. Would have been kind of cute, if she wasn't imagining putting a sword into his stupid face.

“I'm Arturo Ibarra,” he said.

Arturo. He had a touch of Spanish to his accent, and he looked like he could be from Mexico. Dark brown eyes too.

“ ... you're the one that headed ... me off.”

“I am.”

Find a sword, or any sharp object. Stab him, stab him now. Anger was an effective pain suppressant.

Or it was for a few moments at least, but as her immediate rage subsided, and all she was left with was waiting as they walked toward the city outskirts, the pain returned. Her flesh was closing, but she was low on vitae and every moment awake was tiring. She needed sleep. She needed blood.

When she'd gotten out of this mess, she was going to ask Jessy for another night with the ghouls. And she was going to drink all four of them. One at first, to heal her wounds, and then a second to soothe her aches and pains. And then the other two, she'd drink after having a nice, long, very very very very very gentle bout of tender sex. Because after all this, she deserved some serious pampering.

Her mind wandered like always, fantasizing, and she knew it was too. But she needed a break from current circumstances.

Maybe she'd march into the Elysium tower, point a finger at Daniel and Antoinette, and throw a temper tantrum about how she nearly died because of them. No more running solo. No more deep dives into old tunnels inhabited by monsters. No more getting cut open.

Now she was just being an idiot. She remembered how the Prince looked, her damaged body when Damien had dragged her out of her underground fortress by her hair. Missing an arm and a leg, full of holes, bone exposed. Enough to kill most vampires through sheer damage overload. Natasha wasn't even close to that.

But it was nice to dream fantasies of ranting at your bosses.

“How is our guest?”

A man's voice. The newcomer fell in beside Arturo, and smiled down at her. This one was very tall, ridiculously tall, and with shoulders wide enough to have trouble with doorways. His hair was a soft brown, came down to his shoulder, beige skin, and his eyes were green. A bright green that made him look like a gentle giant.

“She's fine, Matt. Healing, but after the shit we did to her, I'm guessing she needs blood.”

Natasha frowned at Arturo, but nodded. Let them think she was helpless without blood. She mostly was, but with a bit more time, she'd be strong enough to at least walk, and walk herself to safety. Unlikely, but possible.

“Blood eh? I’ve heard a vampire’s bite is quite pleasurable.” Matt leaned down over her. Closer, she could see the scruff of his face. He looked cute too, like a big teddy bear, that she could rip the fluffing out of.

“Going to let her bite you?” Arturo said, big smirk on his face.

“Maybe? Avery said it takes a lot more than that to turn you. And she’s a cute little thing, right?” Matt smiled at her, and leaned in a little closer. “Sorry. We’re being right asses, aren’t we?”

“... you are.” But a compliment was nice, every now and then.

“So, like Arturo said, I’m Matt. Matt Wilson. What’s your name?”

She raised a brow, and stared at the big, apparently dumb man.

“She’s not going to tell you her name dumbass.”

“She might.”

“Don’t be an idiot Lenny.”

Matt, or Lenny, frowned and elbowed Arturo’s side. Which made Arturo wince and shift, which made Natasha shift in his arms, which made her yelp at the sudden shift of his arms making her torn body bend.

Lenny. Considering how comfortable they seemed with each other, Arturo was George. Natasha frowned, and twisted her neck a bit to look at the others.

Thirteen of them, of all genders and sizes. A few of them looked Mexican like Arturo, but some others looked like they came from northern America, some others from Europe maybe. All around the world? Most likely not. But at least the group seemed race inclusive.

Avery drifted closer, and smiled down at Natasha as she took Matt's spot beside her.

"What's your name?"

Natasha scowled. "You expect m-me to give you my name?"

"I do."

"Why ... would I d-d-do that?"

"Why not?"

"Because ... I'm a p-prisoner, and any information I give you ... is more information to use ag-against me."

Avery laughed and pat Arturo on the shoulder. "Sounds like something Daniel would say."

"... you know Daniel?"

"I do. We didn't part on the best of terms last time I was in Dolareido. Well, better than Jacob." Avery reached behind her, adjusted her ponytail, and grinned down at Natasha. "If you don't know who I am, that means you weren't there at the time."

"Why were you here in D-Dolareido last time?"

"Same as this time. Hunting things. Your stupid Prince has a habit of attracting the attention of things that shouldn't be wandering around."

Antoinette attracting bad things to Dolareido? Understandable, sort of, given Antoinette's interest in the occult. But Natasha had never seen anything truly odd in Dolareido. What could Werewolves want?

“What ... are you going t-t-t-to do with me?”

“Tie you up till you give me some information. I need to know who’s doing what in Dolareido. I want to know what the Prince is up to, but I really want to know what Lucas and Viktor are up to. That fucker Tony too, what’s he up to?”

Natasha blinked at her, then at Arturo. “I ... give you information, and you’ll let me g-go?”

“Need a couple more things, but yes. We ain’t here for you kid, we’re here for bigger prey. Seems like you’ve got an infestation. Something happen here? Something upset the balance or something? Cracks in the seams are showing, and shit is worming its way through.”

Cracks in the seams? Didn’t sound like anything she knew about. She didn’t want to give them information, but god she wanted to get back to her home, to Jessy, to her sire and her boss. Get away from the big bad dogs.

“ ... let me think about it.”

“Sure, think. I understand vampires can get pretty prickly when they’re hungry. Think you’ll talk if I hold a juicy blood bag for you?” The woman talked like Jacob, snide and joking, playful and threatening, all at the same time.

Natasha frowned, grit her teeth, and looked away.

“Fine. Think about it kid. Get back to me when you’re willing to talk.” She shrugged, and moved ahead to lead their pack again.

“Really should just tell her what she wants to know,” Arturo said.

“She your ... your ... I d-don’t know what werewolves have, pack leader? Alpha?”

He nodded. “She’s a smart woman. You’d be happier if you listened to her.”

“B-B-Be happier if her pack didn’t nearly kill me.”

Arturo leaned down over her, closer, and grinned at her with his dark brown eyes. There was a bit of wolf in them, even in his human form, just an edge of animal along the iris. Looking at her like a hungry beast.

“You were a hard thing to catch.”

“ ... you w-w-were the one to get ahead of me.”

“I was. Both times. The first time, I was lagging far behind. You thought our straggler was the only one in back, and when you ran through to dark to me, I tried to grab you. Hit the wall.”

Right, both times it was this guy catching her unawares.

“Smart b-bastard,” she said.

“I am, aren’t I?”

Cocky too, with a smarmy grin and a handsome face. Perfect. No remorse for when she’d eventually stab him.

“So ... werewolves. You weren’t big b-brutes when I first saw you in the tunnel.”

“No, we were hunting in our Urshul form. We must have looked like large wolves to you.”

Multiple forms? Interesting. “What else can w-w-werewolves do?”

The bastard grinned down at her. “Prying me for information?”

“ ... a little.”

“Transform into humans as you can see, and wolves, and the Gauru form, well, you saw that at work by the train.”

She shivered, and groaned agony as the small vibration shifted mending muscle against itself. Hold still, heal, that’s all she needed to do. And maybe get a little information while she did.

“Your kind are ... scary.” Not exactly what she wanted to say, meant to say, but it came out anyway, and she sighed as she closed her eyes.

“My kind? Your kind scheme and manipulate for centuries. Your kind cultivate humans like sheep. Your kind are immortal.” Arturo growled, a very animal sound too, and when Natasha opened her eyes, she found his grin had faded. She’d truck a nerve. “Worst a werewolf ever did was kill when he was hungry. Fucking vampires? Kill thousands, millions, in your games.”

“Don’t mind him.” Matt came back up beside Arturo, and smiled down at her again. Like they were friends. Like anyone who was anyone would want to be friends. His nickname fit. “Avery likes to scare us sometimes with stories about vampires. Is it true you sleep during the day, and burn from sunlight?”

She stared at the big, dumb oaf. Shouldn’t like him, but she kind of did.

“Are you ... g-going to leave me ... for sunrise?”

“What? No, of course not.” Matt shook his head like it was the most horrible suggestion. “We’re all terribly sorry about what happened. And Avery will let you go, no worries, once you tell us what’s going on in the city, and we have an understanding.”

As if she was going to do that. Matt could be as nice as a puppy, it wouldn't sway her. Nope, not one little bit.

---

The pack didn't go very far from the tunnel exit. Half a mile at most, and they stopped at an old factory in North Side. The building was abandoned, but not condemned; someone was bound to buy it up for another ill-fated business venture at some point. Until then, it was just a big, empty building filled with big, empty tables. Old, dirty glass windows. Dead air vents with dust and cobwebs hanging off of them. Ugh, webs.

Arturo set her down on the table. She'd healed well enough to sit up, with less flesh cut open on her body. But her insides were hell, and the hunger was starting to make her dizzy. Starting to make her fidget and twitch. She needed blood, badly. All the signs of frenzy were showing on her fingers, in her toes, in her skull, and the moment she saw someone she could bite who couldn't tear her in half, she'd jump them, whether she wanted to or not.

But with the wolves, even the beast in her gut wasn't so mindless as to jump one of them. She wouldn't survive the encounter. But, with time, the beast wouldn't stay so smart. Eventually she'd be out of her mind with hunger, or she'd slip into torpor until someone fed her. Neither idea sounded promising.

“So, little vampire, ready to talk?” Avery stood before her pack, arms folded across her chest, small smile on her lips. She wasn't much taller than Natasha in her human form, but she looked like she packed a mean punch. The silver-blue eyes looked more like ice the longer Natasha met them. The woman appeared to be in her forties, but she was a werewolf, so who knew how old she really was.

God she was hungry.

“ ... ask. I m-might ... b-b-be ab—”

“I think she might have trouble sp-p-p-p-p-peaking.” While everyone was sitting around and getting comfortable, one of the pack came up to her and grinned down at her. A woman, tall, curvy, rich sepia skin, with a sharp face and eyes that threatened to cut Natasha up like claws. Scary. And mean.

Arturo stepped up to her and yanked on her arm, pulling her back toward the pack by the wall.

“Shut up Stephanie. Don’t be such a bitch.”

Stephanie yanked her arm free, and stared up at Arturo. She was tall, he was taller.

“We got no reason to trust this little blood leech. You heard what happened last time, Avery told us herself.”

Arturo shrugged. “No reason to insult how she talks.”

Natasha raised a brow and looked between the two arguing like siblings. Avery seemed content to let it happen too, but her grin was gone, replaced with patient waiting. Maria or Michael would have given a tongue lashing worthy a thousand deaths if Natasha and Jessy argued like this in front of them. Viktor wouldn’t have said a thing, just demoted them instantly.

“Fuck off. We can’t trust her. She could easily lie.”

“Just as easily as she could tell the truth. We let her live, and—”

“Could still lie and—”

“And risk running into us after the fact? She—”

“We can trust her.” Everyone turned to the new voice. This one looked quite young, but big and strong. Short blond hair, blue eyes, a soft face, and a softer voice. He fidgeted a little, a fidget Natasha knew all too well, and shook his head. “At least, that ... yes, we can trust her. If she tells us something.”

Natasha frowned at the young man. His voice wavered a little; someone who had trouble speaking. But his eyes didn't just avoid eye contact, they drifted like they were catching fireflies.

Avery turned to her pack and gestured to the young blond. “David says we can trust her. Good enough for me.” And again the pack leader turned to face the little Mekhet, cocky grin on her like Arturo had before. “You wouldn't want to hurt David's feelings, right?”

David. Natasha watched him for a little while longer, and squinted. His eyes really were drifting around, but so were his movements, subtle and hidden in his old baggy hoodie and jeans. Like the man couldn't hold quite still. A condition, perhaps? She doubted human ailments troubled werewolves, but then what did she know about werewolves?

“ ... ask.”

“Wonderful.” Avery leaned her butt against the neighboring table. “Last time we were here, or I was here anyway, was 1955. Spent a couple years here, made some friends, some not-so-friends. So all I want to know is how the old gang is doing, before I make my presence known. How's Viktor and Antoinette?”

Well, it's not like she was asking for secrets, and the information was harmless. Probably. And maybe a little information would get her something to eat before she went insane.

“Viktor is d-dead.”

“ ... really?”

She nodded, and stroked her legs. Her suit was a tattered, ruined mess. Much of her skin was exposed, but at least she wasn't torn open anymore. If she'd been in any worse condition, she'd probably be in torpor by now, and probably half naked for the damage to her clothes.

“Viktor and T-T-Tony ... dead, fighting, fire.”

“Well I'll be damned. Two major pains in my asshole gone ... and Lucas?”

“ ... also d-dead. Tried to kill the Prince. D-Died ... trying.” No need to bring Jack into this.

Jack. Heh, what would he do if in this situation? Kid had a way with people.

“Lucas dead too. God damn. Maria and Michael?”

“Alive.”

“Ah well, can't have em all. And I guess Jacob is still alive too? Apocalypse will come and go before that bastard dies.”

Avery knew Jacob. She knew of the others, but from the way she said his name, the tiny inflection of personal annoyance, she knew Jacob personally.

“He ... he is.”

“Damn. Old snake needs to die. But, three gone ain't bad. And with them out of the way, maybe I can get to know Garry a bit better.” Laughing, the woman pulled herself to sit up on the table, and her short legs dangled off the edge. “He's still alive right?”

Did she like him? Figures a werewolf would like a Gangrel. And she had a bit of an attitude to her, like Jessy, like Michael.

“He is.”

“Great. I’ll have to pay him a visit.”

Avery nodded, stroked her chin, and motioned for one of the pack to come closer. Another woman came over, tanned skin and dark hair, average height and a fit build. She had box braids for hair all the way down to her hip, and Natasha found herself admiring them. So pretty. Maybe related to Arturo, or from the same place.

“Yeah Avery?”

“Clara, keep an eye on things. I’m going to pay Garry a visit.”

“Alone? It’s almost sunrise too.”

“Yeah alone. He knows me, and I need to scout the place out anyway. I’ll be fine. Just want to double check on some facts and what our girl has told us.” With that, Avery gave Clara a casual salute, and walked for the door. “Keep her around, but give her something to eat would you? Don’t want to ruin any goodwill here.”

Arturo raised a hand with a dismissing wave. “She drinks blood.”

“So? Give her some of yours if you have to.”

Stephanie laughed, and wandered off as Avery closed the door behind her. The others shrugged and returned to their own conversation, though Natasha could tell they were avoiding using any words or references she’d understand. Lot of ‘prey’ and ‘target’ and such.

“You ... you guys are ... less like a p-p-pack and more like a ... family.”

“That’s what a pack is.” Matt came up and sat beside her. So tall, so huge, and the friendliest of the bunch.

Arturo sighed, shrugged, and came to sit across from Natasha where Avery had been. “Yeah, we’re a family. And you love your family, much as you hate them.”

She knew that feeling. Lenny and George earned a smile out of her, no matter how hard she tried to suppress it, and she looked away to the pack hanging out in the corner. They had cut her up and gave her a night of pain and agony she’d never forget, but at least things were looking up. Relatively.

“W-What time ... is it?” she said.

“Half an hour till sunrise,” Matt said. “Basement here should keep you out of sunlight.”

A basement? A far cry from her bed back home, but more than enough to block out sunlight. Probably. Should check it out, and with only thirty minutes to do so, she didn’t want to waste anymore time.

“C-Can I see it?”

Matt nodded, slipped off the table, and scooped her up. So huge! He tried to be gentle, but her insides were still a punctured mess, and she groaned with each shift of limb to get herself into his big arms. Bigger than any of Jessy’s ghouls.

Natasha, him and his buddies were going to kill you. They nearly did. Your insides are swiss cheese and your outside was shredded paper only a little while ago. Stop acting like horny Jessy, start acting like angry Jessy. Stop admiring his big, hard, muscled arms, and figure out a good time and place to stab him in his cute, cuddly face.

Arturo followed, and the two of them descended a stairway into the basement underneath. Building didn’t have power, but Arturo brought an LED lantern, and set it on the table. A big basement, filled with old machinery. Something like a desk you could sit at, with spools on each side, and a motor that did ... something. And there was newer equipment too, pressing equipment of some kind. So not exactly new, but newer than a lot of the old North Side district.

But the most important part was checking for windows. No windows though, just basement wall and lots of cobwebs. Fucking webs.

Matt set her down on the table next to his friend's lantern, and she did her best to give him a smile. Hard, with the searing pain still working through her chest, but something about his puppy expression made her want to smile at him. Give him a dog treat.

Good god she was already thinking of werewolf jokes. Jessy would be proud.

“Cobwebs ... here t-too.” She sighed, and tried to dust herself off. Mistake. Groaning, she set her hands back down, and sighed.

“We won't ask what you were doing in the path of our hunt,” Arturo said, “but think you can spare us your name yet?”

“ ... Natasha.” Might as well. Nothing she'd heard would suggest she had cause to withhold her name. But they'd been hunting something in the tunnels, and they weren't telling her about it, so she wouldn't tell them about it either. Let Antoinette be the mediator of information in that department.

“Natasha. Cute little thing aren't you?” Arturo grinned, folded his arms across his chest, and looked at her. “Could fit you in a thimble.”

“If ... if I had b-blood, I'd...”

“I’d stab you.”

Arturo laughed, put up his hands before setting them down behind him on one of the machines he leaned against. “Can’t take a compliment?”

“You’re ... playing with me.”

“Am not. Sexiest little vampire I ever got my claws into.”

Sexy? He thought she was sexy? Cute, and ... sexy? He was a flirt, a sexy man, confident in his looks and charm, and smarter than he let on. He had those eyes, Mekhet eyes, analyzing and planning steps ahead, mind running thoughts when he wasn’t saying anything. She knew how he thought, and he thought like a snake, weaving and winding complicated paths of decision chains. He was dangerous! Dangerous, and ... he thought she was sexy.

“ ... you can ... m-m-make it up to me.”

“Ha, you want blood? I can’t just grab someone off the street without attracting attention.”

“ ... g-give me yours.”

He opened his mouth to say something, but stopped himself. He eyed her, thinking a million thoughts a second no doubt, same as she was. Could she drink a werewolf? Would he taste like dog? Would there be a bad reaction? Would he even give her blood, or deny her any for what he might consider an insult? She bit her lip, and waited. God, she was so damn hungry, hungry enough to ask her captors.

“ ... will it hurt?”

“N-No.”

“Will I sleep when you’re done? Comatose style, like I hear humans do when you don’t kill them?”

“Maybe? I ... I need ... n-n-need to drink, and ... need a lot. You might ... m-might sleep for a day? But, you’re a ... a ... werewolf. You’ll heal fast, right?”

Arturo tapped his chin, and looked to his friend. “What do you think?”

“Avery said don’t give her blood at first. But she changed her mind, so ... go ahead? I’ll keep an eye on her. Besides, she’s got maybe twenty minutes of night left. Not like she’s going anywhere.”

Natasha sighed, and rubbed her arm. The suit was ruined there, and her fingers found naked skin. She was pouting. On purpose too, like Jennings might if she wanted to manipulate someone, men in particular.

She’d changed a lot since joining the dragons. Had to think on her feet, instead of mindlessly following Invictus protocol.

“Alright.” Arturo walked up to her, and leaned in close. Very close. He put his hands on the table beside both her legs so he was nose to nose with her. Dark brown eyes, with an edge to them, a bit of steel in his gaze that his friend completely lacked. And with his jaw-length, messy black hair, tanned skin, and tall, lean build, he ... he was sexy. Or she was just so damn hungry she couldn’t tell the difference between attraction and bloodlust.

Or she’d combined the two. Some people did that right? Combined things in their minds, and became unable to separate them. Jessy’s fault.

She put her hands on Arturo’s shoulders. Warm, so warm. And ... inhuman. So close, she could feel the beast in her gut trying to read the beast in front of her. Drinking another beast? Kindred didn’t do that, not normally. Kindred should never drink another Kindred, ever. But a werewolf was alive, so she didn't have to worry about vitae addiction. She did have to worry about not knowing what sort of madness this might bring.

So hungry though. So damn hungry. Her fingers were shaking, and her fangs were coming out before she wanted them too. It was enough to widen Arturo's eyes, and she could hear his heartbeat increase. He was anxious too. Good, it wasn't only her. The warmth of his skin around his neck found her drifting fingers, and she tugged on the thickness of where his neck connected to his shoulders to bring him closer. The werewolves were all fit, tough looking fighter types, types Jessy would no doubt love. And Natasha couldn't help but let her mind wander as she breathed in the smell of flesh, of human-yet-not-quite-human skin, oil, musk, life.

Matt was watching, she could see it in the corner of her eyes, but his expression was wide with curiosity. She didn't like having someone staring at her, but she could barely offer the mental awareness to notice him once Arturo's neck got within biting distance.

"Little vampire scared now?" Arturo said.

She growled, a dark, tiny noise, but a growl nonetheless, and bit him.

"Ow, hey ... hey..."

Oh ... god.

Life, warmth, the precious overflowing power of thick blood flooding the tongue. The taste, the sweet nectar, the heavenly drink. Ambrosia trickling down her withered insides, filling them with life long gone, sending tingling waves into her extremities as her Kindred body did what it did best: turned a living thing's blood into vitae within her corpse. Her shredded muscles closed, and healed in moments, and her aching joints sang with relief.

But it wasn't the same. It was different. It was ... better. The flood of the Kiss was always exhilarating, and when you got to do it slowly, tenderly, it was pleasure and bliss. But this werewolf, this creature holding himself out to her, his blood was different. It was ... was ... she didn't know. Couldn't describe it, couldn't put her finger on it. But every gulp was a jolt of energy through her, a blast of power down her spine, of vitality into her core.

She didn't know what cocaine felt like, having never done it as kine. But this must have been a decent comparison.

And she wanted more. She tightened her grip on the werewolf's neck, and pulled him in closer. He was still conscious, and that meant she could keep drinking, drinking, and drinking until her belly was full, wounds healed, and her dead heart beating with more energy than she knew what to do with; a fresh meal awoke the blush of life whether a Kindred wanted it to or not. A little groan came out of the huge beast, and her hands drifted down from his neck to his arms, before one reached under it to touch his hard chest. More.

Arturo started to lean in closer, but not on purpose. The telltale signs of exhaustion were hitting him. Exhaustion, and the blissful pleasure of the Kiss done gently, sensually. But he was light now, with the strength of a vampire in her arms. She held him up, and suckled a few more mouthfuls of blood from the big man, and the hard muscle in between her fangs.

She stopped. So full. Anymore and she was liable to puke just from running out of room in her belly. Full, and high on the energy of it, of werewolf blood coursing through her veins. She licked the man's neck, sealed the puncture wounds, and moved the big guy over into Matt's hands.

“Y ... yeah ... I um ... just let me sit for down a bit.”

Matt nodded, and helped sit his friend down against the wall by the staircase before coming back over to lean against the table. Natasha was still sitting on. And he stared at her, eyes still wide, and cheeks a little blushed.

Natasha looked down at herself. Her skin was no longer pale with a vampire’s typical corpse look, but flushed with the blush. Happened whenever a vampire drank, not her fault! Not her fault her clothes were torn open either, and a lot of her skin was exposed. Very much a lot of it, now that she looked down and noticed. Her breasts were only just barely covered by bits of shredded shirt, but her legs, stomach, arms, all of it was open to their eyes.

And the two werewolves were looking at her the way Brad and Isaac and Vincent and Chris had.

No, no no, stop thinking like that. Just the blood giving you a major high, like it always did. Borderline Stockholm syndrome here Natasha. These animals tore you up only hours ago. Remember the sensation of claws and broken ribs piercing your lungs?

“Thank y-you.” She shook out her hair, and hugged herself in a futile attempt to cover up some of her exposed body. “So, you um ... can you please make sure ... K-Kindred don’t normally sleep so exposed, and—”

“We’ll be taking shifts to keep an eye on you,” Matt said, hands up again. “I mean, we are sorry about what happened you know? Thought you were our prey and all that. Shouldn’t have happened.”

“Then why not let m-m-me go?”

“We will, once we know we can get back to the hunt without vamps getting in our way.”

“I ... I d-don't know if ... they'll step aside ... just for my sake.”

“We'll cross that bridge when we get to it. So uh ... you just want to ... lay down or something?”

Art chuckled. “Maybe cross your arms over your chest, Dracula style?” Laughing, but breathing deep, exhausted, and struggling to keep his eyes open.

Stab him. Stab him while he's sleeping.

She shook her head, got off the table, and found a corner to sit in. Once the sun started to rise, the overpowering urge to sleep would hit her, regardless of how she was positioned. She didn't like doing it in front of others, let alone dangerous strangers, but at least falling asleep wouldn't be an issue.

She gave Matt and Art a final look before she closed her eyes. Matt was smiling like a big dumb puppy, and Art was smirking like a sneaky cat. Perhaps a better comparison than Lenny and George.

~~Jack~~

Jack hid in the shadows, and watched. Not that he could do that very well, but that's why he had Amanda with him. Young as she was, her cloak of night was at least strong enough to hide them from some kine when combined with some sneaking and darkness.

He looked through the window of the second floor of the home. A woman was asleep, blankets tight to her shoulders like a cocoon. Every so often, she tossed, turned, and let out a little whimper as she trembled. But the noises passed as she wrapped herself tight, and drifted asleep once more.

God damn it.

Jack set his forehead against the glass, and stared. She was crying in her sleep. Every so often, he could hear her murmurs, mentions of his name, why did he have to die.

Amanda set her hand on his shoulder, but he shrugged it off. Not yet, he wanted to watch a little longer.

Mom got up from bed, and walked off for the kitchen. He listened, ear to the glass, and found the old, familiar sound of her steps. He found the hum of the air conditioner too, and the annoying whirr sound it made when it got too hot for it. Mom had given him the better air conditioner for his room, and she'd taken the noisy one. Still hadn't taken his back for herself.

She came back with a glass of water and some pills in her hand, popped them, and sat on the edge of her bed. All alone. She looked so damn alone.

The weight of the empty room crushed Jack until he felt his skull splitting open against the glass. He could open the window, say hello. Hell he could just knock, and she'd hear him, and he could wave. She'd be elated to see him alive. They'd hug, and he'd tell her everything was fine, and that he'd moved on with his life but needed to pretend he was dead. She'd understand, smile, kiss him goodbye, and forever be happy.

Yeah right.

Mom climbed back under the sheets, and curled up into the fetal position on her side. She shook a few more times, little tremors in her shoulders, before she drifted back to sleep again.

Jack pushed away from the window, and walked away, eyes still on it. Maybe something would happen that'd ... maybe something could happen ... maybe he could...

He turned, and walked away faster.

“She looked so ... so fucking sad,” he said.

Amanda nodded, and stepped beside him. Both of them were in suits and walking the streets; odd for two young people to do in the late evening. But any nearby police or prying eyes wouldn't be able to notice them with Amanda keeping the cloak of night up. It'd been tough to ask her for the favor, but he needed to see, he really needed to see. And now he wished he hadn't.

“It's ... it's really hard, Jack,” she said. “I spied on my family more than once. A lot more. It was over a year before my dad could sleep the whole night without getting up to work on things in the garage.”

“Time heals all wounds?”

“I guess, yeah. But I'm not going to lie to you, my dad is different now, and ... it's different for parents, when they lose a child.”

Well, he had to give it to Amanda, she wasn't as soft as he thought. He half expected empty platitudes, cheerful words encouraging him, explaining that his mom would be fine. She'd get over his death, maybe find a man; she hadn't had much luck with relationships after Jack's dad died. She'd be fine, he'd expected Amanda to say.

He smiled at her. “I appreciate the brutal honesty.”

She smirked and pat him on the shoulder. “I knew you would.”

“You did?”

“Yeah I got the impression last time we talked that you don't really care for typical social niceties.”

True that. He nodded, and smiled at the Mekhet.

“Sorry if that makes me a bit of a downer.”

“Not a downer, just someone who dislikes the subtleties of the game. I noticed it that first night we met, at the Invictus ball. You don’t like the Danse Macabre.”

“Does anyone like it?”

She laughed, and the two of them rounded a corner to find their drive waiting for them. One of Madam Jennings’s ghouls she was letting Miss Pol borrow. They hopped into the backseat, and started the drive back to the Invictus domain of South Side.

“Some people like it. Doesn’t the Prince?”

“Yeah, I think she does. She wants the break, but she also likes the Danse more than she lets on, I think.” He chuckled, rubbed his buzzed hair, and stared out the window at the passing street lamps. Careful to avoid details about the Prince, but he could chat a little. And Amanda was growing on him. She liked to gossip, and as much as he considered himself above it, it was a tempting vice.

Better than focusing on his mom, and how miserable she fucking was. If he’d been blushing life, tears would have been streaming down his cheeks. He might be able to be that open with Antoinette, but not Amanda.

A ten minute ride later, and the two of them were back on the street. The weather wasn’t as crazy hot anymore, and the kine were wearing normal layers, jackets and pants and shoes. Easier on the Kindred nose.

“So,” Amanda said, “you and the Prince.”

“Yeah?”

“I ... I mean ... I don’t want to pry, but ... the two of you were so beautiful together at the ball she hosted. It was so cute!”

Oh good god.

“What do you want to know?”

“Nothing! Noth ... ok, well, I am a little curious about the romance. It is a romance, right? I mean, I’ve asked around, and the Prince has never done anything like this, not since Tony so long ago.”

Tony. Jack had never said a word to the man, not really, and killed him. If only Amanda knew. Well, he wasn’t stupid enough to tell her, but that didn’t mean hearing his name didn’t bring up the images of the man disintegrating in the fire. Flashbacks of the pain of Jack having his face and chest cut in half by Viktor.

Now that he let his mind wander over it, he’d had a very, very eventful time as a fledgling Kindred. Other fledglings had easier times as they became neonates, young members of their respective covenants. Him, he was buried in violence and pain. A bit pathetic of him to wallow in that misery, but he couldn’t deny the truth. Every so often, images of Mrs. Pavala found his thoughts, like salt in his wounds.

But then he thought of Antoinette, and smiled. Amanda wanting to talk about her was probably her way of cheering him up then. Smart.

“Yes, we’re in love.”

“Oh my god!” She squealed, but brought her hands up to her lips once she realized what she’d done, eyes wide. “That’s ... that’s ... oh that’s so beautiful. She’s ancient! Ancient, and you’re so young, and ... and...”

“And she’s so much taller than me.” He rolled his eyes and gave Amanda a small shove of the shoulder. “She doesn’t mind, and I certainly don’t mind. We’re quite physically compatible.”

“I wasn’t thinking about that!”

Jack stopped, and raised a brow with disbelieving eyes blatant. “You weren’t?”

“... ok, I was. She’s so tall! And you’re ... you’re not.” She giggled some more, and stepped in closer. “I feel horrible asking about this stuff.”

“Well I’m not going to tell you what the sex is like or anything.” He smirked, but then chuckled as he raised a hand to scratch his chin. Would a girl really ask about the sex? Weren’t girls supposed to be a bit less crass than men? Less vulgar?

“Come on, please?”

Guess not.

“We have sex a lot, ok? I’ll give you that much, but that’s it!”

She giggled and jumped a little in spot a few times. “So adorable.”

He didn’t really think of it as adorable, but maybe it was to an observer. Still.

“And you? Anyone in your life?” he said.

“No, not yet. Sire says I should do what most Kindred do when they’re young, and enjoy the perks. Sleep around, basically. Not sure I agree.”

Jack scratched his hair, and thought about Antoinette’s story in Bloodlust, about kine crawling into a Kindred’s lap for sex. A hollow indulgence. He knew it, Antoinette knew it, but ... but for a lot of Kindred, him included, it was rough going at the start. Very rough going. Mourning family was just the tip of the iceberg for what a lot of Kindred went through after the embrace. Some sex and blood could help.

“I wouldn’t judge a Kindred for enjoying it,” he said. “Hard time for many, you know? And now you’re a part of a society that gives absolutely no shits about who you sleep with, or how often, or how many. And it’s a great way to get a meal. I think Jennings has a point. Enjoy it.” He smiled at her when she widened her eyes. “Our second lives are pretty damn brutal. Can’t see the sun, can’t have children, and we’re part of the Danse Macabre, which would give any politician a terminal ulcer. So, if you don’t have anyone, I say indulge.”

“You’re just saying that cause you’re a guy!”

“Am not.” He raised his hands to the shoulder, palms out. “Don’t get me wrong, guys are pretty quick to jump on the sex bandwagon, but you telling me Jessy doesn’t sound like she has the time of her life?” Cause the damn woman spared no details about her sexual exploits.

“Jessy is just a man in a woman’s body.”

They both laughed, until Jack had to stop and lean against a lamppost to get back his balance. But there was some truth to that. Amanda was more like a ... well a girl. A different approach was required.

