She shook her head. “No. The ritual to force open the door is all me.” And she wished it wasn’t. It was going to be painful, and she’d lose a lot of blood doing it. So it was a good thing Jack would be there when it happened, to keep her going. No way in hell she was going to stay back after the ritual was complete. “You really don’t think you could do a ritual?”

The Gangrel shook his head as well. “No. It seems to require a mindset, the ability to ... feel, as much as think, about something.”

“And what, you’re all thinking, no feeling?”

“I suppose. There’s a reason witchcraft has typically been a female occupation.”

Laughing, she gave him back the book, and scooted in closer to him so she could sit beside him, back to the wall as well.

“No, I’m pretty sure that was just sexism from the medieval ages. Oh no, this woman seduced me! Clearly she used evil powers to do so. She must be a witch, burn her! Oh hey the priest gets to absorb all her possessions. How convenient.”

Aaron nodded, a very scientific nod, the sort of nod one made when discussing the latest medical journals, or philosophy papers. “That’s true, but I think there might be a hint of truth to it. Not the seduction part, but that women have a capacity for witchcraft men don’t.”

“Totally explaining our boss.”

Aaron smiled, a rare occurrence, and shrugged. “Jacob the warlock. Do you think our boss is a typical man?”

“No, I suppose not.” No one could figure out Jacob, except for Minerva, a dead woman. “Did Othello ever talk to Minerva?”

“Not to my knowledge.”

“Damn. It’d be nice to learn something about her. Learn about her, and we might learn about him.”

Predictably, Aaron disagreed. “Let sleeping dogs lie, Triss.”

“Not sure I can do that.” Not only was it a favor the Prince had asked for, but Beatrice was genuinely curious about her boss and his past. What had driven him to become the man he was? Given his age and how torpor affected the mind, especially when elders took to it for decades to let their bloodlust settle, she doubted he remembered his neonate years with any clarity. But damn, it’d have been amazing to get to learn about the psychopath that was Jacob, and how he got so involved with the Circle, with Crúac, and the Crone.

“You don’t think maybe it can wait? This talk of Jacob and Minerva,” Aaron said.

“Wait? Until what?”

The Gangrel sighed, looked down, and ran a finger along the spine of his book. “Until your own wounds have healed?”

She winced at that. Fuck him for bringing it up, and fuck him for being worried about her. She didn’t want worry or pity or sympathy, she wanted revenge. And in the meantime, she could learn about the man making it possible.

“What makes you think it’ll ever heal? I doubt Jacob’s wound has.”

“He knew Minerva for decades. And—”

“And what, because I only knew Julias for a couple years, I’ll heal faster?” Don’t cheapen her love of the man, you fucking asshole. Grinding her teeth, she looked down, and tapped her claws together in her lap, feeling guilty for the thought. “It’s still raw. Fuck me, it’s still so damn raw.”

“It hasn’t even been five weeks, Triss. Give it time.”

“I am! I am...” She didn’t spend her nights crying anymore. A sob might slip out of her in the few minutes before dawn, but the nightmares weren’t so vivid the past few sleeps. She still dreamed of his face, his warm kisses and gentle touch, and she still dreamed of him disintegrating into a pile of ash. She didn’t hear his screams anymore though, or dream of ghostly images taunting her for not being there.

One night at a time, the pain would fade. She knew that, and she wasn’t sure she liked that. She needed that pain, a fire under her feet to make sure she got revenge. And once she had it, the screams of her dreams would pale compared to what she'd pull from that bitch Angela.

“If you ever need my help, just ask, ok?”

“Don't make a promise you can't keep.”

“What makes you think I won't keep it?”

“Because, of the two of us, I think you're a little less likely to do something insanely stupid, and throw yourself into the fray on a whim.”

A small chuckle later, Aaron shrugged. “I'm smart, Triss, all the time. Maybe I'd like to do something stupid every once in a while.”

She returned his chuckle, louder, until she was outright laughing. God damn it, Aaron was smart and wise. Lucky fucker.

“I'll make sure to remember that, Aaron. But don't complain when you're buried neck deep in bullshit.”

---

---

~~Jack~~

Tonight would be his first night working with the Uratha again, doing sweeps. A visit to see Avery was a good idea, to keep up to date on how they were doing, and to do his job of preventing conflicts. Much as he wanted to forget about his responsibilities, and spend another year or two resting in Antoinette's bed, he had responsibilities. Maybe doing them would keep his mind off of Julias. And maybe he could learn something about ghosts.

Jacob probably knew a lot about ghosts, considering the nature of the Circle of the Crone. They dealt with death as often as undeath, and ghosts fit right between those two concepts. He wasn't sure he wanted Jacob to know about Mary, but Jacob had probably dealt with specters many times in his fucked up life. Maybe if he talked to Beatrice about it, she could learn something about it for him.

“Can’t believe you met your sister!” Jessy threw her hands up in shock; there was way too much television in her life. “Fuck me, that must have been weird, and painful.”

“It was definitely painful.” He shook his shoulders out. The fact he was used to the sensation of breaking bones and popping joints was not a good thing, and he closed his eyes as he tried to let the memories go. Not easy to let those memories fade away, at least not without Antoinette at his side, stroking his head and helping his mental wounds heal.

Jessy and Jack sat in one of the Invictus cars, driven by a thrall. You could always trust a thrall, at least more than a Kindred, considering their vitae addiction and the Vinculum. This one’s name was Matthew Kensworth, a thrall of Michael’s, and the man would know better than to repeat anything he heard in the black vehicle.

“What’re you gonna do?”

“Not sure. She’s dead, Jessy. There’s not much I can do for her, except help her pass on. And I don’t have the faintest idea how to do that.”

Jessy, dressed in an Invictus suit same as him, looked at him with complete empathy. With every word he said, he could see she was envisioning his words, and suffering them as he had suffered. So he didn’t go too deep into the worst parts, the physical damage or the emotional trauma. No need to bring her down, too.

“Did you get to talk to her, at least? Maybe say things you wished you could have said?”

Jack smiled. “I did.”

“Good! Nice to know there’s some silver lining to such a shitty situation. But, god damn, I can’t imagine the pain your mother is in.” Leave it to Jessy to cut through the bullshit and get straight to the heart of a situation. His mother was all too happy to have Mary back in her life, and that was not a good thing.

“Yes, she is. Maybe Antoinette can help.”

“Or Jacob.”

Of course Jessy would think of him, same as Jack had. “I’d prefer to keep him out of this.”

“Why?”

“Why?” He blinked at her, several times. “Because it’s Jacob.”

“So? Dude’s only ever helped you. He’s taken a liking to you.”

That, Jack wasn’t so sure about. ‘Taken a liking to’ implied something a little different than ‘being intrigued by’. Maybe Jacob foresaw all the shit that’d fall on Jack’s lap, and just thought he was interesting for it, the unpredictable factor that Jacob once applied to both him and Damien.

“I’m surprised you’re wearing a suit,” he said.

“Yeah well, this is official business. Michael doesn’t like it when I dress casual on business, even with the werewolves. Besides, it’s Eric I’m friends with, not Avery.”

“Just friends?”

She laughed, but avoided his eyes. There was something there, something in her gaze, a spark of joy, and a hint of a smile that betrayed her. She liked Eric, a lot.

“Speaking of Eric,” he said. “Ask him about Luna.”

“Luna?”

“Yes, Luna. I ... heard the name mentioned recently, so I’m pursuing a lead.”

“Hmm. Is it ok if I tell him it’s you asking?”

He nodded. “Yeah, sure.” Because he might not mind if Jack was asking, but he probably would if it was a witch, one who heard the name from a mythical entity. Avoiding telling the whole truth like this was a key skill of a good manipulator. Look at him, learning.

“So what’re you gonna talk to Avery about?” she said.

“I’ll mention Mary. The werewolves know about spirits, so maybe they know about ghosts. But mostly I just want to know how the sweeps have been. And, if I can, see if they’ll let slip some indirect information about how their relationship with Garry is going.”

“Good.” Nodding, Jessy leaned back in the car seat and stared up at the ceiling as she hooked her fingers behind her head, into her short blonde hair. “I hope we catch these hunters soon.”

“We all do.”

“Yeah but I mean, really soon. If we take too long, you know what’s going to happen.”

“What?”

She snapped her head back up and blinked at him. “We’ll get used to it, and the covenants will stop working together. They’ll stop setting aside their squabbles, our squabbles, and just accept the hunters as a way of life. And they’ll do this because I’m sure the elders would prefer to be protecting their asses from each other, than dealing with the hunters. It’ll be us out on the streets, risking our necks, while our bosses hide behind walls, giving orders.”

Each word earned a wince from him, and he did a triple take at the driver to make sure he wasn't listening too hard. No doubt the thrall heard every word, but Jack didn't notice any sparks of surprise from him.

“So we're under a time limit before this bullshit becomes normal, and our bosses go back to focusing on the wrong things?”

“Exactly. When shit goes from a surprise to a common thing, we stop treating it with the respect it deserves.”

Damn, Jessy was smarter than she let on. When a problem went from acute to chronic, people did stop treating it like the crisis it was, despite how it being a chronic problem was actually worse. She saw it, when others didn't.

It was hard to know how much to trust Jessy. She was becoming a good friend, and she had a head on her shoulders, despite all evidence to the contrary. But she wasn't exactly quiet, and he didn't know how good she was at lying, or at least not telling Michael what she knew about things. He'd involved her in a lot of stuff, and told her about how he killed Viktor, Lucas, and Tony already. But letting her know about the mysterious threat Azamel insisted remained, was still a concern, and probably a step too far, at least until he knew the cause.

How would she take that, when he finally did tell her? Probably angry, understanding but angry that he kept it secret. And maybe he actually could tell her that something was up, since she hadn't told Michael about what Jack did to Viktor. Then again, maybe she had? The better he got to know Maria and Michael, the more it became apparent they were happy Viktor and Tony were dead. Lucas, on the other hand, Maria still mourned.

He should trust her more, he should. He really should, just, not right now.

---

Avery and Clara were the only ones in the apartment this time. Both of them frowned, looking at him and Jessy, and he could see it was because of the suits. But after looking at him for a few seconds, their frowns deepened, and it wasn't because of the suits.

“Jack,” Clara said, blinking at him, “you smell ... different.”

Both wolves, who were sitting on the couch, stood up. The muscles in their bodies tensed, and both of them sniffed the air a few times as they stared at him. He doubted the curse actually made an odor, but it made sense that werewolf senses could pick up on more than biological stuff, if they could hunt spirits.

“I know you two know about the curse,” he said. “Natasha knows, so Matt and Art know, so you know. And everyone knows.”

“We do,” Avery said, still frowning as she looked him up and down. “We didn't know what to think. Sweeps started, and we figured we'd learn that way, but you've been avoiding working with us.”

“I have. Just ... been trying to get a grip on things. Didn't want to ... expose myself, I suppose.” Uratha weren't Begotten, they couldn't see the truth behind the meat of his body, but they could still see more than he wanted.

Or maybe he just didn't want Clara to see him like this. He managed to meet her gaze, but when he did, her frown vanished, replaced with the sympathy he didn't want to see. Letting the others know that he was fucked up with some sort of ancient curse didn't bother him so much, now that he thought about it. Letting Clara see him like this did.

Pride, or something else? He didn't know.

“Don't worry about my bud Jack,” Jessy said, hooking an arm over his shoulders. “We'll get his situation fixed up eventually, and get back things to the way they were.”

“How?” Clara said.

Grinding his teeth for a second, Jack shrugged, and slipped out of Jessy’s embrace. “The curse was sealed away once before, we’ll figure out how to do so again. In the mean time, it’s not a problem. It gives me power, and for now, that’s all that matters.” Hollow words. Clara’s face said it all, that she knew he was lying, and that he was in pain. True as that was, it really didn’t matter. They had a job to do, and revenge to be had.

“Works for me,” Avery said. “Just avoid Black Blood, would you? He’s taken an interest in you.”

Jessy flinched, and looked down at him for a second. No words needed to be said. Jacob and Black Blood were both interested in him, and this curse, probably as something they could manipulate and use. Wonderful.

“I have no interest in dealing with Black Blood anymore than I have to.”

Avery’s frown darkened. “That wasn’t what I wanted to hear.”

“What do you want from me? He’s close with Jacob, and Jacob is hunting the hunters as much as the rest of us.”

“It,” Avery said with emphasis, “is a nasty fucker that will do everything it can to spread its influence, Jack.”

“Which is?” He stepped in closer, and glared at the short, sturdy woman. “What is it about Black Blood that has you wolves so upset with it, and confused by it?”

“It...” Avery met his gaze, but she was struggling to find a retort. “Black Blood’s an unusual spirit, very fucked up. It’s up to something, and it can't be good. You've seen it, right? Or at least the pieces of it it brings over in Jacob's fucked up rituals. You can't honestly believe it's trustworthy." An admittance of ignorance, wow. He didn't expect that of Avery. Maybe she was starting to trust him, or she was desperate about the situation.

"He, it, whatever, rescued Clara from Sándor's nightmare, didn't he? Cut him a break." Even as he said it, he poked holes in the logic. If Black Blood wanted them to trust him, the way to do that would be to do things like save one of the werewolves Jacob so despised. But to what end?

"Jack," Clara said, leaning her butt against the back edge of the dingy old couch, and folding her arms across her chest. A pondering stance. "Something's happening in the city. We don't know what, but something's happening. And now you have this curse thing, and —"

"The curse has nothing to do with Black Blood."

"But that won't stop it from trying to take advantage of you somehow." Clara shook her head, sighing as she looked down, idly kicking at the back of the couch. "How ... how strong is this curse?"

"Just find the hunters, and I'll take care of them. All of them." Before they could respond, he put up his hands in surrender. "I won't go in alone, I'm not stupid. But at the hospital, I took down a bunch of hunters alone, and I could have taken a dozen more. The curse is ... reliable, ok?"

The two werewolves looked between each other, and the doubt was blatant. God, how frustrating a conversation this would have been in front of the whole pack. Maybe that's why the others weren't here, so he could talk to the leader and second-in-command without that problem.

“Alright,” Avery said. “You haven’t steered is wrong, and we trust you; as much as you can trust a vampire.”

He grinned at that. “Thanks. And, I wanted to ask you about something. Who’s Luna?”

The two women raised a brow, glanced at each other, and nodded.

“Luna is mate to Father Wolf,” Clara said. “We call her Amahan Iduth. Most know her as the moon. When Father Wolf, Urfatah, was murdered by his children, it was Luna who cursed them. Ever since then, the Uratha try to fulfill the duty Father Wolf performed, hunting between worlds and keeping the balance. But, she’s not exactly happy with us. Sometimes Uratha are called the Forsaken, because of what our ancestors did.”

Avery sat down on the couch Clara was leaning against, and looked at the muted TV and the news it was playing. “By serving Luna, we have gained her favor.”

“Favor?” Jessy said.

“Yeah, but I think we’ve spilled enough of our secrets for one night,” Avery said. “Besides, it’s all mythology. We don’t know if any of it is true. Clara and I, and even that asshole Eric, are Cahalith, and sometimes we get dreams that ... that suggest Luna is quite real.”

So Cahalith had dreams, special dreams. It fit what he knew about them, honestly. Werewolves were hunters of spirits, part spirit themselves, and if that included talking to the moon, or bear spirits or tree spirits, then he shouldn’t have been surprised.

“Suggest? Have any of you talked to her?”

Avery and Clara shook their heads.

“It’s been heard of,” Clara said, “but an actual conversation? No.”

Then the weird message Beatrice got about Luna was probably about Eric then. If he looked at Jessy now, to make some eye contact and let her know he was thinking about Eric, then Avery and Clara would know he was talking about Eric. Then again, he asked about Luna, and they were the ones that brought up Eric. Maybe they knew about it?

“Where’d you learn the name?” Avery said.

“Conversation with Jacob. Drifted to the Uratha.” Which, wasn’t completely a lie. Except a half truth is worse than a lie, and he knew that. A guilty conscious is a bitch. “I had another question, something unrelated, and ... I’m really hoping you can help.” He could ask about Garry at the end of the meeting.

Avery frowned, eyes drilling into him, and probably trying to figure out why Jacob would be wondering about Luna.

“What’s up?” Clara asked.

He stepped in a little closer, and his eyes fell. “What do you guys know about ghosts?”

“Ghosts?” Clara looked to Avery, who shrugged and looked back to the news. The subtitles were on. What was it about older people and watching the news muted with subtitles on? “You ran into a ghost?”

“I did.”

“Holy shit. Whose?”

“My ... sister’s.”

Clara blinked at him, several times, and Avery turned around to look over the couch back at him. Silence flattened the room, as he predicted it would, and everyone's eyes fell away as the uncomfortable reality set in. Yeah, his dead sister was alive, in a fashion, a very poor, horrible fashion, making the misery of her death a terrible mess of resurrected pain.

So, to fill the silence, he explained. He explained about the trip to the house, and that his mother was with him. He explained about the strange cold, and weight that permeated his old home. And he explained about the mist, and the ghost that followed it, his sister.

Clara and Avery stared at him like he was telling a fictional but compelling ghost story, and not a literal recounting. The spark of pride over telling an interesting story vanished in seconds in the sorrow of the memory of his sister's screams. It wasn't a fun memory.

"We've dealt with a few ghosts," Avery said, "every now and then. It's never ended pretty, Jack. Ghosts don't age well. They get more and more twisted with time, and mean."

"But you can deal with them?"

The pack leader nodded, turned the TV off, and hooked her arm over the back of the couch so she could look at him more easily. "Yes, we can deal with them. Ghosts are made of similar stuff as spirits. But I've never ... It's never gone well. You sure you can't convince her to leave on her own? To crossover?"

Easier said than done. How the fuck was he supposed to do that, when it was clear she didn't want to die or crossover or whatever, and his mom didn't want her to either. Being in the house with her was like being in the shadow of something that wasn't supposed to be up, out of the dirt, walking around, smelling of death. Maybe it would have been easier if she was a zombie, out of one of those really shit TV shows, and the emotional dilemma would have been resolved by forcing himself to shoot her in the head. There, problem solved. No conversation needed.

Who the fuck could convince someone that they needed to die? How the fuck was he supposed to do that? And it wasn't like he had a leg to stand on, being an undead creature. His heart wasn't beating, and his lungs didn't do shit with the air he breathed. Every word out of his mouth to his sister, about letting go and moving on, would have been borderline hypocritical.

"I don't know what to do," he said. "Mary doesn't want to leave, and my mom doesn't want her to, either."

"She's going to get nasty, Jack," Avery insisted, "they always do. She's not a spirit, like the spirits from the Hisil. Your sister is a human, with the body of a spirit. It's not right, and it's going to drive her insane."

He looked down again, avoiding yet another reason for the pitying gazes of others, and clenched his teeth. "If it comes to it, can I ask one of you to help me?"

Clara came up to him, and nudged a hand on his shoulder. "Of course, Jack. Of course. If you need anything, just ask."

He smiled up at the werewolf, and nodded.

Chapter 103

~~Jack~~

Telling Antoinette about Mary had been easier than he thought. Well truthfully, Antoinette talked to him about it, after his mom had filled her in. Jack had promised he wouldn't be visiting Mary for a little while, and Antoinette agreed it was a good idea for both he and his mom to avoid her for a short period of time. His lover also said she might have some ideas, but in the meantime, she'd talk to Samantha about it in depth.

When he'd inquired about 'in depth', she'd dodged the question, saying it was a private business of the Ordo Dracul. He was cool with that. With all the secrets he was learning about the Circle of the Crone, secrets he'd prefer to not know, he was perfectly cool with not learning about the secrets of the Ordo Dracul. Ignorance was bliss.

The hunts continued, but there was still no sign of the hunters, which had everyone on edge. Somehow, the hunters were being healed of the wounds Jack and the others had dealt them, far faster than humanly possible, which had them all anxious to find them as soon as possible. The only explanation was Elen, or maybe some other weird magic the hunters had access to. Either way, it meant the Kindred had to go on the offensive to secure any real advantage, but they couldn't if they couldn't find a target; the hunters were using guerrilla warfare and using it well. It was infuriating.

He joined his proper sweep team with Gloria, Isabella, Clara, and Athalia, and started exploring North Side. It was quiet, out in North Side. It was an hour after sunset, and most people were no longer working. Gloria, their group's Mekhet, was keeping them wrapped in her Face in the Crowd aura, so anyone who spotted them simply wouldn't care. It wasn't past midnight yet, so there was the occasional person walking by, working late hours. As long as no one in their group did something loud or strange, no one would care they existed.

Athalia may as well have put a bell on his neck, with how fixated her eyes were on him. Untrusting. Suspicious. Scared. Gloria and Isabella could tell he changed, and Clara could sense it more than his fellow Kindred, but Athalia could see the reality. The curse, its size and mass, its presence, it was all plainly visible to her. Could she see that it talked? Could she hear its whispering voice in his head, the dark voice telling him to indulge his Kindred desires with all the control of a child entertaining their id? God, he fucking hoped not.

It was good that the curse had manifested itself properly now, instead of being bound to him so tightly by the seal. He could feel its influence more obviously now, instead of a mysterious urge that drove him to violence with subtlety. With its revelation, it was easier to keep it at a distance, and to recognize its desires as something separate from his own. On the other hand, those desires were stronger now, and he knew that at some point, the curse was going to come at him like a typhoon. It was going to overwhelm him, and take control, even if only temporarily.

The memories of the scene at the hospital were still there, maybe a little blurrier than his own memories, but still there. Summoning the crows and unleashing them upon the hunters, the sounds of their screams of agony as hundreds of beaks ripped them open, and the smell of blood and feathers, were permanent memories, cut into his brain with a rusty knife. He could summon that power easily now, and he knew if he did, he would be letting the curse have free reign to run around in his brain. Every time he called upon it, it'd have an easier time getting its claws into him. And he didn't want to give it that opening unless he had to.

Every time he glanced Clara's way, he caught her looking at him. Unlike Athalia, who watched him like he was a bomb ready to go off any moment, Clara could not help but hide her sympathy. She tried, he could see that, but learning that his dead sister was back as a ghost was apparently her breaking point.

"I still can't believe she's back," Clara said.

Isabella, who was ahead of them with Gloria, looked over her shoulder. "Who is back?"

Clara froze, and blinked at him. "Shit, sorry."

Yeah, he hadn't told everyone. It was personal, and not exactly information he wanted floating around. But it wasn't a secret, and maybe it'd be better if people knew.

"My sister is haunting my mother's old home," he said. "And yes, I mean literally haunting."

Everyone stopped walking, and stared at him. Even Athalia, who was following from behind, looked surprised when he glanced her way.

"A ghost?" Gloria said, visibly shaking. "B-But ... that means—"

"Yes, ghosts are real," he said. "Our bosses have dealt with them before, I'm sure. No one talks about them, I guess, because they're ... problems..." What a lovely way to view the situation, thinking of his dead sister like a problem, like an infestation that wouldn't die easy.

"I have known of only one ghost in my lifetime," Isabella said, the tall Daeva tapping a finger on her chin. "We don't speak of it because ... it can be tough to discern what actually happened. Was it a trick of our imagination, a hallucination, some strange repeating dream localized to an area? The one ghost I know of, I passed by the building it haunted. It was ... unsettling, to say the least.”

“Yeah, that’s a good way of describing it. It was unsettling, if unsettling was what you found at the edge of Hell. Now imagine you walked past that edge, down the stairs through each circle of Hell, and then decided to camp out in the center.” He ground his teeth, stared at the sidewalk, and started walking. The group started moving again too, but he could tell they were hesitant. Another glance back showed Athalia was still keeping her distance, but not as far as before, as if the story about Mary had softened her a little. Maybe it had. She was a mother.

“That sounds horrible,” Gloria said. “Why ... why do these horrible things keep happening to you?”

“It’s not me, it’s my sister.” This time, this horrible thing was happening by proxy. That was a step in a better direction, he supposed. Except, not really. If shitty things happened to the people he loved instead of him, that still sucked. “And I don’t know. But, we’re not out here to talk about my sister.”

“Sorry,” Clara said again, “I didn’t realize people didn’t know.”

“It’s fine, it’s fine, really.”

“How is she?” Gloria said, earning a raised brow from everyone. “Er, well, you know what I mean.”

“She’s about as well as you can expect, Gloria. She’s furious about her murder.” And utterly furious with Jack for having harmed her, in a way. But he wasn’t about to bring that up. “Ultimately, the issue with my sister is untimely, and horrible, but there’s a bit of good in it. I got to talk to my sister again.”

Every woman awwed, even Athalia, though when he whipped his head around, he saw only the hard face of a woman who would never dare utter such a sound. Christ he wished there were some men in this team.

“My point being,” he continued, “don’t worry about it. Let’s just focus on our jobs, ok?”

And they did. Isabella and Gloria were both curious, but they let it go, only offering him the occasional glance as they tried to read him. Clara was a little better at focusing, but every so often he met her gaze, and found that hint of sympathy. Or maybe it was understanding. She’d told him once that she’d lost her brother, a kine, and maybe she was envisioning what she’d do if she’d been in Jack’s circumstance. The opportunity to talk to a dead loved one sounded like a good thing on the surface, but the reality was a two-edged sword.

As the hunt went on, Athalia stayed in the back, and kept her eyes on Jack, never quite losing that nervousness she displayed the first time she saw him since the curse awakened. There was more there, though, in her gaze. Maybe she was thinking about Mary, about what it was like for Jack’s mother to speak to the ghost of her daughter. When Angela was dead, how would Athalia take any of it?

Fuck him, if they had to deal with Angela’s ghost too, he wasn’t sure what they’d do. But it wasn’t like ghosts were just wandering around, appearing in the wake of everyone dying. There was no Julias ghost, or Barry ghost, or Viktor or Tony or Lucas ghost. A lot of kine and Kindred had died, and one Uratha too, in the past couple years. No ghosts.

But then, most of those people had died in circumstances that made sense, in a strange way. Stephanie the Uratha had died on a hunt. The vampires died as a part of conflicts that arose from being a vampire, from being hunter and hunted, and from the Danse Macabre. Kine died because Kindred preyed upon them, or because of the various, normal reasons kine died. Mary’s death, on the other hand, had been a freak of circumstance done by a psychopath, and combined with Jack's memory-wiping her before she died, it was probably that anger that kept her from crossing over.

Now that he'd apologized to her, and she'd apologized to him, she was free to crossover, wasn't she? But she hadn't, not yet, and that was a worry that terrified him.

---

A couple days later, it was time to pay Garry a visit.

"I had my first session with the sheriff last night," Damien said. "It was ... painful."

"Painful?" He and his friend rode in an Invictus car, the same one that took him and Jessy to see Avery only a couple days ago. "When Julias and I trained, we did a little physical stuff, him teaching me about using Resilience for defense. You should have seen him Damien, in ... in the hospital. He took a couple hundred bullets from half a dozen firearms, and kept on coming. He was practically a walking skeleton by the end, and still going. Kicked Sándor's ass, Dominated some hunters, and ... yeah."

"Julias was an impressive Ventrue for his age, Jack."

"I wonder how much of that is from the curse. Though, in the memory the curse showed me, Julias's subconscious was ... less enthusiastic about trying to break the seal." Not that the seal needed to be broken to let out its power, but whereas Jack had embraced its power when he could, well before the seal was broken, he doubted Julias had.

"Then I can only guess that it was his own talent, same as your own."

Jack laughed, elbow on the door arm, chin on his palm. "I've relied on the curse plenty."

Damien looked at him, for a long time, until Jack turned his head to make eye contact. “I felt nothing of any curse, that time ... you know when. Only you, a stubborn Ventrue.”

A stubborn Ventrue. Laughing again, Jack nodded, and looked back out the window to watch the slow traffic of South Side.

“Thanks. I didn’t feel it then either, pushing to get out; at least, not as hard. So, maybe it was all me, back then, and maybe it was all Julias, in the hospital. Either way, he was only a century old. I can’t imagine how strong the sheriff is.”

Damien’s eyes fell, and he groaned, the groan of a man who’d finished a grueling workout, and was afraid to do it again in the future. “He’s teaching me how to use a sword, and forcing me to use Celerity and Cloak of Night together, while we fence. I ended my first session utterly starving.”

“Paid a visit to Fiona, I imagine?”

Damien grinned at him. It wasn’t common for Damien to grin. The Mekhet normally kept his facial expressions subtle, like a mini-Daniel, but now he grinned a big grin, and nodded.

“If I had known how ... enjoyable, a relationship can be, I think I would have pursued one even while I was hiding from the Prince.”

“They’re pretty damn amazing. Can Fiona handle giving blood often?”

“She can, she says. Her Begotten body may not be as sturdy or regenerative as the Urathas’, but it still heals quickly, and a quick trip to her nightmare chamber accelerates the process.”

Right, the nightmare chamber, the jungle. It was so easy to forget that Fiona was a Begotten, with a nightmare creature inside her. If he wrote it out on paper, he’d think Fiona was bad for Damien, and that the boy's troubled past would only be worsened by Fiona's borderline evil presence. Maybe an evil girlfriend would turn the man into an evil assassin? But the girl was the biggest ray of sunshine he'd ever known, and was probably the best thing for Damien.

“Julias also trained me in Dominate and Animalism. I assume Daniel is helping you develop Auspex?”

“He is. There are levels of that Discipline that I don't know if I'll ever obtain, but perhaps, someday. I assume you've managed to skip over some steps in your training, because of the curse.”

Groaning, Jack squirmed in the car seat, and threw Damien an annoyed glance. “Yes, but that's not a good thing. Not at all.”

---

“Hello Joe,” Jack said. Him and Damien stood outside one of the rundown apartment buildings in the Carthian half of South Side, where Garry hung out during the night. Jack doubted he slept there, considering how easy it'd be to infiltrate or destroy a building like this during the day, even for thralls. Maybe he had a secret bunker beneath it, or a bomb shelter nearby?

Joe the Carthian stood at the entrance to the apartment building, dressed in some torn jeans and a hoodie. A white guy with a shaved bald head and a bodybuilder physique, he was like a weak version of Michael; a weak version of a deadly-as-hell man wasn't exactly no threat. Joe was a neonate, nothing special, but he'd earned a position working close to Garry, and that meant he had more power to him than was obvious. Hard to imagine, considering the man reeked of stupid henchman syndrome.

There were a few ancilla in the Carthians, tough men and women that could pose a serious threat to any Kindred. Why didn't Garry have them guarding him? Maybe they were, and Jack couldn't see them. Either way, having to deal with Joe was annoying enough.

Maybe Garry knew Joe annoyed the Invictus, and that's why he had Joe as his door man? That would actually be pretty smart, if Garry's goal was to be a jackass. And it was, to some degree or another.

"Jack, Damien." Rolling his eyes and sighing, Joe stepped back and let them enter. "Garry's been expecting you."

Jack nodded, a very proper nod, with a hint of Invictus superiority to it. Despite himself, knowing full well such an action would do nothing but annoy a Carthian, he did it anyway. At this point, he assumed it was typical faction brainwashing. He had no real reason to hate the Carthians, but because they were generally considered an enemy of the Invictus, aggressive or hateful thoughts seeped into the brain with time.

Not exactly being a good peacemaker with thoughts like that. So he took a deep, useless breath, and tried to purge them. How would Antoinette treat the situation? She'd be annoyed with Garry, and everyone else who didn't have the foresight to make decisions with 10,000 possible futures, for a thousand years beyond, in mind. But, she would do her best to eliminate bias, and enter every conversation with a clear head, and an eye for pragmatic conclusions. He could do that.

Garry was on the top floor, in an office; not an office really, but a re-purposed apartment. No wonder the werewolves got along with him.

"Jack," he said from behind a large, beat up, old wooden desk.

Oh, this is where the ancilla were. Two men and one woman, the strongest of the Carthians, and as far as he knew, half of the total ancilla in the covenant. And they were here, when they could be out looking for hunters. Garry didn't trust Jack or Damien, and he wanted backup in case he needed it.

“Garry,” he said. “You uh, looking for a fight?” He gestured to the three Kindred sitting on a nearby couch. The two guys were playing a fighting game, and the woman was reading a book. If there’d been chips and beer on the wooden table between the TV and two couches they were using, Jack would have recognized the scene from his college days. Not a scene he’d ever partaken in, but one he saw plenty in the various break rooms.

“Course not. But I’m not stupid. Lucas’s childe, right here, in my office? God damn, how easy it’d be to put a rest to this whole project of Maria’s, if you were dead.” He leaned forward, set his elbows on his desk, and pointed at Damien. “I could tolerate your existence when you were just an Invictus dog, but now you’re a church slave again?”

Ok, so, this was going well. An aggressive Gangrel, and an elder at that, was looking at Damien like he wanted to kill him, and it was Damien and Jack’s job to convince Garry to calm down about the return of the Lancea et Sanctum. Wonderful.

Damien frowned for a moment, but kept his hands in his coat pockets. The man would have at least one, if not two pistols hidden inside the coat, and he had that long sword hidden in the back of it as well; sitting down wasn’t an option for him. Sighing, the Mekhet simply stood there, withdrew his hands, and folded them across his chest.

“I remember you,” Damien said, “during the purge. I remember the smile on your face as you stormed the church I was in.”

Garry returned the frown, leaned back in his chair, and put his feet up on the desk. “And?”

“You have a lot of nerve,” the Mekhet continued, “acting like a leader for a covenant of anarchists, raging against the machine, when really you just like fighting and killing.”

Jack winced. Yeah, there was some truth to that. Garry looked like he ate knuckle fights and breathed bullets since he was a just a kid, and the man's history lent to that deduction. The Gangrel loved to fight, a rebel without a cause, until another Carthian gave him one. Now he was the thorn in the Invictus's side, and once the Lancea et Sanctum's before their demise in Dolareido.

Maybe Maria made a mistake, sending Damien here.

“Fuck you,” Garry said, without lowering his feet. “It’s not a crime to like your job. I was taking out the trash that night, for weeks before, and for weeks after. I guess I missed my calling as a garbage man.”

Fucking god, how did Viktor ever put up with this man enough to actually invite him to gatherings? The Carthian was looking for a reason to argue, a reason to fight, a reason to say Jack and Damien fucked up, and no way in hell was Garry letting the Lancea et Sanctum come back.

Remember what Antoinette would do, what you'd do, before you were given the power to kick this fucker in the teeth. Be calm, be calculating, and be intelligent.

It was surprising how much easier it was to give into frustration, when he knew he had the power to make change in a physical way. Every piece of him wanted to use it, to just force the issue, and bypass having to deal with the idiots in his way. Maybe that's how totalitarians were born?

“Garry Tones,” Jack said, “you know by now that my colleague Mister Burksen has aided the Kindred of Dolareido in multiple capacities since the death of his sire. He has, of his own volition, expressed remorse over Lucas's actions, and dismay when he learned of his sire's rather tyrannical plans. Madam Turio herself has shown sorrow over Lucas's actions. The Lancea et Sanctum you are familiar with is not the Second Estate that Burksen or Turio wish to revive. You are judging them based on the actions of a singular, disturbed individual.”

Garry snorted, and poked himself in the temple with two fingers. Garry was average height for a male, with a shaved head not unlike Joe, but while Joe was much larger, Garry’s lean physique and myriad of scars spoke of a far more eventful first life. He was a scary man. The fact the three ancilla did not lift their heads from what they were doing also gave him a crass ‘I do shit myself’ atmosphere.

“You know, Jack,” Garry said, “I can’t help but wonder if you were sent here to pressure me.”

“Pressure? Me?”

“Yes, you. Everyone knows about this curse business, Jack. Story going around is you summoned a million crows, and—”

“It was more like, ten thousand, but—”

“And that you defeated a couple dozen hunters in that hospital.”

“It was, like, six, and—”

“The point is, Jack, that everyone thinks you’re here as an enforcer, that the wonder kid with the big bad curse is here to bully me.” Sighing, Garry leaned back in his chair and hooked his hands behind his head. “That’s not good for business.”

Jack ground his teeth until his jaws hurt. Good for business was a nice way of putting ‘not good for his image’, a very Invictus way of putting it. Calling Garry out on it would have guaranteed an argument, but that wasn’t his reason for being here. He had a job, to keep the peace between the paranormals, and at least attempt to do so with the covenants in a capacity Primogen meetings couldn’t.

“I’m not here to push you into anything, Tones. This is a mission of peace.”

Apparently, he’d said something funny. The two guys playing video games stopped, paused the game, and looked at him with a raised brow. The woman stopped reading her book. Garry himself raised a brow, like he didn’t believe a word he was hearing. God damn it.

“It’s a good thing I trust Antoinette, at least a little,” Garry said, “or I’d call bullshit on this curse thing.”

Jack saw where this was going, and he didn’t like it. “I’m not going to prove to you the curse is real. I’m sure you can feel it.”

“I’m not sure what I feel, kid, but I don’t make grand decisions without knowing exactly what’s going on.”

“Nothing’s going on.” Tempted, so damn tempted to start yelling. “This thing with me, the curse, it has nothing to do with why we’re here. I’m here because it’s my job to play liaison. Damien’s here because he wanted to meet you face to face, and show that he’s sincere.”

“And I am sincere,” Damien said. “I’m not your enemy, Garry. All I want to do is teach the word of Longinus to those who wish to learn.”

“Pfft.” Garry got out of the chair, stepped around his desk, and sat against its front edge as he folded his arms across his chest. Defensive stance. “You stormed the Prince’s precious tower, and tried to kill her. You expect me to believe you’re just going to sit around and play preacher, boy?”

“It was mistake, and one I’m glad to have survived.”

Jack glared at Garry, but kept his mouth shut. The underground tunnel, the fortress Tony had built, had had a strange power to it supposedly, sucking people in and bending their minds to the will of the group and leader. He wasn't sure if he believed that, but it wasn't like it was impossible. Tony had swayed a lot of Kindred to his weird, pointless cause, and after his death, his Kindred had dispersed, left Dolareido, or joined the other covenants. Lucas had taken over the underground fortress, and history repeated itself, with Kindred flocking to him.

Now that Jack knew a thing or two about spirits, he had to wonder if they had a hand in that. Maybe the fortress had been affected by spirits, and that was why it had a strange power. It made sense, considering the brothels in Devil's Corner worked the same way. Either way, it was rubble now, destroyed, and no longer exerting its influence on anyone.

“That doesn't mean jack shit, Damien. My concern is that you're a dangerous asshole who's willing to kill to spread his religious bullshit. Don't forget, you entitled little fucker, that I dealt with Lucas for years before you were embraced. I watched that fucker twist words, bend rules, break minds, and spread his cancerous garbage through the city. It was decades in the works, with me bitching and whining about it every Primogen meeting. I was ignored, until it got so bad that Lucas outright started fighting. Finally, the Prince and I went to war against him, and your fucking sire killed without discretion. He fucking killed the Prince's ghouls, a couple of young, innocent girls. And this psychopath, this deranged lunatic, picked you as a childe. So how about you give me one fucking reason I should ever, ever, trust a damn thing you have to say.”

Before Damien could say a thing, Jack stepped up to Garry, and got close. Very close. In a second, only two feet separated him from the dangerous asshole, close enough Garry slid off the desk and brought his arms up, ready to fight. The three ancilla in the room got up, and Damien reached behind his neck, ready to draw his longsword.

“Did you like Viktor, Garry?” Jack said.

“What? Don’t fuck with me, kid. I’ll—”

“Did you like Viktor? Did you like that asshole basically running the Invictus?”

“Course I didn’t like that mother fucker. He—”

“Viktor sired Julias, my sire. And Julias was the best of us. My sire did more for covenant relations than anyone, and you know he was a good man. Don’t judge a childe by the sire.” In the corner of his eyes, Jack could see the three ancilla, dressed in jeans and t-shirts, ready to jump him. Two Gangrels and a Mekhet. They probably had knives hidden in their pants, and other weapons hidden in the room.

It didn’t matter. If it came to it, he was confident he could handle them, or that Damien could. They may have been a bit older than Damien, but his friend was a skilled Kindred, very skilled, and Jack trusted him to watch his back.

Unfortunately, even if Jack was strong enough to take on Garry, and Damien could hold off three ancilla, that didn’t change that they were in the heart of Carthian territory, surrounded by Carthians, and any fight that broke out was bound to summon more people.

Garry glared at him, but lowered his hands after a few painful moments of silence. “Fine. You make a good point.” Once Jack backed off, Garry turned his sights to Damien. “I’ll be watching you. Get me? Do anything even remotely out of line, and I’ll put your ashes on Maria’s doorstep. The Prince won’t interfere over me killing a fucking bishop, and you know it.”

Sighing, Jack stepped away, and looked at Damien. The Mekhet visibly relaxed, arms lowering, but his eyes stabbed at Garry like he was trying to kill him.

“Understood,” Damien said.

And they left. Jack nodded, Damien nodded, and the two of them left the room. Jack didn’t want to entertain Garry’s threat with a response; doing so with anything less than violence would be an admittance of weakness. So they left, glancing at the ready-to-fight Carthians, who were staring at them like Jack and Damien were going to attack them first. Wow, they were wound up tight.

All things considered, that went worse than Jack figured it would. He’d underestimated how aggressive the Carthians had become in the past couple years, and how comfortable Garry was becoming making his desires known. With the death of Viktor and Tony, there was little reason for Garry to not become more aggressive, if he had plans to expand the Carthians and their control.

The moment the hunters were dealt with, the Carthians were going to become a problem. Fucking lovely.

---

~~Eric~~

A knock at his door summoned him from his nap. Where was he? Couch. Time? 8:00PM. The sun had just set. He was still having some trouble getting used to working at night, and now that he was involved with the vampires, sleeping during any hour of the night was a thing of the past.

The rattling of keys announced who it was. Jessy walked in, dressed in her Invictus suit, complete with a tie, a hard contrast to him wearing only his boxers.

“Jessy, glad to see you’re making yourself comf—”

“You know, I think I’m in the mood for some normal sex. Don’t feel like getting stuffed like a turkey right now.” Without ceremony, she threw off her suit, as if she’d had a long day at the office, gave Kat a kiss on the head, and dragged him off to the washroom. With each step, she kicked off more clothes, tossing pants and socks, then underwear and bra, all over the hallway floor. Far be it from him to stop her, considering how her large, toned ass bounced a bit as she half walked, half hopped toward the washroom.

Eric choked on his laugh as he turned on the water of his shower. “It must hurt, doesn’t it?”

“What, having sex when you’re transformed?” Jessy shrugged, stepped under the hot water, and sighed bliss. “Dude, we talked about this. Those parts can stretch, a lot.”

“Still, it—”

“It’s fucking awesome when I’m struggling to handle it. Fuck me, I love the god damn feeling of ... like ... I’m about to burst, from how much I’m filled up.” Shrugging, she reached for the lube hooked on the wall of his bathroom, and Blushed Life. It was easy to see, with how her pale skin darkened slightly, and suddenly he could smell the odors of a living person, not ash. “I know not every girl does, but let me tell you, a lot of us want to feel overwhelmed with how much is fitting inside.”

“But not right now?”

“Not right now. Right now, I want my boyfriend to come into the shower with me, hug me, kiss me, and have tender sex with me under the hot water.” As she said it, she faced him, smiled a flirty, silly smile he wasn’t used to seeing on her, and started masturbating. She used full hand strokes, burying her clitoris and her folds in exploring fingers, far rougher than most woman would want straight off the bat.

As confusing as her proposition was to him, it was more than enough to get his blood running. Plus, watching the fit, curvy woman start to masturbate under the hot water of his shower, would be enough to get anyone's blood pumping down between the legs.

“So you come over, and at the drop of a hat, you want romantic sex?”

She frowned at that, and tapped her chin several times. “What if I make it anal?”

Rolling his eyes, he kicked off his boxers, and joined her in the no-wall shower. With two of them under the spray, the hot water went everywhere, splashing over the expensive tile floor of his enormous bathroom before draining away.

“I think we can just keep it vanilla, if you want romantic.”

“Aw, vanilla.” Laughing at her own ‘that’s so cute’ noise, she squirted a load of the water-resistant lubricant into her palm, and started to masturbate with it, rubbing it into her clitoris and insides alike. “Ok, vanilla it is. So, we go into typical missionary position, we’re not allowed to touch my clit, the angle sucks for hitting anything good, and I don’t get to cum?”

“Pretty much.”

More laughter. “Deal, but after, I get a drink of you.”

“Deal, but only if you don’t take too much. I was planning to visit my father later. Late visiting hours today.”

“Oh? Sounds interesting. I’ll be there.” Nodding, as if joining him on the trip was obvious, she reached down and started to rub the lubricant along his hard length with one hand, while still masturbating with the other. She did this for a while, mostly touching herself, with him as an afterthought, as she warmed up her body.

Of course, an attempt at vanilla sex lasted maybe ten seconds before Jessy got bored, and demanded standing doggy, complete with hands on shoulders, and a rather rough pounding. Maybe some night they'd have tender vanilla sex, but it wasn't tonight.

---

Being Kissed was always an exhilarating experience, and he couldn't blame kine for flocking to Bloodlust and wherever else, to enjoy its secret pleasures. He'd cum once, before Jessy kissed him, and that had immediately led to a second orgasm for him, the sort that make men see stars. Following that, a nap, because even a small drink of him had left him tired.

Jessy may not have wanted to cuddle during sex, but she enjoyed it after. She climbed into bed with him, got in close as the big spoon, and woke him up thirty minutes later. A good power nap followed by a quality meal, and his energy started to return. The joys of his Uratha body, near limitless endurance.

Then it was off to the hospital.

“So, they pretend like that event with the crows didn't happen?” he said.

Jessy shrugged as the two of them walked through the hospital parking lot. “The crow incident is still in the news, but the Invictus and the Prince did a decent job of spinning it as an unusual phenomenon. Bird flocking, sorta? There's some crazy shit out there in the world, animals doing weird things like flocking together in strange ways. I guess they did a spin on that.”

“Scared the shit outta Dad. He won't say it, but he was trapped in his room, when all that was going down, scared stiff. And you know how old people get when they're scared.”

“Angry, loud, and stupid? I don’t think old people have a monopoly on that behavior.”

“True enough. But I’d bet good money they take it to an extreme others don’t, and the only reason they don’t start a stupid revolution or civil war, is because they’re too old to do so.”

Jessy laughed, but it didn’t have the same bounce it usually did. “You don’t like your father, do you?”

“I ... love him. He’s my dad.”

“You don’t have to like the people you love, you know, at least not when it’s family. If your dad’s an asshat, then he’s an asshat.”

He stopped outside the sliding glass doors of the front of the hospital. It wasn’t the sort of conversation to have in the lobby, where people could hear the rather depressing topic. The conversation would probably mirror the thoughts of a lot of people in the building, though. The hospital was a stressful place, stressful as fuck, and people who loved each other could tear each other’s head off, when one of them grew resentful that they were dying, while the other lived.

“Yeah, he’s an asshat, but I think he did a decent job raising me. Didn’t he?”

“I think so, yeah.” Nodding, she hooked her arm with his, and together, they walked into the hospital, and followed the colored line on the floor.

A couple minutes later, they knocked on his dad’s door, and after rather annoyed ‘what?’ from inside, they came in.

“Hey Dad. This is my girlfriend, Jessy Herrington.” Eric knew his dad had seen Jessy before, but no reason to not repeat the name, reintroduce with Jessy’s new title as girlfriend, and see where the conversation went. He wasn't exactly sure he wanted to let his father know about his romance life, but Jessy seemed to think it was a good idea.

"Uh huh." His father eyed him closely, and then looked at Jessy. "... how do ya know my son?" Oh thank god, for a second Eric thought he was going to ask her why she wasn't black.

"I work for Xnomina, and Bloodlust is just one of the clubs we own in this city." Jessy sat down in a chair, folded her legs, and smiled at the old man in the hospital bed. "One of my agents recognized your son from his career, and gave him the job you're familiar with."

"That knee not troubling you no more?" his dad said, looking to Eric. Eric was already sitting down, wearing his casual suit he normally wore at Bloodlust. Jessy was dressed in a similar suit, no tie anymore, and pants. If she'd been wearing a skirt, his father probably would have liked it more.

"It still hurts," he lied. "But I don't need to do any running at my new job, just stand around, and sit if my knee starts bothering me."

"That's good. Don't screw up this job now, or let this lady go; if she's your boss, you know the position that puts you in."

Jessy laughed, despite the implication, and leaned forward, putting her elbows to her knees. "Don't be an asshole, Mister Tanverson, I've been handling businesses and moving around millions in personnel and equity, for a decade. I'm not stupid enough to fire someone just because they stop sleeping with me."

Eric grinned. She'd been doing it for a hell of a lot longer than a decade.

"Alright lady, alright." His dad also grinned at her. "I like a woman who knows a thing or two."

“I know more than that.” Jessy leaned back in her chair again, and pat Eric on the shoulder. “Your son’s a dumbass, Mister Tanverson. He told me about Sheryl, and any moron could have seen the signs. But don’t worry, I like this dumbass, and I’ll keep him from being too dumb for his own good.”

“Ha! That he is.” And for the first time Eric could remember since the man had entered the hospital, his dad turned off the muted television with a smile, not a frown. “Thank you Jessy. I can’t do shit for my idiot son trapped in this bed.”

“Trapped?” Jessy leaned forward, and slapped his dad on the leg, hard enough to make the man do his ow-this-hurts laugh. “You’ll be feeling fine eventually, I’m sure. And I ain’t gonna preach, but I can tell by looking at you that if you got your dumb old ass into shape, you’d look sexy as fuck, like your son here.”

Eric blinked, several times, as he slowly turned his gaze from his dad to Jessy. She was treading some dangerously thin ice, ice Eric had fallen through before. One wrong word and she’d send the man into a one of his angry fits, which for his dad, was always expressed as closing himself off after a nasty argument. It was the problem with his dad, that Eric couldn’t have a hard conversation with him, since he’d just block Eric out.

But he didn’t block Jessy out. His dad chuckled again, and smiled at the woman.

“You think so, do ya?”

“I do. Hell, get healthy enough to get out of this bed, and I’ll show you my tits.”

Before Eric could say anything, and he definitely wanted to say something, his dad burst out laughing.

“Alright pretty lady, deal.”

---

“So you’re ... gonna show my dad your tits.”

“Yeap.” She winked at him as they walked down the hospital hallway.

“And you think that’ll work?”

“Probably. Different people get motivated by different things. Your dad seemed like the sort you can melt with booze or sex. No booze in a hospital, so, a little nudity should do the trick.”

“Uh huh...” Well, if it worked, and his dad started taking care of himself, he would be adding another ten or twenty years onto his lifespan. That, as much as Eric tried to deny it, was something he wanted to happen. He’d be sad once the old man was dead.

“So, were you gonna do it tonight?” she said

“Do what?”

Laughing, she slipped a hand around him, hugging his waist as they walked out of the hospital. “Visit the Shadow place.”

“Oh, right. Um, I don’t know. I kinda feel like I should, right? Use this gift I’ve got to give something back to the places I grew up.” He was almost tempted to ask her to just waste more Xnomina money on those goals, but that was crossing a line. At a certain point, it was time to stop asking for handouts, and do something himself.

Look at him, pulling out of a pit of depression like he had a rocket on his back. No longer did he want to spend his time alone, miserable, bitching about life. He had a girlfriend who was awesome, and money, and a place to live, and a future. The werewolf thing was a mixed bag, but it gave him tools, tools he could use to give something back to the streets he grew up from.

Heh, like a crap movie, kid from the street comes back to save his shitty neighborhood. No, it wouldn't be like that. No inspirational music would play when he walked into an old school of his, with the recipe to save it from going under, nothing like that. That didn't mean he couldn't at least get some fucked up shit out of the picture, take them out in the Hisil, and have the influence die in Dolareido and Devil's Corner.

"That's hard for a Kindred to wrap their mind around," she said. "Everything a vamp does, we do to save ourselves first, and our own kin second. You really want to help a bunch of strangers?"

"Yeap. Because, fuck me, I like Dolareido. Born here, grew up here, plan to stick around, and I'd like to make it a better city."

"Bleeeeeeh." She rested her temple on his shoulder as they walked, heading back toward the center of South Side where he lived. "Don't start getting virtuous on me."

"Turn off?"

"A bit, yeah."

He kissed the top of her head, and laughed. "I'll be doing it against the wishes of my supposed Uratha superiors. Does that help?"

"You know what? It kinda does. The diligent protector dog look is a turn off, but a vigilante wolf is a sexy beast. When do you want to go, if not tonight?"

"To the Hisil?" He peeked around at the people walking around. This deep in South Side, it was loud and full of people, talking about meaningless things, and half drunk while they did it. Safe to talk in, he supposed.

“Let’s go tonight! You got the night off, right? I’ll call Natasha, and see if she can get Matt and Art to come over. They can show you how to ... uh, do whatever it is to get over there.”

“You really want to come with me?”

“Fuck yeah!” Laughing again, she broke her hug, and punched him in the shoulder, making sure both her and him hit the shoulders of people walking by. “Fuck.” She pushed off some of the people, and they pushed her, creating a little zone of chaos for them to swim through before she got beside him again. “Course I want to come.”

“Um, you sure? You’ve never been there, and it’s pretty fucked up. And dangerous. And fuck me, I don’t know what I’m doing.”

“Matt and Art will be there. I’ll be fine! And—” The ring of her phone stopped her, and she blinked down at it as she checked the message. “Ooooh. Natasha sent me something. She says to only watch this in private.”

“Then we should watch it in priv—” She grabbed his arm, and yanked him into a small alley, barely wide enough for the two of them to stand side by side. It was well lit, this deep in South Side where there were lights absolutely everywhere, but there didn’t seem to be anybody in this particular alley.

“Let’s see let’s see. Oh ... oh!” She got in cozy against the wall beside Eric, shoulder to shoulder, and held up the phone so they could both watch. “Oh my god.”

Eric stared at the screen and gulped, doing his best to keep his heart rate from jumping. But, there was Natasha, tiny, pale, skinny, dainty little Natasha, nude, sitting between two huge naked guys on the edge of a bed, and touching them.

“Jessy, um, you—”

“No one else can see, you big baby. And”—she jumped ahead in the video—“oh my god.”

It was hard to not stare, hard to the point he gave up. Jessy was holding the phone in front of him, and he was being shown cute Natasha riding Matthew while Arturo fucked her from behind. And, it was hard to not stare at how, since Natasha was so utterly tiny compared to the two men, that she basically disappeared between them. Even more obvious, was how her tiny body struggled to handle that much meat filling her.

He pushed the phone down and frowned at his girlfriend. “Ok, I get it, you convinced her to make a sex tape.”

“I did! I did. So proud.”

“And she’s ok with me seeing this?”

“Natasha may look meek and skittish on the outside, but inside, there’s a sexual animal who dreams of being pinned down and taken by a group of rough men.” Laughing, Jessy put the phone away, and grinned at Eric. Uh oh. “I’m sad she never let me touch her. Maybe —”

“No no, no. No swinging.”

“Bah, fine.” But when she rolled her eyes, he could see she’d never intended to suggest it. The vampire loved to yank his chain, apparently. “You gotta admit though, seeing little Tash plugged up like that was pretty damn arousing.” She pulled up the video, and scanned ahead a little. Oh fuck, she was on her back now, and the two dudes were filling her up. All he could see of her was her ass, and her two legs sticking out from between their bodies.

He breathed deep, pushed her phone down again, and did his best to calm his body down. Breathe deep, right?

“You know, in most circumstances, most girls get jealous in this sort of situation, if their boyfriend gets aroused looking at another woman.”

“Pffft, dude I am the best thing that will ever happen to you. The fuck do I have to be jealous about?” She elbowed him in the side, and kissed his cheek. “Maybe a little envious though. She’s so god damn tiny, and those two dudes are so huge! She looked like she was going to burst.” One of her hands started to roam his body, caressing his stomach through his shirt, as her lips worked on his jawline. “Love that feeling, of getting split in half.”

“Yes, I’ve come to realize that.” Oh no, he knew where this was going.

“And I know you like it, when you’ve pinned me down and you’re stretching my insides until I’m ready to pop.”

“I uh ... yeah, can’t lie.”

“Maybe next time, we can see if you can sit back and relax when transformed; I’ll give you a blowjob if you can. Sounds like a challenge, you know? See if you can resist pouncing me, while I pleasure you.” Her roaming hand pressed against his crotch through his pants, or they did, until she stopped and looked up, digging up a memory. “Hey, Jack wanted to know, you know anything about something called Luna?”

God damn it. She may have been able to ignore her sex drive, since she wasn’t Blushing Life, but he had no such barrier between him and the hunger she’d awakened. Rushing blood began to flow between his legs, and he had to breathe deep to calm it down.

“Luna? The moon?”

“I guess, yeah.”

“She ... she’s been in my dreams a few times. I never really know if she’s talking to me, or it’s just a vision, or ... I dunno. It’s a Cahalith thing.”

Jessy eyed him, squinting one eye. “I’m not so sure, based on the conversation Jack and I had with Avery a bit ago. You should ask him about it sometime.” And, randomly, she clapped her hands together once. “Let’s go see Natasha and her boy toys. But first, gimme a quickie.”

“Again? We fucked just over an hour ago.”

“Again!”

---

~~Natasha~~

“W-Wait! Stop!”

They didn’t stop. Grinning down at her, Matthew and Arturo held her down against their bodies, and fucked her. She was exhausted, utterly exhausted, and she wasn’t sure she could cum anymore, but that didn’t seem to bother the two beasts. Sweat dripped off her skin, rolled down her body, and onto the man lying underneath her, Arturo, who had one hand tight around her throat while the other pinned her hand to the bed.

Matthew, kneeling upright between her legs, held onto her waist, and thrust into her. In any other circumstance, him thrusting hard like this, and to the hilt, would be painful, but her whole body was on fire and didn’t seem to care. When her insides were boiling, when pleasure-ripples worked through her thighs, when her legs stuck out and her toes curled until it hurt, the werewolves knew they had liberty to get rough with her. It got to the point all she could do was lie there, and try and hold on, as she came until she saw stars.

It really wasn't fair, that they could make her body do this. Ah well.

She reached up with her only free hand, and punched Matthew's chest, trying to get him off her. Might as well have been punching a tank. Her attempts to push Matthew away earned the opposite effect: he pinned the hand to his chest at the wrist. His hand was big enough, his fingers almost circled her wrist twice. His other hand continued to hold her waist, and worked her body back and forth with his thrusts. She was barely more than a toy for him to fuck, at this point.

The giant growled down at her, his usually warm smile darkened, and he leaned over her. His kiss was savage, searing, and it made her eyes go wide as his closed. Even as he kissed her, he didn't stop fucking her, each thrust sinking his ridiculously massive length into her small body until her insides were stretching inward, and it felt like he was hitting her stomach. He wasn't, but that didn't change the sensation, the feeling of being skewered, of being split in half, and no matter how much she struggled, the sensation was overwhelmingly addictive. She tried to mewl, but Matt's lips were locked onto her lips; and if Matt's lips didn't block her voice, Art's tightening grip around her throat would have.

She came again. Every muscle she had clenched and clenched hard, but Matthew and Arturo continued to thrust through her trembling, squeezing spurts of pleasure, until her eyes rolled upward. They kept going, and going, and going, until she started to feel herself going numb.

Faintly, she could tell she was being moved around, to a different position. The mattress sank under the weight of their bodies, and several soft things were put under Natasha's head and back. Pillows. She forced her eyes open, but it was hard, orgasm aftershocks coursing through her and demanding she do nothing but lie there and quiver. But she managed to get them open a crack, and she looked left and right up at the two boys, who were kneeling around her.

Oh, she'd been propped up by the pillows. Her two boyfriends were masturbating, each on a different side of her, and each close enough that they'd surrounded her back and sides with their knees. All around her, she was surrounded by walls of muscle, sweat, and hunger, as the two wolves masturbated. They rubbed their cocks on her body, on her breasts, on her stomach, and took turns rubbing their glans on her lips. With a little encouragement from Matthew, her mouth opened wider, and soon she had the enormous, drenched cock filling her mouth and pressing into the inside of one of her cheeks. Lubricant didn't taste good, so she was happy Arturo was happier rubbing his cock along her nipples. The wet heat of his length's tip, coating her nipple and areola in juices, sent sparks into her chest and down through her body, mixing with the bliss already filling her.

It was kind of nice, she had to admit, to just submit, and enjoy being the center of attention. When she cracked her eyes open a little further, and saw the hunger in the eyes of Matt and Art, she managed a small smile, and shivered as the two beasts growled louder. She recognized that growl. It was the sound of orgasm. She'd heard it already tonight, and she could feel the remains leaking out of her. The smell of sex was powerful, and in the moment, when the tingling waves continued to course through her, it was a wonderful smell.

The men began to coat her body in more of their cum. Matthew soaked her lips, slid his glans down onto her chin, neck, and down onto her chest, leaving a trail of the warm fluid. Arturo was cumming a moment later, and he masturbated onto her other breast, rubbing his boiling glans up and down along her nipple and drowning it in white. Soon, both beasts had coated her pale skin to the point it was trickling down her body, along the underside of her small breasts, down her ribs, and down her tiny stomach.

Never, never ever ever, did she think she'd be into this sort of stuff, once upon a time. But being taken like this, filled with cum, and then coated in it, sent a tingle through her body she couldn't deny. There was something to it, something about being helpless and dominated like this, until she was literally covered in cum, that had her fake heartbeat skyrocketing. And now that a camera was on her, recording her getting covered until she looked like a Jackson Pollock, the thrill was doubled.

Matthew slid off the bed, walked over to the laptop, and stopped the recording. "Well, if you were worried about looking too shy in the last video, I don't think you have anything to worry about in this one."

Arturo, grinning down at her like the evil bastard he was, helped her sit up. "If you showed anyone this video without context, they'd think this wasn't entirely consensual, you know?"

She smiled at that. Ok, so, that particular fantasy was creeping up in her imagination a lot lately, of her two boyfriends getting even more aggressive with her, pinning her down and taking her, without her consent. It was a harmless fantasy! And it was fun to act it out. Besides, it wasn't like Arturo and Matthew didn't often go further than she planned, and did basically ignore her when she begged for them to stop. She was glad they didn't.

She slid off the bed, looked down at herself, and shivered. The last tingles of pleasure gave the sight and feeling of cum trickling down her skin an electric sizzle, hot and very arousing. A Kindred body meant she could keep going if she wanted, especially if she took a drink of either Art or Matt. But at a certain point she had to stop having sex, and get back to being a Kindred, doing vampire things. She let the rippling pleasure of her previous orgasms fade away until her thighs no longer shivered, and as she did, the thrilling sensation of being covered in cum, and having it drip out of her insides, turned into a strong need to bathe. She was filthy! Shower time.

“No one’s g-going to see it ... who d-d-doesn’t already know you’re my b-boyfriends.” And she knew Jessie would eat up the rape fantasy like an addict. Sending sex tapes to her friend was a bit weird, and being excited to do so even more weird, or at least it’d have been weird anywhere else. In Dolareido, she supposed it was a part of how some people explored the fun of sexuality. Fucking on balconies where people could see, in clubs, in pools at expensive hotels, Dolareido really brought out the sexual side in people.

Antoinette had succeeded in creating a city where even quiet nerds like Tash could let loose. And maybe the world needed more of that, like, a revival of the seventies again. Except with condoms this time, for the kine.

She got a towel, did her best to deal with the mess, locked the laptop — no way was she going to risk someone seeing those files — and scooted off to the shower. Matt and Art followed, and they hopped in once she was done. Maybe she could move the camera equipment to the Elysium Tower? Antoinette had many showers in her tower’s underground labyrinth, and they were much bigger than her apartment’s, so it wasn’t like she couldn’t do shoots there. And, Antoinette probably had better camera equipment, and all Natasha would have to do to have access to it, was ask.

“Is this going to be a regular thing?” Art said, sitting on the toilet, but not using it, while waiting for his turn as Matt hopped into the shower. “I mean, I got no issue. This is fun. But if we’re gonna be putting out these videos regularly, maybe we should set up an account with some reputable online porn services? We could make good money.”

“That...” For a second, just a tiny, dirty second, she looked at herself in the mirror wearing her towel, and considered the idea.

Then she grabbed a facecloth and chucked it at the man. “P-Pervert.”

Rolling his eyes, Arturo set the cloth aside. “I think that ship has sailed, on calling us the perverted ones.”

She gasped, brought a hand up to her sternum in feigned shock, and turned to face the man. “ ... really?”

“Really. You’ve crossed most of the lines that can be crossed.”

“I d-dunno. I mean...” Jessy fucked her ghouls in front of her window, a full wall window, where everyone in the city could see her. And of course, she was fucking a werewolf when he was fully transformed into an enormous beast, can’t forget that part. “I’m rich already. N-No need. This is ... it’s fun. It’s just for fun.”

“Definitely fun,” Matthew said as he stepped out of the shower. “So we’re gonna film us again? Cause we could try some more fantasies.”

As Arturo stepped into the shower, Matthew came up behind her while she turned around to look in the mirror again. The enormous man stood directly behind her, so close his body touched hers, and he leaned down. With a dark, evil grin, he watched her in the mirror as he lowered himself until his head was over her shoulders. One of his hands sneaked around her neck again, and she froze as she felt the power of his grip circling her throat. His other plucked at the towel wrapped around her, sending it to the floor, and soon his enormous fingers were cupping one of her small breasts until it disappeared in his grip. All the while, he kept his dangerous, hungry, and animal gaze on her eyes in the mirror.

It was a good thing she wasn’t Blushing Life anymore, or he’d have lit a match under her until she was boiling.

“Arturo and I will be villains. You’ll be locked up in our mansion, where we have our way with you every night. We’ll tie you up so you can't get away, and we'll take you again and again. And again." The gruff man, normally all gentle smiles and gentler touch, squeezed on her throat. She would have mewled, or whimpered, or moaned, but she couldn't with the firmness of his grip blocking her windpipe.

Choking kine was different. If you wanted to choke someone so they could enjoy it during sex, you didn't squeeze on the throat to block breathing, not normally. As far as her now unneeded porn habit suggested, choking was done to put pressure on the throat's contours and restricting some blood flow, but not outright block breathing. That wouldn't work with Kindred, and the werewolves knew it.

So, as the enormous man squeezed her throat, until she could feel the sheer power of his arm, and see the muscle flex and veins bulge in the mirror, she trembled, and did her best to not let her eyes roll up. Why did it feel so good? Why did the sight of this man's giant body burying her in his shadow, and how his arm flexed as he gripped her tiny throat in his huge grip, make her shake?

"We got pretty rough with you tonight," the evil, bizarro Matthew whispered, "but if you wanted to really indulge a fantasy, Art and I will happily tie you up, and—"

"Matt!" Art stuck his head around the shower curtain, frowning, shampoo foam spiraling around his dark hair. "Dude, you read too many shitty romance books, written by eighteen-year-old girls."

As if someone had doused him with ice water, Matt let go of her throat and breast, and stood up straight. The dark hunger she saw in his eyes vanished instantly, and the kind Matthew remained. Chuckling softly, he reached down, handed her back her towel, and smirked at the man in the shower.

"You read romance?" she said.

Matt shrugged, but she could see a hint of blush as he put his hands on her shoulders, still looking at her through the mirror. “I uh ... I mean, occasionally? You see those movies making waves, and sometimes you try the books, and then you kinda get sucked into a rabbit hole.”

She knew of the movies he spoke of, the ones that did a bad job of exploring BDSM, or the ones that glorified kidnapping. But hey, as long as it was done by a billionaire, all that was perfectly fine, right? Laughing, she walked out the bathroom as she adjusted her towel again. It wasn't fair to judge kinks, and that's all those movies and stories were, exploring kinks.

Matthew followed after her, and she threw his boxers at him as she sat down on the edge of her bed.

“I know w-what you mean. I read a lot of b-b-bad romance novels too. They're ... bad, so b-bad, but how else is someone like myself supposed to ... explore sexual things, right?” She held out her arms for him, and he got down on his knees in front of her. Kissing his forehead, she squeezed the giant muscles bulging out of his shoulders. “It's cute!” She leaned in, and rubbed her nose on his. “And, um ... if you really want to ... you know, b-b-be ... mean, and ... pin me d-down, and tie me up, and ... stuff ... we can do that.”

A twinkle sparkled in his eyes, and he kissed her, a quick peck on the lips, before he stepped back and started dressing. Arturo came out, and he also had a twinkle in his eyes, along with an evil grin. Yeah, he heard them. Vampires had good ears, but werewolves were something else entirely.

“Did you hear back from Jessy about the first video yet?” he said.

“N-Not yet, but I'm sure she'll—”

Knock knock.

That was unusual. The only people who knew she was in her apartment were paranormals, and they wouldn't just drop by randomly without a text. Well, the werewolves probably would, but she doubted any of them would drop by randomly, unless they needed Matt or Art. Then—

Bzz bzz. Natasha scooped her phone off the nearby nightstand.
~Hey Tash, it's me.~

“Oh, it's J-Jessy.” Natasha scooped up her underwear, threw on some jeans and a t-shirt, and opened the door to her apartment.
“Hi!”

“I smell boys.” Nodding, eyes stern like a detective on a trail, Jessy walked into the apartment, and sat at the kitchen counter like she always used to. “I hear boys.”

“M-Matt and Art are here, and—hi Eric!”

“Hey Tash.” Eric Tanverson, beautiful in his casual suit, smiled at her and joined Jessy at the counter. “You said Matt and Art here?”

“Mhmm.” As Natasha stepped around the counter, she noticed Jessy was grinning at her. Not only that, but once she made eye contact with Eric, he avoided eye contact with her. “You ... saw the t-t-t-ta ... movie.”

“We did! Good fucking god, that is some epic porn, Tash. Eric and I fucked within seconds, in the street.”

“You w-watched it in the street!?” She gasped, stepping back and staring at her friend, her very very dumb friend.

But Jessy laughed and waved a hand. “We were in an alley. No one else saw.”

Good god, she would be radiating red if she was Blushing Life. “As long as no one else saw. It’s p-p-private! Wait, in an alley? D-Did you ... have sex in an alley?”

“We did.” Jessy grinned, like a happy cat. “That’s how good your video was.”

“Um, good! Good.” Good, because she was very attached to the project now, and she was excited to see what sort of movies she could make. And Matthew seemed to be super into it, too. Arturo was, but in a different way, in a ‘I’m so handsome and I’m fucking the pretty lady’ sorta way, while Matthew genuinely seemed to want to create movies. She was happy to have both.

“Eric, Jessy,” the boys said as they came down the hall.

Eric managed a small nod for them, but Jessy’s grin grew enormous as she looked over her shoulder at them.

“Hey boooys,” she said. “Maybe you can—” Eric pinched her arm, hard enough to make the Gangrel squeak. “Hey!” She pinched him back, going for the thigh. Eric yelped, and returned the pinch once again.

This went back and forth for a while, and Natasha did her best to not giggle. They were a strange couple, but she was hardly one to judge.

“We were wondering,” Eric said, after a few more painful pinch exchanges, “if you could teach me how to cross the Gauntlet tonight.”

“Tonight?” Arturo shrugged, and hopped onto the couch nearby. Natasha’s kitchen was connected to her living room, giving plenty of space for everyone to sit down and talk as long as they spread out. “Sure, if you want. Did everyone get tonight off?”

The two vampires nodded, and Eric too.

“Alright then,” Matthew said. “Uratha need to cross over to the Gauntlet at a locus, a place where essence gathers. Arturo can cross without one, cause he’s Irakka, but the rest of us will need a locus.”

Arturo nodded. “Avery has something that basically creates a locus wherever she is, but that’s not really an option for us.”

“How do we find one?” Eric asked.

Matt raised a hand. “We already know where some are.”

---

~~Damien~~

Fiona stared around at the sensual sights of Bloodlust, squeezed Damien’s hand tight, and giggled up a storm as they walked.

“Ya cannae come here and nae think, sex is in the air.” She pressed her cheek to his shoulder, and followed him as he stayed as far away as he could from the dance floor. Thankfully she got the hint, but he could see she was thinking about suggesting it.

“No denying it. Everyone here is looking for intercourse.”

That sent her into a fit of giggles loud enough people could hear it over the music. “Nae intercourse! Ye dobber.” After a moment, she started pulling him, instead of him guiding her, and she took him up the stairs. “Sex, nae intercourse.”

“Right, right.” His somewhat stilted way of speaking never bothered Fiona; it did make her laugh, however. “Are you sure you want to be here, and not back in your apartment?”

“Aye, I’m sure. Ye need to be around folk from time to time, Damien. It’s healthy for ye, ye ken?” Soon they were on the second floor, with the balcony that overlooked the dance floor. A bit darker, a bit quieter, it was where Kindred almost always came when they visited the club. But tonight there weren't any. They were out on sweeps, like he would be again come tomorrow night.

He slid into the booth of her choosing, and relaxed as he felt the shadows and walls of the booth surround him. "I'm not so sure. I'm Kindred, not kine. Kindred are solitary creatures."

"I dinnae believe ye."

"We're like ... snow leopards. We meet every once in a while, but really prefer to be alone."

Again, she burst into giggles. "And yet ye vamps are fucking each other, and yer humans, all the time!"

"Dolareido's got a good thing going here. I—"

"So ye do think it's good that vamps are meeting each other!"

He paused, lowered a raised hand, and set it on his lap. "I guess I do. But it's not easy. Do Begotten not crave solitude?"

"Aye, we do. From dragons — real dragons — to monsters like me and Athalia, monsters of shadows ye ken? Our horrors all like being alone. But there's also me, and not Vrall. I like being around folk. Athalia ... does nae."

"I suppose that's a big difference between us. The Beast's desires are subtle. There's no monster walking around in my head, demanding certain behaviors. It stays quiet, its influence gentle, unless I'm starving." Damien had frenzied several times in his younger years, when he had to do all that he could to avoid detection. Thankfully the Beast wasn't smart enough to do anything but hunt. He'd been lucky to be far away from anything that would create an incident, unlike Jack and his first night.

To frenzy was an interesting sensation. It was power, hunger, desire, coursing through withered veins until the Kindred lost all control. It was overwhelming. It was exhilarating. He could not remember the details of his frenzy, only blurry images of the walls he'd shredded with his nails. After a time, the Beast spent itself, unable to maintain its chaotic greed and yearning for blood, and only Damien remained, shivering on the floor of the storage room he'd hidden himself in, deep in the tunnels. After that, finding a kine he could feed upon had been difficult, and every second was agony trying to resist the monstrous urges of the Beast.

Fiona snuggled in close to him, rubbed her cheek against his shoulder some more, and hugged his arm. She was in a dress tonight, a very revealing dress, dark green, with cleavage that plunged to her navel. It didn't do a good job of covering her breasts either, and it reminded Damien of the dress he saw Antoinette wear at the ball. His girlfriend didn't have any of Antoinette's regalness, but that made it all the more appealing, that it was the fun bouncy girl wearing the dress and not the royal Daeva.

"Ye're staring," she said, grinning up at him.

"I am not." Shit, he was. He forced his eyes up from her breasts, and to her golden gaze.

"Ye are!" All giggles and fun, she leaned up from her seat beside him, kissed his jawline, and got cozy against his side again.

She leaned forward over the booth table a bit, peeked around to see if anyone could see her, they couldn't, and she snuggled back into his side as her mischievous grin grew. One of her hands slipped up to her shoulder, slid off the shoulder strap of her green dress, and she used the same hand to pull out one of her breasts.

"Ye can touch, whenever ye want. Ya dinnae need to ask, just ... grab me, and take me, like a hungry beast." She cupped her one exposed breast, like how she did in her pictures, and she squeezed it gently, causing it to spill over her fingers with its mass and softness. Her large nipple, pink and lovely against her pale skin, poked out from over her palm between finger and thumb. Without losing a beat, the giggling redhead next to him massaged her breast, and made sure to bounce it several times in her hand, to make sure he could see how it rippled with each impact.

“Whenever I want?”

“Aye! Um, well, ye know ... nae when it’s nae a good idea. This body is alive, unlike ye vampires. But aye, please ... jump me and ... do things to me.” She leaned her head down, lifted her breast, and gave her areola a slow kiss.

Good Lord. Why did this woman delight in tempting him so? No doubt she saw the conflicted look on his face that he was sure was blatant, and it ignited her giggling again as she pulled the dress back up to hide her breast. If he’d been Blushing Life, he’d have been aroused, and would have probably pounced her, sank his fangs into her, and fucked her right there in the booth.

Maybe that’s what she wanted? It was her idea to come to Bloodlust. Everyone knew that people had sex in this night club, and every Kindred knew they could come and get an easy meal. Maybe she wanted to be that easy meal? He’d never considered having sex in public, but it did seem like she was tempting him to do just that.

He smiled at her, and tried to make it look dark, a touch evil, and a bit mischievous. Yeah, ok, he could do that. He could climb on top of her, pin her down, slide her dress up, get inside her, and sink his fangs into her. Maybe? Yes, he could. But not yet. There was fun in waiting, in the build up, in anticipation, and in the mystery of what sort of things he’d do to her in the future. He could see it in her eyes, in how a small grin from him was enough to elicit a shiver from her and a sparkle in her gaze.

She gulped, licked her lips, and fluttered her eyelashes at him. So damn cute.

“I think you should get a pet, by the way.”

“Oh?”

“Yeah. I mentioned it to Jack, and he believes if you got a pet, a young one, it'd be perfectly happy with you as an owner.”

She tapped her chin at that. “I had thought about it, aye. I'm still afraid though.”

“Maybe visit a pet store?”

“Nae! Nae a pet store, ye wanker! It's gotta be a breeder. Pet stores dinnae take care of their animals, and they buy from backyard breeders and mills and ... and...” Wow, sexy mood ruined. Fiona folded her arms across her chest, and harrumphed, like he'd offended her and her ancestors.

“Is that right? Sorry, I had no idea.” He nudged her with his shoulder, leaned down, and kissed her ear. “You just tell me what sort of pet you want, I'll see if I can help.”

“Ye sure? A good breeder can make a pet cost a lot of money.”

“Unless it's tens of thousands of dollars, I'm sure I can afford it.”

Nodding, she turned her head to kiss his chin. “Maybe a few thousand for a dog, but ... I think maybe I want something cheaper. Like a bunny!”

“Bunnies are pretty cute. But I don't think they'll cuddle as readily as a dog, or Eric's cat.”

“Eric's cat, but nae other cats?”

He shrugged. “Eric’s cat sounds pretty unique, from what I’ve heard. We can look into a cat like that, or affectionate rodents and mustelids, or a cuddly dog?”

“Ye seem awfully invested in this idea.”

“Do I?” He looked out to the railing ahead of them as his mind wandered. “I guess I am. It definitely seemed like something you really wanted.”

“And ye want it because I want it?”

“I guess I really want you to have it. I never got to have anything, not really, not when I was kine, and not after my embrace.”

“Awww.” She pat his leg, sighing dramatically. “Well, I do want a pet. And it definitely has to be cuddly!”

“Then I suggest dog, if you’re willing to watch over something for ten to twenty years.”

“Ten to twenty years.” She blinked, stared down at her legs, and then set her head down on the table, on her cheek. “That is a long time, I cannae lie.”

Right, Fiona was a young woman. Asking her to take care of something for as long as she’d been alive, was quite a request from any animal.

“Think about it,” he said. “I’ll help, anyway I can.” He rubbed her back, unable to stop from smiling as poor Fiona finally understood the gravity of what it meant to take care of a dog. At least with a thrall or ghou, they could take care of themselves. Even Jack’s crows took care of themselves, despite their growing affection for the Ventrue.

Speak of the devil. Jack came up the stairs, and waved.

“Hey guys.”

“Jack,” Damien said with a nod. Like Damien, Jack was dressed in his Invictus suit, but unlike Damien, no curvy woman was found on his arm. “Where’s the Prince?”

“Antoinette is doing dragon things with my mom. She’s got information that might help with this ghost issue, and—”

“Ghost?” Fiona said, sitting up.

“Yeah.” Sighing, like someone had thrown a heavy iron chain around his neck, Jack sat down on Damien’s side of the booth. “My sister’s ghost, currently haunting my old home.”

“Oh my god!” Well, if Damien’s comment about the lifespan of dogs didn’t kill Fiona’s sex drive for the moment, Jack’s comment about his dead sister sure did. “Did ye get to talk to her?”

“I did. I ... did.”

“Did ye—”

“Yes, I got to say the things I wish I’d said before she died, more or less.” Groaning, Jack put his elbows on the table, and buried his face in his hands. “But she’s a ghost. The Uratha are convinced this is not going to end well, and fuck me, I knew that before I even asked them.”

“I ... I suppose I cannae believe it, but Vrall can.” Nodding, Fiona quickly checked her chest and shoulder straps, probably to make sure she didn’t have anything still on display, and reached to pat Jack’s closer elbow. “Sorry, Vrall does nae have anything good to say about it either.”

“I figured.”

“Why’re ye here anyhow? I’m on a date with my boyfriend!” She hooked her arm with Damien’s, and smiled at Jack. It was half a ‘I’m glad to see you’ smile, and half ‘go away I want to be alone with my boyfriend’ smile.

“Sorry to interrupt your date. Normally I’d be with Antoinette, but she’s busy, and our sweep ended early tonight. Wait, did Athalia not tell you about the Mary? I was talking to her on the sweep.”

“Athalia keeps to herself. She’d tell us, eventually. And it’s ok if ye wanna stay for a wee bit. Damien and I are just enjoying a little time outside, before we go back.”

Jack lifted his head out of his palms, blinked at Fiona, and then blinked at Damien. “Damien, enjoying outside? Sounds like madness.”

It was madness. “I don’t really enjoy it, but I like that Fiona likes it. And I like Fiona, so, here I am.”

Jack laughed, grinning at Damien between chuckles. “Understandable. I’ll be gone a minute, once I’ve...”

Damien and Jack both stared at the stairs, off to the side of the balcony, and watched a man step up onto their floor. Each step was slow, careful, calculating, and the man looked left and right as if waiting for a bullet to say hello to his spine. No strange aura emanated from him, no presence that would signal a paranormal to an observing Kindred, but it was obvious the man wasn’t supposed to be here in Bloodlust.

He was a tall man, black, with short curly hair and a bit of stubble. He was wearing jeans and a t-shirt, which stuck out quite a bit in Bloodlust; Damien had no idea how he managed to get in wearing that. Maybe he sneaked in? He had large arms, and there were various tattoos covering them. Not tattoo sleeves, but strange markings that looked more like they had a purpose, instead of artwork. Circles, patterns, symbols. There were scars as well, several of them, and a few more on his fingers, the signs of a man who spent his life doing something dangerous with his hands.

“Hello,” the man said, glancing around nervously as he did, “I’m Brace Harcourt. I ... uh ... came here to talk to you, Jack. Or, well, any of you, really. Guess I’m lucky that you’re here in person.”

---

~~Jack~~

This man knew his name. Jack didn’t know his, until he just said it. He didn’t recognize him, or his voice, or—no, he did recognize him. As the memories came swarming back, Jack’s eyes widened, and he froze solid, staring at the man.

This was one of the hunters he saw in the hospital, after Angela opened the portal. This was one of the guys who had shot Julias up.

The man slid into the booth. Damien, who must have noticed Jack’s gaze, got ready to stand up and jump the man, but Jack held up a hand. Fiona didn’t have a clue what was going on, and that was fine. She just stared, eyebrow raised, confused.

“I’m here to help,” Harcourt said. “I want that bitch Angela dead and gone, and if you can take that psycho Jeremiah with her, I’d appreciate it.”

Chapter 104

~~Eric~~

They took a trip to a club. Eric was kind of sick of the club scene, working at Bloodlust all the time; not that Bloodlust really counted as a club, more of a night lounge thing. Bloodlust had the music, the low light, and the people, just less of them. To go to a proper nightclub was not how he wanted to spend the night, but Matthew and Arturo assured him it was temporary.

They didn't need to convince the bouncer to let them in. Natasha wrapped them in her Kindred powers, and somehow, they just strolled in. It was almost enviable. Werewolves could go unseen in the shadows, perhaps to degrees that vampires couldn't, but vampires could blend into a crowd in ways the wolves never could. For werewolves, they were wolves deep down to the soul, but vampires were something else, something that still coexisted and thrived with humans, around humans, and on humans. According to Jessy, they held kinship with crows, rats, cockroaches, and other animals that thrived among humans. Werewolves did not.

Eric doubted he'd ever feel comfortable around a group of humans again. Ah well, he was happier being around vampires like Jessy, and even the other werewolves.

Inside the club Fallen Angels — good god that name — Eric found the same scene he found at Bloodlust, just dialed up to eleven, as he suspected. The dance floor was crowded, with bodies pressed together, dancing and sweating and rubbing against each other. The smell of alcohol was blatant, and other drugs the two hundred people were enjoying.

“Nothing like the smell of people having a good time, to get me hungry!” Jessy shouted. The swirling lights of different colors did a strange job of illuminating anything, psychedelic like the fucking eighties, but Jessy made sure to hold onto Eric’s hand as she followed after Matthew’s back. “Fuck, I haven’t been here in years! Look at this!” She gestured to several of the people they were pushing past. Two girls, not women, girls, maybe nineteen, had pulled their tube tops up and were rubbing their breasts together. They were surrounded by other bodies, men and women, grinding and bouncing, and the two girls were obviously enjoying being the center of attention.

“Places like this make me feel old as fuck,” he shouted back. Christ, the music was loud.

“Ha, with age comes wisdom! Half these dudes probably don’t know what a fucking g-spot is! Let alone where it is.” Shrugging at him, she continued to pull on him through the crowd. He also noticed she was not pulling him in a straight line. With every weaving sweep she did through the crowd toward the back, she laughed louder, and looked over her shoulder to smile at him. She really did enjoy these clusters of flesh and sex and drugs, in a particular way only a Kindred could, a predator mingling with prey.

They lost the large back they were following. Or more likely, Jessy purposefully lost it. Natasha and her boyfriends were somewhere ahead, and Eric was pretty sure Natasha pushed through the crowd as quickly as possible. She wasn’t wrapping them up in her Discipline anymore, so the crowd could see Eric and Jessy, but at this point it didn’t matter. Everyone was loud and dancing wildly; no bouncer could manage this, or spot some people wearing casual suits among all the skimpy skirts, tank tops, and latex.

“Hey Eric! Come on, get in here!” Jessy came up beside a woman who was having a grand time, and took her by the waist. The stranger, a black woman with curly black hair a few inches long, was short and thin, very thin, a little too thin. Not anorexic, but definitely a girl of the modern era who thought runway models were a good look, and not the unhealthy sticks Eric knew they were. Excessive skinniness aside, she was cute, young, and must have set off Jessy's vampire instincts, because Jessy slid around behind the bouncing, grinding girl, and set her hands on the girl's chest. The girl was wearing some tiny top, white and partly see-through, showing her naked, small breasts underneath.

And Jessy sank her teeth into her, without a moment's hesitation or foreplay. The stranger didn't even resist. Either she'd done this before, had seen it done to other people, or most likely, was too drunk or high to think a stranger kissing their neck was anything other than awesome.

Jessy looked at Eric as she drank, a twinkle in her eye. Insatiable, this woman, for blood and sex, and she let her hands roam over the young girl's body as she grinned at him.

"Jessy! Come on, we're supposed to be following Matt and Art." He came in close, very close, leaning in and putting his lips up to Jessy's ear.

Groaning, half annoyed and half delighted, Jessy lifted her head and wiped a drop of blood from her mouth. "Why the rush? Come on, get in here. Hey, girl! This is my boyfriend." She slipped an arm around the girl's shoulders, and pointed her at Eric. "Mind if we take you off to the side for a quickie?"

"Not ... at ... all." The girl, high or drunk, was now high on the Kiss. She swayed half with the beat, half with the exhaustion the Kiss brought on, along with its pleasure. But, high as she was, she still managed to step a few inches closer to Eric, and press hard nipples against his suit jacket. "Or, right here? We can dance, Mister Handsome, fuck and dance to the beat."

Eric blinked down at the skinny girl. Ok, yeah, she was attractive, and Jessy knew how to spark his hunger like she had a fucking switch for it; several orgasms already tonight, and he was ready to go again, because of her. Well, not only her, but also because of his Uratha endurance demanding he satisfy his hungers, and her having a switch to his libido, was a dangerous combination. And surrounded by all this flesh, sweat, moving bodies, and pulsating music, he was two steps away from listening to Jessy, grabbing this girl, and fucking her here and now. He could imagine it, taste the thought, hear and smell it, the feeling of this tiny girl's slit spread taught around his cock, as Jessy, his mate, played with her body from behind, fondling her small breasts and Kissing her—

Eric shook his head to dislodge the thought, and then again to deny the stranger's approach. Breathe, Eric, like the moon told you. Breathe.

“Tempted, very tempted, but my girlfriend and I have an engagement.”

The stranger sighed, as did Jessy. The vampire let the girl go, and enjoying her new high and undoubtedly tingling, aroused skin, the girl drifted back into the crowd. No doubt someone was going to lift up her tiny skirt, and fuck her until she was melting, with how the Kiss prepared her. That could have been Eric fucking her, too. But too young, and they really did have an engagement to get to.

And, deep down beneath the surface thoughts, he knew he didn't want to fuck her. Much as Jessy was pushing to bathe him in more pussy than he knew what to do with, he found himself pulling back from the idea. He liked the one-on-one approach. Too old fashioned for Dolareido, maybe.

“You're no fun,” Jessy said.

“You'd really get a random girl involved?”

“What? Not involved.” She kept close to him, lips to his ear so she didn’t have to scream too loud. “But Kindred do what Kindred do, you know? We get in the crowds, we mingle, we drink, and we fuck. I just thought you’d want to be part of that, share in the fun.”

Eric smiled. There was something touching in that, in Jessy trying to find ways to make him happy. It was almost like an alien race, trying to make another alien race happy, and hosting a cultural event the former loved, while the latter could not appreciate it at all. Course, he loved sex, so he was sure he’d break eventually, if she kept trying. A random stranger, a young girl at that, was too big a step though. But he could tell Jessy was aching for some of her old habits to be satisfied, and he had to accept that, while Jessy seemed committed to their relationship, she also used to indulge in orgies as a regular thing. Her sleeping with him and only him was almost abstinence for her, werewolf transformations excluded.

“And if I got her pregnant?”

“I—fuck, I forgot.” Laughing, she slapped herself in the forehead. “Sorry, not really a concern for vamps.”

“I’ve noticed.”

“But, hey, if I get a sweet girl as a ghoul, you wouldn’t fuck her with me? I mean, I wouldn’t fuck her without you of course. Just, I hear about the shit Tash is up to, and Jack, and even ... Julias, and I get all envious, you know?”

He rolled his eyes, put a hand on her shoulder, and started pushing her through the crowd in the direction he saw Matt and Art go earlier. “I’ll think about it.”

She threw up her hands as they moved, laughing and enjoying her exaggerated motion, like a sitcom. “I’ll make sure she’s hot. We could find one who’s tiny, like that girl. Or someone busty. Or both. You were into Fiona right? Short and stacked? She’s half boob.”

He put Jessy in a headlock, and started dragging her through the crowd. “You have no focus.”

“Oh you mother fucker, I am going to kill you in a second here.” She squirmed and wriggled, but with so many people around, bodies bumping into each other, and him never stopping, she couldn’t get her footing to break free.

Eventually they were on the other side of the dance floor. Matt and Art had followed along the wall, while Jessy had taken the scenic route, straight onto the middle of the crowd and borderline orgy. Once they got to the other side, Matt and Art were waiting for them, Natasha too, and all of them had an eyebrow raised at the sight of Jessy in a headlock.

“I had to,” he said, releasing his girlfriend at last. “She was being a menace.”

Jessy came out of the headlock slapping, fingers hitting his shoulders and chest several times before she stepped to the wall and adjusted her suit. “I was just grabbing a bite to eat.”

“Again.”

“Hey, I got a big appetite.”

“For a lot of things.”

“You don’t like that?” She gave him doe eyes, and pressed her biceps close together along her chest, hands down at her thighs. A very dainty, sweet, innocent posture, that didn’t fit her in the slightest.

“Course I like that. But—”

“I think,” Art said, raising a hand, “maybe you can talk about it later?”

Eric and Jessy shared a glance. It was a weird conversation, and it never really got to argument stage; hard to get to that stage when it was your girlfriend pushing to have more boobs in the bed. So they shrugged and nodded.

Once again, Natasha wrapped them up in her Discipline, and the group of them continued on their journey. Eric had no idea where that was, though, and Matt and Art were reluctant to say; reluctant, or they enjoyed being teased. And once Art started climbing a pillar along the back wall, Eric figured they just enjoyed being teased, cause they were smiling like jackasses.

“Up there?” Natasha said.

Matthew nodded. “Yeah, up in the catwalk.”

Catwalk? Eric looked up and scanned, raising a hand over his eyes to try and block some of the pulsing, colored lights. There was a catwalk, not unlike the ones you’d find in a theater. The pillar Arturo started climbing was a ladder, four ladders together in a square, and Eric had thought it was shaped like that for aesthetic. Apparently not, with similar structures hanging from the ceiling with lights attached to them.

“Anyone afraid of heights?” Matthew said, chuckling as he started climbing after Arturo.

So this was why they needed to come inside the building. Wherever they were going, it was up. Thankfully, the pillars were sturdy, so sturdy that even the combined weight of Arturo and Matthew didn’t make the one they were climbing tremble in the slightest. Once Natasha and Jessy were climbing, Eric waited a bit, and followed after. Again, the pillars held strong, not vibrating at all. A good thing Natasha was keeping him hidden with her Discipline though, because holy fuck it would have looked weird as hell to anyone who noticed them, five people climbing up from a dance floor.

Up, and up, and up they went. The ceiling was easily forty feet up, and Eric sucked in his breath when he glanced down. Would he survive that if he fell? With his new body, he probably would, and he was sure he'd recover in days, instead of years. Didn't mean he wanted to experience that though, or the nausea that came with looking down from such a height.

Once they were at the top of the pillar, it was a hassle to climb up onto it. No railings, and no solid floor, just more ladder steps, except beneath them. One slip and they'd be falling. Ok, so not a catwalk then, but some sort of contraption meant to hang heavy lights and heavier speakers from. No one was supposed to be on climbing on it, and definitely not walking on it, without a harness.

“Over there,” Matthew said, no longer needing to yell quite as loud since the speakers were a fair ways below them, hanging from wire, and pointed downward at the dance floor. His finger pointed at a section where the not-catwalk crossed over the center of swarming masses.

Everyone got moving. It hit Eric, like a ton of bricks, that he was a child compared to these four people. Matthew, Arturo, Natasha, and Jessy all walked across the thin beams without issue, without looking down, without losing their balance, without a care for the possibility they'd fall. The bars weren't far apart, one every foot, and as long as he didn't try and balance on a single one, walking along them was easy enough, but his brain kept telling him 'look down you might fall what the fuck are you doing'. It was a mental game, one he hadn't developed, while the other four had.

They'd been doing death-defying acts for decades, the vampires especially, and Eric had only been in this madness for about a year. Something like this, like walking really high up over what could easily be a major injury-inducing fall, was not something his mind was prepared for. In the past, he'd have backed off, climbed back down, said nope, fuck that, hurt my knee once already. But his knee was fine now, and he had the soul of a wolf. He could push on. Hell, part of him wanted to, just to not let Jessy see he was, evidently, afraid of heights.

Once the five of them were standing precariously over the center of the stage, and holding onto some of the enormous metal pipes sticking up from the structure, Arturo gestured around them.

“This place has collected a lot of essence over the decades,” Art said, “more than is natural. I don’t know why, or exactly where it’s collecting. I think it’s the lights.”

Eric looked down at the enormous lights at their feet. “Lights collect essence?”

“We think something triggered it,” Matt said. “People come here for the light show, and we think it escalated from there over the decades. The essence accumulating here is, as typical of Dolareido, a form of pleasure. Any essence will do. It accumulates, creates a locus, and here we can cross the Gauntlet.”

“How?” the two vampires said.

Art shrugged. “Same way you vampires do anything you do. It’s a part of you, right? Same as moving a limb.”

“N-Not exactly the same,” Natasha said. “Using a D-Discipline is like ... we have to reach for our blood to fuel it.”

“Well, you know what I mean. It may be a new muscle, but it’s still a part of you, something you feel. Werewolves have a spiritual half, and to cross the Gauntlet, you have to tap into that, and use it, tell it to cross over. Explaining it is hard, because it’s like trying to explain how to bend your finger. You just do it, you know?”

“Oh, oh! Mind muscle c-connection.” Natasha almost jumped, obviously excited about getting to include some science in the conversation.

“Sure,” Art said, shrugging again. “You can tap into your blood as a reflex, right? It’s not something you conjure, or use a tool to access, it’s a part of you. Eric here doesn’t know shit about those muscles, and learning to use them can be disorienting.”

“Avery wants to teach you,” Matt said, “before you find yourself totally confused. You can extend your senses into the Hisil you know, and look at what’s going on there, instead of here. Imagine if you did that without realizing. How would you react?”

“I’d probably be pretty fucking confused.”

“Exactly.”

“So,” Art said, “if you’re willing to listen to us at least, this should be educational. You’re going to cross the Gauntlet first, breach it, and we’ll follow in your wake.”

“I’m going first?”

“Yeap,” the two men said.

“And I should just be able to ... do this, like flexing a muscle?”

Art nodded. “Kind of, yeah. A better way to think of it, is that you’re in bed right now, and to climb out of bed, you need to be at a locus like here. Think of the physical world as if your bed’s blankets are too tight, and here at a locus, your blankets are loose enough that now you can pull them off and get up.”

That, was a strange way of putting it, half because of the ridiculous comparison, but also because it felt true. He did feel the aura of the essence, the strange elevation that came with being in its presence. Course, he had no fucking idea what that meant or how to use it.

“Ok, so, if I go first, you’ll be right behind me?”

“Yeap,” Matt said, “like dolphins following a boat.”

Eric looked down, and — mistake, seeing the massive drop below — got ready to try what Art described. The physical world was a blanket, holding him down in his bed. Here, surrounded by this invisible energy only the Uratha could sense, the tethers holding him down were loose. He could slip free of them here. Somewhere deep in the gray matter of his brain, he knew he could do that, could cross over to a place where his bonds were gone.

So, he did. In the same way he knew he could transform into a wolf or a giant beast of destruction, in the same way he knew how to breathe or how to flex a muscle, he knew he could breach the Gauntlet here. He took a deep breath, and another, reached out, and pulled off the blanket.

Noise bled away. The sensation of flesh faded. Gravity and weight, clothes and skin, it all became background noise, as white and gold filled his eyes. He looked around, and watched as the club disappeared from sight. His girlfriend was behind him, and a little ways behind her, was Matt, Art, and Natasha, but it was hard to see them. Hearing them was difficult. Smelling them was impossible.

He moved forward. He knew to do that. They were crossing a wall that separated the physical from the spiritual, that separated his old life and his new, and instinct told him to push forward. Don’t stop in the Gauntlet, you won’t like what’s hiding in there, Eric.

Doing this on his own sent a surge of joy through him, as if finding a freedom he didn’t realize existed before. What were those old instructions? Second star to the right, and straight on till morning.

~~Jack~~

The three of them stared at the man, and Jack knew his jaw had dropped.

“You’re ... serious.”

“I am.” The tall man rotated his shoulder a few times as if it were injured, but Jack could see he was using it as a feint so he could look over his shoulder and around, checking for spying eyes.

“Angela is going to get me and my friends killed. Jeremiah and his crusade needs to stop. You vamps don’t do half the shit vamps do in other cities, so we have no reason to keep this up. I ... I’m here to bring this shit to an end.”

“Should have thought of that,” Jack said, leaning in closer to the man, “before you killed my sire. Yeah, I recognize you, from the hospital.”

Harcourt winced and looked away. His fingers tapped on the table with the music, a poor attempt to mask how nervous the man was.

“Look, I’m here, aren’t I? I know what that means. I’m pretty much putting my life in your hands here, so you can put a stop to Jeremiah and Angela.”

“Now you want to stop them?” Jack said. “Why not before?”

“I didn’t realize before, how fucked up a person Angela was! We didn’t know about those two women she stabbed, until it was mentioned at the hospital, when that shit went down, you know, where you killed a bunch of my friends? I looked into what you said about Angela, about the woman in the hospital and her daughter. And yeah, it lines up.”

“And...”

“And it’s more than just that. We’ve all seen how unstable she is, and Jeremiah doesn’t seem interested in calming her down or helping her out. Hell, he pushes her to get more psychotic about shit.”

Jack looked to his friends. Damien was in analyze mode, as per any Mekhet. Fiona, on the other hand, looked like she was trapped between fear and excitement, her eyes locked on Harcourt. Damien had mentioned she seemed to be a bit of a fear and excitement junkie; this situation would feed right into that.

“If you’re lying,” Jack said, “you know what I’ll do to you.”

“I do. I’m here because I’m serious about wanting to take Angela down. Jeremiah too. His crusade against Azamel is ... fuck me, I feel like I’m working for a literal crusader, complete with burning people at the stake.” Harcourt took a deep breath, clapped his hands together, and turned in his seat to face Jack more head on. “But you’ll want proof. I know you’re a Ventrue, so, make me tell you the truth.”

Jack snapped his hand out, and grabbed the man by the neck. Even without the curse, Jack was still a vampire, over two years old, and had enough strength in his grip to kill this man. But with the curse, he could flay this man into strips with a fingernail. Harcourt’s hands took him by the wrist, but as the man struggled, Jack let just a little of the curse flow out of him, flow through him, and into his fingers. The hunter froze as he felt the power of Jack’s vise grip, and how his struggles did nothing to dislodge it.

“You saw what I did to your hunter friend with my bare hands?”

The man shook his head. He must have missed it, then, in the chaos of crows.

“I popped him like a grape, Harcourt. I squashed him until he split down the middle, with my hands. You fuckers awoke something inside me. That’s how I summoned my army, and it’s how I’ll do it again if I find out you’re lying. I’ll feed you to the crows, alive, and I'll make sure they start with the fingers first, then toes, then your face, then your guts. It'll take days to die. Understand?" The man nodded desperately. Either he was overwhelmed with the immediate need to avoid having his throat crushed, knowing full well Jack would crush it a minute later once he'd discovered the truth, or he was telling the truth.

But Jack wasn't about to risk accepting a man's word. The hunter expected him to use Dominate, to dig up the truth, and that's what he was going to do. Jack leaned in closer to the man, pulled him toward him, and met his eyes.

The hunter's tattoos, or maybe it was the necklace, or the strange bracelet made of old string, but something the hunter had on created a barrier for Jack's mind. It reminded Jack of that time he was captured in handcuffs that had a magical property. He'd broken through them then, the magical, invisible barrier, and breaking through whatever protection this hunter had was going to be easier, now that Jack had the full might of the curse to back him. The issue now, was not accidentally destroying the hunter's mind in the process of getting through the barrier.

"Look ... into my eyes..." Jack stared hard into the man, reached out with his vitae, and tried to find the balance. Was it like this for other Ventrue? It couldn't have been. They didn't have some extra force pushing and pulling inside them. He supposed most vampires had to learn to use their abilities like driving a car. Jack had to learn to ride a horse, or a better comparison: learn to ride a dragon. It wasn't just an extension of him, like a vehicle was, or any tool. It had a mind of its own, and unlike most Kindred's Beasts, this one had its own awareness that it was willing to throw at him.

If he fucked up this strange balance, he'd break this fool's mind, and then he'd be useless. Their one opportunity to get the hunters, to find a way to catch them, and if Jack screwed up, they could be set back months, years, or fucking decades.

Jack sighed relief as he felt the vitae connect mind to mind, an invisible tether that reached through the air. He could feel the man's mind now, something in the distance that he could touch, mold, and break.

“Are you being honest, about why you're here?” The man again nodded desperately. Jack's grip had loosened enough to let the man breathe, but only just. “You've told us no lies?” More nods. “And you aren't planning to betray us?” More nods.

Satisfied, Jack released the man's throat, and his grip on the man's mind. The connection snapped like a giant elastic band, and Jack had to take a second to not recoil from the power of it. His natural talent for Dominate paled in comparison to the power the curse brought to the table.

As his mind came back to him, Jack looked to Fiona and Damien. His friend was looking at him with obvious worry, but Fiona looked almost inspired by Jack's power, excited, and awestruck. She could see things Damien couldn't, things Jack couldn't see either. Maybe she could see what Jack felt, black tendrils reaching out from his core and into the man's mind.

The hunter, gasping for breath, managed to not give into his obvious fear and run away. This man had the scars of someone who'd dealt with fear the hard way, face on, and it hadn't broken him so far. He was a reliable man for his fellow hunters, then, or at least he had more courage than fear.

“Can I speak now?” he said. Jack nodded, eyes locked onto the hunter's face. “Right. So, you know that Jeremiah and Angela came here to kill Azamel, right?” Damien and Fiona slowly nodded this time. Jack kept his gaze on the hunter, eyes stabbing the man as he waited without patience. “I don't know where he met this Elen witch, and I don't know how she got that fucking monster Sándor under her spell, but I guess you know how Elen has been moving us around the city now, where you can't find us."

"A flesh chamber," Jack said, a small snarl escaping him. "Fucking sick."

"You're telling me." The man visibly shivered, with an exaggerated motion. He had a loud personality, this man, and if it wasn't for the dire circumstances, he'd probably be joking, laughing, and having a drink. "You have to understand, none of us wanted this. Jeremiah picked us up from a bunch of different cities, told us stories about this monster Azamel, showed us evidence, and recruited us. A few years later, we're neck deep in this shit, and now he's got this witch hag helping us, giving us tattoos, healing our wounds like a regular Frankenstein, while we get butchered trying to find a way to get access to this monster's lair.

"But like I said, you have to understand. We didn't want this, me and my friends. Hunters avoid Dolareido because you seem to be pretty good about keeping humans alive and happy. Don't get me wrong, a bunch of us would love to smoke you out and burn you down, but fuck me, you are so low on the list of things to give a shit about, no one comes here. We're drowning now, clinging to each other trying to float in this river Jeremiah's thrown us into."

"You're ... asking me to spare you hunters," Jack said.

"Yeah."

"You have no leverage. I can force from you every detail you have to offer."

"Well, that's the kicker. If I fight, I mean really fight, I figure I can last an hour or two before you break me, right? Got these tattoos for a reason. Thing is, this tip I'm about to give you is only good for the night. After that, I'm borderline useless to you. You might be able to use me to bait some hunters to come out and meet me for a meeting or something, but you won't be able to catch the boss that way."

Harcourt was wrong. He didn't know about the curse, not truly, and how easy it'd be for Jack to smash through his supernatural defenses again, go deeper, and extract the information forcefully. Then again, the same problem presented itself, and Jack might destroy the man's mind in the process, rendering the hunter useless to him. If Harcourt fought Jack's Dominate this time, and Jack had to push harder to break past it and his supernatural defenses, it was a very real possibility.

"Perhaps," Jack said. "So, what exactly are you proposing?"

"I tell you how to get Angela, Jeremiah, and the witch, tonight, if you promise to let everyone else go."

Frowning, Jack looked to Fiona and Damien. The Begotten put up her hands, refusing to comment, but Damien leaned in over the table.

"The hunter is here on good faith, if your Dominate was successful. And if this tip is only good for the night, well ... it's true, isn't it, that those three are our only true targets?"

Fuck, Damien was right. And Jack didn't want to take a gamble on getting the information with Dominate, especially if the information was only good for the night.

"I could have over a hundred vampires marching an assault on Jeremiah if I had time to prepare, Mister Harcourt," Jack said, glaring at the terrified man beside him. "And ... you're putting me in a position where I can't use them."

"Exactly. I'm trying to save as many lives as I can."

“Sounds to me like you’re trying to save your own life, while getting me and my kin to take Jeremiah off the map.”

The hunter shook his head vehemently. “I got to sneak out here because we hunters don’t spend time watching each other. If I wanted to, I could have run, just left the city. But I’m trying to save my friends.”

Sighing, Jack leaned back in his seat, and rubbed his skull with his fingertips. Think, think. How to handle this. He could Dominate the man completely, control him like a puppet, and maybe—no, the same problem came up. If he fucked up, if the curse decided to go too far, too hard, this man’s value would be lost. Jack hadn’t spent nearly enough time learning to use the curse to risk it.

“Alright,” Jack said. “You’ve put me in a difficult position. Tell us what you know, and me and my friends will take down Jeremiah, Angela, and Elen.”

“How many vamps?”

Jack ran the numbers fast. “About ten friends, give or take.” And not all vamps, but he didn’t need to know that.

Harcourt sighed, looked down, and let several minutes go by in silence. Jack almost started yelling, but stopped himself. If the man was risking the lives of his friends on this, the least Jack could do was give him a second to think.

“Promise you’ll do what you can to spare their lives.”

It took everything Jack had, to not start screaming, break the man’s wrist, several ribs, and rip into his mind. But that was redirected rage. As much as Angela didn’t pull the trigger, she made the order, she killed Julias. The hunter who did pull the trigger was just a tool, and in the first place, this guy wasn’t that hunter anyway.

God, it was hard to make that distinction. The anger boiling inside him, being fed by the curse like gasoline on fire, was blurring the faces of his enemies. Kill them all. Kill them all.

No, he wouldn't kill them all. He refused. He wouldn't give into this curse.

"My promise is worth something to you?" Jack said.

"Better than nothing. Vamps in Dolareido seem to conduct themselves halfway decently, and after what I saw in the hospital, I'll take your word over Angela's."

Jack looked to his friends again. They shrugged. This was the perfect opportunity, an amazing opportunity, if the hunter was telling the truth. And he was. Jack would have been a fool to not take advantage, but there was no way, no way in Hell, that this was going to go down without a problem.

"I'm killing Angela and Jeremiah," Jack said. "If your friends don't get out of my way, I'll kill them, too."

"And if they do move out of the way?"

"Then yes, I'll spare them, and I'll make sure anyone I bring with me knows to do the same. Promise." And he meant it. As much as the curse wanted to bathe the city in the blood of all the hunters, it was Angela and Jeremiah that Jack wanted. Hopefully he could steer the curse in that direction, when it came to it.

"Good. Great. We have a deal then." Harcourt looked left and right, groaned, and tapped his fingers on the table again and again. "Fuck, wish I had a drink. But can't get drunk. Need to stay frosty."

"Frosty?" Jack rolled his eyes. "Do you hunters seriously talk like that?"

“They don’t. I do.” Shrugging again, Harcourt looked around yet again, utterly convinced someone was spying on him. Maybe they were. Jack felt nothing though, and neither did his friends. “So Elen’s portals, the active one moves around a lot, right? I know where it is tonight. Tomorrow it’ll be somewhere else.”

Jack clenched his hands until he felt fingers threaten to pierce skin. “Where is it?”

“I don’t suppose you’ll just, let me take you there, as insurance?”

“I’m already taking a huge risk by listening to this advice at all, Harcourt. Tell me where the fuck the portal is, and then I can decide on a course of action.”

“Decide? This is a one-time thing! I don’t know if I’ll be able to just, walk back in after this. Angela and Jeremiah have ... ways, of knowing things. Elen and her fucking sacrifices know things. She has ways of knowing if hunters have been affected by ... monsters. I can’t risk going back, now. I—”

Jack held up a hand, and again stared into the man and his fidgeting eyes. “I could make you go back, but I won’t. I suspect you’re right about Elen, and ultimately, that you’re correct about a lot of things. This has to happen, tonight, but I’ll only make that call if you tell me where this portal is.”

Groaning all the more, rather loudly at that, Harcourt slumped back in his seat. “For tonight, the portal is active under the Dampheer Bridge.”

Dampheer Bridge was a small bridge over an even smaller gap in the earth, one of the hundreds of roads that connected North and South Side. There was nothing there, just road, some brush, a few trees, and rocks. It was on the outskirts, before the Mojave-like desert that surrounded the city. It was such a boring place, that Jack had to laugh as he thought about hunters sneaking out of a witch's portal underneath the tiny bridge.

Jack looked down, and planned. They had six hours before sunlight. No way in hell would Maria and Michael, or Antoinette for that matter, let him launch an attack on the hunters in this circumstance, on such a lead. If he went to the Invictus, they'd stop him. If he went to the Prince, she'd stop him. And he couldn't blame them. This had reckless and dangerous written all over it.

"But," Harcourt said, throwing his hands up before slumping in his seat again, "the kicker is, I don't know how to get the portal open. Elen always does it from the inside. I wouldn't be surprised if we had to sacrifice someone, and that ... yeah, I'd prefer to not do that."

"You came here," Jack said, "knowing full well that the portal you're telling us about, is closed, and you don't know how to open it?"

"I'm sure I could figure it out! I just ... don't want to have to sacrifice someone to do it." He shuddered visibly, and Jack swore he could see the man reach for a drink that wasn't there. A lifelong habit, then. "In my mental plan, Elen opens the portal while you guys are hiding. Maybe you do a stakeout until Elen opens it for someone to come out. And then you do what needs to be done."

"And if she doesn't open the portal?"

"Then ... you let me go?"

Good god, this man, was an idiot. Jack supposed that you had to be at least a bit stupid to become a hunter, but this man was a colossal fool; he had a strange sense of honor to go with it, though.

"Lucky for you, we have options. Time to assemble the team." Jack rubbed his hands together, and smiled as he felt the hunger growing inside him. Not a hunger for blood, since he'd already eaten, but a hunger for violence. He wasn't sure if it was the curse craving violence, or him, craving revenge, but it was a feeling he was glad to have.

He pulled out his phone, and called the most important person to bring on this mission.

"Yeah?"

"Beatrice, it's Jack. Meet me near the Dampheer Bridge in an hour. Say ... on the roof of Robina's."

"Shit, really? You found them?"

"We just might have, but we have a time limit. We get this done tonight, or our lead goes cold. Are you ready with the ritual?"

"I am. I ... am. I'll be there."

"Anyone else coming?"

"Jacob, as usual, is nowhere to be found, but the rest of us are here."

"Excellent. Round em up. We're going in swinging."

"Jennifer too?"

Right, Jennifer. A talented Ventrue and ten years embraced, but ten years old wasn't exactly old enough to be marching headlong into a bunch of hunters. She got lucky last time, very lucky.

"Yeah, Jennifer too. We'll need some people on the outside, where it's safer." He couldn't avoid putting some weight in those words. He knew what Beatrice was thinking, about the idea of risking Jennifer. She'd lost enough.

“Yeah, ok, I can agree with that. I’ll be there.”

Jack hung up, and started dialing another number, before Damien reached out and pushed down on the phone.

“Jack, are you sure you want to do this?”

Putting his phone down, Jack looked between the Begotten and his friend. Did he want to do this? Of course not. He was going to kill people tonight, and he was going to let the curse out, let it do its thing, let it run rampant and slaughter. Kindred might die, too.

But revenge could happen. Revenge was going to happen. Angela, Jeremiah, and even Elen, he’d have them all. Things could go back to normal, or at least more normal. And he could save lives if he pulled this off, prevent more paranormals from being killed. All they had to do was get over this hill. And the window was closing rapidly.

“We don’t have time to think about this, Damien, at least not for long. Unless you see a better opportunity coming in the near future, we need to do this and do it now. You in?”

“Of course.”

Tension that’d been building since he realized he needed to act tonight, melted away, as he met Damien’s gaze. His friend was coming with him. He hadn’t been sure he would.

For a moment, Jack had to force down a sob. It came out of nowhere, a harsh reminder that his best friend had died, and Damien was now his best friend. And damn it, he was a good friend.

“Thanks.”

“Me too me too!” Fiona bounced in her seat, several times. Instantly, every man in the booth had to lift their eyes. Wow, what a dress. “Uh, I mean ... I need to talk to Azamel first.”

“That’s why I told Triss we need an hour. We need to talk to Azamel, in person. But first, more troops.” Jack lifted his phone, and dialed Jessy’s number. No answer. He dialed Natasha’s number. No answer. What the fuck? “Ok, so, no Natasha or Jessy.” He wasn’t sure he could convince Natasha to come, not with knowing the Prince would have both their hides for this absurd plan. But Jessy, he was sure would come to bat for him.

“I wouldn’t be surprised if they were doing something with the Uratha,” Damien said. Yeah, that made more sense than Jack’s worst nightmare coming true, that two of his friends were dead and he didn’t even know about it.

But if the Uratha were out on a hunt without their phones, or in the Hisil, that made this final call a desperate hope of a hope, then. He dialed Clara’s number.

“Hello?”

“Clara, hey, it’s Jack. Where you at?”

“In the fancy hotel you’re paying for. I’m currently soaking in a giant tub, and I have to say, I look exceptionally amazing naked in it.” Her words were a bit slurred, and emphasized in strange places. Uh oh.

Jack blinked at the three people looking at him, before putting his hand over the receiver. “Uh, Damien, can you and Fiona take our hunter friend here outside? I’ll be with you in a second. And Fiona, can you transport us t—”

“Nae a problem! Come on then.” The redhead bounced out of the booth, bouncing far more than Jack knew was strictly necessary, and took Damien’s hand. Then, she pointed a finger at Harcourt like it was a gun, and pointed it toward the stairs. “Come on then, ya wankstain! Walk ahead, and if ye try anything, I’ll string up and leave ye to rot in my nightmare!”

Jack watched the three walk off, and smiled. Friends. God damn it felt good to have friends, people he could rely on, people who he could not only trust with secrets, but people who could actually get things accomplished. It was such a change from his younger years in his first life. He never had many friends, and whenever there was a group project in school, he was the one that got shit done.

And now apparently, one of his friends, was drunk as fuck.

“Clara, have you been drinking?”

“I have! You have any idea how much booze it takes to get really drunk as an Uratha? I’m finishing my second bottle here.”

Bottle? Right, wine. He pictured Clara for the sort of girl to chug beers, like Jessy. Then again, there was more to Clara than the surface suggested, he knew that.

“Did you say finishing?”

“Yeap! I have to keep drinking, to stay drunk. This’ll fade in an hour.”

Oh thank god.

“Can y—”

“Is it the tits, Jack?”

“What?”

“Antoinette’s tits. Is it the tits you love? That why you like her so much?”

Jack froze, and blinked at the red darkness around him, and how white light pulsed like a heart. She probably wanted to ask ‘is that why you pick her over me?’ or something like that, and that was a painful conversation. It was also a conversation he never expected to have, ever. Jack never considered himself an attractive guy, short as he was, and while Julias helped get him into amazing shape, he was still a tiny dude. The idea of two women being interested in him? Never in a million years did he ever consider this a possibility, which meant he never practiced it in his head, like he did his other conversations.

What the fuck could he say to her? She was drunk, not thinking straight, and it wouldn't be entirely fair of him to treat her like she was herself. He had to handle this delicately, and he was as good at that as he was at flirting: not at all. Well, he had gotten better at it, he supposed. Maybe he could be delicate.

“Clara, I like you a lot. You're smart and strong, and you are fucking gorgeous and beautiful. I can still remember, in vivid detail, what your breasts looked like when that kine pulled up your shirt.” Ok, that was not delicate, at all, but at least it was a step in the right direction. Hopefully. “Trust me Clara, it's nothing to do with that.”

Silence, and then, giggling. Clara could giggle. Surprising. “I guess I knew that. It's just nice to hear you say it. A girl can get sensitive about these things when she gets turned down.”

“Clara, we ... we can talk about it later, ok? I need you to stop drinking and get dressed.”

“What? Why?” Ok, if she was aware enough to ask those questions, she wasn't too far gone.

“I need help. I've got a huge tip on where the hunters are gonna be, and I need to hit them, tonight. If we don't, the lead goes cold, and we might not be able to find them again.”

“Wow. Um, ok. Who's going?”

“Damien, and Beatrice's gang are. Maybe some of the Begotten. I can't get hold of Natasha or Jessy though.”

“You can’t? They’re probably ... doing something dumb. Probably going into the Hisil.” Her groan was comical and loud. “Eric wants to be Batman, and the dumb boys probably want to be Robin. Insert gay joke here.”

“Fuck. Fuck fuck fuck.” Why now? Why fucking now? There was no way that was a coincidence, that the same night Eric decided to go into the Hisil, was the night a hunter showed up with the answer to their dilemma. Or maybe it was coincidence, and Jack just had to fucking roll with it.

“Jack, am I a slut?”

Oh sweet mother fucking god, what?

“What?”

“You’ve probably heard by now I’ve been sleeping with Jessy’s ghouls. All of them. At the same time.” She stopped for a moment, and Jack heard the distinct breathing and sipping of someone taking a drink. God damn it. “I only did it because I was a bit sad and lonely at first, and drunk as hell, but ... well, it was really fun, you know? And after a while, I figured—”

“You figured it was Dolareido,” he said rapidly, “and you might as well indulge, blend in, give into its atmosphere and aura.” There could not be a worst time for this conversation. “Yes, I agree, indulge. Just, not right now. I need you at Robina’s in an hour, near the Dampheer Bridge. Can you do that?”

“Yeah yeah sure.” Another sipping sound. “I always thought of myself as a one-guy kinda girl. I wanted romance, flowers and movies, cuddling in bed, not throwing myself into an orgy. But the scary thing is, I kinda like it. There’s something about doing something so ... taboo, I guess, it’s freeing. But you know, if Natasha gets to do it, and you do, and Jessy was doing it, and everyone’s doing it, why don’t I get to? And why the fuck is it even taboo if everyone's doing it?" And she continued, hopping from one thought to another.

It faintly occurred to Jack, that he'd never dealt with this problem. Friends getting drunk and getting into stupid shit, or saying stupid shit, was never an issue he'd learned to deal with, never having run into it; same problem with the two girls fighting over him, no experience in damage control. How did one help a drunk friend, convince them to not sleep with that girl or that guy, or avoid any other poor decisions? It was especially hard, cause he had no idea how to talk to a girl he'd turned down, since she was the only one.

"Clara, this is important. Stop drinking, get dressed, and be at Robina's in an hour. Got it?"

"Yeah yeah, got it."

"People could die, Clara. People will die. I need you there."

"Did you call Avery?"

"You know damn well she wouldn't do this on a last minute whim like this, and she'd stop you if she found out."

Clara laughed, then there was a crash, cursing, and scuffling noises. "Shit, dropped the phone. Fell onto the floor, thank god. Um, yeah sure, I'm getting up."

"And you're sure you'll be sober by the time you get to the meet up?"

"Yeah, mostly."

"I really need your help on this Clara, and ... and I know I'm asking a huge favor." Saying that he was asking for a huge favor, was vampire talk for ‘I’m super in your debt’, like any self respecting mobster.

But Clara just laughed again. “Don’t sweat it. These hunters gotta go, and that Angela bitch needs to bleed. I’ll be there.”

He smiled into the phone. Even Antoinette wouldn’t blindly agree to a request like this. She’d argue, or make counter points, or break down the situation and explain how futile it was, in a very matter-of-fact way that wouldn’t allow for argument or debate. And she’d probably be right, too. It was in the elder’s nature to control everything she touched, being her age and all. Clara, on the other hand, was willing to go with the flow, just because she was his friend. She was so different from Antoinette, in so many ways, in appealing ways.

“No, Clara, I really will owe you, ok? Like, really. This is a life or death situation. You could die. My friends could die. I could die. Anything you want after this, just ask.”

“ ... ok.”

---

Damien, Fiona, and the hunter Brace Harcourt, walked through the humid jungle of Fiona’s nightmare, on the way to see Azamel. Fiona moved along ahead of them, sharp feet-point things hovering a foot above the mud and roots, while her eight spider legs sticking out of her back walked along the jungle floor, trees, and stone. Her awareness of her surroundings was complete. Even if he’d blind folded her, he was sure she’d still be able to move through the foliage without noise, like a cat using their whiskers to sense what was around their head.

“Are we really bringing him?” Damien said, gesturing to the hunter marching slightly ahead of them.

“He knows where the portal is. And if he can, he’ll stop a bunch of hunters from getting in our way.”

“He already told us where it is. And you checked, didn’t you? Dominated, forced him to speak the truth.”

Jack shrugged. “He may have been tricked, too. I wouldn’t put it past those two psychopaths to lie to this man, knowing this would happen. And shit might happen. Scratch that, shit will happen. I want him around in case it does.” And with another shrug, he nodded toward the hunter’s way. “If worst comes to worst, I’ll turn him into a wall for us to hide behind.”

Harcourt looked back at them, eyes wide, before he squinted and frowned. “I’m trying to help.”

The poor hunter squeaked, jumped around, and brought up his hands, ready to karate chop the source of the howl in the night. Just a monkey, Jack was sure, but even Jack felt unnerved by the environment they were walking in. They’d only been in the realm for five minutes, and Fiona assured them it would be a ten minute walk through her chamber to exit into the tunnels with Azamel, but it felt a lot longer. It was a nightmare, after all, not exactly limited to the pure reality of the physical world. A giant jaguar, or insect, or snake, could attack them at any moment, something beyond the power of the normal animal kingdom. Fiona also assured them they were safe, but didn’t deny that the jungle held strange terrors.