“Think of it like this,” he said. “As a woman, you’re being judged harshly from the moment you’re born based on how you look, who you talk to, how you act to people, who you date, who you sleep with, and every form of social peer pressure imaginable from all parties. You have to wear a mask of makeup every day just to look normal in society’s eyes. You wear shoes that literally ruin your spine and feet, modern-day foot binding. God forbid you have any body hair. Women will crucify you for wearing the same dress twice. Many men arrange you into scores for how attractive you are, for whether they want to sleep with you, and that's a rigged game cause the moment you do sleep with them, you're conquered territory and they move onto another target. Women will socially castrate you, and men will forever measure you by the size of your bust. It's something on your mind all day, every day as a woman, whether you realize it or not. Subconsciously, you make decisions based on the maze of bullshit you've been navigating since you were old enough to turn on the TV and saw Wonder Woman wearing boob armor and high heels. Double standards, and women get the shittier end of the deal.

“So now, you're Kindred. That life is gone, you're not human anymore. Those old problems, those hangups, those barriers, it's all gone. No Kindred cares, or at least, not to nearly the same degree or in the same way. You want to wear a slutty”—he raised his fingers to quote slutty—“clothes, six-inch stilettos, plunging cleavage, whatever, Kindred understand it's just part of the game, play it however you want. Nothing to stop you from letting out all the desires that are perfectly normal, and healthy.” He grinned and folded his arms across his chest. “Cause one thing I've noticed in my time as Kindred, is that the women are just as horny as the men, Amanda. And without the old life nonsense making you feel guilty for every single fucking thing you do? Yeah, women Kindred get into the sex as much as the men. And all the power to them. Do what you want. You grew up in a world where women aren't supposed to have sexual agency, where women aren't supposed to enjoy sex. And now, you can have all the sexual agency you want, and enjoy it all you want.”

She stared at him, tilted her head, and then looked around at the people walking by. Jack kept his words quiet enough so it was only her hearing him, but she still had a look of guilt on her face, of shock.

“You make it sound like it’s empowering for women to sleep around.”

“Not what I meant. All I meant was, you grew up in a world where men were encouraged to pursue their sexual interests, and women were discouraged. Now you’re not.” He started walking again, and looked over his shoulder to Amanda until she caught up with him. “So when I say do whatever you want, I really mean it, you know? Hangups about sex are just that, hangups, social rules made by ignorant fucks from ancient, moronic, antiquated views. Have all the sex you want, or never touch another person for as long as your second life lasts. Just do whatever makes you happy, and for most Kindred, women included, that typically includes sex. Don’t adhere to a hypocritical ruleset that no longer applies.”

“ ... and you?”

“Me? I’m damn happy with the Prince, Amanda. We have a great relationship and I wouldn’t do anything to betray that trust. But if I was single? Yeah, I’d give into some of my baser desires, cause it’s one of the few good things about this second life.”

She nodded, and her smile returned as the shocked eyes faded. “I don’t think I have the same appetite as Jessy, but ... but yeah, I admit, it’d be nice to just do what I want for a change.”

“Agreed.” God damn agreed. “I—” A sudden vibration hit him, and he went rigid for a moment, before reaching into his pocket for his phone. As a human he’d gotten used to it, but as a Kindred, he’d have to get used to a cat-like response to the random texts.

Text said: Get the fuck over to my place. Wait outside for me. Bring weapons.

“What is it?”

“Ah, it’s Jessy. Wants us to meet her outside her place. Armed.”

“But we’re still working on the investigation.”

He shrugged, called in an Xnomina drive, and put the phone away.

“Could be about something else. Know anyone she’s looking to shoot?”

“Besides everyone?”

---

Standard Invictus loadout was a Glock G19, a couple magazines in a shoulder holster, and a sword. The Glock G19 was a very light pistol, reliable, and Glocks were as common as cocaine in Dolareido; nothing to give the holder away as a Kindred. The sword wasn’t really a sword, but a long, thin blade that was somewhere between sword and knife. It was custom, made by Invictus for Invictus, with no identifying marks of any kind. The ultimate in function over fashion.

Invictus cared about emblems and insignias and badges and flags when they socialized. They cared only for brutal efficiency when on the job.

He’d just recently achieved the status required to use the loadout at will, and he had to admit, it was a nice feeling. Julias was giving him no special treatment; he had to work his way up Invictus ranks same as everyone else, manipulating kine dealings, growing Xnomina’s corporation in less-than-legal ways, etc. Wearing the loadout was like wearing a badge.

Wow he was drinking the Invictus koolaid. He wasn’t so stupid to not realize it; but, even knowing he was just a cog in the Invictus machine, he was proud. If it were still Viktor at the top, he’d have been worried, but with Julias there instead, he felt he could get away with a little mindless loyalty.

Their drive stopped at the Xnomina building while they geared up, and then dropped them off in front of Jessy's apartment building. Jessy was waiting for them. With sunglasses. At night.

Jack could see Amanda struggle to hide her smile.

While Jack and Amanda wore suits, Jessy wore black pants and a black t-shirt underneath a black trench coat, with a slick belt and some straps from her hidden holsters visible along her thighs and waist. The shirt was see-through enough you could see the black bra underneath. She could not have looked any more ridiculous. But, the woman had enough confidence to carry the ridiculous nineties getup, and probably enough weaponry underneath the coat to justify that too.

“Bout time you kids showed up.”

“Sorry, Madam Herrington.” Jack offered a small bow, Amanda did as well, before they stood up and stepped in closer. “What’s this about? I thought Miss Pol and I were to continue our investigation of the disappearances in Devil’s Corner?”

“Related.” Jessy adjusted her coat, scanned the street, before she moved toward their drive. “I’ll explain more when we’re there.”

Kept in the dark. Well, Jessy was the only remaining Right Hand; that deserved some trust. Much as she was a loose cannon and everyone knew it, she got the job done. So he followed after her with Amanda in tow, doing his best to hide the grimace on his face.

---

The car took them to Devil’s Corner, and the three hopped out with more eyes scanning the streets. Slightly less people; the disappearances were scaring the city. Hell, after what happened last time in the sewers, they were scaring him too. He remembered the sensation in his gut when he saw the redhead, of panic and fear and all those things he felt when he looked at Jacob or Viktor. Different, but the same. Amanda felt it too.

And Jessy was taking them back there again.

“Natasha’s gone missing.” Jessy strolled down the street like she owned the place, and every gaze thrown at her by curious kine was like fire on her gasoline. She strutted, maybe even showed off a little; people looking at her must have thought she was a fashion model or something. Pretty, true, but so out of place.

“Natasha’s missing? How do you know?”

“We have a system. She texts me every second dusk, I text her every second night. No exceptions.”

“No exceptions?” Amanda said. Girl had a habit of saying just a little too much, and aggravating her superiors.

“Speak English? I said no fucking exceptions.” Jessy said. “We’re fucking Invictus, we’re prepared. Her phone dead? She uses the back-up. That dead? She gets me on her laptop. That dead? She fucking visits. I waited two god damn hours this evening and got nothing, so I went and visited her place. Nothing. So we’re going to investigate where she’s gone, and from what my eyes tell me, last she was seen was near here, going underground.”

Invictus eyes. Ghouls, subservient kine, or young Kindred could all be Invictus eyes, a network of information being shared to those who need it.

“She used to have a tracker in her phone, but since joining the dragons, she had to get rid of it. Think you can pick up her trail?” Jessy said, looking to Amanda.

“I ... maybe? Tracking the disappearing girl was doable, since I had a starting point. But Natasha? She doesn’t exactly—”

“I can find her.”

The three turned to the new voice.

“Vivienne?” Jack said.

Jessy motioned for the girl to come closer. “I called her up, but she was finishing a contract and had to meet us here.”

Vivienne was a somewhat short woman, with a small frame and black hair down to her shoulders, and pale skin. She looked a lot like Natasha, only taller. The two were quiet, antisocial types, but as far as Jack knew, the two didn’t socialize with each other at all anymore. Seemed to be a theme, sires and childe breaking apart at some point.

He really needed to visit Julias sometime.

She shrugged, and rubbed one of her shoulders while avoiding eye contact. “I’m her childe. We’re good trackers, in her bloodline.”

Mekhet had a talent for it, sure, but Natasha was a special case. Jack didn’t think Vivienne had the same eyes as her sire, but then the woman could simply have been hiding the fact; not unprecedented among his company. Did Vivienne know the sheriff was her grand sire?

“Bullshit.” Jessy laughed and shook her head. “She just knows some of the sewer and tunnel dwellers. Natasha liked to make friends with em, and Vivi used to be by her side all the time, didn’t you?”

“... yeah.” Vivienne, dressed in a suit like Amanda, stepped down the stairs of the abandoned subway tunnel.

Jack winced. Jessy didn't like that Amanda and Vivienne had left the Invictus and then come back. Liable to get snippy, yell at them, maybe push them around if she got really angry. All within her rights as a senior member of the Invictus.

It was going to be a lovely time.

---

He'd walked these tunnels with his sire not too long ago, to go see Damien. It never really occurred to Jack that much of what vampires did was underground, until he had to walk through the oppressive shadows on a regular basis. And it never occurred to him that the tunnels were so expansive either, until he actually bothered to look at the blueprints while digging into the disappearing girl.

Holy shit the tunnels. A lot of the blueprints were considered confidential, old, and if they became public someone would have to answer for why the fuck Dolareido seemed to have so many abandoned tunnels. The sewer system too was more expansive than it needed to be, and it connected into old subway tunnels in weird places. All so Kindred could have their underground city for their sun allergy.

He was kind of happy about it. If shit hit the fan for whatever reason, he could disappear into the tunnels, like Damien did. Dude managed to hide from everyone for half a god damn century, so Jack could manage a few days at least.

“So, uh, who we going to talk to?” Amanda said.

“Miss Halla, Nosferatu, only got a couple years on her. I know she likes to hang out around here under Vander Street with that Bob fellow.”

“Couldn't you have just messaged her we were coming? Or asked her to come in and tell us what you want to know?”

God damn it Amanda, shut up before Jessy puts her fist through your face.

The Gangrel looked over her shoulder, and growled. “I could have. Or I can ambush her, surprise her, make sure she’s caught off guard so I know she won’t lie to me.”

Jack sighed, but shut up quick when Jessy threw him a glare. Night was getting rougher by the second.

---

“Where the fuck did she go, Lil?”

Yeap, rougher.

“I-I don’t know! She was just passing through, and—”

Not enough good for Jessy. The Gangrel threw the young Nosferatu to the platform hard enough Jack heard the impact of ass bone on the concrete. Liliana Halla’s hood fell back, revealing her many, many eyes, and each of them looked around in all directions. Looking for an escape most likely, but she knew she was Invictus, and escape from the moment simply meant dealing with it later. They all worked for Jessy, more or less.

“Yeah, and no doubt you and her shared a few words. So I’m thinking you do know where she’s gone.” Jessy reached down and picked up the woman by the robe collar, and whatever clothes were underneath it. Soon the woman was in the air, feet dangling a few inches above the floor. “And no doubt she asked you to not tell anyone, because she’s not Invictus anymore and yada yada. Except now she’s missing, and if you don’t tell me, your fate is hers. She dies, you die, get me?”

Jack winced. So many eyes looking panicked and guilty at the same time. He looked over at Amanda and Vivienne, and found a not-too-dissimilar look from both of them, winces and worrying and discomfort bordering on panic. Jessy had that effect when she was upset and started pushing people around.

“Miss Halla.” Vivienne stepped forward and stood beside Jessy, hands fidgeting together in front of her. “I know you’re just protecting my sire, and doing what she asked. But I know she’d have come to you when passing through this area. You still owe her for that incident with Maria, don’t you?”

Lil, holding onto Jessy’s wrist and squirming like a fish on a hook, managed to look down at Vivi long enough to sigh and look away.

“Owe her a lot more than just for that.”

“Well, she’s gone missing,” Vivi said. “She may not be Invictus anymore but she’s still my sire. Still my friend, Jessy’s friend. We ... we’re going to go look for her.”

Halla looked to Vivi, then lowered her eyes again. She was torn, that much was clear; it dripped from her like the sweat she couldn’t give off. Would she answer? Jack glanced around, read people’s expressions as best he could, tried to put the skills Julias taught him into practice. Predict the situation, read body language, watch the eyes, feet, fingers.

Jessy was as easy to read as an angry guard dog. Vivienne was acting sad, with a touch of quiet and reserved, but every so often he caught a shifting glance from her, like she was reading people the same as Jack was. Probably true, but that didn’t mean she wasn’t sincere. Amanda was squirming like Halla, despite just watching. Probably didn’t know why she was called, why Jack was called, if Jessy and Vivi could handle everything.

But if Natasha was missing, Jessy didn’t know if she’d be able to handle everything. She was afraid too, Jack could see it in her fingers; they never held still. Afraid for Natasha though, not for her own well being, just like a good guard dog.

Jessy threw Halla a few more threats, and Halla squirmed with every one. She'd break, sooner or later, it was on her face, in her wavering jaw. Invictus defying Invictus wasn't good, but Jack didn't exactly like Jessy's approach to breaking Halla either. Girl was just trying to keep a promise to Natasha, not screw over her covenant.

Movement. Jack looked to the corner of the subway platform, and moved toward the shifting shadow. Just a subtle motion, enough to grab his attention. He had back up if he needed it, and it should be a safe location, so he shrugged and headed toward the shadow.

Another Nosferatu, hidden behind a subway gate.

"Bob, right?" Jack said. "Er, sorry, Master ... Bob?" Bob the classic vampire. Jack never said that, cause damn that'd be fucking rude. And Maria would rip him apart for the Nosferatu insult. Not like he needed to give her more things to discover about him warranting his death.

Bob nodded, and fidgeted with the edge of his robe. "Looking for Natasha?"

"We are."

Bob looked past him toward Jessy, who was shaking Lil a little too hard and wholly absorbed in the ordeal. Amanda and Vivi looked Jack's way, but their attention went back to Lil once she started talking about protecting her friendship with Natasha.

"... Miss Halla, she..." Bob put one of his hands onto the toll gate, and forced himself to stand. The nails weren't claws, just really long, gross nails, enough that Jack had to force down a shudder.

"She'll be fine. Not like Jessy will hurt her ... much." He shrugged, and gave his best I'm-in-control face. "You know where Natasha went." Not a question.

“ ... I ... I do.”

“You don’t want to tell me.”

“ ... I ... I shouldn’t. We’re friends, and she didn’t want to be followed.”

“Your friends? How old are you? How long you been embraced.” Older than Jack for sure, but there was an opportunity to exploit.

“I am four years embraced, Master Terry.”

“Madam Vola and Madam Herrington have been close friends for decades. And Madam Vola isn’t even an Invictus anymore, yet Madam Herrington continues to aid her, as she once did. She wouldn’t be asking if this wasn’t very important,” Jack said.

God. Damn. Kindred. Every request, every favor, every action, every nuance and detail, was a dance. Every word had three meanings. No sentence was overly committal, and yet every sentence said a dozen things. And it was starting to come naturally to him, the doublespeak and manipulation. His sire would be proud, but probably as sad about it as he was.

Not exactly the time to get dramatic. But, he couldn’t help but remember the Prince, and how much she loved his genuine attitude.

“ ... you’re right.” Bob sauntered over to Jessy, Jack beside him, before he made a small wave of his hand. Enough for Jessy to put the scared girl down. “Mada—Natasha went to the tunnel under Ronder Street. She was investigating the spiderwebs there.”

“Spiderwebs?” Jessy said. “Know why?”

Bob shook his head. “She ... she said she was investigating something involving spiders, and I mentioned I found a lot of spiderwebs in the tunnel beneath Ronder Street.”

The Gangrel smirked, set Liliana back down, and pat Bob on the shoulder, Lil too. “Ronder Street eh? Thanks for the info.” She leaned in toward Bob, close enough their noses were almost touching. “If it were anyone else, I would have phoned for the info. And if you hadn’t given it to me, I would have ripped off fingers until you did tell me what I wanted to know. If you’d lied to me to cover someone’s tracks, I’d have ripped out your intestines.” Jessy’s hand changed from a pat, to a hard shove, and both Lil and Bob crashed against an empty stack of crates behind them. “So consider it a favor that I don’t use rank and punish the both of you.” She gave a small wave, and started the walk to Ronder Street.

Jack winced again, but when he reached out to offer them help, they shook their heads. They knew the game as well as any. Don’t show weakness or expose your neck when you don’t have to. They stood up, dusted themselves off, bowed, and returned to their chatting. So much for not burning bridges; but then, Jessy had probably burned that bridge a dozen times, and only got to push people around because of her rank.

Much as he wished she was nicer to people, he also enjoyed having such an aggressive woman as his boss. Barriers could be broken down much easier. Sometimes. Hopefully.

The three young Kindred fell in line beside each other behind Jessy, and each took out a flashlight. Quality flashlights that lit the tunnel up to its end. It still had working lights, so the flashlights may have been overkill, but they had to keep an eye open for any signs of Natasha.

But, as they continued down through the depths, and found more of the tunnel lights no longer worked, the flashlights quickly earned their worth.

“So dark,” Amanda said.

Jessy pointed her flashlight back at Amanda, then at the ground around her feet, the tracks, then down the tunnel once more. Looking around for who knows what. What do you look for when someone disappears? With kine, you'd look for their last known whereabouts. Done. Then you'd move onto their property and personal information. Places they visited, personal errands, friends they knew. Sometimes you were looking for information on the disappearing person, sometimes on who could have done the kidnapping.

All they knew was Natasha was investigating spiders in the tunnels. So, unless they stumbled onto spiders or ... spiderwebs.

The four of them stopped, and pointed their flashlights along the concave walls. Glints of white marked the edges of concrete brick, casting weird, stringy shadows over the cracks as their flashlights buried them in light.

"I uh ... I hate spiders," Amanda said.

Vivi shuddered. "Me too."

"Bunch of pussies." Jessy walked up to one of the spiderwebs, light pointed, and she ran her fingers over the threads. The two Mekhet groaned and took a small step back, but Jessy raised her fingers to her eyes with the light pointed at them, before rubbing her fingertips together. "Yeah it's a spiderweb, but it feels different. Strong, I guess, for a spiderweb?"

"Madam Herrington." Jack stepped up to her and looked at her fingers too. "You realize we're deep underground and searching for Natasha, who's disappeared while investigating spiders. This whole situation reeks of trouble. I mean ... spiders? What does that mean?"

"Yeap, it does reek of trouble. That's why there's four of us." She wiped the web off her fingers on her pants, and kept moving. The tunnel greeted them with more webs, and Jessy paused every so often to shine her light on them. “And if shit hits the fan, at least one of us will escape, and then we’ll have the whole of Invictus down here. If we have to fucking lock elbows and walk the tunnels to find her, that’s what we’ll do.”

“I—”

“Do I make myself clear, Master Terry?”

Yeah, there’d be no talking with her in this state. Dog with a bone. He nodded, drew his pistol, and flipped his light in his other hand so it was reversed. Pointing the light out toward the tunnel, he rested his pistol hand on the wrist of his flashlight hand so both were pointed into the black, and he started to move forward.

The two Mekhets sighed, and did the same.

It was a slow, quiet crawl in the darkness. The webbing only got worse, bigger, stronger, and the smell of stagnation was almost pungent. No one was talking anymore; for the best. The longer they walked, the more it felt like walking into a den, into something’s home, into a death trap, into a—

There was a giant hole in the wall.

The four of them pointed their lights at the enormous hole, and scanned its edges up and down. So much concrete debris everywhere, but also a bent metal door. Bent in half mostly, and a huge dent was also in it, like someone had smashed it in with a giant boulder. Concrete dust and bricks lay around Jack’s feet, and he got down to a knee as he shined the light on floor.

“Looks like there was a fight,” Jessy said.

“A fight?” Amanda walked over to the wall, light pointed into the black. “I can’t—oh shit, the ... the hole cuts through to the other side.”

Everyone stood up and pointed their flashlights into the room. Inside there were old computers and monitoring equipment built into the walls, along with old pipes and dials. But all of them were destroyed, cracked, shredded, slashed.

The wall on the other side was gone. Just gone, like the first wall.

He pointed the light down at the blocks, and kicked some of them. Too damn heavy to move with his foot unless he wanted to break a toe.

“Explosives?” he said.

Vivi shook her head. “No, Madam Herrington is correct, there was a battle here. There’s claw marks, and ... and...”

“Looks like a few Gangrels went nuts and tore the place apart.” Jessy pointed her light up and down, and snapped her fingers each time she found what looked like claw marks. “I could make these, but not that tall or wide unless I was jumping up and actively trying to hit the ceiling. And the whole wall is gone. Eight feet wide hole in concrete? I’d take me a while, and it’d be pointless when I could ... fit through the door.”

Something had torn it down, ripped it apart, and threw the chunks of concrete aside. Something that couldn’t fit through the door.

“Out here!” They all turned back to Amanda, and pointed their lights where she was at the ground. “More claw marks ... and ... and I don’t know, footprints?”

Vivi knelt down and ran her finger along one of the grooves in the concrete. “If dinosaurs were running around, maybe?”

“What do you mean?” Jack said.

“Something huge and heavy left a bit of an impact print of talons against the concrete. So, I mean, unless there’s a Utahraptor running these tunnels, I don’t know.”

Jessy growled, knelt down beside the neonate, pointed her light down at the tracks, then down the tunnel into the black. “Claw are marks coming our way.”

“Then ... I guess they were running away from Ronder Street.” Vivi pointed the light back to the room that’d been ripped apart. “And they decided to switch tunnels?”

“Switch in a hurry. And ... and there are a lot of these claw marks,” Amanda said. “I doubt they were running from something.”

“Then they were running after something.” Shaking her shoulders, Jessy stood up and headed toward the ripped open wall. “Let’s get going.”

Amanda pointed her light back down the tunnel toward where the tracks came from. Thinking what Jack was thinking probably: should someone explore what Natasha was exploring? But, it’d have been ripped out of a bad horror film to split up. Besides, whatever lead led to Natasha, they were going to follow.

“Any claw marks going the other way?” Jack said. “Toward Ronder Street?”

“No.”

“Then, we follow the boss.” He brought his pistol to bear, and walked after Jessy. She offered him a happy smirk before she continued along, doing the same as Amanda now and scouting for claw marks.

In the past, she wasn’t his boss. He usually worked with Natasha, or other, lower ranks in the Invictus since he was just a fresh neonate after all. But now Natasha was gone, Julias was far too busy, and with Viktor dead, everyone was sharing the workload. Jessy was now his boss, their boss. She was working her ass off, and now she was trying to save her friend who'd disappeared. Least he could do was back her up. And make sure she didn't get herself killed.

The tracks continued through the second subway tunnel, but the lights were working again, some of them anyway. Good thing too, with each step a careful one to avoid the mess of ripped up ground. Whatever these things were, they were heavy.

“So, uh.” Amanda stepped up to Jessy, peeked over her shoulder at Jack and Vivi, before shaking off her fears and looking back to Jessy. “Do you know what we're following?”

“I do.”

Amanda stopped, but Jessy didn't. She had to jog to catch up as the Gangrel marched on.

“Um, Madam Herrington, you ... you could ... tell us?”

“I'll tell you when it matters.”

Enough. Jack doubled his marching, grabbed Jessy's hand by the fingers, and let her own movement jerk her in a turn to face him. When it matters? When it fucking matters, they could all be dead.

“The fuck?”

“Jessy. I get it, Natasha's missing and you're terrified for her. I get it. We get it. But we're not your enemies here, we're your back up, we're your subordinates, and I'm your friend.”

“Friend? You fu—”

“Friend!” Jack yanked on her hand hard enough to bring her a step closer. One misstep and she was going to rip him in half with her bare hands, but if he didn’t do something, she was going to stay in guard dog mode. He needed her brain working. “I told you about Marv’s job last week. I told you about what Julias meant when he asked for that job the week before. I came to you when I needed help with that contract with Hovonar Industries, because I knew I could trust you. So, good friends? No, but we’re friends. Give me a little credit, and trust me.”

Too much? Maybe too much. But he understood Jessy enough to know he had to be blunt with her.

She raised her fist.

Shit. He closed his eyes and winced. Incoming punch, incoming punch ... no punch? After a few seconds he opened his eyes, and found Jessy looking at the ground.

“Getting good at this manipulative shit, Jack. You remind me of Julias,” she said.

“ ... did you trust him?”

“Yeah I fucking trusted him. Hated his guts sometimes, but I trusted him ... so if I tell you guys what we’re going up against, can I trust you to not freak out? I need your help.”

“In for a penny.” He smiled at her, let go of her hand, and started walking next to her as she resumed her march through the tunnels. A glance back showed the two Mekhet not so convinced, but they fell in behind them anyway, grimaces and frowns and frustrations fading away as they started focusing on the danger ahead. They weren’t happy, but at least they were professionals.

“Right, so ... it looks like a pack of werewolves.”

Jack froze, but forced himself to catch up when Jessy didn't stop. "Werewolves."

"Yeap."

"But I'd heard they hadn't been to Dolareido since the fifties," he said.

"Yeap."

"So—"

"So how do I know? Been dead a lot longer than you have. Smart Kindred prepare for shit, and at the time of my embrace, the Invictus were still recovering from that shit show. Natasha, me, we got thorough lessons in werewolves, what to do if you run into one, how to handle one."

Jack looked to the two Mekhet, but they both shrugged and shook their heads. Neither of them had taken a course on werewolves either, and Jessy had to know that.

"It was better if you didn't know," she said. "Didn't want you pussyng out."

"Think that low of us?" he said.

"Ha!" She smirked at him, and pat him on the shoulder as they walked. "Kid you got balls, and you do good work. Vivi and Amanda might be a pair of wimps, but they do good work too. Problem is, with werewolves, it's ... running away is the better option."

"They tough?" he said.

More laughter.

"Kid, if shit hits the fan, I'm using the three of you as cannon fodder while I get Natasha and run."

“... lovely.” He gripped his pistol tighter. Part of him thought she was kidding, but she had an edge in the voice that said otherwise. “Can we get a little info then?”

“Sire filled me in, about the werewolves in the fifties. What a fucking shit show. Some vamps got caught in the middle of the wolves and their hunt. The vamps died. The wolves didn’t.”

Jack lowered his gun and raised a brow. “Kindred didn’t get revenge?”

“Jacob tried. Didn’t work out.”

“Wait!” Amanda jogged back up to walk beside them, and Vivi too. “Jacob couldn’t kill a werewolf?”

“Hey, you want the nitty gritty of it, go ask Jacob. All I know is there was a throwdown, and Jacob had beef. Werewolves are not to be fucked with. They are ... well, you saw the wall. One werewolf could do that just fine.”

“... holy shit.” He lowered the pistol, looked at it, then her. “Then —”

“Keep the gun. It won’t kill them, but might slow em down for a few seconds.”

Great, just great. Great great great. He gulped on nothing, and looked to Vivienne and Amanda. The two were in sync, switching from depressed to terrified like a rehearsed play.

“Anything we can do at all?” he said.

Jessy shrugged. “Maybe if we had some silver. Cheesy as it is, it hurts them. No more cheesy than vampires and sunlight, I guess.”

“So if I stab or shoot them with something silver, they die?”
Vivienne said.

“Nah, just hurt them a lot more than any pistol or sword would. Werewolves are fucking monsters, kids. God damn fucking monsters. They will tear a city apart with their bare hands, and you can’t do shit to stop them except get out of the way. So ... yeah, eyes peeled.”

The Ventrue and two Mekhet looked at their pistols, felt for their swords under their jackets, and sighed.

“We ... oh shit.” Vivienne pointed her light down the tunnel, jaw dropping, eyes wide.

Jack blinked, rubbed his eyes, and blinked again. “Holy shit.”

There was a train. Or at least, he thought it was a train. Metal shards the size of his body were scattered around, glass, bits of plastic and rubber, and a lot of claw marks. Hard to imagine claws tearing through concrete and metal like opening a tin can, but the train had been literally opened like exactly that. For a moment, he pictured people inside being picked out of the train, like sardines in a can.

“I ... it ... uh...” Amanda shined her light along the front of the train and the edges of where it’d been opened. It wasn’t like someone had carved a door into its face, more like someone had ripped the front of the train open wide enough to fit an elephant. Claw marks dug through the concrete and shredded the ground; they must have braced themselves against the floor as they tore the train open.

“ ... suit.” Vivienne climbed up into the train and through the opening the beasts had created, before getting down to a knee to scoop up something in her hand. “Black suit, piece of it. Torn off of someone.”

Vivi shook her head. “Bit of ash.”

“Looks like we’re on the trail. Of some vamp at least. Come on.”

Without pause or glance, Jessy walked through the train. Shredded from end to end. Someone must have been running through the cars, and the wolves had to give chase in the most efficient way possible: through the train.

“Any idea why werewolves are chasing her?” Jack said. He glanced around at the destroyed poles, the seats, grip bars, everything. Bent, cracked, ripped, shredded, everything was a warped version of its former self, along with claw marks on the subway train floor at each car’s end. Gripping their bodies down while they ripped the car ends into paper strips, probably.

“Guess she got between them and their prey. What’s their prey? No fucking idea. All I fucking know is what Bob just fucking told me, and what you and Amanda told me in your report. I got disappearing people in my city, I have spiders apparently in my city, and I have fucking werewolves in my city. Connection? Again, no fucking idea.” Each word, louder than the last, earned wincing from the three following her. “And since I’m not going to sit around and wait for the triumvirate to debate this and figure out what to do, I’m going to act. Natasha could be dead if we wait, and that possibility seems to be growing every god damn minute we’re looking. So, we’re going to do everything we fucking can to find her, and if the werewolves don’t let us, or they’ve killed her, we come back with the whole of Invictus with silver knives and silver bullets, and we hunt ourselves some fucking dogs.”

“... should ... should we go back and get Bob and Halla?” he said.

“Nah. Four lives is already a lot to ask for a first stab. We’ll get them and everyone else in round two, if it comes to that.”

“And if the four of us die on this trip?”

“Got shit set up so a message goes out to the council if I don’t log in tomorrow. Can’t text for shit down in the tunnels.”

“Oh.” Jack scratched the back of his head with his flashlight. It was a good plan for a spur of the moment thing. Jessy had maybe two hours of no check in from Natasha before she decided to go action movie hero and hunt down her missing friend. Probably planned for this ahead of time, now that he thought about it. Those two were an odd pair of friends, but then, Kindred friends were rare in and of themselves. For two Kindred to trust each other with their lives was a step beyond rare. Sad but true. It made him smile, knowing Jessy valued her friend’s life so much.

The train was ripped out from end to end, like some sort of hollowed out metal worm. They jumped out the back end, and both Mekhet pointed to the glass shards over the subway tracks.

Still on the trail then. Jessy nodded, resumed the march through the tunnels, and motioned for them to put their flashlights away. No need with the lights working, and now all they had to do was follow the claw marks.

Follow they did, but they didn’t get much further. Soon the four of them were standing around a set of claw marks, subtle against the concrete, as if the beasts had stopped running. Some more fabric pieces were scattered about, threads, and a bit of ash mixed into the dust only a Mekhet would have noticed. But the trail stopped, and they all looked at each other in waiting. No one said anything. The trail was cold.

“Thought I smelled a rat.”

Jack brought his pistol up and aimed at the new voice. Shit, shit shit. Bound to happen sooner or later, but hoping it'd happen somewhere other than an abandoned tunnel. No witnesses down here.

Jessy stepped toward the newcomer. Whoever this woman was, she was walking up to meet them, a small grin on her face and a big grin in her eyes. An average height woman, fit, tanned skin and black box-braid hair down to her hips. Looked perfectly normal, attractive, perhaps in her mid thirties.

The beast in his gut was screaming for him to run.

“And you are?” Jessy said. Voice was solid, but Jack knew she was feeling what he was feeling. And when he glanced back, he could see the two Mekhet were ready to bolt.

“Clara, of the Hunters in Darkness, pleasure to meet you.”

Everyone took a small step back. Except Jessy, who approached the woman until they were standing maybe twenty feet apart. Jessy was bigger than her, looked stronger, looked faster, but if what the Gangrel said was true...

“So you know who we are?”

“Well if you're looking for your friend, that narrows it down. Besides, you don't smell like regular people strolling through old subway tunnels.” The woman folded her arms across her chest, but otherwise did not move.

“You were waiting?”

“Yep, just hanging out to see if anyone would come looking.”

“... you came alone?” Jessy said.

The woman shrugged. “Figured a squad of vamps would come through. One of us is enough.”

Fucking hell. Jack kept his pistol pointed at her, but she looked at the gun and him like a god would look at a peasant farmer.

“Looking for a fight then?” Jessy said.

Clara laughed, shook her head and put up both her hands for a second. “No, not at all. Certainly a possibility vamp, but I’m here to talk.”

Jessy stepped in closer. “Talk? Where is she? Is she even alive?”

“Natasha is alive.”

Jack lowered his pistol, smile sneaking onto his face, and he motioned for Amanda and Vivi to do the same.

“Got proof?” he said.

The woman pulled out a phone. A few taps later, she pointed it at Jessy; pictures of Natasha were on the display. Kindred faces rarely, if ever showed up well on a picture or in footage, so if a Kindred wanted a good picture, they had to hold very still for the camera, like a statue, and suppress the beast’s reflex to twist or turn at the click of the button. Gave credence to the woman’s words.

“ ... pictures? How do I know she’s still alive?”

“I can’t call the pack from down here in the tunnels, dumbass.” Clara put the phone into her back pocket, and dismissed Jessy’s words with a small wave of the fingers. “Let’s go topside.”

“ ... or I take that phone from your corpse, and use it to figure out where you took Natasha.” Jessy stepped closer again.

“Yeah, that’s a possibility you could try. You got guts, vamp. Gangrel I take it? I like you.” Clara still didn’t move, even as Jessy got close enough she could transform and slice the woman open from skull to crotch. “Been a while since I’ve tussled with a Kindred. But my boss says Dolareido isn’t like Tijuana, and I should play nice.”

Jack walked up. This close, it was enough to make his feet itch with the need to turn around. Like the time with Viktor, and Antoinette, and Jacob and Tony and all the other big timers so ancient, getting this close felt like standing in front of a real beast, something hungry and large.

“Clara, I’m Jack Terry of the Invictus.”

Jack raised a brow, and looked into the woman’s eyes. The laughing, the chuckling, the smirking and grinning, the monster did them all, and looked back into his eyes with all the intensity of a wolf.

But he was used to a little fear.

“What are your terms?” he said. Jessy raised a brow at him, but said nothing.

“Oh, terms. I like that. Invictus all business.” Clara tapped her finger on her chin, glanced at each Kindred individually, before settling on Jack again. “You, come with me, alone, back to our hideout.”

“Like fuck he is.” Jessy raised a fist, but Jack put a hand out in front of her. Course she could have just ignored him, or told him to shut up, but she frowned at him and lowered her hand.

“Why?” he said.

“Need someone to serve as a middleman. Want to see Natasha alive again, you do what I tell you and listen to us.”

“Why alone?”

“Cause you seem young, seem like you can talk, can look me in the eye unlike your two little friends, and with you alone, we can manipulate you toward our goals.” She chuckled, and waved off her joke like a bad fart. “Cause older vamps have a pretty fucked up opinion about us, and you seem young enough we might actually be able to get somewhere.”

Yeah, that was true. That was very true. A beacon of hope maybe, that the werewolves weren't the same paranoid leeches that Kindred could be? Fool's hope, and he shut it down quick.

“Are you telling the truth, about wanting to play nice?” he said.

Damn the woman did not blink. Not even a fidget.

“Father Wolf as my witness.”

“... then I'll go.” Because if there was one way he was going to die, it was to a bunch of werewolves in their den.

Jack looked at Jessy, but the Gangrel was gritting her teeth and clenching her fists like she was ready to fight. For Jessy, that normally meant an inevitable brawl, but not this time. She snarled, pointed her finger at Clara, and glared.

“If Jack doesn't check in tomorrow at dusk, you have no idea how much trouble is going to come shitting down your throat.”

Finally, Clara managed something more than a confident expression. She raised a brow, and looked at him for an answer. He just shrugged.

---

Back up on the streets. Glorious moonlight, fresh air — not that he really needed to breathe it — some humans around, and lots of ways he could make chaos if it came to it. He didn't want to, but with a little eye contact he could dominate a nearby human, turn them into a shield. But it'd take too long, and he'd probably get himself killed just for the effort. No, stick to the plan, be the messenger boy for the werewolves. There were only a few souls around anyway, this edge of North Side.

“So, uh ... you really let Natasha live eh?” he said.

“Course. She wasn't our prey.”

“Who was?”

“Secret, and better for everyone it stays that way.”

Clara was only a little taller than him, and he found himself admiring the box braids of hers that bounced against her back. Bit of an accent on her, and from her skin color, he imagined she was from Mexico.

“Why'd you take her then?”

“She was in the wrong place, wrong time. Good opportunity for us though, and Avery doesn't waste opportunities.”

They were walking into North Side, and a mile from where Viktor, Julias, and Jack had all stood once, preparing for their unusual approach of a secret info drop. A fucking lifetime ago. Antoinette's secret manipulations, just to coax Viktor and Tony into a confrontation. Viktor had summoned an army of rats, a literal army, thousands of them, and they'd swarmed the place. He tried to remember the Ventrue display with admiration, but memories of Viktor were always cold, and painful.

"Opportunity to do what?"

"Force a conversation. Last time Avery was here, shit didn't go so well, so she's expecting she'll have to force your elders' ear."

"How do you know Natasha is important enough to do that?"

"... she's a pack mate, isn't she? Well I suppose Kindred are just a bunch of blood leeches with no concern outside their next meal. Her clan would let her rot if it meant a safe food source in the future, wouldn't they?"

"Harsh. Not necessarily untrue, but harsh and a bit exaggerated. We're not all like that, and every situation has details, Clara."

"Smart little punk, aren't you?" She smiled down at him, and took a second to look him up and down. "How old are you? How long you been a vamp, I mean."

"About half a year."

"Damn kid, I like you. Bet those three girls you were with were all older than you too."

"... they were."

"Heh." She winked at him, and kept walking. Signs. These were signs, flirting signs. Flirting with little him? "So, Avery knows Dolareido a bit, and she knows how Kindred act. Since Natasha was in our hunting grounds, investigating, it stands to reason that she's important to someone."

“... if ... she was investigating the spiders, you’re hunting the spiders.”

Clara grabbed him by the neck, and slammed him against the wall of a nearby building. Not enough to hurt or injure, but enough to send a jolt of panic up through his spine into his eyes. The neighborhood was behind them, and only empty factories ahead of them. No one he could call out for, and even if he could, what then?

“What do you know about them?”

“N-Nothing!” Hard to talk with fingers squeezing the throat. And she was strong too. Really strong. It was weird, feeling the warmth and breath of a living thing, something he could normally overpower easily. But this living creature was pinning him against the wall by the throat like he weighed nothing.

Shit shit shit shit. Jack you dumbass, always say less than you know, always say less than you know!

“Didn’t sound like nothing.”

“Well, you saw the tunnels. They’re filled with webs. Some Kindred have been worried, cause people have been disappearing in the area, and giant spider webs? The tunnels are ours, and—”

“Do yourself a favor and don’t stick your nose into it. Consider the area our hunting grounds for now.” She let him go.

“S-Sorry, I ... we didn’t know.”

“It’s ok, just ... yeah, stay out of the way. Cute kid like you, getting caught? Shit, I’d feel horrible.” A gentle tap on the cheek before she smirked and resumed walking. “Don’t think I don’t know your friends are watching where we’re going either. I’m sure they’ll scuttle back to their bosses and tell them where our pack is hiding.”

Another laugh, closer to a sneering chuckle though. “Would love to see what they try.”

“... confident.” He rubbed at his throat a bit, and fell back in beside her again. Remember Jack, her kind tore the concrete wall open, ripped the train’s guts out, managed to catch Natasha, one of the fastest Mekhet in the city. Step lightly, this isn’t like your first conversation with Antoinette.

“Text your bosses yet?” she said.

“I ... I uh...”

“I saw you fiddling around with your phone in your pocket. I’d prefer you didn’t, if you don’t mind.”

“... what if I already did?”

“Well then you’ll have betrayed my trust, and I’ll be sad.” She offered a mock frown before chuckling. “Did you?”

“... not yet.”

“Thanks. Wait till we’re done, would you? Besides, your friends are watching us, they’ll notify your bosses the moment we arrive. Paranoid things, aren’t you?”

“We are.” Because it takes half a century before a typical vampire’s strong enough to break down a brick wall. Tear down a concrete one? Longer. “Kindred are ... we’re ... we die in sunlight, we die in fire, we slip into a coma without a regular food source, and we sleep like the dead when the sun rises. Paranoid, or justifiably cautious.”

“Never thought about it like that, I guess. Uratha typically only live two or three times as long as humans. You could say some us are jealous you can live forever.”

“But ... but you’re so strong. We saw what you did to the train. It takes Kindred many decades to reach that sort of strength.” Uratha? There name for werewolves?

“Cause you vamps are weaklings. But man that Natasha girl was quick on her feet. Fucking had the whole pack in an uproar chasing her, and we just ripped through that tin can.” Clara held out her hands in front of her, and squeezed them a few times. Invisible metal bent in her hands, and Jack could almost hear it crunching under her strength. “What a rush.”

He raised a brow and looked at Clara as they walked. Smile on her face and eyes drifting, she seemed lost in a pleasant memory.

“You like being a ... a ... Uratha, was it?”

“Yeah, and yeah. Nothing, nothing quite like the feel of ripping your prey open and biting off chunks kid. Nothing, nothing quite like that feeling of trapping prey with your pack, and everyone jumps in, tears your prey apart. The hunt is sacred, kid, especially to the Meninna. Wouldn’t trade it for anything.”

Not unlike the Kiss. Tempted to make the comparison, but he kept it quiet, and smiled at Clara as she reveled in what he could only imagine was animalistic bliss. Kindred enjoyed a successful hunt, but the Kiss was the goal. It sounded like Clara enjoyed the hunt as much as the kill.

“You’re very open about this, and friendly,” he said.

“Like I said, we’re just trying to avoid the trouble of last time.” She reached out, hooked her arm around his neck, and pulled him in. Only a few inches taller than him; a weird difference compared to Antoinette’s twelve. “And you kid, seem a lot more willing to talk than your brethren. Wanna go on a date when this is all done?”

Say what?

Chapter 30

~~Jack~~

“I uh, have a girlfriend.”

“Oh, damn.” She let go of his shoulder, but shrugged and kept walking. “Glad you told me though. Surprising, given your circumstances. Figured you might have said yes to a date just to get on my good side.”

“The thought had occurred to me.” Except suffering Antoinette’s wrath would have been a million times worse than pissing off Clara’s whole pack, let alone just her.

“It’s not Natasha is it?”

“No.”

“That’s good. It’d really make this whole situation awkward wouldn’t it?” More chuckles.

Clara was a fun woman, Jack realized. Fun in the classic sense, in the go-out-for-drinks-for-silly-times fun sort of way. Not that he ever did much of that in his life, but the longer he talked with the woman, the more he felt like laughing with her as she chuckled and made bad jokes. An infectious personality type, good at making friends. Or just really good at the game.

They stopped in front of an old factory. The outside was run down but not to the point of destroyed or decrepit, and the windows were big and clean enough he could see through them up to the ceiling inside. There was some light in there, but not the building’s; some lamps or flashlights then.

Clara opened the side door, and waited for him to walk in first.

“Hope your pack mates are as calm as you,” he said.

“Hit or miss on that. Don’t worry about it though, we aren’t stupid. Just keep the pistol in its holster and I bet you’ll come out of this with all your limbs still attached.”

“ ... bet?”

She laughed and pat him on the shoulder as she followed in behind him. “I’m thinking ninety-nine percent chance you’ll be fine.”

One percent chance he was a dead man? Well, good odds at least. Not sure why it wasn’t a hundred percent chance of survival, but maybe Clara was joking again. Maybe.

“Clara, brought company?” a man said. Big guy, very very tall, soft brown hair. Enforcer type Jack would have guessed, but no one was wearing any clothes that would suggest a rank. Everyone was just wearing street clothes like the Carthians did.

Once he was near the pack, he glanced to each member. Yeah, Carthians were a good comparison of the werewolves, jeans and t-shirts included. He counted a dozen including Clara, and each looked strong, fit, built for fighting. None of them seemed dressed for negotiations or politics or such, and all of them were standing or sitting around with casualness.

“ ... Jack?”

The tiny voice of Natasha. He smiled as he came into view of her, and offered her a small wave. She was sitting on a table, legs dangling, and her arms tied behind her back.

“Natasha, thank god you’re ... where are your clothes?” She was wearing some simple blue pants and a white blouse, and that was most definitely not what she went out wearing last night.

“Got kind of t-t-torn up when these guys caught m-me.”

Jack raised a brow and looked at the wolves again. Guys. She called them guys. And they’d brought her a change of clothes? A little more comfortable than he expected of Natasha.

“Glad you’re ok.”

“B-But why’re you here? ... why not Jessy?”

Jack put up his hands a bit. “It was Jessy’s idea. We went looking for you in the tunnels, ran into Clara. She felt I should be the one to do this negotiation.”

“Negotiation, bleh. Why couldn’t we have captured a Carthian? Least this talk would have been interesting.” Clara shrugged and walked over to join her pack. She nodded to a couple of them, and one of them she did a small handshake with. “So Avery isn’t back yet, but I’m fine to handle this myself.”

Jack held up a hand. “Can I speak with Natasha for a moment first?”

“Fine fine.” She gestured to the other vampire, then grabbed a chair to sit; but not before she spun it around so she could sit in it with her elbows on its back. Comfortable about the whole situation, Clara was, and confident. No reason not to be, strong as she was.

She was underestimating Kindred. Good.

Jack nodded and walked over to Natasha. The big guy with the soft brown hair, and a slightly-smaller-but-still-huge guy with dark messy hair were both sitting near Natasha, and they offered him a small nod of their own before they got up and went to sit with Clara. Friends of the Mekhet's? Would explain her almost familiar tone.

Once the pack was far enough away he could whisper, he went to the furthest end of the table, and Natasha scooted over along the table's surface to join him. Her ankles were bound as well; not running anywhere like that.

"They treating you ok?" he said.

"Yeah. Other than the ... p-painful introduction, it seems f-f-fine now."

"Clara mentioned someone named Avery. Pack leader?"

Natasha nodded. "Clara is second in c-command."

"They tell you why they're keeping you prisoner?"

"J-Just ... as a hostage ... to force a negotiation."

Well, he wasn't sure what Clara was thinking then, getting him for it instead of Jessy. Best he could do was be a messenger. Maybe Clara figured that was better than a pointless negotiation then. Better to ask forgiveness than for permission.

"Jessy, Amanda, and Vivienne have probably reported this location now."

"... Vivi came?"

He smiled. "She did."

The Mekhet lowered her head a little, her own smile coming through, before she took a breath and sat up straight once more.

"They're j-just trying to avoid a repeat of last t-t-time."

“We got any details on what happened last time? Jessy said some Kindred died during a werewolf hunt, and now Jacob has an issue with Avery.”

She shook her head. “Sounds like you know as m-m-much as I do. Maria never gave us many d-d-d-details.”

“ ... you sure you’re ok? We found bits of your suit, and we saw what they did to catch you. I’m surprised you still have your limbs.”

His words earned him some trembles and shivers from her, and she’d probably be rubbing her own arms in a self hug if they were free to do so.

“It was ... it was b-b-bad, but they let me feed on one of them. I’m fine n-now.”

Feed on a werewolf. He looked over at the pack, and a couple of them raised a brow as they met his eyes. One of them in particular was looking at Natasha, a small smile on his lips. The one with jaw-length messy dark hair, and looked a bit like Clara. Perhaps also from Mexico?

“Anything I should know?”

“Um, they ... they just want t-t-to get permission to perform their hunt.” She looked at him for a moment, then to the pack. “Or at least want t-to explain their actions b-b-before they do them anyway.”

“Sounds reasonable of them. Not sure what use I am in that though.” He scratched his head and looked over at the pack again, and Clara in particular. She was still throwing him the occasional smile, and sneaking glances at his shoes, his suit, his ... everything. Since when did girls notice him? They always just called him cute and adorable and kid and everything he took as an insult, or at least platonic. But after meeting Alex in the club, and seeing how easy it was to open people up with some playful banter, even flirt, he realized he really had to reanalyze all those old conversations.

Such a stereotype, that he couldn't realize a girl was flirting with him unless she wrapped her legs around his head.

“Call Mire yet?” Natasha said.

“No. And I'm on board with what Clara said. I want to get their words first, before I get a biased opinion from people who were here last time they visited.”

Natasha winced, but nodded, and smiled again. “Thanks ... for looking for me.”

“Thank Jessy. Friends like that are hard to come by.” He adjusted his suit, took a deep breath — useless — and walked back toward the pack. “Alright. What do you want in exchange for Natasha's freedom?”

“Easy.” Clara waved a hand again, as if everything was ok, nothing was wrong, what could possibly warrant caution? Typical disarming tactic. Or genuine disregard and lack of concern for the seriousness of present circumstances. Julias would know. Jack would have to make his best guess. “I need you to tell the Prince that the tunnels in the area we found you are off limits.”

“Me? Talk to the Prince?” A little feigning innocence never hurt anyone. “What makes you think I can do that?”

“Avery assures me if a Kindred goes to your Elysium, and asks to speak to the Prince, she'll grant the audience just for the sheer curiosity. Perfect opportunity to bypass the bullshit and get to the head of the snake.”

He frowned and grit his teeth. “Why can't I talk to my bosses and have them carry the message?”

“Cause Avery rem—”

“Cause I remember Jacob, and Antoinette, and Viktor and Tony and Lucas and Garry and Maria and Michael.”

Everyone turned to look at the door as a small woman walked into the old factory. Lit by nothing but some LED lamps sitting on tables, it made for an interesting entrance as Avery came to stand beside Clara. Avery was short, only a few inches taller than Natasha, but she had some serious muscle to her otherwise small frame. She looked forty years old, maybe a bit older, lightly tanned skin, and a long black ponytail. And just like her pack, she was dressed in some simple street clothes.

But Jack took a small step back at the sight of her. Just a reflex, just a little thing he couldn't control, but the beast in his gut forced it, made him want to run and hide. A mouse before the barking, frenzied dog. The small woman looked perfectly nice though. This was the beast from the fifties who'd caused so much trouble?

“ ... Jack Terry,” he said, and bowed slightly.

“Heh, Avery Dunsbill.” She folded her arms across her chest, and looked down at the sitting Clara beside her. “This is who you got? Kid looks eight.”

Ok, Clara may have been flirting with him, but Avery was most definitely not. There was a sneer on her face when she looked at him, and she grit her teeth the same way he did. Her silver blue eyes cut into him like shining daggers.

“I had some options,” Clara said, “and I think this kid has potential. People seem to listen to him, and he's good at talking. Young too, like David said they'd be, so don't be a jackass and give him a chance. Try not burning this bridge again?”

For just a moment, a split-second image of two wolves growling at each other flashed. Clara, barking at her leader, Avery, and Avery defending her position as leader. It was in the eyes, in their sneers and quiet-but-there growls, in their posture where they puffed their chests up a bit and flexed some of their muscles. It was all subtle, hidden in clothes and some social etiquette, but it was there. Reading these people would be weird; they weren't people, they were wolves.

And David said they'd get a negotiator, a young one. Who was David, and why did he care? Jack kept adding notes to his mental list, until it was looking like an Invictus contract in his brain.

“Why didn't you ask Natasha to talk to the Prince? Why get another Kindred?” he said.

“David said she doesn't fit the bill. We needed someone younger, like you.”

David wanted someone younger, someone impressionable then. Well, at least they were honest about it.

“I am willing to talk to the Prince.”

Avery sighed, shrugged, and came a bit closer before leaning against a nearby table. “Judging by the suit, you're with the Invictus.”

“I am.”

“And from what Natasha's told me — and Garry confirmed — Viktor's dead, and now his child's taken his place. Julias seemed like a nice guy, so maybe there's hope for your kind yet. But, I digress.” She smirked when she said 'digress', dancing on the unspoken judgment she thought he held that she was uncouth or stupid. Well, there was no denying she was uncouth. “I was here before, as you probably know by now. The details of that hunt are not for you, but it didn't end well for some vamps who got caught in the middle."

Every time they said the word hunt, they raised their inflection, and made sure to enunciate the word with some power. Whatever it was they were hunting, it was the hunting act that was important to the werewolves. Ideas or suggestions for hunting something else or changing their tactics were dwindling by the second.

"I understand."

"I'm sure. So, what we need is a middleman who we can explain our actions to. Explain, not request. We're here because your damn Prince invites major problems with her hobbies, and she can burn for all I care." Avery shrugged, and wiped off imaginary dirt from her shoulder, only for Clara to elbow her in the side. The Alpha sighed, but nodded. "We tell you what we're up to, and you tell us what the Primogen have to say about it. Middleman. Understand?"

"... are ... are you sure you need a middleman? Can't one of your pack communicate with the Primogen?"

"Tried that last time, and it only led to arguments. Your Primogen have giant pineapples up their asses; couldn't get them out even if their unives depended on it. Maybe Garry, but I'm sure the past half a century has changed him too." She paused on Garry's name for a moment, and her eyes fell to glance at the ground before raising to Jack once more. "So, you're the middleman. If the Primogen or anyone else shows up and tries to make a case for whatthefuckever, I can't guarantee it won't lead to more arguments, more confrontation." She came closer again, until maybe only five feet separated the little Kindred from the little Uratha. "And you won't win a fight with us."

He gulped, and glanced back at Natasha. She did the same thing.

"You're putting a lot of faith in me," he said.

“Putting faith in David. You’re just a mouthpiece kid.”

Yeah, sure, he’ll just walk into a Primogen meeting and explain that the werewolves have proclaimed a section of the tunnels their hunting grounds. Cause the Kindred would look so kindly on werewolves telling them what they do or don’t do in the vampire city.

But the Uratha seemed determined, and when he looked at them, they all looked confident in Avery’s decision. Confident and excited. Even Clara, who didn’t seem to like her leader’s attitude toward Kindred, looked intense and eager whenever someone mentioned the hunt.

“And if the Primogen say they would prefer a different middleman? I’m barely a neonate of the Invictus. There are older, trained, bet—”

“David says we need someone like you,” Avery said, “so if the Prince or whoever has a problem, tell them it’s not negotiable.”

Stubborn. Nothing he wasn’t used to dealing with, but it felt different coming from a pack of wolves, who seemed more than willing to get into a fight. Like dealing with a pack of Jessys, but with the strength to back it up if what he’d been told was to be believed. And he did believe it; every foot Avery got closer made him want to bolt.

Just another day dealing with predators who could tear him apart.

“Alright. I play middleman, I tell the Prince and Primogen that the tunnels in the far end of Devil’s Corner are off limits, and that if the Primogen have anything they want to communicate, it all has to go through me.”

“That’s the plan. Think you can handle that?”

No. Nope. No not nope cannot would definitely get everyone killed in a miscommunication oh god everyone was going to die.

“Yes.”

“Perfect. You can take your friend, and be on your way. But I expect you back here in a few days, to follow up.” Apparently, Avery didn’t like using phones.

Jack offered a small bow, and turned to Natasha. The rope they used to tie her up was boating rope, tied tight; no Mekhet was going to be able to break through that. But the knot was simple enough, and he watched the observing werewolves as he undid them.

“Y-Yeah. They’re ... they d-don’t seem bad,” Natasha said. “Just d-d-determined.”

“Yeah, I can see that.” He looked their way again, and some of them smirked at him. One of them was sitting in a corner, rocking slightly, and hugging himself; talking a little to himself too, quiet enough Jack couldn’t hear him.

He took a check of each of their faces as best he could. Remember the faces, it’ll be important, Julias would say. Two of the faces kept looking at Natasha though, with glances reading her body up and down. The one with the jaw-length dark, messy hair, and the other with the shoulder-length light brown hair, the giant. The two that had been sitting close to her when Jack came in, and they looked like they wanted to eat her. Jack looked Natasha’s way, but the Mekhet didn’t seem to react to the lingering gaze of the two werewolves. Oblivious, maybe.

“Alright, let’s go,” he said.

“Y-Yes.” She got off the table, and the two of them walked toward the main exit of the building, past the werewolves.

Like walking in front of a firing squad and hoping to not get shot. Each wolf watched them go by, and Jack fought to keep down the reflex to grab his gun or sword. Avery was somewhere between a frown and grin, Clara was smiling at him, and the two men he noticed were smiling at Natasha like she was bacon.

What a weird negotiation.

Outside again. Air, moonlight, clouds and stars and the mostly-quiet of North Side’s night. They kept walking, both silent, both looking down at the sidewalk, both shivering a little.

“ ... werewolves,” he said after a while.

“Werewolves.” She peeked up at him before she put her eyes back on the sidewalk, and her pace increased slightly. “They’re ... they ... I...”

He pulled out his phone, and called Jessy. Jessy was her friend, not him, not the same sort of friend at least. But by the time it was ringing, he could hear the ring from down the street.

A woman in a trench coat came running. Natasha and Jack both stopped and looked at each other, and the little Mekhet smiled, before Jessy reached them and scooped her up.

“God damn it Natasha! Fucking disappeared, and then I go looking and find werewolf tracks, and bits of your suit, and Bob said you were looking into spiders? What the fuck?”

Jessy held Natasha somewhere between a hug and a grapple, and shook her friend as she ranted on about worrying about her. So damn cute, seeing the tall woman wrestle her friend; Natasha’s attempts to escape were fruitless.

“H-Hey, I’m ok! I’m ok.”

“Bullshit. How bad did you get hurt? Swear to fucking god I will —”

“I ... I got hurt, yeah. But then they let m-m-me feed, and apologized.”

“Apologized?”

“Sort of,” Natasha said. “It was an accid-d-dent. Wrong place, wrong t-time.” Once Jessy put her down, the three of them started walking in a row. Like old times. Not that Jack had much right to think like that, short lived a time as it was, but it made him smile when he looked there way.

Jack and Natasha recounted the events of the meeting, the werewolves they met, Clara and Avery, and Natasha filled in some blanks about others, David, Arturo, Matt, Stephanie, and some she hadn’t learned the names of.

“It was crazy,” she said. “I p-put so many bullets into them, and they just ... just got b-back up. They were big, and huge, and massive, and ... and ... the claws.” She hugged herself a bit, and when she looked down at herself, she laughed and shook her head. “I need a change of clothes, and I must report back t-to the P-Prince.”

“You’re telling me,” Jessy said. “The bosses are going to freak over this, Michael especially.”

“So ... you really ... looked for me?” Natasha said.

“Fucking course I did. We have a system, right? You would have looked for me. Besides, I finally got someone to share my ghouls with, think I’ll give that up?”

Natasha meeped and looked down, avoiding eye contact with Jack. Jessy really gave no shits about personal boundaries. But Jack shrugged and did his best apologetic smile for Natasha's embarrassment.

"Hey, I can't judge. I'm sharing the Prince's ghouls all the time." In all ways, as he was sure Jessy also meant.

"Dude, awesome." Jessy put up her hand and awaited a high five. Jack, wincing as the nineties came back and punched him in the face, gave her the high five.

Natasha peeked up at them, and a smile sneaked its way onto her face.

"So," Jack said, "werewolves."

Jessy nodded with a loud sigh. "Not just, but Avery you said? All the elders are going to be upset. But from what Michael told me, they can't just force them out. Not easily, anyway. Not without a lot of bullets and a lot of risked lives."

"... Jess," Natasha said, "I'm going to t-talk with Jack. I'll see you later?"

"Eh? You sure?"

"I'm sure."

"Alright. I'll see you later then. Jack you fucking report this shit in tomorrow night, get me?"

"Sir, yes sir." Jack saluted, just the way Jessy liked. She smirked and walked off, offering a wave over her shoulder as she went.

"... I w-wonder why Vivienne and Amanda d-didn't join her."

“You mean just now? Amanda I’m sure has gone back to Xnomina to fill out a report or something. Vivi, she ... I don’t know. I understand you two don’t talk anymore.”

“We don’t. I ... perhaps I was t-too young, to embrace a childe.” She sighed, shook her hair out, and started walking with Jack once more.

“You were, what, over forty years embraced when you sired her? Don’t think anyone would call that too young.” He brought out his phone and dialed for an Invictus drive. “Sometimes people just having a falling out.”

“Falling out ... maybe. I think I made a mistake, siring someone similar t-t-to myself.”

Well, not as similar as she thought. Jack knew Natasha had an edge to her, a blade, a degree of will she could tap into her childe didn’t seem to have. Not from what little Jack had seen of Vivienne anyway.

“You must have given those wolves hell,” he said.

“What? I ... I mean, I guess I d-d-did? Shot them, stabbed, shot and stabbed a few more t-times.” She smiled at him and stood up a little straighter. “ ... hey, c-can we ... go to your place? I want to talk about what happened, but with Jessy, it’ll be ... b-b-be a bit awkward.”

“Cause of the ghouls thing?”

“N-No! You ... you said you share the P-Prince’s ghouls?”

He nodded and smiled at the tiny ancillae. “Yeah. I mean I just brought it up to try and make you feel a bit less awkward about what Jessy said, but it’s true.”

“Heh.” Her smile was growing by the second, and she stepped in a little closer as the two walked toward the pickup zone. “B-But, that’s not why. It’s cause ... she’s Invictus, and my friend. C-Could be a little weird. She’ll ... she’ll treat me like I’m in the Invictus, even though I’m not, and ... yeah.”

He nodded. Jessy would, no doubt.

He kept his apartment in much better condition now. Not that he was ever a dirty guy, just never a clean guy either, always preferred to let things sit and accumulate dust until it was time to clean. Even the fancy apartment Julias had gotten him — that Jack now paid for on his own wages thank you very much — he let get dusty in its otherwise barebones content. But that was before he started dating Antoinette.

Jack opened the door for Natasha, and smiled a little smile as she stepped into his apartment. The couches were clean and aligned nicely with a large TV. The walls were no longer blank, but they held some posters of bands he liked; metal bands of course. And only tasteful ones that looked elegant or Gothic. He kept the sleek minimalist motif for the apartment, shades of gray and black, steel and such for colors, and he actually opened the enormous wall-window’s drapes so the light of the night city lit his place. He was adulting.

“Coming int-t-to your own,” she said as she sat down on his couch.

“Been an interesting time, yeah. Trying to grow up, and I figure decorating is at least a small step in that direction.” He sat on the other couch across from her and leaned forward, elbows on his knees. “Spent so much time relying on Julias, on you and Jessy, on Antoinette, I’ve been ... trying to get into this vampire life. I visited my mom just yesterday.”

“Oh ... really?”

“Yeah. Masochism written into my blood as much as Julias, I guess.”

“My m-m-mother died ... not long after I d-disappeared from the world. Sick. My ... my death killed her.” Natasha sighed, looked around at his posters, and then back to him, her soft face smirking as she delved back into half-a-century-old memories. “My dad d-d-died not long after. Suicide.”

“Oh ... damn.” He got up, disappeared into the kitchen, and opened the fridge. Only took a second to get a bottle of blood and return with some glasses. “Sorry I brought it up. If I speak my mind, I put my foot in my mouth, every time.”

“N-no, it’s ok. And ... and you d-d-did very well, with the werewolves. You’re ... you’re a good ambassador.” A shared nod as he handed her the glass, before he sat down and they began to drink.

“Am I?”

“Yes. You’re ... you’re good at d-disarming people. They talk more freely, and that helps when trying t-t-to cut through barriers.”

“Heh, you mean I’m a bumbling idiot that—”

“No.” She shook her head and gave him a harsh glare. Not that the little Mekhet was really capable of it, with her super petite size and soft eyes, but it was a rare look on her nonetheless, and he shut up as he looked at her. “You were g-good with the werewolves, and ... and I was there, remember? I was there when you d-d-dominated Damien, killed Lucas. I ... I was there when you saved my life, Jack.” She took a sip of the red again, before leaning back in the couch and sighing. “I am glad Julias chose you.”

Well. God damn. He could feel his ego inflate by the second. Ventrue weakness, but still.

“I was really just trying to save Antoinette—crap. See? Did it again.”

But Natasha laughed. “N-No, it’s understandable.”

“ ... you sure you don’t want to be with Jessy?”

The Mekhet fidgeted and shook her head. “No. I uh ... later. Later. For now, I wanted to t-talk with you, about the werewolves. D-Did they tell you what they were hunting?”

“No. It has something to do with spiders, but that’s all I managed to gleam.”

“How did you learn ab-bout the spiders?”

“Bob told us.”

“Oh ... oh Jessy. Did she hurt him?”

“She hurt Miss Halla a little. Nothing serious.”

“Poor Lil.” Natasha took a sip of her drink, but her eyes cast glances over its edge to the furniture in Jack’s place. It wasn’t interesting furniture, just sleek and modern, lot of blacks and whites, very Julias.

“What’s on your mind? You look distracted.” Part of him considered trying to trick it out of her, like Julias might have. But she was smarter than him, and his future of being a silver-tongued Ventrue was still a ways away. Closer, but still far off, and Natasha was not some drunk kine in a club he could wrap around his finger.