“You’ll forgive me,” Jack said with a snarl, “if I don’t consider your word terribly reliable. You don’t seem to be lying, but that doesn’t mean you’re trustworthy, that you won’t change your mind when it suits you.”

The kine rolled his eyes, but kept walking, and his feet went squelch squelch in the shallow mud. “What do I need to do to prove I’m genuinely interested in helping you? Or that I’m good to my word.”

“More information, for a start,” Jack said. “I’ve seen the hunters use some knives that kinda glow. What’s up with that?”

“Blessed knives. They harm monsters and shit more than regular knives.”

“Blessed? Damien here basically lives in a church. Why the fuck would a blessed anything affect us more?”

The hunter could only shrug. “No idea. I’ve seen monsters ignore crosses, but Jeremiah’s shit does work.”

Jack stepped in closer to Harcourt, and looked at his neck. “And the tattoos? I’ve seen tattoos on all of you.”

The man winced and stepped away from him, failing to hide a tremble. “Yeah, some of those are Jeremiah’s work, and some are Elen’s. They help fight off some vampire shit, and a lot of them stop monsters from finding us in our dreams.”

Right, right. Jeremiah and his cause were actually centered around killing monsters, not vampires. Vampires were a mild annoyance to him, cockroaches. Monsters were legends to be fought and defeated.

“Ok, better question. How did you become a hunter?”

That got him. Harcourt winced, visibly, through his whole body, and had to take a second with dramatic pause before continuing on. “Vampire did some shit to my family. Ok?”

“Jack,” Vrall said, looking over her shoulder at him. Rather, he assumed she was looking at him, since she had no eyes, only the enormous, regal horns that curled backward from her eye sockets and forehead. “I do not sense a ... meal, in this man, if that is any help to you.”

Vrall fed on people who deserved punishment for being abusive, for being bullies, and being all-around aggressive shits. Far as he could figure, her hunger was something that fed on the psychological aspects of the chosen target. If Harcourt was actually a pretty fucked up, nasty person who liked to use power to abuse people, then Fiona would be able to pick up on it.

What other hungers did monsters have? What other twisted cravings did some of the more fucked up monsters indulge in? Which ones had desires that fit right in a Stephen King book, complete with otherworldly awareness? It made him glad Fiona's was, relatively speaking, nice, because he could still remember the look in Angela's face and her one good eye, when she explained the trauma Athalia had inflicted on her when she was a young girl.

"Vampires did shit to your family? Be specific, Harcourt." Time to push some buttons. He didn't want to, but if he could knock Harcourt off balance, maybe he could get a better look at the man underneath.

"I didn't come to you to pour out my personal bullshit, Jack. I came—"

"Tell me what vampires did to you, Harcourt." And when Harcourt looked over his shoulder at him, Jack stared into the man's eyes. He didn't make the connection, didn't reach into the man's mind and break him. It was a gamble doing that, with the curse fueling his efforts, and he didn't want to violate what little trust the two had between them anyway.

"The fuck do you care?"

"I need to know something about the man I'm working with. Beyond that, you don't need to know. Tell me."

It took a few seconds, but Jack could see the man's will fold. He was trapped in his circumstance, out of his element, and at the mercy of monsters who could do anything to him, physically and mentally. He was afraid. Jack could almost smell the fear, and he could definitely feel it, something the Beast in him recognized and delighted in.

Maybe that's what it felt like to be a Begotten monster, with that feeling dialed up to eleven.

"A vampire killed my parents, ok? Dad saw something he shouldn't, got involved, Mom was there, and the vamp took them out. And ... my sisters are vampires now."

"I ... damn, that's hard. And your sisters are vampires, not were vampires?"

"Yes, are. I have no idea where they are. If I manage to find them, I'll kill them," the hunter said. Jack couldn't help but wince. Ok, yeah, that was a powerful motivation, having your parents killed and your siblings turned. "Until then, I'm a hunter, hunting all the nasties I can find."

"... except here?"

"Yes, except here. Dolareido's low on the priority list, you know?"

"No, I don't know." He'd assumed, but this was the first time a hunter had ever confirmed.

Harcourt shrugged, and followed after the spider monster half floating ahead of them. "Hunters talk. Words spread. We have groups, organizations, some even say cults, and news spreads along the grapevine. When word comes up about Dolareido, it's usually to leave it alone, like I said. Didn't used to be that way, when some nasty fucker named Lucas was up and about, but word is he's dead."

"That makes sense, I guess." It was a far cry from the advanced communication network of the Invictus, but he supposed the Carthians communicated in a similar way. A lot of word of mouth, and a lot of unorganized information drifting, unfiltered and unconfirmed. Hunches. “And about your sisters. Why?”

“Why what?”

“Why kill your sisters?”

“Because they’re vampires. I—”

“That makes no sense. You’re willing to give Dolareido a pass because we’re not all that bad, but we’re vampires, too.”

Harcourt shook his head harder, as if the exaggerated movement would lend weight to his words. “I don’t know how you do it. That thing inside your guts, that thing that makes you a monster, it does some pretty nasty shit to most vampires. You start treating people like livestock, things to farm and kill at will. Been in a lot of cities where the homicide rate is high, and most of them are vampires killing without remorse. Fuck that, and fuck them.”

“How many vampires have you talked to?”

“A couple, before I dusted them. Fucking blood-hungry psychopaths.”

Rage crept up Jack’s skin, until the telltale sign of his Beast tingled in his fingers, a burning anger that demanded he hurt this man. Of course, that’d be proving the man right, that vampires were just blood-hungry psychopaths, slaves to their Beasts, and unable to stay above its brutal desires.

Jack was so focused on the curse and the things it was doing to him, it was sometimes easy to forget the Beast was, on its own, a problem for all vampires. Dolareido was, by the standard of other cities with a vampire presence, moderately peaceful for both vampires and humans. Killing kine was discouraged. Killing Kindred was basically not allowed, because it'd trigger a war. Hell, there were probably cities with vampires that went unknown, without ever killing a soul, Jack figured. Hard to prove that, though.

How was it, really, in the more violent cities? Did Kindred just ignore their half human, and let their bloodlust run rampant? Viktor certainly had no issue butchering kine like cattle, but Jack had assumed the curse had something to do with it. It must have. But then, Lucas was bloodthirsty, as was Tony. The stories about them included plenty of murder of kine. If Harcourt was telling the truth, and it seemed like he was, assholes like Tony and Lucas, who had no issue killing humans, were common. Or at least, more common than in Dolareido.

Oh god, Mom. How was she handling the Beast, handling its cravings and desires, its need for blood, and compulsion to establish territory. He hadn't talk to her in a little bit, since she was hanging with the Prince and doing dragon things. He should, he really should. If his mom ended up like Harcourt's sisters, a bloodthirsty psychopath who indulged in killing, he wasn't sure how he'd handle that. He knew Damien and Beatrice had killed kine, kine they didn't need to kill, but kine they felt deserved death anyhow. Antoinette supposedly had a dungeon filled with kine she kept locked up or permanently unconscious.

Kindred, acting like judge, jury, and executioner. What was worse was, Jack didn't blame them.

"Yeah," Jack said. "We can be blood-hungry psychopaths. But we don't have to be. It's a struggle, but we don't have to be."

The human snorted, shrugged with more exaggerated movements that looked like they belonged in a cartoon, and kept walking. "Whatever you say."

The picture was coming into focus, the more this silly man talked. It wasn't like it was a picture Jack hadn't already guessed, that hunters were dangerous humans driven by personal reasons into a rough life of tracking and killing monsters. But seeing this man, who by all accounts seemed like he'd be more comfortable on a stage acting or singing drunk in a bar, ache with what amounted to a cliché story that belonged in a monster movie, put details on what was originally a blurry picture. It wasn't just a cliché story. There were actual humans out there who dedicated their lives to hunting down people like him, for the nasty shit they did, because vampires were no longer human and felt they were in a position to kill humans if they wanted to.

Somewhere, deep down where he didn't like looking, a part of him felt proud of that. Vampires were creatures of the night, literally, and they fed on the humans. They were predators. Humans were prey. Why wouldn't he feel proud that humans feared him?

He sighed and marched on after Fiona. He could wrestle with these issues later.

"Harcourt," Jack said, "this change of heart you had. It seems pretty random."

"Yeah well, kinda had to see a lot of shit to put the picture together. And I made a move tonight because it looked like there were less of your patrols on the street."

That might explain why he came out the same night Tash and Jessy were gone, then.

"Did you ... have any sort of indicator beyond what happened at the hospital? Like, maybe something else ... random, happened?"

"Ha, if you call a fucked up dream random, sure. I mean, who the fuck wouldn't have nightmares after seeing the fucked up shit you did at the hospital, only to learn your boss is a murdering, raving lunatic?"

Jack smiled. This man really shouldn't be a hunter. Far too outgoing and honest. Hunters were supposed to be surly, stoic, angry, and disturbed. He certainly had the back story to be that sort of man, but he wasn't. There was a personality in there, something with more flair than a mossy rock like Jack expected most hunters to have. How many of the hunters he killed were like this Harcourt?

“What kind of dream?”

“Something fucking creepy, with an old, gross woman in a robe.”

An ugly old woman in a robe. Like, a crone.

---

Inside the nightmare, they stepped into a dark cave. With no light to see by, they had to feel along the wet stone to move forward, even with Kindred eyes. As they moved long, the shape of the stone began to change, ridges and humidity fading away, along with the heat of the jungle. Soon they were greeted with stagnant, cooler air, and the familiar sensation of concrete on fingertips. Light emerged around a bend, and Jack sighed relief as he recognized the tunnels of Dolareido.

Right, this was the large chamber Azamel liked, where she set up her strange fake home with her couch, chair, and bed. It was a special place for her. Was this why? The ability to just come and go to it through their nightmares was pretty powerful, a way for them to get into the real world together, in a predictable location. The Invictus surrounding it in explosives must have really bothered Azamel.

“Good day!” Fiona say. “I bring food for ye!” When Harcourt yelped and stepped back, she laughed and shook her head. “I'm just fucking wit ye.”

Athalia and Mark all got up, staring at the group of them and the hunter they brought, frowns blatant. Azamel, on the other hand, barely turned her head enough to see them, before sighing once she took a drag of her cigarette. The very sight of her froze Harcourt to a standstill, and Damien had to give him a small shove to get him moving.

“What’s this about?” Azamel said.

“I’m launching an attack on the hunters in moments,” Jack said. “I wouldn’t have to visit like this if you got some phones and lived somewhere with reception, you know.”

Azamel shrugged, as if she’d heard the argument before a hundred times, and simply didn’t care. Probably true. “You know where the hunters are?”

“Aye, we do! Thanks to this lad.” Fiona walked them up to the stage to stand in front of Azamel, and she gave Harcourt a hard pat on the back, enough to make the man nearly jump. Poor dude was surrounded by vampires and monsters, and they could all sense the fear on him, smell it, and practically hear his heart beat; if there were any werewolves with them, they could have.

Before the dumb man could start blabbering, Jack waved a hand to him and shooed him back from the stage a foot.

“Yes, this man is a hunter. I’ve tested his mind and can confirm he’s telling the truth about who he is and his intentions.” His words would have a lot more weight than Harcourt’s, and if the man started talking, the hunter would probably piss the old monster off. Dead, he was useless to Jack. Alive, he might get something out of this. “He wants to help us deal with Angela and Jeremiah, specifically.”

“Does he now?” Athalia hopped off the stage, marched up to Harcourt, glared at him, threw Jack a hard glance in the corner of her eye, and glared at Harcourt some more. If a look could kill, Harcourt would have exploded. “You want to kill my daughter?”

“Oh god it’s you.” Harcourt stepped further back, but he didn’t get far before his shoulder hit Damien’s. Damien didn’t move, except to put a hand on Harcourt’s shoulder, and force him to hold still.

“Yeah, it’s me, the bitch from Hell. What shit has my daughter been telling you?”

“Nothing! Nothing. I mean, she’s brought up some things about nightmares, and the weird things you did to her, destroying things and stuff. I don’t have anything to say about that! No ma’am. All I want is those two taken off the board. Lot of good people are dying helping them, not realizing what’s going on, and—”

Jack stepped up, and pulled Athalia way by the shoulder. If that went on any longer, the monster was bound to hurt him. “He’s just a guy who realizes his hunter friends have been tricked by Jeremiah.”

Then she turned on him. Athalia poked her finger into Jack’s chest, though he could see a moment’s regret in her gaze. She was afraid of him now, and had jabbed him out of reflex, not remembering he’d become a different monster. It was tempting, to pounce on the opportunity and scare her, terrify her, make it known that he wasn’t to be pushed around anymore.

But that was the Beast talking. Jack, on the other hand, took a small step back, and held up his hands. “I’m trying to help you, and us.”

“I’m supposed to trust you?” she said.

“Yeah, you are. Have I ever lied to you? Steered you wrong?” He folded his arms across his chest, and waited.

“No...”

“I tested this man’s mind myself. He’s telling the truth, and is genuinely trying to help. And if he’s been tricked, well, he’s coming along in case something goes wrong.”

“He’s coming with you?” Azamel said.

“Yes, he is. For all I know, he’s been tricked by Elen and her magic, into triggering this ploy.” Though, from what Harcourt said, it was more likely that the Crone was involved. “I could lock him up, for interrogation, but we wouldn’t get anything useful out of him. Jeremiah is too smart to let his hunters know too much. The man knows the location of Elen’s portal tonight, and he might be able to provide some value to me in the shitstorm to follow. He might be able to convince his friends to stop fighting us, and give up Jeremiah and your daughter. He might be able to recognize a tactical maneuver they commit to, and tell me how to best respond.”

The old woman blew some more smoke, before setting the cigarette aside. She leaned forward in her rocking chair, a motion that forced a groan and creak from her old body. “This is a major gamble, vampire.”

“It is, but the more we sit around waiting, the more time we give Jeremiah to compensate and adapt to the situation. Guerrilla warfare is a hunter’s game. We have to do this and do it now.” Before Angela figures out another way to hurt the Kindred, and Jack specifically. Julias was already dead, his sister too, and if someone else he cared about died, he was going to crack.

“True,” the old woman said. “If this hunter is telling the truth and has not been tricked, and if you can pull this maneuver of yours off, it will be the deciding factor in this confrontation. I assume you’re here to request my help?”

“Yes, I am. Come help me. I’m not going to have the backing of my covenant for this; this is way too risky for any Invictus to agree to. Hell, Michael’s going to have my ass in a sling for doing this.”

“As he should, vampire.” The old monster shook her head, like an angry grandmother annoyed with her grandchild. “This approach is dangerous, radical, and vampires are used to weathering storms, for decades if need be.”

“Maybe the older ones are. I’m young and impulsive. The Invictus, the Prince, even the Carthians would probably like to play this safe and let the storm pass, because you’re the primary target, not them. But I want to help. And .. I’ve become a target, too.” He turned back to Athalia, and her eyes fell. Weight dragged her down, bringing her shoulders and posture down with it. Her daughter was to blame for Jack’s pain. She knew it, he knew it, and it made every interaction they had hard as fuck. “I assume Athalia wants to come. This is the best opportunity she has of saving her daughter’s life.”

Save her? We’re not saving Angela! Kill her. Rip open her throat, and drink the blood as it squirts out. Watch the life drain from that sheep’s eye, and indulge in the kill. You’re a predator, Jack. She’s prey, prey that had the nerve to bite you. Make her suffer, and then make her die.

Jack kept his best stone face while the voice ranted. Yes, he wanted to kill Angela. He wanted revenge. He wanted to hurt her for the crimes she’d committed against him, his family, and his friends. He wanted to crush her skull for killing Julias.

But, seeing Athalia looking miserable tugged at something inside him, and for the fucking life of him, he couldn’t ignore it. She wanted to save her daughter, or at least capture her and try to rehabilitate; a lost cause, but what else could a mother do for her daughter. If the opportunity presented itself, Jack would capture her, but only if the opportunity was blatant, and safe. Broken legs, broken arms, no hunters nearby, and with Jeremiah dead and Elen too, was the only chance for Angela’s life to be spared, and only if it happened by accident.

The chances of that happening were slim to none. In all likelihood, the moment the opportunity presented itself, Jack was going to kill her, and smile doing it. Feeling bad for Athalia could come later.

“I ... would like to come,” Athalia said. “I have to come. If I can do something, about Angela, I ... I should.”

Azamel snorted, only to erupt in a nasty cough. Everyone went silent as they waited for the old monster to recover, a form of respect that had Harcourt’s eyebrows raising as he looked around.

“You may go, Athalia, but Mark and I will stay here. Fiona, you’re not going anywhere.”

“What!? But I—”

“You may intervene if the hunters enter the nightmare realm, Fiona, but you are too young for this madness. Need I remind you, you nearly died once already?”

Pouting and shaking her little fists, Fiona looked down and stomped a foot once. It was easy to forget that, while Vrall was an ancient monster with plenty of experience, Fiona was a young woman. It was Vrall who’d been shot up last time, but this time they wouldn’t be in the nightmare, and Fiona would be in a much greater danger.

Fiona marched up to Damien, but before she could say anything, the man put up his hands.

“I agree with Azamel, Fiona. If we’re in the nightmare world, sure, we’d love Vrall’s help. But out here, it’s ... it’s going to be brutal. I can survive a bullet to the head. Vrall can take a dozen bullet wounds, and survive. Can you?”

“ ... nae, I cannae.”

“Yeah,” Jack said. “I wasn’t sure how to say it, but yeah. What about Mark? Is he—”

“Mark stays with me,” Azamel said. “I would not be surprised if Jeremiah tries something desperate, in response to this ludicrous plan of yours, vampire. He’s been hunting for a way to assault me without losing his life in the process, but if that’s no longer an option for him, I expect to find him at my door.”

Jack frowned at her, and found his gaze slowly turning into a glare; he could feel the strain in his eyes. It was enough to draw Azamel’s glare, returned and hard, battling against him. She knew what she was saying, that of the four powerful monsters living in Dolareido, who the hunters were here to kill, Azamel was only letting one of them come with him. Half of this effort was to save her life and the lives of her young Begotten kin, and yet she was denying him aid.

Mark shrugged, sat back down on the couch upon the concrete stage, and pulled out a laptop.

Fucking great, lovely, what a perfect night for launching a crazy attack. Jessy and Natasha were missing, and so were the three werewolves he may have been able to recruit. Of the four monsters he could take, only Athalia was coming, and Vrall was on the maybe list if the fight somehow moved into the nightmare world. If it weren’t for Clara agreeing to come, he’d call this off.

Maybe this was a bad idea. Maybe he shouldn’t do this. Didn’t he learn from the last time he launched a surprise attack on the hunters? They used explosives and nearly killed him and his friends. And at the hospital, he thought his sire and him could handle them there, but they couldn’t. This whole night seemed like he was repeating the mistake.

No. No it wasn’t the same. This time, they had inside help. This time, he had the curse. This time, he’d handle things himself, and everyone else could stand back and watch. This time, the blood was going to pour. This time, he'd—“Jack,” Azamel said, “do not spare Elen’s life. The magic she knows is a twisted, horrible thing. It will seduce you with promises of impossibilities becoming impossible. End her life.”

“Impossibilities?”

“Yes. She knows how to manipulate flesh, and I am sure such a skill has been extended to ... otherworldly ends. I assume Jacob and Antoinette will want her, and I am telling you to kill her if given the chance. It may be the key to freeing the Begotten in the Prince’s cage from the spell that binds him.”

“I thought that seal thing would fade?”

“It will, I am sure, but I would not have a fellow Begotten trapped so. Of course, for all I know, it will take years for that seal to fade. And besides, what if Jeremiah escapes? You will need the Begotten’s help.”

If he killed Elen, Antoinette would be upset, and Jacob would be livid with him.

“I’ll ... yeah, I probably will. I can’t imagine letting her live.”

“Good.”

~~Beatrice~

Finally. Fucking finally.

She smiled down at her phone, slipped it into her jeans’ pocket, and prepared for war.

“We really doing this?” Jennifer asked.

“Me and the boys are. You’re staying outside.”

“I am most certainly not. I helped last time.”

“Last time there were only a few of them, and distracted, and—”

“And this time there’ll be many of us distracting many of them. I can—”

Beatrice threw up a hand and shook her head. “No! No. Just no, ok? You’re a young vampire, and—fuck me, I’m a young vampire, ok? I’m too young to be doing this, but I have to. I know the ritual. So you stay back, watch the entrance I make, and cover our backs.”

That didn’t settle well with Jennifer, but too fucking bad. Beatrice had lost enough. She had no intentions of losing her best friend.

“You expect me to sit back and watch you go in, after you perform this ritual? You told me what it’d do to you!”

“I’ll recover, well enough to be useful. And there’s no fucking way I’m missing the fight.” No fucking way she’d miss the chance to kill Angela, or at least see the light leave her eyes. She had to die. She had to fucking die. Even if Athalia, weeping a storm, held the bleeding, also weeping body of her daughter, Beatrice would laugh and kill the hunter bitch.

Jennifer, Beatrice, Othello, and Aaron all stood within the cave they lived in, gathered in the center and mentally preparing. Or at least, she was mentally preparing. She wasn’t sure if Othello had enough brain to do something like that, and Aaron was always mentally prepared.

They were all dressed in jeans and t-shirts, nothing impressive or distinct, nothing that would give them an edge in battle. Shit like bulletproof vests were more hassle than they were worth, when you were trying to jump around and dodge with the speed and strength of a Kindred. Maybe if the hunters started using fire, a fire-repellent suit of some kind could be useful? Heh, probably not. She laughed, imagining a vampire in a big full body suit, like a space suit, walking through fire.

Jacob was off doing whatever it was that he did when he disappeared for weeks at a time. Probably plotting how to take over Dolareido. Nah, more like, plotting how to summon an ancient demon to be his new buddy, so he could rule the world. Something along those lines. But that was a big part of the joy of being in the Circle, that they didn't need Jacob's permission to do shit. Hell, he encouraged them to do whatever the fuck they wanted, and right now she wanted to kill Angela and Jeremiah. Kill them dead.

“We got your back,” Othello said. “Is the ritual going to be hard?”

“It'll leave me pretty fucked up, not gonna lie. But I'll still be mobile enough for the fight. No way am I missing this.”

Aaron raised a hand. “Who's Jack bringing?”

“Not sure. Everyone he can get his hands on, probably. Which ... probably doesn't include any Invictus. I doubt Mary or Michael would allow this blitzkrieg ambush tactic of his. Way too risky. And Antoinette's going to skin Jack alive when he gets back, so I'm not sure he could convince Natasha to go against her wishes.” Jack would get back, though, no doubt about it. The least Beatrice could do for the kid was keep him alive after all he'd done. “But Jessy and Damien will probably come, even knowing their bosses will break their legs for it. Eric might come too.”

Part of her was still angry at him, for Julias dying. It was hard to ignore that it was Jack and his mother's fault that Julias stuck his neck out, but over the weeks it grew easier to accept that it was neither of their faults. Superman had been one of the kindest men she'd ever known, and that kindness got him killed; more like, asshole hunters taking advantage of that kindness got him killed. Those assholes needed to die.

“Hope we get some werewolves with us,” Othello said. “They can frontline better than we can.”

“Well I doubt Avery will let any of her pups come on this insanity either.”

“Clara will,” Jennifer said.

Triss raised a brow. “She will?”

“She will. From what you've told me about her, and from what I remember at the ball, I think she likes Jack quite a bit. More than a bit. And these Uratha behave like Carthians, completely uncontrolled without a sensible thought in their head. Plus, Jack knows her, and he knows we'll need the wolves to help us if we want this to succeed.”

Beatrice nodded, tapping a claw against one of her crocodile teeth. “In the end, it doesn't matter. Jack and his curse are going to be doing the heavy lifting, and he says we have to do this tonight, or it's not happening. We're going balls to the walls here, and we're going to make this work. Jeremiah and Angela are dead after tonight, and Elen...” Shrugging, she started for the cave exit. “Jacob wants her. If we capture her, fine. If we end up killing her, I ... No, I'd prefer to capture her alive if we can.”

Elen could manipulate flesh with magic, and that was one more piece of a puzzle Triss was slowly pursuing. If she could make it work, why not?

Chapter 105

~~Beatrice~~

“It this ... everyone?”

Sighing, Jack nodded, crouched low on the roof of Robina's. “Clara's not here yet, but yea, h this is everyone. If any of the hunters escape into a nightmare, Azamel will send Fiona to help us on that end. You know, assuming she can find us.”

Beatrice started counting. Six vampires, one werewolf, and one monster; potentially two monsters, if they had to fight in the nightmare. That was not nearly as many people as Triss was hoping for. And, for some reason, a human was there, too.

“The fuck? Isn't this Azamel's problem? Why isn't she coming?”

The kid shrugged as he stared over the edge of the building, and to the small, distant bridge beneath them. No movement. “Azamel's old as dirt. So unless the fight comes to her, and in the nightmare, she can't do much. Mark is her bodyguard, more or less. And Fiona's just a young girl.”

“You're just a young vampire.”

Jack chuckled quietly, smiling. It sounded forced. “Damien said it best. Fiona can't survive a bullet, but her Horror can. Better if we don't throw her life away if we don't have to, right? And Athalia's here because ... well, obvious reasons.”

Every witch looked at Athalia, and frowned, a quartet of annoyance with the woman. They all knew who she was, and that this was partly her fault.

“I don’t give a fuck if you all hate me,” she said. “It’s my daughter.”

Growling, Triss slowly crouched down next to Jack. The cool night air and the clouds above held little noise, and Triss did her best to listen for any potential danger. All she could hear was the distant sound of traffic, and Athalia’s breathing.

“What about Jessy?” she said. “Figured she’d help, and maybe her boy toy Eric too.”

“Can’t reach them. I tried to get Natasha too, but she’s MIA.”

If Natasha was missing, along with Jessy and Eric, there was a decent chance they were off doing something werewolfy. Natasha and Jessy wouldn’t just shut off their phones; disable the ring and buzz, sure, but not turn off. They were indisposed somehow, unreachable, probably by either doing something super sneaky, or being in the Shadow realm. Three werewolves and one very curious little vampire meant research opportunities, Triss figured.

“Ok, I can wrap my mind around that,” she said, “but who the fuck is this guy?” Some kine, a black dude with short curly hair, was staring at her and her teeth like he’d never seen a Nosferatu before. Well, he wasn’t freaking out and screaming or anything, so he must have seen similar at some point.

“A hunter,” Jack said.

“I’m sorry, I think I misheard you. Say that again?”

Rolling his eyes, Jack motioned for them to get low. Apparently they’d all started standing up as the conversation took a definite turn toward argument. Damien and Triss were keeping everyone wrapped in the Cloak of Night, but it still paid to be cautious.

“Um, hey, yeah, I’m Harcourt. I came to see the vampires here in Dolareido, because honestly, we need help getting rid of Angela and Jeremiah. I want my friends to survive, and you know, Angela and Jeremiah are going to get them all killed. It’s pretty crazy. I was hoping—”

Athalia backhanded the still-standing man in the stomach, sending him down onto his knees, gasping. “Shut up.”

Beatrice stared at the man, and flexed her fingers tight, until the joints hurt. “This is a hunter? One of the fuckers working for the psychopaths?”

“He is,” Jack said. “I tested his mind myself. He’s legit. Wants to help, and knows where Elen’s set up the portal tonight. The issue now, is we need to get it open.”

Oh sweet mother of fucking god, they were all going to die.

“Ok,” she said, “so, setting aside the insanity that our entire plan relies on the word — even checked — of a hunter, why can’t this fucker just walk up to the portal and open it?”

“Few reasons,” Harcourt said. “Only Elen can open the portal, and Elen has ways to tell if someone’s mind has been tampered with. I dunno if she’d open it for me. And we don’t just come and go randomly anyway. We leave, set up meetings and rendezvous by phone later, and—”

Beatrice threw up her hands. “Then how about, we sit on this fucker, and make him arrange a rendezvous with his buddies? Instead of jumping into the mouth of Hell, we’d have time to set up a proper ambush. You could easily turn him into a puppet, and—”

Jack shook his head, and started rubbing his buzzed hair as he stared down at the building roof. “I thought about that. There’s nothing I could make this guy say or do, that would trick the hunters into making the opening he's provided for us tonight. I could use him to capture a few more hunters maybe once, and then the jig would be up. It's not like Jeremiah and Angela would come to rescue this guy, and you know it."

"I ... yeah, you're right. Fuck me, we have to do this now, don't we? Ugh. Ugh!" This was not a good way to do this, and Jack definitely noticed the similarity with this and his previous attacks on the hunters: done last minute and without planning. But he was right that, if they wanted to kill Jeremiah and Angela, this was probably their best chance.

And she wanted to kill them. Fuck, it was an itch inside her that she couldn't get rid of, an itch that turned into a boiling heat that scalded her every time she thought about it. She had to get it out, get it to stop burning her insides, and the only way to do that would be over their dead bodies.

"Hey, don't forget your promise!" Harcourt said, loud enough that Athalia, again, hit him, this time with a smack to the back of his head. She was no human, and a hard slap was enough to send the man to the roof on his stomach. Any harder and she'd have injured him.

"Promise?" Aaron said.

Groaning, Jack nodded, but kept his eyes on the distant bridge that showed no signs of movement or life. "Yeah, I promised him we'd spare any hunters that didn't get in our way."

Beatrice pointed a claw at the human, currently coughing and rubbing the back of his head. "You're shitting me. These fuckers—"

"Are being tricked by Jeremiah and Angela. They didn't know about what Angela did to my family."

"And? They still killed Julias."

“Trust me,” Harcourt managed to say, whispering this time, “no one came here to fight the vampires. Our eyes are on Azamel. You heard about the crazy shit she’s done? She enslaved whole towns!”

“You only heard one side of the story,” Jack said to the hunter, “and from a couple of nutjobs at that; the king of nutjobs, given what I’ve seen of Jeremiah. Not that I’m excusing Azamel’s behavior, but lots of Begotten do their best to not be the monster you think they are.” When he said it, he glanced to Beatrice, and the inner conflict in his eyes was obvious. Yeah, they’d been up to some pretty monstrous shit lately, sacrificing kine and speaking to otherworldly gods that were most certainly not benevolent.

She shrugged at him. She was willing to do a lot more than that to make sure she got to feel Angela’s blood on her hands.

“And ... I know I can’t ask this,” Athalia said, “but I’m asking anyway. If we can capture my daughter, instead of killing her, I’d appreciate it.”

Beatrice laughed, and gave the woman the finger. “Fuck that.”

The stupid bitch got in Beatrice’s face, but of course Beatrice didn’t flinch. If Athalia wanted to fight, here and now, over whether her psychopath, murdering daughter deserved to live, Triss was perfectly willing to rip the woman’s throat out to prove her point. Or maybe bite it out.

“She’s my daughter.”

“She’s a corpse, she just doesn’t know it yet.”

“Ladies,” Jack said, and motioned for them to crouch. They did, glaring and frowning at each other all the way. “If the opportunity presents itself, sure, we can capture Angela.”

“What!?”

“The chances of that happening are unlikely, Triss. Unless she’s down and out with broken legs and broken fingers, consider her a kill target.” Shaking his head, Jack made a vague gesture back toward South Side. “And if we capture her, we keep her locked up with a chain around her neck for the rest of her life. We’re not just going to hand her over to Athalia.”

“Fuck. Fine.” Beatrice crawled over to the edge of the roof, and looked out to the small bridge. Just a tiny thing, some wood and concrete, maybe thirty feet long with a small valley or crevice underneath it, with some rocks, dirt, and no water. It’d totally be filled with kids hanging out if it was closer to the Carthian half of South Side, or even Devil’s corner. The hunters chose a place no one would give a shit about.

As the silence dragged on, everyone looked to Jack.

“We’re waiting for—”

“For me.”

They all turned as a woman hopped up onto the roof to join them. Clara Moreno, average height with an athlete’s build, tan skin, with box-braids in her hair. Beatrice had had almost zero interaction with the woman, but even she knew the werewolf had a strange relationship with Jessy, and news spread about the werewolf’s involvement with the vampire’s ghouls. And everyone knew she liked Jack, so, there was a whole mess of drama there Triss had no intent of touching with a ten-foot pole.

Like the witches, she was wearing some jeans and a shirt, nothing special, no weapons. She would transform once the fight started, and Triss was looking forward to seeing that chaos again. Rip and tear. Queue heavy metal music.

“Not much of a group,” Clara said. “I’d ask some of the pack to join, but Avery would have their hides.”

“But not yours?” Othello said, smiling as he stepped in closer. Right, it was the man’s first time really interacting with Clara, and it was obvious the dude liked what he saw.

Jennifer grinned too, probably enjoying the idea of watching Othello fuck Clara in a place where she could watch. So Triss smacked her in the shoulder, gently, but hard enough to remind her now was not the time. Besides, it didn’t look like Clara was taking the bait, offering Othello only an eye-roll and a quiet grunt.

“I’m second in command for my pack. Avery will get into an argument with me, sure, but after the results of tonight, she’ll let it go.”

“Right,” Triss said, “because we’ll either succeed, or we’ll be dead and it won’t matter.” Everyone but Damien and Aaron groaned as they looked at her, and she returned their groans with a shrug. “Don’t give me that shit. You’re all thinking it.”

Maybe she shouldn’t have said that. While she was willing to put her life on the line to make this happen, the others — besides Jack — weren’t so committed. They had no reason to be. Hell, Athalia probably wanted them to fail, so her daughter would have a chance to live. Then again, tonight might be the woman’s only chance to save her daughter’s life.

“Alright,” Aaron said, “I’m guessing Jack is leading this?”

They all looked to the kid, again.

“... I guess I am.” Jack sighed, rubbed his head several times, and stared out at the small bridge. Poor guy, having to come up with plans in such fucked up circumstances. Plus, you know, the whole being a kid thing. Everyone there was much older than him, and yet they were looking to him to make the decisions.

Well, he was a Ventrue. This was the stuff Ventrue did, give orders and shit. Triss could see Jennifer was itching to say something, provide her take on the situation as any Ventrue would, or maybe complain about her position, but she defaulted to the stronger Ventrue.

Nah, it wasn't the Ventrue thing for the kid. Jack was taking charge because he was good at it. He was taking charge because this plan was his. And he was taking charge because they all knew the kid had been fucked up with some curse, and that it was going to do something insane once the blood started flying. Triss was banking on it.

“Alright, plan. Damien, go scout the bridge now. I don't want any trouble hitting us while Triss does her thing. Triss is going to open the portal. I'm going in first, along with my reinforcements. Jennifer stays outside, in case shit happens out here; it'll be up to her on what to do if something happens, coming in to get us or handling it herself. The rest of you, follow behind me.” Jack took a deep breath, checked his pockets and chest for what Triss guessed were weapons, and gestured to Damien. “Go.”

And Damien was gone. Christ, he was a fast fucker. The idiot hunter on his knees let out a small squeak as Damien bolted, Celerity and Cloak of Night turning him into a blur. Being that close would have startled anyone who wasn't ready for it.

“And that's why we like to stay at a distance,” Harcourt said. “Or, you know, hide behind a lot of fire. And—wait, you said reinforcements, Jack? Then you told the rest of these dudes to follow behind you. Um, aren't they your reinforcements?”

Beatrice expected Jack to smile, smirk, grin, anything to tease the incoming carnage the kid would summon. But a glance showed the kid's face was pained, conflicted, and frustrated. He didn't want to summon the curse.

Well, it was a curse. It was a bad thing, and it was probably doing all sorts of nasty shit to Jack's mind. If he summoned it, let it loose, would it be as simple as returning to normal once all this was done? Or would it change him, and turn him into another Viktor. You didn't need some ancient curse for a vampire to become a fucking sack of shit like Viktor, but that didn't mean it wasn't involved. Poor kid probably spent every night worried about that.

He was going to do it though. He needed to, and she needed him to. Both of them had to do this, and the consequences be fucking damned.

Damien came back a moment later, silent as a shadow. "No one."

"Right," the hunter said. "If we had a lookout, we might give away the position of the portal the night we're using it."

"Risky," Aaron said.

The human shrugged. "Everything we do is risky. Gotta take risks to win."

That earned a small snort from Jack. Vampires didn't think that way, normally. To a vampire, a risk was how you ended what would otherwise be an endless life of indulgence. If smart planning and paranoia allowed a vampire to live in decadence for centuries, why wouldn't a vampire do it?

Because of shit like this. Because of revenge and vengeance. Because some people deserved to die.

"Like I said earlier," the hunter said, "you're expecting probably a dozen of my friends. There's another dozen out in the city, doing shit. Far as I know, Jeremiah, Angela, and Elen are in the chamber tonight, still helping with Angela's injuries. You guys fucked her up pretty bad last time."

Aaron raised a hand. “And Elen. She’s been putting the hunters back together?”

“Yeah, sorta. She can do some impressive shit for my friends, but for Jeremiah and Angela, it’s like she’s rebuilding them from scratch. Something to do with the special tattoos they got; lot more on them than on any of us.”

“She manage to revive that hunter I shot in the head?” Jack said.

“No ... almost, but no.” The hunter shuddered. Must have seen a real life Frankenstein moment, from the look on his face, and it wasn’t sitting well with him.

This hunter was far too nice to be a hunter. He was cute though, fit like all the hunters, a bit tall, nicely built, and she was digging the short, almost-afro he was sporting. The smile was contagious too, or it would have been, if the sight of him didn’t make her want to rip him in half for being part of the reason her lover was dead. Shame.

Jack pushed himself up to his feet, and took one of those long, slow breaths he seemed rather attached to. “Alright, let’s do this. Stay behind me, and ... don’t freak out. I’ll be doing this as Triss opens the portal, so I need people to stay calm. Just stay out of my way, and try and remain ... yeah, calm. Don’t, uh, be surprised, if I’m different, ok?”

“Different?” Harcourt looked around, eyebrow raised, confusion blatant. “Uhh ... don’t forget about our promise, right?”

“And my daughter, Jack,” Athalia said. “You said you’d spare her life, if the opportunity presented itself.”

“I will.” He twitched when he said it, and ground his teeth. “Yes, I will, if I can.”

That twitch was strange. Triss glanced to Damien, but the Mekhet's face was stone; which said a lot. The twitch wasn't all that subtle, and more than Triss noticed it. If Damien refused to react to it, then it was something he'd seen before, and either knew what it was, or didn't and was ignoring it anyway.

"Alright, so, we doing this?" Triss said.

"Yeah, we're doing this." With another heavy sigh, Jack pulled out his phone, and sent a text.

Oh, right. He was sending a text to his mother, and his lover. If he died tonight, those two would be broken. The guilt that must have been eating at him, with how much he loved those two. Fuck. The only people Triss had were right here with her. If things went sour, they'd all be dead; except Jennifer hopefully. But the kid, he was doing this knowing full well if he died doing it, he'd be leaving an amazing woman alone, and an already heartbroken mother probably suicidal.

She was tempted to tell him to not do this. They didn't need to do this. Revenge could wait, vampires were good at that. They'd bide their time, look for a better opportunity, play safe and keep everyone on their toes. That's what every elder would say, to not gamble lives on a risky play. Take advantage of immortality, plan, manipulate, deceive, and concoct the perfect scheme to get these fuckers.

And in the meantime, other Kindred would die, Kindred who didn't have the resources to build themselves underground fortresses. Hell, more than them, the monsters would die too, and more kine that didn't deserve it. Much as Beatrice had bathed herself in murder, she still kept those kills to the worst Dolareido had to offer. Jeremiah and Angela didn't.

All of that almost felt like background noise though, or a poor excuse. Deep down, she wanted to do this now with every fucking fiber of her being, because if she didn't get this burning ache out of her chest soon, it was going to kill her. And the only thing that'd do it was Angela's head on a stick.

---

Damien wrapped them in the Cloak of Night, and the group of them approached. What a fucked up looking bunch. One human, six vampires, a werewolf, and a bona fide monster. Eight paranormals and one pile of baggage to drag around. Well, if Harcourt proved useful, then he proved useful. If he turned on them at the last moment, the fucker would quickly realize how easily and happily Triss would turn him into a corpse, or a meal.

The group of them stood underneath the small bridge, and everyone scanned the surroundings, convinced someone was watching them. It was dark, and it was quiet, the only noise coming from a cool night breeze that cut down into the tiny ravine. The sounds of cars and taxis blaring their horns were a mile off, nothing more than whispers all the way out here. It was the sort of place a traveler might sleep, where no thugs would rob her or disturb her.

Underneath the bridge, where it connected to the earth, was a concrete wall, each side. A small drain was at its base, a place that collected rain could flow. The expanse of wood above was only wide enough for two lanes, so it wasn't exactly a well hidden fortress, to hide here. But that was what made it such a good place for one of these portals, that no one would think to look here, in a giant city with millions of people.

But there it was, the symbol, etched onto the wall in black. Jack had said these were created with blood. Maybe this one had been, and the blood burned away? It did smell burned.

She looked behind her, and checked the faces of people waiting for her to do her thing. The witches looked confident. Damien didn't, and neither did Athalia. Clara was in wait mode. Harcourt just looked confused as all hell. Well, they were about to see a thing or two.

“Ok, you begin, Triss,” Jack said, “and ... so will I. Just ... yeah ... stay out of my way, everybody.”

Poor kid. Poor fucking kid. She'd asked him to do this, to be ready to jump into this insanity in order to get revenge, and he'd agreed. She'd asked him to be ready to use his curse for this, and he'd agreed. He'd helped her butcher kine, and speak with ancient, evil gods. And now he was going to make good on his word.

Christ, if this broke him, if something happened to him, Julias would ... Julias was dead. His childe was on his own now, and more than smart enough to make his own choices. Don't feel guilty for this, Triss. You want this, and he wants it. He—

“The fuck!?” Harcourt jumped back as Jack took a bite out of his wrist. Clara and Athalia both did as well, without noise. The vampires didn't budge. They all knew Ventrue could do this, use blood to summon animals to their aid; Gangrels could do it, too. When Gangrels did it, it was like watching a monster summoning his brood. When Ventrue did it, it was like watching a lord summon their army.

While Jack did his thing, Beatrice got to work. She touched the crow skull on her chest, and traced a claw along the drawn lines of the ritual symbol Elen or one of her flunkies had made. It was almost invisible, in the dark, charcoal-colored lines on concrete at night. During the day, it'd have looked like silly graffiti to anyone who noticed, and in the shadows underneath the bridge, out here between North and South Side, no one was going to notice.

So close though, she could feel the power emanating from it, subtle, but distinct. It felt like the flesh chamber Natasha and her had found the night Julias died, so she was sure Harcourt was telling the truth. Whatever madness Elen performed to create things from flesh, and to divine information from haruspex, Triss had no idea, but she couldn't deny that it felt familiar. Maybe it was the blood and murder, maybe it was how it was founded on death and darkness, but there was something similar between Crúac and whatever it was Elen was doing. Crúac reached across the ether, tapped into something hellish and twisted, and used vitae to fuel that effort. Elen, on the other hand, found a way to do it with the flesh and blood of the living. Vitae was what the vampire curse created when given the blood of the living.

Might as well have been neighbors, 665 and 667 getting buddy buddy with the handsome dude next door.

Electricity danced along her fingertips, and she shivered as the power of it practically burned her fingers. Yes, this was the power the Crone had exposed her to, introduced her to, and scarred into her mind. She'd never forget this pain now, this sensation, the way this portal worked, the way it opened and closed. It'd take her months, maybe years, to figure out how to open it with a sacrifice, but she was a vampire, she had vitae to fuel her efforts, unlike Elen.

Skittering sounds drew her gaze, tiny movements that ran along the corners of her eyes. Everyone else in the group started looking around as well, even Harcourt, once the noise grew noticeable to human ears. When he noticed, he started spinning around and around, breath quickening as it became obvious the noises were coming from all directions.

Triss was supposed to be focusing on opening the portal, but for a moment, she let herself stare in awe at the sight unfolding around her. Rat eyes. There were rats eyes everywhere. Tiny orbs that caught glimmers of nearby streetlights, and what little moonlight slipped through the clouds. They glinted and moved, dozens of them at first, each flowing along the pavement, and then down to join them in the dark and rocks. Dozens more, and then hundreds, flowed along the bridge above them, tails and claws rubbing against wood and concrete in such number, it sounded almost like churning water.

The shadow may as well have been a flowing, black creek around them, with how it moved, and rose. It started to trickle down over the edges of the small ravine, and then flowed, and then poured like rapids, a bubbling mass of black fur, claws and tails and eyes, that filled every crevice. And as the rats came to join them, the skies above darkened.

“The longer we take,” Jack said, eyes on Triss, “the more likely they’ll be prepared. There’s no way they don’t have some method to peek outside of their portals, or they’d never use them. So open it up, and let’s get to killing.”

Time had come to a standstill, and Beatrice found herself unable to move. That was Jack? His voice had changed. There was a bounce to it, almost a chuckle, a sound she was used to on Jacob, but not on the kid. And the grin, the Joker grin, looked freaky as fuck on him.

It was more than rats; there were plenty of those, but Jack seemed intent on bringing Armageddon. Two crows, without a caw or croon, glided down under the bridge and perched upon the boy’s shoulders. He reached up, stroked the back of each bird’s head, and grinned up at each, a knowing grin. It was then that the dark clouds above began to descend.

The shadows around them, churning over each other, were the rats of Jack’s army. The black sky falling upon them, was his crows.

“Oh god oh god oh god.” Harcourt had backed up to the other side of the pit, and he was quickly becoming a panting mess. Wide eyes snapped left and right, up and down, each trying to take in the madness collapsing on him. “Sweet fuck, oh mother fucking god. Merciful Christ protect me, mother fucking g—”

Athalia smacked him, again. That caused Clara to chuckle, but it didn't sound natural; of course it didn't, considering the fear Triss could see on her face. They were all frightened by the display, and Triss had to force herself to hold still as she felt rats begin to climb over her combat boots. Jennifer and Aaron were in awe, jaws dropped in what must have been envy over the display of Animalism even Michael McDonald couldn't have done. Othello had a new grin on his face, one Triss wasn't used to seeing, something that mixed excitement, surprise, and fear. Athalia had backed away from Jack, and it looked like the monster was struggling to hide her trembling, rubbing her fingers together and lowering her gaze down from the boy. She didn't want to look at him. And Damien looked like he was watching his best friend march into the valley of death.

Another glance at Clara showed she truly was scared, but not of the animals, or even scared of Jack. She looked scared for Jack, and that drove a knife into Triss's gut she didn't need right then.

Triss recollected herself, and looked back to the portal. Ignore the scurrying, the tiny squeaks, ignore the thousands of moving bodies swarming around you. Ignore the strange look in Jack's eyes. Jack was the trump card, the big move no one was expecting. Ignore anything strange, ignore that voice in your head telling you to stop this before the kid loses something, and commit to the fucking goal.

The choir of rats and crows, fur and feathers, claws and talons and beaks, were the music to her ritual. The beady eyes were the lighting. The flapping wings and chattering chirps were the rustling of her audience. They all grew silent, and almost completely still, as they stared at Triss, waiting.

Time to get this show on the road.

She lifted her t-shirt with her left hand hand, up to the neck, and set the claw of her right hand high up against her sternum. The portal was a concoction of flesh, woven together using some intangible energy that permeated the world, and she could feel it. As she sank the claw into her skin, she closed her eyes, set the hand that lifted the shirt against the concrete, felt the symbol beneath it, and searched for the connection. She had to find it, the same way she could find another's mind if she wanted to bestow a nightmare upon them, as all Nosferatu could. Instead of another person's mind, she was connecting to something magical, something mysterious, something royally fucked up and twisted. She was connecting to unnatural flesh that could split apart and close itself, guarding another world.

Her chest cavity would serve as the conduit, the connection, the way for her vitae to cross the space between her and the portal, and rip it open.

She kept down the growing scream as she forced her claw into the bone of her sternum. Jacob had introduced her to many forms of pain, in his growing efforts to teach her Crúac rituals. The physical pain was almost blazé. Several times now, when buried to the neck in agony, she'd quieted her mind and found a way to commune with her Beast. When she came to, waking from the coma, the details of the encounter were lost to a haze and fog. But she could remember the shadow creature, and she could remember the feeling it shared with her, of there being something, or someone else out there it could touch.

She summoned that feeling as her Beast had taught her, as the entity Jacob called the Crone taught her, and ripped apart Elen's magic as she ripped apart her own body. Thankfully, she didn't need to literally rip her ribcage open, but that didn't change that she had use Kindred strength to drive her claw down through the bones of her chest, and into her stomach. With each inch her claw cut open, the wall before her began to bleed from its own forming vertical cut, deeper, and longer.

“Oh ... god...” Clara, of all people, was the first to gasp. Triss didn’t dare look her way; breaking concentration now would really suck. But it was obvious Clara’s words triggered a chain reaction, and everyone started gasping as they realized what Beatrice was doing.

“What? What’s going on? I—oh sweet fuck!” Harcourt apparently stepped close enough to take a peek, and almost screamed before someone grabbed him and covered his mouth. Muffled cries lasted for a few seconds before the man calmed down.

Triss kept her eyes on the portal before her, and ignored the scalding pain coursing through her chest. Vitae, thick, heavy blood that refused to drip, dripped. A wound this large was too much for her Kindred body, and several of the viscous droplets splattered on the swarming rats around her feet. They didn’t seem to mind. Hell, Jack used his own blood to summon them, so they probably thought this was just part of their master’s shtick, and it’d turn to ash in a bit anyway.

She pressed both her hands against the enormous, vertical slice down through her chest, soaked them in her vampire blood, and pressed them against the concrete. Like stabbing into flesh, she pressed her claws into the concrete, and began to pull it apart, this time as if she really were ripping open a ribcage. The ritual had turned the concrete into skin, into muscle, meat, bone, something she could rip apart and shred. Something that bled.

“Fuck me,” Othello said. “It’s like ... watching Jacob at work.”

She grinned at that, but didn’t let him see it; too busy with her chest nearly pressed to the portal, and her elbows out as she ripped it apart. It didn’t take long, maybe fifteen seconds, but it was fifteen seconds of concrete becoming flesh, and fifteen seconds of her groaning as she tore it open, hoping to god her chest cavity didn’t explode from flexing muscles.

When the folds of flesh were finally spread apart, the hole was maybe five feet high, and three feet wide. More than big enough for people to enter.

“Triss!” Jennifer came up to her side, and winced as she felt the wound of Triss’s torso. “This is horrible.”

“I’ll live.”

“You can’t fight like this!”

“Watch me.”

“Good job, Trissy,” Jack said. Trissy? She looked over her shoulder again, and stifled a scream, nearly brought by the agony boiling in her chest, and the look on Jack’s face.

That wasn’t Jack.

“Th ... thanks.”

“Now step aside. Follow in when you can. Harcourt, stay behind me, we’re going in first. The rest of you, follow behind Harcourt. We’re not leaving until Jeremiah’s head is decorating my fist, or until we’re ashes.” Chuckling, Jack nudged Triss aside with enough force to nearly make her trip. And then, the stranger stepped into the hole.

~~Jack~~

Letting the curse out was surprisingly easily. He didn’t need to do anything, not really. He just, opened the door, and the curse hopped on out to party, summoned by the promise of blood and carnage. It wanted to play.

It wasn't as overwhelming as the first time. It was there, in his mind, and he could tell it was there, altering him, overriding parts of him, taking over. Jack could still feel, could still control, but the curse was in there with him, in his fingers, in his toes and limbs, and in his blood.

And then, Jack was in the passenger seat. He was still in the car, and still looking around, seeing, hearing, but it wasn't his hands on the wheel anymore, or his foot on the pedal. It was the curse.

The curse was a much better driver.

---

He reached into himself, and unleashed Armageddon. He bit his wrist open, and spilled his sacred blood. He smiled in the darkness, and reached out for the city around him. The shadows were his to control, and the animals were his to lead, order, and rule. There were many animals that lived with the sheep, animals that held kinship with Kindred. In some places, coyotes and owls held closer kinship to Kindred. But in a city, overflowing with flesh and sin, the crow and the rat were his brothers and sisters, and they would be the stepping stones to claiming his throne.

Yes, it was his city. Antoinette owned it in name, and Jacob owned the darkness beneath its shadows, but in the end, there was always a single force that rose to the top of any squabble: the mightiest. They could serve him; Jack would be ok with that, right? He could let them live, and they could serve him. He had no true need for sex, take it or leave it, but it'd be a shame to let a piece like Antoinette go. And Jacob, the old bastard deserved respect.

He could think about those two later. For now, his city had to be cleansed of vermin, and he was going to enjoy every moment of it.

With eyes closed, he reached out for his servants, and felt their presence. Claws, scurrying through the dark. Wings, flowing through the air. Noses sniffing french fries and used condoms.

Talons clutching to glowing neon signs and rain-worn rooftop edges. So many. There were so many of them. He knew, deep down in the recesses of memories that were not his, that Susanna would have creamed herself at being so spoiled for choice. So many, there were so many. Thousands upon thousands of crows covering his city in their beautiful feathers, and millions of rats, living beneath the hooves of its sheep.

And they came. He knew Mulder and Scully would be with him soon, since they were following him already. They'd feel the call, and come. The others though, they would come in a number he could not quite perfectly control. They would obey his call and command, true, and there would be a swarming mass of them, but exactly how big that mass would be, was to be seen. It got him excited. He'd be hard as fuck, if he was Blushing Life.

Scully and Mulder perched on his shoulders, and he gave each of them a deserved scratch on the back of their heads. They would bear witness to his triumph, to the slaughter, and spread the tale to all other birds not present to witness it. Let them know of him, and be in awe.

As the rats began to pour into the small ravine, Jack felt his vitae flow with a renewed hunger, desperate for violence, aching to dance in blood. His wound closed in moments, and he chuckled as he looked around at the waves of fur and claw. He didn't bother glancing at his fellow vampires, weaklings that they were, but he could hear their muffled surprise. The human wasn't nearly as muffled, and he proved his pathetic weakness with every squeak and squawk. A glance at Clara, on the other hand, showed the cute werewolf was looking at him like he'd sold his soul to the devil, and all she could do was watch. Heh.

A glance at Athalia showed something different. She managed eye contact with him for a single moment, before she looked down and backed away. Fear. True terror. That annoying creature inside her, the nightmare creature, it could see him, all of him, and it horrified her. Pretty fucking dumb for a horror monster to be horrified of another monster. Well, fucking psycho skeleton bitch, you ain't seen nothing yet.

Beatrice, in true witch fashion, began to do something super twisted and awesome. She began slicing her chest open. Fucking sick. It was almost predictable that, to open a door made of flesh, a witch would have to cut open their own flesh. When Beatrice started opening the flesh with her hands, pulling it apart, Jack had to fight to keep down an orgasmic groan. It was a perfect way to begin the festivities, pulling open alien flesh like tearing open a present.

Jennifer and Beatrice argued for a moment, but Jack stepped up and nudged the witch aside.

“Good job, Trissy.”

“Thanks,” she said, eyebrow raised. Christ, trying to be nice and she still looked at him like he was the devil. Fuck her.

“Now step aside. Follow in when you can. Harcourt, stay behind me, we're going in first. The rest of you, follow behind Harcourt. We're not leaving until Jeremiah's head is decorating my fist, or until we're ashes.”

He pointed both hands forward, and grinned into the darkness that awaited them. The hunters doubtlessly knew their portal had been opened by now, and probably had some idea about who was out here, ready to come in. He laughed. Yeah, they had no fucking idea what was about to hit them.

It was this moment that made it all worth it. He was seconds away from unleashing Hell upon these poor fools, and they had no idea, no fucking idea at all. He was going to slaughter them like fish in a barrel, delight in seeing the surprise and horror on their faces, and dance in their blood. Relish it, savor it, the edge of the moment before the climax.

“Um, shouldn’t we cloak up?” Damien said.

Jack shook his head. “Last time, Trissy snuck in because the door was open and unlocked. Here, we basically just kicked down the door. They know we’re here. So we do this SWAT style.”

“Which is?”

“Expedient, overwhelming force.”

With a great roar, the tide of flesh and fur flowed forward. It wasn’t subtle, or quiet. It was like watching a ship-breaker wave, the sort that could snap one in half from hull pressure, and it slammed into a hole far too small to accept the rushing tide. The flesh of the portal rent apart under the scratching weight of the rats, and the weird blood splattered around him as his army tore through it. Thousands of rats pushed through in seconds, and thousands more followed, swirling about Jack a foot high off the ground, in a foot-wide radius around him. The rats would not dare accidentally get in his way, and they moved with almost one mind.

Wonderful. Absolutely wonderful. The ocean of blackness scurried forward, and Jack followed. No need to run, he moved along at a slow pace, chuckling as he did. He skipped a little too, because how could he not. Finally, fucking finally, he was going to get to crush Jeremiah’s skill, and rip Angela’s innards out.

“Better warn them, Brace,” he said to the hunter behind him. “Any hunters who even look like they’re going to attack us, my army will devour alive.” There, good enough, Jack? A fair warning to all within, that their lives could be spared. All they had to do was lay down their weapons, and pray that Satan was feeling merciful tonight.

“Shit! Shit shit shit!” The idiot human ran up to join him in the tunnel, and held up his hands to his mouth. “Guys! It’s Harcourt! Put down your weapons, and stay out of the vampire’s way! You won’t be harmed!”

There were a thousand better ways Jack could have done this. He could have established communication himself, under a banner of a parlay, or provided some sort of warning of what was about to happen. He could have sent in Harcourt first, and let the man try and convince them what was happening. This was chaos. This was a giant mess of a situation, horribly handled, that would doubtlessly lead to many deaths.

Good. Better than good. Fucking perfect.

The chamber smelled like flesh, that much was obvious, but it was also pitch black. Trissy had said the chamber was supposed to have an amber glow, so the hunters must have turned out the lights, in the entrance at least. It wasn’t until Aaron pulled out his phone and started shining a light that he could see, and Harcourt and Othello did the same. A tunnel made of flesh, with rib bones along the walls, and blood around their feet. Each step was soft, and would have made a subtle splash in the shallow blood, if it hadn’t been teeming with thousands of rats.

He would have loved to take the time to really enjoy the moment, and the strange fetish environment he’d found himself in. It was like being inside a snake, a gutted one, surrounded by its skin, muscle, and bones. There were bits of metal sticking out of the flesh too, a spike here or there, and some chains hanging from the flesh. Beatrice had said to expect shit like this, and that it only got worse the deeper you went into the tunnel. He couldn’t wait.

Jack smirked into the darkness ahead of him, and the rolling waves of fur and death. He should throw these hunters a bone, if only to keep Jack happy.

How to do this, how to do this. He could go for the snarky introduction, that always worked well. Or he could try the glorious villain introduction, a classic. Or he could stay silent, and let the hunters stew in the unknown.

“He means it, fuckers,” he called into the flesh tunnel. Snarky it was. “I am going to kill every single one of you who even so much as holds a weapon in hand. I’m here for Jeremiah, Angela, and Elen. The rest of you are free to run away.” He could have said ‘free to go’, but then that would have likely meant some of them probably would. An escape offered as an insult to pride would hopefully keep a few more of them around, pitting their egos against themselves. More bodies for the pile. Blood for the blood god.

Movement in the distance, quiet splashes, and then faster splashes. Yeah, someone was running down the tunnel. The splashes stopped suddenly, as if someone had winding up and releasing a throw, and Jack grinned into endless flesh before him. Predictable.

He pointed his hands forward again, and his army obeyed. As flame began to pour down the tunnel toward Jack and his crew, a tidal wave of black fur gushed up and over, claws upon backs upon claws upon backs, until the rushing mound of flesh filled the tunnel to the ceiling. It crashed forward, a plague of delightful, furry little bodies, uncountable and unstoppable, silencing all beyond it. The flame became nothing, lost to the monsoon of rats that filled the tunnel as they barreled forward.

What was that movie? Where the water pours down the tunnel, flooding it in seconds? Probably a bunch of movies, always eliciting terror from the people within as the unstoppable wave of cruel water came for them with all the subtlety of a volcanic eruption. Interesting to be on the other side of the wave.

“Holy shit,” Harcourt said. The man’s eyes were wide, bugging out of his head.

“Come on,” Jack said. He followed after the rolling wave of flesh and fur, smiling with every step. It was a barrier that only an armor-penetrating bullet fired from a high-powered sniper rifle was likely to get through, and while he didn’t put it past the hunters to have that, they weren’t going to have that set up to fire in their current circumstance.

The hunters were trapped. Trapped trapped trapped. Fish in a barrel, unless they had a way to get out of the chamber beyond. Ooh ooh, like opening a present, Jack could not wait to get to the end of the tunnel, and see what gift awaited him.

“Jack,” Clara said, jogging up to him. “Jack, this is—” She stopped, looked down, and sucked in a breath.

Dead rats. Walking through a hallway made of flesh and dripping of blood was pretty awesome, but the way the rolling wave of rats left behind those that died to the hunters attacking from the other side, was artistic. The wave was so huge it plugged the tunnel to the ceiling, and now all sounds of attacks by the hunters were muffled and buried under the roaring sound of tens of thousands of rodents pouring over each other. Chuckling, Jack stepped over the corpses with only a moment’s glance. Some were burned, while others had been shot. Ah well, sacrifices in the name of his pleasure were sacrifices well made. Had to break a few eggs, and whatnot.

Everyone started to follow, once they realized it was safe. They were scared of what they were seeing, but that made it all the better. Susanna had never done this, if the vague images swimming around in recesses of his blood were correct. She’d never taken a crew with her into one of her forays. They’d probably be more pain than they were worth, but it’d be kind of cool to have some witnesses. Normally, no one survived.

Old Jack would have tried to be tactical or something, like back in the nightmare chamber of the gargoyle monster. New Jack, heh, new Jack knew better. Tactics were stupid, and never worked once shit started flying. No plan survived first contact with the enemy. It was so much easier to simply overwhelm, overpower, and be the first person to get that shit flying. Humans, hunters included, did not have the instincts to respond to chaos; and he was going to fucking drown them in chaos.

Mulder and Scully fluttered their wings a couple times, and Jack offered each a quick head scratch, again.

“Don’t worry my pets. Once we’re inside, Trissy says there’s plenty of ceiling space, and dangling things for you to perch on.” They both cawed, loud enough to be heard over the rapids of rats. “I will summon your kin once I am sure they will be of use.” For icing on the cake, of course. Let the hunters drown in biting teeth and scratching claws. His legion of crows could follow, and rip the skin from their screaming faces. And, if some hunters managed to escape through the tunnel Jack had come through, plenty of crows waited outside to tear them to pieces.