“ ... the werewolves said the P-Prince invites this trouble, whatever it is they’re hunting. You heard them.”

Oh, that. How quick he'd been to dismiss it. Biased of you much, Jack?

"I figured you'd know more about that than me. Antoinette doesn't tell me anything about what she does behind closed doors with the dragons." He rubbed his buzzed head, took a sip of his drink, and tilted the glass to watch the blood shift along its sides. "If it's your covenant's actions that are even responsible."

"... they could be." Natasha's hand around her drink trembled, and the woman set it down. "They c-could be."

"I—"

Knocks at the door. An unusual knock, four taps, quieter than Julias, different pattern than Antoinette. Any Invictus he had to talk to would call first. He raised a brow and looked at Natasha, but she shrugged and looked to the door too. People never buzzed from the entrance, they always managed to find a way to sneak up to his floor.

He felt under his jacket for his pistol and sword. Yeap, still there. He got up, tiptoed to the door, and looked through the peep hole.

"... it's ... Damien? Damien and ... and the disappearing girl." What the fuck, he actually found her.

Natasha hopped up and looked around, then at herself. Panic was blatant on her face as she tried to figure out something to do, like the two of them had had some sort of secret to hide.

"I ... I uh ... let them in, I g-guess?" she said. "M-Maybe they can provide answers?"

Yeah, maybe. Or dump a whole new level of problems on their lap. Jack winced but wiped off the expression before opening the door.

“Damien,” he said. Still hard to look the man in the eyes. “And ... and uh...”

“Nice to see ye again,” she said, bright smile on her freckled face. “I’m Fiona.”

From so close, he took a moment to look the vanishing woman up and down, memorizing her. She was a little short with an hourglass curvy figure, and her frizzy red hair was long and bouncy. He knew it was bouncy cause the girl was bouncing in place a bit, hands in her brown leather jacket pockets, no doubt fighting the fidgets of nervousness. Her eyes were brown, but not quite brown, almost gold, and she cracked him a grin that broke into more of an anxious smile.

Jack stared. So close. The monster was so close. Didn’t know how she was a monster, didn’t know what that even meant, but the beast in his gut was not happy being so close to it. Her. It.

But, she didn’t feel like the werewolves either.

“Natasha?” Damien said. “I ... hello.”

“Hello,” she said. Barely.

Well, this was awkward.

“Come in.” Coughing, Jack stepped back and motioned for the two to enter. Seemed like the thing to do after all, the assassin and the vanishing woman at his door. Tomorrow, it’ll be werewolves. Day after that, ghosts. Day after, demons.

“Thank ye.” Fiona stepped in first, and offered Natasha a little wave once she was in the living room. “Natasha then? So many vampi—er, Kindred.”

“Y-Yes, Natasha Vola, Ordo Dracul.” Natasha blinked at Fiona, then at Jack, then back at the redhead.

“Ooh, the dragons. Damien’s told me about yer covenant. Is it true ye dissect other vampires to see how they work?”

“Um, uh ... s-s-some have been ... known t-to do that.” Natasha tried to stand proud, but in her hilarious clothes, all her business-woman composure was gone.

“Scary.” Fiona drifted around, eyes taking in Jack’s apartment. “Fancy place ye have ‘ere.”

Jack smiled. If she thought his place was fancy, she wasn’t familiar with the Invictus of Dolareido at all. And she did look very young, maybe twenty; the beast in his gut said otherwise.

“What brings you to my place?” he said. “I’m Jack Terry by the way, Invictus.”

“I know ye’ve been looking for me. ‘Parently my appetite has been drawing attention.” Fiona hopped onto the couch and leaned back, arm on the couch arm. She may have been nervous, but at least she was the sociable sort. Unlike any of them.

“Appetite?” Jack said, and he sat down on the couch across from her. Natasha joined him, while Damien joined Fiona.

“Aye, I’ve been in Dolareido for about a year now, and I’ve eaten a fair amount of folk. I didn’t ken about the Kindred though, that ye run this town, and ... I guess I may have attracted some attention.” Sheepish smile and a small shrug later, she nudged Damien with her elbow. “Damien ‘ere says I should talk to the Prince.”

“Wait wait wait, back up.” Jack put his up his hands after setting down his drink. Too much, way too much. “The disappearing people, you’ve been eating them?”

“I have.”

“ ... and ... you are?”

“My kind are called Begotten, I suppose. Never met another one. But that’s what I learned from the Dark Mother, when I changed.” Fiona looked down at the glass of red, picked it up, and tilted it from side to side. The liquid’s thickness gave it away, and she set it back down with a smirk.

Natasha twitched, a little thing that could have passed as any of her usual ticks. Damien and Fiona didn’t seem to notice, with Damien looking at Jack and Fiona looking at the glass of blood, but Jack caught it in the corner of his eye. The word Begotten grabbed her attention somehow.

“Judging from your silence, you’re as surprised as I am,” Damien said. “I had no idea people like her existed. A giant spider monster? I was shocked.”

Both Natasha and Jack twitched this time. No hiding that one.

“Spider monster?” Jack said.

“Mhmm.” Fiona put the glass back down, offered another sheepish smile, and leaned in a little. “And she gets very hungry. I have a go to keep her fed, but it’s nae long before I’m out hunting again. Kindred are the same right? Crave prey?”

“Y-Yes,” Natasha said, “but ... w-we don’t eat humans. We drink their b-b-blood. And usually, we let them live.”

“And Damien says you can drink from anyone ye want?” Fiona said.

“ ... you c-can’t?”

“Na. Vrallar’trakla must feed on abusive folk, anyone who likes to throw their brawn around to make weaker folk miserable. Could be physically, could be in yer head, but ... if they’re abusive, minging folk, I can taste it, like spices in the air.”

“Vrallar’trakla is the name of her ... other self, before you ask,” Damien said.

“Oh.” Jack rubbed his head and looked between the assassin and the monster. “So, I have to ask then, why are you here?”

Damien gestured to Fiona. “Need someone to talk with the Prince and Primogen. I figure it’s better you do it than me. So, I ... guess I’m asking you for a favor. Take Fiona to Elysium and talk with Antoinette, and then the Primogen depending on how that conversation goes. I know Natasha works for her now, but you’re ... yeah.”

Of all the hell to land at his doorstep. Did this Vrall know about the werewolves, that they were hunting something involving spiders? And Natasha, she’d reacted to the word Begotten, so there was something going on there, something involving the Ordo Dracul maybe.

He kind of preferred it when people barely acknowledged his existence. Just a fly on the wall, content to hide and watch all the monsters of Dolareido fight each other, until he was strong enough to fend for himself. Now there were werewolves and monsters and vampires coming to him for help, and he was going to end up in the middle of a shitstorm. Again.

“What makes you think I’m a good choice? If anything, my relationship with Antoinette is going to make this murky waters.”

Damien nodded, and rubbed his chin a couple times before he sat forward, elbows on his knees, mirroring Jack’s position.

“Cause you’re the only Kindred in this city I trust,” Damien said.

“ ... you trust me?”

“After a fashion. You gave your life to save the Prince. I saw the look in your eyes when I stabbed you. You’re not a snake like most Kindred.”

Damn. Anyone else, it’d have been easier to dismiss their words as the typical Kindred manipulations. But Damien was ... different. Jacob said it, and the more Jack interacted with the assassin, the more he agreed with the elder.

Jack looked Natasha’s way, but she nodded slightly and took another sip of her drink. Snake insult didn’t offend her at all; in fact, she was smiling as she sipped, like it were simple truth.

He wanted to tell them about the werewolves; Fiona being a spider monster — whatever the fuck that meant — was way too much a coincidence. But then, were the wolves actually hunting a spider monster? There was a connection, and that was all he knew. He lowered his head and bit down on his teeth until the urge passed. He needed more information.

“Fiona,” Jack said, “the Invictus and others have been investigating the disappearances. We found spiderwebs near areas you disappeared, that time a companion of mine and I found you in the sewers. Your doing?”

Fiona sighed, but nodded. “I leave spiderwebs, a lot of them, and big ones, in areas I frequent. It helps me return to my lair faster, easier, when there’s a place that looks similar to parts of my lair.”

“ ... I have like four follow up questions then. The claw marks at the scenes were massive. How—”

Fiona stood up, stuck out her hands a little, and pointed her palm out toward an open area of the apartment.

Natasha and Jack jumped off the couch and back over it as a massive blade shot out from over Fiona's shoulder. A blur, shadow, see-through and alien ripped outward like a whip, but hard and ... segmented, like a blade with joints. It stabbed the air fast enough he heard the wind for a split moment. And long, so very long, it went down the hallway of his apartment before it hit the wall at the end.

Fiona winced. "Oops."

Jack and Natasha peeked over the couch back at Fiona, and she took another breath as the blade-like limb of shadow faded away.

"W-What was that?" Natasha said.

"The horror coming out to play." Fiona shrugged and sat back down with a flomp. "Vampires can do the same, can't they? I ken some of ye can hide in shadows by letting a wee piece of yerself out."

Natasha shook her head. "N-Not ... the same, I don't think."

"It's nuts none of ye believe in the Dark Mother. Ye can feel the beast inside ye, and ye said ye can feel mine. So ye can't see it like I can see yers, but I can see the shadowy hunger inside each of ye, with fangs. Spooky."

The three vampires stared at her, blinking, glancing at each other before looking at her again.

She shrugged, slipped her shoes off, and put her feet upon the glass table between the two couches. Getting comfortable, and quickly. An interesting change of pace compared to the constant on-guard attitudes of Jack's peers.

“And,” she said, “technically Damien is my prisoner, until he confirms everything he told me was the truth. Like, the four covenants that work in Dolareido, and that the Ordo Dracul run this town?”

Damien looked away as he chewed on his cheek. Foot in mouth, Jack.

“I see. And I’ve had a few vampires coming through Devil’s Corner and the sewers and tunnels where I like to enter my lair. They all been investigating the disappearances I’ve been making?”

Natasha and Jack nodded in unison.

“Glad I let Damien live then.” She reached out and pat the man on the shoulder, but he winced a little when she did. Man didn’t like to be touched far as Jack could tell, but Fiona either didn’t notice or didn’t care, and she shook his shoulder a few times before putting her hands back to her knees. “It ... it feels great, to finally have some folk like myself to talk to.”

“Why didn’t you before?” Jack said.

“Cause I was so new to all this! I didn’t know vampires lived ‘ere, or ye ran the town or anything, and I once I realized, I was already moved in. I thought ye vamps were coming for me, to kill me or something. I thought maybe ye had yer own lairs and ye might attack mine and ... yeah.”

“My home, Vrall’s home in the dream, where she sleeps.”

Damien put up his hands and shook his head. “It’s uh ... you’d have to see it to believe it. I never thought such things possible, nor the Bishops or Lucas or anyone in the Lancea et Sanctum. The Testament of Longinus spoke of realms, but I had assumed metaphors, or things of God’s purview.”

“Maybe I’ll show ye sometime,” Fiona said. “Damien also says the Circle of the Crone might be more open to the concept of the Dark Mother? I’d like to speak to them.”

Jack scratched his head, and took a sip of his drink. “That can be arranged, but not through us. You’ll have to talk to their leader. Jacob is ... eccentric, to say the least. And dangerous, Fiona.”

“Vrall is ... confident, in her strength,” Damien said. “She is but a year become a Begotten and she defeated me easily.”

Jack whistled. “Damn.”

“Well, ye were in my lair. I don’t think I’ll be kicking ass and taking names so easily out ‘ere in the waking world. But in the dream? In my lair?” She laughed, slung out her arm, and hooked it around Damien’s neck to pull him in for a half hug. “But, yeah, I’m sure hoping to be a part of this community. I’ve been hiding out in my apartment since I moved in. Only conversations I have are with friends halfway athort the world.”

“Um, well, I ... I mean sure?” Jack said. “Nothing wrong with hanging out with us. We all have our roles with our covenants, but we have free time too.”

“Great!” Fiona hugged Damien a little tighter — poor guy looked so uncomfortable — and jumped up to come join Jack and Natasha on their couch. Without so much as a gesture to make room, she sat down between the two of them with enough jump to make them all bounce with the impact. “I mean when I’m in my lair I’m fine, but out ‘ere? It’s fucking scary. I don’t ken anyone.”

Jack smiled and looked over at Natasha. He thought Damien had looked uncomfortable, but as Fiona threw her arms around the two of them, Natasha looked new degrees of awkward. Three introverts and one extrovert. Jack was used to this sort of treatment from his old life, but Damien and Natasha had been vampires for half a century; extrovert strangers entering their personal space was not something they had to deal with anymore. How Natasha and Jessy became friends, Jack had no idea.

“Hey,” Fiona said, “what’s on TV?”

~~Antoinette~~

“... you are serious?” She unfolded one leg and placed the other over it. It was a great chair; she sat upon it for many hours deep in her tower’s underground domain. Soft leather, black to match her decor, with royal design to carry her with pride and prominence.

But with every passing moment, she felt less like a Prince, one who could sit in such a magnificent chair, and more like a fledgling Kindred, drifting through her second life without control or knowledge, a victim to the whims of reality. A disgusting feeling, losing control.

“Yes, P-Prince. It’s ... surprising.” Natasha stood there, squirming and wriggling, doing her best to try and find a nice way to say that the Prince had no clue what was happening in her own city. Bless her heart.

“You need not spare the cruel truth to protect my feelings, Vola.” Antoinette grit her teeth, and stood up. The chair would not do, she needed to pace. With hands hooked together on the small of her back, she started to circle the table. It was a simple thing of wood, dark, with chairs surrounding it, similar to her Primogen meeting room at the top of her tower. Every lap made about the room caused Natasha to squirm more.

“The ... Fiona creature is ... she may be what Azamel warned us ab-b-bout.”

“Perhaps. What you described is a Begotten, Natasha, a beast of the dream.”

“She said that t-too. Dream?”

Antoinette waved a hand aside, dismissing the word. In-depth explanations could come later.

“Where her monster comes from. You said she demonstrated it?”

“A little, yes.”

“And that she appears to be similar to a spider, in some fashion or another?”

“Y-Yes, Prince.”

“And now, werewolves are in my city, claiming territory and hunting grounds as if it is their right.” That alone sent fire through her veins and into her fingers, enough so she squeezed one hand into a fist until her knuckles trembled. “And you believe they may be hunting Fiona?”

“It stands t-t-to reason. She’s uh ... a very strange creature, dangerous, and the werewolves were hunting ... s-s-something in the area with the spiderwebs.”

“Perhaps. Perhaps not.” Antoinette stopped beside Natasha, leaned her butt against the table edge, and motioned for the young ancillae to sit down in one of the extra chairs. “Azamel, Mark, Athalia, they are Begotten as well. My interactions with those monsters have been few, but from what I gleaned, they do not normally betray each other. To them, beasts of all sorts, Kindred and Uratha included, are brethren.” She shuddered and wiped off her sleeve. To be associated with either was to be associated with creatures incapable of surviving the new world, creatures addicted to their hunger and desires.

“You d-don’t think Azamel was t-t-talking about Fiona?”

“She may have been. But for the wolves to hunt a Begotten is ... a strange circumstance. Unlikely.” Once Natasha was seated, Antoinette resumed her pacing, eyes down on the floor with a hand holding her chin.

“And ... um...” Natasha, squirming all the more, stared down at the table and twiddled her fingers. “The werewolves’ leader’s n-name was ... Avery.”

Antoinette stopped, and looked to the little Mekhet with a glare. The girl squeaked, bit her lip, and tried to disappear into her chair.

“A-Avery.”

Of all the problems, of all the horrible fates and events, of all the hell and torment and frustration to be dumped at her door, why did this have to happen now? For decades she would go with only her Primogen as the thorns in her side to deal with, and now that several of those thorns were gone, several more magically appeared to replace them. What divine comedy was this?

“Avery returns to my city, and declares a portion of it her hunting ground? She appears to be repeating the last incident, inviting the same troubles as Simon did.”

“Ab-bout ... that. Um, this time, they ... they um ... recruited a middleman, t-t-to be an intermediary.”

“Oh? That is a step in the correct direction. I am impressed Avery was capable of such a thought. And who did they decide to be this intermediary?”

Natasha shivered, looked at Antoinette like the Prince had become a searing sun, and winced. “Jack.”

Antoinette stopped behind one of the chairs, across the table from her assistant, and settled her hands upon the chair’s shoulders. She squeezed, and crushed. The chair snapped at the spine first, and bits of wood shattered, splintered, and sent shards across the floor and table as the leather ripped open. Not enough. She sank her fingers into it like claws, and tore it apart, so what was left of its spine went to one end of the room, and the feet went to the other, crashing against the walls hard enough to snap into pieces.

The little Mekhet squeaked again, put her hands in her lap, and shrunk. Still trembling though, eyes down, locked on her fingers that gripped each other underneath the table.

“I ... apologize, Natasha Vola. Not for my frustration, but that you underwent such trials. Such pain, claw and word.” Antoinette started to pace again, teeth biting down until her jaw ached and neck must have bulged muscle. “Those beasts are barely more than wolves. They hunt, it is their purpose, and they hunt with such single-mindedness, such ... fanaticism, to discuss alternatives with their kind is a pointless endeavor.”

And this would not be a repeat of last time. The beasts could blame her all they wanted, she would not bow to their absurd demands. The city was hers, and she would continue.

“And now,” she said, “you tell me Jack is to be their voice? And ours as well?”

“Uh ... yes. I d-d-don't think they knew I worked with you, Prince. And ... and they liked Jack.”

“ ... of course they did.” With a sigh, she sat back down in her chair, leaned forward to place an elbow upon her table, and rested her face in her palm. “Because he is unlike most Kindred.”

Natasha nodded, glanced at the remains of the other chair, and rubbed her arms a few times.

“I suppose he'll come t-to you soon, in an official capacity, after he talks with the triumvirate.”

Yes, he would, and it would be the first time the two of them spoke to each other in such a fashion. She did not want that. She did not want to stare him down, to bully him like she often had to with the others, to tear into his words and rip out the truth he might hide. And while her little Ventrue was an honest fellow, he had no doubt acquired some dialogue skills from his sire, and her as well.

She would have to look into her lover's eyes, and search them for deceit, for treachery, for half-truths and purposefully forgotten information. With werewolves at her doorstep, she could afford no mistakes. But the very thought of her little Jack standing before the Primogen, and being interrogated by them and her, was sickening.

“And...”

“Yes Miss Vola?”

“Avery said something ... about someone named D-David. Said he ... said that he said they knew their chosen intermediary was going t-t-to b-be small, and young. They trusted him.”

Natasha nodded. “Knew, P-Prince.”

Uratha were strange creatures, and they tugged on threads connected to things beyond the imagination of most Kindred. If David knew, if he had predicted something, that was important.

“Thank you Miss Vola. Is there anything else?”

“N-No, that’s ... actually, where is my sire, Prince? If I may ask. I haven’t seen D-D-Daniel in several days.”

Antoinette shook her head. “He is investing something for me involving the new residents of our city, and I am afraid I cannot tell you where he is.”

“Y-Yes, I understand. I’ll take my leave then.” Natasha nodded, bowed, and walked away.

The Prince smiled after her little assistant. So tiny, a couple inches below five feet tall, and yet she had a strength to her to persist such hardship. She would go far, Natasha Vola. Right hand of the Invictus, and now a member of the Ordo Dracul. Their loss, her gain.

Alone in her office, Annie leaned forward, put her hands on the table, and sighed. Jack. What would she do? What could she do? With Tony, such differences had led to serious distrust, and she did not want that with Jack. Never with Jack.

She could visit her love, surprise him, remind herself he was not that man. Yes, yes that is what she should do.

---

Her love’s apartment. She waited outside the door, knocked, and folded one arm under her bosom while the other reached up to tap her smiling lip. Again she had bypassed the elevator, and entered through her own means. It was a fun vice to indulge in a vampire's abilities every now and then.

In the past, he would have opened the door too quickly. Now, he checked the peep hole before opening it; caution had become a part of his life. It saddened her, and soothed her. He was a smart boy, and with vigilance, he could live a long life, by her side.

“Antoinette? Man, how do you all get passed the front door? And I thought I'd be coming to the Elysium tower in a few hours?”

“A change of plans mon petit, if that is alright with you? I thought, perhaps, you would like to go out tonight with your love?” She blinked at herself when she said ‘your love’, a phrase that she would use to guilt Tony when they started to grow their first touches of distance. But the boy had done nothing to create any distance, and no such distance existed.

You are worrying over nothing, Annie. Be calm.

“Well now I feel like a jackass. I never show up randomly at your place. I never call, say I love you at a whim.” He stepped aside to let her in, and smiled up at her as she passed him. “I never take out the trash or wash the dishes.”

“I ... what? Oh, I see.” She chuckled, sat down upon his couch, and turned to face the boy as he sat down beside her. “Were our lives so simple, little Ventrue. A part of me swoons at the idea of hiding away, living simple lives away from other Kindred. The two of us in a tiny apartment perhaps, squabbling over dishes and garbage. We would argue due to proximity, forever touching elbows. But, after we argue, you would buy me flowers to show me you loved me. And with such a simple gesture, I would be reminded of how much we love each other. We would hold each other, and make love, more than happy our tiny space was as tiny as it was.”

Jack opened his eyes wide with the description. “You really have a way with words.”

“I do. And ... as will you, I assume, when you speak with me about the Begotten and Uratha.”

Wide eyes shrank, and fell. Jack twisted in his seat until he was facing straight out, and he sighed as he rubbed his head.

“Was kind of hoping Natasha wouldn’t tell you.”

“She had to, my love. I am both glad and saddened that she did; it was not news I was joyed to learn.”

“ ... it’ll be the first time I’ve had to talk to you in this sort of official capacity, won’t it?”

“It will.” She reached out, set her hand on his shoulder, squeezed it, rubbed it, and raised her thumb to nudge against his earlobe.

“ ... feel ... I should ... should tell you I won’t let our relationship affect how I perform the job.”

She raised a single brow, and leaned in toward her little Ventrue. He still was not looking her way, and he was squirming a little, as he no doubt dug up an ember of confidence he did not wish to use against her. So adorable, and painful.

Her hands found him, and before he could say anything, she pulled him into a hug, and buried him in her long white hair.

“We are not enemies in this new arrangement, but, I will do the same.” She kissed his ear, and set her neck over his shoulder to hug him tighter. “Unless our positions set us against each other directly.”

She pulled away, and set her hand on his head to rub the delightful texture of his buzzed hair.

“If members of my order demanded I ended my relationship with you, my love, I would not.”

“Oh. I ... I hadn’t even thought of that. I mean, I guess I didn’t cause it’s not like anyone in Dolareido would try and tell me if I could be in a relationship with the Prince or not. I’d never give you up.”

“Ever?”

“Ever. Course, I’m just a kid who doesn’t know shit about anything.”

Ah, ever self-aware, her little Ventrue. How rare a talent for someone to both analyze the reality of others accurately, but also the self. To admits faults as readily as skills. It made her swoon.

“I believe you know more than most, my love.” She reached out, took his head, and guided him toward her as she leaned back. A dance they knew well, as she set her head upon the arm of his couch, and the boy climbed between her legs before lying upon her stomach and chest. He put his cheek to her collar bone, and relaxed against her as she stroked his hair.

“Those werewolves were—”

“Ah, let us ... not speak of the wolves and monsters for now. I would hate to bring work into our private lives.”

“Right!” He pulled up with a jolt and smile, and she chuckled as she pulled him back down. “Right, good plan. So, outside of work, no work talk. Julias and Beatrice do that too, seems to work for them.”

Perhaps she should have tried it with Tony. The two of them considered their love and their goals with Dolareido to be bedfellows; and it poisoned them.

What they needed was a distraction.

“Mon amour, I had planned for the two of us to spend several hours in my bed. But, I do feel our lives has robbed of an indulgence that, perhaps, it need not.”

“Indulgence? What sort of indulgence?”

She grinned at her love, and licked her lips.

“Shopping.”

They took the time to dress for the occasion. It had been her plan, so she was already dressed in a nice gray suit and skirt, a jacket that preferred open to expose the white, almost silver shirt she wore underneath. A touch of cleavage, a dash of bust, and the skirt was above knee to expose her legs. A pleasant balance of sexy and tasteful.

For Jack, she dressed him in delightful black shoes, that went with skinny black jeans, and he wore a black suit jacket to match his white shirt underneath, no buttons, that showed off his lean and fit physique well. The two were a delicious pair, and she beamed as she held the boy's elbow in hers while the two walked the shopping center.

In South Side, her city was not dissimilar to Las Vegas; it never slept. The stores were open, and people walked its halls, chatting and eating and laughing. The joys of rich life.

Garry did not like how she let money grow in South Side, how she let it turn many kine into corrupted corporations and companies, how she let the city become yet another example of the illogical premise of capitalism. She insisted that it fostered dynamism, that the city proved a better city for Kindred to rule it with its many levels of wealth. But, now was not the time to think about the Primogen, now was the time to spend money. And she had more money than she could ever need.

Jack looked at the stores they passed within the mall. Unlike such establishments nearer the rural areas, this mall was near Elysium, and with such a location came expectations of its customers. Everyone that walked its halls was rich, and the contents of the stores were grossly overpriced; and ostentatious. She loved it.

“Never been to the Franch Mall before,” Jack said. “I mean ... damn this place is expensive.”

“It is.” She leaned in, and put a kiss on her love’s ear. “But pennies to me.”

Jack shivered. Money was power, and a taste of such things would no doubt tantalize her little Ventrue.

Other people glanced at them, some young, some old, many in couples and all wearing clothes hinting at wealth. It was a social game, to wear your worth without crossing the line into tasteless. A game Daeva knew with all the intimacy and nuance of their own bodies.

They stopped in front of an electronics store, and Jack stared at the various televisions they had on display. But when he looked her way, she rolled her eyes and laughed. Men and toys. She could buy him a toy, perhaps? Maybe something more grandiose, such as a vehicle. But it was a dense city, and a car was far more hassle than it was worth. She would have to think about it, or ask him to bring her a suggestion.

Sugar daddy, Ashley had said. Be his sugar daddy. She laughed at the memory, and waved off Jack's curious expression when he glanced her way. The Ventrue could dominate any salesman he wanted, if the boy truly wanted a vehicle.

They stopped in front of De Rourie's Palace, a swimwear store.

"... you uh ... um..."

"You did mention something about a bikini, oui?" she said. "While my wardrobe is expansive, I do not own swimwear." The pool in her tower, she swam in the nude, and beaches no longer contained the appeal they once did without the sun.

"But I was kidding! I mean, you don't have—"

"You do not wish to help me pick out new clothes?"

"Help you pick? I ... I have the fashion sense of a nerd. I am a nerd."

"Then I will teach you a few things. Has Julias taught you nothing of fashion?" She took the boy's hand, and led him into the store.

"Um, he ... I think he gave up on me as a lost cause, in the fashion department."

She laughed once again, and a couple of shoppers awake at such a late hour glanced her way, and Jack's way. When she kissed her lover, many of them double checked to see if what they witnessed was true, and Antoinette grinned at them — all women in the store — as she ran her fingers along her love's buzzed hair. Let them gawk at the tall woman and her tiny man. They had no idea.

De Rourie's Palace was not a typical swimwear store, nothing in the Franch Mall was. De Rourie's could have become a lingerie store if it wished, selling only the most extravagant clothes, all meant to look beautiful rather than be comfortable. She would have fun, trying new clothes and finding what captured Jack's attention the most. Perhaps she could find something for him as well. The store did not offer much in the way of fanciful men's swimwear, but did they ever?

The doors opened and closed behind them, leaving them surrounded by the various walls and stalls of clothes. The lighting was dramatic, quiet along the isles but emphasized and pointed along the walls lined with swimsuits of all sorts. Bikinis and tankinis, bandeaus and brazilians, micro to full, one pieces of every degree of exposure, from race to monokinis to string. Mannequins of women with severe anorexia — those poor dolls — displayed the swimsuits, each standing in fashion-show poses, each immune to the effects gravity had on bandeaus, each immune to the back pain caused by anterior pelvic tilt.

There were experimental pieces as well, the sort to be shown during a fashion show, but to be simplified before seeing the shelves of boutiques. Such degree of adjustment, between the runway and the shelf, varied depending on the brand and expense; and De Rourie's Palace spared no expense. Many of the offered pieces could not be worn and swam in, only stood in and admired. One piece in particular had a black cross-chest strap that went above the breasts, made of black-stone jewelry, with strips of white cloth that dangled from it over the breasts. The strips would cover the nipples and past them, and were kept in place only by some black gems weight at their ends. The bottom piece was a nothing more than a belly chain, again made of the same black-stone jewelry, with a strip of cloth for the front and back that dangled free, again weighed down by black gems.

She scooped it up immediately. Jack blinked at her, and she winked at him. One of the many treats she might share tonight.

“The issue with many of these,” she said as they walked past the bikinis, “is finding a size that fits the bust. Breasts come in such different shapes and sizes, with different angles and curves, upon different sizes of chest. And many women have one breast larger than the other. You would need hundreds of tops to cover all the possible combinations of human variation.”

“I do thank god I was born a man,” Jack said, grinning. “Shopping for bras alone sounds like hell.”

“It is.” Her little love earned another chuckle from her, and she guided him down the isles with renewed enthusiasm. “But do not let that affect your judgment with me, my Jack.” Jack was perhaps a bit of a feminist; she had heard him comment on plights unique to women before. Most of such concerns were a thing of the past for her, for Kindred, but his concern pleased her nonetheless.

She stopped before the smaller bikinis, and gestured toward a black one with a triangle top and a micro rise, cheeky bottom. Truly a classic, simple and elegant, powerful and commanding, sexual and beautiful. She grabbed two of different sizes, and set them upon Jack’s shoulder, her new shopping assistant.

“Two?” he said.

“And we will be lucky if one of them fits.” She pat her silly little man on the head, and moved on. “Please, feel free to suggest. Perhaps a certain color is to your liking? Or type?” A gesture to the others, many far more conservative, many far less.

Jack, regressed to a child in a sweets bakery, looked the various swimsuits up and down. Nearby women glanced between him and Antoinette, and she offered them a wink. Yes, he was her lover, and she enjoyed pampering him with sexual delights.

Jack stopped in front of some one pieces, open back with various patterns of straps. Some were tight, formfitting, some were loose and meant to display cleavage, and some had open lace-up sides from hip to rib. Her lover's eyes were stuck on a particular piece, a one piece athlete swimsuit with skinny straps, fully exposed legs to the hip, and a single cross along the back. Color was a spattering of white paint along black canvas. Very cute. She set several of those upon her love's shoulder as well.

Perhaps she would have to nudge Jack in the intended direction? He may have thought she intended to swim with the clothes; she did own a pool after all, deep in her tower. So, she smirked at her love, took his shoulder, and turned him toward the more salacious selection.

"Which," she whispered to his ear once she had leaned down over his shoulder, "would you enjoy seeing me in?"

"I ... um..."

"Or, which would you prefer I wear, while you rest your cock inside me?"

That got him shivering. She had said it louder as well, loud enough for the nearby women to hear, to glance, for some to stare openly. They blushed, squirmed a little, and tried to speed up their shopping.

"Um ... how about ... these?" He stopped in front of the extreme micro bikinis, and gestured to one of white. To call it a swimsuit was silly, as it was nothing more than string with a tiny triangle to cover the sex, and two tiny triangles to cover the nipples. Barely.

She grabbed several sizes, and set them upon Jack.

The two of them wandered the store, grabbing various garments, and she taunted observers with the occasional wink, or yet another explicit description of what she was going to do to her man. They were kine, young things compared to her, concerned only with social etiquette and niceties. She was behaving like a child, taunting them so, but Jack made her feel like a young woman once again. And she deserved to indulge such a forgotten feeling.

Once she had sufficiently buried the boy in dozens of swimsuits, she walked to one of the fitting rooms. De Rourie's Palace had private fitting rooms, full rooms with walls and a proper door, perfect to test clothes for your partner.

“Um, ma'am? Changing rooms are not to be shared.”

One of the women who had been watching her and Jack had finally worked up the courage to speak. An employee, and an unhappy one.

Antoinette raised a brow, looked at the fitting room, and then at the nearby women who were standing within earshot. Jack looked a little uncomfortable, half for the women comparing him to his love, and half for carrying around a mountain of clothes stacked on his arms and shoulders.

She was tempted to argue, to make a point about how the fitting rooms of De Rourie's Palace are full rooms with thick walls, not tiny stalls. But it would be a pointless argument, and not worth angering herself over. Instead, she opted for the simpler option.

“But, do you not wish to make me happy?” she said.

“I ... uh ... excuse me?”

“Do you not wish, to make me happy?”

Deep in her core, down in the depths of her Kindred body, she summoned her majesty. A drop of vitae, just a small one would be sufficient to enchant these women, to paint herself a goddess in their eyes for a few hours. The awe flowed from her, invisible but thick in the air, and she guided it to each woman with a glance and smile.

“ ... I ... yes, yeah! Yeah, anything. What do you need?” The employee, a tall and thin woman with short blond hair, smiled her brightest smile and stepped in a bit closer.

“Anything from us?”

“How about us?”

“We could model for you!”

“Yeah!”

Within a minute, half a dozen women — the whole of the customers in the store — were upon Jack and Antoinette, smiling, beaming, grinning. Attractive women of varying ages, several of them Jack’s age. Enthralled to her by her spell, their desires replaced with an overwhelming urge to please her, to earn her attention. In awe of her. Fake admiration, created by a vampire’s power, to break their minds and turn them into adoring fans. Temporary, but useful.

“Jack, my love, would you enjoy having these women model swimsuits for you?”

“Wha?” He blinked up at her, then looked at the six women who had suddenly become adamant to please him, and by proxy, her. “No! No, I want to hang out with you, without an audience.”

The collective unhappy sigh from the women was too cute.

“Please,” Antoinette said to the small crowd, “it will make me happy if you continue your shopping. It would make me especially happy if you leave my love and I in peace while I try on some clothes for him.”

The women nodded, sighed a few more times, and stared with longing at the Prince as she opened the door to the fitting room, and ushered her love inside. Once within, she guided Jack to sit upon one of the armless chairs, and she took the clothes from him to set them upon a bench.

“You had all those women ready to jump into bed with us, just like that,” he said as he snapped his fingers. “That is ... that is really impressive.”

“Daeva can turn many into adoring fans. With practice and time, we learn to turn kine into confidants with but a glance. Come my age, a single word can turn a host of kine into loyal bodyguards, willing to sacrifice themselves to spare me harm.”

“Damn impressive.” He raised his hands and stretched out a bit before he wriggled in his chair. Excited, her little Ventrue. “Now that I think about it, you’re absolutely rich, but for things like shopping, you don’t need to spend a dime to you?”

“No. But it would attract attention if a store’s inventory of clothes were to disappear.” Chuckling again, she set her purse down, slid off her jacket, and set both upon the bench. “A Ventrue as powerful as yourself, my young Jack, would have no trouble amassing his own small fortune through the use of dominate.”

“I guess, yeah. I just ... dunno, never really craved being rich.”

“You crave music with complexity and emotion. You crave dialogue with depth. You crave a connection, intimacy.” She started to unbutton her shirt, and watched herself in the mirror. “It is no small part of why I enjoy our time together.”

“I ... yeah. You really do have a way with words.”

She did at that.

Piece by piece, she stripped in front of Jack. The shirt, the skirt, the shoes, all joined her suit jacket on the bench. Left in nothing but her underwear and bra. She had originally meant to wear her current lingerie to bed with Jack tonight, so it was a rather sexual set, black lace with see-through curves along its face.

Jack stared, jaw dropping. “ ... damn.”

“Blush for me, my love,” she said. The two of them began the blush of life, and each of them took a breath of air to taste the sensations. “And please, take off your clothes, all of them.” Her turn to watch.

Jack stood up with a bounce, and threw off his clothes. He tripped on a sock, groaned and fumbled, but soon the boy was naked and seated once more. More excited than usual, staring at her with wide eyes, and his shaft already hard. Not worried at all about the future, not worried about how they would soon come into a strange opposition, how he would have to stand before her and the Primogen, and be placed at the center of an old wound between Kindred and Uratha.

All he cared about was her. Such was the way of men she supposed, to focus on the moment more than a woman could. A blessing and a curse. But, it was also because Jack was hers, and no matter what would happen, they were in love. She had felt similar with Tony before though; if only she had Jack’s confidence.

She shook her head of such illogical thoughts. Jack was not Tony, in any measurable sense, and all the better for it. So, taking another breath, she walked over to her little Ventrue, leaned forward, reached behind her, and undid the clasp of her bra. Instead of catching it, she shook her shoulders a few times, and let it fall from her breasts, down her arms, and onto Jack’s rigid member. Her breasts dangled in front of his face, heavy, became teardrops with their weight, and they trembled with the act of shaking off her bra. All a dance for her love. She did love to spoil him.

“God ... damn...”

“We still have many clothes to try on,” she said as she stood up straight.

“Then, um, you should probably stop teasing me so much. I’m only human.”

She laughed. “Are you? Then I have brought the wrong man into my fitting room.” She slid her fingers into the waistband of her panties, and slowly slid them off, making a grand show of it, emphasizing the curve of her spine, her ass, her legs as she edged them off. Once at her ankles, she stepped out of them, and reached down to pluck her bra off of Jack’s lap before tossing them onto her discarded suit.

What to try first, what to try first. Perhaps trying them in order of sexual allure? But then, there was a special allure to clothes that created the image of nudity while covering much of the skin, such as the one piece Jack had selected. Yes, that would do well for the first, to build the moment.

She kept her back to Jack as she slid the swimsuit up legs, hooked it over her ass and hips, up over her breasts, and slipped the straps over her shoulders. Ah, tight, as she expected. To find formfitting swimwear that fit her bust comfortably would be a trial, but showing off each piece for her love was a fun she had not experienced in centuries. To dress with her ghouls was a delight, but it was not the same as seeing the look of raw desire in her love’s eyes as she turned to face him, and combed her hair back over her shoulders with her fingers.

“It is.” She sighed and slid it off, still facing Jack. He groaned, loudly, as her breasts came free of the restricting black and white fabric, and his shaft twitched upward before settling.

She tried on the other size, but where her bust was less crushed, the waist fell out and did not hug her stomach. Jack didn’t seem to mind, and his eyes drooled, looking up her and down as she again slipped out of the swimsuit. She tried on other swimsuits, all the one pieces. Many had plunging cleavage, many had open sides with lace, and many exposed the back all the way to the base of the tail bone. Each, she took her time displaying for her love, including some silly poses that earned a chuckle from them both.

One swimsuit in particular, she was eager to find the boy’s reaction. She grabbed the pile of string, unfurled it, and laughed. A micro monokini, it was called, which was nothing more than a bikini whose top piece connected to the waistband of the bottom piece, rather than behind the back with itself. But due to the angle of the strings, it emphasized both the length of the legs and the curve of the spine. So, she turned her profile to Jack, and smiled at him as she slid the few strings up her legs, and then once again hooked them over her shoulders. She faced him directly as she slid the straps over her breasts, and then again, posed for her love.

“Not sure ... I’m going to survive this, Antoinette,” he said. His hands were gripping the sides of the chair underneath his legs, and squeezing. An attempt to keep them there and not touch himself, no doubt.

“Whatever do you mean, my love?”

“You ... you look ... really, really, really really, really good in all of these. Going to explode.”

“Then perhaps you should masturbate? There are several more to try, and many I will have to try other sizes.” She winked, and blew him a small kiss. “And if you become drained, there is a host of women outside waiting to be Kissed.” She walked toward her man, leaned forward, and set her hands upon his shoulders. In such a position, the weight of her breasts filled out the front straps of her monokini, but her breasts were too large for it, and they distended out over the sides of the straps. She knew they would, just as she knew Jack would be helpless to look away.

The look in his eyes. Melting, wax dripping down the candle. Steam on his skin. Fire in his green, open eyes that spread its warmth to her soul. He was her spark. It struck a chord inside her, regressed her to a young woman eager to bathe in the mesmerized gaze of her lover. Eager to please him, to be pleased by him, eager to feel his touch, and just as eager to hold him in her embrace as the sun rose.

She reached down, took one of his hands, and set it upon his shaft.

“Masturbate,” she said, “to your heart’s content. Do not worry, you will be satisfying me later.” A kiss for his nose, another for his lips, and she stood up once more. “Tell me when you are about to cum.”

“O ... ok.”

With a firm nod, she turned around, but managed only a foot before she stopped, and looked over her shoulder. Jack was staring at her as always, but the monokini forced his eyes to settle on her ass. She had always known her little Ventrue was a breast lover, but perhaps that was too simple a classification; his eyes lingered on her derriere as much as any part of her. And to know he was staring at how the tiny strings of the swimsuit highlighted the length of her legs and height of her thighs made her old, dead heart race. Already she felt the warmth between her legs grow, eager to be filled.

“It surprises me you do not ask me to dance for you, little Ventrue, with how much you enjoy looking at me.” She grinned at him, and stuck her hip out to accent the curve of where her shapely ass met her hamstrings.

“C-Could ... you dance for me?”

Oh my. In the past, he would have squirmed, and tried to explain how he could not, or would not be so bold. But now with only a little nudge, he asked. Such boldness was to be rewarded.

She brought her hip in, and slowly turned herself around as the rotation of her hip went in an exaggerated angle. A sway of the hip, and a sway of the shoulder, to make her body flow like a dangling ribbon. Subtle, but sensual.

Poor Jack leaned back in his chair, and melted all the more. He openly masturbated, squeezing and stroking himself as he stared at her. Little groans escaped him, each more adorable and intoxicating than the last. They grew as she raised her arms over her head, and combed back her hair while jutting out her chest. And then, as she slowly turned full circles, she brought her hands down to her shoulders, down the straps of the swimsuit that covered her breasts, and down to where the straps hooked into the hips of the swimsuit bottom.

She sneaked her fingers under the tiny strings that were the waistband of the swimsuit bottom, and slid them back and forth, highlighting how they hugged her wide hips, and disappeared into the crevice of her ass as she turned. Each rotation, she noticed where her love stared, where his eyes fell, and she guided them up and down her body.

She was going to tease her man until he burst.

“I ... didn’t know ... you could move like that.”

“Oh? I have done this dance for you during sex.”

“Never that ... um ... while standing.”

“You mean never while I get to move about.” She stepped closer to him, and turned around several times with the slow sway of her body never stopping. Like a snake from head to toe, she caused her spine, her hips, her stomach, and her legs to all flow in waves. “There was a time, little Ventrue, when I would dance for a dozen kine. Incense filled the room, the floor was covered in exotic, soft rugs, and men and women as naked as you stared upon me as I moved by body.” Her hands found her shoulders again, and she slid them down her body with the rolling sway of her dance. Her fingers took the front straps that covered her nipples, and pulled them aside, so they rested outside her breasts.

“It’s ... hard to imagine. Like watching a queen dance for her subjects.” The boy was sinking into his chair with every stroke of his cock.

“You are not my subject, little Ventrue. You are my love.” She leaned forward over him, set her hands on his shoulders, and dipped her ass left and right as she lightly caressed the boy’s arms. When she looked down, she smiled and licked her lips as drops of precum coated the boy’s glans. “But, I admit, I do enjoy that you will sit and listen, while I guide many of our bouts.” A hand slid down his arm to his chiseled little stomach, down his pubic area — still smooth as per her preference — and onto his cock. When he tried to move his hand away to give her room, she guided his fingers back around his shaft. She only wanted to touch him for a moment, to feel the wet warmth of his precum on the tip of her finger, before she stood back up and walked over to the pile of clothes. She was such a tease, and no doubt Jack was getting close to orgasm, while doing his best to not cum, edging himself as he watched her.

The sight of him near orgasm had her wet.

She grabbed the black bikini this time, and tried on the bottom piece first. It fit well, hugging her ass and emphasizing the shape of her thighs and hips, without constricting the skin in odd angles.

As she reached down for the top, her love's groan grabbed her. Jack was staring at her as if she had exploded. His eyes were wide, his jaw dropped to excessiveness, and his hand increased in speed, masturbating fast enough to make quiet noises of flesh on flesh.

“Oh? Is this a particular interest of yours? A kink, or fetish?” She turned around again, and tilted out one hip while placing a hand on it; a fashion runaway pose. Wearing only a bikini bottom meant her breasts were free to hang and flatten slightly against her ribs, but Jack's arousal skyrocketed every second she stood there for him. “Being topless, with such a simple bottom?”

“It's ... uh ... I don't know, just ... it just...”

Well, what a delightful little discovery. She came closer to him, and closer, drawing out every step in a slow, exaggerated sway. When only a foot separated them, she resumed her dance, but in a slower form. Hands over her head, she swayed to the unheard music, like a silk sheet in a gentle breeze, and brought herself to stand between Jack's spread knees.

“God...”

“Will you cum soon?” she said.

“Y-Yeah ... just...” He had started stroking himself with the almost panicked need to orgasm, and his eyes were beginning to half close with the impending bliss.

She smiled down at her love, and got down on her knees between the boy's legs. Her fingers took his wrists and pulled his hands away from his twitching shaft; drops of precum were trickling down the underside. So close to orgasm, Jack almost fought against her with his need to push himself over the edge, but he relented as she smiled at him. She could pleasure him, better than he could.

She set her lips upon the swollen, wet head of his cock, and kissed him. Groans of bliss filled her love, and she eased her lips in a tight suckle back and forth along the base edge of his glans. He was most sensitive there, and a little lick, a little kiss, was all it took to send him over.

Warmth flooded her mouth, squirting gushes of cum that made her little lover shiver. In their time together, she had learned to continue suckling him as he came, but in a slower and more gentle manner. Some men preferred for the stimulation to cease, some preferred it to continue, Jack enjoyed it when she slowed it for him, to milk more waves of his cum from him.

And he enjoyed it when she met his gaze, as did she. To see his green, lovely eyes struggle to stay open as she milked his length was euphoric. What was it about his gaze, his open, genuine, sincere expressions of pure joy and blissful agony in orgasm that aroused her so? Hearing his quiet groans, seeing him squirm, it had drops of her juices soaking through her bikini bottom.

As the boy's orgasm started to end, she slid the whole of his length into her mouth and throat. Once her lips found the base of his length, she gently suckled around it, and licked along his cock's underside as it twitched in its last moments of bliss. With no need to breathe, she was free to stay there, and let the boy melt into her as his cum dripped down her throat.

Jack collapsed backward into the chair. So delightful, her little Ventrue. She stood up, wiped her mouth with a single finger, and leaned down over her love to rest her hands upon his shoulders again.

“That ... can't taste very good,” he said.

She laughed and shook her head. “No, but to see you writhe? That tastes delightful.”

“You spoil the hell out of me.”

“I do.” Chuckling again, she spread her legs a little and walked forward. Once the boy’s legs were underneath her, she sat down upon his lap. The chair had no arms to block her position, so she straddled the sitting Jack, and slid her hips forward until the front of her bikini bottom was pressed to the underside of his cock.

“You’re ... wet. God that’s warm.”

“Indeed.” Sitting on his lap put her at a delightful angle with her love, her breasts to his chin and her hands free to slide over his shoulders, his hard muscles and slender body, and behind his neck to slide over his head. She stroked his hair a few times, and found herself growling as the boy purred. “You are still aroused.” The boy’s member had started to soften, but hardened once more as she dragged a finger along his buzzed hair.

“Yeah, I ... yeah.”

“Such vigor is to be awarded. Where would you like to cum a second time? Upon my breasts? My stomach perhaps? Within my mouth again?”

“Maybe, uh ... sex?”

“Ah.” It had been a little while since they had indulged in the classic. She reached down for the bikini bottom, slid a finger underneath where it covered her mons, and moved it to the side to hook it along the outside of her sex. With her wet lips exposed, she nudged them along the boy’s cock, against his testicles where they connected with his shaft, and caressed her clit along his flesh. After a few moments of teasing, she reached down for his member, guided it between two fingers, and aimed it toward her entrance as she stood up.

To take him into her body was the most heavenly thing. Spreading her dripping lips, opening her, the feel of hard girth filling her, the angle sliding his swollen glans along the back wall of her insides, until she sank onto his lap and devoured him to the base. But what made it heavenly was the boy's writhing, subtle squirms and wriggles as he fought to control himself during her slow descent.

"Just ... oh ... god." Jack looked ready to devour her as she leaned back for him, so the boy could look at how the bikini bottom highlighted her hips, emphasized her slender waist, flat stomach, while its high hip increased the length of her leg and demanded attention for the curvy, toned shape of her thighs. Such a simple garment, and it worked wonders on the boy.

She reached underneath his arm to find the back of the chair, and held it for balance as she leaned back. Her other hand took his hand, guided it to her breasts, and then did the same with the other.

All the encouragement the boy needed. Wide eyes feasted on her body, and his hands attacked, fondling her breasts with his usual tender and care, and an edge of strength and desire. Where once he had been too timid to do more than lightly caress, now he explored her breasts with loving palms that cupped and held the weight of her bosom. He nudged her breasts upward with a little force, and watched them jiggle as they settled under gravity once more, earning a chuckle from her. His fingers explored her swollen nipples, massaged them, and sent warm sparks of pleasure through her chest, replacing her chuckles with quiet, warm sighs.

The joy of familiarity; their bodies were no longer new to each other. But where there had once been novelty, there was now practiced technique. He knew how she enjoyed being touched, which caresses she enjoyed, which she did not. And she him. Her lover had a particular love for edging, to be brought to the brink of orgasm slowly, and dangled there until his need to cum subsided. And then she could bring him there once more.

She began to dance for him. With her hand holding the chair, she had the leverage to roll her hips and stomach back and forth, a gentle beach tide over her love's cock. She would not cum from this position; that tasty treat would be saved for later. For now, she danced upon Jack's member, each gentle thrust of her swaying body soaking him in more of her juices, each thrust met with a hard squeeze of her muscles that made the boy groan.

The man began to shiver, and she slowed her dance to almost nothing.

"Not yet," she said, grinning her devil's grin. "We have only begun."

"Sorry, I ... you're so damn hot, and..." The boy's eyes, usually locked to her breasts, were instead locked onto her stomach, her hips and waist, and the attire she still wore.

"Then perhaps a moment of respite, while I try another swimsuit." She stood herself up, and drank in every moment of Jack's blissful misery as his dripping shaft slipped from her insides. She walked over to the pile of clothes, and dug out another one of the bikinis, before glancing back over her shoulder at Jack.

"... I know that look," he said. "That's an evil look."

Evil? Laughing, she walked over to stand in front of the boy, and turning to show her profile to him once more, she slid off the bikini bottom. The pleasure was in the build up after all, and she did love to take her time. Once the old bikini bottom was gone, she set the new bikini bottom to her feet, and pulled it up until it hugged her body tight for Jack to see.

As she predicated, the boy groaned, loudly at that, an unusual volume to hear from her little Ventrue. The new attire was barely more than a thin piece of string, white rather than black, with only the tiniest triangle to cover her parts. The low cut of the front triangle meant the whole of her smooth mons pubis was visible; any lower and her engorged clitoris would have peeked over the fabric.

“Do ... do women actually wear that in public?” he said. “Cause, I mean ... damn.”

“Many women enjoy being ... as I once heard, eye-fucked.” Again she mounted her lover’s lap, and nudged her covered pussy against the boy’s soaked shaft. “And in the privacy of us two, I do enjoy such eyes from you.”

Jack reached up for her breasts again, but only stayed there for a moment before his hands drifted down to hold her hips, and massage her ass and waist as he stared at the thong.

“You keep surprising me,” he said. “I never thought you’d enjoy wearing stuff like this.”

“I enjoy that you enjoy it.” She reached down, slid the hilariously tiny bit of fabric to the side, and again, sank the boy’s swollen cock into her wet insides. “I prefer exotics such as a corset, or imaginative nighties, but to indulge your partner’s desires is a joy unto itself.”

“T-Thank you.” His body trembled as her sex found the base of him again, and his eyes locked onto where her bikini bottom was pulled to the side to expose her cunt’s lips. One of his hands reached down, and caressed along her mons, fingers indenting into the softness.

“You are most welcome, my love.” She sighed, leaned back to let her hair dangle behind her, and resumed her dance. Slow, deep strokes as she sank herself balls deep upon his length, and then halfway off of him as her stomach and hips rolled like a belly dancer. So slow, she leaned back almost far enough to fall off, but holding onto the chair let her bend at extreme angles, and roll her stomach and body back and forth in a gentle wave. When she felt Jack twitch and squirm, she stopped, waited for his body to calm, and resumed her dance.

Jack's hands took her waist, her back, and pulled. Gently of course, tender, loving, he pulled her back up until she was seated upon him fully. And he hugged her. He buried his face in between her breasts, and hugged her.

When he truly wanted, her Jack could get rough, as he once proved the night they had shared their I-love-yous. But sometimes, he could be so tender it melted her into nothingness. She smiled down at her Jack, and leaned her chest in toward him. One hand took the back of his head, and guided it toward the nipple of one of her breasts, while the other held his shoulder so she could resume shifting her hips upon him.

Jack, eyes almost closed, pulled her nipple into his mouth, and suckled. One of his hands drifted down to her ass to hold the voluptuous mound and help pull her into him. His other found the small of her back, and his fingers teased up and down a bit of her spine, tail bone to the wonderful spot between the shoulders. All the while, he kissed her breast, lips caressing and moistening her areola, tongue tenderly lapping at where her engorged nipple filled his mouth.

His favorite position, she knew. Her upon him, straddling him, holding his head to her breast so he could suckle upon her as she rode him. And she quivered as the pleasure of his lips around her nipple warmed her all the more, causing her insides to squeeze and milk at the hard girth within. Looking down, she admired the boy, his beautiful face, his enraptured expression as he switched breasts, and resumed suckling her with all the same need as before.

It took time to bring him to orgasm like this. Rather than letting a frantic few thrusts push him over the edge, she kept it slow so each twitch of his cock was met with a moment of respite, and a powerful squeeze of her pussy that rendered him frozen. And then she resumed with her slow, gentle, teasing motions, to work him toward orgasm all over again.

And when he did finally cum, the boy's kissing stopped, and he hugged her body tight as he set his face against her sternum. He managed a few glimpses up at her, each a candy of delight for her to snatch up, before his eyes closed, and he quivered with each spurt of cum that gushed into her awaiting insides.

The moment of bliss. She held him close, as close as she could, and caressed his hair as the boy filled her. She met each flex of his cock with a squeezing, milking clench of her insides, nudging her hips toward him, and pulling each wave of the thick fluid from him with expertise. The longer his orgasm, the more of his bliss and cum she could coax from his quivering body, the brighter her smile grew. He was hers, all hers.

She put her hands on his shoulders, and stood up with legs spread. Jack's eyes fell to stare between her thighs, and he moaned as thick drops of his cum spilled from her insides. But, for as much as she wished to delight in the glow, she needed release. Unable to resist any longer, she took his hand in hers, and guided it toward her pussy.

Jack needed little direction in such matters any longer. He slid his middle and ring finger into her, palm facing him, and curled his digits toward him. Sweet agony hit her as the boy pressed against her g-spot, and she held onto his shoulders as he fingered her. A glance down showed his cum was trickling down his fingers, knuckles, and onto his palm before sliding down his wrist. But soon it was mixed with her own juices as her pleasure rose.

“You’re soaked,” he said.

“I have spent the past hour teasing, pleasuring, dancing, and enjoying sex with my lover. Forgive a woman some arousal.” She grinned down at him, but even she felt some embarrassment over the fluids dripping down her thighs and the boy’s fingers. Soaked was an understatement.

And it only grew worse as the boy fingered her harder, and the waves of pleasure started to hit her. Holding onto his shoulders, she trembled and struggled to keep her legs from collapsing as her muscles squeezed down, and the bliss rolled up and down through her body. The waves of climax, each earning a shiver from her, each earning a little more of her fluids to leak onto Jack’s fingers, to squeeze on them until the boy fought against the tight, clenching walls to keep fingering her. But he continued to do so, drawing out her orgasm until she closed her eyes, leaned down, and set her forehead against Jack’s neck as she came. Sweet, delicious release.

As the orgasm started to settle, Jack’s touch grew softer. But, through the dozens of bouts of love making they had had, he knew to keep applying pressure, to keep drawing out more waves of bliss from her with a tender touch. Milk the waves of the after orgasm shocks, let them roll down her thighs into her toes, through her pelvis and up into her chest. She had taught Jack to lightly massage her insides during the blissful afterglow, and he did so, until she was leaning against his shoulder, her face pressing to the hard muscle of his lean body.

Once it had passed, Jack slipped his fingers from her, and she stood up tall, satisfied. A finger found the thong, and she slid the ridiculous — but fun — clothes back over her sex. Their sexual fluids would turn to a trace, a tiny hint of ash in moments, so little as to be unnoticeable.

“Done?” he said. “You don’t want more?”

“Done, for tonight. In our next bout, I do expect to be spoiled in return.” It was only fair, after all, that she be the subject of pleasure next time. She laughed and shook her head. Such thoughts, of trading pleasure like a currency, were also an old reflex from her past relationship, silly and infantile. “If that would please you.”

“You know it would.” He stood up to join her, and leaned in to hug her again, head against her collar. More affectionate than usual, perhaps.

“Are you worried?” she said.

“ ... yeah.”

“Do not be. When you visit the Primogen, I shall be Prince, and you shall be a neonate of the Invictus, with a great responsibility thrust onto his shoulders. Outside of the meeting room, you are my love.”

Jack nodded, took a deep breath, shook off his shoulders, and smiled up at her. “Well, that’s part of the reason I’m worried. Soon I have to visit the Prince, and I hear she can be a ruthless woman.”

She laughed, deep in her belly, and took a step back from Jack so she could brace her weight against his shoulder lest she fall. It was true.

Chapter 31

~~Jack~~

The meeting with the Invictus triumvirate went better than he expected. He told Julias first, about the werewolves, and then Julias insisted he tell the triumvirate as a whole; the problem was bigger than just him. So Jack scheduled a meeting to stand before the council, and like filing a report, detailed the issue with the werewolves.

Conveniently, he told no one he felt the werewolves might have been hunting Fiona. It'd have been an assumption, not enough evidence. And Fiona stuck around for a while when she visited that night; she was fun, and nice. Why would the wolves be hunting her?

Did Natasha tell the Prince though, that was the question. He wanted to leave Fiona out of it, and he didn't put it above the Invictus to throw Fiona to the wolves — literally — to keep the Uratha out of Dolareido. And he kind of liked her. He hoped Antoinette would like her too, or she was well within her right to do more than throw Fiona to the Uratha, she could just kill her herself.

He did tell the triumvirate that he wanted to introduce a newcomer to Dolareido though, a Begotten. It'd earned some groans from the three of them. Apparently they knew about such monsters, and none of them seemed excited at having one of them in the city. But none of them seemed overly concerned either, so that was good. He also left out the part that Damien and Fiona were friends of a sort. Didn't need to make that man's journey any harder.

A meeting with the Primogen though, he had no idea how that was going to go. Never done it, never wanted to do it. It was going to be his first meeting with the strongest Kindred of the city and he was already trying to figure out ways to cut corners on information for his own gain, for his friends' gain. One misstep and he was going to end up pissing off everyone. And yet he stood in front of the Elysium building with Fiona beside him, staring up at the glass tower, sighing.

How many times had he stood in front of this tower and smiled, excited to get inside, to talk to Antoinette and chat about music or life? Dozens. Now he was fidgeting, anxious, and dread was sitting in his stomach like rocks.

“Yeah, yeah I ... I don't know.”

“What's the worry?”

“I ... I'm dating the Prince.”

“ ... ye're what?”

“The Prince is my girlfriend ... we love each other.”

“Oh, that is nae something I expected. Damien said you stopped him from killing her — still very much in the mirk about all that by the way — but I didnae realize you two were an item.” Fiona grinned and bounced in front of him. “He said she was ancient.”

“She is.”

“And ye're very young. Young as me.”

“Yeah.”

“Well, ye love her. I'm guessing she's an intelligent, wise person?”

“ ... she is.”

Fiona shrugged and started to walk around him in circles. “Then what’s the problem?”

“I have to talk to her about city matters. I have to try and control a conversation about serious shit that has nothing to do with her and me, but it’s putting us against each other.”

“Against? I thought ye said the werewolves just wanted ye to be the middleman in their talks.”

The monster sat down on the steps of the tower, and stretched her arms over her head. Jack was in his typical Invictus business suit, but they had to find something for Fiona to wear; no way she’d be wearing jeans and a leather jacket to such a meeting. Natasha and Damien helped find her something a little less street, a little more business. Some gray business pants and a nice chestnut blouse with frilly cleavage. It looked good on the curvy creature.

“Yeah, you’re right, but I doubt things are going to go that smooth. I’m going to have to argue the wolves’ side, and then argue the Primogen’s side, and then her side.”

“I think ye’re making things bad before they’re bad. Besides, if ye’re the middleman, maybe ye can be a mediator? Ye’ll get to see both sides like ye said, so ye’ll be in a better position than anyone to stop shit from going crazy.”

Stop shit from going crazy. He laughed and set his face in his palm.

“My life has been one nonstop train of crazy since I was embraced, Fiona. I just ... was kind of hoping the train would stop for a while.”

Fiona hopped up, put an arm around his neck, and started to walk him toward the building.

“Sound like ye’re pretty happy with the Prince. Why Prince, anyway? Antoinette’s a lass, aye?”

“Old title Kindred have used for a long time. Not sure where it came from.” The Lancea et Sanctum records might, if Damien still had any, if Garry hadn’t destroyed it. “And we are very happy. It ... it’s fucking amazing, and I’m fucking terrified this is going to drive a wedge between us.”

“Ye trust her?”

“Yeah, a lot.”

“And ye ken she loves ye like ye love her?”

“Yeah.”

Fiona shook her head, frowned at him, and shook him a few times. “Then stop being a moron. Even if, for some silly reason, everything burns to the ground and ye’re stuck in the middle between wolves and vampires, yer relationship is the stuff of legends. Legends! Movies are made and books written about this sort of romance.” Despite being in the lobby of the Elysium tower, Fiona squeaked like an excited pig, a sort of squee sound, and jumped around a few times in a circle. “I can’t wait to meet her.”

Fiona reminded him of someone. His sister Mary maybe, only because she seemed to run with small romance ideas and explode them into grand tales. Mary had inherited all the enthusiasm and jovial romanticism. He’d inherited a sarcastic bite and realist mindset.

“Jacob and Garry will be there too,” he said. “You’re going to be in a room with a bunch of vampires, ages one hundred to five hundred. Ancient, hungry, and protective of their property. How can you be so excited?”

“Sorry, just how I deal. I get nervous, I get excited. Like skydiving.”

Jack felt his dead, withered stomach try and force up some nonexistent food. Jumping out of a plane was not something he could ever see himself getting excited about.

“You ok there Terry? Looking like you’re about to get bitten by a dog.” Chunk leaned over his desk and raised a brow at him as he walked by. “Got a girl with ya though, and ain’t she a cutie.”

Fiona raised a brow at the heavy, bald man sitting behind the front desk. There were some other guards sitting around too, working at their computers, tapping away at their keyboards — no idea what a guard did on a computer — while Chunk looked at the two creatures.

“Ye’re not too bad looking yerself,” she said, chuckling.

“The Prince won’t be too happy though,” Chunk said, “about you getting a girl.”

Yeah, cause that was the real concern, a miscommunication about a girl, not the horrors crawling into their lives.

“Friend of mine. Has the council meeting started?”

“Yeap. Just go right on to the top floor there, Mister Terry.”

If only an Invictus was calling him Mister, it’d have some real weight then. Mister Terry, like Mister Mire. Powerful, and buried in responsibilities. Halfway there.

Jack nodded, and continued walking to the elevators of the grand lobby. Each step heavy, and slow, dragging through mud and all the cold sludge of inevitability. As the guards resumed their work, each clop of his fancy shoes echoed, and each earned a small wince.

Fiona was fidgeting and bouncing behind him, glancing around and taking in the sights as best she could despite walking into the den of predators.

Come on Jack, you've walked this lobby hundreds of times, and you've talked with Antoinette hundreds of times. The Primogen are predators, yes, but their leader is your girlfriend, your love, not to mention Julias will be there too, and Fiona's done nothing to warrant any action against her. She hasn't given up the Masquerade, and she hasn't damaged the food supply too much. Calm down.

Or it wasn't Fiona he was genuinely worried about. The werewolves? He didn't know them, and as terrifying as the pack of wolves were — yep, terrifying, no getting around that description — he wasn't really worrying about them either. Not right now at least. His earlier night with Antoinette had settled his worries for a little while, insuring him this meeting would not affect them, but now, as he stepped onto the elevator with the Begotten, all his worries were coming back.

The whole situation reeked of impending struggles for their relationship. It was his first real relationship, and if he lost it, he didn't know what he'd do. The knot in his stomach grew, and he swallowed it down as the door closed. Everything was going to be fine, you're making mountains out of molehills.

You're not Tony.