“Fuck me,” Beatrice said. “You’re ... fucking sick.”

Jack raised a brow as he looked over his shoulder. Beatrice was following, Othello and Aaron in front of her, with Athalia behind. Her shirt was down again, but it was clear she was struggling with the wound. Yeah, vampire as young as her wouldn’t be healing from a nasty wound like that too easily. But if she wanted to come along and maybe get shot, her choice.

For the life of him, he couldn’t help but give her a big grin. “You wanted this too, right? Don’t get squeamish now.”

While the vampires and the werewolf all looked quite perturbed by the display he’d unleashed, Athalia was carrying a lovely combination of terror and worry. Poor mother was worried for her daughter. Well, Angela was going to die, so the worry was justified, even if it was stupid of her. Her daughter hated monsters, and actively hunted to kill them. What kind of self-respecting monster would let someone like that live? Who the fuck cares if it's family.

Angela was going to die. Hell, Jack was sure he wouldn't have to break his promise to spare the psycho's life in the unlikely circumstance it was possible. No way was someone like that going to go down without a fight. And he remembered the look on Angela's face, when he almost shot her that time in the gargoyle's nightmare. She'd looked relieved. The girl wanted to die, and he was happy to deliver peace.

"My pets, stay back with Beatrice for now. Fly, when the opportunity presents itself. Be my eyes." Mulder and Scully nodded, and hopped back with a single wing flap. The Nos flinched for a moment, but his pets were good enough to not hurt her as their claws met her skin. "We're almost there."

"How do you know?" Damien said. His friend looked at him like Jack was someone else, like he was possessed, like there was some sort of curse running rampant inside Jack, liable to get them all killed.

Nah, they'd all live. He'd make them see he was better than the old Jack.

"My army has found the exit." He grinned at his friend, and set a finger to his own temple. Communication with tens of thousands of rats was a glorious thing, little chirps and squeaks that all meant small images, scents, and textures. It painted an image like a Van Gogh, expressive lines and streaks of color that told so much more than a simple picture.

They were close to the exit now, his army told him, and beyond was a grand chamber of flesh, bone, chains, and glowing amber crystals. Light.

He didn't need his army to explain to him that the hunters were shooting at the oncoming death tide, and in greater numbers. The sound, once nothing more than quiet pop pops in the background, had grown to louder cracking sounds, like someone stepping on bubble wrap. And the corpses of his rats were growing in number, to the point he could not walk without feeling their tiny, broken bodies squash under his step, into the flesh floor. More of the corpses were burned as well, some in huge clumps, others more spread out. Molotovs and flamethrowers.

"Ten more feet," he said. "Everybody duck."

"Duck?" they all said together.

Laughing, he pointed his hands toward the rats, then upward. Moses, parting the Red Sea. No God here though, freeing slaves from an oppressive pharaoh. Just a vampire doing what vampires were supposed to do: kill.

The tide of fur and death erupted forward, exploding outward as rats jumped off rats jumping off other rats. Amber light flooded over them, hints of fire scattering about along the army of fur, but most of the strange light came from the interior of the enormous flesh chamber. Such a beautiful room, with flesh nodules sticking out of the floor like divine cancer, and chains hanging from the ceiling with bones and chunks of corpses hooked onto their spikes. Never in his wildest dreams, could he have envisioned such a beautiful room.

A perfect room to bathe in death.

There was a total of two seconds of beautiful chaos. As thousands of rats poured out of the tunnel and into the chamber, many leaping far through the air, many on fire, Jack analyzed what he could. A dozen hunters, armed with assault rifles and pistols. No Molotovs; must have used them all on the rats. There were two hunters with flamethrowers, but they weren't the crazy military grade kind, so their range wasn't absurd. They were maybe thirty feet away, more than close enough for the explosion of rats leaping forward to send them backward, recoiling.

Jeremiah and Angela were there, in the middle of barking some sort of order, each with pistol in hand and firing at the tunnel. The hunters looked panicked, terrified, and two of them opened their hands to let their guns drop, once they saw Jack and Harcourt. Damn, two lives to spare. Ah well, he'd keep his word, for now.

He grinned the best grin he could summon, and pointed the palms of his raised hands at the stunned group before him.

Only when the choir of shrieks from the portal entrance pierced the chaos unfolding before him, did the unholy chorus of screaming caws fill the air. Everyone behind him finally ducked.

“Surprise, motherfuckers!”

~~Damien~~

Noises so loud they managed to cut through the insanity, erupted from the tunnel behind them. It was hard to notice anything other than the giant flood of rats erupting forward, into the huge chamber of flesh, and pouring out toward the hunters. It was Athalia though, who shoved on their backs and sent them onto their hands and knees. For a moment, he was tempted to yell at her. The feel of alien flesh and blood was not pleasant, and the feel of hundreds of rat corpses mixed among them was even worse.

When a black cloud ripped past their heads, shrieking and cawing, he understood. Like bullets, black bullets with wings, crows flew overhead with zero grace or zero interest in subtlety. Like that night at the hospital, the birds flew straight and hard, zipping past Damien with enough force they could penetrate glass with their beaks. He'd seen it. He did not want to be in the way of it.

“Holy fuck,” Clara said, down in the blood and death next to him.

“Holy fuck,” the three witches said.

Athalia said nothing. But, once Damien managed a glance back toward her, he could see the horror in her eyes as she stared at Jack’s back.

The kid had his hands out in front of him, like he was a puppeteer controlling his puppets. His back looked massive, a small body carrying something none of them could understand. Whoever this man was, it wasn’t Jack. As pandemonium fell upon the hunters, and cries of terror and pain joined the mixture of panic yells, Damien swore he could hear a quiet laughter.

He could. He could see it, too. Jack’s shoulders were trembling lightly, shaking up and down with the motions of someone enjoying a good, deep laugh, noise buried in the discord.

Sometime during all this, Scully and Mulder had left Triss and joined the flock. Damien tried to look up and see where they went, but all he could see was flapping wings, a black cloud that tore through the air with far more speed than the rats could ever accomplish.

After a few seconds passed, and he realized his life was in danger of being riddled with bullets and fire, he got up and got ready to dash forward into the large chamber. Othello, Aaron, and Clara all did the same, up and crouched, ready to sprint toward cover. They didn’t. Despite the obvious danger, Jack stayed in front of them, standing, chuckling, and waving his hand around as he guided his flock. The chaos was a barrier between the vampires and the hunters ahead.

“Remember my pretties, if they don’t drop their weapons, eat them alive.”

“You heard him!” Harcourt yelled. The man had managed to get up at some point, and had his shoulder to the side of the tunnel where it met the chamber. His hands were pressed to his cheeks, cupping around his mouth to try and amplify the sound. “Please, drop your weapons! We’re here for Jeremiah and Angela, not you guys!”

God take pity on this man. There was no chance in all Hell that Harcourt was going to save many of his comrades. Upon opening his mouth, half of the hunters, caught between trying to fight off the impending swarm in melee, and firing bullets at its endless tide, turned to look at him.

“Traitor! Traitor!” they said, screaming, vitriol dripping from their mouths.

“Team! Plan Vermont!” Jeremiah pulled out one of those strange, glowing knives, and stabbed the wall behind him. “Form up!”

And just like that, the ten hunters who kept their weapons, pressed their backs to the wall near Jeremiah, with maybe a hundred feet between them and the intruders, and began their line of defense. The two with flamethrowers formed the outer edges, and each unleashed seemingly unending waves of fire upon the encroaching rats and birds. It was enough to bring the insane, inhuman blitzkrieg assault to a stop. For a moment.

Jack stepped forward, giving his team room to follow. Damien and the others remained crouched as they ran into the room, and slipped along the skin and blood to find giant bone and flesh to hide behind. Gross. It was thick and hard though, more than enough to stop the bullets that were flying around. The other vampires ran to different places, while Clara ran over to join Damien, still untransformed. He was tempted to tell her to do it, but she knew herself better than he did. Surely there was a reason she wasn't.

Maybe she didn't feel the need to, considering none of them had done a thing yet. All of them were just watching Jack do his thing, as the curse turned their absurd, practically suicidal plan, into a brutally efficient frontal assault.

Damien looked up, and gulped. The chains dangling, with bones and body parts hooked onto them, were now covered in crows. Some of the birds took a few nibbles of the plentiful flesh, but most perched for only a moment, before soaring around, either adding to the death cloud that circled above, or dive bombing the hunters doing their best to fend off the rats biting at their ankles. A maelstrom of turmoil for any human caught in its wake, the creatures descended upon the hunters with zero hesitation or fear. They were after blood.

It felt like an eternity. It'd only been ten seconds. In ten seconds, the two hunters who'd dropped their weapons had dove behind some giant bones, and were curled up, clutching their knees as rats splashed past them along the blood. In ten seconds, the rest had formed up and were waiting for Jeremiah to do something called Plan Vermont. In ten seconds, the vampires, werewolf, and monster had taken up positions behind cover, while Harcourt started running toward the two hunters who'd given up. He knew them, apparently, judging from the look on his face. Maybe he'd expressed concerns about their bosses before.

"I'll kill you!" Angela screamed. "Kill you! I'll—" Her voice disappeared under a hail of her own gunfire. A pistol wasn't enough for her, and she grabbed an assault rifle from one of the hunters. Jeremiah was behind her, cutting through the flesh of the wall and carving symbols into it, but Damien could see the man's face carried some panic. And Angela, she looked like she'd been tossed into Hell without warning, and was going to blast her way out.

This was going better than any of them could have hoped for. The hunters were caught with their pants down, caught off guard by the shock of Harcourt's betrayal, by the vampires' ability to break through their closed portal, but most importantly, by Jack's sheer power. Much as Damien wanted to look at the hunters, and maybe launch an attack of his own, he was awestruck, eyes locked onto Jack and the way the kid was slowly waving his hands around. Conducting an orchestra.

This was going to be a slaughter.

Angela's directed fire wasn't aimed for the oncoming swarms of rats or birds, it was aimed for Jack. Rats burned away and crows fell from the air by the dozens, but they were endless, with more pouring in from the tunnel to Jack's call. Each of Angela's bullets were met with a wall of rats that flowed in front of Jack in waves, spreading onto the floor moments later, only to rise up again once Angela loaded a new magazine.

It was sad. Even an elder vampire would struggle to do this; Michael certainly couldn't. The hunters were totally outmatched, and the crew Jack brought with him were practically pointless. Hell, if Damien so much as stood up, a crow was liable to sink its beak into the back of his head, purely by accident. No, every moment of this madness was like a nightmare, someone else's nightmare that Damien was just a powerless witness in. Jack was the Bogey Man.

There would be no grand stand here for the hunters, a last, final battle. They weren't Spartans in the Battle of Thermopylae, or the Alamo. They were cockroaches that'd invaded someone's home, and they'd awakened something dark and twisted in the black, something that was going to destroy them with all the empathy of an exterminator.

"Surrender!" Jack yelled, laughing the whole time. "I'll kill you quick. Hell, Angela, I'll even let you live, so you can spend the rest of your days locked up in a dungeon, alone, with only your mom to visit you. Isn't that right, Athalia?"

Again, Angela paused, eyes snapping around through the chaos until Athalia poked her head out from behind one of the enormous rib bones jutting out from the fleshy floor. It was strange, seeing Athalia in her human form, in an environment that was so obviously a nightmare.

“Angela, stop this!” Athalia said. “Stop! It doesn’t need to end this way.”

“Fuck you! Fuck you! Fuc—”

Jeremiah grabbed her shoulder, and yanked her in through the slit he’d cut in the flesh. The man didn’t have the time to open it wide like Triss had to the other opening, and he moved through it like a splinter pushing through flesh, with blood squirting out from the pressure in the wound.

The other hunters tried to follow, but with two less people unloading lead and flame on the endless swarms, the encroaching animals grew closer, and closer. They tried, they really tried, but as hunter after hunter slipped through the bloody hole, the crows and rats had an easier time reaching the target. When three were left, one with a flamethrower and two with rifles, that was the tipping point, when the end was inevitable.

Rats overflowed the three hunters, and screams filled the room, loud enough they cut through the squawks and chirps of the creatures devouring them. Gargling mixed with their screams in moments, and as Damien finally stood up from behind his cover, he watched flailing arms and legs, sticking out from a literal mound of churning fur and claws, eventually go still.

Damien felt sick, and he thanked the Lord Fiona wasn’t here. Vrall may have been comfortable murdering people, but Fiona? He doubted the joyful woman would be able to stomach seeing these men eaten alive, men and women who didn’t deserve it.

“They got away!” Triss said, forcing herself back to her feet. Clutching her chest with one hand, she walked over to Jack, and pointed at the hole in the wall. “Again!”

“They’ve entered the nightmare,” Athalia said, joining them. “I can feel it. Jeremiah must have opened one of our burrows and entered the nightmare, one of Sándor’s nightmare chambers. I can’t tell which one without entering it first, though.”

Nodding and sporting the biggest, strangest grin Damien had ever seen, Jack pat Triss on the shoulder, and started for the hole.

“Come on then. They’re not getting away. Clara! Transform, rip that hole bigger, and run through it first. I want you to punch a hole through whatever defense they’re setting up. They know what I’m doing now, and I want to make sure we catch them off guard a second time. Rip any hunter in the way to bits.”

“O ... kay...” Clara looked to the roiling mound of rats, still pouring over the three hunter corpses, and the crows that flew by and snatched a piece of flesh, before flying off. She looked just as disgusted as Damien felt, and when she looked Jack’s way, she looked concerned, in a blatant ‘please be ok’ sort of way. Jack either didn’t notice or didn’t care.

“Aaron,” he continued, “get Jennifer, get her in here. She’ll be playing watch duty for these two. And help her tie them up before you follow us in. Athalia, you’re following me. I want information the moment you can give it to us. If this is in the nightmare realm, then will Fiona be able to help us?”

“She’ll be able to sense you’ve entered the nightmare, but finding you is another matter entirely. Sándor’s lair is not open to ours. She’ll have to push her way in.”

Jack groaned and rolled his eyes. “Of course. Can you navigate to her lair from Sandor’s?”

“Yes. It might take a little time, but yes, getting to my lair or Fiona’s from Sándor’s is doable. I assume you want Fiona’s help?”

Jack shrugged. “The more people on my side to stop Jeremiah, the better the chance I don’t feed your daughter’s guts to my pets.” For a moment, it looked like Athalia was going to hit him, but one glance from the little Ventrue was enough to make her freeze, fists clenched at her sides. “Can Jeremiah escape from inside this nightmare chamber? Escape into the city elsewhere?”

“If Jeremiah had to use this flesh stuff to get into the nightmare realm, I’d be surprised if he has a way out the nightmare that doesn’t come right back here; not like Elen would have multiple of these flesh chambers just sitting around for use, hopefully. And he won’t come back here, not now, when for all he knows, we could have a hundred vampires marching in after us to secure this area. Elen has to be in the nightmare with him. Maybe she can create another way out of the nightmare, but I can’t imagine it’s easy.” The Begotten gestured to the flesh chamber around them. “I can’t imagine her doing any of this is easy. And—”

“That’s enough guessing,” Jack said. “Sick of it. Sick of all this guessing, planning. Ugh, doing it makes me want to puke. Enough. Humans are the ones that need to plan, that need to waste their short, useless lives on plans that accomplish nothing. We go in, and we thrive on the free-for-all!” Shrugging, he pointed to the giant, bleeding hole the hunters had squeezed through, and the three corpses that now lay around it, barely more than skeletons anymore. “Damien, Othello, follow in after us. Do your thing; I expect to see some speed and hear some death. Trissy, behind them. Stay out of the way until you’re useful. Bring Harcourt along too, we might need him. Let’s go.”

Clara started to walk over to the hole, before looking over her shoulder. “But—”

“Now!”

Jack’s voice boomed through the room, thunder that silenced every sound. No one moved, no one breathed, and each and every rodent and bird stopped moving as the weight of the entity’s words settled on them. Clara was dumbfounded, eyes wide and locked on the small man. But, after a second, she swallowed down the growing fear Damien saw on her, and she began to transform.

Seeing the beautiful woman turn into a monstrous wolf beast, standing on two legs and eight feet tall, seemed almost mundane in comparison to everything around her. No one batted an eyelash, not even the three hunters crouched in a corner of the flesh chamber. And, with the strength he expected of a werewolf, Clara the Uratha sank her claws into the fleshy walls, and ripped them apart. Blood squirted, gushing from the fresh wounds, and soaking the enormous beast in fresh crimson; it fit the decor.

After a moment to recover, Clara unleashed an enormous roar, and charged through the hole into the blackness beyond. As she did, Jack followed, chuckling yet again as his army of rats poured around his legs until they reached his knees. Big as Clara was, she managed to make the hole big enough for Jack, hundreds of rats, and dozens of crows to follow in after him without issue.

Athalia walked in after him, and Damien could see the dread filling her. As Othello followed, Damien looked back to the others, and found Triss carrying the same look as Clara.

“What ... have I done,” Triss said. In the noise of rats and crows, Damien had to combine the buried sound with some attempted lip reading to piece together her words; a skill he was now trying to learn.

“What do you mean?”

“I did this to him, begged him for his help, asked him to ... to go all out, like this. Oh fucking god Damien, look at him. He’s—”

“Let’s save the guilt for after we get Jeremiah, Angela, and Elen, ok? Besides, I saw him pull out of this once before, at the hospital. Trust him.”

Damien turned, and followed after the others, Othello beside him. He didn’t let Beatrice see his face, and the worry he knew was carved there. This was the second time he’d seen this personality manifest in Jack, yes, but last time the kid pulled out of it by seeing the comatose, dying body of his mother. There was no one like that this time, and if anything, the presence of all the sources of pain and agony in Jack’s life being in one place, would drive him and the curse to new depths of carnage.

“Ok. Ok, yeah.”

“Sure you’re up for this?” He gestured to her chest.

“No, but I’m not missing this. That bitch has to die, Damien. She killed Julias, and ... and she has to ... has to...”

Damien pat her shoulder once, and offered his best confident nod and smile, which weren’t very good, before he followed after Othello.

It was obvious on contact that this wasn’t the same sort of entrance as the one they came in from. The first portal had definitely been meant to be opened; maybe not the way Triss opened it, but it had been designed to be opened, to serve as a doorway. But whatever Jeremiah had done had been some sort of hack job, using Elen’s magic symbols to force an opening through the wall of flesh. It was a mess, leaking blood and showing ruined flesh, like skin being torn apart by claws. Not like, was.

It pressed on parts of his body as he pushed through it, and he had to close his eyes to keep the blood out of them. The wound was closing, like a healing wound, and Damien took some time to push the hanging flaps of flesh apart. Once he created more room, more birds flew in, many hopping off his shoulders as they flapped past. It took effort to not flinch or drop at the feel of their bodies jumping off his.

“Beatrice! Before you come in, tell Aaron he should stay out here with Jennifer, and try and keep this doorway from closing!” Damien said. With the city at his beck and call, Jack’s army was limitless. There were more crows and rats in Dolareido than any human could individually count, and to have them at his service made Jack unstoppable. If they were blocked off, it’d be a problem.

Triss nodded, and Damien pushed through, more rats and birds following him as he fought against the heavy flesh. The wall was thick, thicker than Damien could have guessed. Three feet, four feet, five feet. Six feet. Longinus, give him strength, he was walking into the valley of the shadow of death.

---

---

~~Antoinette~~

She stared at the text in her phone, and slowly squeezed the device. It shattered unceremoniously, bending on itself until the glass screen littered the floor of her office. She dropped it, letting it land with a loud clunk, before she started to tremble with growing anger.

“That ... infuriating ... stupid ... boy!” If Daniel were with her, no doubt her old friend would have asked what was bothering her. But he was not, and she was forced to share her fury with the air. “That idiot boy is risking his life on a yet another excursion, another foolhardy mission to fight the hunters. He has not prepared!” Why did the boy insist on letting impulse dictate his choices, when the hunters were involved? Did he not understand that such a rash action was bound to lead to failure and pain?

She paced left and right in front of her window overlooking her city, and glared down at the Elysium garden beneath her. Once he returned, she was going to tie him to the wall in her bedroom, and leave him there. She would explain, in great detail, the folly of his reasonings and actions, and invite his mother to join in berating him. Samantha may not agree with literally chaining her son to a wall, until Antoinette detailed the actions of her son. Then, no doubt, she would agree with Antoinette. The boy needed to be locked up for his own protection.

She kicked the phone across the floor. A touch of Kindred strength was enough that, upon colliding with the toe of her shoe, the phone exploded, showering her office in its innards.

There was some sense in what the fool was doing, based on what little his text told her. If a hunter had indeed offered him a single night to launch an assault on Jeremiah, and Jack had used his skills as a Ventrue to prove the hunter spoke true, then she could not entirely blame him for choosing to take advantage of the opening. But the boy did not understand. He did not appreciate that eternity lay before him, and if he were to act with wisdom, he would understand that a gamble on revenge was not worth risking eternity. The vampires could weather this storm, and deal with the hunters as they always did, with patience and decades.

Sighing, she took a moment to regain her composure. Such unbridled rage did not become her, and only with a clear mind could she respond to this situation intelligently. As her love described it, it was flipping a switch in the mind, and setting all emotions aside; evidently, he did not employ the skill in this particular matter.

She reached into her desk, acquired another phone, and called her sheriff.

“Yes, Prince?”

“Daniel, where is Jacob?”

“Jacob? I ... I’m not sure. He’s difficult to track, but I assume he’s in one of his sacrifice chambers. He’s not in his Circle’s cave.”

“I see. Well, his Circle has launched an assault on the hunters, with Jack leading them. That foolish boy has taken the witches, his friend Damien, and even one of the Uratha with him into what is undoubtedly a suicidal battle!” Do not crush this phone, Antoinette. It is your spare, and you will need to format a new one should you destroy this one. You do not have time for that.

“I ... see. Natasha?”

“His message said nothing of Vola. Where is your childe?”

“I do not know. I assume she is with Matthew and Arturo, and perhaps her friend Herrington, if ... if Herrington is not with Terry? The message said nothing of her?”

“It did not.” With a loud sigh, Antoinette sent a message to Natasha. Normally the diligent Mekhet would respond within seconds, but nothing came. “I assume you are correct, then,” she said to Daniel. Whether that was because Jack dare not ask Natasha to join him on this mission, knowing full well it would pit Vola against her Prince and teacher, or because he had asked and she said no, Antoinette did not know. But Natasha would crack about such a request from Jack, if Antoinette pressed her for information. Interrogations could come later.

“You think ... Jack will be able to defeat the hunters?”

“With this curse as a tool for his use, like the Devil on his shoulder, I fear he will be able to do far more than defeat them, Daniel. It will be a slaughter, and it will affect my love in ways neither of us can predict.” That did not mean his life was not in danger, but after witnessing its power herself, it was his soul she was concerned for, not his life.

“I see. But, why do you wish to speak to Jacob?”

“Because Jack and the Circle may assume that they were doing this on a whim, without the knowledge of their superiors, but I know Jacob. He and that infernal creature Black Blood watch the shadows of my city, and with such chaos occurring, that man must know something.”

“Then I will find him, immediately.”

“See that you do.” She ended the conversation, got up, and headed for the door. Before she could open it, someone knocked.

There were only three vampires she considered talented and powerful enough to sneak into her tower, without at least one of her defense measures noticing: Daniel, Jacob, and Maria. Talented as the Uratha were, she doubted they had the tools to penetrate her tower; they were beasts, wolves, meant for dirt and hunts, not walls of metal and electronics. Her Beast did not recognize the aura of a fellow Kindred, however.

Upon opening the door, she could not help but be surprised at the presence before her. Elder Nosferatu and Mekhet could hide their presence to the point she would have difficulty sensing them, but this, she had not expected. Mark, the Begotten, stood there with Azamel, in a wheel chair.

A curious moment, and one Antoinette was forced to take pause within. In another circumstance, it would not be Elen Antoinette and her Kindred would be hunting, it would be this woman, yet another old, frail creature in a wheelchair, with far too much power under her control.

Mark was an interesting looking man, dark skin, muscled, and overweight. It would not have surprised Antoinette to see the man playing American Football. But the power of his Horror, the creature that lurked within, did not radiate might. It radiated disgust. It radiated shadow and stealth, subterfuge, and the quiet inching of insects and rot. He was the reason Azamel now sat before her, bypassing Antoinette's defenses.

Begotten were utterly aggravating. Slippery, frustrating creatures. They had tools to tunnel through the world in ways Antoinette struggled to fathom, let alone mimic. If the Uratha were a reminder that Antoinette struggled to master the mysteries of otherworldly connections, the Begotten were reminders that the Uratha were merely children by comparison, in that regard. They lived and breathed other realms in the way Antoinette lived and breathed blood, money, and concrete.

"Azamel," Antoinette said, barely suppressing a snarl, "I assume you have business with me?"

"I do. I ... assume Jack has sent word that he's attacking the hunters?"

"He has."

"Did he mention that Athalia is with him?"

"He did not."

"Hmm. I assume he wants to protect her from the fallout. Your boy toy puts others before himself as a habit, without even realizing it, doesn't he?"

"He ... does." Sighing, she folded her arms across her chest and tapped her foot. "What do you seek, old monster?"

"I would like to see Sándor."

“Out of the question. He is locked away, and I will not risk the presence of one of your kind.”

The old monster chuckled, which turned into a choking cough within moments. “You think I’ll attempt to free him.”

“I think I am not so senseless as to let such a security risk arise with no reasonable benefit for myself.”

The old woman tapped her fingers together. She reeked of cigarettes, tar, poison, and age, but at least she was not smoking; such an insult would be too much.

“Your lover visited me, Prince. I know where’s he’s gone.”

Antoinette clenched her teeth until she felt her fangs emerge, hidden within her lips but ready to sink into this creature and end her pitiful existence as a dried husk.

“And you wish to see Sándor, in exchange for such information?”

“That, and because ... there’s a chance he may be freed.”

Chapter 106

~~Natasha~~

She was going on an adventure!

There was a time, not too long ago, where such a thought would have been absurd. Adventure was not smart. Adventure was how you met an early second death. Survivor bias was a killer, and she would not let the whims of baseless positive thinking get her killed. She made only smart decisions, ones that earned her plenty of money, and status in the Invictus.

And then everything turned upside down. She met a cute boy named Damien, shot him in the head, and got involved in so many things. As a dragon, she'd gained a lot of responsibilities, many that pushed her to step outside her comfort zone. And then she had an orgy while her best friend watched. She met a couple of cute werewolves that she now had sex with regularly, at the same time. She'd seen spirits and ghostly after images, living nightmares, and spoken with what might as well have been some ancient god of death. At this point, she was starting to feel comfortable with being uncomfortable. Mostly. Somewhat. A bit.

Still, as she walked through the Gauntlet behind Matthew and in front of Arturo, she reminded herself that this was dangerous. Adventures like this were how people got killed. So, despite the fact she was going on an adventure with her boyfriends, her best friend, and her best friend's boyfriend, she refused to let her excitement get the best of her. Fear was a better emotion, far more useful, and good at keeping her alive.

She wiped the smile off her face, and tried her best to adopt a frown instead. But after her last trip into the Shadow realm, she didn't feel so scared anymore. Spirits were scary, sure, but not so scary they paralyzed her. They seemed alien, in a real alien way, like from another galaxy sort of way. Their mannerisms weren't human. It was obvious at a glance that spirits did not think like humans or paranormals, and according to the Uratha, they didn't really think at all. They were manifestations of aspects of the physical realm, and everything they did was a reaction to their environment and situations, even if it was an intelligent reaction that considered the past or future.

Which, she supposed, was an argument someone could make about sentient beings. Deterministic universe, no free will, everything is just a chain of causality and chemical reactions and neural pathways, etc. It was a train of thought she didn't waste energy on anymore.

As they stepped out of the Gauntlet, she almost squeaked. Right, right, they were high up, and walking on support beams. Except, that's not what they looked like in the Hisil. Here, she was walking on smoothed metal that glowed, metal that curved under her feet, and metal that felt warm through her shoes. She reached down and touched the flat, filled surface, to make sure it wasn't hot enough to melt her feet.

It was the same building, except no longer were there any hanging lights; the glowing metal served that purpose. As far as she could tell, there weren't any speakers, either. But there was music. It thrummed, fast and frantic, like the heartbeat of a kine on PCP. It almost sounded like drums, but the bass was so thick, she felt it in her skull.

The walls were different, too, with lots of curves that made her want to touch them, and slide along them. Beneath her, she could see spirits floating around, pink and blue with vague human shapes, rubbing along each other and the walls. She didn't need the boys to explain to her what they were, these spirits were aspects of pleasure, sexuality, and joy. The human-shaped ones were obviously created by the humans who came to the club and had sex without end, but there were other spirits down there, too. Some of the creatures that hovered around looked like giant bees, and she had no idea what those were. Others were more obvious, like some sort of giant dragonfly-looking creature, purple, that buzzed around from table to table, leaving behind a white powder from its wings that disappeared after a few seconds. Drugs? Certainly not the pleasure of drugs, but perhaps, the distribution of it. But that made no sense. The spirits wouldn't care about the white powder, and as she watched them from above, she was correct. They didn't care. So why was it doing what it did?

It was a complex ecosystem, where spirits did things. She had no chance of understanding its finer points without intense study, study she was eager to pursue. And that thought made her smile. She had a boss that appreciated such dedication to examination. If Tash wanted, she could get completely lost in studying the spirits, putting together what essentially amounted to a dissertation on them, and Antoinette would both appreciate it, but also read it.

Maybe, just maybe, if she could convince her boyfriends to have a chat with her about the ecosystem of spirits, specifically those in Dolareido, it'd make Antoinette happy? It'd also piss off Avery, though. Making Antoinette happy was one of her primary goals, but she didn't want to make the lives of her boyfriends any harder than she had to.

"They know we're here," Art said, "no need to hide. Just, obey the rules of the city, and Black Blood's dominion over it will keep the spirits from getting in our way."

"W-What are those rules?" Tash said.

Matthew shrugged, and started back along the catwalk the way they came. Much easier, now that the catwalk didn't have holes to fall through. “Hard to say, really. Seems to be a strange balance of the official human law, and the laws the Prince has set up.” He started climbing down the support beam, and Tash sucked in a breath. The support structure didn’t have the individual rungs anymore, as if such a detail was meaningless in the spirit world; they kind of were, really. The metal was warped and bendy, and it glowed a strange rainbow of colors all the way down to the base. The group slid down them without issue, though she could see Eric struggled with the height, and how with the new support beams, they literally had to slide down them, gripping their sides as tight as they could.

Climbing back up was going to be a pain, but perhaps the Uratha had a different locus for getting back to the physical world.

On the dance floor, things were as chaotic and overflowing with life as they were back in normal Dolareido. The spirits swirled around each other, though it was plain to see some were utterly gigantic compared to others. One spirit in particular, another pink creature with decidedly feminine curves, was slithering around the dance floor, while other spirits came up to rub against her—it. Other strange creatures kept out of the way, some more dragonfly-looking things, and a few more of the odd, large bees, that looked too cartoony and simple to be actual bees. And now that she was underneath the pillars, she could see there was something actually flying around underneath the catwalk, a butterfly creature with a long, snake body, and many pairs of wings. It was glowing different colors, each pulsing with the weird, heartbeat music that wasn’t music.

The spirits didn’t seem to really care about Natasha or Jessy. Sure, they stopped and looked at them, if ‘look’ was the right word, considering many of them didn’t have eyes, or had many that looked in many directions at once. Maybe they cared a little, but it wasn’t enough to stop them from doing whatever it was they were doing.

The Uratha, on the other hand, were enough to force every nearby spirit to take notice. The strange creatures moved aside, some going so far as to flatten their serpent bodies to the curved walls to stay out of the way. She didn't understand how a spirit of pleasure, or joy, or drugs, or pretty lights, or all the various possibilities Dolareido had to offer, could express fear, but it seemed like they were. Fear and discontent. They didn't enjoy the presence of the Uratha.

"They really don't like you," Jessy said, eyes wide as she looked around. Right, this was her first step into the Hisil, and she looked at each spirit like a child's first visit to a zoo. It made Tash giggle, seeing her badass, sporty friend regress to a young girl.

Jessy had owned a cat, before she was turned. It was easy to forget sometimes, that Jessy had a soft side.

Art shrugged, with the exact same mannerism as Matthew. Two peas in a pod, those two. "We're the police. Yeah, they don't like us."

"Self-appointed police at that," Matthew said. "If we let them do whatever they wanted, it'd lead to some ridiculous chaos."

"But not in Dolareido," Eric said.

Art nodded, though Tash could see the hesitance on his face. "But ... not here, no. At least, whatever strange balance Black Blood maintains here, it's lasted. So it doesn't want us here, naturally. But Dolareido has reached a critical mass of essence and spirits, David says. Shit's going to pop if we don't help."

They stepped out of the club, and into the streets of Dolareido, in the center of South Side's entertainment district. Jessy gasped as she looked at the buildings and their lights, how they curved in strange ways, and glowed in places where there weren't actually any lights to glow. In the Hisil, half the buildings in South Side were glowing in strange places. Spirits flowed along, some driving along on their weird tire-asphalt hybrid bodies, others flying along on crow wings. The only ones that looked human were the obvious sex spirits, and even then, they didn't look very human. No legs, with bodies like Casper the friendly ghost, except far too friendly, and their faces lacked much in the way of facial features. While the blue ones had broader shoulders, and the pink ones had hips and breasts, it wasn't static. Some of them changed color, or changed shape, or both, as they came and went from the various glowing, twisted buildings. They were manifestations of sexual pleasure, after all, not of people themselves.

But there were direct manifestations of animals, she noticed. On the buildings she could see crows, though they were exaggerated in strange ways; particularly, their eyes had a habit of glowing in the dark, mostly white, but sometimes she could see a crow with red eyes peering down at her from the edges of rooftops. And the rats were practically amorphous blobs, moving along the base edge of buildings, and disappearing into the million holes Dolareido had to offer. Some were larger, had more definition, and pushed the other rats around.

“Holy shit,” Jessy said. “It’s a whole god damn new dimension.”

“You’ve been in a nightmare dimension before,” Eric said.

“Yeah but, this is, like ... there’s an entire city here! That gargoyle dude’s nightmare chamber was just a big, empty castle. I mean, my god!” She pointed up at the night sky, and the chaos of colors it held.

Natasha nodded. “True. Here it’s ... s-so alive. There’s a lot g-going on.”

Art started walking first, in the direction of Devil’s Corner, and the rest followed. “That’s just here. In most places in the city, it can be pretty sparse, and that’s true of most cities in the world. Humans and paranormals don’t have a direct reflection in the spirit world, you've probably noticed by now, so all the spirits are reflections of other things. It can mean some cities look sparse. Dolareido is ... not so much, not here in South Side. It's pretty empty elsewhere though, especially North Side."

"Why don't they have reflections?" Eric and Jessy said in tandem.

"Hard to say. Something to do with a soul, I suppose."

That alone was a question worth a million questions. What was special about humans and paranormals, that set them apart from other animals? A scientist would say nothing, but she was looking at evidence that suggested otherwise.

"S-Speaking of," Tash said, "did you hear about Jack's sister?" Everyone present nodded. "Horrible, so horrib-ble. Jack and Samantha think it's the real her, and n-n-not a ... left b-behind image. So, her ... soul..."

Everyone shivered as they walked down the sidewalk. Talk of souls was always going to be heavy talk, especially with all the rumors of resurrection lately. With Julias dead, Tash could only imagine the sorts of things Triss was up to, especially with an ancient witch as her boss.

"Spirits don't leave behind ghosts," Matthew said, "ever. They can be killed, and they dissipate, become essence, merge into the environment of the Hisil, but nothing like a ghost is left behind."

Jessy raised a hand. "How many spirits have you killed?"

Art winced and looked around. Spirits were listening, giving them space, but still listening. They didn't like the Uratha being in their city, and admitting to killing them was probably not a good idea. "Not sure. Dozens?" he whispered. "A lot more if you include the hunts for food."

“Food?” Tash looked around at the spirits. Some of them were talking with each other in a language she didn’t know, and she cringed at the thought of her boyfriends eating something like Safe. “H-How does that work?”

The boys looked about, motioned people in, and everyone got in close. They were still walking, but huddled up, shoulder to shoulder and with Matthew and Arturo directly behind them so they could whisper, and people could listen.

“Uratha are half spirit,” Matthew said. “We can eat spirits the same way a predator spirit can eat spirits of prey. Eric here could come hunting with us, bring down a beast of the tunnels, or maybe one of the larger rat spirits, and feast.”

Jessy raised her hand again. “Eat spirits?”

Matthew nodded. “Yeah, just like a steak.” When Tash, Jessy, and Eric all looked over their shoulders to raise brows at him, the jolly giant laughed. “You’d have to be Uratha to understand. And Eric might just not realize it, until he’s tasted it. But, maybe this hunt will awaken it in him.”

“I doubt I’ll be eating that drug spirit I saw,” he said over his shoulder.

“Maybe,” Art said. “Spirits do it to each other all the time, devour or absorb each other. A predator spirit may devour a prey spirit, with teeth and claw. Or, a predator spirit might absorb another, contesting territory or fighting for dominance over each other. Either way, you get a stronger, usually larger spirit. They get smarter, more self aware, and more capable of pursuing whatever it is they are. So, don’t feel guilty about eating them, Eric. It’s part of the ecosystem.”

Predators absorbing predators. A wolf with hawk wings? A giant scorpion in a desert, with a dozen tails? The possibilities were endless!

Tash absorbed every bit of information she could, and did her best to hide how interesting the conversation was. With Matthew and Arturo behind her, she feigned keeping her eyes on the sidewalk ahead of her, and looking around at the crazy environment of the spirit half of Dolareido, but she really wasn't. Every detail her boyfriends dropped, she wrote down in her mind. Her boys knew by now that anything they said, she was eventually going to tell Antoinette. If they were willing to talk about it, they were willing to have Antoinette hear about it. Hopefully.

“But,” Matthew said, “most of us don't, or don't often. Carter does, Avery, and so does David. Some of us are closer to our spirit side than others, and some aren't so much. I like meat, personally.”

“How do you like it cooked,” Eric said.

“Either raw or blue seared. The closer you are to your spirit side, the harder you're going to find it to eat normal human food; most Uratha can't touch shit like chips or french fries without getting major digestion issues.”

Natasha and Jessy laughed, and the boys blinked at them several times, before they chuckled as well. Yeah, vampires couldn't eat anything but blood; Tash had long forgotten what a burger tasted like. For the boys to lose their ability to eat fast food, or rather, not be able to digest it easily, was cute by comparison.

“In some cities,” Jessy said, “vampires have parties where they will use the Blush of Life, and indulge in human food. They puke it up later, but I do admit, sometimes I wonder if it'd be worth it, to taste pizza again.”

Ah, yes, pizza, the ultimate food. Probably half the kine Tash had drank from her in second life had eaten pizza within at least a couple days. She couldn't taste that of course, but statistically speaking, it was likely.

Pizza sent her down memory lane, and she smiled to herself as she thought about home. Not her current home, the apartment or the Elysium tower. She thought about her home before she died and became a vampire, before her second life began. She thought about the necklace.

“Hey ... c-can we take a d-d-detour?”

---

Since they didn't have to hide their presence from watching eyes, they got to traverse Dolareido the fun way.

Matthew, Arturo, and Eric all transformed into their wolf forms. Not their regular wolf forms, but the giant wolves, bigger than lions and much thicker. This immediately earned some awwws and ooohs from her, and she hugged Matthew and Arturo as tightly as she could around their giant manes. Terrifying as they would have looked if they were snarling or growling, they were instead sitting like well-trained house dogs, and that was absolutely adorable. She squeezed on them nice and tight, buried her face deep in the fur of their necks, and giggled.

“Kat is going to wonder what the fuck is that smell,” Jessy said, but she copied Tash, and gave Eric a giant hug. Eric wasn't sitting though. Maybe he felt self conscious about acting like a dog? It didn't bother Jessy, but Tash couldn't help but turn into a silly, stupid child when her boys were transformed.

She climbed onto Matthew's back as the wolf beast stood up, and she beamed at her fellow vampire. Jessy looked at her, froze, and practically exploded.

“Oh my fucking god, that is so cute!” Jessy made a very un-Jessy squeal, and started digging into her pockets. “I need a picture! I need a ... a ... It won't work if I take a picture, will it?"

Tash shook her head. "P-Probably not. Uratha have that lunacy thing. It w-w-won't let cameras work right, when they're d-doing werewolfy stuff." She gestured down to the enormous, fluffy creature underneath her. "N-No one would confuse this for a regular wolf."

"God fucking damn it. You're so tiny, and he's so big, it's like ... arg, fuck it." Without ceremony, she hopped onto Eric's back. Mistake. Eric wavered for a moment as someone over twice Natasha's weight was suddenly jumping on him, and he let out a small, deep woof noise. Frowning like a child throwing a tantrum, Jessy slid off and stomped her feet a couple times. "No fair."

"You could transform t-too, you know."

"I don't have something like this," Jessy said. Tash had seen her use various Gangrel forms that warped and twisted her human body, but actual animal transformation was something different.

"B-But you can transform into a normal wolf."

"True." With smile returning, Jessy began to transform into the wolf Tash had seen her use before. A normal wolf, not one of the giant beasts the boys had become.

Eric, without any indication that he was going to, transformed as well. He shrank, mass disappearing into himself, and fur thinning. A wolf was still an enormous creature, but paled in comparison to the giant mass of their bigger, Urshul form. Now, he was basically the same size as the Jessy-wolf beside him, maybe just a little bigger.

It was Natasha's turn to make a squeal, and she struggled to keep the noise from erupting too loudly. It was so romantic, how Eric changed to match her, and now they were two beautiful wolves beside each other. Naturally, Jessy-wolf nudged into Eric-wolf, and started playing, pressing her snout into his neck, and hitting her shoulder against him. And Tash could see Eric wanted to do the same, play, wrestle, but after a couple seconds, he started walking forward.

“Yes, focus! Let’s f-focus on ... this little detour.”

Off they went, to visit the suburbs. It was a couple miles away, and if they had to walk, it would have taken a while. It didn’t seem like there were any cars to drive, though she did see several spirits that could only have been car spirits driving by; no passengers, though. Getting to the suburbs as running wolves, on the other hand, was pretty fast. Natasha was Mekhet, and could utilize Celerity to a great degree with ease, but it wasn’t really meant for running miles. The run of a wolf, on the other hand, made covering miles take only minutes.

The suburbs of Dolareido were divided into several sections that ran in an arch across where it met North Side. There was Rich Side, where Viktor and ... Julias, used to live. Then there was the normal suburbs, with one half sporting nice houses, and the other sporting still-nice-but-not-ridiculously-overpriced houses. Natasha’s mom and dad used to live in the latter, like Jack’s mom did. Maybe she’d run into Samantha and Jack’s old home while they were out looking for what she hoped to discover.

She wasn’t sure what she expected to find, but as her wolf mount slowed down and started to stroll through the streets of Dolareido’s suburbs, she knew she’d find it eventually. Unlike the city center of Dolareido’s spirit half, the suburbs were calm and quiet. Few spirits roamed the large streets, and the ones that did didn’t carry half the imposing nature of the others. The hills of grass and the small sidewalks along the front yards of houses, the small park with a swing set and sandbox, the few trees, the complete lack of convenience stores and neon signs, it was all definitely a very not-Dolareido place.

But that wasn't fair. Dolareido had another side to it, a quiet side, a side where she'd grown up when she was human. It wasn't a vampire friendly part of the city, from the lack of population density or gathering hubs, so vampires rarely came to the suburbs. But as she looked around at the buildings, she smiled as the memories surfaced, of growing up in the quiet world of a home instead of an apartment.

The area reflected that, she could see. Instead of bright, glowing signs that were twisted and pulsing with the Hisil's oddness, the houses in the suburbs were visually dull. In fact, they looked too dull. The houses were there, but they lacked the features she expected to see on a house. The roofs didn't have shingles, but were a solid black surface instead, void of texture. No siding, just a flat surface of color. The lawns were solid flat green surfaces, grass comically simple, and the sidewalks lacked the grooves she expected. So, maybe the Hisil was reflecting how dull the suburbs were? But there was more to it than that. There was an honesty to the display, of the homes showing what they were in such simple terms.

The park near her old home, on the other hand, was far more vibrant. It was night in Shadow Dolareido, but the park had a glow to it that defied her eyes. There was one electric light in the old park in the physical version, a lamp post in the center, and in the Shadow version of the park, it glowed a gentle yellow, but in a much larger area. Soothing, and warm. The swings, slide, monkey bars, sand box, they all had exaggerated features, with simple but bright colors that the single lamppost illuminated to the point they themselves glowed with its light. The grass and dirt were almost invisible, while the playground equipment drew the eye and invited interest, as if asking her to come play.

Within the park, small lights drifted around, and the three werewolves and two vampires paused to stare.

“Oh my g-god,” she said. “That’s beautiful.”

Fireflies. They couldn’t have been actual fireflies, being that they were in the Shadow Realm; maybe they were spirit manifestations of fireflies? But they were huge, and didn’t have a body. They moved around slowly through the park, and Natasha could hear what sounded like giggling, high pitched and joyful. The spirits of children? No, there were no spirits that were reflections of humans themselves, in the Hisil, but that didn’t change that the glowing orbs moved around the park, giggling like children would. They hovered about a foot above the ground, each a foot in width of pure, glowing yellow light, and while they didn’t use the swing set, or sit in the sandbox, or go down the slide, they moved around the objects that children doubtlessly used every day, to have fun.

Spirits of fun, then? Or joy? Or juvenile purity? She didn’t know, and the werewolves couldn’t talk with dog mouths to tell her. Maybe she could ask them later, but then, there was some magic to the mystery. Whatever these spirits were, they were beautiful, like fairies — the good kind — mingling among children and the joy they exuded. The sight of them dug up memories she’d thought she’d lost, memories of her as a small girl, playing with other children. Nothing in the world held the same sense of wonder or amazement, as the memories she had from when she was just a child, learning to ride the swings or go down a slide for the first time.

But, what would happen if the spirits here grew out of control? There were stories in many cultures, about mythical entities that wanted humans to come play with them for all eternity, fairies and such. The stories were not happy ones. It wouldn’t surprise her if those stories had been inspired by real spirits, who grew too large and powerful, invaded the physical world, and started to spread their influence. All of a sudden, the old fairy tales she knew about, the ones with strange and obtuse creatures, seemed like very real possibilities.

She and the wolves moved on. She guided them along the streets, and she kept her eyes along the houses they moved past. Surely one of the houses had to have it. Maybe—

“Oh, there! There!” She pointed to a nearby house, and the bedroom window that overlooked the street. The houses in this area were a bit small, and crammed together, with little in the way of lawns. This district belonged to the Carthians, more or less, as it was right next to the urban areas with the apartments and convenience stores. On a normal shopping day, people in this neighborhood would drive out to the urban area if they wanted clothes, or technology. But the neighborhood was still far away enough that it was quiet, and the only noise she could remember through the day had been from kids playing outside, or a school bus driving by.

The wolves trotted up the driveway of the house. In the Hisil, the driveway had no cracks or dents, but was a smooth black color and shape, as if it was made of plastic. No car in the driveway; none of the driveways had cars, now that she thought about it. A lack of cars was a consistent thing in Shadow Dolareido, though the occasional wheel thing drove by, a concoction of asphalt and tires, with eyes that looked like headlights. She saw many of those in the center of South Side, but out in the suburbs, they were rare.

“Hello!” she called to the window.

The glowing orb hovered over to the window, and flapped one of its angel wings at her. It opened the window with what Tash guessed were tiny arms hidden in the glow of its spherical body, and it flew down to her.

“Hello!” it said, in a high pitched voice. “Uratha? And Kindred. Are ... are you here for me?”

“N-No! No. Um, not really. I uh ... I’m s-sorry, I ... uh ... did we meet? M-My boss, she ... she summoned a spirit like you before, and—”

“Oh! Oh oh. I know you. Friend spoke of you, spoke of visit to Gurihal. Do you want to speak to Safe of Grey Street?”

“Grey Street?” She clapped a couple times, before she forced down her rising giggles. “That’s where my home is.”

“Safe of Grey Street has spoken of their visit. And they spoke of you. They’ve visited you before, hiding in Twilight while you were young. I will take you to them.”

Safe had visited her before? Spirits could sneak into the physical world, she knew that, and hide in Twilight; Twilight was what she and the Prince spent a lot of time investigating. And if it was her necklace that summoned Safe to the Prince’s tower, it didn’t surprise her that Safe must have visited her when she was human, her, and other kids who felt safe in their homes.

Without questioning it, the Uratha and Kindred began to follow the hovering, spherical angel creature. Natasha was still on Matthew’s back, so she got to spend her time looking around and taking in as many details as she could. It was true the city looked empty at first glance, as the suburbs usually did at night, but the more she kept her eyes open, the more she spotted movement. A slithering serpent creature went into a drain along the street curb. Several crows flew by, each of varying sizes that were comically different; one might as well have been the size of an albatross. There was a raccoon, but as usual with the animal spirits, it had didn’t look quite like a normal raccoon. Its tail was bigger, fluffier, its body leaner and more sly, and unless her eyes were deceiving her, its hands looked more like human hands wearing black gloves than a raccoon’s hands.

There were other things too. Dolareido’s Hisil sky was a bizarre display of colors, especially in the center of South Side, but out here it looked a bit less crazy, a bit more natural. But there was no denying that one could tell the direction to the entertainment district of South Side by looking at the sky, and seeing where the warped lighting patterns were bleeding into the clouds.

There were other firefly-like creatures, glowing tiny orbs, and they drifted around streetlamps, or moved along windowsills of nearby houses. They had different colors, too, especially compared to the darker or stranger colors of center South Side: slime green or pulsing neon. Out here, they were soft blues and gentle greens, warm amber, and inviting yellows.

Soon they were on Grey Street, and she smiled at how the Hisil reflected its existence. Yeah, not much happened on Grey Street, and the Hisil agreed. It was quiet, and it was empty. But there was movement in some of the windows of the oddly smooth, simplified houses. Other spirits, maybe like the one in front of her, who looked very similar to the Safe Natasha met. Were they the same spirit, a spirit of safety, or the feeling of safety children felt in their homes?

A large set of angel wings appeared between two homes, hovering forward toward the street. The other spirit, the one with Natasha was maybe a foot wide, with a six-foot wing span. She thought it had arms, but it was hard to see in the glow of its body. On the other hand, the larger creature that hovered out from between two homes had double the wingspan, and while it still had a spherical body, like a glowing glass ball, Natasha was sure she could see some features, like arms or legs within the sphere. It looked almost angelic, in a way, or like a fairy that was evolving inside a safe container.

“Hello!” the larger Safe spirit said. “I remember you, from the Gurihal!”

“Safe!” Natasha hopped off Matthew’s back, and ran over to the large angel creature. And, as if she’d opened the front door to her home after a long day at school, she opened her arms to hug the creature, and felt the weight on her shoulders vanish. She didn’t know why, didn't really understand how, but her body just moved on its own, and wanted to hug this old, beautiful feeling.

The spirit hugged her back, angel wings circling her. "Hello!"

"I ... I never told you my name, did I? I'm Natasha."

"Hello Natasha! I'm glad you're ok. You've been safe?"

"I have, I have!" Giggling like she was a child, she stepped back a little as the huge angel wings spread for her. Yes, she could see through the glass body of Safe now, and see that there was indeed a tiny person inside the sphere, without features, and glowing so bright it filled the orb with pure light. "You've grown."

"I have, I have! I am Safe of Grey Street. The choir has spoken."

Choir? She was tempted to ask, but no, not the time.

"Um, they"—Natasha gestured toward the other Safe spirit—"said you'd visited me before, when I was human? M-Must have been a long time ago."

"It was!" Despite that she was bigger than the other spirit, Safe's voice had the same, high-pitched, joyful squeal. It was contagious, loving, warm, and Natasha couldn't stop smiling at the sound of it. "I was small then, very small, with no name. Now I am Safe of Grey Street. Are you safe, Natasha?"

"I'm, uh, v-very safe. These two Uratha are my protectors. The Kindred is my friend, and the Uratha with her is t-t-too." Friend by proxy. Maybe she should have asked Eric if he felt that way before saying it, but he seemed like the sort of guy to be shy about that sort of stuff, and maybe squirm before reluctantly agreeing. So, it'd probably be best to spare him the pain of that conversation, and just tell him he was a friend.

“Protectors!” Safe spread its wings and offered a bow; a strange look, considering it was just a floating, glowing glass sphere with huge wings. “It’s good that you are safe.” And, as if satisfied that they were indeed safe, the smaller spirit flew away.

Queue for everyone to start transforming. It looked strange to her, the sight of them transforming, but the spirits didn’t seem to care that four wolves, two of which were monstrously massive and scary, transformed into humans; or humanoids, rather. Uratha and Kindred weren’t human, even when in human form.

“And,” Art said, mouth emerging as his enormous snout vanished into a human face, “you’ve been keeping a balance, right, Safe of Grey Street?”

“I have! We have.” The angel creature motioned to her departing, smaller kin with a wing. “Though, our choir is small, as Avery knows.”

“Small?” Natasha said. “D-Do people not feel ... safe, in Dolareido?”

With a warm smile, without a hint of the condescending smirk she’d expect from any lecturing Kindred, Matt gestured to the buildings. “Just because a choir is small, doesn’t mean they don’t have a large effect, or that Dolareido doesn’t have a large reservoir for them to feed on. But some spirits have an easier time growing than others, and some spirits have an easier time gorging on essence compared to others. It all depends on the environment, and how thick the Gauntlet is. The thicker the Gauntlet, the less spirits have to eat, and the less they hang around.”

Complexity on top of complexity. It was a big puzzle, one she was delighted to try and solve; as long as Avery didn’t kill her for it. She didn’t want to be another Minerva.

“Safety,” she said, “w-we came to the Hisil, because Eric wants to ... to...”

“If I’m going to be stuck doing this werewolf gig,” the man said, “I figure I should give it a shot, doing things in a way I can get behind. So, point me in a direction toward something that deserves killing.”

“Deserves?” Safety said.

“Yeah, something that’s causing a lot of harm to Dolareido’s citizens, in Gurihal. I already had a target, but if Tash thinks you know better, then hit me.”

“Oh. You mean, ones that damage their safety?” The safety spirit brought its wings on itself, and pondered. Or at least, it certainly looked like it was pondering.

“Ones that damage safety,” Eric said, “or otherwise inflict harm. Anything that leads to pain, and—”

“Ooh, pain. Yes, pain.” One of its wings unfolded, and pointed back toward the city. “An agony spirit has been growing underneath what you humans call Devil’s Corner. They nest under some place called Mike’s Ring.”

“An ... agony spirit?” Eric said, scratching the back of his neck. “I thought maybe there’d be something more specific, like, a spirit of ... theft, or drug abuse, or murder, or...”

“Oh! One of the named! Those are dangerous, Uratha Eric! Very dangerous. But ... but, if you want to harm those, one spirit called Needle Swords has been growing quite menacing. It drifts near the Blood Tower, and hides under the Turning Lights.”

Needle Swords. That was probably the spirit Tash had seen last time, the ugly, nasty thing with needles for fingers.

“Turning Lights?” Eric said.

“It means,” Matthew said, “Doc Omala’s. Needle Swords is definitely a part of the reason Dolareido’s drug problem exists, and some other nasty shit that happens in the shadows of the city. But we haven’t touched it because—”

Art threw up his hands. “Because Avery says don’t. Black Blood doesn’t want us messing with the balance of its city, especially in the center of South Side, and your Prince doesn’t want us to either. We’re trying to figure out the mystery with this Azlu, and until we do, we’re walking around on eggshells. If we kill Needle Swords, people are going to find out.”

“I couldn’t give two shits,” Eric said, “about Black Blood or Avery or the Prince. Dolareido’s my city. Born here, raised here. If I’m gonna do this Uratha thing, well, fuck Avery, I’m doing it my way.” And with that, the man transformed back into a wolf, and started back toward the city.

Natasha blinked after him, before looking to Jessy. Wow. Tash recognized that look. It was the sort of look a young girl might have, if they saw their favorite musician or actor in person. Awe, or infatuation, or something in between. Whatever it was, seeing Eric turn into a vigilante was doing it for Jessy in a way Tash had never seen.

Poor guy was probably going to be fucked senseless, once they got back.

---

~~Jack~~

What fun, what fun! Pushing through a wall of alien flesh, and following in the wake of a berserking werewolf, into a nightmare realm. What Susanna would have given to be a part of something like this, of the chaos and madness, buried in magic and blood that had to have come from the depths of Hell itself. Glorious.

He stepped out of the flesh and into a massive room, dark and delightfully imposing. Stone walls and stone floors, wooden ceilings, with spiky braziers on the walls holding fire. Right, they'd been here before, Sándor's castle nightmare. Begotten had lairs, and their lairs had multiple chambers, but this seemed to be the one Jeremiah and his crew defaulted to. Maybe they couldn't access the other chambers, or maybe they didn't serve as defensible positions. Well, the stone walls wouldn't protect Jeremiah or Angela. He'd tear them down with his bare hands if he had to.

In front of him, it was pandemonium. The hunters were trying to set up some sort of defensive position, and it was obvious it was a plan they'd practiced in the past. The hallway had wooden doors along its sides, and a large door at the end, like the one the hunters had blown up when Jack had first arrived. Oh wow, he was going to get to do this again! It was going to go better this time.

The hunters fell back, but always with two stopping and turning around to fire behind them. He'd seen this tactic before, where modern soldiers would retreat back as a chain, with the person closest to the enemy pulling back while the others took up positions and unleashed defensive fire. And then once that person was clear, they'd take up a position, start firing, and the new person closest to the enemy would retreat under the protection of their comrades' covering fire. The hunters were trying to do that, but it wasn't working out too well for them. It was just a big, long hallway, and they were doing their best to get to the big, wooden door. The retreating tactic didn't help much. Screams of panic abound as their bullets tore into the tide of rats, but did little to stop the army of rodents. Music for the soul.

But the hunters did have a head start, since it took Clara a bit to get the second portal open wide enough for Jack and his army.

Soon, most of the kine had gotten past the two enormous doors, and were pushing them closed as a couple hunters poured bullets into the oncoming werewolf.

“Come on Denver! Get in here! Get—”

Too late. One final hunter tried to slip past the closing doors, but Clara, snarling and roaring as she charged forward, slammed into her. Her massive weight crashed into the hunter’s body hard enough, Jack could hear bones snap as her head hit the wood. But she didn’t die; that came after, as Clara sank her claws into the hunter’s chest, and ripped her in half, literally. Body parts went flying, blood followed, and Jack laughed as the two parts of the woman’s torso splattered against the stone walls.

Clara had been shot, but she shrugged it off. Ah yes, the amazing regenerative abilities of the Uratha. Maybe there was value in the Uratha after all? He considered it, and balanced the pros and cons of Dominating one, and turning them into a thrall. Maybe Clara? An intriguing thought, but he set it aside for later.

The enormous doors closed with a thud, which was soon followed by more thuds, hammering sounds, and hollers muted by the wood. The humans were creating a barrier, probably throwing nearby things against the door to try and block it off. Cute.

Jack took a second to look behind him, and at the swarming army of rats and crows. Damien and Othello followed, and soon, so did Beatrice and Athalia. Of course, once Athalia made her appearance, it wasn’t the tall, beautiful, angry black woman he’d come to know and love, it was a strange, enormous skeleton creature with no pelvis or legs, that walked around on its hands, and had bone wings. Seeing that push through the fleshy mess on the back end of the hallway, slipping out from what was otherwise a wall of stone, was wicked awesome.

“I will get Fiona,” the skeleton creature said, raspy, loud voice cutting scratches on the walls. “Jack, do not—”

“Yeah yeah. Shut up and do your job.” Fuck, what an annoying woman. Head buried so deep up her ass, she was still convinced she could have it both ways, with the whole being a monster and having a hunter for a daughter thing. Dumbass.

Athalia snorted, opened one of the side doors, and disappeared into the darkness.

“Jack,” Damien said, blood dripping down his trench coat. “I told Aaron to stay behind and try and keep this portal open, so you can ... you know.”

“Yes, good call.” It was true that Jack’s connection to Dolareido was growing thin, so deep in this realm. The vitae he’d spilled to summon his army was a beacon to him, and to the portal where the blood had fallen nearby, but the creatures had to come to him through two portals now, two magical portals at that. Reinforcements were going to come slower, and at a rate that couldn’t be matched by the amount he lost to bullets and fire.

He didn’t need his army to unleash Armageddon on these fools, but it was good to let people think he did.

He walked up to the giant door, frowned, and looked down at the blood splatter the two halves of the hunter’s corpse left behind. The problem with having strength and a small body, was physics. He could tear this door down, but he was too small to get leverage with weight and friction. The stone floor was smooth, too smooth for him to line up a good punch. And he couldn’t fit his fingers between the two doors, either. Unless he managed to get his hands around something, he was just too light to punch it without sending himself flying backward, instead of damaging something as heavy and solid as a giant wooden door at least a foot thick.

“Harcourt,” Jack said.

“Y-Yeah?” The man was just coming through the flesh portal, groaning with every step. His eyes were down, and he was doing his best to keep from stepping on the blood-soaked rats that swarmed past him. Some crows were latched onto his shoulders as well, and took to the air once he was in the hallway.

“Plan Vermont, what is it?”

“Um, it’s us taking up defensive positions in Sándor’s nightmare chambers. We got a lot of shit stored in there, shit we can use to defend in the off chance we needed to. But, I mean, I figured you’d have figured that.”

“I did.” After the last time the paranormals managed to break in and attack the hunters in the nightmare, it made sense they’d prepare for the potential it happened again. Since the Begotten weren’t following in Sándor’s wake to pierce into his lair this time, the Begotten couldn’t just walk into the monster’s lair, either. “Did you know they could break into the nightmare from Elen’s flesh room?”

“Uh, yeah. We do most of our business in the flesh room, though. I don’t think Elen can go in and out of the nightmare easily”

Jack slowly turned and glared at the man. He didn’t like this. They were losing momentum, and there was nothing quite as annoying as losing momentum when on a blood high.

“Clara, tear it down.”