---

“As you all know, I am sure, a series of visits to our city has occurred in a rather condensed timespan.” Antoinette sat in her chair, back straight, legs folded, arms on the chair arms. Like she was sitting in a throne, giving her decree. “And I am sure I am not the only one to find this both unusual, and unnerving.”

Jack gulped, and looked around the room. Julias glanced his way a few times, even offered a tiny smile, but otherwise sat the same as everyone else did, poker faces and steel bodies. The tallest room in the building, its gigantic wall window, the glass table, huge and impressive chairs; it was all very imposing. Jack could not have felt more uncomfortable standing a bit off to the side, near the Invictus triumvirate, and trying his best to not tremble. Fiona was outside the room, to be summoned later.

If Antoinette had had any feelings for him before now, they were gone. She looked his way every so often, and an ice glare froze him to the core. Never seen her red eyes do that, not ever. Sure, when dealing with Lucas her gaze had turned to fire capable of incinerating mountains, but ice was new, and painful.

“Yeah, it’s pretty fucked up,” Garry said. He wore some jeans and a black shirt; Fiona was overdressed in comparison. “Not gonna lie, I can’t imagine it’s a coincidence either. Wolves and monsters coming to Dolareido at the same time?”

Julias nodded and tapped his fingers on the glass table in a quiet rhythm. “But Avery and Azamel have no connection to each other.”

Jacob wiped off some nonexistent dust from the shoulder of his robes — Christ he looked like a necromancer or something — and leaned in. “We alright talking about these issues in front of the kid? Why’s he here?”

“Jack’s purpose will be explained momentarily.” Maria mirrored Jacob, leaning in before resting her elbows against the glass. Power pose. “In matters concerning the Uratha, Jack is welcome to what we know.”

“Is he now?” Jacob, brow raised and looking straight at him, leaned back in his chair, hooked his fingers behind his head, and smiled at him. Joker smile and a bandage across eyeless eye sockets was not a pleasant thing to have staring at you. “Everything?”

“What you wish to share.” Michael leaned back in his chair and rubbed his chin. “Out of respect for you Jacob, we haven’t brought up the details of the last visit from Avery.”

Respect for Jacob. Jack squinted one of his eyes a little and watched Michael, watched where his eyes went, what he did with his fingers, how his posture changed. It certainly wasn’t a happy respect, more like a begrudging one. And Jacob returned it with a nod, a begrudging thank you.

“Indeed. We do not want a repeat of last time,” Antoinette said. “Avery is now the leader of her own pack, and has returned in pursuit of prey. What that prey is we are not sure, but we do believe it may have something to do with the old tunnels in Devil’s Corner. We know the tunnels are in need of maintenance, but with the unusual activity in said tunnels, none of us have sent personnel to repair them.” The Prince frowned, brushed her hair back over her ear, and tilted her head a little as she looked down at the table with furrowed brow. “Naturally, wolves, spiders, and monsters have decided to nest there.”

Silence hung heavy on the room, and each Primogen looked to the other with slow glances and tensed shoulders.

“Surely this won’t be the same as last time,” Julias said.

“Indeed.” Maria motioned for Jack to step forward, and he did with a snap to his step like a good little soldier. “Avery is not Simon. She is open to a degree of communication. A small degree, but a degree nonetheless. She has chosen Master Terry to be an intermediary between the Primogen and the Uratha.”

Jacob burst into laughter, and slammed both his palms down against the glass table. No one reacted, except for Jack. Jack jumped a foot in the air, and winced as every set of eyes glanced his way.

“Avery picked a fucking ambassador?”

Julias shook his head and dismissed the notion with a sweep of his hand. “Master Terry will be an intermediary to help facilitate communication, and nothing more. Not a negotiator, not a mediator.”

“The fuck is the point then?” the eyeless said

Michael growled and looked Jacob’s way. “Do you think it would end well, having Avery and her pack in our presence again?”

“Doesn’t bother me.” Garry shrugged, and hooked his hands behind his head. Playing nonchalant, pretending to be comfortable with the situation maybe.

“Yes, we understand Avery visited you recently,” Michael said. “Would you aid those animals just to be a thorn in our side, Carthian?”

It was certainly a possibility, Jack realized. If Garry was willing to side with the Uratha — whatever that would entail — then the Invictus would have a problem. Everyone would have a problem.

But Garry shrugged. “I wasn’t happy with how things went last time either, but admit fault where fault is. If everyone had simply stepped aside and let the dogs do their thing, less people would have died.”

Good god would one of them share the details already. Jack couldn’t ask it, Jacob would probably kill him if he did, but the tiptoeing on the subject earned fidget after fidget, eye twitch after eye twitch.

“To prevent communications from escalating to such rancor, that is why Avery has chosen my childe.” Julias smirked and turned to look at Jack. “Master Terry has a way with people. I think you’ll find him a much better point of contact than any of the wolves, and they will be more receptive to him than they were to any of us.”

Jacob snorted and grit his teeth; didn't seem too convinced. "So if I want to tell Avery to drown in shit and vomit, I have to go through this kid?"

"Yes." Antoinette, sighing and tapping her fingers on the table, leaned her weight onto an elbow on the chair arm, and her eyes shifted between Jack and Jacob with scrutiny. "I would prefer such requests be done only during Primogen meetings, but ultimately, all that Master Terry learns and says in this matter will be the domain of us all, in or outside of our meetings."

Holy shit. He was going to have elders visiting his apartment or interrupting his Invictus work, so he could deliver messages to the wolves. Shit just getting worse by the minute.

"Master Terry." Jacob, lip raised in a snarl, leaned in over the table far and deep, and cocked a brow in his direction. "So, what do the wolves have to say? They just want their hunting grounds or what?"

The room went silent as all eyes — and Jacob's gaze — fell upon him. Heavy stone tied around his neck pulled him to the floor. Claws dug into his chest and opened his insides for all the beasts to stare. Even Antoinette, love of his life, was staring at him and waiting for him to say one thing wrong, one thing out of line, one thing that'd burn the situation to the ground, rubble and embers.

Kindred were paranoid creatures. He tried to convince himself he was overreacting, that they hadn't said anything disastrous yet; and they hadn't. But he knew there were layers to each sentence, most he didn't understand, but some he did. If the elders had a problem with the wolves, something worth arguing about, then it was a problem that cost lives.

He looked each elder in the eyes for a fleeting moment, did his best to hold their gaze, before moving onto the next, and gulped on nothing. If there was one way he was going to die, it'd be pissing off every elder in his home town, lover included.

“Nothing yet, my Prince and Primogen. Only that we are to stay out of the tunnels in Devil’s Corner, and that all communication is go through myself. They will perform their hunt, inform me of their actions, and I am to explain them to you.”

“And if I said I wanted someone else?” Garry smacked his chops and glared at Jack, hard. If he’d started barking, it wouldn’t have been surprising.

“The Uratha said it was non negotiable, Lord Tones.” Maybe a lofty title of address would help the bitter truth pill go down easier. Or some peanut butter for the mongrel.

For the love of fucking god do not grin at that image.

But Garry laughed and shook his head. “Course she did. But, Maria’s right, Avery isn’t Simon, so maybe things will go a bit smoother this time? Intermediary is a step in the right direction. Maybe choosing an Invictus was a bad idea, but, I’ll give this a whirl and see how it goes.”

Jack lowered his head in a nod, and waited. The tension in the room seemed to lessen a little, and where everyone had looked ready to pounce with their leaning forward postures and hard-set teeth, the elders — and Julias too — started to lean back in their chairs and get comfortable again.

“Master Terry does have another point of business, unrelated,” Maria said, “but important.”

The Prince waved a hand for him, and Jack stepped a little closer toward her.

“Yes,” Antoinette said. “As if God were bored and seeking to humor himself, Begotten have begun sprouting in Dolareido again. It may be because of the passing of three of our elders, that we look weak and these wolves and monsters have decided to take advantage. It may simply be a case of bad timing. But Begotten now walk our streets once more.”

The whole room sighed. Not the same oh-fuck-not-again sigh bringing up the Uratha stirred, but a there’s-a-fly-in-my-food sigh.

“Azamel has returned,” Antoinette said, “but she is not Master Terry’s concern. This concerns a newcomer. And while all new Kindred are to be introduced to myself, I believe it is to the benefit of us all that new Begotten are introduced to the Primogen as a whole.”

Oh, an olive branch, maybe? She was the Prince, it was her job to keep everyone satisfied, or in line. She opted for diplomacy normally, far as Jack could tell, but he was sure she had to use force to get the position. He should ask her about it sometime.

“Master Terry, please fetch Fiona,” Antoinette said.

He nodded and stepped out into the hall. No doubt the Primogen already knew what he was doing. Not like they didn’t sense her from so close. So as he brought the small woman into the meeting room, they all glared at her like she was a pestering insect.

“Good morning!” she said, big smile on her face, hand waving. “Glad to meet ye.”

If looks could kill, Fiona would have exploded in a glorious display of bones, blood, and organs as each Primogen and the Prince glared at her. It was enough to get her to stop waving, but her smile only shifted from nervous to anxious.

“This is Fiona Young,” Jack said, “a fairly recent arrival to Dolareido. In her ignorance, she began to hunt kine without permission. She is responsible for the disappearances in Devil’s Corner.” He escorted her to stand before them in the most open section of the table near the Prince. He bowed, she didn’t; until he kicked her in the side of the foot, and she managed a nervous chuckle before bowing as well.

“Great, another pain in the ass. How old are you girl?” Garry said. “How long you been a monster?”

So much for proper introductions.

“About a year.” She stood up and, again, smiled. Just her way of dealing with nervousness, like she said.

It wasn’t just her though. The hard tension in the air was gone, but everyone was looking at Fiona with a little more scrutiny than Jack had figured. If the Uratha were here, he was sure they’d be looking at the wolves with a mix of anger and distrust, but with Fiona, they were looking at her with ... disgust?

“A year?” Antoinette turned her chair to face the Scottish woman, and looked her up and down. “You have a large appetite for someone your age.”

“Uh, sorry. I ... I can try and eat less.”

“See that you do,” Maria said.

Antoinette frowned at Fiona, but after a few moments of silence, sighed and let the frown fade. “What Maria means is that we have spent decades building Dolareido as a place Kindred can live more comfortably than other cities. I crafted this city for that purpose from its infancy. And Begotten have a habit of drawing attention we do not want.”

“Attention?” Fiona said.

McDonald groaned, loud enough to grab Fiona’s attention. “Yes, attention. Vampires and werewolves, and monsters, are known quantities in the world. You can find mentions of us in texts old and new. For Kindred, we preserve the Masquerade, the secret of our existence. If you had been Kindred, we would have punished you for your gross negligence.”

Jack winced. Fiona whistled, and squirmed.

“Sorry,” she said. “I ... I had nae idea.”

“And,” McDonald continued, “our reports suggest the disappearances have mostly occurred in the past four months. How long have you been in Dolareido?”

“About ten months ... sir. But, uh, about four months ago, the um ... the dream changed. Less oppressive. Less ... cruel. So I got a little comfier when the changed happened, and I guess I let my appetite run away with me.”

“The dream changed?”

Everyone turned to look at Jacob. The man had an intrigued expression, if Jack was reading his face right; never easy with the bandage tied around his head.

“Aye. When I first came ‘ere, dark chains cut through much of the dream, and my lair was ... uncomfortable. But something happened, nae idea what, and the chains went away. Been happy times since then, since—”

“Since Viktor and Tony died. It sickens me to know those two affected such things,” Antoinette said, her turn for the intrigued expression. Everyone mirrored it soon after, throwing glances each other’s way, and then settling on Fiona. “We have had little contact with your kind outside a few encounters, Begotten, and they have not been ... good, for the city. I am sure you will come to discover on your own, when Azamel inevitably talks with you.” Venom dripped from her voice.

“Who is Azamel?” Fiona said.

The Prince frowned and leaned back in her chair as she looked Fiona up and down a few more times, analyzing her body language no doubt. “There are several other Begotten in the city. I cannot prevent you from interacting with them. But know that Azamel has been a problem for us before, and I cannot guarantee your life if you befriend her.”

“ ... my life?”

“What the Prince means,” Julias said, “is that Dolareido is run by Kindred and the Kindred are protected by our laws. Begotten are not. If a Kindred decides to end you because they want to, for any reason at all, you can’t protest using our laws. All you can do is hope a different Kindred claims sanctuary for you. Understood?”

Second class citizen. Jack winced again, and looked at Julias. His sire did a good job of avoiding eye contact, but when Jack looked to the Prince, she caught his glance. And twitched. Just a little, just on the lip, just enough to change her frown into something less, before she grit her teeth and looked down. She’d thrown Fiona a death threat, and Julias had backed it up. They were putting her in her place and she hadn’t done anything besides eat a few abusive bastards. The fuck did they have against Begotten?

Fiona nodded, sighed, and squirmed a little in her shoes. But she still had a smile, and an edge of a grin growing on it too.

“I understand.”

“Good.” Antoinette motioned for the door with her hands before looking back to the Primogen. “Thirteen kills since your arrival is far too many for Dolareido, despite the city’s population. Control your hunger, or we will control it for you. You two may go.”

Jack put his hand on Fiona’s shoulder for a passing moment, and the two of them walked out of the devil’s den. He glanced over his shoulder, but neither Julias or Antoinette looked his way, their gazes locked on the table. The others didn’t seem to mind looking at him though, Garry with a sneer, and the two Invictus with something close to a dismissing eye roll. Jacob though, he had a small smile on his face, and his eyeless gaze followed them out of the room.

Once the door was closed behind them, Fiona opened her mouth, but Jack shook his head.

“When we’re outside,” he whispered, barely audible.

Down the elevator, passed the lobby and Prince’s servants, and back outside. The warm night air and the beautiful Elysium garden maze. The familiar sights of suits and sexy dresses walking the streets, jewelry on display.

So much better than being surrounded by that pack of angry, surly, barking animals.

“What the fuck was that?” he said.

“I dinnae ken. I ... I felt they hated me.”

“Yeah, I got that impression too, like a brick to the face. I expected my night to suck, Fiona, but not because of you. Figured the wolves would be the main source of tension, and they were, but ... but with you, it was ... they really didn’t like you. I ... I have to apologize for them, cause that was ... I can’t...”

“It’s alright. I’m sure they have their reasons, aye? This Azamel might be a real bastard.”

“Yeah, maybe. But it doesn’t justify their behavior. They treated you like a...” Like a fucking bug infestation. He grit his teeth, and started walking.

Didn’t get far before he looked back up at the tower. On the tallest floor, he could see movement. Someone standing in front of the glass then, and that someone had to be Antoinette; no one else would get up in her meeting room.

He frowned up at her, and kept walking. Maybe he was overreacting. They were just protecting the city after all, and being cautious. And assholes. He’d expected Garry and Maria and Michael to be dicks, and they were, and he expected Antoinette to be cold, and she was. But Julias too? And Jacob was the only one who didn’t seem displeased about the situation.

“Hey,” Fiona said, “they said there’d been thirteen disappearances in Devil’s Corner?”

“Yeah.”

“Weird. Only killed twelve.”

He raised a brow. “That is weird.”

“Could be a mistake right? Coincidence?”

~~Julias~~

“ ... she isn’t Azamel,” Julias said. “We didn’t have to threaten her like that.”

“Yes we did.” MacDonald threw him a growl. “You didn’t have to deal with her, Mister Mire. Honors did. You want to clean up the mess of a hungry monster?”

“I’ve dealt with draugr before, Mister MacDonald.”

“It is not the same.” Antoinette got up and walked over to the window, a loud sigh escaping her once she looked down. Probably watching Jack leave. Whole conversation couldn’t have been easy for her. “A Kindred surrendered to the beast is a dangerous creature, yes. A Begotten that is hungry is...”

Julias nodded. “Truncater tower and a couple nearby buildings were destroyed in the confrontation.”

Jacob laughed, a hard snort of a chuckle that earned frowns from everyone. “The buildings weren’t destroyed in the conflict, they started the conflict, Mister Mire. Azamel got too hungry for her own good, and lost control.”

“ ... she destroyed four buildings?”

“In a single attack.” Antoinette paced back and forth in front of the glass, hands behind her back, eyes still on the window and below. “As I am sure Viktor Honors explained to you, Azamel Venastroth hungers for power. And I do not mean in the classic sense. She once used the word tyrant to describe the hunger, the need to be a tyrant.” Snarling, the Prince dragged her nails across the glass, until the Primogen all winced as her nails began to cut into it.

The Prince got angry all the time, but she never showed it. Always steel, always cold and calculating; at least, during Primogen meetings. But she was visibly angry, shoulders raised and hands gripping into fists as if choking someone. Not cold steel this time, all fire, like Beatrice. With Triss, he could hug her and force her to calm down; Antoinette would rip him into literal shreds in a second if he tried to console her with even a single word.

“She did that alone? That quickly?” Julias leaned back in his chair and brought a finger to his chin. “I underestimated the threat.”

“Alder Honors did not want the true threat Azamel posed to be known, Mister Mire,” Maria said. “She was not our enemy. Just a ... volatile presence.”

He sighed and rubbed his forehead. Just when he thought he knew the details of things, just when he thought he was getting a feel for what sorts of secrets Viktor had been keeping from him.

“What about this Fiona?” he said. “Not nearly as old as Azamel.”

Jacob clicked his teeth and leaned in. “Yes, but ... you all felt it. We’ve dealt with Begotten before, young ones like Athalia. This Fiona creature was not like Athalia.”

No. No she was not.

“But,” Antoinette said, “it is not the monsters that trouble me. They are but pests in my city. It is the wolves howling at the door that concern me. Us.”

Jacob nodded, and his fingers tapped on the table a few times with some weight. “Your boy toy is gone. Sure you want to talk about the wolves without him here?”

Antoinette turned, walked to the table, and set her hands down on the glass as she glared at the old Nosferatu. “Did it look like I treated him with bias or favoritism, Jacob?”

The eyeless man smirked, until Garry spoke up.

“No, it didn’t. Thank you for that.”

“I don’t think Jacob was intentionally insulting you,” Michael said. “Just ... being Jacob.”

It was true. Jacob could talk like Garry sometimes, and the reversal was a sight to behold.

The Prince sighed, but nodded with time, and sat back down to join them. “We do not need Terry here to speak of the Uratha, only if we wish to communicate with the Uratha. As we all know, the wolves will tear through whatever they perceive as a barrier, and that includes us.”

Michael shook his head. “We could take them in a fight.”

“Perhaps,” Julias said, “if we knew when and where they were coming, if we armed ourselves with silver weaponry, if we brought five Kindred for each Uratha.” And even then, they’d lose those Kindred in the fight. “But, if Avery is trying to communicate this time, at least somewhat, perhaps we can avoid violence entirely.”

The room looked at him like he’d grown an extra head.

“Hey,” Garry said, hands raised like he was surrendering, “of everyone in this room, I hate the werewolves the least. But I know a storm coming when I see one.”

Storm coming. Only storm coming was everyone looking for one and making things worse than they had to.

“With no provocation of any kind, they nearly killed Miss Vola,” the Prince said. “Simply because she was in the area of their hunt, she was ripped open and torn into. They chased her down like hungry wolves.”

Julias winced. He had a hard time imagining Natasha being eviscerated. Girl had spirit, and a major brain in that very tiny body, but being ripped open by Uratha claws was not something he'd be able to deal with well, let alone her. Maria knew it too, and the ghost woman plucked at one of her fingernails with each mention of her previous subordinate.

“... that said,” Antoinette continued, “they also let her feed to heal herself, once they captured her. And, once they had found their desired intermediary, they let her go.”

“Power move,” Michael said.

But Julias shook his head. “Maybe if they had known it was Natasha when they chased her down. Did they?”

“No. Natasha tells me they suspected she was the thing they hunted.”

“And what is it they're hunting?” Jacob tapped his finger, making a ding of fingernail to glass, and threw his masked gaze at Antoinette.

“Again, Jacob?” She snarled at him, a real snarl that Julias felt in his throat. “You know all that I know. They hunt things from outside our realm. If I had more to share, I would.”

Would she? She said it with a touch of inflection, the sort she would normally abuse to imply something specifically. This time she said the words like a younger Kindred might when lying. Julias looked at her for a moment, watched her; her gaze was solid and her body language unwavering.

Something was going on.

“Jacob,” she said, “do not do anything reckless. Avery has survived all this time, and for her kind, you know she will be strong.”

Jacob offered another snarl, and left.

Antoinette leaned back in her chair, and set the fingers of one hand against her forehead. No doubt analyzing the possibility Jacob might do something rash and irrational.

“I feel for the guy,” Garry said. “You telling me you wouldn’t want to kill Avery if you were in his shoes?”

The three Invictus nodded in unison, but Antoinette shook her head instead.

“If I were Jacob, and I had loved a creature such as Minerva for that long, only to lose her? I would not kill Avery, Mister Tones, I would destroy her. I would burn her world and force her to watch. And that is what scares me, that Jacob may be willing to destroy much of what we hold dear to pursue that vengeance.” She leaned in again, and looked at each Primogen with hard-set eyes. “Watch him closely, Primogen. I do not expect you to betray his trust, or to favor mine, but...”

The Invictus nodded in unison, again, along with Garry as well. Much as Jacob was a pain in their ass, they didn’t want him dead.

Funny how a force to unify against could bring out the best in people.

---

“That could have gone better,” Jack said.

“Maybe.” Julias shrugged and leaned back on his couch. Jack had called him after the meeting, and had come over to his mansion to talk with him about it. Kid didn’t seem very happy.

“Maybe? The werewolves thing, yeah that went about as well as I could have hoped. No one’s happy about Avery or the Uratha, I get that. But Fiona? The fuck did she do? Worse she’s done is killed a few too many people. Abusive people, I might add. Seems to be the quirk of how she feeds.”

Julias was sitting, but Jack was pacing, hands up in the air and waving

“How long you known this girl?”

“A couple days.”

“You trust her that quickly?”

“Damien trusts her.”

Julias raised a brow. The hell was it about Damien that managed to affect everyone so much? Even Julias had been affected. Not that he brought up the Lancea et Sanctum thing at the last meeting; he didn’t have a death wish.

“Even assuming Damien and Fiona can both be trusted, she’s not the first Begotten to sneak—”

“She didn’t sneak, she came here in genuine ignorance.”

“Ok, fine, an honest mistake on her part. But Begotten like her have, both in ignorance and on purpose, caused problems. We preserve the Masquerade Jack, and we destroy things that threaten it. With the werewolves, it seems people who witness them have a tendency to go a bit crazy, so at least with the wolves the chances of a witness report is minimal.”

“ ... they go crazy? What?”

“Never heard of it? Moonstruck? Some people just go a bit nuts if they’ve been out and saw things in the woods? Uratha have that effect on people if they’re transformed and people see them.”

“Whoa. And—”

“Doesn’t affect Kindred, or Begotten I imagine. Lucky for the Begotten; they have enough trouble as it is.”

Jack, calming down and pacing less, sighed and hopped onto the couch next to him.

“I don’t get it, what’s the problem?”

“Ever heard the fable the Scorpion and the Frog?”

“What about it?”

Julias shook his head. Kid just wasn’t getting it. But then, Julias was doing a piss poor job explaining the problem.

“Ask a Kindred to stop drinking blood, and they’ll say no. But they’ll at least try and find a different way to get it. Long as we get it from a fresh living human, all the other details are meaningless. Not so with the Begotten. Some of them feed in ... in strange ways, Jack. You say Fiona feeds on abusive people?”

“Yeah, she punishes them. Says she needs to make them know they’re being punished for being abusive. Which is pretty damn strange.”

“Just one of many ways these monsters feed, Jack. Some of them feed by collecting people’s valuables, be it secrets or treasures. Some of them feed on fear. Some of them feed on human hearts. Some of them feed on destroying a person’s power.”

“Destr—”

“Azamel. I want you to avoid her at all costs Jack. Viktor told me the same. She feeds on crushing people’s lives, taking away their control. We don’t want her in this city.”

“Damn ... why’s she here then? Why isn’t Antoinette giving her the boot?”

“She’s never attacked a Kindred, and never broken the Masquerade even with her occasional destructive tendencies. Getting rid of her is doable, just difficult, dangerous, and possibly not worth the risk.”

“Difficult for Antoinette and the sheriff? I mean, I saw them both in action Julias, I—”

“Yeah, Jack, even for the two of them.”

There, that put an image in the kid’s head. Jack opened his mouth to say something, but looked down. He tried again, eyes rising, hand raising, but he stopped again.

“ ... damn.”

“Can you understand my concern about Fiona?”

“But she’s barely older than me, in monster years.” Jack raised his hands to quote the word monster, like it were some sort of title that didn’t fit, like it didn’t describe the Begotten to a tee.

“There’s something about her, Jack. I remember meeting Athalia when she was a new Begotten, I got an impression for what they felt like. Fiona was different. Can’t put my finger on it, don’t know what or why, just know it was different. I’m not going to tell you to avoid her too, she seems nice enough, just be careful, ok?”

“Yeah, ok.” Sighing, Jack leaned back into the couch as Julias did. “So, the werewolves.”

“Mmm?”

“I know Jacob has an issue with them. But everyone seems to dance around the subject.”

“ ... you should ask him.”

“You really telling me to go talk to Jacob?”

Heh, good point. “Better than me telling you myself. You—”

The door knocked. That stupid, massive knocker that shook the whole damn building. With a groan, Julias got up and headed down the stairways to the main entrance of his mansion, Jack behind him. Beatrice wasn't supposed to be visiting today, but maybe she was trying to surprise him? Smiling his best I-love-you smile, he opened the door.

“ ... Jacob?”

“That happy to see me?” Laughing, Jacob poked him the chest. “From the tone of your voice Mister Mire, someone's dancing on my grave.” The old bastard smirked, and stepped in. Least he was wearing some normal looking clothes; some black pants and a loose brown jacket was better than the robes he liked. “Ah, Master Terry, how was your first meeting with the Primogen? We can be right sullen dicks, can't we?”

Julias winced and looked back to his childe. Jack had walked down to join him, but was probably regretting it now, standing before Jacob and Jacob having no issues walking up to the boy and getting into his personal space.

“Julias.”

A woman's voice. Julias looked outside again, and tilted his head.

“ ... Jennifer.”

“Sorry about Jacob being a jackass. He wanted to talk about the dogs.” Jennifer, winking at him with all the subtlety of a catcall, stepped into his mansion. Dressed in a power suit and a skirt, she drifted around the mansion’s main lobby, and whistled as she looked up at the high ceilings and grand drapes.

Where the hell did she get a suit? He’d doubted a witch knew how to put one on, let alone where to steal a good one. But, it was a damn good suit, and she wore it with practiced ease.

“Elder Jacob.” Jack offered the man a bow, but Jacob laughed and nudged the kid back up with a few fingers to the shoulder.

“So you’re the middleman in this zoo, eh kid?” The Nosferatu looked up at the walls like his witch did, before he sat down—on the stairway. “And you’ve made friends with an unusual monster. Look at you, getting stuck in shit no matter where you step.”

Seeing Jacob get chummy with his childe set Julias on edge. What a way with words the old snake had.

“There does seem to be some dangerous people coming to Dolareido, Elder Jacob, that ... I keep stumbling into.”

Kid managed to keep a steady voice as he turned to watch the old man. Never easy. Jacob was as old as Antoinette, and being around him always fired Julias’s fight-or-flight reflex, let alone Jack’s.

“For what reason do I owe the honor of—”

“Oh stow the niceties, Julias. I’m not here on official business. I’m here cause I want to talk about the werewolves.”

Sounded like official business. “Couldn’t wait for the next Primogen meeting?”

“Prince said herself we can come to Jack. I knew he’d be here, after that shit show, to talk about the Begotten I imagine.” The old bastard laughed and shook his head a few times, like a condescending parent. “That Fiona was a cute little thing wasn’t she? Really liked the accent.”

Right, right, it was going to be like this, Jacob dancing around whatever information he was trying to get. Never direct. Probably wanted Avery dead, but it wasn’t like Jack would have any information to help with that. Then what angle was Jacob aiming for?

“I like her,” Jack said, arms folded across his chest, on guard.

Julias came to stand beside his childe, while Jennifer seemed content to walk up the stairs past Jacob, and start exploring. The mansion held nothing that she’d want to steal or pry into, but she looked intrigued nonetheless, eyes scanning the walls and paintings and fortune in meaningless furniture.

“What’s she like?” Jacob said.

Jack looked up at Julias before Jacob again. “Thought you wanted to talk about the werewolves?”

“Aren’t I?” the Nosferatu said. Jack flinched. Kid was doing good standing up to the fucking snake, but something Jacob said managed to break his composure. “Not like you need to be a genius to realize there’s a connection. Fiona starts indulging her appetite when Viktor and Tony die. Understandable. Her kind have a good sense for the predators in their area, and if two of the major ones die, she’d naturally feel more comfortable eating more. A few months later, werewolves are in our city, hunting something.”

“Well,” Jennifer said, leaning over a railing above them, “there’s always the chance of coincidence.”

Jacob snorted and looked up at his fellow witch. “You seriously believe that?”

“Are you suggesting the werewolves are hunting Fiona?” Julias said. “Why would she be their prey?”

“... what is their usual prey?” Everyone turned to look at Jack, and the young Ventrue met each of their gazes with something close to a frown. “I’ve been kept in the dark about this, but it seems pretty damn important. The wolves won’t tell me, the Invictus won’t tell me, the Primogen won’t tell me, and now I’m expected to be an intermediary for a bunch of dangerous beasts without even knowing what they’re after.”

“Tell you if I knew,” Jennifer said, still above them, still drifting around and admiring Julias’s decor. “Jacob figures only person who knows exactly what they hunt is Antoinette, but she denies knowing the details.”

“Really?” Jack blinked at Julias, and turned around a bit to face him, stepping closer to Jacob in the process. “Kind of figured the triumvirate knew their motivations at least.”

Julias’s turn to wince. “They hunt ... we’re not sure on the details. It’s something ... abnormal. Jacob might know more.”

Jacob lowered his head to look back at Julias, and Julias’s wince turned into a quiet smirk. No reason Julias couldn’t turn Jacob’s manipulation of the dialogue back on him. All’s fair.

And the look on the man’s face was perfect. Even with the bandage covering his eyes, his jaw clenched and his teeth clicked as they grit and ground. Julias knew better than to play with fire, to piss off his blatant superiors, his elders, but the damn witch really got under his skin.

“I don’t have the same knowledge on the situation as the Prince,” he said. “The talks between her and Simon didn’t end well, but only she knows what was said in that room. I assume Simon is dead if Avery’s running her own pack now. But ... but the wolves don’t hunt things of the world.”

“Not of the world?” Jack rubbed his buzzed head, and stepped closer to the witch. “ ... that’s the most ambiguous thing I’ve ever heard.”

Julias laughed. Kid was growing balls. Jennifer chuckled too, before disappearing into the hall of his mansion.

“Well, that’s part of the reason I came here to talk, Jack.” Jacob leaned forward, elbows on his knees, and stared ahead at the boy. “I want to know what they’re hunting.”

“I don’t know what they’re hunting. They wouldn’t tell me.”

“And Fiona, what do you think of my suspicion, that she and the wolves are connected somehow?”

“ ... there may be a connection, but I don’t know what it is. We don’t know what the wolves hunt, so I can’t piece together a hypothesis.” Jack took another step toward the ancient beast, and lowered his arms from his chest. “And if I knew, why would I tell you?”

Well. Damn.

Silence hung on the walls like ice, and Julias forced himself to stare at Jacob as the old man stared at Jack. Didn’t need eyes to show the frustration on his face, the annoyance with the muscles in his neck bulging and his fingers curling the air like weaving thread.

“ ... you going home anytime soon kid?”

Julias stepped in until he was beside Jack again. “You threatening my childe?”

“No, no.” Jacob took a long, slow breath, put up his hands, stood up, and walked off the stairs. “I wanted to talk to Jack in private.”

Jack blinked, and glanced between the witch and his sire. “Me?”

“You.”

“... um, I was ... but ... uh...”

“Jacob,” Julias said, “I don’t—”

“I’m serious Mire, I won’t hurt him, just wanted to talk to him alone. He’s neck deep in shit and I happen to know a thing or two about this particular flavor of shit.”

True that. Julias glanced between Jack and Jacob, and looked for any hesitation or worry. Jack dripped of both, but nodded to him, and stepped forward toward the door.

“Ok,” the kid said.

“Excellent. No worries Jack, Julias, just looking for ... some common ground.” Jacob saluted, stepped out the door, and waited for Julias’s childe to follow.

God damn the kid was getting tougher by the second. Jack peeked over his shoulder back at Julias, smiled, gulped, and walked out into the city night with one of the two oldest Kindred in the city. Kid had a knack for making friends; funny that it never manifested until he died.

“Guess it’s just you and me now.”

Julias raised a brow and looked up the stairs. Jennifer had returned, a smile on her lips and her fingers sliding along the rail of the grand stairway as she descended.

“Jennifer ... I’m afraid I don’t know your last name.”

“It was Darla, back when I used it. What use does a witch have for it?” Confident smile, a smile he knew all too well as she finished her hip-swaying descent of the stairs to stand before him.

“I suppose the Circle doesn’t keep records do they?”

“No. We remember our deeds and actions, not titles.” Jennifer, looking him up and down, started to circle him in a slow walk, each step specific and exaggerated. “You, we remember as the man who survived Viktor and Tony’s squabble, survived the purge, survived the werewolves the first time they came, and survived Azamel’s hunger.”

He didn’t follow her with his head, but did with his eyes once she was in front of him again. Woman never stopped smiling, but it was becoming more of a sly grin as time went on.

“The other Primogen did as well.”

“Ah, but they were older, and had to deal with those out of a necessity for their positions. You were just a neonate when Azamel first arrived, no? And a young ancillae when Simon and Avery stuck their claws in our affairs. All before my time.” One of her hands reached out, and started to trace a finger along his shoulders as she circled him a second time. “And do not worry for Jack. Jacob does truly only wish to speak to him about our new troubles.”

“I think that’s reason enough for worry.”

“Ha. Jacob is a bastard isn’t he? A manipulative, smart bastard. But you should trust him more. He has the Kindred’s interest at heart.”

“Forgive me if I feel differently, specifically in the context of Avery.” The desire for revenge could turn anyone into an obsessed, selfish villain.

“ ... he still hasn’t told me about what happened with Avery,” she said, and she sat down on the couch with a sigh. Comfortable getting comfortable, with all the confidence of a Ventrue. Different from Jack, a Ventrue with tenacity but without the confidence. Not yet, at least.

“Horrible things happened, Kindred died, and Jacob suffered a terrible, personal blow.” Julias matched Jennifer’s poker face, and sat down beside her. “So we don’t talk about it. If you ask him, he might tell you.”

Jennifer put up her hands and shook her head before settling them in her lap. “All I need to know is that he dislikes the wolves. I don’t need to get on his bad side.”

“ ... why are you here, Jennifer?”

“Figured you knew.” She folded a leg over the other, and twisted on the couch to rest an elbow along its back, fingers to her chin and nudging her lips. A seductive pose, complete with a batting of the eyelashes. “We both have a common interest.”

“Yes, Beatrice tells me you’ve grown quite affection toward her. Color me jealous.”

“Jealous?” Chuckling, Jennifer slid a little closer to him, close enough so the leg folded over the other nudged her shoe against his leg.

He didn’t move. “Yes, I am. She tells me the Circle of the Crone have no desire for privacy, or need for doors.”

“True. We have little care for barriers about things like sex. We all enjoy our ghouls or meals in clear view of each other.”

Smirk. “Yes, but you don’t enjoy each other.”

“ ... oh, I see.” She looked away, and down at her foot where she bounced her leg lightly on the other. “It’s that I am Kindred, that’s the problem.”

“You could say that ... You ever been in love, Jennifer? Before or after your embrace?”

“Puppy love?”

“No, lasting love. Ever been in a long term relationship?”

“No,” she said, voice once crisp and clear, now quietening and lightly wavering.

“I have, before I was embraced. I know what it’s like to be in love, Miss Darla, deep love, the sort that’d last a life time. Even had the sort of marriage used as an ideal by wedding planner companies, to reel couples in.” He leaned forward, elbows on his knees, and sighed as he looked down. “I know what it feels like to have to let that love go.”

“ ... you were married when Viktor embraced you.”

“Yes.” And the whole conversation was dragging his mind through the memories like he’d been tied to a horse and drawn, each memory cutting him open, rocks in the road. He just smiled, and let the pain pass, like it always did. Let her face fade with a century of experiences to bury her.

“Was it a choice for you?”

“No. Viktor forced it during the first World War.”

“ ... you did not embrace your wife?” Jennifer raised a brow and frowned at him.

“Almost. One night, I nearly broke into her room and turned her, but I didn’t have permission to sire a childe; I’d just be dooming us both. And ... and I’m not sure I’d have wanted this life for her, Jennifer.”

“ ... Beatrice warned me you’d be like this.” She slid in closer again, and frowned at him from close enough he could see the different shades of amber and brown in her eyes. “You always this morose? You hate this life so much?”

“It comes and goes,” he said, grinning. That managed to get a chuckle out of her. “Beatrice is the best thing to happen to me in a long time, and you’ll have to forgive me Jennifer if I’m hesitant to share our bed with another Kindred. With ghouls or a kine, it’s different; they’re food, and connections with them are fleeting. Did Beatrice tell you she’s the first Kindred I’ve been with in a very, very long time?”

“She did. And I get that you consider Kindred-with-Kindred sex to be special, meaningful ... intimate. How delightfully archaic.” Returning his smirk, she leaned toward him until their noses were only an inch apart. “You really love her.”

“Yeah, I do. You think I’m morose now? I used to dread every moment of this life, and I drowned my self in sex with my meals most nights to try and forget it.”

“I enjoy sex with my food almost every night as well, but I’m quite happy being Kindred. And besides, you’re not drowning yourself in sex with Beatrice?”

Good point. He laughed, leaned back and snapped his fingers.

“How much do you like her?” he said.

“I like her a lot. And that ass, oh my god that ass.”

They both laughed. The amount of sex he and Beatrice had had in the past month was astounding. Girl liked her ass more than he did, and anal sex was a frequent vice.

“Do you love her?” he said.

She shook her head. “Romantically? No. But she’s fast become a close friend, Mister Mire, and I ... well, I’d hate to ruin that.” Sighing, she got up, straightened out her skirt, and leaned against the stairway railing. “So, the offer is there. I don’t want to taint what you have with Beatrice. But, at the same time, I would not belong in the Circle of the Crone if I did not pursue my desires, Mister Mire.”

“You sleep with all your friends?” A little jab, to test the waters.

“No, I do not. I do with my meals, as you once did, but other Kindred? Not since the first year of my embrace.” She winked at him. Knew what he was getting at, no doubt. “And to think, I found this suit to impress you.”

Julias stood up as well, and as Jennifer walked toward the front door, he followed behind her before opening it for her.

“It worked. And ... let me think about it.”

“Please do. I think you’ll find I’m a joy to have under your sheets. I’d even share her.” The raven-haired Ventrue grinned at him, licked her lips, and finger waved as she walked backward through the doorway, and out into the night.

She was a very, very attractive woman. Julias couldn’t help but admire her butt when she turned around and put the rather tight skirt on display. Not as big or toned as Beatrice’s, but close.

He closed the door, and smacked himself in the forehead. Was he being too dramatic, being so careful about this? He was worried about damaging his relationship with Beatrice, the first relationship he'd had in decades, a relationship he was so damn thankful to be in. Threesomes didn't exactly have the best track record with relationships, in his experience.

But that was a long time ago, and things were different with Kindred. Sex was different. And Beatrice was the one who'd first mentioned interest in the idea.

He sat down, and burst into laughter. How much life had changed. Used to be all he was worried about was if he pissed off his sire. Now he was worried about whether a threesome with another Kindred would ruin his relationship, and whether the Invictus would suffer under the claws of visiting monsters and wolves.

All in all, a step in the right direction. Now if Jack survived his midnight stroll with the deadly Nosferatu, maybe things would start looking up.

~~Jack~~

If there was one way he was going to die, it'd be on a stroll home with the deadliest vampire in the city as his escort.

He thought Daniel or Antoinette had earned the title, but the longer he walked beside Jacob, the more he was starting to feel he'd earned it instead. The way the other Primogen looked at him, even Antoinette, was one he hadn't expected. A weird respect, like you might give a bully in school or dangerous cellmate who needed to be kept at a distance. But then, maybe deadliest vampire was the wrong title; rather, he was the most volatile.

“Not taking a ride back to South Side?” Jacob said, voice casual and body language just as casual as the two walked down from the Rich Side hills.

“I thought you wanted to talk?” It was difficult, finding a balance between defensive and not offensive with the elder Kindred. Didn’t want to help him necessarily, but didn’t want to piss him off. A tightrope Jack did not want to be on.

“Midnight stroll with old me? I’m touched.” Another laugh, but Jack didn’t join in. Jacob stopped laughing, suddenly, and frowned down at him as they walked. “You know kid, you got me all wrong.”

“Do I?”

“Yes, you do. Think I’m a villain, a devil, out for his own gain.”

“... do you think I’m stupid enough to blindly trust you?”

“Heh, touche. A little paranoia is perfectly healthy for a Kindred, can’t fault you there.”

Jack didn’t like the paranoia, he didn’t enjoy having to be suspicious of everyone. So he frowned up at the five-hundred-year-old vampire walking next to him.

“Are you going to try and convince me that you’re working for my best interest? The interests of Kindred?”

“I am working for that goal, Jack.”

“How’s that? Far as anyone’s told me, you create chaos so only the strongest are left standing.”

Another chuckle. They never broke their stride as they walked, even as more kine started to show up on the sidewalks. Where South Side and Rich Side connected, it was an expensive neighborhood, a large one, and it’d take a while to walk it. Jack could call for a ride, but Jacob wanted to talk; not like he could call for an Invictus ride and just leave Jacob mid conversation, not without pissing him off.

“It’s not nearly that simple kid, and you know it isn’t. The Danse Macabre is a complicated thing, and we all have our goals. You think you can summarize me so easily? All I’d have to do is mention that you were the one that killed Viktor and Tony, and Maria and Michael would have your ashes by sunrise.”

Oh shit. Shit shit shit. Jack looked up at the bastard again, eyes wide, jaw dropping.

“H-How—”

“I was there when Daniel brought in your broken body, kid, covered in ash-filled burns. Saw you had a pretty nasty sword slice from head to crotch too. Sort of mark Viktor liked to leave on more than a few victims I’ve known.” Jacob grinned at him, showing off his teeth, and how his face could look fucking evil as hell even with a bandage over his eyes. “Tony and Viktor were elders. You don’t get that age being careless with fire.” He leaned in, close enough Jack could feel the creature’s gaze, eyeless or not. “And your reaction was admittance enough.”

Fuck. Fuck fuck fuck him, fuck him god damn it. Don’t say another word Jack.

But Jacob started walking again, and with a glance back to him, motioned for him to follow. And now, Jack had no fucking choice.

“... you have no proof,” he said. Please don’t know about Lucas for the love of god.

“You’re right, I don’t; I wouldn’t need it. But this is just between you and me. And Annie of course.” Smiling, grinning, smirking, Jacob kept walking, and Jack had to jog to catch up to him. “I never did thank you.”

“Thank me?”

“Yes. Annie and I worked hard to get those two to meet head to head, but I doubted it’d end with either of them dead. Thanks to you, they both died! God damn what a fucking relief that was.”

Jack fell in step beside the old monster, and glanced left and right with quick snaps of the eye. Jacob was good at timing his words, controlling his voice, speaking in ways to prevent nearby kine from overhearing. But he was still risking Jack’s life just by bringing it up. Fuck him. Fuck him fuck him.

Wait.

“ ... you ... were working with Antoinette?” Jack reached out, and grabbed Jacob’s wrist.

Like grabbing a titan by the toe. Jacob stopped, and turned his head to face him.

Jack froze. The beast in his gut froze. The world froze. Not a single kine breathed or moved an inch for that split moment. Jack stared up at the thing turning to look at him through the eye bandage, and his dead heart caught in his throat; he could see the darkness of his empty eye sockets. Get away. Get away.

And again, Jack stood there, watching the man’s back. What the fuck was that?

The leader of the Circle of the Crone in Dolareido. Rarely did Jack ever have to deal with them, and almost never Jacob directly, but there were tales of their behavior, of their sacrificial rituals, their collection of bones from victims, their primal ways. Witches. But, that wasn’t what Jack felt when Jacob had looked him. Just a glance, just a turn of his head, and ... it was like a thousand hands reached out from the black, grabbed him, pinned him, and pulled him into the obsidian nothingness below.

He gulped, and jogged back up to stand beside him as they walked. The nearby kine didn't notice the predator walking the streets, or his bandaged eyes; just the right amount of the cloak of night to hide it, probably. But he wasn't hiding anything from Jack, any of the old beast in the bastard's gut that made Jack want to run.

“Yes, I was working with Antoinette. Your grandsire had become a psychopath, concerned only with his own survival. And Tony? Always hated that fucker. Conniving, manipulative kid, but not in the amazing way I am.” Jacob chuckled and licked his teeth. “He was a whiny brat who would have ruined Dolareido, just to hurt his ex. Fucking cunt.”

Jack forced his eyes onto the sidewalk. The creature next to him was tearing into elder Kindred like they were pests. Viktor had gotten half his head blown off and had managed to recover in minutes, and Tony had slaughtered a thousand Kindred-summoned rats in a matter of seconds as well, with his bare hands as far as Jack could tell. They were gods, not pests to be laughed at.

“Your girl Annie and I came to Dolareido when it was barely more than a village surrounded by woods, Jack. Her and Daniel, her boy Tony—just a young ancillae at the time, me, and that asshole Viktor. We worked hard to make this city a great place for our kind to live. And we succeeded, compared to other cities.”

Jack didn't ask for a lecture, didn't ask for his history or life story. But any information was better than none. So he pushed down the frown, and listened.

“So,” Jacob continued, “I consider this my city as much as the Prince does. Leeches come here, sucking on our success. Which is fine to an extent, it's a fucking city after all. But when people come here and try and set the rules, dictate to us what we can or can't do? Fuck that, and fuck them. I'll burn this place to the ground before I let someone take it from me."

If I can't have her, no one will. What a classic, tragic motivation. Jack winced as he glanced between the elder and the sidewalk, and the nearby kine that barely seemed to notice them as Jacob kept them in the cloak of night.

"What does that have to do with the Uratha? I get that they're here trying to push us around while they do their own things, but I don't understand where the conflict is. Why do you hate them so much?"

"It ... it..." Jacob sighed, and raised his hands to look at his fingers.

Oh my god the ancient beast was speechless.

"... what did Avery do to you?"

Jacob stopped. Jack dug his shoe into the sidewalk, ready to bolt. Stop poking the bear you stupid man. Could never learn to keep his mouth shut, lesson that refused to sink in, and it was going to get him killed eventually.

"I like you, Clarice."

"... what?"

"I like you." The snake flicked his tongue a few times, and licked his lips. "I can see what Annie likes about you so much. All the vamps in this city dance around on their toes, afraid to sink their weight into anything. You and that Damien fellow are the only ones that don't let ceremony and the future dictate your actions. Unpredictable, compared to Kindred. Even Garry, even Beatrice, much as they like to think of themselves as ballsy, brave fucks. That just makes them as predictable as angry bears." The elder leaned against a lamppost, eyes downcast but occasionally sneaking glances at Jack, complete with a few more smirks. “You really want to know why I hate that bitch?” The light of the lamp fell on him and cast him in a glow that reeked of film noir.

“ ... I do.”

“How long you think your relationship with Annie is going to last, kid?”

“With Antoinette? I ... I don’t know. I’m way too young to know that, and I’m not stupid enough to think I know the future. But I know that I love her, and ... and that I didn’t know what the fuck that really meant until I met her.” Love was a word, only a word, until you felt it in your bones.

“Lucky, to be able to feel that at your age, kid. Lot of people don’t find that until they’re way past their prime. Lot of people don’t find that ever. Me? Must have been ... nearly four hundred years old at the time, when I fell in love. Real love, the sort you don’t understand until you have it. The sort that ... gets into your bones,” he said, face pointed to the sidewalk. Well damn.

“Did ... did Avery...”

“Yes. Killed her. Minerva got in the way of their hunt—don’t ask, I don’t know why. But Minerva died trying to stop something. So, imagine my frustrations, Clarice, that I don’t know why that happened.” Jacob wrapped a hand around the lamppost pole, and leaned away from it so his body was tilted out on an angle, other arm dangling.

“ ... I am not FBI, and you are not a psychiatrist, Jacob.”

The old snake hissed. “What is one as old as I, if not a student of human nature, Master Terry? You, a social shut-in starting to blossom and open to the world of Kindred. Weight in your steps, distant but heavy. Took on a burden when you were too young for it, when you were alive. Father dead, I imagine. Became quite the analytical fellow after your dad died, distant with people, distant with emotions, constantly intellectualizing when you realized it was easier to weigh things as evidence and matter, instead of emotions. That's when you realized people are stupid creatures, compelled by their emotions to the point of absurdities. And yet, where they could find happiness, these idiot insects following their chemical reactions, slaves to them, you could find none. You saw the veil of ineptitude that runs the world, and you decided to play it safe, to coast through the world on your intelligence, afraid to enter that world of stupidity. You thought you were above it, but now, as the power of centuries dance before you, you realize you were just afraid you didn't have the courage to expose yourself. So much easier to stay ... distant. Only now, do you realize you were a fool and a coward to hold everything and everyone at arm's length. You test the waters cautiously, now that you see the weight of eternity ahead of you. Like a fucking baby bird peeking over the edge of the nest."

Jacob snorted, and stared at the ground. "If not for being embraced, you would have gone through life alone, probably as a lawyer, something that would fit your tendency for inquisitiveness, and your tenacity. And if not for a forceful personality like Annie, someone willing to punch through your barriers, your fear, it would have taken centuries for you to meet someone you could love."

Jack took a step back, and looked down the same way Jacob was. He might as well have been eyeless too.

"Thought you said I was unpredictable, and ... that you liked me." Let's just conveniently ignore how accurate his analysis was, how much it resonated. Truth had a habit of doing that. Jack would have been a boring man, content to coast through life, if he'd never had his Requiem. If someone as amazing as Antoinette hadn't found his pathetic squirming and foot-in-mouth dialogue charming. Even before, if someone as wise as Julias hadn't noticed the potential in him.

The old man laughed. "You ask questions where others won't, and have this nasty habit of surviving where you shouldn't. And that makes you a very, very dangerous person, Clarice. Dying seems to have agreed with you, made you into someone I'd like to keep around."

Never did Jacob act his age, like the ancient beast he was, like Viktor or Maria or Michael, or Daniel or Tony or Lucas or even Antoinette. They all acted ... old. They all acted like they were sick of people's shit, and were going through the motions for most things. Every time Jack caught a glimpse of Jacob, he didn't get that impression. The man called him unpredictable, then what the hell was Jacob compared to him?

"You want me to find out why Avery killed Minerva?"

"Yeap."

"... and if you don't like the answer?"

"What do you think?" Jacob said, face deadpan, smirk and grin gone, face pointed at the sidewalk.

A loud, high-pitched screech of metal and wire jolted Jack, made him jump a couple feet as his spine tried to leap out of his body. Jacob let go out of the lamppost, and started walking again, leaving behind the imprints of fingers — more like claws — on the pole deep into its body.

"Do you agree with Annie? That with some cooperation and some self-awareness, Kindred can grow past their animal urges? That we'll survive the future?" the old monster said. Not with a mocking tone either, like Jack expected, or with a sneer or grimace or anything. A dead, cold face that made ice drip down Jack's back.

“ ... I do. One of the reasons we get along and love each other, we have similar views of our kind, I guess.”

“She is a happier woman, since you came into her life, kid.”

Ok, enough was enough. Jacob was walking a line between tragic character and psychopath villain, and Jack couldn't get his bearings. He had to cut through the bullshit.

“Jacob, what do you want from me? Even if I do find out what ... what...” The two of them stopped, and stared down the sidewalk, past the few kine walking this far near Rich Side, and onto the two women ahead of them.

Clara, and Avery. The two weren't talking, weren't looking at each other or anything else, except for the two Kindred. Still in typical street clothes, and a little out of place among the suits and dresses of the several kine that walked past them. Avery had been smiling, but her smile faded away as the two came closer, close enough until Jack could see the subtle frown on Avery's lips.

“ ... getting old, Avery,” Jacob said.

She'd been around in the fifties, but she didn't look old enough for it. Werewolves must have aged slower than humans then, like the Begotten. In just a week Jack's world had gone from vampires, to vampires and werewolves and monsters, each with their own desires and hungers, each with their own motivations and physical capabilities. He was never going to get used to it.

“Jacob,” she said.

“So this is Jacob.” Clara came forward, flicked some of her box-braid hair back over her shoulder to get it behind her, and stood only five feet from the old Kindred. “Avery wasn't lying about the eyes.”

Jack winced and looked around. The humans kept walking by, Jacob's cloak of night insuring their eyes slid over the two Kindred like shadows on black, but the two werewolves seemed unaffected. Close as they were, Jack could feel the Nosferatu growing the aura to encapsulate the two wolves as well. Preserve the Masquerade above all else; even now Jacob obeyed that law.

"Clara," Jack said. "Nice to see you again."

"Ha, is it? You're hanging out with eyeless here, can't imagine the conversation was to our benefit."

Jack shook his head. "It wasn't like that."

"I bet it wasn't." Avery came up to join Clara, and the two stood side by side as they both watched Jacob. Neither of them looked Jack's way, not for long at least, eyes always coming back to catch the Nosferatu. "Any luck talking to the Primogen, kid?" Eyes still on Jacob.

Jack waited, and looked at Jacob. The man wasn't moving, and his hands were in loose fists that dangled at his sides. If he was angry, if he was fuming or livid or ready to strike, Jack couldn't tell, his beast couldn't tell. Like a perfectly calm animal, silent and waiting. Like a snake waiting for the right moment to strike.

Jacob didn't like to do that, far as Jack knew. The elder liked to dance, to play coy, to joke and poke. He never did the silent act.

"Spoke with them several hours ago," Jack said. Maybe if he kept talking, things could go smooth. "You hunted me down to ask that? No way we just stumbled onto you by accident."

"Perceptive," Clara said, grinning at him. "We got your scent, yeah, and Avery knows the city well enough to guess where you'd be near."

Scent. They're wolves, Jack, don't forget they're wolves.

"Jacob out walking with you, I'm guessing he wanted to talk about us," Avery said. Unlike her companion, Avery didn't chuckle or smirk or grin when she met his eyes. Her face was just as cold as Jacob's, and she let her arms dangle at her sides as she came close to stand in front of the Nosferatu. "What'd you tell them?"

"I uh, told them the tunnels under Devil's Corner are off limits, and that I'm to be the intermediary between our two kind," Jack said.

Avery nodded. Seemed to satisfy her, if he was reading her right.

"And their response?"

"... frustration, really. But they seemed to agree with the middleman idea, and to stay out of Devil's Corner, if only barely."

Clara chuckled, and came a bit closer to Jack again. "Telling Kindred what they can or can't do must have really gotten under their skin, especially when they know it's the right call. Damn I would have loved to have been there, to see them snarl and groan about us blocking off sections of their own city. Like taking away kids' toys and telling them to go to bed."

Yeah, Clara had them figured out there.

Quiet fell on them as Jack struggled to find the next thing to say. Jacob and Avery were only a few feet apart, and each moment Jack could feel the old vampire's insides twitch. If he was telling the truth, the man lost the love of his life to the woman standing in front of him. And Jacob likely was telling the truth, given what Jack knew about him. Manipulative, sure, but not the lying type, when the truth was the far more visceral, brutal tool.

"... Jacob," Avery said, "I wanted to talk to you."

“Use the middleman.”

“No, this is personal. I wanted to talk to you about Minerva.”

Jacob visibly twitched. “Is that a joke, tiny wolf? You refused to explain what happened, last I recall.”

“And I still do.” Avery got in closer. She had to look up to meet Jacob’s eyeless gaze, short as she was, but her thick, muscled frame betrayed no weakness. And from so close, Jack could feel the woman’s breath, feel her heat and her life. Feel her beast. It wasn’t the same as a Kindred’s; vampires’ beasts felt like shadowy things of hunger and deceit, eyes in the dark, and fangs. Her beast was colossal, and primeval. From so close, he could feel its animal ferocity and size pressing on him, barki—roaring at him. Not with real aggression, but to display dominance, like animals often did.

He was starting to miss the Danse Macabre. At least it was subtle. These wolves had all the subtlety of a nuke.

“Get out of my face, Avery. If you won’t tell me what happened, we have nothing to say to each other.” Jacob said.

“You don’t have to say shit, old man. Just listen.” Avery sighed and shook her head, before she reached out, and shoved Jacob. The man took a step back, and the loose fists at his sides tightened. “I am sorry that I killed Minerva. It was an accident.”

Holy shit. Jack stepped back with Jacob, and tried to swallow down the words. Jacob coughed them back up.

“I’m sorry, you’re what?”

“I said I’m sorry I killed her. I didn’t want that to happen. She insisted on getting in the way, and in the fight, she was killed.”

“She’s telling the truth, Jacob,” Clara said.

The old bastard sneered. “What would you know? You weren’t there, kid. I don’t know you, I know her. And I know how much of a fucking animal she is. Ever seen Old Yeller?”

Pot calling kettle. Jack wanted to say it, but he wasn’t that stupid. And besides, as he watched the argument, he had to admit, Jacob didn’t seem to have the bloodlust in him Jack had expected. Tony, Viktor, Lucas, they all had a snap to them, something that drove their eyes to wild abandon. Something that sank them into almost mindless obsession with the moment, with violence and death, almost like a starved Kindred about to frenzy. He didn’t see that in Jacob. He saw a lot of other horrible, twisted shit, but not that.

Avery came up to Jacob, and shoved him again. Again, Jacob took a step back, fists tightening until they were shaking at his side. The hell was Avery doing? Why wasn’t she afraid? The man was half a millennium old, and she had to know that, she had to feel that. She had a beast in her gut too; different than a Kindred, but she had it too. No ignorance or arrogance was going to mask the fucking elder and the sickening power that dripped from every action he made.

But Avery came closer, and got ready to shove him a third time.

Until Jack stepped between them.

“The fuck are you doing?” Jack said. Maybe when he was human and alive, he wouldn’t have said a thing. He would have coasted, like Jacob said. But now, he couldn’t. Cause he was a Ventrue, for better or worse.

Avery frowned at him. In the dark, her silver blue eyes caught the light a little more than they should, reflecting street light into his gaze.

“Jacob needs to let out some aggression, Jack. I killed his woman and you know what he fucking did? Fucking nothing. Fucking Nothing.”

Jack peeked over his shoulder at Jacob. Without eyes, reading him was so damn fucking hard, but the creature was staring at Avery as far as Jack could tell, staring and frozen.

Clara reached out, took Jack's shoulder, and pulled him aside to stand beside her.

"Let em talk kid," she said. "Jacob will keep it all hidden in that cloak of night crap right? Just let em talk." Her fingers offered him a small squeeze of the shoulder, and she smiled down at him as she did.

But she didn't get it. He shook his head, and tried to walk back to Jacob, but she tightened her grip a little and pulled him back.

"... he's going to kill her," Jack said.

"Heh, him and what army? Besides, she's a Cahalith. She'd welcome the fight just for the story."

"This isn't about that!" Avery said with a snarl and a glare for her subordinate. "Not looking for a story here. Looking to take care of this problem here and now."

"Why get a middleman then?" Jacob said between clenched teeth.

"For everyone else. But you? I felt like I should do this in person." And again, Avery reached up, and pushed the eyeless monster back a foot. "Much as you might like to paint me as the bad guy, I do—we do what we do because the world needs us. Sometimes people get stuck in the middle. Minerva? She put herself in the middle. So I'm sorry that I killed her, and I mean it when I say I didn't want to. Take a swing."

Jack stared at Avery and Jacob, back and forth, eyes snapping and fingers rubbing together. She didn't know what she was asking for.

Jacob snarled, quiet, deep and rumbling in his throat, and wiped his thumb across his lips. “You think I’ll be satisfied with a fist fight? You worthless, fuc—”

“No, but I’m trying, Jacob. Don’t want us to be enemies, I have nothing against you. Hell, I don’t have anything against Antoinette either, and she’s the one poking the veil, Jacob.”

“... the Prince forced nothing on Minerva. You, however, did.” The old Nosferatu took a step forward, and got into Avery’s face. “You think some violence will solve this? Are you this mindless?”

“I—”

“No. You don’t get out of this with a fist in the face, you fucking dog. Not enough. Nothing would ever be enough.” Jacob, shaking his head and grinding his teeth, stepped around Avery, and started walking. Clara let go of Jack and blocked the old man’s path.

Jack didn’t see the man’s arm move, but he heard it. He heard the crunch of knuckle against bone, and the snap air parting. Blood splattered over Jack’s face, and he stared down at Clara as she crumbled, a streak of red following the movement of her skull as she fell to her palms and knees. The humans continued to walk around them like nothing had happened, like the werewolf hadn’t just taken the back of Jacob’s hand to the jaw. Like blood wasn’t gushing from her mouth into the cracks of the sidewalk, and sparkling in the streetlights.

“I don’t know you, dog. Get out of my way.” Jacob walked on without so much as a glance over his shoulder.

“F ... fucker...” Clara said, holding her mouth, the split open lip looked like it belonged on a butcher’s table, and as she cradled her jaw, more of the red liquid dripped from between her fingers.

“Shit. You ok?” Jack said. No idea how well werewolves healed when in human form, but fuck that looked painful. Jack got down on a knee, and held out his palm. Clara took it, bloody hand and all.

“Yeah. Fuck, he sucker punched me.” Every use of her lip splattered more blood, and attempts to pronounce F were a slurred mess.

Don’t stare at the blood, don’t smell the blood. And whatever you do, do not taste her blood. Don’t lick the warm stuff off your hands. Just help her up.

“Sorry,” he said, “about Jacob I mean.”

“Nah.” Avery came up beside him, and the three of them stared at the old man as he disappeared into the crowd. “We knew how he could be. I was hoping he could take out a little anger on me, maybe avoid the future fight, or delay it. But, seems I only pushed it to happen sooner.”

Humans started looking their way, the three of them no longer protected by Jacob’s cloak, and many did a double take on Clara and the copious amount of blood trickling down her neck and chest. Jack had nothing to give her though, and all he could do was wince and offer a pained smile.

“... you know he’s half a millennium old right?” Jack said. “He’s ... I’ve never seen him fight, but I’ve seen elders do some pretty scary shit, Avery.” Viktor and Tony, Lucas, Daniel, fucking monsters. And Antoinette, slaughtering over a dozen Kindred with her literal bare hands, until she was covered in ash.

Avery shrugged. “Kid, what’d I tell you? You won’t win a fight with us.” She brushed him off, and started walking the opposite direction of Jacob. “If Jacob becomes a problem, I’ll kill him.”

“He just wants answers. You killed the love of his life, Avery, and he doesn’t know why.”

The woman glared at him, grit her teeth, and walked over to the nearby lamppost. Sure enough, she reached out to touch the grip marks Jacob had made. “He knows all he needs to know.”

“ ... come on, you want me to be the cream in the Oreo here, you’re going to have to give me something to work with.”

The two werewolves blinked at him. “ ... what?” they said, in unison. For a moment, they reminded him of Ashley and Julee.

“You know, Oreos? Cookie with cream in the center? And the two cookie sides are hard and rigid and ... make for a good parallel ... with Uratha and Kindred and...” Wow, tough crowd. The two werewolves were frowning at him hard enough to break glass, at least until Clara started laughing, then groaned as she cradled her ruined mouth. Avery just kept frowning though.

He was beginning to like Clara. The two wolves may have been terrifying, and being around them had his guts on edge and demanding he hide from them; Clara at least knew how to laugh at normal jokes and stuff though.

“We’re trying to keep your fingers out of shit they shouldn’t be in, kid,” Avery said, frown chiseled into her face. “Curiosity killed the cat.”

Jack sighed, and looked to Clara. “You really think that?”

Clara winced, looked at Avery, and then back at him. But she didn’t say anything, only shrugged.

Well, that went nowhere fast.

Sighing louder, maybe just a little louder than needed, Jack jogged after where Jacob was walking. But the man was gone. Just when he was finally starting to understand the man, the wolves had ruined it. Avery's approach may have worked for wolves, but for Kindred, you had to be more subtle, more aware of the threads they weaved. Willing to dance the Danse.

Jacob was going to visit him again, and try and get his fingers into him, try and use him to get revenge on the Uratha. Only person Jack knew who could keep him safe from the man's machinations was Antoinette. He could walk to her tower, and just ... ignore the shitstorm brewing. She'd give him sanctuary, hide him from all this fucking insanity until the Uratha left. One word, and she'd take care of everything for him. All he had to do was go visit her in her tower.

Jack rubbed his buzzed head, and started the walk home instead. You're a Ventrue now, for better or worse.