Clara went to work. He may have been a hundred and thirty pounds soaking wet, but Clara had to easily break seven hundred pounds in her enormous werewolf form. She didn’t have quite the burly mass of the male werewolves, but that didn’t change that she was enormous, and an Uratha. She sank the claws of her feet into the stone, set the claws of her hands into the wood of the door, and began ripping it apart.

Glorious. Absolutely, utterly glorious. He could almost see her muscles bulge underneath the fur of her body, and he groaned as her huge claws ripped through the wood like it was paper.

“God damn that’s hot,” he said.

She paused, looked at him with her wolf eyes, confused, before returning to her destruction.

It only took her twenty seconds. If the door had been made of metal, she’d still have probably been able to get through it. Werewolf claws were something special, something supernatural, and Jack almost moaned at the sight of her ripping through the wood and sending the splinters everywhere. They were bloodied with the crimson life of the dead hunter at their feet.

Once she had a hole big enough, about a foot wide, he sent the swarm. They had to keep the blitzkrieg moving, keep pushing forward, keeping ripping into the hunters before they had time to recover and defend. Clara’s short work of the door caught the hunters by surprise, and they took a second before they started unloading lead at the door. The lead was met with furry bodies, and immediately, Clara was splattered with the corpses of hundreds of rats; a living shield, summoned by Jack.

She kept tearing. If the hunters had explosives on the other side of the door they could use, they’d take longer than a few moments to set them up and use them, he hoped. It’d really suck to have Clara die; watching her go full feral freakout berserk rage, and tear open a goliath of a door in seconds, was really arousing for his undead bones.

“Um,” Harcourt said, “Jeremiah does have a habit of putting plans inside plans, and only sharing those details with a few people. So, I mean, Plant Vandermont was about defending Sándor's nightmare chambers from invasion, but I wouldn't be surprised if it included other things."

"Then we'll deal with it when it comes up." Jack threw a final glance back at his crew. Othello and Damien were ready, with Beatrice staggering along behind them. Fucked up as she looked, her eyes were nothing but solid anger and determination, ready to walk through fire to make sure that bitch Angela died. Awesome. "Get ready to rush in, Damien, Othello. I expect a lot of gunfire once Clara's opened the door up, and they still have one flamethrower. Find the fucker with fire, and take them out."

"Sure thing boss," Othello said.

"Alright," Damien added.

At last, with a mighty roar that shook the walls, Clara gave a final outward tear of her hands, and ripped a giant chunk of the door open. Within sixty seconds of entering the hallway, Jack and his crew had rushed through it, killed a hunter, forced the hunters to flee into the main chamber beyond, and had already torn a path into the hunter's defenses. Yes, good, fast, brutal. Don't let the hunters breathe, don't let them get their bearings, just run them down like the worthless animals they were, and kill them. To the paranormals, sixty seconds was plenty of time to get things done. To the worthless blood bags, sixty seconds wasn't enough time to get anything done.

As Clara burst through the door and into the darkness beyond, Jack pointed his hands forward once again, and guided his army of sacrifices and servants. Scully and Mulder flew above, keeping tabs and offering caws of information to him. Yes, he could see what they saw, or at least have a vague idea.

In the room beyond, the hunters fled. There were a few heavy logs thrown haphazardly against the door, but nothing that could create a realistic barrier. And in the next room, Jack had expected to find the enormous columns from last time, each topped with a statue that mirrored the Horror of Sándor. But there were no columns in the large room. Hell, there wasn't a roof. He looked up, and he could see sky, stars, clouds, the full moon, and he could feel a breeze on his face.

It was a village.

Maybe village was the wrong word. It was definitely a group of houses one would expect to see in the medieval ages, but it was also a nightmare, and no fucking way would something like this function as a real village. First thing he noticed was how the castle, with a fresh hole torn through its front door, didn't have a courtyard. No, the door with the hole was connected to a road, and the road was a mile high in the fucking sky. The road, nothing but dirt and rock, was maybe twenty feet wide, and off either side was a giant fall that would kill anyone, paranormal or otherwise. Terminal velocity, even for someone as light and strong as him, would turn him into a splat on the ground if he landed on rock.

They were on a winding, thin road that was literally the top of a mountain, high enough it practically pierced the clouds.

Clara had stopped not far ahead, probably struck dumb by the sudden change in scenery, same as he was.

"Harcourt," Jack said, "the fuck is this?"

"Oh, right! Yeah that Sándor dude has multiple nightmares, right? I thought we were in the castle, but this is a different nightmare."

"But the castle is behind us."

"Yeah, sorta. You can go into the castle from here, but it kinda warps you around. I'm pretty sure when you're inside, it doesn't really match up with that.” He gestured back behind them, to the castle sitting on the cliff edge.

He was right. The castle looked more like a very large, Gothic mansion, which certainly fit the decor, especially considering it had a bunch of gargoyles on columns and stone walls. But the mansion, despite its grandeur, wasn’t big enough to hold the colossal chamber Jack and the others had fought Angela, and Jeremiah in before. That would have taken a grand stadium to contain, something a fair bit bigger than the Dracula-esque castle he was looking at.

But the gargoyles upon its walls and stone outcroppings did indeed look like Sándor, the giant gargoyle with four arms and four wings. Such a magnificent beast of power, the captured Begotten. Maybe Jack could turn him into a thrall, as well.

“Are any of the hunters in the nightmare?” Jack said.

“Back in the castle? Probably no. The Sándor’s Horror is fucking stomping around in there. We stay away. There might be some of us out here though, and Elen’s probably here. She hangs out here.” The hunter gestured to the village at the end of the thin, winding road.

“His Horror is ... stomping around?” Damien said.

“Yeah. I guess wherever Sándor’s locked up, he can’t get in touch with it. So it’s just rampaging around like nightmare things do.”

So a Horror and the Begotten connected to it weren’t completely merged. A Begotten not in the nightmare was separated from its Horror. That made for some weird implications, and Jack didn’t have time to sort them out now. He had some hunters to butcher.

They started down the winding path, going at a steady jog, while Clara burst forward with Uratha strength driving her to inhuman speed. Each step caused her claws to rip up the earth beneath her with far more brutishness than the stone castle provided, and Jack grinned at each running step she took. Fucking hot.

But the rest of them were going too slow. Lucky for them, Jack had been wrong about expecting the hunters to set up a defense outside the door. If they had, he would have lost more rats, and potentially some of his crew to the flames. He didn't mind walking over the ashes of his crew to reach his goal, but they were more valuable alive.

“Othello. Grab Harcourt, carry him.”

“Roger that.”

“W-Wait, I—shit!”

Othello had no problems picking the guy up and slinging him onto his back. And then the group of them were free to move at a proper running pace, even Beatrice, who was grimacing with each step. She may not like who he'd become, but the witch had spirit, and he had to respect that. With her guts almost hanging out, she was willing to run after her vengeance, vengeance he was going to make sure happened.

The hunters had managed to get a little further away, both from the door having blocked Jack's path, but also because Jack and crew were a little shocked by the sight before them. Being this high up was absurd, far higher than any cliff could reasonably be and hold a village. But more than that, it was the geography, the shape of the cliff. At no point did it spread out into a flat land for the houses ahead of them to be placed. Instead, the houses were attached to the sides of the thin, winding cliff, attached by enormous tree roots and sitting upon jutting boulders and rock face edges.

Withered trees sat between the houses, titanic and towering, dark and sharp with a myriad of leafless branches. As Jack ran down the road's length, jumping left and right as the strange road curved to ridiculous degrees, he scanned ahead for where the hunters were. The hunter group had managed to put maybe a thousand feet between them and the paranormals; fast mother fuckers.

What was that quote, from Max Payne? 'I don't know about angels, but it's fear that gives men wings.' Too true. The hunters were terrified, completely surprised by Jack's full-frontal blitzkrieg, and they weren't prepared for it. Four of them were dead, two of them had dropped their weapons and surrendered, and one of them was a traitor. The rest were probably convinced they were all going to die, after seeing that. They were on the run, desperate, panicked, adrenaline pumping and fear coursing through their veins. Their world had fallen apart in a matter of minutes, and the only thing they could do was follow Jeremiah and Angela.

They'd only be able to flee from Jack so far. They were in the nightmare world, and as long as Jack stayed on their heels, they'd falter. If they had another way out of the nightmare, it'd take them time to use it. Athalia was convinced they probably didn't, but she didn't know Jeremiah like he did. She'd never stared the man in the eyes as he tortured her, like he had. The fucker was crafty, devoted, and doubtlessly had backup plans for when shit didn't go his way; that probably included the unlikelihood of Elen's flesh chamber being penetrated.

Plus, as Jack looked out past the village, it became obvious that the strange nightmare town, with its dark windows and empty, winding street, had no exiting road. While the entire village existed on the single road, the road itself looked like it ended by colliding with a forest in the distance. In typical nightmare fantasy fashion, the forest was tall, dark, and obtrusively thick. No one was getting through that forest unless it was on foot, and even then, it'd take ten times as long go through it than open land. Anyone inside would be easy meals for paranormals, especially a werewolf.

If this was where they were going to make their last stand, it was suicide. The houses were made of wood, long slabs of timber, like shitty cheap cottages, and decrepit at that, judging by how horrible they looked; any paranormal could tear through them. With the dark clouds above, the night sky, the full moon, and the creepy wind drifting around the houses, rustling the dead trees and their branches, the village screamed haunted. Nightmare fuel. Well, it was a nightmare, a chamber created in the dream world by some event or entity, according to Fiona. Naturally it'd be fucking creepy. Naturally, he felt right at home.

There was one problem, though. As Jack's rats poured out onto the road, and his crows dotted the sky, no new animals joined him. There was a giant forest ahead, undoubtedly filled with small creatures like rats and crows, but none rose from their hiding places. Jack reached out with his mind, and grit his teeth as he found nothing. The vitae he'd spilled to summon his legions sat upon the dirt and earth of the physical realm, and it summoned the creatures of the physical realm. Here, in a world of nightmare fabrications, a dream realm forged and molded by dreamers and strange creatures, his Kindred powers did not reach the rodents, scavengers, and predators. They weren't real. Fiona was real, and so was Athalia, but whatever things with tiny claws and tiny beaks rested within the nightmare, they were only as real as the road Jack walked on: not.

He was at a disadvantage here, and that pissed him off. Whatever. Once he got his hands on the hunters, or was close enough to force eye contact, he wouldn't need his legions.

“Damien, get ahead of us. I don't want anyone with a molotov hitting us from a window.”

“Done.” The Mekhet jumped ahead, clearing over Clara, and landing on the rooftops. The hunters were still in view, and a few more of them had joined the others, increasing their numbers to maybe ten. What were hunters doing in the nightmare village? Probably helping Elen do something; she'd yet to make her appearance. Maybe she was doing more of her strange witchcraft, and if she was doing it in the nightmare chamber, instead of her strange flesh chamber, maybe whatever she was doing was meant to affect the nightmare realm.

Or maybe she was just taking a nap and preferred to nap here, instead of on a cancerous pile of flesh and blood.

They ran through the village, scanning for possible ambushes, but Damien landed beside them and shook his head.

“The hunters are fleeing into the forest. All of them.”

“The forest?” Othello said. “That forest? Are they serious? We’re going to eat them alive.”

“Don’t be stupid,” Clara said. The booming, guttural growls of her voice silenced everyone. Talking must have been difficult, with a big snout and without lips to articulate. “If Jeremiah retreat into forest, he has ways to defeat us there.” Her sentences were choppy, and missing a few words. It was kinda adorable, in a ‘big bad wolf can’t talk’ sort of way.

“Yeah,” Harcourt said from Othello’s back. “But, fuck me, I don’t remember setting up any defenses here, just in the castle. Jeremiah and Elen didn’t let any hunter stay here in the village for long. They were protective of this place.”

Protective of the village, hmm. It wasn’t a real village, no more than its fake forest, or the fake castle were. The creatures he could see scurrying along the darkness of the mountain, the building edges, the crows and other scavenger birds perched on the dead trees, and the howls he could hear coming from the forest, none of them had true lives of their own. They were just echoes of someone else's nightmares. It made little sense for Jeremiah to be protective of this place.

Unless, Jeremiah and his two bitches were up to things the hunters were unaware of. And they probably were. What other nasty shit was the human witch up to, and capable of doing. And if she was up to something, why here, and not her flesh chamber? Perhaps this place provided her more privacy, if Harcourt was right, and the hunters weren't allowed to stay for long. That meant she could do the darkest, dirtiest stuff. And if she was in those woods, where the hunters were fleeing to, maybe she had some particularly nasty stuff waiting for them.

He couldn't wait.

The village provided no response to Jack's assault. As his flowing army continued to pour out of the destroyed castle door behind him, and his rats swarmed over the tiny, winding road thousands of feet high on a thin, jutting cliff point, no one stopped them. There were eyes in the windows, but a glance and moment's reach of his senses told him there were no living creatures within the buildings, or unliving. More shadows and illusions, more fake images caused by the nightmare. No human could stay here long without feeling like they were going to be eaten.

The hunters reached the forest, turned around, and started stepping backward into the shadows. As they did, they all unloaded their guns toward the oncoming paranormals, who had closed to the distance to only fifty feet; they were much faster than clumsy, slow kine. Othello and Damien could have caught up to them earlier if Jack had ordered it, but he didn't want those two going in first. Clara could front line, and so could Jack and his army; the others would flank.

And that's exactly what they did. As bullets rained on them by the hunters retreating into the forest, Jack ran forward with his rats scurrying along with him. They were propelled by his will, his need, and their swarming mass worked together to turn themselves into a tide that rose up. Bullets disappeared into the waves of fur, sending blood splattering. The bullets did not last long, as the hunters vanished into the forest, and the trees blocked line of sight.

He managed a glance to Clara. Several bullet wounds decorated her fur, and while most of them healed before his eyes, one upon her shoulder was reluctant to do so. Silver. She didn't let the pain bother her. Good, he'd hate to leave a useful piece like her behind, and a hot piece at that.

"We go slow here," he said as they came to a stop at the forest edge, "one of them still has a flamethrower. Beatrice, you're wounded so you keep an eye on Harcourt for now. If he tries to run, kill him."

"Y-Yeah." She stared at him for a second longer than normal, before she motioned for Othello to set the man down. With the hunter at her side, she waited for everyone else to push into the forest first.

If there ever was a haunted forest, this was it. And, unlike the typical haunted forest with a road to walk down, or a path, this had neither. It was trees pressed to trees, warped trunks giving rise to jagged and sharp bodies and branches, with faces hidden in the bark. Not a leaf in sight. To see movement through the trees was impossible, as ten feet was enough for the thick trees to block off all view with their tight constriction. There was maybe two feet on the ground to move about, two feet of space mixed with roots and dead twigs that provided a choir of noise as the hidden hunters moved through the forest's twisted innards.

It wasn't only the hunters making noise. There were animals in the forest, animals that weren't his. They were as much a part of the nightmare as the trees, and they'd listen to his commandants with the same level of respect. Maybe they'd listen to Sándor, if the beast could be tamed to their cause, instead of the hunter's cause. Maybe not. Either way, they weren't his to command, and many started to disperse deeper into the enormous, endless forest that coated the mountain they stood upon.

His army poured into the woodland, and what was once an impenetrable, unknowable barrier of wood and darkness, became penetrated, and known. Kine would find this mess of forest to be unassailable, and suicidal to enter. To paranormals, this was prime hunting grounds. To him, it was as open as a book, now that his rats and crows flowed between the trees. They chirped, squeaked, cawed, and crowed about the contents, about the trees upon trees upon rocks upon dirt upon trees. They spoke of the hunters, and how they fled as fast as they could, glancing over their shoulders in manic fear as they moved in the same direction. They spoke of Jeremiah, and Angela, heading forward together. They spoke of the limp Angela carried, and how Jeremiah was forced to help her.

Limp. She really wasn't fully healed from their last encounter. Good. Fleeing would be harder for her.

This was how things should be! Kindred, hunting through the dark for their prey, with humans fleeing in terror. None of that ludicrous garbage the Prince pushed for, no. This was how Jacob would have done it, and how the new Jack was going to do it, hunting prey as they went screaming into the night. Fucking orgasmic. The hunters didn't deserve a last stand, a grand battle, anything that would lend satisfaction or gratification to their final moments. They were just vermin to be exterminated, vermin that had infested his world. Hunt them down and kill them off. No epic moments, and no stories to tell. They weren't heroes, they were idiots that wandered into the lion's den. No tales, but maybe a parable, a warning to future generations to not mess with dangers you could not appreciate, dangers in the dark.

Maybe they could pile the bodies high, or skewer their corpses on the trees, as decorations and homecoming gifts for when they inevitably freed Sándor's mind. Surely a nightmare monster would appreciate the gift.

A shame Sándor couldn't join them. He'd bet good money the monster would love to dance in the blood of his captors. Ah well, Jack would have to do it for him. He'd kill the hunters, and if he could catch one, he would Dominate them and make them kill each other, and themselves. Make them drink misery, and look each other in the eye as they ripped each other's guts out.

The vampires snuck through the trees without issue, for the most part. But they were all city vampires, after all, and couldn't help but step on twig. It didn't matter. As thousands of rats swarmed over the roots and earth, any noise the vampires made became irrelevant. Like a hundred horses galloping and creating thunder, the legion of rats filled the air with a sound not unlike raining glass shards, as if someone had shattered a million windows at once, and all anyone could hear was the sound of the bits hitting streets for miles in all directions. The crows were quiet by comparison, and their caws didn't reach the same level of sheer, imposing grandiose allure; that'd change, as more of his flock arrived, and their wings blocked out the moon.

Scully and Mulder cawed from perches above. They knew better than to get into the thick of his army, where their lives were in danger. His two closest pets were not to be wasted.

"Clara," he said to the darkness around him, "we don't have time to be sneaky. Rip it down."

The beautiful choir of rat chirps and the constant rain of their claws on bark and rock, disappeared under the shattering roar of the titan. Clara pushed forward and began to rip the forest apart, literally. Her claws sank into wood and went through it like a knife through flesh, and the forest began to collapse around her as she doubled the speed she moved forward. She'd have gotten stuck eventually anyway, considering how big she was.

And, now that Jack had leverage, he was free to use his own strength. Back in the castle hallway that led to this nightmare, he couldn't really get a grip on anything. But here, surrounded by trees, physics were on his side. He reached forward, put his hands between two trees, pointed outward, and spread his arms. He didn't have the sheer weight and velocity to his movements Clara did, or claws for that matter, but there was one simple, undeniable fact, that he was delighted to show off.

He was stronger than the huge beast currently ripping the forest down.

Othello, the oldest of his crew, and a Daeva to boot, with natural strength coursing through him by the power of his blood clan, wouldn't stand five seconds against Jack. Clara, who was probably stronger than Othello in her transformed state, wouldn't last ten. If he could get his hands on them, get a good grip, get his fingers wrapped around something vital, it'd be all over. He'd crush them like a grape, like he did that hunter in the hospital. For now, tearing the forest down would have to do.

He heard a gasp from behind him, Harcourt's, and Jack glanced over his shoulder to laugh at the man, as Jack spread his arms out completely, causing the weaker of the trees to crack, break, and begin to fall. The dark trees were two feet thick, tough as nails, and they fought to stay standing, but that was the fun part. If they just broke like twigs, it wouldn't make any difference. The fact that he and Clara were tearing the whole damn forest down as they chased after the hunters, a strong, sturdy forest, turned the hunt into a theatrical affair of booms and screams.

Screams? Ah, yes, one of the hunters, the closest one, was pinned under one of the trees. Yeap, that was a broken leg, and probably broken hip or something too. The man was trapped under one of Clara's trees, and she pushed past the victim, stepping onto the tree as she continued forward, ignoring a free kill.

That wouldn't do, not at all.

"Harcourt! You gotta do something! Please!" The man held his hand out for his fellow hunter.

"Jack," Harcourt said, desperation in his eyes, "that's Larry! Let him—"

Jack laughed, pointed a palm at the man, and unleashed Hell. Rats poured over the downed hunter like piranha, and the screams turned into shrieks of agony as hundreds of teeth bit down into his clothes and flesh. Shrieks turned into gargled noise that no human mouth or throat could create, and seconds after, silence.

"They had their chance, Harcourt." It didn't make any sense to spare the ones that surrendered now. What kind of message would that be sending? That Jack was soft. Couldn't have that.

He stepped over the corpse, still teeming with rats, and continued on. The squeaks of his army were a mix of satisfaction over the meal, and information about the forest they moved through. The hunters had given up trying to shoot behind them, and were doing their best to move toward somewhere in the forest as fast they could. But the forest was so tight, even his crows had trouble navigating it from above.

Scully and Mulder did their best to provide him with more detailed information. All they could see of the strange nightmare forest was its size, and how it went on endlessly, consuming the mountain as it descended into fog, miles down. No doubt the nightmare was localized to the village and the forest on its edge, and the hunters wouldn't be able to keep going without running into some sort of impassible barrier.

So where were they going? He couldn't wait to find out.

---

~~Beatrice~~

She was following a demon.

She'd seen Viktor get angry before, and do some pretty nasty shit. She'd seen Tony and him get into scuffles before. She'd seen Tony and Garry throw down on occasion, and really tear up a place. When elder vampires decided to get physical, shit got crazy. They wielded insane power, to the point it could be hard to really appreciate.

What Jack was doing was at least on that level, if not a level past. This was some Jacob-level shit, and she'd seen Jacob throw a punch when he beat Art and Matt into the ground like children. Hell, this display of Jack's was something Jacob would have struggled to do, probably. The little guy was marching through the woods, and tearing down enormous trees, while commanding an army of literal thousands. When he managed to get between a couple trees so he could get his footing, he pushed them down and broke them even faster than the giant werewolf ripping the forest open did.

Ventrue did not have the natural strength of Nosferatu or Daeva. They could develop it, sure, but they never came to it with the same ease like Beatrice or Othello, or Jacob or the Prince would. What Jack was doing was the territory of Jacob's strength, and the Prince's. The summoning he was doing was something only Viktor could have rivaled, and she doubted he could match it. Good fucking god, she pitied whatever fucker had to suffer Jack's Dominate.

Fuck her, she should have stayed back with Jennifer, guarding the two hunters who'd given up. She could be keeping the second portal open, like Aaron was.

No. No, no no no, she had to come. She had to see this through. She had to kill Angela. And, she had to make sure Jack came back from this, and more than just alive. No way in fucking hell, could she let this fucking abomination go walking around in Jack's skin.

God, Julias, what have I done to your childe?

“Stay out of his way and shut up,” she said to Harcourt. The two of them were relegated to following the crew now, and she was kind of happy she was. She didn't want to be upfront with the kid, not anymore. Clara was beside him, ripping down trees and charging forward, but she wasn't making quite the same impact Jack was, as the kid pushed trees down like a child marching his toy dinosaur through a Lego city he'd made expressly for the purpose of smashing. Othello and Damien had stopped trying at some point, and had taken up defensive positions right behind the leading two, ready to leap out and attack any hunters who got caught.

The first hunter who did get caught, Larry apparently, was nothing more than bone and strips of shredded clothes, as they stepped over him. Harcourt put a hand to his mouth, gagged, vomited, cried, and pushed on, all in six seconds. Well, she had to give it to him, he had resolve to be able to experience all that and keep going.

“You have no idea where your buddies are going?” she said.

“No. Jeremiah and Elen had lots of secrets, you know? We ... we never got to see everything. They were always protective of their secrets, and they only let us know about the ... sacrifices, after we'd been with the group for some time.”

“Pretty fucking stupid, to work for a boss who sacrifices people as part of their magic.”

“Fight fire with fire, was their plan.”

Snarling, she pushed her shirt up a little and ran a claw along her stomach. The cut was still there, but at least it had closed, Kindred blood pulling the threads of her skin together to keep her guts from falling out. But it was only skin deep. Her insides were not happy with her, and if she dared do something stupid like run or jump, she might lose a spleen. She was an undead creature, and a withered, useless spleen falling out of her wasn't exactly a big deal, but fuck, it would have hurt. And even an undead creature like her would die a second death with enough structural damage.

“So, because some psychopath told you they were fighting fire with fire, you thought it was cool to start sacrificing people you stole off the street, so you could divine information from their guts, and use their blood to open portals into a literal flesh chamber, some sort of pocket dimension thing, crafted by a witch?”

“Fuck you, I'm here, aren't I?” He wiped his mouth off, and hopped from one fallen tree to the next. “Marge and Dennis are going to live, and that makes this worth it.” Marge and Dennis were the names of the two hunters with brains, then.

“Yeah, well, if things—”

Jack and Clara, and the army of rats and birds came to a stop. A clearing sat before them, fully exposed now that Clara and Jack had pushed all the trees in the path down. Most of the trees. Some trees in the path still stood, but as Clara and Jack tried to reach the few remaining, they couldn't. And those trees had corpses nailed to them.

Everyone other than Jack and Clara found trees to hide behind, and there were plenty with the forest still surrounding them. But pushing further ahead seemed to have come to a stop. Clara slammed her hands against the air, and Triss could hear the impact, as if the werewolf were hitting some sort of super hard, perfectly clear plastic.

Damien spun around, eyes on the ground. “Look for an amber light, or circle!”

Everyone did, but no amber light made an appearance, for the first few seconds. But an amber glow eventually did start to arise from between the fallen bark and branches, a line that stretched wide, until it circled the hunters and the clearing they were standing in.

No gunfire came, despite Jack and Clara being out in the open, with only the few trees beyond the protecting line between them and the hunters. A few trees, with bodies nailed to them, were paltry defensive against assault rifles, but the hunters didn’t take a shot. The group of kine were huddled together in the center of the clearing, surrounded by trees with, what Triss had to guess, were sacrifices crucified upon them. In the clearing, a dozen hunters had their guns pointed at Jack and the werewolf, but Jeremiah and Angela were rooting through some bags sitting on the dirt.

Elen, in her wheelchair, was holding a small knife. Triss couldn’t see the handle, but from how the blade gleamed and showed a few decorations along its length, she imagined a host of nasty witchcraft had been done with that blade. A glance at the corpses on the trees proved it; they all had symbols carved into their skin.

In the center of the clearing, a large stone stood, flat, rectangular, and pointing toward the sky at an angle. Elen and the others were ignoring it; apparently it wasn’t the reason they’d come to the clearing. But Beatrice couldn’t look away from it.

On the slab of stone, a giant sheet of skin was plastered, human skin that’d been cut free from a body. And on that, was another one of Elen’s fancy emblems, large, complicated, circular and filled with dozens of symbols.

“I recognize that symbol,” Jack said over his shoulder to the crew. “That’s the symbol on Sándor’s back.”

Chapter 107

~~Eric~~

It was probably a dumb idea. Hell, he knew it was a dumb idea. But he was going to do it anyway.

Maybe he was doing this because he wanted to get some control of his life; it hadn't been under his control in god damn forever. Maybe he was doing this to prove to Avery that he could be Uratha without her guidance. Maybe he was doing this because Jessy was obviously into it, and he could practically feel the hunger in her gaze when he announced his intentions. Going against the 'man' apparently did it for her. He bet, if he met her twenty years ago, she'd be listening to RATM every night during her orgies. Fucking to 'Killing in the Name' would have hit Eric weird for sex, especially the lyrics, but Jessy was the sort of girl to ignore lyrics when dancing, or fucking, and move to the beat.

It surprised him sometimes that she was an Invictus, and not a Carthian. Her rebellious attitude jived with what he knew about the Carthians far more than the money-loving Invictus. Then again, she liked expensive things, expensive places, expensive hobbies, and everything in between. Gift idea? Buy her a fancy suit?

Well, she had money, far more than he did. Hard to buy something expensive for her, when she could just get anything expensive that she wanted. What else did she like? Sex, she liked that. And tonight made it obvious that she was anxious to get some more bodies in the bed. She'd been having orgies for decades, and had gone solo because of him. Orgies didn't interest him, but maybe he should try and meet her halfway. Threesomes were pretty standard, as far as Dolareido was concerned, and vampires as old as Jessy had been doing far more than threesome for years.

He'd like to get her a gift of some kind, though. They'd been dating for a while, half a year, at least, and a gift seemed like a good idea. Except, the only gifts he knew how to give girls were shit like jewelry; that's all Sheryl ever wanted. Jewelry wouldn't work on a woman who could buy anything that ever crossed her path. And jewelry did seem kind of shallow, in the context of their fucked up paranormal lives.

He looked at the wolf beside him. While Matthew, Arturo, and the tiny vampire who rode them were content to stay behind and follow, Jessy stayed at his side. It probably didn't even occur to her to walk behind, despite this whole trip being his idea. For her, it was a reflex to go shoulder to shoulder with him or whoever was leading. He liked that. Last thing he wanted to be was a leader, and it was nice to have someone who'd go side-by-side with him into whatever shit show he inevitably triggered.

Needle Swords was their target. According to the two Uratha helping him tonight, Needle Swords was a spirit that'd grown in Devil's Corner, originally a spirit of misery, that fed on some spirits of drugs. Drug spirits were not negative, and if anything, many of them shared space with spirits of pleasure or adventure, according to Matt and Art. The problem was when a spirit of agony, or misery, or depression, devoured them, or vice versa. Spirits grew either by absorbing similar spirits, or by devouring spirits that fit into the framework. A hawk spirit could devour rodent or fish spirits to become bigger and stronger. It could absorb other bird spirits to become stronger as well, and absorb their natures along with them.

So a misery spirit had devoured or absorbed some drug spirits, and had its nature altered in the process. Now, it was a pretty fucked up spirit with a specific agenda, while also being quite strong. It was becoming a menace. A perfect target for Uratha looking to keep a city healthy.

Spirits had bans and banes. A ban defined the spirit's behavior, what actions it could and couldn't take. Spirits generally operated on a barter system, trading favors for favors, or objects for objects, and were bound by their agreements; usually bound, Art insisted. More specific bans included things like, a fire spirit not being able to cross water, or a spirit of surveillance being bound to give up their secrets if you knew the password.

Banes were actual ways to hurt spirits, to a far greater degree than normal physical violence could. Light could hurt spirits of darkness. Water could hurt fire spirits. It got more complicated, the more complicated and stronger the spirit. A spirit of the darkness of caves where insects made their home, to whom a village had routinely sacrificed goats to, would be a very strange spirit that would require research to figure out. Maybe it could be harmed by purified river water specifically from a nearby stream, blessed by the village who did the sacrificing. Maybe it could be harmed by gathering some of the insects that nested in the cave in the physical world, burning them, and creating a refined powder. Or maybe it could be hurt fire, too.

Figuring shit out was a part of an Uratha's job, according to the others. But it wasn't always necessary. Werewolves were half spirit by nature, and their teeth and claws did damage to spirits like fire did to vampires, and silver did to werewolves. Unfortunately for the werewolves, claws and teeth didn't do the trick on particularly powerful spirits, not very well, at least. Art insisted that, if looking to take something down that was very strong, finding its bane was a requirement.

Needle Swords was not strong, but not weak. They could take him down with their claws and teeth, according to his guides. If they couldn't, they could always go ask around and figure out what was the creature's bane, asking spirits for information, and having to do favors to get it. The original water rapids of economics: trading favors. What sort of thing could be the bane of a spirit of pain and drugs? AA? How the fuck could you distill AA into a bottle so you could—maybe get one of those badges or coins people in rehab programs got? That wasn't a bad idea, actually.

He was excited. He tried to hide it, but Jessy saw, and she bumped wolf shoulder to wolf shoulder with him. Yeah, this was kind of fun. And, it was kind of fulfilling. It felt good to be out, doing this, hunting down something he wanted to kill. There was an itch inside him he'd been struggling to scratch, and this hunt was doing a damn good job scratching it. Hopefully a successful hunt would wipe the itch away, and he could breathe easy again until the next itch arrived.

Natasha wrapped them in the Cloak of Night as they entered the busy half of South Side. They hopped up onto the roof of Doc Omala's, a fat building several stories high, and they looked around at the skyline of Dolareido. The sky in the Hisil, especially in the entertainment center of South Side, was a beautiful concoction of colors that almost looked sinful, as if someone had found the colors to represent sex and alcohol, and painted the night clouds with them. Or, it just had the Las Vegas color palette, he supposed.

The Blood Tower stood not too far away, and everyone took a moment to stare at it. The Prince's tower, a place Eric had been to only once, and it was a place he was glad to avoid. Antoinette was a scary lady, the sort of woman who'd rip your throat out and not even flinch, if she felt it was an optimal strategy in whatever game she was playing. The Hisil version of the tower did a decent job of representing how fucked up a place it was, as the tower leaked blood down its sides in such volume, the tower looked red. A far cry from the Elysium the Prince supposedly said her tower, and the grounds around it, were. No violence allowed. Yeah right.

Shock and awe over, the group looked down through the skylight as they transformed back into their human forms.

“I don’t know much about this place, in the normal world,” Eric said.

The skylight, what would have been nothing more than an outward curved piece of glass in the real world, was larger, wider, and stuck out of the building rooftop like a dome, in the Hisil. Yeah, it was a feature that attracted the eye, and the Hisil’s reflection of it emphasized that.

Inside, Doc Omala’s was a strip club, through and through. There was a stage with several stripper poles, and the Hisil had the poles larger, and glowing. Eric tried to not laugh as he dug up a memory, his first trip to a strip club. It’d blown his mind when he realized it was the pole that rotated.

Eric sniffed deep as he leaned in over the glass to peer. A couple of large pleasure spirits were flowing around on the floor, and some other spirits were as well, more of those dragonfly-looking spirits. But, the spirit that defined the room, was definitely the spirit on the stage. It wasn’t Needle Swords, but some sort of spirit that obviously demanded to be the center of attention, something that thrived on being in the spotlight.

And it was beautiful. Nothing about it looked feminine or masculine, but it was humanoid, tall, and a long flowing cape glittering with all the colors of the rainbow hung from its shoulders. It drifted from one pole to the other, and showed long, beautiful legs, far longer than a human’s, and colored reflective silver. Its face was smooth, lacked any features, and Eric found himself staring at it and its silvery color. It was like, some sort of tall alien creature, that somehow had managed to find a way to look beautiful with its smooth body, despite looking nothing like a human except for a basic humanoid shape.

It was putting on a show for the watching spirits, and it was doing a good job, dancing, swaying, and sliding around the polls. Everyone watched, entranced, and that included the five people on the rooftop.

“That’s Dancing Light,” Matthew said. “It’s pretty old, been around for a few decades at least. Thrives on being—”

“The center of attention, obviously,” Jessy said. “Strangely beautiful, isn’t it?”

Everyone nodded, Eric included.

Art gestured to the scene below them. “It’s been making deals with Needle Swords. See it, in the corner?”

Eric strained his senses, but it was difficult to ignore all the lights and movement in the strip club. Bright colors and flashing lights, spurts of utter darkness, and glittering that would have put any glitter crafts to shame, meant the dark corners were hard to peer into. But he squinted, and forced his senses to focus on the corner Art gestured to.

Right, this spirit, he remembered this spirit, from the last time he was in the Hisil. Natasha recognized it too, and she made a tiny growl that was half intimidating, half adorable.

The spirit was tall, not unlike the dancing spirit on the stage. Unlike the hypnotically beautiful, silver and rainbow creature dancing, Needle Swords was an ugly fucker. A gray cloak filled with holes covered most of its gangly limbs. It wore a plague doctor mask, the kind with a beak, and looked like a crow or raven’s face. And its fingers weren’t fingers at all. They were needles.

“Plan?” Jessy said.

Art shrugged. “Well, we can walk in and take him out, nice and quick. Black Blood will have our hides for that, though.”

“Black Blood,” Jessy said, shivering. “What a spooky motherfucker.” Right, she’d seen Black Blood, when it rescued them from Sándor’s nightmare. What a way to first meet the fucked up creature.

Spooky didn’t really describe what he felt when that giant black skeleton crawled out of oblivion, the last time Eric saw it. A bit of awe, sure, but mostly abject terror. Black Blood didn’t feel or smell like any of the spirits he’d seen in the Hisil. There was something else to it, something that felt very not-spirit like. Even that weird, black blob creature Eric had found at the prison, while emanating the strange aura that did qualify as ‘spooky’, didn’t have the odd aura Black Blood carried with it.

Better to just avoid it if it made an appearance, and do their best to meet its demands, if they somehow violated the rules of the city. The ‘rules of the city’ were vague at best, and he wasn’t looking forward to figuring them out the hard way. It was likely the spirit’s ban, and it’d follow its ban without hesitation; it had to.

“So, assuming that if we storm the strip joint,” Eric said, “and we piss off Black Blood, or break its rules or whatever, we ... probably shouldn’t do that.”

They all nodded.

“Then, m-maybe we bait it out?” Natasha said.

Matthew scratched the scruff of his short beard as he considered. “Needle Swords will want to make a deal. More than most spirits, making deals will be a part of its nature.”

“Course,” Jessy said, “it’s a fucking drug dealer. Might as well be pimping with its off hand.”

Eric almost corrected her, but decided to keep his mouth shut. The spirit wasn’t a dealer, but someone who thrived on the pain that drug addiction could cause. Plenty of people in Dolareido enjoyed drugs, and sometimes even the hard stuff, without letting it build into a destructive habit. Plenty of people, on the other hand, did, and Needle Swords was probably there to enhance their pain and devour the essence it created. It wanted to spread sadness and torment, not prostitutes.

Eric grit his teeth and clenched his fists as he felt anger course through him. Yeah, he wanted this fucker out of his city.

His city? When did he start thinking of Dolareido as his city? He grew up here, sure, but he never thought of it in those terms. That was a new development, something that came with being a wolf he supposed. Territory, home, a den, with food to eat and kin to protect.

“If Natasha is comfortable with it,” Art said, “we could let her make contact.”

“M-Me?”

“You or Jessy. Needle will be suspicious of us, but Kindred in Dolareido get their fingers mixed up in the same sort of shit Needle’s into. It knows that Kindred have started getting into the Hisil I bet, so it might believe you if you said you had a deal to make. And spirits love to trade, make deals, and make contracts they think they can twist to be a profit for them.” How delightfully similar to humans.

The two women looked at each other, frowning.

“We try and keep Dolareido from becoming too slimy a place, you know,” Jessy said.

“Y-Yeah. It’s not like w-we just ... it’s not like Tijuana.”

It was Art's turn to frown, his and Matt's. Eric, on the other hand, was confused. The Tijuana remark seemed almost random.

"I can't go two feet without smelling how fucked up this city can be, Tash," Art said. Oh, Tash had picked up a previous conversation she'd had with Art.

"B-But it's not nearly as bad as other cities."

"So? It could be better."

Eric nodded with Art's words. Mistake. Jessy glared at him, and he managed a small shrug, earlier anger over Needle Swords vanishing. Uh oh.

His girlfriend turned her frustration toward Arturo, thank god. "Dude, Dolareido's crime scene is minor, and that includes the drug scene. Be happy we don't encourage rampant drug abuse; people lost on a high or sleeping dead drunk, are easy meals for vamps."

"Yeah, I know. Kinda grew up in that scene."

Oh, that's what this was about. Arturo grew up in a city where vampires exploited the drug scene, and Dolareido had some symptoms of that. Eric wasn't ready to blame the vampires for that; people were people, and people were stupid. But Arturo was.

Tash opened her mouth, but Jessy jumped in again.

"We let the kine be, Art. Much as we use them for blood, we also let them do what they want to do. The fuck do you want? For us to hold their hands and tell them they should make decisions with the future in mind? Want us to make the city squeaky clean, top to bottom? Looking to be Big Brother?"

"Maybe I am. Maybe I think that we should be doing more for them than just taking from them."

“Taking?” She got in close, and practically bared her fangs at him. “Dolareido’s a great city, and we made it that way. The humans here are enjoying the fruits of our labors.”

“So it’s a gilded cage. Doesn’t change the fact that the humans here are at your mercy, and you’re letting them get into some deep shit.” Art pointed down through the skylight at Needle Swords. “If Eric wasn’t here, you’d be content to let this fucker keep doing what it’s doing, spreading its misery. Easy meals, right?”

“Is the spirit possessing anyone?”

“No.”

“Then the people getting into this shit were making their own choices. Just because they’re being influenced doesn’t mean it’s not their responsibility. The fuck? Come on. You let a drunk man off for punching someone, just because he was drunk? Or not break up with your girlfriend, if she was fucking behind your back, just because she was horny and you weren’t around?” This time she did bare her fangs, and hissed a little, enough to make everyone shut up. “Humans aren’t children. They might seem like it, compared to us, but they aren’t. Let them make their own fucking mistakes. It’s not our job to hold their hand, never was.”

This was an argument Eric did not expect. He knew Art came from Tijuana, and the vamps there didn’t run the city with as gentle a hand as Antoinette. Now, he was getting a clearer picture. Kindred, in powerful positions, abusing entire groups of poor people, downtrodden and desperate, and setting them up for lifelong, life-destroying addictions. Kindred turning kine into slaves, and using them in turf wars, until the bodies piled high. Kindred killing kine, and if the horror stories were true, maybe harvesting their organs, too.

Eric’s childhood, pretty cliché for a poor black kid growing up in a big city, paled in comparison to the horrors Art must have witnessed.

Art didn't look convinced by Jessy, or shocked to silence for very long. "Like I said, if it wasn't for Eric, you'd let this spirit continue doing what it's doing, and ignore that it's helping ruin lives. Wouldn't you? Where's your compassion?"

Anyone else would have been caught off guard by a comment like that, but Jessy didn't flinch or blink.

"Eric wants to try and make this city a better place, I say all the power to him. Hell, I'll help, cause I happen to like the man. But I haven't heard him blame us Kindred for the state of the city." She leaned in closer to Art again, and while she may not have flinched, Eric did. That was her fight face. Eric had seen it, when they were brawling with the Carthians not long ago. "You, on the other hand, seem quick to blame us. Don't drag your hate of vamps into this. We already show kine more compassion than most Kindred do, here in Dolareido."

Matthew looked like a child, trapped between his two arguing parents. Natasha looked like she wanted to join in, and maybe defend someone, but couldn't figure out who. Side with the friend or the boyfriend. And it wasn't like they didn't both have decent points to make. The Kindred could have been doing a better job, and turn Dolareido from an already pretty great city, into a borderline utopia. But that wasn't their responsibility. Hell, vampires fed on people, and it was obvious a lot of aspects of Dolareido were there specifically to make that easier, even if it did mean a potentially harder life for some of the humans. Vampires were higher up on the food chain, after all. It wasn't like Eric could completely argue against that; farms worked under the same premise.

Except, he didn't used to be a chicken or a cow. He used to be human. Same with vampires.

“Um, m-m-maybe we should ... t-talk about this later?” Natasha said. Matthew nodded vehemently.

With a grunt, Jessy and Art nodded. Maybe it was because she was a Gangrel, but it was obvious to Eric Jessy looked for arguments, at least when Uratha were involved. He didn't really mind. It was nice, having a girlfriend who voiced her opinions honestly, even if she did get a bit overly aggressive about it. Better that than passive aggressive.

“I think,” Eric said, “Jessy should make an offer to it. Draw it out to ... Devil's Corner, I suppose. What should Jessy offer it? And, once we get it alone in Devil's Corner, should we just jump it? Or—”

“You will do no such thing.”

Ah shit. The group of them looked to the roof edge, and Jessy almost jumped back, as a crystal blue wave flowed up and over, onto the roof. And angel wings came with it.

---

~~Natasha~~

“Flowing Sanctuary,” Tash whispered.

“Indeed.” The tall goddess of flowing water and angel wings — two types of spirits with angel wings! — flowed over to them, and hit them with water. For a moment, Tash wasn't sure how to respond to that, or if it'd be actual water that hit her. It was. That begged a billion questions about what it was that a spirit's body was made of, because there was no question that all five of the paranormals on the roof were now knocked onto their ass, and soaked.

Uh oh. Uh oh uh oh. She looked between the group, the skylight that was now covered in water, and the enormous water spirit that had risen to join them on the rooftop. Her Cloak of Night was shattered, and it wouldn't have been strong enough to keep something as huge and majestic as Flow hidden anyway.

Flowing Sanctuary really was a beautiful creature, the very definition of a water goddess, a human-shaped torso of water so pristine, it was crystal. Its angel wings started blue, and turned into white mist at the tips of their feathers. No arms, but small waterfalls for arms that turned into the same sort of mist her feathers did. No legs, but instead a slow-swirling vortex of water, like a reverse whirlpool that supported Flow's body. She had no facial features, but at certain angles, and when the water flowed just right, Tash was sure she could see two glowing white slits for eyes.

The fact Flow and Safe both had angel wings was a pattern she'd noticed before, and now that she thought about it, both spirits had similar motifs. Flowing Sanctuary provided a form of protection for her Uratha clan; assuming her name was indicative of her nature. Safe of Grey Street and her fellow, younger spirit, were literal spirits of safety that hung around suburbs where kids grew up. It wasn't like kids couldn't feel safe in an apartment, but there was something unique and powerful about owning your own home, and the spirits must have picked up on that. Why they both manifested with angel wings, she wasn't quite sure.

"The fuck?" Jessy said, getting up from her butt and back onto her feet. "Whoa, what's this?"

"This," Arturo said, grumbling as he also stood up, and spent a little time wringing out his t-shirt, "is Flowing Sanctuary, our pack's totem."

Jessy held up a hand, not dissimilar to how Tash would have. Maybe Jessy was picking up the habit; more likely, just mirroring Tash's mannerisms to get answers.

"Totem?"

“She’s part of the pack,” Matt said. “She helps us, and we help her.”

Help a spirit, a spirit named Flowing Sanctuary. If spirits always tried to spread their influence, and create more of what they were reflections of, then Flowing Sanctuary would probably try and create a sanctuary of some kind. Or maybe, being that it was some hybrid of water and protection, it was too complicated for Natasha to figure out with such simple labels.

Jessy raised her hand again. “Help her with...?”

“None of your concern,” Flow said, powerful voice almost booming. “But I will not let my pack mates destroy the tenuous truce we hold with Black Blood, on some flight of fancy. And I assume this ridiculous plan is yours, Eric Tanverson?” The water goddess pointed one of her—its mist arms at Eric.

“It is.” Eric wiped some of the water off his clothes, before he walked up to the enormous water spirit, and looked it in the face. “And I’m not part of your pack. You can’t tell me what to do.”

“Can’t I?”

Natasha didn’t have to say it. The look on Eric’s face may as well have blared it out with a loud horn, and comedic sound effect. Mistake.

A crashing wave smashed into the roof. Flowing Sanctuary did not pull punches, and Tash couldn’t help but think about real water, as a colossal, heavy wave of liquid smashed into her and her friends, sending them off the building like leaves to the wind. Real water was impartial, and some might say, even cruel. As much as Flowing Sanctuary looked like something that would protect those that it cared for, it also attacked them with the same callousness and total indifference of a monsoon. Or, maybe the better comparison was angel. Much as its angel wings reminded her of Safe and how joyful it'd been, Flow was quickly reminding her of angels from the Old Testament.

Thankfully the spirit didn't throw them out onto the main street. Instead, it tossed them onto the back alley that separated Doc Omala's from the other entertainment buildings. Except, there wasn't much room in the alley, only six feet wide, and to Flow, that wasn't much room at all. As the group of them plummeted toward the asphalt below, water poured over them, crashing downward faster than gravity allowed, and encompassed the five paranormals.

With zero concern for avoiding damaging its passengers, Flow threw them out from the alley onto a distant street, dumping them into an intersection. Nearby car and street spirits swerved out of the way, and left tire tracks behind as they sped off as fast as they could. Crow spirits fled to higher perches. Nearby rat spirits unleashed a choir of shrieks before scampering into the sewers. Random spirits that were drifting between the warped, half glowing, half lit up buildings, scattered and disappeared into the buildings they'd been leaving.

The water drained away, as quickly as it'd arrived, and Flow stood before them, tall, and immutable.

"Avery expected this," it said. "I said she did not trust her Uratha, if she thought them capable of this. Silly me, for not believing her."

The group of them slowly got up, grumbling and groaning with each step. From wet to dripping soaked in seconds.

"Shit, really?" Matt said.

"Fuckin' boss." Grumbling louder than necessary, Arturo rung out the base of his shirt, again. "We weren't going to violate any truce, Flow."

"You know very well Black Blood would not accept this action."

Art threw his arms up. “You know damn well that’s not how it works. We weren’t going to disturb the peace, and that’d keep Black Blood happy.”

The water angel shook its head. “You underestimate the connections of this city, Uratha. As usual, you do not appreciate the politics of the Hisil. I can forgive Eric for his ignorance, but I will not forgive you.”

“I don’t—”

And up Arturo went. Natasha stepped back and gulped hard, as water poured out from Flow’s base, crashed into Arturo, and literally threw him into the air. Thirty feet into the air and then down again. Flow didn’t brace his fall this time, but Art was ready for it, and he landed on his hands and feet. Big as he was, it was still a rough landing, and he collapsed onto his side with the impact. Thud.

With a squeak, Tash ran over to him and helped get him onto his knees. “I thought you said F-F-Flow was part of the pack?”

“It is. That doesn’t mean it gets along with us all the time.”

“Avery and I get along beautifully.” With a sigh, Flow began to circle them. A fairly theatrical feat, considering they were in the center of an intersection, and spirits were watching them from a safe distance. “You two troublemakers, on the other hand, are a problem. You disturb the sanctuary I seek to create.”

Matthew, still on his feet, got between Flow and Art. “Alright, we get it, you don’t like us. Can we calm down?”

“I do not think so. You two need to be taught a lesson.”

Jessy stepped up, earning some raised eyebrows from everyone. Well, Natasha knew her friend would throw herself into harm’s way, but the boy's were surprised. Even Eric blinked at her several times.

“So, uh,” Jessy said, “we’re making quite a bit of ruckus out here. Isn’t Black Blood going to come around and, I dunno, smack us?”

Everyone went silent, and looked around. Considering the power of the spirit, Tash did expect it—him to arrive the moment he felt a disturbance in ‘his’ city.

Where was Black Blood?

---

~~Damien~~

Never, in a million years, did Damien expect to find the horrors he did. But the dark forest proved to be the thorny barrier that tried to keep prying eyes from witnessing its secrets. A forest worthy of the Brothers Grimm. Now that the werewolf and the demon ripped that barrier apart, the secrets of the forest were laid open before them.

Jacob would have been envious of the secrets they found.

At Jack and Clara’s feet, Damien could see black soot; the dust Angela used as a barrier in the hospital. Just inside that, was a glowing amber line, and it circled the small forest clearing all the way around, same as the black soot. It was a barrier Damien was all too familiar with. Just within the circle, there were twelve trees, fat, twisted, black, withered, and barbed. Each tree carried a body, a naked corpse, crucified, nails hammered in through the ankles and wrists. Their stomachs were cut open, and contents spilled at the base of each tree. It reeked, and the nightmare was content to have flies buzz around the corpses.

“Your work?” Jack said with a cackle. The demon kid gestured to the tree near him, and then to the hunters beyond the barrier.

“Like this even compares to the shit you’ve done!” one of the hunters said.

Angela lifted her head from the bag she was digging through with Jeremiah. “Fuck you, vampire. You’d never understand.”

Damien wasn’t so sure about that. Jack and Beatrice had been up to something, and he didn’t know what, but it was safe to assume that nastiness had been involved. A glance to the Nosferatu confirmed his suspicion, as she looked up at the corpses on the trees, caught his look, and looked down for a second. A single second was plenty, for him to recognize a touch of guilt on her face.

“How far the righteous have fallen!” Cackling, actually cackling, Jack began to make his way around the circle. If he was scanning for a hole in the defense, Damien knew he wouldn’t find it. Just like the trap that had caught Damien in the tunnel, the amber circle would block paranormals from crossing, and the black soot seemed to stop anything from passing it at all.

This was probably what Jeremiah had meant by plan Vandermont. If the word had any meaning, Damien couldn’t surmise it, and Harcourt mentioned nothing of the sort; probably just a meaningless name, or something that only meant something to Jeremiah. But the plan had obviously been about retreating to a new position. Harcourt said Jeremiah had a habit of not explaining everything involved in his plans, so the hunters had probably retreated to this location on blind faith, following Jeremiah and Angela to a place they’d never been to before.

No, not quite true. Four of the hunters, two men and two women, were likely privy to some inside knowledge. Those were the four that the Kindred had descriptions of, that’d been scouted out by Jack when he was hunting for Barry’s killers, and by Eric the night Jack had been kidnapped. These four hunters were the four that had already been in the village when Clara had broken through the door.

Two men, white and Hispanic, and two women, black and Hispanic, wearing various mixtures of jeans, leather, and straps holding lots of pistols, magazines, and a couple grenades. They had plenty of tattoos on what skin was visible, more than Harcourt, and almost as many as Angela and Jeremiah.

It made sense that Jeremiah would have some hunters he'd trust a little more than the others. A rank system, or maybe he just relied on them more, and didn't tell the other hunters what he told these four. Either way, those four pulled assault rifles out of the bags sitting in the center of the clearing. One of the four, the white man, took the flamethrower from one of the other hunters, and rejoined Jeremiah in the circle center. None of them looked directly at the vampires.

"Sacrifices must be made," Jeremiah said as he stood up, "to defeat vile creatures such as yourself." A book sat in his hands, and Damien glared at it, squinting, making out every detail he could. The book looked like a movie prop, cover thick and enveloped in the sort of bumps and grooves you might find on dried flesh.

"Oh yes, sacrifices," Jack continued. "Let's put this into perspective, for your hunter buddies here that you've been keeping in the dark." The little man braced one hand against the invisible wall, set another against a tree, and pushed it down, opening up the path before him to continue walking around the perimeter. Crash, boom, a thunderous applause of destroyed wood, before he resumed his walk. "You and your group show up in my city, hunting an old monster named Azamel. Fine, I can understand that. She's your Moby Dick. But then you kill Barry to cover your tracks. That was dumb. The Dolareido vamps would have been much slower to jump on your ass, if you'd left him alone."

That was true. Much as Damien didn't want to admit it, Dolareido vampires were attached to the peace they had. They'd have been far more reluctant to get involved with hunters, if the hunters had let them be. Earning Isabella's ire, on the other hand, expedited how soon there would be inevitable conflict with the hunters, ten fold.

“And then, because you know I know Azamel, you kidnap me and torture me. Heh, if only you fucking morons knew about me and Susanna, you'd have run.” His words earned nothing but confused, raised eyebrows, and glances shared between the hunters. “So, you've been kidnapping humans off Dolareido's streets, and using them in some pretty fucked up rituals, rituals so twisted they'd make any witch of the Circle envious. You used this fucked up magic of blood and flesh, to literally divine useful information for you. You used haruspex to figure out I know about Azamel and her lair. You used it to learn about Eric, and that he also could be an 'in' to Azamel's lair. You used this fucked up magic to enslave a Begotten, and use him against us! And you know what, you fucking know what? I don't take any of that personally. They're tactical decisions that are questionable, but I can understand coming to those conclusions, in your situation.

“But, there is no way, no fucking way, no possible fucking way, that you can justify killing my living family. My mother and my sister were completely uninvolved in any of this, just a couple of innocent humans.” Jack pushed down another tree, a big one, and the forest went silent in the wake of the following explosion and thunder.

“Wait, what?” one of the hunters said.

“It's true, guys!” Harcourt said. Everyone, except Jack, looked back at the man, who was moving among the trees to stick with the group as best he could in the thick forest. “Angela's crazy. She's been on this vengeance kick against Jack. I saw it, in the hospital, and Jack mentioned his mom and sister there. It—”

“Shut up!” Angela screamed. “Traitor.”

“I’m not a traitor! You tricked us! You and Jeremiah and that old bitch, you tricked us!”

“Brace, you’ve been brainwashed,” one of the hunters said, daring to take a step toward the invisible barrier. “You’ve got to realize that. You—”

“Oh, I could have brainwashed him, easily” Jack said. “I could have broken this poor fool and turned him into my doting slave. But he wouldn’t have this spark in his eyes, would he? Wouldn’t have the same panic and mannerisms you probably recognize. But, it doesn’t matter if you believe me or not. Harcourt gave you the opportunity to surrender. Two of you did. They get to live. The rest of you? Too late now.” Down went another tree, and the group of paranormals winced as they watched the kid destroy with as much concern for his surroundings as a child.

Jeremiah and Angela offered Jack some quick glares, too quick for proper eye contact, but it was enough for the other hunters to notice. And when they noticed each other noticing, they started looking between each other, confused. The four hunters that seemed to be the more trusted of the group, on the other hand, mirrored the glares of their bosses, and stayed close to the old woman in the wheelchair.

“Jack,” Harcourt said, “please, come on. If they—”

“They had their chance!” Jack spun and slammed his hand into a nearby tree. With his other hand braced against the invisible barrier, the demon’s true strength went into the punch, and wood shattered around his fist. Bark flew, splinters showered around them, and Othello and Harcourt both ducked to keep the exploding wood from stabbing them.

“So,” Jack continued, “is this where Elen’s been doing the truly wicked stuff? Have you hunters even noticed these corpses on the trees? They’re not from the nightmare. They’re real.” He reached out for one of the trees, but it stood just within the circle, beyond his reach. “She uses these sacrifices for more of her magic. How many citizens have you fuckers killed, since you arrived? You open portals with blood, you divine information with guts, and you control Sándor through sacrifices. And these corpses on the trees? What do they do?”

As he walked, slowly circling the clearing, Jack continued to create his path, leaving a trail of destruction behind. Rats followed, hundreds of them, and they pushed against the invisible barrier. Some dug at the earth, and tried to get under the black soot, but they didn’t get far. The soot either went deep, or its magical properties extended deep. How deep? Damien looked up, and his frown deepened. The crows above were circling, trying to find a way in, but they couldn’t.

“The whole lot of you,” Jack said, gesturing to the hunters, “have sold your souls down the river. None of you are heroes. None of you are valiant defenders, fighting the good fight. You’re all cockroaches who infested my home. Jeremiah, Angela, and the old witch, are horrible fucks with delusions of valor. Your masters, dear hunters, are psychopaths who don’t give a damn about saving lives. And worst of the lot is Angela. She stabbed my mother and sister in broad daylight. My mother nearly died, and my sire sacrificed himself to save her from the bitch. My sister is dead! Her ghost haunts my home. And you know what? I bet telling her that—fuck that, I bet bringing her Angela’s head will help her move on.”

The more he talked, the more Damien felt an ice cold pit growing in his stomach. This wasn’t Jack. This was the demon he’d met at the hospital, the one that had unleashed his army of crows on the building, and the one that had literally popped a hunter, as Jack said, like a grape. But, unlike that hospital encounter, this Jack was piloting for an extended period of time. He was dancing around in Jack’s body, and toying with his voice, using inflections and sinister tones that just didn’t fit Jack. Cackling was just the tip of the iceberg of the mannerisms this new Jack was using. Everything from how he walked, stood, twitched his head faster when looking around, and flicked his eyes like a schizophrenic, was unnerving. And much as he was disturbing Damien, the Mekhet could see Jack's attitude was disturbing the hunters as well. His words were getting to them, making them sweat, tremble, breath faster, and step back from the barrier.

Several of them had interacted with Jack before, in the prison, in the nightmare castle, and at the hospital. This was not the Jack they were familiar with, either. Or, it was the Jack some of them had seen emerge, when Julias had died. No doubt, the kid had become a horror story they told each other. No doubt, Jack was the vampire they'd told each other to now avoid at all costs.

Jack the Ripper. He dare not say it.

“Well, come on!” Jack said. “Let's have it. Let's have whatever final move you're going to do, Jeremiah. What last trick do you have?” As he said it, he motioned for Clara to start digging at the ground. Growling quietly, she obeyed, and started ripping and tearing at the earth and the lines that blocked them. “We'll break these lines eventually. And then what?” A tall mountain of rats splashed against the invisible barrier in front of Jack, pouring against it before collapsing, like a tidal wave crashing against a glass wall. “I'm going to butcher every one of you. I'm going to rip out your insides, and make you watch. I'm going to Dominate your friends, and make you kill each other, slowly. I'm going to make you look each other in the eyes, and strangle each other to death. Ever read The Sandman, 24 Hours? I'll make that seem tame.” The kid tapped his chin thoughtfully, juggling fantasies. “Maybe a little Russian roulette. Maybe a little fun with razor blades, or barbed wire? I'm going to strip the skin off your limbs and—”

At a certain point, Damien threw everything the demon said into a 'horrific' pile, and ignored it. His threats were working though.

Every so often, Jack punched the invisible barrier, and the resounding thud was enough to make the hunters jump; they were afraid of him. Each time, Jack found leverage, putting his feet down against fallen trees or large rocks. And each time, the punch was hard enough that whatever leverage Jack used, was sent backward, ripping up the earth or crashing through other trees violently. Damien and the others stayed well and clear.

Angela looked worried. She tried to hide it, Damien could see that, but there was doubt in her eyes. None of them had predicted the vampires would find a way to penetrate their defenses, and have a traitor give up its temporary location. On top of that, none of them had anticipated the power they awoke within Jack. The kid was coming at them with the power of an ancient elder, like Jacob or the Prince or the sheriff. Elders didn't risk their necks like this, unless they were absolutely sure they were in complete control of the situation. For an elder to run into the unknown on a blitzkrieg assault, was unheard of. Jack was doing just that, and foiling their plans singlehandedly.

The kid was right. There was no last grand stand for the hunters, no moment of tested virtue, no epic finality of martyrdom. All the hunters were going to get, was a tortured end at the hands of a beast whose ire they'd stirred.

Or were they? The four hunters that stood by Elen didn't look as distraught as the others. Jeremiah was turning through the pages of some book, and Angela was pulling out strange objects from the bag. An ornamental stone knife. A shrunken head. A ... spinal cord. The overlap between Elen's magic, and the twisted things Damien expected of the Circle of the Crone, was growing.

"Come on, Angela," Jack said. "How many times have I nearly killed you. Three times, now? I'm standing right here, and you're ignoring me. I'm hurt."

“Fuck you!”

“Haha! Is that it, Angela, all you have to say? You’re the reason I’ve awoken, and now you get to reap the rewards.” Jack took another punch at the barrier, to the same result. But twenty feet to his right, Clara was making progress, causing the earth in front of the black soot to become softer and softer as she got deeper and deeper. Right, like with the explosives in the tunnel, Jack and crew might not be able to affect the barrier, but the material it was drawn on could be affected, if something happened to it. Clara had to dig straight down, not able to cross the barrier in any sense, but eventually the earth would collapse. Probably.

“She’s going to do something,” Beatrice said, nodding toward Elen. Triss was still a ways back from the chaos, next to Damien and Othello. Harcourt had approached the barrier, and was obviously wrestling with the dilemma of trying to convince Jack to spare his friends. Poor man would make no headway with the curse possessing Jack.