Chapter 32

~~Jack~~

He pressed the button for the elevator to his apartment, and waited. Man, what a shit show. Walking alone with Jacob had been startling, but if his time with Antoinette had taught him anything, it was elders were like onions. You had to peel them to get to the layers. And they had a lot of layers.

It wasn't the first time Jacob had taken interest to him. He interested the elder, as did Damien, because they were unpredictable. Jack always figured the more impulsive and brash Kindred like Jessy or Beatrice were unpredictable, but now that he thought about it, Jacob had a point. They weren't unpredictable, just loud. So what the fuck was it about him and Damien that Jacob considered so unpredictable? What layer of Jacob would expose the fucked up thought processes of a five-hundred-year-old vampire.

Like trying to walk more tightrope, except made of spiderweb.

In the elevator. He sighed, looked around, sighed some more, and let his head hang as his thoughts drifted back to the Primogen meeting. Elders had layers alright, and one of those layers was painting Antoinette in a bad light. He hated it. It was easier to think of her as intelligent and wise, ancient but seductive and fun, not as a real person with issues and hangups and prejudice.

Course, the prejudice may have been justified. Fiona had already killed thirteen—twelve people, in ten months. Dolareido was a huge city, but that many kills in that amount of time in that specific area was bound to attract attention. The Invictus and the Prince could suppress the evidence, make it disappear, so the pictures of the claw marks and odd blood splatter didn't attract the wrong kind of attention. But sooner or later, someone was going to wonder why people kept dying in mysterious circumstances in Devil's Corner. Investigations would start, kine would get involved, and eventually someone would discover something they shouldn't have.

With jangling keys, the familiar tink tink calling him home, he opened the door. Some peace and quiet, a moment to consider his thoughts, to—

“Hey Jack.”

“Mother fucking!” Keys up in the air, along with his hands, and panic levels. “B-Beatrice? The hell? Fiona?”

The two women were sitting on his couch, laughing and chatting, smirking and smiling, and all the things that came with breaking into someone's home when you knew you could at any time.

“Saw this girl buzzing your number, said she knew you. So I helped her get in.”

“How!?” he said, arms up and waving.

“Well the elevator can be bypassed by climbing,” Beatrice said, “and your lock I can open cause I got mad skills. And I relocked it with your spare keys.”

Spare keys. Fuck, the spare keys. He'd meant to give them to Antoinette, but Beatrice dangled them from her claws before tossing them his way.

“Right, right, so ... um, hello?” He stood in front of the two girls, and gave them both the most angry, scrutinizing eye he could muster. Didn't work; they just laughed and giggled.

“I wanted to talk,” Fiona said.

“Thought we did?”

“Aye ... I dinnae ken. Felt like talking, visiting a friend.”

Heh, friend. She really was the type to make friends easily, wear her emotions on her sleeve sort. It took months for Jack to make friends, but Fiona figured the connection was made in just several days.

Nodding, he threw his suit jacket on the couch arm and sat down across from them.

“Sure. Shit was pretty horrible today,” he said, “so I mean, yeah, hang out. Sunrise isn’t for a couple hours.”

Fiona smiled, beaming, and put her feet up on the table again.

“Jack, if Antoinette catches you hanging out with fiery Scots women in your free time, she’s gonna tear you in half,” Beatrice said.

Both girls laughed again.

“Beatrice, why’re you here? Figured you’d be at Julias’s place.”

The Nosferatu sighed, hopped off the couch, and helped herself to some of his blood from the fridge. His apartment was fast becoming a hangout.

“Worried about Jacob. This werewolf thing has him ... pretty fucked up. He’s gone silent psycho mode. Went out a few hours ago, still hasn’t come back to the base, so I figured I’d drop by and see you. Julias’s been worried about you. He couldn’t say why, official business and shit, but with werewolves — and monsters apparently — at our door, and you, well, being you, I figured you might have been involved.”

“... wait, what?” He threw up his hands again and slapped his knees. “You just assumed I’d be involved?”

“You have a habit of getting in the middle of shit,” she said. “Prove me wrong.”

Fuck.

“Not fair.”

“And to top of it all off, this gorgeous woman says she knows you, and she knew I was a vampire on sight. Tells me she’s a monster. Not a vamp or wolf, but a monster. Like, under the bed monster, in the closet monster, creepy things under the water monster.” The Nosferatu didn’t blink or anything, just shrugged and took a sip of the red drink. “She telling the truth?”

“Course I am!”

“She is.”

“Fuck me that’s scary.” Crocodile-mouth laughed. Scary, yeah right. Jack could see down her throat with how wide her mouth could open, the weird long tongue, the huge teeth where her cheeks should be. It was enough to make Fiona blink and stare, and then laugh too.

First it was Damien, and then Natasha, and now Beatrice. Fiona got along well with the younger Kindred, but seemed to irritate the older ones who knew about the Begotten.

“So are there others of your kind?” Beatrice said.

Fiona nodded. “Aye, all kinds, all sorts, with different hungers. I feed on punishing abusive, minging folk, but I know there are others. The Dark Mother showed me peeks of things in the ocean that fed on destroying ships, but nae folk. I saw things in the sky that fed on flesh. I saw things in basements with hoards of nick-nacks, and others in corporate headquarters with hoards of secrets. They all feed so differently!”

“Holy shit, so many nightmares I had as a kid now seem justified,” Beatrice said.

Fiona nodded. “That’s where we come from.”

“Eh, wha?”

“Nightmares. Horrors. That’s where Vrall came from, and the others without their own names. They come from the dream, where they feed. Even now I can feel her drifting through my lair.”

Both Kindred stared wide-eyed at the monster, talking about dream monsters like they were normal things.

The Nosferatu leaned in. “So, you ... you just ... feed on abusive people?”

“Nae exactly, I have to punish them. They have to ken they’ve done bad things, and that’s where the food comes from, for my horror.”

“Oh oh! Can ye introduce me? I heard the Circle of the Crone is sort of similar?”

Jack raised a hand. “I was with Jacob a moment ago. Got into a bit of an argument with the werewolves. He uh ... clocked one of them pretty good, but otherwise, things went ... better than I figured they would? Sorta?” It was true. The whole night felt like it was building into a nasty battle, but through it all, Jacob hadn't even taken a swing at Avery despite her prodding.

The more he talked with Avery, the less he liked her. Confident as fuck, and more than willing to get physical about it, even against a crazy bastard like Jacob. She seemed like she was trying to keep her pack safe, to take the hit for them; Clara taking the punch was a perfect example of what was probably going to happen instead.

“What has Jacob told you? About the Uratha,” Jack said, looking at Beatrice.

The Nosferatu raised a brow and set the glass down. “Fuck all; he's avoided the topic. He mentioned the monsters, the, uh, Begotten, but didn't bother with details; didn't seem to worry him. Fuck me, if I had known scary ass shit like that was lurking in our city, I'd have ... fuck, I'd probably have sought it out.” Again, she laughed, Fiona right along with her. “But the Uratha seem to be his primary concern. If I had to guess, he had a personal issue.”

Shit. Shit shit. No one else talked about it, not their place. But...

“I'm sure Jacob will tell you when you speak to him next,” he said, “that the Uratha picked me to be the middleman for communications between them and the Kindred.” Beatrice nodded with his words, but her snake eyes squinted as she undoubtedly scanned him for hidden meanings. “But ... but, with Avery, you should ... walk lightly, Beatrice. Jacob has every reason to hate her. Every reason.”

“ ... Antoinette mentioned someone named Minerva,” Beatrice said, “one time, when she came to visit the Circle. She and Jacob got into a little fight, not long after Lucas died, and ... and she called Jacob out on being an asshole. And that, when he had someone named Minerva, he wasn't an asshole. If you're right, and he hates Avery that much ... guessing it has something to do with Minerva.”

He put up his hands. “Really, I shouldn’t talk about it. Ask Jacob.”

Beatrice eyed him closely, but nodded eventually and leaned back on the couch.

“Fiona,” Jack said, “you might want to find this Azamel.”

The redhead blinked at him, eyebrows raised and glancing Beatrice’s way. “Eh? Ye sure?”

“Yeah. Antoinette said she couldn’t stop you, and ... and I feel like there’s shit going on, but I don’t know enough to make a judgment call.”

“You two in cahoots or something?” Beatrice said.

Jack shrugged. Not in cahoots, he didn’t think so anyway. But Damien had asked him for a favor, and for some damn fucking reason, he wanted to follow through.

“There’s a connection,” he said, “between the Uratha showing up, and Fiona. Don’t know what it is, don’t want to jump to any conclusions, but from how the Prince mentioned Azamel, she ... she could have some answers.”

“I dinnae ken. Talking to Azamel could make me Antoinette’s enemy.”

“She doesn’t like you already.”

“Ha, true lad.”

Beatrice raised a brow as she listened, before eventually taking another sip of her drink and setting the glass down. “Azamel?”

“Another Begotten like Fiona. She’s ... well, I don’t know. She’s dangerous as all fuck, I know that much. But if she has information, I want it.”

“If I can stop Jacob from doing something we’ll all regret, I’d like to.” Jack sighed, and buried his face in his palms. Monsters, werewolves, Azamel, and Jacob. If that was the list, Jacob was his biggest concern.

Beatrice didn’t look too convinced, but Fiona nodded and pat the girl on the back.

“Aye, I’ll find this Azamel, talk to her, see if she knows what’s going on with these werewolves.”

“And ... make sure you avoid the Uratha,” he said.

“ ... aye.”

No need to say it. The Uratha were hunting something. It could be her. If it turned out to be, Azamel might be her only hope.

~~Beatrice~~

Jacob didn’t come back to the Circle’s home last night. She awoke to a new night in her cubby-hole in the cave, moved the hanging fur aside — pitiful door drape curtain thing, really — and poked her head out to see what the others were up to. Still no Jacob.

Aaron drifted around, glancing between the book in his hands and the bone-covered walls. Some ghouls were around; they always were while the Kindred slept. They nodded, bowed to Aaron, and resumed cleaning the place, relighting candles or replacing them, adjusting where the candles sat upon skulls and such, or wiping excess wax from the bones. The ghouls were armed too, with shotguns. Shotguns hurt. A lot.

“Any idea where the boss is?” Beatrice said.

Aaron shrugged. “No. He never came back from the Primogen meeting.” Yeah, Jacob had a chat with Jack and the wolves after that, but the man had plenty of time to get back to base since then. “Well, he does like to disappear every so often, so I wouldn’t worry too much about it.”

“Even with wolves around?”

Aaron shrugged again, found a wooden chair, and resumed reading.

Man was useless. She’d never seen the Gangrel actually do something, but Jacob valued his presence, and even his input from time to time. She chalked it up to her simply not knowing what was really going on, since that seemed to happen a lot. Tonight being no exception.

She wandered over to Othello’s hole in the wall. Lots of furs all around, but no kine or ghouls. She knew he had one female ghoul at least, a frequent treat of his, but she was nowhere to be found. And it wasn’t a good idea to keep your kine meals around during the day; if they woke up to sleeping Kindred, it wouldn’t end well.

Othello, wearing only a pair of dirty black jeans, sat up and stretched himself out. “Yo Triss.”

“Heya. Any idea where Jacob might be?”

“Nah. Fucker does his own thing ya know.”

“Yeah, but ... shit is kind of hitting the fan. Couple weeks ago I was investigating Invictus and Carthian bullshit, now we have monsters and fucking werewolves in the city and no Jacob.” She leaned against the man’s wall, and felt some of the hanging furs with her claws. So soft. “Don’t see you not having sex very often Othello.”

“Don’t see you having sex ever, Beatrice.”

“Hey fuck you, I get laid all the time! Not that that should matter. The fuck is this, college?”

Othello laughed, and lay back down, hooking his fingers behind his head. “You started it. I’m sure Julias treats you nice though, in a mansion, full of pillows and money and free meals.”

He was looking for a fight. Was he looking for a fight? He chuckled and shifted around to get comfortable on the blankets; so exposed, she could drive her foot right into his balls. But the man was just probably just teasing her. Jacob liked to do that, joke with you, see how you reacted, try and pull some genuine emotion out of you instead of Kindred manipulations. She loved and hated that about her boss, as she was sure they all did. And Othello was probably just emulating him.

“Sorry I was smart enough to get in with good money,” she said, grinning. “You ever fuck underneath a chandelier, or lean back in a hot tub while a couple of kine massage your whole body while you fuck your lover?”

“Can’t say I have.” Bastard didn’t bother to open his eyes. “Did the hot tub thing sort of, just without a lover.”

“ ... ever have a lover?”

“Nope.”

Arrow to the chest. She didn’t react, didn’t give it away, but damn, she had thought Othello must have had at least some genuine relationships in his life. Nearly as old as Julias, and never had a real lover. Well, if it made him happy, good for him. But she couldn’t imagine going through a century of unlife without the tingling in her bones she felt when she was with Julias.

Jennifer hopped down from her hole; much higher in the cave wall than theirs. “We’re not all as lucky as you.” She walked up to them, wearing a simple black robe made for expensive bathrooms. The sort of robe you’d find in Julias’s place.

“Don’t suppose you know where Jacob went?”

“No,” Jen said. “I was with him, when he visited Julias though.”

Funny, kid didn’t mention her being there.

“Why?” She stepped out of Othello’s cave, and wandered back to her own to sit down on some blankets. Her laptop had no battery life left, and her smartphone was getting low too. She’d have to step out to get some power; probably to Julias’s.

“Jacob said he was going to go talk with Jack, and figured the kid would be at Mire’s, after that meeting. He only dropped by here for a moment before heading out again.” Jennifer shrugged and plopped down on the blankets next to her. “So naturally I wanted to go with him, and talk to Julias about my proposal.”

Oh god damn it.

“Really Jen? Kind of crossing the line don’t you think?”

“No, I don’t.” She smiled her cocky smile and sat, back against the little cave wall. “I was honest with him about everything. And he hit me with talk about love and stuff, worrying having another Kindred in the bed might ruin things, that he didn’t want to let you go blah blah.”

Beatrice smiled, not a cocky one though like Jen’s. Knowing Julias described her as his love to Jennifer, and purposefully dodging a threesome — a feat of willpower for any man, Kindred or not — was making her glow.

“What’d you tell him?” Jennifer said.

“Eh? Oh about you and your persistent horniness. I said ... well I said I was down as long as he was comfortable with it. If he’s not comfortable with it, then I’m sorry Jen but you ain’t getting a piece of this ass.”

The Ventrue sighed a dramatic, theatrical sigh, but nodded and adjusted her robe. “I’ll break him yet. Give me time.” They both chuckled. “Meet any of the monsters yet?”

“Yeah, a young one named Fiona, girl from Scotland. Short, curvy girl, huge rack, I’m sure you’d like her.”

Try as Jen might to keep her face straight, a grin and laugh worked their way onto her expression. “Maybe. Doesn’t sound like a monster though.”

“Yeah, she didn’t look or act like one. But damn, I felt something, Jen, in my guts. Girl looked fun, like a firecracker, sort of girl to take to a bar, get drunk, loves to party and dance and shit. But ... my guts didn’t feel that at all.” Felt like she’d been sitting near another Jacob. Something older even.

“I’m being left out then. Werewolves and monsters and I haven’t met any of them.”

“Well I got along with Fiona fine. I’ll introduce you sometime. You can try and get into her pants too.” Girl seemed friendly enough, at least enough to let Jen down easy if she wasn’t interested. “I—”

The familiar tap of soft shoes stirred them all to stand. Jacob walked into the grand cave, and all four Kindred came out to watch him, to read him, see what his attitude was.

Dude seemed kind of quiet, a little distant too. He didn't look in anyone's direction — not that it was easy to tell with the whole eyeless thing — and he kept his head pointed at the cave floor, fingers on his chin, and the occasional nod to no one.

Beatrice walked up to him. “Jacob, where you been?” Might as well dive in head first.

“Out.” The old man walked up to the blood bowl in the center of the cavern, and put his hands on the edge as he stared into it. It was empty. If he was planning on doing some more crazy Crúac madness, he'd be getting more. But the man just stood there, and stared into the bowl.

“I spoke to Jack,” she said as she stood opposite of him around the bowl. “Heavy shit.” No reaction from the old bastard though, so she tried again. “What's the plan, boss?”

He shook his head. “No plan.”

“No plan?” Jennifer came up to stand beside her. A little further back truthfully, and understandably. “Monsters and werewolves have come into the city.”

“Yeah,” Beatrice said. “I can understand no plan for the monsters, they're not causing shit. But—”

“Yet,” he said. “They're not causing shit yet.” Maybe he did worry about the Begotten then?

“... ok, yet, fine. But the werewolves? We not planning to do something about them?”

“As long as we stay out of their way, they well do nothing to us.”

Passivity, from Jacob? She leaned in a little, enough to put her chin between his gaze and the empty blood bowl.

“It doesn’t take a genius to figure out something happened, Jacob, with you and the werewolves ... and Minerva.”

Jacob raised his head, and she winced and jumped back. But the impending punch never came, thank god. She’d seen what it could do to Antoinette, and she doubted she’d still have her head if the old beast decided to hit her.

But he did no such thing. He looked back down at the bowl, but otherwise was as still as a statue.

“It’s not a secret,” he said, “that Avery killed Minerva. I prefer to not talk about it. Some memories are best left forgotten.”

Holy mother of god he was broken. No snap, no zing, no sneer or chuckle or even a smile. The old man just stared down at the bowl, dead still.

Beatrice stepped back in. “And there’s no plan? We’re not going to try and make them pay?”

The old man smirked. Finally, something normal out of him.

“It’s complicated Triss. Don’t get me wrong, nothing would make me happier than making them pay. Cause...” Another sigh before the old man walked away from the bowl and started to head toward his room. His was a hallway carved into the side of the grand cavern, and it winded like a snake into a larger room. Much different from the other holes the rest of them slept in.

And Beatrice followed him the whole way. Aaron had put his book down to listen at some point. Conversation had to be interesting if even he would stop reading to hear it. She shrugged at him, and followed the old beast. No one ever came to Jacob’s room unless it was urgent. But she wasn’t going to get an answer being passive about this.

“I won’t ask for details about Minerva. I figure she was important to you, very important, I get it,” she said. Jacob frowned over his shoulder at her, but she put up her hands in surrender. “Serious, I get it Jacob. And you’re telling me Avery killed her? Werewolf?”

“Werewolf leader now. The times they are a-changin’.” The Nosferatu sat down on his pile of furs, not dissimilar to the ones found in their rooms. The major differences were the ornaments he’d hung on the walls, bones with drawings etched into them, little flannel bags with feathers sticking out of them, some masks carved out of wood stained black, lots of creepy shit.

“She wasn’t before?” Most talkative-without-the-bullshit mood she’d ever heard Jacob in, might as well get some information out of him while she could.

“No. When the Uratha came to Dolareido in the fifties, they were lead by someone named Simon. Bit of an old man”—he was one to talk—“so he’s probably dead by now, either old age or a hunt gone bad. Hopefully the latter. Would have loved to see him get ripped open.” The old Nosferatu grabbed one of the skulls on the wall, a horse skull if Beatrice was right, and held it in front of him. Seeing an eyeless man examine an object was a weird sight.

“So ... Avery’s back. Older, and ... stronger, I guess? Back and in charge of a new pack?”

“Seems that way.”

“... got to be honest with you Jacob, I expected a little more of that fucking psycho I’d grown used to. And I expected that psycho to be full-on rage-boner hard right now, and concocting a plan to kill Avery horribly.” She leaned against the cave wall, and peeked behind her. Still just her, alone, poking the bear like an idiot.

Jacob frowned at her, but his gaze fell back to the horse skull, and he ran his fingers along its surface, its texture, its stained dirty white shape.

“You ever fought a werewolf, Triss?”

“What? No, course not. Hell I borderline figured they were a myth since no one talked about them, except to be scary. They—”

“Imagine ... a creature of claws, and muscle, of bone and strength. Think a Gangrel gone draugr, transformed with as much malice and blood as they can muster, talons and fangs and all. Now make them nine feet tall, drooling at the chops.” Jacob set the skull down beside him, and reached out to the wall for a small dagger, still sheathed. “Imagine one of these beasts in a building, tearing through the walls, ripping the ceiling apart like tissue, slamming its weight against brick and wood and snapping them apart with explosive force. You and your friends, your fellow Kindred, have stabbed the beast enough times that a dozen knives protrude from its arms, its legs, its stomach. One protrudes from its neck, and each step the Uratha takes causes blood to drip down its fur, covered in drywall powder. It doesn’t slow down. You fire your pistol into its chest. Each bullet lands, and you hear the thunk of the metal hitting bone or meat, and barely getting past the first inch of flesh. You panic and run outside, and as your friends lay siege to the building with fully automatic weaponry, you set the building on fire. Through the sounds of machine gun fire and the roar of the flames, you hear something roar louder. The werewolf bursts through the wall, howling, as it runs you down, and kills you.”

What. The. Fuck.

“Did ... did that actually happen?”

Jacob nodded, and with a slow hand, drew the dagger from its sheath. It shined with a glint she knew well: silver.

“Not to me, not in Dolareido. But I speak with witches in other cities from time to time. The dogs pass through some cities, and some have dogs that live there. Some of the idiot beasts hang out in the woods, in forests near villages. They hunt things, and they kill anyone that gets in their way.” He shook his head some more, and waved the small dagger in front of her. “I ask the Circle: how do you kill these fuckers? How do you make them suffer?” A deep breath and sigh later, he kissed the blade. “They say: don’t.”

Knock knock.

“Triss,” Julias said, smile on his face.

“Every time you open that door, it’s like a scene from a movie. You need new doors.” She unfolded her arms from her chest, and gestured to the enormous things and the ridiculous knocker, before stepping inside her love’s mansion. Heh, mansion.

“It helps scare away young Invictus who’d treat me like a mentor otherwise, or something.”

“Yeah, I can see that. The young ones can be real pests.” How Garry put up with people like her, she didn’t know. “Maybe you should dye your hair? Blond slicked back like that is classic mafia stuff.”

“But the mafia look helps scare them off too.” He ran his fingers through his hair, and how it was combed back over his head, slick to his scalp.

Laughter. A nice change from Jacob’s new somber attitude.

The laptop made a quiet thud as she set it down on a nearby table. No need to explain, Julias knew she wanted to charge it. She started to walk the halls of Julias’s mansion, and Julias followed after her. One of their usual games, since the man had such a huge home and she did love to explore it. Every time she visited, she found a new room she’d yet to see.

“We never explore the basement very much,” she said. “How much of it have you explored?”

“All of it,” he said. “It’s about what you’d expect from a man like Viktor. Lots of tunnels, hidden rooms, all dead ends so no one’s sneaking into the mansion that way. But he’s got a lot of rooms down there, and a dungeon with some skeletons, real ones.”

“Real ones?” Fucking creepy. Not that she was one to talk, given her old hangout in the catacombs.

“Yeah. Did you want to see?”

“Hmmm ... sure.” She hooked her arm around his, and started to walk like a proper lady. If she had an umbrella and a vintage dress, it would have fit much better than her white tank top, black jeans, and army boots.

Sure enough, Julias broke, and laughed until he had to find a railing to stabilize himself. She tugged on him before he could though, and he almost tripped until she caught him, only for her to return his laugh.

Good god they were giggling like a bunch of idiots in love.

“So,” she said once they got their bearings, “guide me.”

---

“Daaaaaaamn.” Her voice echoed down the hallway, and came back to her as a ghostly thing, drowned in the sound of old rocks and cold metal bars. It really was a dungeon, the sort of dungeon they had over a hundred years ago, the sort with old light bulbs hanging from dusty old cables from cracked concrete ceilings. “Must have built this during World War One?”

“Yeah. Earlier even, probably as a tunnel, and he had the cells and such added later.”

“Did Viktor never bring you down here?” she said.

“No. He was a private man from the day I met him.”

She walked ahead of him, and peeked around corners to look into the empty cells and their dangling chains, their metal chairs and tables, before looking over her shoulder at him.

“... Viktor was a real fucking monster.” Maybe too much, insulting his old sire like that.

“Before his long torpor, he wasn’t so bad.” The white knight came up to her, and put an arm around her shoulder as the two slow walked through the abandoned tunnels of Viktor’s underground dungeon. “In fact, he was a great mentor. I learned a lot from him, and he was happy to share his skills with me. He was brutal, ruthless, cold, but ... wise, and when others would get angry or irrational, he stayed cool, calm. He could cut through the shit and get to the heart of the problem; and come out on top. He taught me how to read people. He taught me how to play poker. He wasn’t ... actively vicious.” He hugged her a little tighter, and she sank her head into the nook of his arm. “Came back from sleeping for years a nefarious, diabolical creature.”

“Good word use.” That got some more chuckles out of her man. “I barely knew Jerem. Horrible monster of a man stalked me, I know that, before he turned me. I used to catch glimpses of him in the shadows, this weird man who kept popping up out of nowhere. He had this weird crocodile kinda mouth, and I thought he was wearing a creepy mask or something. Fuck, if only I knew.” She stopped by one of the cells, and stepped inside. There were a few bones on one of the tables, including a skull. Damn Viktor was a strange man to keep this shit in his home.

“We both had our embrace forced upon us, by our now dead sires.” Mire followed her in, and sat down in the chair with its back to his stomach, his arms across the top. Fit him perfectly, like he was going to give an interrogation. “But, much as that was horrible, and royally horrible at that, I’m glad it happened. Wouldn’t have met you otherwise.”

“Yeah, me too.” She sat on the edge of the table and picked up the skull; held it out in front of her too, and smirked. “Alas, poor Yorick.”

More chuckles from the two of them. So completely at odds with a dungeon that must have seen more than a few deaths, and knowing Viktor, a chunk of them were probably innocent. The Prince always encouraged Kindred to only kill kine if they deserved it, but it wasn’t a rule.

“I learned a lot from Viktor, about reading people, and ... and you’re sending me a lot of fear signals.”

“What? The fuck I am.” She set the skull down and frowned at him.

“Yeah, you are.” He reached out for the chair behind him, and slid it across the cracked concrete floor. “Sit.”

More frowns, but with a humph and annoyed groan, she sat down. Fool her once, shame on him, fool her a dozen times, shame on her. The man had a habit of saying truthful things that really hurt, but once you got through the pain, you became a better person. Or something like that. She just knew that, if she gave Superman a chance, he found a kernel of truth she knew she liked to avoid.

With the table between them, it had suddenly become an interrogation.

“Alright Mire, hit me.”

Mire smirked. Yeah, that’s right, last name defense.

“Your eyes have been on the ground more often than usual. Your shoulders have been slouching a little more than normal. You’ve avoided eye contact, but at the same time hugged me more than normal. When I opened the door, your arms were across your chest. And your claws have been tugging on the bottom of your shirt.”

One of her claws was tugging on the bottom of her tank top over her hip.

“ ... fuck.” She lifted it and put it on her knee. “ ... fuck fuck, where do you normally put your hands?”

“So, you’re afraid. Want to talk about it?”

“No! I wanted to come over and have sex and get cuddly.” Which was totally true she thought. But he wasn’t buying it. Superman shook his head a little, and slid in closer to the table.

“Lot of shit happening these days, Triss. I know I’m afraid. First it was Garry and my colleagues getting in each other’s way, pushing for a fight, border skirmishes you know about. And I’m trying my best to keep that from happening. And now, werewolves are here, and ... and I remember what they were like last time they were here Triss. All I could do was stay out of their way. And Jacob, he ... your leader is a scary man when he wants to be, Triss. He’s smart, strong, and very, very ... very...”

She stared at her Superman, head slowly leaning in more and more as he confessed his fears. God, he was thinking the same things she was.

“Very psycho, when he wants to be,” she said. “ ... yeah, I’m scared. At first I was just worried about Garry and my old buds, but now Avery is back and, and ... Jacob told me what these wolves can do.”

“Has Jacob told you—”

“Yeah, he told me about Avery, and his girl Minerva. Was pretty weird, hearing my boss so somber and depressed and shit. I mean, fuck, he’s Jacob. Him getting quiet? Him getting ... normal? He’s going to do something.” Not like she was ratting him out. No doubt all the Primogen assumed the man was going to do something. “Just ... no idea what he can do against these beasts.”

“There’s a good reason we don’t try and force them out.” Julias got up off the chair and sat on the table edge in front of her. “You can kill them, if you’re willing to throw a wall of silver and bodies at them. They might have other weaknesses that we don’t know about, but the wolves keep to themselves and guard their secrets from us pretty closely. And ... better that they do, I imagine. Not sure I want to get involved in what they do.”

“Not going to hit me with that knowledge is dangerous crap, are you? I can’t agree with that, ever. Knowledge is knowledge, and knowledge is always useful. Only problem is with the people who get it, not the knowledge itself.” Well look at her, sounding all philosophical and crap.

Superman nodded, and reached out with a hand. She took it. The delightful rush of his grip, his fingers around hers, pulling her toward him, until he had her standing between his knees while he sat on the table. He pulled her hand up to his lips, and gave her knuckles a soft kiss too.

“Yeah, and Jacob can be one of those people you don’t want to have it.”

Ah, that. Right. “Yeah,” she said. “But ... but he’s Jacob. I mean, before when I was Carthian, he was always this imposing figure. Since joining the Circle though, I’ve gotten to know him a bit better, and I really...”

“Triss if I didn’t know any better, I’d think you liked him.”

“Hey!” She tried to step out from between his knees, but he kept her hands in his and pulled her right back to them. “I ... kind of like him, I guess. The longer I’m in the Circle, the more I respect him, and disagree with him about things less, and stuff.”

“Elders have that effect on people. Even Viktor had his moments,” he said. Hard to imagine that asshole getting on anyone’s good side. “But, yeah, Jacob is ... I’ll keep an eye on him Triss, see if I can head off any problems before they get rolling.”

Jack had said the same thing. Like sire, like childe.

“Good luck with that.” She sighed, and turned around before leaning back into her love’s arms. “If anything, he’ll be the one to make them.”

“Yeah well, I’m pretty good at what I do. I’ll keep him out of harm’s way best I can, even his own.”

She leaned her head back over his shoulder, and relaxed into his body. Superman was a smart man, but Jacob was Jacob. If she had to bet on one of them to win in a battle of wits, she’d pick Jacob, no question. Still, Julias was good at what he did, damn good. She should trust him.

She turned her head, and gave his jawline a kiss. “Love you.”

“Love you.”

“Good, through with the I-love-yous. I had a lot more toys I wanted to try in that box.”

“We’re in a dungeon. There are bones down here. And you’re thinking about sex?”

She reached down, grabbed his hands, and put them onto her tits, complete with a few shakes and rubs so her nipple piercings pressed into his palms. “Yes I am damn it. Think this shit bothers me? I hung out in a catacomb for years ... but, I would prefer to fuck in a nicer locale.”

~~Julias~~

“Daaaaaaaaamn,” she said again.

It was the closest thing the mansion had to a living room, one of its many, but its most luxurious. A large room with several tables upon a glorious, massive, soft rug of curling reds along a blue base. The walls were tall, maroon, with black and gold drapes against wooden frames. A chandelier hung above, a fireplace big enough to fit a car stood at the back, and long couches lined the walls. The sort of room you’d have your richest guests over for, to sample caviar while admiring the paintings of renaissance Europe.

“So, wanna bet if I dig up these floorboards, there’s a corpse underneath here?” She walked into the center of the room, directly beneath the chandelier and between the four tables. “I’m sure they’ve used this place for several murder mystery movies.”

“Maybe. It wouldn’t surprise me.” He sat down by the fireplace. Unlit; Kindred didn’t like fire. But they did like long, soft couches.

“I was disappointed with the size of my original sex box, and decided to raid Soft Touch’s shelves.”

“Oh, that’s why the new box was so huge.”

“Yeah. Come on man, I’m surrounded by sex all damn night. Forgive a girl for having it on the mind when she goes out.” She set the big box down atop one of the circle tables, and popped it open before she started placing various objects beside it. Dildos, lubricant, jewelry, lingerie, she piled it all atop the expensive wood of the table next to the fine china and such.

“I can see that.”

“And besides, you ever have anyone over to use these rooms? Viktor played the game with these rooms, had important kine over he could buy out. Or dominate if he couldn't, I'm sure.” She took off her jeans and threw them onto a nearby couch.

God damn her legs. The woman had a habit of wearing a thong when she came to visit, despite her frequent complaints about how uncomfortable they were. Ass floss, she called them; and yet there she stood with the black thong riding high on her hip and disappearing into the curves of her delicious, toned behind. She blushed life as well, and her pale skin darkened with her natural, lightly tanned skin tone.

Still wearing her boots though, black combat boots. Matched her white tank top perfectly.

“Should I—”

“Nope. Don't move for now. I wanna have some fun,” she said. “But you can blush.”