Damien nodded, squeezing his sword in his right hand. “What do you think?”

“Well, we know their primary goal is Azamel. And we know Jeremiah knows her intimately. Everything he’s been doing in Dolareido is about him trying to find a way to attack Azamel.”

“Yeah.”

“Yeah, and ... well ... we know Elen can penetrate nightmare chambers.”

“Yeah.”

“So, what’s stopping her from just opening a portal straight to Azamel’s lair?”

At that, Damien could only shrug. “I assume Azamel has a way to lock hers up, or maybe Elen can only enter Sándor’s nightmare.”

The nature of Begotten, their lairs, and nightmares in general, were still a mystery to all of them. Fiona had told him much, and it still wasn’t enough to piece together any sort of framework his mind could grasp. There existed a dream realm, affected or created by human consciousness, and a chunk of it was devoted to nightmares. Nightmare chambers were actual locations in the dream realm, created or affected by humans who had suffered traumatic experiences. They were scars on the dream realm, or maybe the better metaphor was, edifices that had been built in an endless dreamscape. Begotten had a chamber that seemed to birth them, or was integral to their existence, and they could connect other chambers, claim them, and attach them. A lair.

Navigating a maze across a realm of dreams, and figuring out how to penetrate chambers, or prevent them from being penetrated, was well beyond his ability to understand. It probably had less to do with understanding, and more to do with feeling. Mekhet struggled with feeling as is, let alone when taken to as ridiculous a situation as navigating literal dream realms.

Beatrice shook her head. “This is their last chance. What would a psychopath like Jeremiah do, if he realized his back was to a wall, and the only chance he had at completing a mission he’s been pursuing for decades, was slipping through his fingers?”

“He’d ... he’d...” No, he wouldn’t run. A sane person would run. A rational person would run. Live to fight another day and all that. But this was an opportunity that Jeremiah never had before. He was so close to his target, and Jack had, on multiple occasions, made comparisons between Azamel and Moby Dick, and Jeremiah and Captain Ahab.

In Melville's Moby-Dick, Ahab ignored the warning signs and dangers, and proceeded forward on his vengeance quest, until it led to the death of him and his crew, save one. So consumed by complete hatred for the beast that had injured him, he didn't care who died, and that included himself. 'Thus, I give up the spear!' Only for Ahab to be dragged under the water to the depths below, entangled by the rope of his own harpoon stuck in the whale's hide. A sickening, and resonating metaphor for the self-destructive nature of hatred and fanaticism.

If Jack's understanding of Jeremiah was accurate, and Damien believed it was, then Jeremiah was going to put killing Azamel as more important than his own life, or the lives of his hunters.

"We have to get in there," Damien said. "Now."

---

~~Antoinette~~

"I fear," Azamel said, between several coughs, "that I won't be receiving my inheritance, as I once intended."

The Prince looked down at the frail woman beside her, confused. Azamel was in her wheelchair still, with Mark behind her, as the elevator descended into the depths of Antoinette's tower. Naturally, the old woman did not elaborate, likely prompting Antoinette to ask her to. A child's power games, but Antoinette was not in a position to deny her.

"Inheritance?"

"A goal for many of my kind, and rare beyond measure." The old woman shook her head, sighed, and let her eyes drift down. "But, it is not all for naught. Athalia, Mark, and Fiona will continue to grow. I have high hopes for them. And perhaps, we can save this poor soul in your basement as well." The woman's voice was heavy, sorrowful, and each word stirred Antoinette in a way she could not have predicted.

Azamel was a surly, frustrating old woman, the sort who despised everything new, including others. She was the sort who would cover her furniture in plastic, to preserve it through the years as she festered in front of the television. She was the sort who would smoke herself to death, and never once even consider the idea of quitting; smoking was as much a part of her as breathing. Considering her unnatural age, and for how many decades she had been smoking, only her Begotten body kept the tobacco from killing her.

She was the sort of woman who had nothing left in her to share with the world, except for resentment and frustration. To hear her speak of her fellow monsters with such emotion, care, and empathy, was a side of Azamel she had never seen, not in her first visit to her city, or the second. It was unexpected to hear such words from her, and Antoinette felt, perhaps, a little humbled. She was old enough to know death was coming, to be bitter and hateful at the world, and yet, Azamel cared for her kin. Admirable.

“Plenty of women live past where I see your—”

“It’s not old age that comes for me, vampire, at least, not tonight. Jeremiah is being pinned in a corner by your lover and the strange curse, as I knew he would be when Jack came to speak with me tonight. Never has Jeremiah been so close to me and collecting my head, and never has he earned the wrath of something as ... twisted.”

“You can see the curse?” she said.

“Indeed. Begotten can see the truth behind the skin of all creatures.” She shrugged, and reached for her breast pocket for a cigarette. But, when her fingers found an empty pocket, she sighed and set her hands down upon the arms of her chair, more defeated by that than anything Antoinette had ever said to her.

“I was aware you could see more than others could, but I did not realize it was such a powerful tool. Could ... you please tell me more, about what you saw in Jack?”

She coughed a single time, before the elevator doors opened. Antoinette guided them down toward the stairs that led deeper into her labyrinth, and she froze. The Elysium Tower’s labyrinths did not have ramps, for people who used wheelchairs. But thankfully, Mark had little issue leaning forward, securing a grip on the arms of the chair, and helping Azamel move down the stairs with minimal bumps.

“A great and terrible beast, vampire. In all Kindred, we see a creature of shadow, something that twists upon itself, and shows hint of claw, beak, feather, talon, and fang. You and all your fellow vampires are malleable creatures, adapting to your environment as any cockroach, rat, or crow does. But ... but Jack, the shadow creature within him, the vampire part of his body and soul, has grown. It’s enormous, overwhelming, and overpowering.” She was trembling, and rubbing her hands as if to soothe arthritis. For a moment, Antoinette thought it was perhaps Mark letting some of her wheels bounce against the stairs, but once he reached the floor where Antoinette waited, the old woman’s shivering continued.

The image the old monster’s words painted was not a pleasant one. It sounded as if, the dreaded Strix placed a curse upon her lover’s bloodline, that twisted the desires of the natural, normal Kindred condition. Those infernal creatures attempted to draw out the most horrible side of Kindred whenever they made an appearance, and she knew not why. No one did. But wherever Striges were found, Kindred being tormented, and pushed into extreme scenarios, were also found.

The mystery of the curse, its origin, and its connection to those who cast it, were questions she doubted would ever be answered. What she knew for certain, was that her beloved now carried the curse, and judging by Azamel's description, the curse had affected the Beast within her love. It would drive him to violence, to slaughter, and to mayhem.

"I spoke to the curse, for a moment, at the hospital," Antoinette said. "It was a rude creature, wholly confident, narcissistic, and concerned only with its own pleasure, pleasure at the expense of others."

"That must have been horrible for you," Azamel said, though she did not attempt to hide how little she cared for Antoinette's feelings. What reservoir of empathy Azamel carried, she saved it for other Begotten only.

"And—"

"No," Azamel said, "I don't know if he can be cured."

It was Antoinette's turn to sigh, but after a moment to suppress her despair, she began down the hallway. "What do you believe Jeremiah will do, if you are correct?"

"Athalia has already reported back to me, about Jack's assault. She has left my lair with Fiona, and returns to Sándor's to aid your little boyfriend. Jack has ... scared her, Athalia I mean. He's scared her, he's scared his comrades, and he's terrified every hunter." The old monster shook her head, and let it lean to the side, as if it were too heavy to lift. But she kept her eyes open, and breathed with the slow, steady struggle of someone too stubborn to give into pain. "I had not foreseen this."

"Foreseen?"

“What was supposed to happen, was I ... came here, to Dolareido, to hide from Jeremiah. Here, I would lure Jeremiah into lowering his guard, and I would claim his life, with no room for argument from his pack of hunters. The tragedy of Jeremiah, and ... and my own mistakes, would be shared for all to hear. The surviving hunters would be forced to watch, and I would let them live. They would spread my tale, and I would ... receive my inheritance.

“But, that is no longer an option. My health fails me, and I fear I cannot defeat Jeremiah in battle. This battle between us ... has gone on too long.”

“Your health?” So, Azamel’s body was dying. Not tonight or tomorrow night, but Antoinette could see how time had ravaged the monster. “Surely it is not—”

“It’s not the cigarettes. Don’t be ridiculous.” She waved a hand, though even that motion was crippled. If she had flicked her wrist with any enthusiasm, it would have broke. “But, like I said to you, during your first visit following my return, I am old, centuries old. My time will come, sooner than I’d like, and sooner than I’d planned. The battle I wished to have with Jeremiah will not go as I predicted.” And, as if the crone were releasing a lungful of smoke, she let out another long sigh. “Not that it matters any longer. Jack is going to slaughter all of them. Nothing will be left.”

“You said, it was not old age that comes for you tonight?”

“No. Jeremiah will come for me tonight.”

“How? He has done much in his time here specifically in an attempt to find a way to attack you.”

The walk through the hallway was a slow one, as if Mark were afraid a proper walking speed would affect Azamel. Considering how tonight’s conversation had gone, perhaps he was correct. All the doors in the hall were closed, and the large door at the end of the hall waited for them with unyielding patience.

“He has done much in an attempt to find ways to poke holes in my defenses, to find me where I’m human, and to expose my vulnerabilities. But I believe that ... I believe that Jeremiah has been able to penetrate my lair all this time, Prince.” Again, she shivered, and again reached for a cigarette that did not exist, before sighing. “Creatures like Jeremiah find ways of puncturing the nightmare realm, and forcing their way into our lairs. As if God hated us, those damn creatures always find a way.”

“Creatures like Jeremiah?”

“Men and women with conviction, absurd determination, and ... I suppose you could call them psychopaths. History would remember them as heroes, if any remained to tell their tale. And ... and that’s a part of what I needed, vampire. I needed those heroes, and I needed to defeat them. I needed them to come to me and be defeated by me, so wholly and completely, that my Inheritance would be within my grasp.” She shook her head yet again, weighed down by a thousand decisions Antoinette could not begin to understand. “A dream beyond my grasp, now. Instead, I will do what I can to save what I can of my kin.”

Antoinette got in front of the wheelchair, and glared down at the old woman. “You came to my city, not to escape Jeremiah’s pursuit, but to purposefully trigger a battle with him?”

Azamel met her glare, unflinching and resolute. “I did.”

“All for something called Inheritance?”

“As I said, a goal for my existence, vampire. It’s something you cannot appreciate. Don’t try. But for Begotten, there are states of being greater than we are, and when we are old enough, and mature enough to understand them, we pursue them. To become a legend, to become a monster of myth, to have humans everywhere know the name Azamel, as they might Goliath, or the Kraken, or the Hydra, or Abaddon, there is no reward greater for Begotten.”

Somehow, Antoinette doubted that. Not all Begotten embraced their existence so completely and wholly, just as many Kindred hated their existence, and some Uratha likely did as well. Though, it was reasonable to assume that Azamel enjoyed being Begotten, and she was willing to risk the lives of Kindred in pursuit of this unknown goal. It was enough to have Antoinette squeezing her fists at her sides, until they trembled.

“I should kill you now,” she said.

Azamel still did not flinch; carved from stone. As if she’d met death before, and laughed, Azamel met her gaze without fear, though the cough that eventually ripped through her was enough to break it.

“Yes, I’m sure you think so. But, unless Jack proves exceptionally lucky, and manages to kill Jeremiah before he has a chance to act, I expect to be meeting my end before the night is done. I have spent these many years running from Jeremiah, from my past, as Jeremiah knows my weakness.” Past? Weakness. A million questions ran through Antoinette’s mind, begging to be answered, but if Azamel spoke truth that she would likely die soon, it served to let the woman speak. “If Jack backs him into a corner, and I believe he will, considering the power of this curse he’s unleashed, Jeremiah will resort to a kamikaze attack on me.”

“Then why are you not defending yourself?”

“I am, in a way. This kin you’ve locked up, I want to be here, if Jack and his friends free the man from this spell that binds him.”

“The man appears to be comatose.”

“Then when his mind returns to him, we will know the spell is broken.”

“Or, it will be a ploy of his, to be freed so he can return to Jeremiah as dutiful servant once more.”

The old woman shook her head. “You think this man can pretend to be comatose for weeks upon weeks, only to enact a ploy now? I’m sure the spell the shaman has cast on him keeps him comatose when he is captured. Better to have a tool become useless, when captured by the enemy.”

Yes, that was in all likelihood what was happening. But it was not guaranteed, and she did not take chances she did not need to.

“Should every word you have said be true,” Antoinette said, “then I have no reason to help you, Azamel. In fact, you have given me reason to dispose of you. You abused the hospitality I offered, little that it was, and you have risked the lives of my Kindred with your absurd plan.”

Azamel let out another long, slow breath, and shrugged. “If you help me, I’ll take you with me, when I head back into my lair. If things go as I expect, no doubt we’ll run into Jack ... or, the thing inside Jack.”

It took the centuries of practice and patience Antoinette had, to not hiss. “ ... very well.”

Every reflex she had wanted to punish herself, for agreeing to such a ridiculous proposal. She was an elder Kindred, and her responsibilities lay with her city. It was not on her shoulders to venture out, and enact enforcement with her bare hands. Such was the responsibility of her thralls, and her trusted Kindred servants, her sheriff and her student Vola. To handle conflict by her own hand was foolhardy. There came a point in all Kindred’s lives, should they live long enough, that they realized that dealing with conflict, battle, and confrontation directly rather than indirectly, was how one met an early second death. Typically during their later ancilla years, smart Kindred learned to avoid direct confrontation, and to defeat problems with subterfuge, manipulation, or grace. Those that did not learn, died.

When it came to Jack, she found herself reduced to the mentality of a young ancilla, prepared to use her great strength and do things with her own hands. Wisdom vanished, memories and the lessons learned faded, and all that was left was an overwhelming desire to put herself into harm's way to save her love.

Other Kindred had died for such stupidity. And tonight, for the first time in her long life, she considered that, perhaps, dying for such a reason was a worthy cause to perish for.

---

~~Beatrice~~

“Yeah,” she said to Damien, “we do.” The more she watched the hunters in the circle work, the more it became obvious Jeremiah and Angela were planning some final maneuver. The other hunters didn't come here in some last ditch effort to save their skins. They were just following Jeremiah and Angela blindly. She could see the terror in their eyes, panic driving each of them into animal hysteria. Every hunter, except for the leading trio and their four bodyguards, were fidgeting with their guns, checking the safeties, checking their belts for what ammunition they had left, and staring at the growing damage Clara was creating.

The barrier would break eventually. Either the dirt would collapse where Clara dug, and the line would be broken, or there'd be enough open dirt dug up that Clara would literally be able to throw her weight into the wall of earth, and cause it to crumble. One, maybe two minutes at most. But two minutes was an eternity in the middle of extreme chaos, with a few thousand rats and crows fighting to get in, and everyone sitting on the edge of death.

“Form a defensive line!” Jeremiah yelled. “We won’t let these beasts have us.”

While Clara continued to dig, Jack started to circle the hunters once again. If it weren’t for the forest, a brisk walk would take a person around the clearing in a single minute. A large enough clearing for a dozen hunters, a dozen trees with sacrifices crucified on them, and a giant stone with a slab of human skin draped over it. But it was a clearing, a circle, and there was nothing stopping the paranormals from circling it. Once they got in, there’d be nothing stopping the paranormals from circling the hunters, and ripping them to shreds.

As Jack moved left again, his army of rats following him while the crows above hopped along branches or flew overhead, everyone else moved right. It was becoming obvious there was no need to cover the kid’s back. If anything, once the shooting started, the kid would have to come save their asses, not the other way around. Beatrice, Damien, Othello, and the idiot hunter stayed mostly together as they moved around the circle in the other direction. Othello and Beatrice did their best to push down trees when they got in the way, but for the most part they stepped around them. It was a waste of vitae to summon the inhuman strength needed to push over giant trees, for her and Othello, at least. And Damien couldn’t do it at all.

While the hunters were panicked as all fuck, and kept their eyes on Clara and the circling Jack, they didn’t care too much about Triss. Two of them kept their eyes on her, and looked directly at her. An easy bridge for her to reach out, and—and nothing.

“Trying to hit them with a nightmare?” Damien whispered.

“Yeah. Can’t get through.”

“The amber line seems to block things of a paranormal nature. The black line blocks the physical.”

“Y-Yeah,” Harcourt said. They threw glances at him, until the man lowered his voice to nothing more than a quiet whisper. “We draw the amber line with one of Elen’s tools, though it doesn’t last long. And leave Jeremiah’s special black powder as a line, but he doesn’t have much of it.”

“Those two,” Beatrice said, clicking her crocodile teeth along each other as she glared at Jeremiah and Elen, “are a match made in heaven.”

“You’re telling me.” Shivering, Harcourt started to lag behind, at least until Othello gave him a shove of the shoulder. “Yeah yeah.”

Everyone’s eyes went to Elen, as the woman had one of her hunter friends push her wheelchair along the grass toward the big stone slab. She took the stone knife, and started writing in the skin.

“Sandor’s locked up in the Elysium Tower,” Jack said, grinning. “Cast what magics you want. I’ve seen where the Prince has him. Nothing supernatural is getting in there, spell or curse.”

The hunters ignored him, for the most part. Elen continued her work, humming to herself in that sweet way old grandmas sometimes did. Angela dug through the bag and dug out a few more strange items, though at a certain point a pattern became clear. Everything that came out of the bag was some sort of preserved body part, with something done to it to make it unique; the shrunken head was the obvious example. At one point she pulled out a dried hand, and Triss snarled. The hand of a hanged man was a powerful artifact, according to some of the books Jacob had shown her. A Hand of Glory.

“Come on!” Jack said, laughing all the while as he knocked over another tree, making slow but sure progress around the clearing. “There’s no getting out of there. You’re dead, all of you, dead! Sure you don’t have any final words?”

“Fuck you!” Angela, for all her obvious fury, kept her mind on the task; not even an attempt at banter. In fact, she looked disturbed. She pulled out another artifact, and another, and she treated each like a scientist might handling a petri dish of a deadly bacterium. Every one, she set down carefully, shivered a few times, and looked to Jeremiah with worry in her eyes.

“Fee-fi-fo-fum.” Jack’s laughter continued, growing louder as he pushed down another tree. This one he pointed at the barrier, and high above them the tree crashed into the invisible wall. Branches shattered, twigs rained down, and the forest thundered with the sound of thousands of bits of wood cracking under their own weight as the tall tree rolled sideways along the barrier, before falling to the side, shredding branches off of other trees on the way down. “I smell the blood of a stupid bitch.”

Angela got up, and limped toward the hunters further out in the clearing. To run here despite having a limp was impressive, and Triss found herself smirking as she watched the woman move. This was the bitch who killed Julias, a psychopath caught up in her own drama. A hunter with her head jammed so far up her ass, she felt justified in slaughtering kine, innocent kine, so she’d have the tools she needed to fight monsters. Jack was right. How far the righteous had fallen.

Triss took time to analyze the woman’s features. If she was going to enjoy ripping the girl’s eyes out, now was a good time to get familiar with the woman before harm was done to her. Damn, she looked so much like Athalia, a tall, thin black woman, and even beautiful. The tattoos, the glass eye, the scar, it was obvious she’d been through Hell in her life, while her mother was basically unscarred, with no tattoos that Triss could notice. The human girl looked battered and beaten, and was obviously pushing herself forward to the detriment of every aspect of her life, in order to reach her goal. How much of that goal had been about killing her mother, and was now about killing Jack?

Well, fuck her. If her goal had just been to kill Azamel or Athalia, fine, but now it included killing Jack, her friend, and her lover's childe.

Dead lover's childe. In the end, that's all that really mattered. Angela killed Julias, and Triss was going to make her pay. Who Angela was, what trials she'd been through growing up with a monster for a mother, and then a psychopath hunter for a foster father, were irrelevant.

Jeremiah and Angela began walking around the circle, Jeremiah with book in hand, and Angela with the delicate objects held in her arms. He was reading from the book, eyes locked onto its text, and every word he uttered — some language she didn't know or recognize — had him grunting with the effort. It was tiring him.

"W-What's this?" the hunter closest to Triss said, as their two bosses came up to them.

"This will protect you," Angela said. She looked down immediately after saying it. Lying? The woman handed the confused hunter the shrunken head, gave Triss a single, hard glare, and moved on.

Triss was tempted to yell at her, scream, curse her name, make a boast, or maybe throw an insult about that time she literally ran Angela over. Anything, fucking anything to get a hook into Angela's mind, and get her angrier, make her suffer. But no, better to wait, and make the grand reveal about who Triss was and why she was hunting down Angela, when Angela was in no position to do anything about it. Maybe whisper 'you killed the love of my life' before tearing her throat out. Yes, that was the way to do it, a way Jacob would be proud of. Vengeance was a dish best served cold.

"Hey," Triss said to the hunter, once Angela and Jeremiah had moved on. "We've got you guys. You know that, right?" With all the commotion going on, it was difficult finding a good volume, something that'd let her talk to the hunter without Jeremiah and Angela noticing. But she found it, and the hunter, a short man with short blonde hair, managed only a quick flick of his eyes before looking back down at the shrunken head in his left hand, pistol in his right.

“Fuck you, vampire.”

Triss looked to the others, and motioned with her head toward the path they’d been walking. They kept moving, Othello dragging along Harcourt before the man could protest. A few moments later, it was just her and the unknown hunter.

“You guys really fucked up, when you killed Jack’s family and sire, you know.”

“We didn’t—”

“Shut up,” she said, grinding her teeth. Jeremiah continued his chanting in the background as he moved onto the next hunter, Elen was humming to herself, and Jack and Clara were both making a racket. As long as no one started shooting and making even more noise, she could talk to this guy quietly, and he’d hear her. “Your bosses are psychos. Just look around you. How many humans have you sacrificed on this crusade to kill Azamel? Azamel, and now Jack, if Angela gets a say in the matter.”

The hunter met her eyes, apparently trusting the amber line enough to keep Triss from tearing into his mind and planting a nightmare.

“You’re a vampire, and you host a monster like Azamel. You can’t possibly expect me to trust anything you say.”

“I don’t give two shits about Azamel.”

“But—”

“Your boss Jeremiah is a fucking maniac willing to do anything to kill her. Angela follows him like a faithful dog, and just like Jeremiah and Azamel, she wants to kill Jack.” Triss pointed at the grotesque head in the man’s hands. “You even have any idea what that’s going to do?”

“No ... but—”

“And your friend Harcourt, no one broke his mind. He came to us. Well, he came to Jack. Normally Jack’s the first person willing to talk and negotiate, but now you’ve woken up this thing inside him, and...” She gestured vaguely toward the kid, still stomping around, cackling, and destroying the forest. “And now, what about now? The fuck are your bosses going to do now? Far as Harcourt knows, Plan Vandermont is nothing but you guys setting up defensive positions and fighting us off. You really think you can fight us off now? You’re in a big open clearing, for fuck’s sake. Killing you all will be easy as shit, once we get inside.”

“Jeremiah and Elen can do amazing things, vampire. They’ll figure something out.”

“Or maybe, your bosses are insane, and they’re going to do whatever it takes to achieve their goal, even if that means dying in the process.” She leaned in closer, set a hand against the invisible wall, and stared into the hunter’s eyes with her snake eyes. “Think about it. How the fuck did we randomly catch Harcourt? He came to Jack.”

“That Jack?” the hunter said, nodding over his shoulder toward the kid, on the other side of the clearing. The little guy threw a few more grotesque, gory threats, and pushed down yet another enormous tree as a swarm of rats followed along behind him like a second shadow.

“Not that Jack. Like I said, you guys woke up something nasty in that kid, something the rest of us don’t have. Now, he’s going to kill every single fucking one of you.”

That managed to get a reaction from the small man, and he winced as he looked down. “Then why are you talking to me?”

“Because I know Jeremiah’s tricked you all. Angela has, too. Put down the fucking head”—she gestured to the shrunken head in his hand—”down, and break the line. You can join Harcourt, and I’ll make sure Jack doesn’t kill you.” She didn’t think that was an empty promise. Jack would probably spare the life of a hunter if said hunter actively helped them defeat Jeremiah. But, then again, Jack with the curse controlling him was a fucking asshole, and she wouldn’t put it past him ... it ... to be a backstabbing, lying shitface.

“Carver,” Harcourt said, poking his head out from behind a tree, “come on, man. You heard about those stabbings, right? That was Angela! She—”

Jeremiah slammed his book closed, and came over to stand beside Elen. Angela and Jeremiah stood at the woman’s shoulders, and the old woman continued to work the skin, an oxygen mask on her face. And, unless Triss’s eyes were deceiving her, that book was fucking gleaming red now. It had an eerie glow, dark amber, almost like blood, like the flesh room Elen used to hide and repair her hunters.

Elen set one of her long, gross hands on the closed book, on its cover, and traced lines onto it slowly, while her right hand started to carve into the skin on the rock with the knife. The red glow from the book seeped up her white skin, along her veins, and disappeared underneath her loose gray dress. It wasn’t long before the strange, stone knife began to glow as well. All the while, the old woman had a strange smile Triss could only barely see through her mask.

The head in Carver’s hand began to glow.

“Carver,” Triss said, eyes wide. “Drop it. I have no idea what that thing does, but Jeremiah’s going to use you, just like these corpses on the trees. Drop it now, before—”

Too late. Carver stared at the occult object in his hand, and his gaze locked onto it. He squeezed it gently, but his mind was gone, like a child staring into a Christmas tree bulb.

Seeing the life drain from someone’s eyes was not something she was used to. For all the murder she’d committed in her life, most of that was with her fangs on the target’s neck, or when sacrificing kine for Crúac rituals, in which case they were usually unconscious. Looking someone in the eye, and witnessing their death, seeing their soul leave, watching their body and vessel turn into a fucking corpse, was not an experience she craved. The few times it’d happened, like when Jacob killed those kine Jack had brought, it’d left her with chills that never went away.

When Carver looked up from the object, and met her gaze, she saw it again. He fell to his knees slowly, but the effect was anything but slow. The color from his skin drained away. The thickness of his body, showing through his jacket and jeans, disappeared. His eyes emptied, like some motherfucker ripped his soul out through them. He became nothing more than a skin sack, filled with meaningless organs and unmoving blood.

“Carver! Carver!” Harcourt shook free of Othello, ran back over to Triss, and started pounding his fists against the invisible wall. “What the fuck!? What the fuck!?”

It didn’t take a genius to figure out what was happening. The objects the hunters were handed, the glowing book, Elen touching said book and cutting new symbols into the skin on the stone. They’d cast a spell. Triss winced as she looked around the clearing at the hunters, and how each one of them were falling onto their knees, or straight onto their backs. All at once, without noise, without fanfare, without a final word to mark their passing, the other nine hunters that'd surrounded the outer edges of the clearing, died.

Triss stepped back from the body, but Harcourt didn't. He fell to his knees and started pounding his hands against the air harder, blocked and incapable of helping. Guttural noises left his mouth, grunts and yells, and Triss had to force her eyes off him to look at what was happening in the circle. She hated those noises, the mix of despair and frustration, of helplessness. She'd made them.

"What in the ever living fuck?" Jack said, looking down at the new bodies that decorated the clearing. "Sacrifices on top of sacrifices. You guys are going to burn in Hell, you know that?"

"Fuck you, fucking monster," Angela said. "There's a place in Hell for monsters like you, fucks who embrace their nature. Burning right at the fucking bottom."

The kid cackled again, and tilted his head as he looked at the remaining hunters. Jeremiah, Elen, Angela, and the four hunters they apparently trusted more.

Leaning forward, Jack set his hand against the barrier and chuckled. "Last I checked, Judas was freezing in the last circle of Hell, and being gnawed on by Satan himself, for being a traitor. Look forward to it." He used his other hand to gesture at the corpses of the hunters. "Let me guess. By betraying these people who believed in you, who had faith in you, the spell you're casting will be quite powerful. Makes sense. That's how Susanna gained her curse."

As if, finally satisfied, Jeremiah stepped away from the big stone, and toward Jack. Angela followed, and the four hunters covered their flanks.

"If I'd known there was something twisted in you," Jeremiah said, "I would have just killed you, instead of capturing you. There was nothing special about you. The divination showed that you knew about Azamel, had visited, and could be used to trick her into letting her guard down. You were to be a pawn, like Sándor, nothing more.”

“Used? How would you use me?”

“The same way we used Sándor, and continue to use him.” The rugged old man gestured to Elen’s work behind him.

Before Jack could retort, a horrible noise, alien, thunderous, and layered with rasp and shriek over its bass undertones, filled the forest. Everyone raised their heads, as the booming roar ripped through the air until Triss felt it in her bones. She’d never heard that roar before, but it didn’t take a genius to know that something that loud, that deep, that overpowering and overwhelming, had to come from something gigantic. And it came from the castle.

Chapter 108

~~Jack~~

“Sándor’s locked up, and isn’t going into any nightmare,” Jack said. Much as he knew that that was true, that didn’t change that the roaring coming from the castle, was a roar he was all too familiar with.

When him and his crew had been fighting Angela and the hunters, when they were trying to rescue Jessy, it’d gone horribly wrong. Still, with the help of Athalia’s crazy darkness attack, and the sheer endurance of the werewolves, they’d managed to turn things around. It was only when Jeremiah and the four-armed gargoyle showed up that they lost control again.

The four-armed, four-winged creature had defeated Eric, and Clara, and Jessy. And judging by size of it, and the aura Jack had felt in its presence, it would have been able to do a lot more than that. It, he, whatever, was a force to be reckoned with, something stronger than Athalia or Fiona, and definitely that fat fucker Mark. Sándor, or at least his Horror, was on a scale of power Jack didn’t feel often. It’d been like being around Jacob or Antoinette, or Azamel. And that force was being summoned by whatever the fuck Elen was doing.

“You understand so little of the beasts, the monsters,” Jeremiah said, grin growing. “Vampires, werewolves, you’re all just leftovers from an era long past, when true monsters roamed the world, feeding on people and seeding their minds. Nightmares, the real, terrifying kind, the ones that scare you to the point your blood runs cold and your heart stops, the ones that give you glimpses of what’s waiting in the dark, in the brush, in the cave, in the forest and in the depths of the ocean, are a product of monsters. Or, perhaps, the nightmares create those monsters, and carve them into ethereal existence, the ultimate threat to mankind.” The man was smart. Despite his obvious, cocky attitude, he didn’t ever meet Jack’s gaze; knew too well that Jack could probably reach through this barrier of his, if Jack was given a fair chance of it. Smash through the amber line, and grab the fucker’s mind. The black powder line, on the other hand, was being a major cock block.

“Ha, you trying to demean me?” Jack said, but his eyes kept flicking past Jeremiah, and to the two women. Elen’s knife was still glowing, and it continued to glow with the red aura as she carved what must have been dozens of tiny symbols into the skin. It was like, watching an old woman who used to be a virtuoso pianist, moving her fingers with extraordinary speed and precision that persevered despite her aging, decaying body.

“Monsters like Azamel, and Sándor, have no souls, Jack. They lost their soul, gave up it, or had it stolen. All that’s left is a beast, a Horror, a literal incarnation of fear and evil, that’s taken up residence where a human’s soul should be.” With a shrug, Jeremiah started walking the circle’s inner edge, and picked up one of the assault rifles one of the dead hunters had wielded. Jack stayed with him, glaring at him with every step as he removed the magazine, grabbed another magazine from the corpse, and continued on. It was dark in the forest clearing, and what little light the hunters carried on their guns or attached to breast pockets, didn’t help all that much. The man had good eyes.

Jack laughed. “That’s rich, coming from you.” Shaking his head, Jack reached out and ran a finger along the invisible wall as he walked. “You’re the one who sacrificed people who put their lives in your hands, were willing to die for you. You betrayed them.”

“They knew the risks.”

“Did they know it’d be you, killing them?”

“It doesn’t matter.”

“Of course it matters.” Jack laughed louder, and gave Jeremiah a big grin, showing his fangs. “You’re a monster, Jeremiah, the human kind. Don’t need to be a werewolf, or vampire, or have a Horror for a soul, when a human is perfectly capable of being an abomination that needs to be put down.”

That managed to make Jeremiah pause, and for just a second, Jack saw a touch of pain in his eyes. Fucking delicious. These philosophical conversations were always fun, especially when the other person didn’t realize the universal truth: everyone’s a fucking monster. The only thing that matters, is what monster rises to the top of the food chain.

“Controlling the human mind is doable,” Jeremiah continued, “even when it’s become tainted, or infected by the vampire, the werewolf, or the monster. Elen knows spells to do that, and as you have obviously guessed, that’s what we did to Sándor. Unfortunately, when we lost Sándor, wherever you have put him has separated him from his Horror. The spell’s influence over it is weak, and the most we could manage was to prevent it from attacking us while we rested here.” The psycho gestured to the trees around him, the ones with corpses attached. “Elen’s magic is costly, but it’s all worth it to guarantee Azamel dies, Jack. And, you’ll have to forgive me, but looking at you now, I see the darkness Angela told me she saw in your eyes. I will be Azamel’s death, but Angela will be yours.”

“Aww, that’s touching.” Jack touched his chest with his fingertips, feigning joyful surprise. “Angela, you going to be my nemesis?”

The word hit her like a ton of bricks, and she met his eyes. Oh yeah, she’d been thinking about the word too, and he could see it resonate in her like a tuning fork. But, awareness hit her before he could try and breach the barrier, and she looked down again. She was trembling. Rage coursed up through her limbs, and every part of her probably wanted to unload a hail of bullets on him. Only by cutting open his guts, filling it with cinders, and watching him turn to burning ash from the inside out, would she be satisfied. He knew it, because it was a feeling he shared. And as much as nemesis was too good a word for her, there was no denying she was the target of his hate.

She was his nemesis the way the roadrunner was Wile E. Coyote's nemesis, just a meal who kept getting away. Not this time.

“Come on, Jeremiah,” she said. “We have to do this now. You know what that Horror will do after.”

“Good luck, Jack. You'll need it.” Jeremiah offered him a small bow of his head, and walked back to Elen.

The old woman made one last, small gesture, with the familiarity of someone writing their signature, and another thunderous, screeching, alien roar announced the completion of whatever it was she was doing. Her knife was still glowing, too. He doubted she used artifacts for all her works, probably making this particular spell unusually potent. Or maybe she did? Maybe she had every person she killed hold an object she'd cursed, and that was how she absorbed their lives into the knife. Like, collecting ink for a quill. And she still had ink left.

The four hunters guided Elen away from the stone and flesh she'd been carving on, and pushed her toward the center of the clearing again, eying Clara closely as they did. They were afraid she'd get through the barrier then. Queue for Jack to start heading back to her, and get ready to run in—

The roar sounded again, and it was louder this time. A lot louder. Once his ears readjusted to the following silence, it became painfully clear that it wasn't silent at all. His rats, his crows, his legion had stopped making noise, holding deathly still. Clara ceased her digging. Harcourt ceased his stupid whining. Beatrice, Othello, and Damien all came back to stand with him by Clara, and look up at the branches above, at the incoming noise.

“What’s that sound?” Damien said.

Woomp. Woomp. Woomp. A heartbeat that grew louder and louder, closer, and for the fucking life of him, Jack couldn’t place the sound. It was familiar, but it wasn’t. And it wasn’t the impact of the gargoyle’s feet; that had a distinct sound, and sensation. This was—“Down!” Damien said.

Jack realized just a bit too late what the sound was. Wings. Beating wings.

The snapping of trees was an explosion of chaos and speed. The dark canopy above, needles and thorns of onyx against a cloudy night sky, shattered. And the thing that came down for them moved faster than the falling twigs did. How could something that huge move so quickly? It descended upon them, its giant body tearing through the tall trees with greater ease than Jack had. It was like watching a train derail and smash through the woods that surrounded it, its mass rendering the blockade of trees irrelevant. Crash, snap, boom. Wood held little sway against thousands of pounds of meat.

Everyone threw themselves down against the ground, everyone except Jack. As the titan plummeted toward them, destroying the forest with far more explosive impact than Jack and Clara had managed, Jack grinned. He hadn’t expected this, but it was a good opportunity. Crush Sándor, and crush the final hope Jeremiah and Angela had. It’d be fucking beautiful.

The monster landed maybe twenty feet in front of him, and the impact alone was enough to send vibrations into the hundreds of nearby of trees, big and small. The beast's arrival sent an explosion of momentum and inertia outward, until the thousands of crows above took to the sky as their perches shook violently. His legion of rats trembled on the dark forest floor like rippling sand. Branches, rocks, and tree trunks flew everywhere, soaring over the heads of his crew who'd taken to the dirt. But not him. He kept his back to the barrier, and lifted his arms in front of him, swatting down or blocking oncoming debris, using the barrier to keep him from getting knocked back.

"Clara," he said, "how's that hole coming?"

"The line ... not break!" she said, werewolf voice half words, half roaring barks.

Jack managed a second to glance back at the hole Clara had made. She had no choice but to dig straight down right beside the line, since she couldn't cross it, but the dirt the line was drawn on refused to crumble. Considering she'd gotten a good three feet deep and wide beside the line of soot already, and the whole damn forest was shaking with the mess Sándor was making, the fact it still didn't break meant there was a good chance they wouldn't be able to break the line at all.

But then, a colossal gargoyle that easily weighed eight times what the werewolf did was running at them. If Clara couldn't cause the disturbance needed to break the line, maybe this thing could. Maybe

---

The titan bull rushed forward, and Jack's eyes opened wide. Just like Clara, the enormous beast sank its huge talons into the earth to create the grip it needed to tear forward. Unlike Clara, the gargoyle was so massive, it hit every single obstacle between it and Jack. And, unlike Clara, the trees it crashed into didn't slow it down in the slightest. It fell upon Jack within two literal seconds, showering the area in more debris as it came for him.

Jack grinned from behind his hands, and met the beast's charge.

Sándor—no, not Sándor. Sándor was locked up in the Prince's tower. This was Sándor's Horror, a literal manifestation of his other half, just like how Kindred had a Beast, and Uratha had a ... wolf spirit thing. Vampires and werewolves were never separate from their other half, but a nightmare beast apparently could be; he was looking at it. And, it was grabbing him with its four arms.

Holy shit those were strong arms. He knew Sándor's Horror was unusually strong, but god fucking damn. Its hands were big enough to cover most of the length of his arms, and half the length of his legs, one hand for each.

There was a moment, a single moment, where Jack could see the Horror was confused. Jack hadn't dodged, hadn't tried to jump out of the way, and that would have confused any giant beast running down prey. Jack also knew there wasn't a single shred of fear on his face, and when facing down a literal nightmare, a creature that existed on humanity's fear as the basis of its existence, of course it'd be confused. It'd find no terror here.

And it wouldn't find easy prey. Jack met the gargoyle's eyes, and smiled. As predicted, there was no mind to bend there, no human mind at least. When he reached out and attempted to Dominate the Horror, all he found was a tapestry of desires, without any of the rhyme or reason a human mind had. The Horror had less mental awareness than any wolf or rat. All it was was a bundle of hunger, and it spoke in a single language: terror, the terror it inflicted on others. Jack would not be able to Dominate, or use Animalism, on such a strange, simple, ethereal, and insubstantial mind.

But, that didn't mean Jack couldn't beat it into the ground, break it, and rip it apart.

Rats poured over the beast, and the Horror roared as a swarm of claws climbed up its dark skin. Jack had continued summoning rats throughout all this, through his rants and taunting at Angela, and through his circling of the clearing. They came from the castle by only dozens, so far from his original sacrifice of vitae, but they came. They had scurried down the road. Damien had made a good call, telling Aaron to stay behind to keep the second gateway opened.

The gargoyle threw Jack to the ground before it had a chance to hurt him, and started backing off and to the side around the clearing. It scraped at the rats, dislodging them by the hundreds with its four giant hands, and with enough speed and force that Jack's legion died by the hundreds as well.

It? Now that he thought about it, Sándor's Horror had masculine features, and its face wasn't all that too far off from being human, just big, and dark blue, with some horns. Fiona's Horror Vrall was obviously feminine, to the point it—she'd had sex with Damien. Athalia and Azamel, on the other hand, their horrors seemed genderless. But none of them were natural, organic creatures that reproduced sexually or a-sexually. They were things, dream creations, or maybe parasites that existed in the dream landscape. Without their human half, they were powerful creatures, but mindless, drifting phantasms, less than real. Hell, less than mindless, just a shadow of the physical world. And anyone with more IQ than a grapefruit could outsmart a mindless beast.

Groaning, Jack pushed himself up off the ground, and managed a quick look back at the hunters. Angela spared him only a moment's glance, before turning back to help whatever it was Elen was doing. If she was willing to miss this, then whatever she was doing was important; either running away, or helping Jeremiah go for Azamel.

“Damien, annoy him. Clara, go for the legs. Othello, go for the face. Beatrice, you and Harcourt stay the fuck out of the way.”

And they listened. Good. Much as he didn't really care if they died, he needed them to live, if he was to prove he was the better Jack. And Clara, transformed and unleashed, was growing on him.

Damien came at Sándor, sword in right hand, pistol in left. Crows descended upon the colossal creature, and they swarmed it like locusts, cawing and scratching and pecking. But his legion of claws, teeth, and beaks, drew no blood and made no headway. The damn gargoyle's skin was as tough as leather, tougher, and thick. Clara charged at its legs straight on, momentarily getting on all fours before throwing all of her weight into the distracted creature's leg. Othello jumped high, very high, above the creature, and plummeted down at its face. Fucking Daeva were a bunch of pretty boys, but they had speed and strength.

Except, the speed and strength didn't matter much. Sándor's Horror threw one arm up, and smashed Othello out of the sky like it was smacking a beach ball. Crunch. That was a broken leg at least, and more besides as Othello flew threw the air before colliding with another tree, then slumping down onto the ground.

Damien had better luck. His bullets bounced off the Horror's skin as he approached, but he got behind the gargoyle, and managed to sink his sword into its right side, a foot deep. Red blood seeped from the wound, and the Horror threw out one of its other hands. It was fast, and strong, and while Damien managed to duck underneath one gigantic arm, the monster had four. The third backhand attempt at Damien sent him flying, with even more velocity than Othello, and the Mekhet crashed into the invisible barrier with a thud.

While Othello and Damien were flies to be swatted, the thousands upon thousands of rats crawling and biting at the Horror's skin could not be dislodged so easily. Again, Sándor's Horror stepped to the side, off balance, roaring its alien sounds as it scraped them off. Their claws and teeth couldn't penetrate the fucker's thick hide, and even the crows that dive bombed it, many dying as they slammed their beaks into its wings at full speed, couldn't so much as draw a drop of blood; thousands of scratches, but no blood. Scratches were painful though, and if you were getting hundreds of them chiseled into your skin every second, even a giant monster like this Horror evidently couldn't ignore the pain.

Clara had better luck than Othello or Damien. With the monster distracted, she crashed into its leg hard enough that the giant brute began to topple. Jack almost yelled 'timber', but the moment was cut short, as the Horror fell to its knees, stopped itself from falling over with three of its arms, while the fourth reached out and grabbed Clara. The two creatures roared at each other, but Clara didn't take nearly as long before she started ripping and tearing. While the monster's hand was big enough to get a grip on her waist and chest, it wasn't a good grip, and Clara ripped herself free with her own sets of claws, while at the same time sinking her teeth into the gargoyle's arm.

Did Jeremiah and Angela really trust this monster to fight them? Sure, the Horror was unusually strong, but—

The gargoyle spread its four wings, hard and fast, sending wind outward in a powerful pulse that caught Jack's crows in its wake. The wings were massive, utterly massive; they had to be, to carry something as absurdly huge as a fifteen-foot-tall gargoyle with four arms and a tail. Trees fractured and were demolished as the wings hit them, turning the large path of destruction they were fighting in, into a clearing all its own, wood exploding and shattering as it went everywhere from the impact of thick skin membrane, and the thick bat-like arms along each wing. Wings were supposed to be fragile. This beast could break down a brick wall with its wings.

Jack covered his face with his arms again, but otherwise stood his ground as the wood and wind ripped through him. What crows who survived took to the sky, and stayed there, circling high above as they looked for an opening. Mulder and Scully were already up there, cawing and giving him information about the hunters. They didn't think the Horror could be beaten. Run, run, stay away from the black, live to hunt another day.

Jack smiled up at the night sky, winked at his pets, and started marching toward the giant creature. They had nothing to fear.

“You know, you're the reason I didn't get to kill Angela,” Jack said. “Hell, you're the reason twice over. Once in your nightmare, and once in mine. If it weren't for you, I'd have killed Angela, and my sister wouldn't be dead. If it weren't for you, my sire would be alive. Course, you can blame any link in a chain for where the chain goes. The joys of causality, right?”

The Horror made no attempt to understand or retort. It probably didn't know how. All it knew how to do was let out more screams and roars as it turned its attention to the werewolf biting and clawing at its arm.

“Uh, Jack,” Beatrice said from behind a fallen tree, a good fifty feet away. “They're ... I think they're opening another portal.”

Yeah, Scully and Mulder confirmed strangeness was happening. Elen was drawing markings on the trees, and he recognized the symbols as the ones Beatrice had cut through to get them into Elen's flesh chamber, the ones Angela's friends had painted, when they sacrificed a thrall in the hospital. And if they were drawing it on multiple trees, it wasn't going to be just any portal, like the other ones Elen had created.

“They're not getting away this time,” he whispered to himself. He'd burn the whole fucking city down looking for them if they escaped. And he didn't want to do that. Dolareido was his city.

The Horror lined up a punch on the wolf, rather than using its claws and risking its arm. Clara was fast, and she let go of the arm she was tearing into, got onto all fours on the dirt, and slipped under the giant's crotch. No longer snarling or roaring, focused entirely on the hunt and the fight, the wolf creature ran her claws along the inside of the beast's thighs, earning deep gashes that sent some blood squirting onto her.

Jack licked his lips at the sight of it. God damn, that was hot. And those claws, werewolf claws. Normal claws couldn't do that, even on a creature that brutally strong, and even if the claws were indestructible. The teeth, too, like the claws, had something supernatural to them. Werewolves had the tools to put out raw destruction from the moment they became what they were, unlike vampires, who took a good fifty years to become truly dangerous.

But, despite the nasty wounds, the colossal creature responded with deft speed, lifting its right leg, half turning, and slamming down with its two lower fists. Clara was forced to jump to the side, abandoning her attempt to rip open the Horror's tail. But she didn't jump far enough. The creature was strong, and far too fast for something its size. The crunch of knuckles hitting Clara's body was obvious.

It'd turned around though, to deal with Clara, and that left its back exposed to Jack. Oh boy oh boy, time to have some fun. Jack ran up to the Horror's tail, knowing damn well he was too light to make much noise as he leapt from cracked trunk to cracked trunk. The joys of being tiny.

Crew check. Othello was picking himself up a good ways away, and so was Damien, albeit slower, but the Horror's utter destruction of the area had buried them in fallen timber. They had to both heal from their wounds enough to fight, and had to climb out from underneath the debris; easy enough for Othello, not so easy for Damien. And Clara was now on her back, using both her hands and wolf feet to claw and slice at the Horror's attempts to punch down at her. It tried once, and got its knuckles cut up for it. Anyone who owned a cat knew better than to go for the stomach, which gave the cat four sets of claws and a set of teeth to use on the attacking hand.

Jack grinned at the gleam he spotted on the monster's side, and leapt for it. Yeah, he was light, and small as fuck compared to a fifteen-foot behemoth, but there was no way the monster wouldn't notice a kid jumping onto its back. But, for that brief second, Jack managed to land on the creature's spine, underneath where its four wings jutted out from between four shoulder blades. It hurt, landing on his crotch and ass, but it gave him a bit of control with his legs half wrapped around the titan's waist. And as the monster twisted around in surprise, Jack grabbed the sword sticking out of the Horror's side, and yanked.

Blood poured out of the titan, and the monster's roars turned into a deliciously higher pitched, alien scream. The Horror's voice had layers to it, so it sounded like a bunch of monsters all screaming bloody murder. And this close, it was painful, loud and hard enough Jack felt his eardrums struggle, threatening to take damage. Ah well, he'd heal them in moments anyway.

He let gravity take him off the creature. Thump, he fell like a bag of sand to the ground. When the monster turned around, shrieking and roaring unendingly, Jack waited until the monster was looking away from the direction it'd sent Damien. Jack threw the sword that way, and bolted in the other. The creature gave chase to Jack, as planned.

The creature's skin was too thick for his legion to harm, and much of his legion had died to fire and bullets already. And since the human half of the Horror was nowhere to be found, leaving behind nothing more than a rather large, angry dream shadow thing, Jack couldn't Dominate it. It was like trying to Dominate an aspect of the environment, like a tree or bush, and those things lacked the parts needed for his brain to catch and control. If Sándor were piloting, he'd be able to Dominate him, and make short work of this whole excursion.

More problematic was, for all his strength, Jack was ultimately trapped by his size and weight. He wouldn't be able to win a game of strength against this colossal brute, not easily anyway, simply because he wouldn't be able to anchor and engage it. The gargoyle could literally punt him like a football, if he got the chance, and it wouldn't matter how strong Jack was.

It was frustrating. But it did mean he could move quick; maybe not as quick as a vamp fueled by Celerity, but pure brawn still created speed in physics. With all the destroyed trees lying around, he had no trouble finding things to push off of as he bounded his way back to where Clara had been digging in the hole.

The Horror tore after him. Queue Jurassic Park music. Sándor's nightmare might not have been as big as a tyrannosaurus rex, but it wasn't far off. The Horror was gargantuan, a tall and hulking mass, that sped up after Jack far faster than physics — damn physics — would allow. He remembered a similar thing with Azamel, when he met her elephant man form, how it could move faster than something that big should be able to. So, instead of a giant creature taking its sweet time pushing itself up to full speed, like a movie dinosaur might, the Horror bolted after him like a fucking tiger, complete with a mighty roar and extended claws.

The monster was quick, but Damien and Othello were quicker. Celerity fed their movements until they were practically blurs, and the two vampires launched themselves at the running monster's back. They may as well have been trying to ride a dragon, but they got onto the monster's back, and started hitting. Damien went for a killing blow, but as his sword sank into the gargoyle's head, it came to a dead stop.

“Its bone is like metal!” Damien said. This time, he managed to jump off without getting hit, but he had to leave his sword behind again. Unfortunately, the handle and a chunk of the blade went with Damien, while the majority of the blade remained with the creature. The long thing was literally sticking out of the Horror’s head, between two enormous horns. Fucking. Hilarious.

While Damien got off the ride, Othello didn’t. He wrapped one arm around the beast’s neck, and started punching with the other. Othello wasn’t very smart. The monster had plenty of flexibility, and it reached up with one hand to grab onto the big man pounding dents into its neck.

Only for Clara to collide with it again. The werewolf threw her weight at the Horror’s back, and she weighed a lot more than Othello. A full pounce, one that utilized her extreme strength, so that her weight came down onto the gargoyle’s back with a massive amount of inertia powering it. It was enough to make the monster drop Othello, and start turning around at high speed in an attempt to dislodge Clara. She held on, her teeth biting the base of one of its giant wings, but her legs stuck out from the monster’s body with the force of its spinning.

It would have been hilarious, if not for the crunch of bone as Clara’s body collided with trees. Jack and Clara had knocked down trees, Jack far more, and the fight with the Horror had knocked down hundreds, but the forest was enormous, and every few feet meant another thick tree. As the fight drifted around, the monster continued to clear out the woods with all the grace of a wrecking ball run by a drunk asshole. Each step the monster took was enough to break and crunch through most of the trees it stepped on, and its claws latched onto the larger ones without issue. It wasn’t going to fall over easily.

“Harcourt,” Jack yelled, “I don’t suppose you know what this thing is weak to?”

“Uh, would you believe sunlight?” The hunter was nowhere to be found, until he poked his head out from behind a particularly massive tree.

Of course it'd be weak to sunlight. It was a gargoyle. Maybe it'd turn to stone or something. Either way, a useless weakness for a vampire to take advantage of, at least in this situation.

Othello came back in, or tried to, but the monster didn't stop spinning around. Eventually, it threw itself backward against the trees, crashing through them and smashing through trunks two or three feet thick without issue. A wolf's howl cut through the explosion of wood.

“Othello, Damien, get him over here,” Jack said. This was getting ridiculous. This giant thing was just a dumb bull, a stupid bull that needed to be put down. If this monster was the other half of Sándor, killing it would probably kill Sándor. Ah well, if it came to that, so be it, but he wanted to try his other idea first.

“How are we supposed to do that!?” Othello yelled. The vampire ran underneath the gargoyle's tail, and landed a solid punch against the creature's leg. Thunk. Othello was strong, a hundred-year-old Daeva with plenty of strength to summon, plus plenty of muscle and heft to put to use. But in a fist fight against a giant nightmare that was practically living stone, they needed an anti-tank rifle, or maybe a nuke. The fact Damien's sword had managed to survive as long as it did, was sheer dumb luck.

The wound Jack had dealt with the sword had already closed, still there, but no longer bleeding. The shallow cuts Clara had left on its body were closed as well. The thousands of bites and scratches his rats had inflicted were meaningless. The damn thing was just too large a juggernaut.

Grinning, Jack hopped across the downed trees, and stood not too far from the hole that Clara had dug. He turned to look back at the gargoyle, pointed his hands at it, and tapped into his core, his vitae, and reached deep. No matter how much he reached out for nearby wildlife, the nightmare landscape provided no link for his mind, no animals for him to Dominate. It was a dream realm, and he was a creature of flesh and blood, both literally and in intent. Everything about a vampire was about blood, and the flesh that contained it. Begotten existed parallel with dreams. Uratha existed parallel with spirits. Vampires existed in the world of blood, and unfortunately for him that meant the things in nightmares, including a Horror, were something his mind could not reach out and Dominate.

But he could still control his own body, and his own flesh and blood.

“Draw him here as best you can,” Jack said. “I’ll deal with him.”

Licking his fangs, Jack kicked away nearby rocks and trees. Now that there was space, mostly created by the idiot creature’s clumsiness, drawing it to him should be easy enough.

Much as he loved destruction, loved breaking things, loved to feel an explosion course through his body, and loved to hear the screams of the ruined, this creature’s idiotic, wanton destruction was juvenile. It had no sense of purpose, or desire guided by context, memories and experiences, thoughts and goals. It was a mindless vortex of chaos and carnage. Cool in theory, but now that he got to see the colossal creature ripping and tearing, all it made him think of was an angry bull. Not even a bull! More like, a volcano, just doing what it did naturally. Where was the context? Where was the emotion that dripped from real carnage. Where was the drama?

Susanna would have been annoyed by this thing as well. She bathed in the blood of hundreds, because they deserved it, because she loathed them, or was disgusted by the actions they’d done. Hate, anger, molded by years of interaction. This nightmare creature had none of that. Exploiting it would be no harder than manipulating an amoeba, or guiding a river; a large river, admittedly, but a river nonetheless.

Clara let go of the titan. No, not let go, was thrown. At some point in the chaos, as the giant Horror thrashed around and slammed her into trees while it tried to catch Othello, she couldn't hold on anymore. Her body went through a tree sideways, and into the next before coming to a stop. The lump of fur and muscle that landed still moved, but barely, twitching limbs twisted, turned, and broken. Her head lifted for a second, looked at Jack, and slumped against a destroyed tree trunk beside her, jaw hanging open and wolf tongue dangling out.

Triss, not far from the downed Clara and hiding behind a large tree, put a hand to her lips as she stared at the broken werewolf. But she got over her shock quickly, and looked to Jack, then the hunters, then the dragon they still had to deal with.

Othello got out from around its legs, and sprinted over to Jack, bouncing off fallen trees as he crossed over the growing clearing of destroyed forest. But the Horror was fast, and it charged forward after Othello, ripping the earth up underneath it as it tore through the ruin to snatch him out of the air. It was like watching a house cat grab a toy ball flying by, an insane display of reflexes and timing that no human could hope to match. Except, the Horror was fucking titanic, and had no business being that fast.

It wrapped its four hands around Othello, one on each limb, and lifted the man up to its mouth. Welp, there went Othello. Ah well. The man's death would give Jack the time to tap into the reservoirs of vitae he'd need, to become a juggernaut himself.

---

~~Beatrice~~

Sándor, or Sándor's Horror, was fucking insane. From what she knew about Fiona and Athalia, they were strong individuals, deadly strong, like the Uratha were. Strong without having to sink in decades to earn it like Kindred did. In the land of nightmares, Begotten became even stronger, becoming, or merging with the Horror, or whatever. She could still remember what it felt like, when Athalia had taken her into the nightmare, and Triss got to see the woman's Horror up close and personal. Triss's Beast had recoiled in fear of the alien power of such a creature.

But, apparently, the human half was separate from the Horror half, when the human was out in the real world. So, what, the Horror half was just a mindless thing? Just something that, what, drifted around and caused nightmares? Or, maybe it fed on people's nightmares? She didn't have a fucking clue about Begotten or how they worked, but for the moment, she didn't need to. It was obvious that Sándor's Horror was a fucking titan, far stronger than any of them could have predicted, far stronger than Fiona or Athalia, or that insect pile Mark that Jacob had spooked. This beast running for Jack was a god damn fucking myth of legend.

Triss hid behind a tree, a big one, one of the fat fuckers at least five feet wide. Hopefully it'd survive a hit. Clara had destroyed a bunch of trees earlier, and Jack had knocked down dozens for the fun of it. Sándor's Horror was knocking down hundreds. The rats were scattered and dying by the thousands, mostly to falling trees. The earth was starting to run red with blood, and not long after, it began to turn black with feathers. Above her, the birds were doing their best to be a part of the fight, dive bombing the gargoyle, but for each that managed to close in on the creature, another died to the chaos, from falling trees crashing into each other, or from the gargoyle's many flailing limbs. A flying twig might not have been a big deal, but the giant branches shattering and sending enormous splinters everywhere were. The trees had no give. They didn't bend. They were hard, old, dark, bitter trees, that snapped violently, as if making sure to part the world with a fun-filled farewell.

She looked back to the clearing the hunters were in. The four bodyguards stared at the chaos of Sándor's Horror fighting a werewolf and three vampires, but Jeremiah, Elen, and Angela remained focused on their task. Every so often, Angela twitched, spooked by the impact of the monster smashing through more trees, ripping the night endless forest to bits around it. Jeremiah only bothered with a few glances, and Elen didn't even notice. The old woman, now being wheeled by Jeremiah, started drawing on another tree with her glowing red knife, before moving onto the next. Those portal symbols again. They were going to go somewhere, and they sacrificed a fuckload of bodies, trained and useful bodies, to go wherever somewhere was.

"Brace," she said, "sure you don't know what your bosses are up to?" The hunter was lying down on the ground behind a fallen tree on his stomach. Smart. If the nightmare monster came there way, there was a decent chance it'd run right past him. Or step on him and kill him instantly.

"No," he whispered, "not a fucking clue. Andrew and the others probably know. They're with Jeremiah and Elen all the time." He gestured to the four hunters, shook his head several times, dropped his forehead into the dirt, and shook it again. Guy really wore his emotions on his sleeve.

Considering what they knew about Jeremiah, he was probably pulling out some last ditch effort to achieve his goals, which meant Azamel's life was in danger. No one fucking cared about Azamel, though. The problem was it might mean they get away, again, and that could not happen.

What a delightful circle of hate. Azamel ruined Jeremiah's life, so the fucker spent an eternity hunting her down. Angela ruined Beatrice's life, so she'd spend an eternity hunting her down Angela probably didn't know who she was, the fucking bitch. But, no, she wasn't going to escape again. This was going to end tonight.

Triss poked her head around the giant tree. Fucking god, that monster was huge. When it stood up straight, it must have been fifteen feet tall, muscular, with dark blue skin, like the depths of the ocean. The four arms, one pair set under the other, were each almost as big as her. Its horns were massive, its wings gigantic, and its tail slithered left and right behind it with serpent grace. Clara clung to its back, biting and clawing at where its four wings jutted. The arms of each wing, not as big as its more normal four arms, were still big, long, and muscular. The werewolf didn't make much headway in damaging them.

It was obviously male, and its face wasn't too far off from a human face, if perhaps a little demon-ish, with a broad hard chin and heavy brow. He, it, whatever, might have even looked attractive, in a 'I am a demon incarnate, bow before my might' sort of way. And watching it rampage, ripping and tearing the forest around it like paper, sealed the image pretty thoroughly. It was a nightmare alright, the sort of nightmare someone might have had five hundred years ago, imagining a gargoyle on a cathedral being possessed by a demon and unleashing its hate and fury on the city. It would have been kind of awesome, if the damn thing wasn't trying to kill them.

It threw Clara off, hard enough that she smashed through a tree like a rock through a window, before she slammed against the tree Triss was behind. The thud of her body against the trunk was sickening. Crunch, tearing bark and breaking bones. The werewolf slumped to the earth, and Triss slowly crouched down, and peeked around the tree at her.

Poor woman. Her body was twisted almost one-eighty at the waist, her torso pointed up, head leaning against the nearby tree trunk of a destroyed tree, and her mouth hung open, with tongue hanging out. Her eyes were open, but she wasn't there. Unconscious, or dazed. A good thing, too, or she'd be shrieking in agony. One of her legs was bent at the knee, in the wrong direction, and the other leg had a bone sticking out of it. Her arms weren't in as bad condition, except one being bent horribly out of place around and behind her back; dislocated. Much of her fur was soaked in blood, and giant gashes ran down her side. They must have been caused by the trees and branches she'd hit. Triss could see the gashes closing themselves, that ridiculous werewolf endurance putting itself to use, but it had its work cut out for it, trying to rebuild someone as beat up as Clara was now.

Stupid woman, putting herself through this, knowing full well her boss was going to rip her a new one when she found out. And for what? Because she had a crush on Jack, or because she genuinely agreed with this ridiculous plan? God, she hoped it was the latter.

“Go back to having fun orgies with ghouls, Clara,” Triss whispered, hoping Clara couldn't hear her. “Don't get attached to the kid. Don't ... don't get attached to anyone.” Fuck, was she that bitter now? Screw love, screw romance, screw the idea of ever connecting with another person? A lot of Kindred did that, gave up on romance when looking down the road of immortality. She could see it, see herself telling others that love wasn't worth it, especially if you were an undying creature of the night, and had to carry the heartache for who fucking knew how long. But, no, she wasn't that fucked up, hopefully. She'd bounce back. Angela's corpse would be her trampoline.

As she started dragging Clara's body around the tree and to a safer location, Othello sprinted ahead of the gargoyle. Her fellow witch rarely ever used his physical abilities. He was a slut, through and through, and was only concerned with using Majesty to seduce people. Seeing him exercise his Daeva muscles, and dash away from the Horror with some inhuman speed, was pretty wicked. Except, the monster tore after him far faster than it should have been able to. It wasn't a creature of muscle and bone. It was a nightmare. It didn't have to obey normal rules anymore than Kindred did.

It caught Othello, and it got a hand around each of his limbs.

Oh fuck. No. No no. She would not allow this. She'd lost too much already. She wasn't going to lose anyone else.

She ran out into the clearing of destroyed forest, and jumped out for the giant gargoyle. There should have been a moment's hesitation, but there wasn't. It might kill her, it might not. Maybe Jack would do something, cause he was just standing there by the barrier, waiting. Maybe Damien was would show up and save Othello? She couldn't wait.

Faintly, for a moment, she wondered if maybe the whole night had been a bad idea. As she flew through the air, and did her best to ignore the tearing sensations in her chest, she wondered if any of this had been a good idea at all. How blinded by rage and a need for revenge could she be?

Pretty god damn fucking blinded.

She latched onto the gargoyle's shoulder. Christ, it was huge, over twice as tall as her. This close, it was easy to see that, yes, one of its arms literally was nearly the size of her. Its skin was hard, but not rough. It was tough, quality leather, and as she sank her claws into it to get a grip, she could feel the steel muscle underneath it. Most of Damien's blade was still stuck in its head, and the gargoyle just didn't care. Well, it'd care about this.

She lunged for the side of its face, and sank her teeth into its neck. All her teeth. She opened her mouth wide, as wide as it could go, like a motherfucking python, and sank all her extra teeth onto the gargoyle's muscle.

Back in the real world, grunts and groans, gasps, and even the occasional human scream, were noises she was familiar with, when she sank her fangs into someone. She'd never, ever sunk her crocodile teeth into someone, and she'd never sunk any teeth into something like this. Her eardrums didn't know how to register the sound. It was like someone running a guitar pick along the strings of an electric guitar, with the gain cranked to max, and having ten guitarists do it at the same time with fifty speakers, all pointed at her ears. And, underneath that, it was like someone had attached an earthquake to her head, thousands of square miles of land, literally attached to her skull, and vibrating wildly, bass filling her until she thought her teeth might shatter.

Nosferatu strength poured through her, vitae pumping through her limbs and through her jaw. She ignored the sound of the creature's shrieking roar, ignore how it felt to hear that with her teeth lodged into its neck, and bit harder. Its blood squirted into her mouth, and she ignored that, too. A second of taste was all it took for her to realize its blood would provide no nourishment to her. Like the forest, the castle, the village around her, it was all fake, a dream, a nightmare. The thing she was biting into was a phantasm, not flesh with blood to be devoured. But that didn't mean she couldn't bite it, and hurt it, a lot.

The monster started thrashing around instantly, roaring and screaming with an animal's panic. It let go of Othello, save for one hand around one of the man's legs, and reached for her with the other three. It got two of its hands on her legs, and tugged, but the moment it felt her teeth threaten to rip its throat out if it pulled her off, it hesitated. That's right, motherfucker, I'm a god damn bear trap, and I'm on your fucking jugular.

A few extra seconds in the chaos was all she was going to manage. Her guts were threatening to pop out of her, since she was flexing every muscle in her body, and the cut she'd given to herself wasn't healed. Maybe, just maybe, if she was at full strength, she might be able to tear this fucker's throat a hole, but she doubted that'd kill it. Still, a nasty wound was a step in the right direction.

A strange thunk went through the beast's body, followed by more deafening roars.

“Triss, let go!”

Damien’s voice. She let go, and threw herself to the side, away from the creature. In the blur of movement, she spotted Damien bouncing off the creature’s head. Oh, he’d kicked the sword still lodged in its skull. It was still there, and a fresh squirt of blood came out of the gargoyle’s head, only to cease a moment later; it healed as fast as the werewolves. As Damien flew through the air, he unloaded his pistol at the creature’s face, a dozen shots in a single second, before the Mekhet landed on a branch of a nearby tree. Fucking bullets did nothing.

It was surrounded, and every attempt the Horror made to home in on someone and kill them meant it got attacked by someone else. But the gargoyle was learning. It turned to face Damien, ignoring the bullets that bounced from the skin of its skull and face, but as it did, it snapped its tail back behind it, straight at Beatrice.

A giant tail, a snake’s tail, a dragon’s tail, was not a weapon she expected to ever have to worry about. It wasn’t like anything with a tail was up and about, walking around in Dolareido. But the gargoyle had one, and it was long, ten feet probably. And it slammed into her like a fucking truck. Her ribs shattered instantly, she knew that. The strange part was the complete cessation of feeling all together as she flew through the air. All she could do was go limp, and wait for gravity to put her down, an angry child sick of its toy. Spinning fast enough that the world swirled into a blur, she twisted and turned, orientation completely out of her control, until she hit something.

What did she hit? She couldn’t see it, whatever it was. Oh, right, the invisible barrier. Like a stone, she fell to the ground, and landed on her head upside down. The ground greeted her like an old, spiteful friend, content to spew bitter words over past misgivings. Dirt, rock, twigs and sharp bark cut into her skin. Only when she slumped over onto her side, did the real pain start kicking in. Ribs, back, and a leg, were broken; attempts to move told her that pretty quick. Agony, searing lava, ran up her limbs and into her skull, explaining to her about her broken body with waves of pain, each screaming 'I'm from your leg' and 'I'm from your back' and 'I'm from your chest'. If she hadn't been Kindred, the broken back would have probably saved her a lot of that pain, but a vampire's corpse body didn't play by biological rules.

It took a few seconds, but eventually the pain subsided into utter misery, instead of paralyzing torment. A level of pain she could manage, after all the training Jacob had put her through. The problem now, was moving. She turned her head and looked at her body, broken and twisted, just like Clara's had been. Miraculously, both her arms were still working, nothing dislocated or broken, and she stabbed her claws into the dirt to begin dragging herself away from the carnage.

She looked over her shoulder, at Jack. He wasn't too far from her. The pit Clara had dug sat between them, so maybe thirty feet was between her and the kid. The monster hadn't been to this side of the growing destruction zone, so, she managed to pull herself between some of the trees. Clara was fifty feet away, behind the giant tree, and out of the way; a big enough tree that even the gargoyle wouldn't be able to break it. Harcourt was nowhere to be found, but the man wasn't stupid enough to try and escape. He had nowhere to go. Fucker was just hiding, as if he finally managed to grow a brain.

Othello had not escaped the gargoyle unharmed, like she'd hoped. What had—oh, right, it had four hands, and one of them had held onto Othello when she bit into it. And, when Damien showed up and kicked the blade lodged in its skull, the gargoyle had whipped around, throwing its arms about. Her fellow witch would have been thrown like a doll, a cheap, small doll that would break if thrown too hard.

Yep, the man was skewered, body dangling from a tree, twenty feet in the air, with a giant branch rammed through his chest. He was in torpor, eyes closed and head hanging forward. A wooden stake through the heart, or anything similar, would do that.

Damien and Jack were the only ones left standing, and Jack seemed content to just stand there by the barrier, grinning at the gargoyle. His legion of rats had been beaten, smashed in by a few thousand hunter bullets, who fucking knew how much flamethrower fire, and now the chaos of a fight against a colossus, in the middle of a forest where the rats were getting squashed left right and center. And black feathers were everywhere. Many of the crows still lived, and had taken to the sky, hundreds of them, maybe even thousands, but they just couldn't do a damn fucking thing against the fucking Horror.

Damien hopped away from the monster, only for it to charge through trees in pursuit, body crashing through them like the fucking Kool-Aid man. The vampire was fast, very fast, but the speed didn't mean shit if he couldn't turn it into an offense. Queue epic music, as the poor fucker just ran from the Horror, unable to do anything. If the monster got his hands on him, he was fucked. Maybe an elder Gangrel would be tough enough to take a beating from it, or maybe a Ventrue, but not a Mekhet.

It couldn't match his speed enough to catch him though, and Damien managed to put distance between him and the titan, a lot of it. He disappeared into the woods again, undoubtedly to hide with his Cloak of Night, and look for another attack strategy. Well, fuck, she knew he had none. And the Horror was realizing that, too. Damien was a fly, pestering it, but unable to hurt it with a useless pistol, and without his sword.

The giant creature turned its dark, steel gaze to Jack, and started to march toward him.

“Jack!” Damien yelled from the woods. “Got a plan?” His usually smooth, subdued voice was filled with panicked yells, but the thick forest suppressed the sound, unholy trees muffling all the noise so it was directionless.

The kid didn't respond. He stood there, looking at the gargoyle, and tilted his head from side to side as if to crack his neck. Kindred bodies couldn't pop their knuckles or crack their backs, no nitrogen bubbles or shit in the joints. But it was obvious he was getting ready for something.

Searing pain scorched up through her body again, and Triss bit down as she tried to ignore it. The taste of that monster's blood was on her tongue, and it tasted weird. It tasted wrong. It tasted good. The fuck would Sándor's blood taste like? She shook her head, throwing away the thought, and replacing it with a mountain of pain from the stupid fucking act of shaking her fucking head. But vitae coursed through her, started fixing her spine and fixing her leg, and she screamed through clenched teeth as more pain flowed through her. Things were sliding into grooves and slots with almost audible grinding of bone on bone, the Beast within putting her back together with all the care and delicacy of an overworked masseuse turned serial killer.

She looked to the clearing. Not the one the Horror had made, a ruin of destroyed trees, rat and bird corpses, and blood. She looked to the other one, with the hunters standing safely behind their bullshit magic. The clearing with the sacrifices on trees now looked like a saintly display, compared to the zone of death she was dragging her broken ass through. Loads of the rats and birds weren't completely dead, and some of them squeaked or squawked in misery as she dragged herself past them. Fuck, it was horrible. It fit the nightmare environment of the old, dead forest, and the haunted village perfectly.

She managed to get her body around a tree, between her and the rampaging gargoyle. Clara was nearby, and Triss sighed relief as she noticed the werewolf moving her jaw slowly, inching out of her coma. Movement in the other direction drew her eye in a snap, and she hissed to herself as she glared at Angela and Jeremiah. Whatever they were doing, it was taking longer than she'd figured it would. Well, if this was some sort of last ditch effort at something, and they were willing to kill almost all the hunters they had to do it, it made sense that it was going to take them more than a minute to set it up.

They were drawing lines in the grass now, carving them with their belt knives and heels. Elen followed them as they dug, pushed by her bodyguards. No way was that old bitch leaning down to write on the ground without accidentally snapping every bone in her body, but she didn't need to. As she was pushed along, she let her right hand dangle off the side of her chair, so the tip of her glowing knife was only inches from the ground. Drops of red fell from it, gentle glows of crimson that pulsed like candlelight in the night air.

"Harcourt," she said, biting down as another pulse of pain went through her. Crack, crunch, a femur bone slid into place, bone rubbing and grinding sliver by sliver. "Harcourt."

"W-What? I—holy shit." The man poked his head up from behind his fallen tree, and stared at her. "Your—"

"I'll be fine, fucking moron." The look of concern on his face dug at her like a thorn. The man was a hunter. Killing things like her was his reason for getting up in the morning, or night. Where the fuck did he get off looking concerned. "You sure you don't know what your bosses are doing?"

"Creating a portal of some kind. That's all I know."

"Yeah, I gathered that much. Fuck me, you are useless."

“Well sorry! I’ll just take back the info that enabled this stupid suicide mission!”

She rolled her eyes as she looked back to the hunters, and then back to Jack. The Horror was charging at him now, full speed, and it’d get to him in a couple of seconds.

“Come on, I want you to do it, I want you to do it,” Jack said, grinning and staring at the gargoyle. The kid had moved closer to the pit Clara dug, now only a few feet from the ditch, and stood his ground. “Come on, hit me. Hit me!”

Oh my fucking god, he was quoting The Dark Knight.

---

~~Damien~~

He felt useless.

Sándor’s nightmare was a juggernaut. Bullets couldn’t pierce its skin, and his sword was lodged in its skull so hard, he wasn’t getting it out. The sword’s handle, and a few inches of the metal, were lost, and useless besides. He still had a silver knife, but the soft metal wouldn’t stand a chance against this thing’s body; it wasn’t long enough to do serious damage anyway.

As he sped away from the chasing gargoyle, he tapped into his core, found the vitae stirring and coursing through him, and blanketed himself in the Cloak of Night. Doing it while running, especially while running in this environment, bouncing off trees and in the dead of night, wasn’t easy. He had to slow down to do it, but at least that gave him some time to look over his shoulder, and check on Othello.

The man had been thrown aside when Damien kicked the blade lodged in its skull. Following that, the gargoyle had spread its wings in a powerful explosion of force, and Damien had lost track of the Daeva. Those four enormous sails of leather, each draped under arms longer and thinner than its main four arms, were far tougher than wings should have been. Instead of thin membranes, they were full-on leather, sturdy enough that, when it spread its wings, it not only sent wind outward with explosive force, sending branches and rodents alike outward in a blast, it kicked up air and twisted it into a momentary tornado. The poor Daeva was skewered on a branch, dangling like a rag doll, defenseless.

He had to do something. If he could get inside the circle the hunters had created, he could destroy the altar Elen had prepared. It must have been controlling Sándor and his Horror, and if he destroyed it, Lord willing, the spell on the man, and the new one cast on his Horror, would be broken. But Clara hadn't managed to make even the tiniest hole through the black soot. The ground was tougher than Jack had predicted.

If they had time, they could have done something. All they needed to do was cause the earth to vibrate at the hole Clara dug. Vibration would make the earth crumble, and the line would be broken. A quick trip to the Invictus HQ, and they could get some grenades, assuming Michael and Maria didn't lock them up immediately. Or, they could maybe grab some of the fallen trees, and smash them into the hole Clara dug. Surely with a cooperative effort, they could lift some truly heavy objects.

Damien dashed up a tree and got fifty feet into the air, before he started returning toward the chaos. Kindred eyes helped with navigating the insane, deadly maze of sharp branches and twisted, fat, warped, withered trees, but rolling clouds above kept the moon and starlight from helping much. He had to go slower, slower than he wanted. Each branch he had to take carefully. The bloody forest was brittle in some places, and deadly sharp in others. Running through it would lead any human to die a slow death to a thousand cuts, or to trip and be skewered by an errant branch through the neck. Nightmare realm indeed.

He got as close as he could before he ran out of trees. From up high, everything was different. It were as if a giant explosion had gone off, creating a crater of mayhem and death below, several hundred feet wide. Dead rats coated the forest floor like a carpet.

Up in the trees, high up where everything was black, and hopefully beyond the notice of the gargoyle, there were crows everywhere, far more crows than Damien had thought. Had Jack told them to hide? Plenty of crows had died, but it was the rats that'd taken the brunt force of both the hunters' weapons fire, and the Horror's chaotic destruction. Up in the high branches of the angry forest of black bark and petrified wood, thousands and thousands of wings waited in absolute silence.

Damien scanned the ground below him. Clara was there, but Triss had managed to pull her behind a tree earlier, so all Damien could see was a bit of her tail, and one of her feet. Paws? It was twitching. Clara had been crushed into a broken mess of bone and meat, and Damien was confident she'd be on her feet in another ten minutes, given her werewolf regeneration and tenacity. Ten minutes was an eternity, in their current situation.

Triss had been hit as well, and unlike Clara, she'd had no one to pull her out of harm's way. He could see her, dragging herself behind some of the fallen trees, not too far from where Clara had gone down. Harcourt was there. For a moment, Damien wondered if the man would take advantage of the situation, and kill Clara, Triss, and maybe Othello, but the fear passed quickly. Jack had proved the man was trustworthy before they went on this suicidal mission, and even if he hadn't, Harcourt was trapped by circumstance. Maybe he'd help. Or, most likely, he'd hide.

Only Damien and Jack remained then, and in a battle of brute strength, a Mekhet was borderline useless, especially without his sword. The gargoyle's skin had been difficult enough to penetrate, which led it to getting stuck in the creature's side when Damien had first stabbed it. Jack had taken advantage of it, but that had likely damaged the sword's integrity. Of course it would break, after stabbing it into bone that may as well have been metal.

Jack. The demon stepped closer to the hole Clara had dug, closer, and closer still. All the while, he stared at the gargoyle, a grin on his face and his arms at his sides, palms pointed forward as if ready to catch someone's charge. Pointless. The gargoyle was big enough, strong enough, and heavy enough, that it'd turn the boy into paste if it charged him into the invisible barrier at Jack's back.

Damien went rigid. His hands clasped tight the ugly, hostile tree beside him. His fingers scraped against the harsh bark. He forced himself to crouch low to the branch as a black poison crept up his body, up his feet and into his spine, up his fingers and into his neck. What was that? Good Lord, what was that?

His eyes fell on Jack, and froze. Something was happening to him. Something was twisting and churning inside Jack, something invisible, something that felt black and ... and ... angry? Was angry the word? It felt aggressive, and hateful, but not in a vindictive way. Then maybe angry wasn't the word. Explosive, hostile, ready to burn everything around it in a display of fury and ... and ... intense violence and ferocity.

He reached for his vitae, and enabled Auspex. The world changed for him, for his eyes, shadows peeling away slightly, and subtle glows circling everything that lived. Natasha could see in true dark with her Auspex, a freak mutation, or possible gift, of her bloodline. But for most Mekhet, Auspex was used to see the truth in other creatures or objects. At its most basic level, it could be used to spot a Kindred hiding with Obfuscate such as Cloak of Night, and it could be used to sense the power and disposition of nearby Kindred.

Whatever was inside Jack, whatever was piloting his body like a puppet, was doing something, something horrible. He shivered, remembering how Azamel described it, and gulped down the growing fear in his gut as Auspex showed the strange, pulsing aura around Jack. It burned Damien's eyes, but he kept them open, locked onto the boy as Sándor's Horror grew faster, and faster, until it was running at him with a gait only a charging dinosaur could have mimicked, leaning forward with its tail swaying behind it. Its wings were tucked tight to its back, and each step it made send vibrations pulsing through the earth.

“Hit me. Come on, hit me! Hit me!” The kid stomped a foot once, and laughed.

Damien almost said something, almost yelled, almost told Jack to run, almost ruined his hidden position. But he didn't. Not because he was afraid for Jack's life; he was, but that didn't sew his lips. The aura emanating from the boy, the strange, burning sensation that pulsed outward, that burned his eyes and his core, terrified him. There was no other way to think of the cold pain coursing through him, juxtaposed against the searing heat that poured from the boy. It wasn't heat, it was rage, fury, a need for violence that his senses could only interpret as a scalding heat that threatened to kill him if he came too close.

His jaw dropped, and he almost gasped, as the gargoyle smashed into Jack. The titan was enormous, too enormous. In the madness of collision, Jack disappeared beneath the mass of the Horror, and the world erupted into vibration as the creature struck the invisible barrier. It was like watching a transport truck crash into a mountain. The crows that filled the trees, the ones closest to the circle of destruction, erupted upward, joining the clouds above as they blocked out what little starlight and moonlight was visible. Damien held tight to the tree as the following wave of vibration soaked up through his shoes and hands, and into his teeth.

The gargoyle spread its wings, stabilizing itself after the impact. It took a single step back from where its body collided with the invisible wall, and three of its arms pressed hands against the barrier. It had hit the barrier hard, obviously not aware of its presence. Any other creature would have smashed a dozen bones from the sudden stop, but the gargoyle looked perfectly intact.

Jack, was crushed underneath one of its fists.

“Oh ... no.” Damien looked around quickly, eyes snapping, panic gripping him. Shit. Shit shit shit. If Jack died, everything was over. Escape? He could run away. Yes, he could run and hide. He was good at that. Did it for fifty years. Maria would understand. There—

No, don't be ridiculous. Calm down, and think. Jack had stood there, and invited the creature to charge him. You've seen what the curse can do, the power it could summon. Jack isn't dead.

He knew it was true. Jack wasn't dead, because he could still feel that black, searing, inhuman, invampire rage pouring out of him.

Sure enough, as the chaos settled, Damien focused his vision on the gargoyle, and noticed movement underneath the fist it had planted against the barrier. Jack. The gargoyle's fist was nearly the size of Jack's torso, and it was planted firmly into the boy's chest, pinning him to the wall. It'd punched him. The gargoyle, charging like a bull with the weight of a truck, had punched Jack, poured his mass and strength into it, and flattened the kid into the barrier.

Except, Jack was still alive. He wasn't ash. He was there, behind this fist, and with a growing smile, the kid raised his arms around the fist, and set his hands upon it.

Blood began to pour out of the boy, dark red, and angry. It leaked from him, from his mouth, from his nostrils, from his ears, and from his eyes. It leaked out from where the Horror had crushed his chest into the barrier, spilling over the monster's fingers and into its fist. It leaked from the boy's undoubtedly crushed waist, and down his legs.

But not a drop hit the ground. It seeped, flowed, and began to fly. It sought its master, bound to his skin, and covered him, coating him until pale flesh was hidden behind a crimson wall. It binded to him, showing pockets of skin as it began to run along his body, coursing unendingly.

The gargoyle roared in pain, after Jack lifted his right hand, and brought it down on the fist. It backed off, but Jack held on; big as the gargoyle was, it wasn't so big that Jack couldn't hold onto its wrist with his left hand. Cackling madly, Jack brought his right hand down again, held in a fist and swung like a hammer. This time, Damien could see the gargoyle's finger break, earning another deathly roar from the creature.

The Horror stepped back again, and brought all three free hands down toward Jack, palms open. It was going to remove Jack, like a pesky bug that'd gotten stuck between its fingers. But as they descended upon the boy, Jack reached up and grabbed some of the incoming fingers from two of its hands. Crack, crunch, followed by more roars of pain. He didn't have enough hands to stop them all, though, and the third hand managed to grab Jack's body, and sank claws into him. It didn't matter. The red blood flowing over the boy's skin gushed into the holes the Horror made, and forced the claws out of his body.

Damien knew what this was. He'd never seen anyone perform the ability, though from what Jack told him, his sire had managed it for a few moments before death. To tap into his vitae, summon it, and infuse blood with it so the crimson liquid coated and protected him, was not a feat done easily, or for long.

Two crows next to Damien poked at his jacket.

"Ow!" he whispered. "What—oh." Mulder and Scully. They poked and pecked several more times, before they flew to another tree, this one across the clearing of destroyed forest, and much closer to the hole Clara had been digging. It wasn't like Damien could break through the barrier, and without a proper explosive, it'd be difficult to create the explosion of force needed to—

The explosion had been created. The Horror's charge into the barrier had shook the entire, cursed nightmare. Now all he had to do, was see what damage had been done. Was that Jack's idea, or the curse's?

He closed his eyes for a moment, tapped deep into his body, dug up his vitae, and infused it into his limbs. Speed. He needed speed. As he felt the tingling sensation of glorious, overwhelming speed demand action, he spun more vitae out of him, around him, and buried himself with his Obfuscate. He was getting tired. He'd launched several attacks on this creature tonight, and had barely done anything to it. But it didn't matter. This needed to happen, or everything would be for naught.

He set a foot against the tree behind him, and forced as much vitae and strength into his leg as he could, and jumped. Air greeted him, the familiar sensation of jumping through the sky. Roof hopping was a common mode of transportation for Mekhet and Nosferatu, but landing on a rooftop was a hundred times easier than landing in the high branches of sharp, twisted, brittle trees.

His boots slid against a fat branch, his target. His hands caught the trunk, but inertia made sure the rest of him hit it anyway. He thudded against it quietly, quiet enough only a keen beast would notice, and the gargoyle was far too distracted by its battle with Jack to notice something like a Mekhet sneaking through the trees above it.

Jack continued to hold onto the gargoyle's wrist, and as it swung its arm around in an attempt to dislodge the small boy, Jack held on. The Horror gave up moments later, and again slammed Jack into the invisible barrier, open palm, like crushing an egg. Blood splattered outward from the impact, and Damien swore he could see Jack's body momentarily implode. A second later, it filled itself out, and the blood that erupted from the boy's body forced itself back into him.

The kid brought up both hands above his head, created a single fist, and slammed them down against the gargoyle's wrist. Crack. The snap of its enormous bones was audible, as if Jack had cracked a steel beam in half. The gargoyle backed away yet again, leaving Jack to fall to the ground as it grabbed its hand, roaring in pain and surprise. And fear.

A sharp pain in Damien's ear earned a wince, and he snapped his eyes around. A crow sat upon a small, nearby branch, and flapped its wings several times before pointing down at the hole not far from where Jack was fighting the monster. It wasn't a deep hole. Clara hadn't been able to make much progress in the single minute she'd had to dig at it, at least not relative to her size. She was a huge creature, and she needed room to be able to throw her weight against the wall of dirt in hopes of breaking the barrier, a plan she never got the chance to enact.

If Jack's plan had failed, they were screwed. Lord why, why didn't you give him a sign to bring a blasted grenade? Maybe he should go back to the hunter Clara killed at the door. She might have had a grenade. Or the hunter crushed in the forest, they ... they were buried under half a dozen trees now.

Groaning and rolling his eyes, he hopped down from branch to branch, and poured every ounce of vitae he had into his Cloak. He couldn't allow himself to be spotted. If Jack's plan had been successful, this was their only chance to stop Jeremiah.

On the way down, he spotted Triss and Harcourt. The human was hiding well, like a soldier in a trench, far from home. Triss was recovering, but it was obvious to see she was out of commission.

She wouldn't be fighting anymore tonight. Considering the very young Nosferatu had managed to do far more damage to the gargoyle than he, or even the far older Daeva had, she'd done more than enough. And if Harcourt so much as earned a stern look from the gargoyle, he'd likely explode violently. He wouldn't be fighting, either.

Damien crawled past them, inching carefully over bark and twigs and dead rats. Better to not let them see him, lest they give his position away. Then again, it might not have mattered, considering what Jack was doing. The plan Jack was communicating to his crows, somehow, in the middle of battle, with a Horror, was to investigate the place Clara had been attempting to break the infuriating barrier the hunters had created. Checking the barrier in a stealthy manner was to his advantage, to avoid drawing the Horror's attention, but then again, Jack was currently in the process of bashing the creature's arm in. Attention drawn.

The gargoyle stumbled back again, and Jack, now dropped to the ground, jumped after it. His skin, his suit, all of it swirled and flowed with the dark liquid, and the holes the gargoyle had put into the boy filled in. For a moment, Damien could see bone, but it disappeared under the red, only for a layer of skin to appear a second later. His body had been crushed to utter oblivion, but now the boy was walking around as if nothing had happened. His suit told another story, with a few dozen breaks from where the gargoyle's attack had punctured and tore it.

Julias would not have survived that. Viktor would have struggled to survive that. Jack walked it off.

The demon landed between the beast's legs, and now protected by his shield of blood and death, the creature within him unleashing its violent need, he went on the offensive. He dove for the monster's right leg, and punched at the knee. He hit the knee on the inside, and sent the monster down onto its hip as it collapsed, weight giving way. The impact launched Jack backward hard, and his back bounced against the Horror's other leg. But, as the gargoyle fell, landing on its palms, Jack dashed around its legs to get underneath its torn neck, and he punched upward.

The result was absurd. Little Jack. Tiny, skinny little Jack in his torn up suit, gave the goliath monstrosity an uppercut, and because the upward force drove Jack's weight into the ground, he was anchored. The full might of the demon child's punch connected to the gargoyle's jaw, and the colossal creature went upright with the force of it, before falling backward over its own legs. It crumbled onto its back and right side, and tore at the ground with its arms as it struggled to get back up.

But Jack didn't let it. The kid ran around, got underneath its chest, and punched upward again. And again, the explosive force sent the creature up and back, half rolling over itself. The creature weighed thousands and thousands of pounds, and Jack was punching it hard enough to almost send it in the air. The second punch earned another audible crack, followed by a shrieking roar that threatened to burst ear drums.

"Don't get me wrong!" Jack said, laughing between his movements as he jumped after the creature. "I don't want to hurt you, nightmare. I respect the Begotten, to a degree. And you are a certifiably badass, deadly creature. I don't want to kill you. But I will if I have to." The demon boy jumped around to its head again, and came from above this time, slamming both hands down on it. The impact was enough to send the gargoyle down onto its chest, and head into the ground hard enough Damien felt the impact. It also sent Jack into the air, high into the air, propelled upward by his own strength.

The curse controlling Jack, and infusing him with absurd vigor, may have had the power to Dominate anyone, control an entire legion of creatures, and perform true feats of strength Damien doubted Jacob or the Prince could match, but balance and dexterity were skills of finesse, timing, and practice. Jack spun around in the air, a dozen times, before gravity eventually took hold of him and brought him down. Damien would have landed on his feet. Jack landed on his ass.

That didn't matter to the new Jack. He laughed, a joyful, arrogant, ruthless sound, and hopped up once again. Crimson continued to coat him, protected him, repaired him, and fueled him. But it did nothing for his reflexes. The gargoyle got to one knee, and swept its tail with a twist of its body. Crack, a whip snap, like the one that had hit Triss and broke her.

Jack took it straight on, and Damien could see his body fold in half before the tail launched him into a distant tree. It was like seeing a baseball bat hit a ball hard enough to drive it through the stadium itself. Sure enough, Jack hit the so hard, he went through it. More than go through it, the trunk shattered around him like a brick through glass, and Jack disappeared into the dark wood beyond.

Damien froze and stared, forcing his body to hold still as he crept toward the pit Clara had dug. The silence that followed the explosion was deafening, but it wasn't the hit that Jack took that shook him to his core. It was the laughter that followed, a creepy, insidious laugh, that felt right at home surrounded by the horrible trees, the corpses, and the destruction. It wasn't the gargoyle laughing. That would have sounded louder, and more animal. This laugh came from the shadows beyond, from within the forest, from where Jack had landed.

Several enormous trees, lying on their sides, rolled over each other, as the small Kindred pushed the insane weight off of him. Body a broken mess, suit half ripped off, exposing his chest and right arm, Jack stepped over the ruins of wood, and walked back toward the gargoyle. Damien could see bone through holes left on his body, holes that quickly filled with the crimson liquid. He could see gashes seal, and he only realized it once it was healed, but Jack's right foot had been twisted almost completely around. It snapped back into place as if someone had grabbed it, and literally screwed it back into the correct position, like twisting a cork.

A chunk of the boy's face had lost its skin, and Damien stared at the demon child as blood flowed up and down Jack's cheek, hiding the eye socket, cheek bone, jaw, and teeth that'd been exposed a moment before. Soon, skin once again covered the wound. And, judging by the sadistic smile the boy now sported, his face was completely healed.

Jack licked his lips, threw off the tattered remains of his suit jacket, and marched toward the gargoyle. "That the best you got? Fucking pathetic."

Chapter 109

~~Author's Note~~

Sorry this action scene is taking so long. It's really been dragging! But it's building up to something pretty big, and a lot of details needed to be explored; they'll be relevant later. Give it a couple more chapters and we'll be back to the world of Dolareido.

---

~~Damien~~

He didn't have to say anything. The moment he curled his finger against the small hole in the soot, and opened the barrier, the crows above began to squawk, caw, and attack. Damien worked quickly, spreading the soot apart until one, two, three feet of open earth awaited him. Thankfully, the amber circle was rendered completely useless by being broken, but the soot apparently still worked as a barrier from either direction, as his fingers attested; it blocked all matter from both sides, but when his fingers touched the powder itself from the inside of the invisible wall, it gave way. He had to make sure the break was wide.

The crows, who had hidden in the forest, hiding their numbers in the shadow and sinister wood, unleashed the swarm. The legion descended upon Damien, and flew through the break in the barrier over his head. Made sense; they wouldn't be able to see the black powder way high up in the sky, with branches and darkness hiding it. But it did mean he had to plant himself flat to the ground and ledge of the ditch, covering his head with his hands, as the birds flew through the hole, shrieking and squawking.

The four hunters lifted their heads, eyes wide, surprised, and maybe a little afraid. But the fear disappeared under reflexes, training, and Lord only knew how many years of hate and loathing.

The one with the flamethrower unleashed Hell, and Damien had to throw himself back and away into the forest again, disappearing behind trees as fire lit up the hole in the barrier he'd made. Feathers went up in flames, and the smell of burned flesh filled Damien's nostrils. Bullets ripped up the ground, shredding the hole Damien had made, and again the Mekhet found himself hiding as the hail of gunfire continued until dozens, hundreds of bullets were crashing against the bark around him.

He peeked his head out, and watched. Wrapped in his Cloak of Night, the hunters wouldn't be able to see him. Except, Jeremiah, Angela, and Elen had proven they were quite capable of handling paranormal threats. Perhaps they could see him, if he got too close, thanks to their tattoo symbols, or maybe the necklaces and bracelets they wore. The four hunters were as likely a threat, but they were distracted, all four sets of eyes locked onto the ditch Clara had dug, and burying it in metal and fire.

Angela, Elen, and Jeremiah, on the other hand, did not break from their task. Now they stood within a new circle, one Angela was finishing drawing with what looked like chalk. Amber. That blasted amber line again. But it seemed like they didn't have anymore of the black soot anymore; powerful stuff, absurdly powerful, and thank the Lord he didn't have to deal with anymore of it. The amber line wouldn't block a bullet.

He looked to Jack, and shivered at the sight of the kid. Auspex showed the same thing as before, that the boy's aura had exploded into something massive, angry, violent, and bloodthirsty. It was a rage Damien could not begin to understand, could not put into context, and could not appreciate. It was the rage of a psychopath, of a broken mind that didn't think like a normal person.

No, it was the rage of the Beast, the sheer animal aggression and desire for violence that existed within him, and all Kindred. Except, only a draugr was so consumed with a need to destroy, and even then, draugr were mindless, stupid animals. Jack was unleashing the worst his Beast had to offer, and one of the most powerful creatures Damien had ever seen, the gargoyle Horror, was getting destroyed by it.

It was a strange sight, to see the small boy physically punch something with enough force to break steel. He didn't have the mass to anchor the force into the ground, and it launched him back, or in this case, down. Down gave the kid a better anchor, and the driving upward force the blood-coated man sank into the gargoyle's chest was so strong, it fell backward again, landing with a resounding crash. There was a dent in its chest.

And Jack, wearing his crimson armor, laughed the entire time.

Damien forced his eyes back to the hunters. Jack was busy with the gargoyle, Triss was wrecked, Clara was beyond wrecked, and Othello was out of commission. If the branch that skewered him had been any bigger, Damien would have feared for his second life. A small stroke of luck that it wasn't. A huge stroke of misfortune, that Damien was now on his own, and without his sword.

Elen drew symbols in the air with her knife, and the symbols stuck. As if she was cutting into the fabric of reality itself and making it bleed, her glowing red knife left burning blood-red lines in the night air. They burned, but not with fire. They burned the way flesh did, when it was sick and inflamed, when it was infected, or when it'd had time to fight against the damage of a wound. A dull, pulsing red that had no business glowing in the dark, but it did.

Angela came in close to Jeremiah, and hugged an arm around the man's waist. She kissed the man's cheek, like a daughter might a father, and looked down at the book in the old man's hands as he opened it once again. Pain. Sadness. Worry. The host of emotions the old man carried, and shared with the woman next to him, were immense and uncountable. The trials those two must have faced to look at each other that way, was almost enough for Damien to sympathize for them. They were friends, together until the end.

Damien did not like humanizing them, but there it was. Next to Jack, or the thing currently controlling Jack, Jeremiah and Angela looked like reasonable people, driven and determined. Only Elen continued to seem the monster.

The crows died by the hundreds. When one hunter stopped to reload, another started shooting, a seamless and unending stream of destruction. They had the magazines of their fallen hunters, and a small hole to cover. There was no getting in there.

The black powder seemed to block incoming matter high and low, which meant that now that the line was broken, he could get in from above where he'd broken it, from high above if necessary. The crows were figuring that out as well, and slowly expanding the height of their incoming swarm as they learned where the hole was. Some still hit the invisible barrier, and when a bird flies into essentially unbreakable glass at high speeds, it's a death sentence. But the crows couldn't be slow either, not with the four hunters unloading bullet after bullet, and waves of flame.

Damien looked up and down the invisible hole through the barrier, and anchored his weight onto the balls of his feet and his fingertips. The crows were showing him the path, all he had to do was jump with them, or over them. He could jump pretty damn high, ten, twenty, maybe thirty feet high if he had the time to prepare his vitae. And he did have that time, the crows were providing it, them and the demon curse who was simultaneously controlling them, while fighting a titan.

A quick glance down, a check of his pistol, the magazine, the safety, and he was off. He put every bit of strength into the jump, poured vitae into his legs until he felt his hunger rise, and he did the same for his Cloak, masking himself as best he could. This was what Daniel had been trying to teach him, multitasking, how to use Obfuscate while going on the offensive in combination with Celerity. A juggling act, and a demanding one, like juggling cement blocks.

He flew through the air, pulled his legs and arms in, and sailed between the walls of the invisible barrier. Impressively, he'd managed to get above the crows, too. Not so impressively, was how his high jump meant he had a hell of a drop to make. And, most unfortunately, it became obvious as he went through the barrier and into clearing, that the hunters had set up a trap.

He fell not too far from where the four hunters stood within the newer, smaller amber circle. It was wide enough for the seven of them to stand and move comfortably around some big stones, each a couple feet high, but not so large that it included the sacrificial trees of the clearing, or the stone altar that stood halfway between the trees and the clearing's center. Elen continued to write strange symbols into the air, and Jeremiah continued to read from his book. Engrossed as they were, Damien could have probably run up to them and started shooting, and they wouldn't have stopped what they were doing. Angela, on the other hand, lifted her head, and looked toward him. Not directly at him, but toward him and where he landed. It seemed his Cloak had not been perfect.

Strange movement drew his eyes, and Damien, crouched low in the shallow grass, looked to the nearest tree, one of the trees with a sacrifice crucified upon its thick, twisted trunk of black bark. The body, naked and eviscerated, with three nails jammed through its limbs, looked at him. Cold, empty eyes looked at him, directly at him, and with slow, twitching movements, the corpse opened its mouth.

"There," one of the corpses said.

Another raised its head, her head, and looked at him. "There."

“There.”

“There.”

“There!”

The voices of the dead. The voices of cracked, dry throats, and withered tongues. The voices of bags of skin, with nothing inside them but drying organs. Raspy, harsh, and louder than they should have been. Like, screaming banshees.

Angela wasn't looking at him, but near him, and through him. She was looking at where the faces were looking, and doing some quick and poor triangulation. Poor triangulation was enough, when she pulled out a shotgun, a sawed-off shotgun, and started firing in his general direction.

He dove to the side and around one of the trees, but not before one of the hunters near Angela unloaded a couple dozen bullets in his direction as well. While Angela missed, the other hunter managed to clip his leg, and he spun as he fell down. Pain, a mountain of screaming pain brought his Cloak to a quick end, and Damien yelled between clenched teeth as he slid behind the tree. Two bullets had caught his shin and calf, and he could see bits of bone through his pant leg.

Concentrate. Fucking concentrate! You need to move. Be faster. Ignore the wound. Think!

He scanned the area around him, and ducked close to the tree as a swarm of bullets started to rip into it. Worse was the shotgun. Click, click, boom. It didn't damage the tree as much as a penetrating bullet, but it damaged a square foot of area, instead of a single spot. If Damien made one misstep, he'd take dozens of pellets to the body, and that was infinitely worse than a few bullets from a rifle cutting clean through him. He edged his head out from behind cover, only to have bullets tear through wood and bark near his eye.

Three hunters remained to cover the hole in the barrier, and they tore through the hundreds of crows, until the birds' corpses decorated the black and bloodied earth like a garden of death. One hunter plus one Angela kept their guns pointed at him, and they were more than enough to keep him stuck behind the tree.

Except, if he was behind the tree, and the group of hunters were inside their small circle in the center of the clearing, that meant he could approach the outer line of black soot without exposing himself too much. It was a fat tree, the one he was hiding behind, big enough for a corpse to be crucified to it; damn corpse wouldn't shut up, yelling 'here here' over and over. But, if he backed away from it, and kept its thick trunk between him and the hunters, he could break the magic black line yet again. To what purpose, though. To get back outside the circle and render his efforts pointless?

Movement rustled some bushes, and he snapped his head back to look into the darkness, beyond the black line, and out into the forest. Jack? No, Jack was still creating a ruckus, butting heads with the juggernaut. Clara, Triss, Othello? He doubted one minute was enough for any of them to recover. Aaron or Jennifer? Jennifer was guarding her hunter prisoners, and wouldn't disobey the cursed Jack. Maybe Aaron, but Damien doubted it. The man was logical, and didn't let whims of emotion dictate actions. Aaron had made a tactical decision and would stick to it. Fiona? Athalia? They were supposed to help, and he desperately needed it, but—

Harcourt stuck his head out from behind a tree. He must have snuck away from the destruction, and now stood behind and between the many standing trees near the invisible barrier. Maybe ninety degrees of the huge barrier was now between Harcourt and Jack. He must have been sneaking along through the dark and chaos for some time, and he was better at it than Damien would have assumed, for him to not notice the hunter.

The hunter met Damien's eyes, and showed his pistol. The pistol drew Damien's attention for only a moment. It was the hunter's eyes that struck Damien still with surprise. He recognized those eyes, he'd seen them in others, others who'd been wronged, who knew people who'd been wronged, and wanted a chance at revenge.

Elen had killed his friends. The people he'd trusted had killed his friends. Fellow humans, who'd fought beside him to kill the monsters of the night, had killed his friends, and left him alone in a den of monsters. The man was probably angry now, angry down to his soul, and hurting for a chance at payback.

Damien dragged himself toward the man, doing his best to keep the tree between him and the hunters in their circle. They could step out of it anytime they wanted, and pour bullets into him, if they realized what he was doing. Considering things could leave the circle without issue, a spray of bullets could get Harcourt killed as well if he came into the clearing through the original break Damien had made. Right now, Damien needed an ally, and that meant he needed to make a new hole in the wall.

He cloaked himself as best he could, ignored the pain in his leg, and approached Harcourt. Once he was close, Harcourt could see him; a downward flick of the hunter's eyes, spotting Damien along the grass well before he should have proved that. Whether the man was trained to notice disturbances in the ground, or his tattoos and bracelets and whatnot allowed him to see Damien earlier than he should have been able to, Damien didn't know. Maybe he could ask him when this was all over, assuming they lived.

Damien kicked out the black soot, and Harcourt came into the circle, quiet and slow. Where Damien had seen a goofy expression before, now he found only hardness. He'd be able to use this man, rely on him, and make an attempt for Jeremiah. Or Elen. Or Angela. Any of them. Better to not be picky at this rate. They were on their last legs.

“This is for Carver, you fucking assholes!” Angry as the man was, and skilled as he was, he was not professional; professionally trained, but not professionally behaved. He stuck his head out from behind the tree Damien had been using, and began to unleash rage as bullets aimed for his fellow hunters.

A gunfight in the darkness was difficult. No one had night vision, save for what the paranormals managed naturally, but the hunters had flashlights. All Damien had was a phone he could use for light, and he'd turned that off not long after entering the nightmare. Harcourt had a light under his pistol though, and he used it, getting down onto a knee and aiming it at the hunters as he fired at them. He had better form than Damien did.

But he didn't have a vampire's reflexes. Damien grabbed his shoulder, and yanked him back behind the tree after he shot thrice. Bullets shredded the side of the tree Harcourt was behind, and the man cursed as he pressed his back to the wood. Lights shined along the grass on either side of them, like prison spotlights.

“Thanks. Fuck me, can't line up a shot in the dark. When I try and aim at them, I get light in the eyes.”

Damien nodded. “Yes, but the hunters are exposed, and occupied with the crows.”

“Not completely exposed. They've got a couple rocks to duck behind.”

True, they did, but not the rock with the slab of skin on it, the largest in the clearing.

The altar. If assaulting the hunters would be too difficult now that Damien was injured, without his sword, and running low on bullets, then maybe he should change his target. Adjust tactics, change the goal, adapt to the situation.

“Brace, what do you know about that slab of skin on the altar.”

“Fuck me, I don’t know shit.”

“It has to do with Sándor.”

“The monster? Then I guess it’s probably how Elen’s got him under her spell. She had to carve symbols into his back regularly, you know? Like every few months.”

“Any idea where the skin came from? Whose it is?”

The man shrugged. The motion must have brushed outside the cover of the tree, as a few bullets shredded past the bark and skimmed along the skin of his arm. “Fuck. Uh, if I had to guess, it’s probably ... his?”

Sándor’s skin. The Begotten merged with their Horrors in the nightmare, so how would one get his skin into the nightmare? Considering Elen seemed to be a master of flesh, she likely removed it from Sándor outside the nightmare, in her flesh chamber, and brought it into the nightmare, all as part of her ritual to control the man and his connection to the Horror. Twisted and sick. And impressive. Damien doubted there were many witches or shamans in the world who knew such a spell, let alone had managed to perform it.

“If I were in good condition, I’d assault the hunters directly,” Damien said. “But—”

“They’re not hunters.”

“I—alright, the ... the...”

“Traitors.”

Damien smiled. “Alright. The traitors have those ... corpses, on the trees, to guide their fire to me. I need a distraction, and a powerful one, if I’m to reach the altar.” He gestured down to his damaged leg. “And I’m afraid I won’t be as fast as I’d like to be.” The blasted leg was refusing to heal, and he knew why. Such constant use of his Obfuscate and Celerity left him drained, and running on fumes. He didn’t have time for this.

Part of him was tempted to drain the hunter in front of him. He didn’t need to kill Harcourt, but a stomach full of the man’s blood would go a long way to helping Damien out. But, no, the Kiss took a few moments, and it didn’t heal instantly. The man was more useful to him conscious and armed.

“So, I need to keep them occupied.”

“Yes, and—” A noise had Damien turning around, ready to shoot or tear open whatever was trying to sneak up behind him. Relief washed over him, as he looked down, and smiled at the two crows hopping along the grass. “Mulder. Scully. You two are far too smart for your own good.”

“The fuck?”

“Jack’s pet crows.”

“He’s got a million pet crows!”

“These two are special.” Damien nodded toward the hole in the barrier they came through, the second hole Damien had made, and gestured to it with his free hand. “If you can summon what remains of your army to distract the hunters, I’d—”

And they left. They didn’t fly, probably putting two and two together that flying in this environment was a great way to invite a hailstorm of bullets. They hopped out of the break in the line Damien had made, cawed a few times, and ... and came back. They stayed low to the ground until their breast feathers pressed to the grass, and lower, like nesting chickens. And they started to walk outward, each bird taking one half of the line, and dusting it apart as the waddled.

In the darkness, clouds above combined by a canopy of horrible branches, the birds were surrounded in nigh perfect shadow. And they were crows. They were black from beak to tail feathers, and from eye to claw. They were twenty feet away and Damien struggled to see them.

“Smart birds,” Harcourt whispered.

“Indeed.” They didn’t have long to wait, but it didn’t take long. The two crows went slowly, but slowly was quick enough to open the hole from two feet, to four, to six, to eight, to ten feet wide in short order. And once the hole in the barrier was spread wide, movement in the branches above signaled the invasion.

He’d underestimated Jack. As if the scene in the hospital, a display straight out of Hell, hadn’t been enough to convince Damien that the curse possessing the boy was something absurd. As if seeing it summon a legion to lead their assault on the hunters’ strange room of flesh hadn’t been enough. As if watching the boy fight the gargoyle, a monster proving to be a titan of durability and strength, straight on hadn’t been enough. As if learning that the boy was simultaneously guiding his swarm of crows, while fighting the giant monster hadn’t been enough, now he could see that Jack had continued to summon yet even more crows than Damien had known about.

It’d gone past absurd, and into the surreal, that the curse could do this much. These hunters, or at least Jeremiah and his two female companions, had enough tools and skills at their disposal, that they could have defeated any nest of vampires in a city with enough time and patience. Elders would have perished to this ridiculous assortment of enchantments, rituals, and strange magics they had acquired and mastered. The professional military training of the hunters, the weapons, and the sheer drive of Jeremiah, would have bested all but perhaps the Prince or Jacob. The hunters deserved to win this fight, and to succeed on this hunt for Azamel. The only reason they wouldn't, was Jack, and the curse.

Jack had said there'd been a memory, something carried over from his curse, that showed a man of the cloth, a Kindred of the Lancea et Sanctum, sealing the curse inside the original carrier Susanna. That was something he'd have to look into harder, because the cruel reality that the curse was strong enough to do whatever the fuck it wanted to anyone, including the Prince, or the sheriff, or Jacob, was quickly sinking in. For now, it was helping them. Who knew what it'd want to do tomorrow night.

Damien checked the slide on his pistol, and nodded to Harcourt. "More crows will be joining us."

"More!?" the man said.

Damien nodded again, and ran.

"Fuuuuuuuck!" Harcourt stuck out from behind the tree, this time from the other side, and started shooting. When he did, he unleashed the swarm.

Damien didn't look back. He couldn't. Every ounce of effort, energy, vitae, and concentration was in this sprint. He could feel his punctured leg damage itself further with the harsh impact of his shoes against the dirt. He could feel his Cloak of Night envelop him. He could hear the voices of the corpses as they shouted in his direction, despite the Cloak. He could hear the crows erupt, a cawing horde that launched from their branches in such numbers, it drowned out the sound of Jack and his brawl with the gargoyles.

He felt vitae course through his limbs as his Kindred half used Celerity, breaching through normal physics and using the almost magical properties of Kindred blood to push him past speeds he shouldn't have been able to hit. But even so, the hunters began to shoot at him, two of them. The one with the flamethrower turned their attention, but not to him, thank Longinus. Fire poured toward Harcourt, and higher, up into the sky to rain down the liquid flame upon the black, feathered locusts that entered the clearing.

Scully and Mulder must have continued clearing away the magical black powder, because the width of the swarm grew, until Damien could not resist peeking over his shoulder. It was a black cloud, blurring with the darkness of the night.

Damien forced his eyes back onto the ground ahead of him. Without his own light source, the darkness was enough for Kindred eyes to struggle to find footing, and he could not stop. Only the wild lights of the hunters scanning for him, and the wilder flames filling the air, provided light for him to use, and they tricked his eyes with fast shadows, as much as illuminated his path. As hunters unleashed bullets toward Harcourt, and bullets toward the two streams of crows flowing into their clearing, two continued to shoot at Damien. Celerity would not have been enough to avoid their gunfire, slowed as he was by his injury. And, the hunters, at least these four and Angela, were good shots. They kept their lights toward him, and every time one foot landed on the grass, they unleashed a spray of bullets. Only the chaos of the crows made his plan work.

If he ran at them, he'd be riddled with bullets. If he paused to try and shoot back at them, he'd likely be shot as well. All these actions that required him to ground his weight and change momentum weren't viable, with his leg threatening to cease functioning. But they weren't his goal. As long as he ran the perimeter of the clearing, staying far away from the hunters within its center, they wouldn't be able to get a good shot at him, and he'd be able to approach his true target.

The largest rock in the clearing was the fat one, easily five feet wide, and slanted, providing an inward-facing slope where Elen had placed the large flap of skin. The new circle they'd drawn in amber, to protect themselves from supernatural forces and bodies, hadn't been large enough to include it. While the hunters had a decent enough circle to move around in, maybe twenty feet across, with several large rocks within to use as cover, the enormous one that had to be an altar, was left beyond its embrace. Perhaps it was because it didn't sit directly between all the trees with corpses attached to them. It became obvious now, as he circled them as fast as he could, that the seven remaining hunters had drawn their circle where they did, because it was directly between all the trees used as crucifixes. Whatever they were doing, they were going to be in the center of it.

It was beyond frustrating. The hunters were mostly out in the open, and if given a moment, Damien would have been able to find a vantage point, and simply shoot them from a distance. But the barrier, the gargoyle, the rushed circumstance, the corpses announcing his position, it made everything a panicked mess of unknowns. All he could do with what he had left, was this.

He ran the perimeter harder, hard enough he felt the torn flesh of his leg rip under the flexing muscles. For all their tools, for all their skill, the humans were human. His body was damaged, his vitae was running out, but he was still faster than they were, and he still managed to pull up at least some degree of a Cloak. He was a blur for them, nothing more than a flickering shadow in the darkness that they were trying to catch with their flashlights. Trying, and failing.

He slid hard, good leg out in front of him, body twisted to face the hunters, and left hand down to catch his weight as he came to a hard stop. It gave his position away, and invited a hail of bullets, but they turned into sparks of collision as he put the grand altar rock between him and them.

He didn't stop for long. The crows above had managed to fully enter the clearing, so a tornado of feathers circled everything within, but they did not cross the amber line. Could they not? They were influenced by supernatural means, so, maybe they couldn't, or maybe they couldn't easily. They were trying, but as they swam down upon the hunters, they were forced to pull away, or pushed away, by invisible waves.

The fire raged. The hunter with the flamethrower didn't care that wood and grass burned, and they unleashed the stream into the air without limit. Birds caught on fire, and soon their swirling mass became a mix of black feathers and red flames. The smell of burning flesh and cooking meat filled the air, and Damien grimaced as he ducked down, avoiding bullets that skimmed along his protecting rock altar, while burning wings flew overhead. The grass, the forest, it resisted the flame, as if it didn't belong. It didn't. Would the nightmare chamber heal, once the chaos was done? Maybe it would, but for the moment, the fire was winning that battle, and the birds were only making it worse.

A loud crash summoned his gaze. Behind him, Jack continued his fight with the nightmare's owner. It looked silly when only glanced at for a second, a tiny boy fighting a colossus, but Damien spared an extra second to watch longer, and the cruel, absurd, and visceral reality sank it, of Jack's disturbing display of power. The gargoyle had slammed Jack into the invisible barrier again, and was punching him over and over, one hand braced against the barrier, another against the ground, while it used two of its enormous fists to punch the boy like a furious bread maker.

Jack shrugged the blows off after taking five of them, and met one of the punches with his own. Small as he was, his punches were to the gargoyle as a framing hammer would be to human flesh, and again Damien could hear an audible snap as something inside the titan cracked. The following roar was deafening, but quieter than Damien had predicted. His hearing was starting to suffer.

The cursed boy looked over his shoulder to the clearing, and noticed Damien's position. "Damien! Do it!"

"Fucking touch that," one of the hunters said as they reloaded their magazine, "and I'll fill you with so much lead, you'll—" And down they went, the woman letting out a screech as she fell onto her stomach.

"Fuck you, bitch!" Harcourt's voice, followed by more gunfire, his own, and the return fire of the hunters.

Damien crouched low, and peeked around the altar. The woman was getting back up, but she was groaning and fighting against pain. No doubt she had a bulletproof vest under her clothes, otherwise she'd be screaming in pain, or dead. But she struggled to her hands and knees, still alive, and still with one hand on her rifle.

But it was a few seconds of less bullets firing at Damien, and that was enough for him to jump up onto the altar. It was a large stone, very large, and the slope the skin tapestry was laid upon was on the other side, pointed toward the center of the clearing. It was too wide, too tall, too fat for him to simply reach around and grab the ritual item. Perhaps, if he hadn't been injured, he could dash around it, or if he had the vitae, or if the hunters didn't have their strange tools, or if the corpses upon the trees weren't twisting their heads to stare directly at him, he could have snuck around it. Unfortunately, all those things were happening, and screwing this up wasn't an option.

The skin flap was large, and this close, it was much easier to tell what skin it was. It was the skin of someone's back, a person's back. From the neck to the tail bone, with some of the waist, and a bit of where the arm and shoulder met, all of the skin had been surgically removed from someone, and tied down. Human skin was far easier to tear than most animal skin, and yet Elen had managed to remove it all from Sándor, he presumed, and spread it with tiny pegs, like she was tanning leather or making a drum. It was tight to the rock, to the point Damien could see the bumps and grooves of the mineral underneath the skin.

The symbols carved into the skin had a subtle glow to them, the color of blood, same as Elen's knife. He recognized them, or at least the style they were written in, the blatant occult symbols that he'd seen used by Elen at the sacrifice sites. Why she didn't do those sacrifices here, or in her flesh chamber, he didn't know. Perhaps the haruspex had to be done in the location where the information needed to be divined. Or maybe—maybe he didn't have time to be wondering.

Upon the altar, he reached down, set his fingers into the spread skin, and ripped it apart.

The sensation of his fingers digging into the skin was met with the sensation of bullets hitting his chest. Whichever hunter it was, he didn't know. The one on the ground was still getting up, and the one with the flamethrower was doing their best to kill the crows; more than that, he now realized as metal tore through his chest. They were spreading the fire preemptively, creating walls of it in an attempt to stop Damien from getting in close, and any future Kindred attempts.

It was also sealing them in a ring of flame. Humans could run through fire, far more easily than a vampire, but it wouldn't be easy. They'd get burned. Unless, they were bunkering down even harder?

He couldn't finish the thought. The thunk and thud of bullets hitting things inside him announced he'd been caught, and as he fell back, he stared up at the swarming birds, many burning and dropping black, flaming feathers around him. There was a peaceful moment, a single second as he fell through the few feet of air before hitting the grass waiting for him, where he glimpsed the night sky above. There was no canopy in the clearing, and through the swirling mass of black feathers and red flame, through the clouds above, he could see the stars.

The silence that followed, as he landed in the grass, was beautiful. The gargoyle stopped roaring and shrieking its alien sounds. Jack stopped his battle cries and taunts. The hunters stopped firing their weapons, Harcourt included. Even the crows, many dying horrible deaths, were shocked to silence, as a great, invisible wave of release poured out through them all.

Damien had broken something. Tearing the skin apart had broken something, or undone something, or ended, or freed something. They couldn't see it, or hear it, but they all felt it, like a vibration in the universe that had exploded outward, without making any vibrations at all. Whatever ritual had been done upon the disgusting object, had been undone.

Damien tilted his head back, and looked out toward the invisible barrier. On his back with his head tilted, everything was upside down, but it was clear to see that Jack was standing by the invisible barrier, looking his way. So too was the enormous monster, the titan, the Horror. There were obvious dents in the gargoyle's body, places where Jack had broken bones; not that that seemed to matter to the creature. Wherever Jack had damaged it, its body had put itself back together well enough to keep fighting. Except, now it no longer fought. It simply stood there, staring at Damien, and the altar he lay by, its great width between him and the hunters.

The creature was the first to break the silence. It started, by slamming the whole of its weight into the invisible barrier, shoulder first. Again, and again, and again, until the entirety of the nightmare was trembling under the power of its unknowable rage.

---

~~Antoinette~~

“You’ve ... taken care of him, at least,” Azamel said, frowning as Mark pushed her near the open doorway of the cell, but no further.

Sándor knelt as he had for some time now, arms held out to the sides by chains. His head dangled, but his naked body showed no signs of deterioration; she had made sure the thralls who cleaned him checked to see if he started to suffer biologically. He did not. Begotten, or at least this particular Begotten, were a resilient breed, compared to most living creatures.

The IV in his arm had been changed recently, as had the bucket kept between his legs. The air vents in this particular part of the tower were extremely limited in size, but well powered, enough to keep the air from growing stale or grotesque with the smell of bodily waste. The man’s dark hair had begun to grow, as did his beard, hiding what had once been the pleasing face of an attractive man in his twenties or thirties, fit and lean, and perhaps Russian, or Eastern European.

“You may examine him, if you wish,” she said.

The two monsters looked to each other, to her, and then the many symbols that had been etched into the floor of her prison.

“I can feel from here,” the old woman said, “that this room is ... cut off. How did you manage that?”

“You know very well I will divulge no such information, Azamel.” Antoinette almost rolled her eyes, but did not. It would not serve her to make an enemy of the frustrating woman, though she would not part with her secrets. Her experiments into penetrating the Gauntlet had taught her methods of countering her own efforts; lessons learned from failures. It had taken many decades to learn that she could seal a room so that those within would not be able to reach out from the physical realm, and into whatever realms awaited beyond. Or rather, she had concluded that she could seal a room off from the Shadow realm, and the Begotten had been a test to see if it would also seal creatures off from other realms.

Sándor was the second creature she had placed into the room's confines, to learn if its walls and symbols could prevent a prisoner from 'reaching' out from the physical world. The first had been a necklace, obsessively haunted by a spirit. The experiment had worked, cutting the spirit off from the Shadow realm, leaving them without a way home. In the end, she had let the spirit go free.

"Well, either way, I am not stepping foot into that room." She shook her head slowly, frowning as she glared at the chains holding the man. "Were the chains necessary?"

"I do not take unnecessary risks."

"Uh huh." The old monster rolled her eyes, and motioned toward the prisoner. "He's separated from his Horror."

"Separated?"

"The other half of ourselves exists within the dream, vampire. And it's still there."

"It's not with you?"

"My other half is with me, and within the dream."

Understanding such a paradoxical statement was difficult. If Azamel's Horror, the monster of the nightmare, was in the dream realm, and yet with her at the same time, how did they interact? Did they overlap each other? Often, she thought of the Shadow realm as the second side of a coin, but even that comparison invited the mental separation of the two realms. It was more accurate to consider them as existing within the same space, and under the same frequency, but offset. And if the physical and spirit world existed in the same place, with frequencies offset from each other, there was no reason other realms could not do the same.

“I have summoned Daniel,” Antoinette said. “He will accompany us into your ... nightmare realm.”

“Of course.”

“And I would ... request,” —the word tasted bitter—“that we leave as soon as possible.”

“Yes, I’m sure you do.”

Antoinette could not hold back a small snarl. “My love’s life is in danger.”

“Yes, it is. Though, considering the strength of the curse, I doubt the danger is great.”

“And this hope you have, that Jack or his companions will free Sándor of the spell that binds him, is a random hope. A whim.”

The old woman shrugged, and so too did Mark, as if to mirror his boss’s demeanor. A yes-man, Antoinette was sure.

“Yes, it is.”

Antoinette stepped in front of Azamel, putting herself inches from the open door of her cell, and blocking Azamel’s view of the incapacitated Begotten.

“Jack fights a man you brought to my city, that hunts your head, and here you stand ... sit, defying me.”

Mark frowned but stepped back a little, taking Azamel back a foot with him. Whatever bravery the man had, she had seen none of it. Every pore in her undead body told her Mark was a disgusting creature, not to be trusted; not for any traitorous intent, but rather, something about him told her Beast that the monster before her was inherently vile. Never trust a scorpion, who wishes to cross the river.

“Threaten me all you like, vampire, my offer stands. We wait here to see if Sándor is freed by your boy toy Jack.”

Grinding her teeth, Antoinette looked past Azamel as she heard the quiet clop clop of a man’s shoes on her marble floors. Daniel stepped into the hallway, stone expression locked onto Mark and the monster in the wheelchair.

“Why do you believe Sándor will be freed by Jack tonight? Much of this madness revolves around that assumption.”

Azamel looked over her shoulder as Daniel joined them, and annoyance crept into her cracked, hanging skin. “Jeremiah will go to ground. Jack has attempted on an assault on him once before, and the attack took Jack into my kin’s nightmare. I know Jeremiah has been consorting with this shaman, Elen, and I ... know more, about Jeremiah’s defenses, than he realizes.” The old woman looked up over her shoulder again, this time at her escort Mark.

“You have managed to penetrate the man’s defenses?” Rage once again ran through Antoinette’s limbs, until her fists trembled at her sides. “How long have you been playing this game with Jeremiah, Azamel? How long have you been able to attack him on his ground, and yet, you invite his pursuit, in hopes of obtaining this ‘inheritance’ you so desperately want?”

The old woman scoffed, coughed, and shrugged again. “Jeremiah and I have jostled with each other for a long, long time. We’ve been able to attack each other and go for the kill for a long, long time as well. Jeremiah has been trying to find a way to do so without getting himself killed in the process. I’ve been trying to find a way to kill him in such a way that the battle will be legendary, in the literal sense, made into legend, never to be forgotten.” She clenched and unclenched her hands on the arms of her wheelchair, and Antoinette almost winced at the cracking sounds the frail creature’s hands made. “But as I said, time has caught up with me, and now I ... do what I can, for my fellow Begotten.”

Antoinette stepped away and began to pace, slipping her hands into the small of her back as she looked down, frowning. With Daniel at her side, she was more than confident that if the old woman presented her with an opportunity to attack Jeremiah, now that the hunter was distracted with Jack, she could deal with him. She and Daniel could kill him, Angela, and every human the man kept at his side. No matter the tools he had available, there was little the hunter could do if she caught him unawares.

“Why do you devote yourself to a stranger?” Antoinette said. “You do not know this man.”

“I know he’s a slave, and that he’s kin.”

“Is that all?”

“Do I need another reason?”

Antoinette paused. Yes, she needed another reason. People did not simply risk their lives for strangers, even those of the same kind. Vampires certainly did not. Then again, Azamel had said that she did not consider Kindred to be the same sort of monster as her fellow creatures of nightmares. Vampires often avoided each other, as if driven by instinct to be solitary, and to fight each other for territory and food. Were nightmare monsters creatures that actively sought others of their kind? Werewolves generally found themselves in packs, after all.

“A leech would never understand,” the old hag said with a small, dismissing wave, confirming Antoinette’s suspicions to some extent. “You might be satisfied, hiding in the millions of humans walking around, a wolf among sheep, but we Begotten are ... primordial, Kindred. We are ancient, and what defines us, separates us from the world.” Leaning toward her, Azamel licked her teeth loudly, twice, before squinting a single eye at Antoinette. “How much do you know about Athalia?”

Athalia. Antoinette knew little of the woman, honestly, except that she had once lived in Dolareido, left, and returned with Azamel a year ago. Though perhaps, the trouble the woman suffered, the curse of her existence, were problems Daniel knew of. She looked to her sheriff, and waited.

“I know she’s ... what you monsters apparently call Eshmaki, a monster of darkness. I also know that she hungers for ... ruin,” he said.

Antoinette raised a brow as she looked at her old friend. Ruin? He had never gone into depth about his conversations with the woman, leaving Antoinette to assume the woman was benign. This was the first hint that, perhaps, her sheriff had reason to consider Athalia a threat to Dolareido.

“Elaborate,” Antoinette said. It was not a request.

Daniel adjusted his glasses, and his face set in stone all the more, as if preparing to hold his tongue. She knew the man had a strange affection for Athalia, but never to such an extent that he might defy her. Would he? There was a moment’s hesitation, several seconds of deathly silence, as the sheriff met her eyes, and considered.

“What he means,” Azamel said, sparing the man, “is that Athalia needs to destroy the safety others feel, in order to feed. We Begotten feed on fear, as we are creatures of the nightmare, as you know. How we create that fear, and in what form we seek that fear, is different for each hunger a Begotten may be bestowed, for all time. Fiona, bless her young heart and old soul, feeds on the fear people feel when they are being pursued or punished for their transgressions. Her Horror, a strange, ancient Horror, lost to the realm of nightmares, unfettered and wandering the land of our Mother, emerged from the darkness to enter such a lovely girl. It hungers for the fear of the guilty. An easy craving to satisfy, as long as she isn't too gluttonous.

“Athalia hungers for the fear people feel when their sense of safety is ruined, obliterated, ravaged. When the walls you cherish and barricades you defend no longer provide you with a feeling of security, as they become destroyed, compromised, or left in shambles by her, she feeds upon the fear that follows.” Glaring, Azamel gestured for Mark to turn her chair, and he did, pointing the old woman directly at Antoinette. “Imagine, vampire, how difficult it is for a woman such as her, to have a life. Every moment of her existence, she struggles with a need to destroy the safety of others, to leave them feeling vulnerable. While a leech such as yourself must feed on the blood of the living, it is an enjoyable act, and sluts like yourself have built an entire city on its pleasures. You're a leech which people line up to let bite them. But no one enjoys feeling the security of their job, their home, or their lives, being shattered.”

Antoinette folded her arms, and tapped fingers along her bicep. It was a sad tale, true, and if Athalia had come to her seeking her help, Antoinette would have listened to her plight.

Alas, be truthful with yourself, Annie. You would have listened to her, but you would not have helped her, beyond insuring the Kindred of the city knew to give her a wide berth. Dolareido is your concern, as are the Kindred within it. Begotten, Uratha, and other strange creatures, are unknowns, and not a part of your plan for a utopia.

“You vampires,” Azamel continued, “can frenzy, correct? You can lose control, and give into the Beast.” Antoinette nodded, and glanced to her sheriff. His gaze remained steady, while hers did not, balancing annoyance with Azamel, and annoyance with Daniel for his hesitation seconds earlier. “Your Beast is contained. It’s inside you, a part of you. It is something that has latched onto your soul, and dragged it down into the muck. If it wants to act out, it has to go through you.” Chuckling, the old woman lifted a hand and flicked it back at Mark, hitting the man’s stomach playfully. “There’s a reason vampires are considered damned, Prince. If ever a creature was close to Hell, it’s the vampire. You should give more credit to the Lancea et Sanctum.”

The Voivode would not grind her teeth, or bare her fangs, or clench her fists, or give any indication this infuriating woman was, indeed, infuriating. For all Azamel’s arrogance and cliché need to tell stories, the old woman was both sharing information Antoinette ached to know, and also held the key to rescuing Jack tonight.

“The Beast is a taint upon our souls, you say.”

“Hah, yes.” Again the old woman reached for a cigarette from her breast pocket, and sighed as she found none. “I can see it, but I cannot reach it easily, locked away as it is where souls reside. For us Begotten, our Horrors are not so ... limited. Our Horrors are creatures of the Dream. Just as a human’s soul resides within a chamber within the person, a place we cannot physically enter, a place that exists within a different realm and state of being, a Begotten’s Horror resides within a chamber as well, a place sealed off from intrusion. It has devoured our human soul, vampire, replaced it, and elevated us to myth, and legend.”

“And yet,” Antoinette said, “intrusion into these nightmare chambers seems to be a common act, this past year.” She let the statement about a soul slide by, ignoring the overwhelming urge she had to pounce the old woman, and demand answers. A soul. The old woman knew much about the soul, that such a thing existed, and apparently, of a chamber it resided in. Antoinette’s own studies, and the studies of the Ordo Dracul, had mostly confirmed the existence of a soul, but to define and understand it, were beyond their abilities.

The old woman coughed, and made no attempt to hide how much Antoinette's statement infuriated her. "Consider the many, many, many stories that exist in all cultures, of entering someone's mind, and finding the person's soul, or spirit, or true self. Such tales often describe the journey, or the interaction, and share of the environment. That environment, that realm, is not of the Dream, but it is where the soul resides. Sometimes the soul can leave. A human who sleeps deep, very deep, who experiences life-altering dreams, has a soul — if it is truly their soul that does this, or a projection — with a tendency to drift from the walls of its realm, and into the Dream, where it may stumble onto many things ... including us.

"And, in a similar way, our Horrors may leave their chambers while we sleep. Unlike a human, our Horrors hunger, vampire. They hunger for fear. They swim through the seas of humanity's consciousness, swim deep, and find the chambers of human souls. They leave nightmares, grand and terrifying nightmares. And like any predator, they return to places where food has been found."

"I do not—"

"The more a Begotten denies the hungers of their Horror," Azamel interrupted, "the stronger the Horror becomes, and desperate. And Athalia denied her Horror for many years, feeding it only enough to keep herself sane. She gave birth to a girl, a human girl, vampire, something you will never be able to appreciate. And for years, Athalia fought to keep her Horror under control, to keep it out of her life, only for it to feed upon her daughter once her tiny eyes closed for sleep. Nightmares, vampire, horrible nightmares, visited upon a small girl, again and again and again. Imagine the guilt, leech, imagine the pain Athalia felt, wanting nothing more than to take care of her little girl, and yet every moment she spent with her, she was the greatest source of pain in the girl's life. Imagine the sorrow, at being forced to leave a daughter you love at an orphanage. Imagine the agony, at knowing your daughter's mind has been left in ruins, ruins no amount of years can repair.

“What comparison is there between vampire and monster, Prince? In what possible world, could your pathetic need to drink blood and hide from a giant ball of fire in the sky, compare to that struggle?”

The single second of chuckling Azamel had shared with Mark was long gone, and now, there sat only an old woman, a creature who had seen troubles and suffered troubles well beyond the scope of Antoinette's experience. Antoinette was, as the monster said, a vampire. Her struggles were internal, forever battling the desires of her Beast, and the weakness of her Humanity; cliché, but true. Despite the very real battle of resisting her Beast, and maintaining a balance of her human and beastly desires, it was always a battle she was able to win, and easily at that. How long had it been since she had suffered famine? Not since the early years of her arrival in the village that became Dolareido, had she been concerned with unleashing an unwanted frenzy. For a Begotten to both forever battle their hungers and their unusual needs, but to also have their soul — or rather, Horror — hunt through the minds of nearby kine, and to bestow nightmares upon them in order to feed upon their fear, she could indeed not imagine.

“I do not deny that some Begotten suffer a burden greater than ours,” Antoinette said. “And, yes, I can understand that a shared burden of such magnitude, can create powerful companions.”

“Family, vampire. We're a family. Me, Athalia, Fiona, Mark here, and even this man Sándor. Hell, even you vampires, and the wolves, are distant cousins. We don't really want you around, or at least I don't, but I'll invite you to join us for Thanksgiving, if you agree to civility.” Sighing, Azamel shook her head again, and gestured to the man chained up. “This cell blocks a person off from other realms. Why hasn’t it blocked him from the spell?”

Knowledge the old woman did not have. Finally, a dent in her relentless ego. But what little joy such an admittance brought Antoinette was short lived. She did not have the answers either.

“This room, as you said, prevents a person from reaching across realms. If Elen’s magic does no such thing, then I can only assume that the symbols I have placed upon this Wyrms’ Nest do not affect magical energies.” Magical energies did not do justice the mystery that was magic. Mages existed, of that she knew, as did several elders, but their nature, their motives, such things were as secret to her as the Ordo was to the other covenants; they and it existed, but whatever happened behind closed doors was entirely unknown.

“If he begins to speak, will you release him?”

The reality of what Antoinette had done to Sándor wormed its way into her mind. Azamel insisted that, while a vampire’s soul was tainted by the Kindred infection, becoming ‘damned’ as it were, it remained within a chamber quite connected to the human. She also insisted that the Horror, an entity that had apparently replaced, or devoured and replaced her own soul, was a creature that existed parallel with her in another realm as well. Similar to a normal soul, and yet different, as it came from a different realm, a realm her cell rendered inaccessible.

She had cut the man off from his soul. The ramifications of such an action, she could not begin to consider. Perhaps that was the true reason Azamel was desperate to have him released; though, she did not exclaim such. The mystery of the soul was ultimately a puzzle for another time.

“I will, if you take me to where you believe Jack is,” she said. Azamel nodded. A deal struck. Now, to wait, the most difficult task in the universe.

Daniel frowned at her. Frown was, perhaps, too strong a word for the look he gave her, but nonetheless, she recognized the disappointment and annoyance on his stone face. Well, she was disappointed in him, and her frown was a touch less subtle, enough that the man was the first to look away.

They did not have to wait long. How Azamel could have predicted this, Antoinette would demand to know later; there was no way, in any statistical sense, Azamel could have simply guessed correctly. But sure enough, after fifteen minutes of waiting, they felt something. She did not know what she felt, what the strange sensation was, but a fleeting breeze flowed over her. The air did not move, but it was a breeze nonetheless, or at least the feeling a breeze would give. It washed over her, and the others judging by their reactions, the feeling of something being released, tension being loosed, a wire snapping, or a window being opened. It was a tension she had not noticed before, and only now that it was gone, did she notice its absence.

The four of them looked to each other, standing in the marble hallway, before they looked to the cell and its open door. The man stirred.

Daniel drew his sword, and Mark turned around in an instant, facing Daniel, hands at his sides, ready to do something. But Azamel reached behind her, thumped the man on the hip, and rolled her wheelchair closer to the door again. She did not enter the cell.

“Sándor,” she said. “Are you awake?”

Antoinette stepped into the cell, her sheriff behind her, sword still drawn, and she peeked around at the man’s back. The large symbol was, indeed, gone. The chances it had healed in this particular moment were astronomically low. She had no choice but to accept that Azamel and Mark had spied Jeremiah’s defenses, and knew where he would go when chased by Jack, his friends, and the Strix curse.

“I ... I...” Slowly, with the obvious discomfort of someone fighting against stiff joints and borderline atrophy, the man lifted his head, and looked to Azamel. “Y-You ... you’re...”

“You know me?” Azamel frowned slightly, before Mark came up behind her and again set his hands upon the handles of her wheelchair. “I suppose you would, what with Jeremiah capturing you, and ... Yes, I am Azamel.”

Groaning quietly, Sándor twisted his head around more, taking in the sights and digesting his environment. For a moment, Antoinette expected the man to begin to panic. But no panic came. Instead, the man looked up to her over his right shoulder, Daniel from over his left, and then back to Azamel.

“I remember,” he said. “I ... remember ... everything.”

“Bien. That saves us much time.” Antoinette came around and looked down at the man. Blue eyes, with a hint of gentleness, buried under exhaustion and turmoil. She felt for the man, she did, but she cared far more for her city, and she would not take unnecessary risks. “You understand that you were captured by Jeremiah, and have been used by him and his shaman woman, as a tool?”

“Yes. Yes, I ... remember what Elen did to me.” He shivered, quite visibly, enough to rattle the chains. He had a deep voice, once he added some volume to it, enough for quiet conversation. “I remember that ... that kid, Jack. Angela, she ... she was obsessed with revenge, and ... and...” His head shot up, and he yanked on the chains around him. The sudden motion was enough for Daniel to swing his sword with a snap and place it against the monster’s throat, forcing his cessation. “They’re in my lair! I can feel them ... see them ... I”—again, his head snapped around at the room that held him—"I can see them, but I can't ... burrow ... from here. There's a ... wall. I'm blocked."

Antoinette felt a kernel of relief within. Her cell did not separate the man from his other essential half then, only limited his ability to enact his will from within her prison. Useful information. If she locked away creatures of a strange nature in the cell, she now knew there was a likely chance they would still be able to feel, sense, and perhaps communicate with supernatural means, but not leave the cell, or use abilities from the other realms within it. She could not wait to share this knowledge with Elaine.

Spare your academic obsessions for later, Antoinette. Deal with the current situation, immediately.

"You can see what your Horror is doing?" Daniel said.

"Y-Yes. That's ... we ... it's normal, for us ... monsters." After a quiet groan, the man lowered his head, and started fighting for air. He was far more exhausted than he should have been.

"We merge when we are in the Dream," Azamel said. "The relationship we have with our Horror is far more complicated than you, and your soul. Sorry, tainted soul." A grin from the old woman sealed the insult, and Antoinette struggled to keep from showing an angry fang.

"What do you see?" Antoinette said, and she reached down, took the man's chin, and pointed his face up at her. There was no time for softness. Action needed to be done, now, and if she had to be stern with this broken man in order for such action to occur, then so be it.

"I ... I'm att—It's attacking ... Jeremiah. Jack's there. So is ... a werewolf woman, and some other vampires, one with ... some crazy teeth." The man shivered again, but made no effort to look away from Antoinette's eyes. He looked defeated, weary, and guilty.

“Daniel,” she said, “release him.”

“Are you sure?”

Again she met her sheriff’s gaze, and again, a momentary, quiet battle raged between them.

“Do it.” She tried to keep the ice from her words, she truly did, but the situation demanded expedience, and her growing frustration with her sheriff had stripped away the single grain of patience she had left.

After half a second of hesitation, Daniel sheathed his blade, and began undoing the shackles that bound the helpless Begotten. Antoinette removed the IV herself.

“Thank you,” Azamel said. For a moment, Antoinette thought the woman may have looked to slip some defiance or insult in her words, but she did not. Sincerity was not a tone she expected to hear from the monster, but there it was.

Once Sándor was free of his shackles, Daniel set his right hand upon the hilt of his sword behind his neck, but did not draw it a second time. His left hand slipped under the tired man’s arm, lifted him up with grace and strength, and helped him out of the room.

It was clear to Antoinette that her sheriff would respond, if Sándor acted peculiarly, once he stepped from the cell. If he attempted to run, swing a fist, or even so much as cough too loudly, the man would lose his head before he noticed Daniel was moving. And he did do something strange, enough for Daniel to draw his sword an inch from his sheath: the man gasped, and his eyes opened wide, like a man seeing daylight for the first time in years. He was no longer under the protection and limitation of her cell.

“I have to ... to get back ... to my lair.” He leaned forward, coughing, struggling to regain his sense of balance. If not for the man ready to cut off his head, he would have fallen to his knees. “Oh god, they’re ... they’re ... doing something. I don’t know what. I have to get back ... get back and stop him. Stop him, kill him. Kill him. Kill him. Kill him.”

Antoinette eased her weight onto the balls of her feet, as strength returned to the man before her. As if stepping from the cell had reattached the thread of life to him, his sense of balance returned. His eyes opened wide for another moment, before setting hard, glaring into nothing. His hands tightened into fists at his naked sides. Muscles flexed along his lean-but-muscular figure, and she could hear the clench of his jaw threatening to break his teeth.

“Sándor,” Azamel said, “are you—”

“The vampire in the coat, with a sword, he broke the ritual.”

Vampire, coat, sword. Damien, no doubt.

“You can see the contents of your lair? All of it?” Antoinette said.

“No. I can see what I can see. I can see what it can see. I can feel what it can feel. I have to get back, merge, and guide it. It’s ... it’s lost, without me. It’s just a ... just a gargoyle. I have to ... get back.” The man raised his head, as if to yell at the ceiling, but something stopped him. “I ... can’t control it. Jeremiah has driven it beyond ... my reigns. It’s starving. It’s furious. It’s...”

Every word, Antoinette wrote within her mind, each letter accompanied by a picture of the moment. Sándor’s face had looked up and into nothing again, as if he truly was somewhere else. A telepathic connection to his Horror, perhaps? Not telepathy she supposed, now that she considered the implications of that. A different connection, a special connection, if Azamel were to be believed, something as deep and mythic as the connection between a human and their soul.

“Then let’s go,” Azamel said, nodding, and gesturing to Mark with a small raise of her wrinkled hand. “All of us. I will meet Jeremiah face to face tonight. Who knows, I may well live through the experience.”

Antoinette shared another look with her sheriff. Neither of them were anxious to do something as reckless as enter another realm. Both of them, ancient and set in their ways, had both feet firmly set on the physical Earth, despite their devotion to studying the very matter of other realms. To literally enter another realm, to feel the territory of creatures outside of flesh and blood, was a dream she had long held, but had never experienced. Neither had her most trusted companion.

Was she ready, to test her second life so wholly? To fight monsters and other vampires in the streets and walls of her city was one thing. To fight trained professionals — kine, but still professionals — in a realm of dreams, a place she had never set foot, was another thing entirely. Daniel did not want to go, she could see that. It was not that he was unwilling to risk his life for her. Far from it, she knew very well the man would die for her, for duty and for friendship. But the man did not agree with who Antoinette had become as of late, someone willing to put her emotions before her logic. To enter a dream realm, a nightmare realm at that, was not a logical choice.

She had spent centuries being logical. She had long earned the right to set cold numbers aside for a night, and let her heart lead her for once. If she had to tear the entire nightmare realm apart with her bare hands to save her little Ventrue, she would.

“Very well,” Antoinette said. Rotating her shoulders for a moment, she kicked off her heels, tested the floor with her toes, and centered herself. Vitae, through her limbs. Sensations, air on the tiny hairs of her body, scents in her nostrils, tastes on her tongue, the breathing sound of the three nearby Begotten, and the quiet light of her hallway. Her senses awakened, heightened, increased in sensitivity and precision, as the Beast also awoke from its slumber.

She was ready for battle. Not since Lucas had come to her door with several dozen Kindred, armed with weapons of all sorts, and Theban sorcery besides, had she prepared herself in such a way. Tonight, she would rip the bodies of hunters apart, and see her lover returned safely; if her lover left any alive. The curse was a deadly thing, and she feared the sight she would discover, once she found him.

“How do we ... enter your lair?” Daniel said to the man.

Sándor reached out, and set his left hand to the marble wall beside him. For all his returned desire, his body was weak, quivering, and as he looked around the hallway, Antoinette could see how it was fury that kept the man on his feet. She did not blame him. To be enslaved to a spell must have been a horrible fate.

“This place, these walls ... of marble ... I can bring my lair here.”

“Can you?” Azamel said. “I would struggle to do a thing like that, Ugallu. This tower is built on a place of power.”

The two vampires did not flinch at the mention of the unknown word, Ugallu; hundreds of years of experience had long taught her the value of pretending to not realize, notice, or know something. A place of power, on the other hand, Antoinette knew well. She had chosen this location for her tower for a reason. Something deep in the Earth, somewhere buried, something that scarred the land had left its mark before her arrival to Dolareido. It created, as she found out later, a locus of a sort, a gathering of essence that spirits were drawn to. She had harnessed it, and used the way it thinned the veil between realms for her experiments. A Wyrms' Nest.

Sándor stood up straight, offered Azamel a small, perhaps unnerving, angry grin as he cracked his knuckles, and tilted his head to the side until his neck cracked as well. It echoed through her hall of stone.

“Watch me.”

Antoinette stared at the naked man’s back, waiting for a sign that this creature, this so called gargoyle, would betray them, or maybe that his words would spark a moment’s concern on Azamel’s face. But Antoinette found only surprise on the old woman’s visage. Azamel was impressed by the gargoyle, if he spoke true. That, was startling. How strong was this man?

Sándor stuck his hands out to the side, and squeezed fingers upon open palms. Without so much as a second’s buildup, the world around her began to change. She blinked several times as she slowly turned around, instinct guiding her to put her back to Daniel’s. With her to guard his back, and he hers, they were safe, or safer, from the inevitable violence to follow. Violence, and insanity.

She tried to blink away the oddness before her, the impossibility of it, but no matter how she tried, the illusion remained. Her beautiful black marble that had cost several fortunes to acquire, and use as the building blocks for her tower, were changing. In place of them, stones, old, dirty stones began to fade into existence. The subdued, consistent, unnatural yet professional quiet illumination of her LED lighting flickered in and out, while the telltale shifting movement of flame light replaced it. The walls of her hallway changed in the same manner as her floor, though they spread out further, warping, bending, struggling to fit into the new shape the monster six feet from her was bringing into her world.

“Explain,” she said, gesturing around herself.

Azamel managed a small smile, but whatever wicked, insulting intent she carried, faded away, as if she were too tired to use what vitriol she had left. “He’s opening a doorway between his lair in the Dream, and the physical world. They will overlap, or at least, a small part of each will overlap. This hallway, and ... what appears to be a hallway, of a rather old building.”

Antoinette looked to the floor, then back to Azamel, and gasped, a sound she so rarely made, she had almost forgotten what it sounded like.

Azamel was no longer Azamel. The old woman, frail, angry, bound to a wheelchair and hopelessly addicted to nicotine, no longer existed. Something had taken her place, something strange, something from fiction, something that she could not have begun to imagine actually existing.

If someone had taken Ganesha, and twisted it, tainted it, corrupted it, and given it weapons of murder, slaughter, and torture, it would look like this. An elephant head, upon the body of an overweight man with four arms, skin leathery gray to match its animal head and ivory tusks. It stood before her upon elephant feet, and from two of its human hands, one on each side, hung chains, black and sinister. One chain held a net, bloody, dripping, and the other chain, short and also dripping red, ended with a cruel hook Antoinette could only imagine being used to rip open the innards of a victim. The other two hands held scimitars, also dark, and also dripping of blood.

The net was filled with human skulls, and upon the dangling hook, a corpse was run through. Except, such things could not fit, not in this hallway that overtook her fortress and now surrounded them. As the foreign stones and strange flames upon distant walls nudged aside her marble, edging it out of existence like how vines pull old houses into the earth, Azamel’s form began to grow. No, not grow, not truly. She, he, it, had never been small at all. The titanic creature could not fit into the hallway of stone, and the hallway of stone knew that. Or perhaps, Azamel’s body knew that, and refused to grow to a size that would damage it.

But the bones in her net of death, and the hook with its corpse, gave Antoinette an idea of how big the monster would have grown, and would likely grow once given the freedom. She would tower over many of the buildings of Dolareido.

Mark, if it truly was Mark, had become something she could not have predicted, and yet predicted perfectly. Worms. Insects. A skeleton that teemed with all that crept and crawled along and within the rotting earth. The skeleton wore clothes, a cloak of sorts, obviously made of skin. There was an odor as well, the disgusting smell of rot and decay, but more. If dishonor, wretched deception, and the horrible and terrible aspects of killing and death could be giving odor, it would smell as this nightmare before her smelled. It did more than make her nose curl. It made her insides recoil in complete disgust.

Sándor became, as she knew he would, the famed gargoyle. Jack had spoken of its size, and while his words had painted Azamel as a towering behemoth, and rightly so, she was not prepared for the size of the four-winged beast. Unlike Mark, who would have fit well in a pit of the plagued dead, the gargoyle creature before her, filling the huge hallway with its size and might, looked almost majestic. It belonged on a tower, a cathedral, a castle, guarding its entrance and the souls held within. In fact, it would have looked perfectly at home in Three Kings Cemetery, or perhaps above the door of the Grand Cathedral of Dolareido.

The lights above her disappeared, leaving old, solid boards of wood. Braziers of metal, beautiful things that would have fit in her art room, teemed with the life of the flame. Her hallway of black marble was gone completely, and she and Daniel had entered the realm of nightmares. And—

Azamel screamed. The sound of blasting trumpets filled the hallway, and the two vampires jumped away from the noise. The elephant creature, still growing but blocked by the hallway's dimensions, threw out its hands and dropped its colossal weapons. They disappeared instantly, vanishing in clouds of black, as the elephant creature was buried in an amber glow. Glow turned into searing light, and the elephant screamed again, the noise so powerful, Antoinette could only assume a thousand elephants were announcing their pain and anger.

Mark threw up his ... its skeleton hands, and though it had no eyes or facial muscles to speak of, she could see shock and dismay there. This was not supposed to happen.

---

~~Jack~~

Jack smiled at his friend, and his prostrated body. Shit load of bullets just went through Damien, turning him into swiss cheese, but he was safe behind the rock. More important than safe, was he'd succeeded. The weird flap of skin was destroyed, and the effect was immediate. The big, dumb, pile of dream-essence gargoyle thing hitting him, stopped hitting him. More than that, Jack could feel the strange release of invisible tension that went out from the clearing where Damien lay. The spell was broken, fuck yeah.

It was like someone had flipped a switch in the monster's brain, and suddenly, it was capable of thinking again. Or maybe thinking was too strong a word, now that Jack watched it unload its anger upon the invisible barrier. This monster was clearly as dumb as a brick. Would Azamel's monster, a giant thing and obviously fucked up interpretation of Ganesha, be dumb like this, too, if Azamel wasn't merged with it? No idea, no idea at all, but it definitely made for an entertaining sight, watching the gargoyle realize it was free of a chain that had bound it for who knew how long. And it obviously knew who used to hold that chain.

Jack shrugged, and focused his vitae through his limbs. He still had plenty, and was confident he'd win in a fist fight against the gargoyle if it had to drag on. But now that the big threat was over, he could tone it down, and save his vitae for showing off when he killed Angela. Maybe make her rip her own guts out. That'd be cool, and satisfying as fuck to watch.

The gargoyle began to fade.

“Hey, what the fuck?” Jack turned to look at the giant creature. Yeap, it was fading away, literally at that. It stopped beating on the barrier, turned around, and took to the sky in the direction of the wicked awesome castle. Jack expected it to kick up dirt, stir up the wind, and make a lot of noise; fucker was huge and heavy, after all. But it didn't. It just took to the sky from the way it came, and vanished, fading out like a dream.

If he had to guess, that meant Sándor had come. Wow, he was sure the man would be trapped in Antoinette's cell. So, either her cell didn't work, or she'd let the man go, randomly. Someone on the outside was interfering. Azamel? Maybe. Or Athalia and Fiona? Where the fuck were those two anyhow?

Jack looked around and took stock. Clara was whole again, no more bones showing, and she wasn't twisted like a rotini noodle anymore; still down, though. Beatrice was dragging herself up to her feet, claws in a tree. Far as Jack could guess, she was just as fucked up as Clara, but unlike the werewolf, Beatrice had a mountain of hate to help fuel her. That was good. Hate was a great motivator.

Damien was down, and considering the amount of bullets he'd taken, he was probably down for the count. He'd live, but torpor would take him soon. Othello was still skewered on a branch, in the background of the whole fiasco. Jack should have gotten him a red shirt to go with his level of uselessness. And Harcourt was behind a tree, out of sight from Jack, but also out of sight from the hunters. Fucker had been useful apparently, according to Scully. Well, who woulda thought.

Now, his crows, they were the real stars of the show. Scully and Mulder were, at this very moment, clearing out the rest of the black soot. They'd taken down a quarter of the circle already, and in five more minutes, the whole damn thing would be gone.

He looked past Damien, past the altar, and into the clearing where seven hunters remained. Elen was still carving symbols into the air, and Jeremiah still had that fucking book. But, now that Sándor was gone, Angela and her four bodyguards all looked straight at Jack, and boy oh boy, the fucking joy of seeing genuine fear in their eyes. Even Angela, who was usually one hundred percent hate and anger, showed a sliver of terror, when she saw him.

Jack licked a fang, and waved.

Chapter 110

~~Beatrice~~

Heal, damn it, heal! She didn't have time for this. The climax was happening, the end point, the big, inevitable moment where shit was going to be decided. No way, no god damn motherfucking way was she going to miss it. More than not miss it, she was going to be a part of it. She was perfectly fine not being the one to defeat Angela, as long as she got to be a part of killing her.

Vitae poured through her legs, until the bones were in place, and the muscles connected enough that she could stand on them. She sank her claws into the nearest tree, and dragged herself to standing, eyes on the clearing and the apocalyptic chaos within. Holy fucking shit. Fire was everywhere, and while she could see the nightmare was fighting the flame, like wet wood might, the unending flame the hunter had spread eventually got the upper hand. The clearing was catching fire, and she couldn't tell if it'd spread beyond. If it did, well, fuck her.

The crows were on fire, too. How Jack had managed to summon so many, she was sure she'd never know, other than that the curse was something fucking nasty strong. He'd summoned more during this whole fiasco, and now those crows were circling around the hunters, like a fucking tornado. Now that Damien was down, and the gargoyle was gone, the hunters were free to focus on the birds. The rifles didn't do much, but every shot of Angela's shotgun took down half a dozen or more. It was raining feathers and bird corpses.

And Jack just watched. The kid wasn't too far from Triss, standing by a chunk of the invisible wall with arms folded across his chest, and a big grin on his face. His shirt was gone at this point, and his pants were full of tears, but still on. It was kind of badass, seeing how ripped the little twerp was in a setting and situation like this. And scary. He was enjoying this. He was enjoying watching the hunters fight off panic and a thousand crows at the same time. The fact his army was dying by the droves didn't bother him at all.

“Now what?” Jack said, loud enough they could all hear it over the dying birds and gunfire. “Your enforcer is gone, free of your spell. Most of your barrier is gone and—” the boy glanced down, laughed, and stepped forward. The barrier, or at least where it was in front of him, no longer was. Movement skittered along his feet, black shadows in the darkness. Mulder and Scully, if Triss had to guess. Smart birds, to not perch on his shoulders like usual, with all the bullets flying around. “And your barrier is gone. You think your protection circle is going to stop me?”

“Fire will,” the hunter with the flamethrower said, and predictably, unleashed a wave of flame toward Jack. Flamethrowers could shoot far, very far; Kindred were right to fear them.

The mighty Jack jumped back, and disappeared into the dark forest. Despite the sheer destruction the kid and the gargoyle had created, there was still plenty of forest. Hell, unless her eyes were deceiving her, Triss was sure some of the forest was reforming around them. The dark, twisted, fucking horrible trees were everywhere, and Jack didn't have to go far to vanish into the black.

The birds were fading away, the tornado of wings and squawks of pain dying down as Jack's army died off. But as the birds bled away, the hunter with the flamethrower let out a shrieking curse, as the fuel nozzle went dry. She turned off the ignition flame, threw the gun and pack to the ground, took one of the rifles, and readied her shot. But Jack didn't reemerge from the wood.

“Knew that was going to happen eventually.” Laughing, Jack moved through the forest. Triss couldn't see him, but his voice moved, a vague direction she could only guess was now the other side of the clearing, across from her. “So now what? This fire won’t last forever, and then I’m going to get you. Gonna getcha. Gonna fuckin getcha.”

Christ, he was a creepy bastard. It wouldn’t have been so bad if the curse had simply been vindictive, angry, vengeful, and full of wrath. This curse thing was a twisted fuck, worse than Jacob.

Triss stared through the flames at Damien. From where he’d fallen, he was mostly safe from the hunters, with that giant altar rock between him and them. He was on his back, flat to the ground, and he wasn’t moving. The fire wasn’t spreading as fast as it could have, so if the Mekhet got a little lucky, he was safe from the flames for a minute or two. And if the hunters didn’t step out of their circle to try and finish him off, he might recover enough to wake up from his torpor, and drag himself to safety. Most likely, he’d be stuck in torpor, and someone else was going to have to drag him to safety.

Fiona would. Fiona would get him to safety, take him back to the real world, and give him a drink. Where the fuck was she? Where the fuck was Athalia, too?

Triss snarled and dragged her claws down the bark of the tree. Athalia. That bitch had probably tied up Fiona somehow, and left her somewhere where she couldn’t help. Then she’d come back, and watch and wait, until she had an opportunity to save her daughter. And it wasn’t like Triss would be able to stop her, fucked up as she was. Her insides were on fire, rib bones stabbing into shit, and the cut she’d given to herself earlier was threatening to burst open. All that was background noise to how her legs were one bad step from cracking in half.

It didn’t matter. If she had to kill Athalia to reach her goal, then she would.

“Clara,” Triss said, getting down onto her knees. Ok, yeah, crawling was easier. Getting down wasn’t so easy, but once she had her weight on her knees, she breathed a sigh of relief as the pressure eased off her bones and insides. “Clara.”

The werewolf was conscious. Better than conscious, Clara looked at her as she too got onto her knees. The two of them were behind a fallen tree, so most of their bodies were hidden from the eyes of the hunters, but not hidden from the fire. The invisible wall was dying off, and as it did, the fire the hunter with the flamethrower had been spreading, spread further. Shit, maybe she was wrong about Damien, and someone had to get him, now.

“Clara, get up.”

“I ... getting...” Her snout struggled to make human sounds, eventually gave up, and forced herself to lift her head. “Fire.”

“Yeah, fire. A lot of fucking fire. Damien’s in the middle of it, and I need you to get him out. Othello too, before the fire gets them.”

“Othello?”

Triss motioned to the giant circle of destruction the kid and the gargoyle had made. On one of the branches, pretty damn high up, dangled the vampire in torpor.

“I can barely move,” Triss said, “let alone get through the fire. Get Damien and Othello to safety.”

Snarling, the werewolf shook her head and looked around. “Gargoyle. Hunters.”

“Most of the hunters are dead, remember? The gargoyle’s free of the control spell and it’s gone. And Jack ... Jack will handle the rest of them.” Much as she tried to act calm, a glance in the direction Jack had vanished was enough to get her shaking. She didn’t need Auspex to feel the fucking animal rage and hunger coming from the curse. It’d only grown worse as the night had gone on, and the aura exploded when Jack had gone full blood-armor mode. She could feel it, and she knew Clara could feel it.

“I ... should help Jack.” As if she hadn’t been injured at all, Clara hunched low behind the fallen tree, like she was prowling, and looked into the clearing. The fire raged, a strange back-and-forth between the nightmare’s desire to return to its original shape, and the sheer amount of flame. If it weren’t for the nightmare’s ... nightmarish self, the whole forest would have become a raging inferno already.

“Jack will be fine. Damien and Othello might fucking die! Help them.” She tried, oh she fucking tried, to not snarl at the damn wolf. Pissing off a giant werewolf creature was not a good idea, especially when Triss wouldn’t be able to defend herself.

She was tempted to make a comment about the werewolf’s attraction to Jack, and how it was probably clouding her vision, especially now that she was transformed and likely a hormone and rage-fueled unstoppable juggernaut. Well, not unstoppable. The fucking gargoyle saw to that, but the gargoyle was gone, and without that fucker, the hunters were outmatched, outgunned, and already defeated.

Except, they weren’t. They were obviously up to something. Jack saw it, and would pounce the moment the opportunity presented itself. But the curse didn’t give a shit about Othello, and probably didn’t give a shit about Damien either. Christ, how fucking horrible would Jack feel, if Damien died when he could have done something to help, but the curse just didn’t give a shit. Yeah, Clara had to help them.

“Fine.” With animal grace, the werewolf crouched low, got on all fours, and started to prowl along. For a moment, Triss thought she might transform into something else, like one of her more wolfy forms, but then she wouldn’t have hands. Needed hands for a rescue mission. Maybe Harcourt could help? The man was still hiding behind a tree in the clearing, and had obviously helped Damien. If—

The sky exploded in fire. Triss threw up her hands to block the light from her eyes, snarling and hissing as if she'd been hit by sunlight. Kindred eyes adapted quickly, but for a split second, she couldn't see a fucking thing around her except searing amber light. After the screaming pain in her retinas passed, she managed to lower her hand.

“What ... the fuck...”

There was Azamel! In the fucking sky, with all six of her limbs spread out. Azamel, the giant fucking elephant creature. Her, all of her, was in the mother fucking sky, and directly overhead the hunters. She was horizontal, as if lying on a surface, except hanging, and pointed down at the ground; her elephant trunk was dangling with gravity, down toward the hunters. Good fucking god, she must have been fifty feet in the air. The strange things she'd held in her four hands, last time Triss had gotten a glimpse of her, were gone.

Symbols were drawn around her, into the air by her limbs as if drawn on whatever surface she was attached to. Elen's symbols. Amber, glowing cuffs were shackled to the giant elephant creature's wrists, securing her to the night sky. If they gave, the enormous monster would have fallen and flattened the humans underneath her. The mighty Horror ... no, not Horror. That was Azamel. Triss could feel it. This wasn't the shadow or whatever of the Begotten, this was her, genuinely her. And she trumpeted in pain, a blasting sound that filled the whole nightmare with its alien noise. Not if a hundred trombones had been blown at full volume, would it sound like the horrible noise that came out of the elephant monster, or as loud.

Jeremiah raised the book in his hand, and closed it with a grand thump. Fucking dramatic asshole.

“And so it comes to this!” he yelled, holding up both hands, book in his left, as he looked up at the giant creature overhead. “I did not want to do this, Azamel. This soul ritual will be the death of us, you and I!”

Soul ritual? Death? Fuck. Fuck fuck. They’d guessed right, then. Jeremiah was going to do something that’d get him killed, in order to kill Azamel. What a predictable fucking cunt. In his mind, he was a hero, sacrificing his life and the lives of his soldiers, in order to wipe a great evil from the world. Sack of shit.

Azamel trumpeted again, and Triss covered her ears, trying to block out the sound as best she could. It didn’t help much. The Begotten thrashed, pulled against the bindings, trumpeted again, and Triss fell to her stomach as the sound ripped through her. Ow, ow ow ow.

Jeremiah pointed a finger up at the monster above. “Struggle all you want. You will pay for the things you’ve done!” The fire raged around the man and his hunters, but did nothing to drown out the sound of his voice. It was as if he was standing at the nose of a ship, and his voice bellowed out to everyone around him, a ship floating in a sea of fire, beneath a burning, cursed sun.

“Soul ritual?” the elephant monster asked, booming voice matching Jeremiah’s.

“Do you think I chained and bound a Begotten to my cause, and have spent years working with Elen, to play this idiotic game of cat and mouse in this city? My daughter convinced me that maybe we could kill you the old fashioned way, monster. But...” Sighing, a noise they could all hear despite the fire and the squawking of dying crows, Jeremiah reached for the knife Elen held out for him, before he gave Angela a parting nod. “We are bound, old monster. And I will see you dead before the end.”

The psycho gave the big book to Elen, held the knife in one hand, and fished something out of a pocket with his other. A lock of hair. A lock of hair?

“I gave that to you, long ago.” Again the elephant’s voice boomed over the fire, the clearing, and the dark forest beneath her. “You’ve kept it all this time?” The anger in her voice vanished. It was still an elephant talking, though its mouth did not move, and the voice was anything but an old woman’s. But, the anger was gone, replaced with something sad, and even a little tender.

Harcourt poked his head out from behind his tree, only to have a dozen bullets slam into the bark beside it. Poor guy ducked behind cover again, ass to the grass and half surrounded by fire. It didn’t scare him all that much, hot as it must have been. For Kindred, being around all this fire was terrifying, and Triss had to fight against her Beast’s urge to flee every second she was here. Just touching the red flame would burn through skin and turn it into ash in half a second. The true fear, was if she actually caught fire. One mistake and she’d be up in flames like kindling, and that’d kill any Kindred, including an unprepared Elder, in literal seconds.

“I’ve kept it. And now, with the sacrifices made, I can use this nightmare to ensnare you, old friend. So many lives sacrificed, to be the bedrock, the foundation of this ritual. But you forced me, forced my hand.” Sighing yet again, a long and exhausted sound that carried far more years than any human should have been carrying, Jeremiah lifted the knife, and tuft of hair.

Triss started to move toward the clearing, crawling along her belly. The asshole was acting as if everyone else had ceased to exist, as if two vampires, a werewolf, and a rather angry hunter, weren’t still out to kill him and his crew. Jack especially, if he still had his weapons, would have had an easy shot available to him, now that their precious barrier was gone, and he was hiding in the darkness of the woods. The rocks they were using for cover weren’t perfect.

Maybe she could sneak around, find a pistol, and—and Jeremiah stabbed his hand, through the hair.

The world went dark.

---

~~Antoinette~~

Azamel vanished, fading from existence like a ghost might, becoming see-through for several moments, before ceasing to be.

“What the fuck,” Mark said. Antoinette blinked at the man, almost surprised that he was not mute. The skeleton creature flowing with insects and oozing annelids had a quiet, raspy voice, as one would expect from something that belonged in a pit of corpses. It was not a sound she appreciated, and she stepped away from the gross creature as it began to walk, or flow, toward the large, damaged wooden door ahead of them.

The similarities between Mark, a vile Begotten of rot, decay, and death, and Black Blood, a spirit that identified with her city, according to it, were not lost on her. Mere coincidence, she hoped.

Despite the urgency the situation demanded, Antoinette spared a moment to analyze her surroundings. Oh how Miss Vola would have squealed with delight, over the sights around Antoinette, of a castle hallway from an age long dead. The braziers along the walls were small gargoyles, almost identical to the creature before her, and were made of black metal that held a flame. The stones on the floor were smooth, and arranged in specific, symmetrical patterns, but worn and dusty with age and grime. The ceiling above, lumber and slightly warped, was in similar condition.

It reminded her of her castle, so long ago in Europe, if no one had cared for it. For a moment, she considered analyzing it, to determine the most likely age of its birth, and when perhaps it had last been renovated. But cruel reality required she respond to her immediate situation.

“Where did Azamel go?” her sheriff said.

Mark shook his ... its head. “I don’t know. I don’t know!”

The enormous gargoyle shook his head as well, and began to walk, then run for the door. “I feel them. Come.” That voice, a deep and powerful voice, sent a chill through her spine. She almost thanked the monster for the sensation. It had been ages since she had felt such a feeling, a mixture of fear and excitement, and of awe. She could literally feel the bass of the gargoyle’s voice through the stones of the floor and into her bare feet. There was a touch of rasp underneath the voice, layers that fit well into a nightmare, layers that added a hint of a snake-like hiss.

Her Beast struggled to understand the threat of the monsters before her. With other vampires, the Beast engaged in a play for dominance through an aura of monstrous destruction, competitive play for the alpha position, or lustful need. An unspoken back and forth always occurred when Kindred met each other, and the Beasts within knew how to examine the other, as wild animals did others of their own kind. When she had first met Uratha, it did not take long for her Beast to understand the aura the spirit wolves exuded. Begotten, on the other hand, were difficult to read, and now that she was literally within the nightmare realm, where Begotten merged with their Horrors, and became true creatures of terror and dream, that difficulty did not wane.

Mark clearly exuded something that felt weak, and yet deadly, dangerous, an assassin in the most ancient sense: rot, and the diseases that came with it. The enormous, and perhaps in a strange way, sovereign and handsome gargoyle, on the other hand, her Beast read as a blatant threat, a direct one. She did not know what abilities the strange creatures had, other than they could bestow nightmares in a similar way the Nosferatu could, and when in the physical realm, summon their Horror's physical abilities to their person.

The one time Azamel had truly, without limit or restraint, summoned her Horror to her and attacked the environment around her, decades ago, it had destroyed a building. A large building, through sheer blunt force. Antoinette did not sense such raw strength from the gargoyle, but she did sense strength, and other forms of prowess. What abilities the four-winged, regal creature had, she could not tell, and she doubted her sheriff and his Auspex would be able to infer them, either.

She looked to Daniel, and he to her. Five seconds into this affair, and already things had not gone as planned. Azamel had predicted Jeremiah would attempt something tonight, some final effort to achieve his goal, and so far, her predictions had proven far too accurate. Was such foresight a question of Mark and Azamel having glimpsed into Jeremiah's defenses, or did Azamel know the old hunter better than any of them could have imagined?

Antoinette followed after the running gargoyle, and after sharing a stern glance with her sheriff, Daniel followed as well. Sándor did not run like a lumbering beast. He, it, ran with the grace of a sprinting tiger, except he carried his weight on two feet of talons rather than four. Leaning forward, the beast's tail slithered left and right behind him, matching its great strides as it poured power into its sprint. The inevitable comparison to a dinosaur ran through her mind, and she dismissed the juvenile simile quickly. The beast had wings, four of them, and his face looked mostly human, though with kingly, giant horns curling backward. Sándor looked more a demon than an artist's unscientific portrayal of the ancient dinosaur.

When they reached the wooden door with a large hole carved into it, a work obviously done by claws, Sándor thrust out his hands, and the doors swung open for him. Antoinette had anticipated resistance from the door, but it parted to more than simply the gargoyle's strength. It opened the way a door does when touched by its owner, with total familiarity and servitude. Beyond, Antoinette expected the enormous castle interior Jack had described to her, but she found something else entirely.

She stood upon a cliff edge, a narrow road that raised to a point. The point grew in width enough to hold, with impossible strength, a castle. She once had her own property on the face of a cliff, and she knew all too well the realities of an enormous structure of stone on the edge of a mountain. What she was looking at here, here in the nightmare, was not physically possible.

A lightning strike, distant and well behind the old castle, shook the nightmare whole with the following thunder. The flash of white against the cloudy night sky illuminated the castle, its glorious stone Gothic architecture, and a nigh endless drop that awaited beneath its precarious perch upon the cliff edge. The nightmare cared nothing for the reality and impossibility of such elevation. It cared only to terrify those within, and for all her strength and ability, Antoinette could not ignore the overpowering presentation of its aesthetic. Were she human, such a castle, at least a mile high, would have had her quivering.

So too, would the village that awaited her. She gazed out over the old, wooden buildings, the long winding road they surrounded, and the tall, twisted trees of black bark between them. Not unlike the castle behind her, the buildings weren't set flat upon stone earth, but instead hung off the sides of the skinny cliff, and she could see the enormous roots of trees about them curling, twisting, and holding the buildings into the rock. A single earthquake would have left the village decimated, perhaps nonexistent, but it was a nightmare, and she had to start thinking in such terms.

Before the four of them could proceed down the road, and into the clearly haunted village, the sky was set aflame. Antoinette covered her eyes for a moment, lowered her hands, and gasped as she made sense of the insanity in the dark air above the woods ahead of them.

Over the distant forest, over the horrible trees and wicked branches, was Azamel, the enormous elephant creature, now in her full size and monstrous glory. Shackled to the sky, the monster trumpeted her agony and rage, and struggled against the amber, glowing symbols that bound her. But she could not move.

“In the forest,” the gargoyle said, and took off. The creature’s great weight tore into the ground, shredding rock and earth alike as he sprinted forward, spread his wings, and caught the air. With wings spread, Sándor looked far more enormous, his wings titanic and long enough to lift his colossal weight against the air currents beneath him.

Before she could pursue, the world went dark. Beyond dark. The world ceased to exist. She froze, and vitae pumped through her limbs like a flood as she prepared for an attack. None came. She listened for the sound of the wind, of the distant gunfire in the forest, of Sándor’s absurd wingspan, or of Azamel’s trumpets of pain. Nothing. As if the world had decided it simply no longer existed, and had blinked out of reality, all around her she found nothing. No wind touched her skin through her business suit, and no ground greeted her bare feet. The smell of rock, wood, and mountain air vanished. It had all faded away.

All except Azamel. The elephant above came closer, and closer, until Antoinette was not far from the hanging giant. Or, had Antoinette come closer to her? With nothing else in existence, literally, to form context, movement had no meaning. She may as well have been floating through space, though she could tell she was not, somehow.

“Daniel?” she said. No, she did not say it. She tried, and she was certain her mouth moved and lungs compressed to create the noise. And yet, no noise came. She was speaking into oblivion, and oblivion was all she could hear.

“Azamel,” the darkness said. “Azamel. I loved you.”

---

~~Jack~~

Jack reached down, picked up a rock, and grinned as he stepped out from the forest. He didn't need his pistol, or any of his weapons, to kill these fuckers from a distance. A well thrown rock with Kindred strength behind it would kill just as well as a bullet.

This wasn't how he wanted things to go. The hunters were supposed to be buried under his legion, and he'd torture them to death in a beautiful, gory display of dominance. He'd march toward them, unstoppable, a fucking Terminator, and he'd spend the whole night picking them off one by one. He'd break their legs, and drag them screaming to a room, where he'd gather them and bathe in their wails. He'd Kiss one or two of them to death, but the others wouldn't get to die so quickly, or pleasurably. It'd be a great night of slaughter!

But noooo, Jeremiah had to be a fucking asshole, and sacrifice his pawns for some sort of gambit. Now there was fire everywhere, blocking him. Worse, the hunters were all dead! He'd get, at best, seven hunters to kill, and that was a pale comparison to the nigh two dozen he'd had not long ago. Even doubly worse, was how they'd ruined his groove. It was cool, beating up the gargoyle enforcer, but his night of unleashing unimaginable horrors on the hunters was wrecked. Now, he was in the fucking forest, ready to throw a rock, because they had fire and protection circles, and—

No. Fuck a rock. This was his follow up performance! His debut at the hospital was awesome, and he had to top that. Nothing less than a grand display of strength, complete with explosions and loud noises, would do.

He put the rock down, reached out for the base of a tree trunk, and reached into himself. Jack, old Jack, was such a weak Ventrue. He, on the other hand, was the mother fucking best. A drop of vitae was all he needed. For him, a single drop was enough to break minds. A single drop was enough to heal wounds. A single drop was enough to summon a wall of blood around his body. A single drop was enough to command legions of animals. And, and this was where old Jack sucked, a single drop was enough for him to unleash strength. Real strength. Kindred strength. Ventrue didn't come to Kindred strength as easily as the Nos or the Daeva, but Susanna had spent the time to build it, develop it, master it, and the new Jack could feel Vigor as easily as Dominate, Animalism, and Resilience.

There was something about the power of raw strength, that fucking rocked.

Jack sank his fingers into the trunk of the tree, the one tree that stood between him and the hunters, and started to lift. He was going to crush them, all of them, right now. The barrier was mostly gone now, said the chirps of his two best agents, so there wasn't anything stopping him from attacking the humans from a distance. A tree thousands of pounds heavy, thrown sideways, directly at the hunters? It'd be great. They'd shoot him, and he'd shrug off the bullets as he threw the tree. They'd get crushed, damaged, but probably live, and he'd walk up to them once the fire died, and have some fun.

Which would give first, the roots of tree and their grip on the ground, or the wood itself, snapping the trunk? He—

He let go of tree, and stared up at the sky. Amber fire scorched the black clouds, and he glared into the burning light, letting it sear his retinas for a single moment before his irises adjusted. Azamel, in the sky, bound to it, with Elen's ritual symbols burning in the air around her.

Jack stepped out from behind the tree, and glared at Jeremiah. The fucker was doing something, yelling and babbling, and he had a knife in his hand. The fuck was he doing? The fuck was Azamel doing here? Christ, she was making a racket, trumpeting her strange Horror's pain, and practically making the forest shake with its piercing, layered noise. What the fuck was—

Darkness. Everywhere, was darkness. The tree he was leaning against, gone. The feeling of its bark under his hands, gone. The feeling of ground under his shoes, gone. The sound of fire, the breeze on his naked chest, all gone. All that was left was him, standing in endless darkness, underneath Azamel's hanging, enormous elephant body.

“Azamel,” someone said. “Azamel. I loved you.” Jeremiah's voice.

Jack frowned, and swung his hand out for the tree he knew was beside him. Nothing. His hand moved through the air, unimpeded, not by tree or even air.

The elephant above remained where she was, and while he could see her, it, whatever, she wasn't making any noise, despite her attempts to. The flapping, dangling, gigantic elephant trunk was obviously trumpeting, but not making a single sound anymore, when before the darkness came, she'd been driving a railroad spike into his brain.

Ok, so, what was happening?

“It took decades to learn this ritual, Azamel, to get the ingredients I needed. Elen, a shaman from the old world, before we Americans ran this land over, and killed everyone. A nightmare realm, to trap you, the whole you, the real you. People who trusted me with their lives, to be sacrificed.” The man's voice broke, wavering, a hitch in his throat. “It’s a cursed ritual, Azamel, and it was my last option. I never wanted to do it, but my hand has been forced. If you’d just ... let me kill you, none of this would have had to happen.”

“If you loved me, then why are you doing this?” A woman’s voice, and one Jack struggled to identify. Azamel? It sounded kind of like her, the human her, but softer, without the cracks and grit of decades of smoking and age.

“You killed my friends and family.”

“They came for my head, Jeremiah.”

The man grunted. “Can you blame them? You’re a monster, Azamel. They knew what needed to be done.”

Azamel stopped struggling against her bindings, and went limp. Her eyes were still open, but she looked drained, empty, as if someone had ripped something out of her.

Jack stared ahead into the darkness, and frowned as Jeremiah faded into being, younger, and without any of the tattoos or scars. He stood there in clothes Jack guessed came from post the American civil war. A woman stood next to him, a bit older, attractive, handsome, someone in her forties. Azamel, back when she was strong, tough, and judging by how she carried herself, ready to boss people around. She wasn’t wearing the sort of shitty dress women wore back then either, giant dresses with huge asses. She was wearing the same sort of clothes Jeremiah wore, and both of them looked a bit dirty, like they’d been working fields. They probably had.

“I defended myself.”

“You ruined their lives,” Jeremiah said. His voice had its youthfulness revived as well.

“How? I built this town, and gave them a life.”

Was this the past? Azamel had said she'd known Jeremiah, a hundred and fifty years ago, fucked up, lived with him in a town she'd been mayor of; dictator of a town, really. Jeremiah had been a deputy, and when his sheriff had learned who Azamel was, Azamel had basically exiled him from her town. Jeremiah asked why, Azamel explained about her monster side, Jeremiah left town, got the sheriff, and they tried to take the town back. Azamel killed them all, save for Jeremiah. All in all, it sounded like Jeremiah had been a fucking moron, to throw away a babe with money and power, for some misplaced sense of justice.

But this conversation he was witnessing didn't sound like it fitted into that time line. Then, it was happening now? Right, Jeremiah had said something about soul ritual.

Oh fucking god, were they having a soul battle? Is that what was happening? He was watching these two fossils butting heads, except instead of heads, it was their souls? Someone come kill him quick, and spare him the drama.

“You were a tyrant, Azamel,” Jeremiah said. “You killed people.”

“Just the criminals.”

If Azamel was in the sky during this, and her soul, or projection of her soul, or whatthefuckever, was standing in front of Jack, next to Jeremiah's soul, then where was the real Jeremiah? Probably invisible like everyone else was. They could probably all see Azamel, her, prostrated in the black emptiness above, while her and her pursuer had a friendly conversation. Dramatic. Stupid. The moment Jack figured out how to find the real Jeremiah, or any of his hunters, this sham would be over.

“You ruled with an iron fist,” young Jeremiah said.

“And gave people a good life, a life worth living. They had money. They had homes. They were not abused.”

“They had no freedom!”

“They had the freedom I gave them, and it was enough! You ruined it for them, Jeremiah, not me!”

Jack walked around, but it made no difference. Like walking on a frictionless surface, he couldn't get anywhere, and the reference points he had, Jeremiah and Azamel, remained fixed where they were relative to him. Growling between clenched teeth, he reached into himself, and grabbed vitae, far more of it than he needed. It poured through him, into his fingers and toes, into his nostrils and eyes, and he stared around with every sense he had on overdrive. He couldn't smell them, hear them, or see them; the hunters simply weren't nearby. He couldn't smell the forest, his burning, dying legion, or blood anymore, and there'd been plenty of blood.

He froze, and looked around with bewilderment as new things flickered into existence, new places, new areas, and more than one. A building, wood, dirty windows. Sunlight. He winced as he prepared for the burning, but none came. Instead, the illusion spread out before him of a town, obviously a village from a hundred and fifty years ago. People were walking around, townsfolk, guys in boots, and women in stupid dresses.

The illusion didn't hold still. It faded in and out, and each time it showed something different, but also of the town. Kids running through the streets. Horses trotting along with carriages. A sheriff, walking around with a gun in its holster on his hip, a revolver. They were coming up on the end of the 'Wild West' era, the American Frontier, and people weren't as utterly filthy as Jack expected they would be. The illusion provided no noise and no smells, as if to spare Jack the authentic experience of horse shit.

The sun burned bright in the sky, and Jack spared a peek at it, several times. It was fake, but damn, it'd been a while since he'd seen the sun literally above him, shining, and being annoying. He didn't miss it.

“You fed on the fear they had of you!”

The illusion jumped to the inside of another building, a fancy one for the era, big, and imposing. Azamel's home, no doubt. She had hunting trophies on the walls, deer and bear heads, and a large fireplace built into the wall. Bear fur rugs, with the bear's head and hands still attached. A stone house, well built, sturdy, meant to last the ages. A few more decades and she'd probably have some electricity set up for lighting.

Young Jeremiah and young Azamel stood by the fireplace, yelling, in the familiar way lovers did. Either the illusion had fully pulled them into its lie, or just the sight of her old home was enough to regress them.

“All people should fear the might of a predator, and the wrath of a ruler. I did not abuse that power!” young Azamel said, throwing up her hands, before they tightened into fists at her sides.

Ok, they may not have been literally butting heads, but the anger in their voices may as well have been shotguns jammed up to each other's throats, and triggers pulled. The two of them screamed with enough vitriol, it made Jack smile. God damn, old people knew how to hate, really really how to hate, in a way young people just couldn't appreciate it. Old people hated down to the fucking essence of their being; case in point, a soul ritual, demonstrating just that.

Jeremiah took a deep breath, calming himself. “Angela convinced me to avoid using this ritual, when we captured Sándor. She thought, maybe with Elen's magic, the way she can manipulate flesh, we could catch you without having to use it. But ... my hand's been forced.” Lowering his head, Jeremiah began to pace around the room with the familiarity of someone who'd done it a hundred times. He didn't glance at the taxidermy around him, or even the fireplace.

Jack's smile grew. Yeah, you fucker, I forced your hand. Using Elen and the fucked up shit she could do, to try and catch Azamel when she was vulnerable, just an old woman in a wheelchair, was a good idea. Pissing off Jack until new Jack could come out to play, was not a good idea.

"You speak as if this ritual will kill you," the oddly beautiful, or rather handsome woman said.

"Because ... it probably will." Sighing again, the man stepped closer to the woman, and set a hand on her shoulder. "I've done more than hunt you all these years, Azamel. I've researched, as well. I've dug, and dug, and dug. Not long after you destroyed my home, I tracked down where you'd been before. From there, I went down a hole, searching for anyone who knew anything about the elephant monster. Nightmares, Azamel, the nightmares you spun and the memories they'd left in others were my trail.

"It took years to find people who knew of you. They were old by then, a hundred years ago, and were only children when they'd seen you. All the way to the Middle East, Azamel, where I learned about a woman, a foreigner, journeying across the land. Apparently, she'd been haunted by a nightmare, and ranted and raved about it." Slowly, Jeremiah used his other hand to reach into his suit shirt, and pulled out a knife from within. The blade was white.

Azamel's eyes went wide, and she stepped away. Jeremiah's other hand held her shoulder firm, stopping her from taking a second step.

"It took years," Jeremiah continued, "to figure out that you, your Horror, have nothing to do with Ganesha. It took decades to learn about the story of the cursed elephant, an old horror story told around campfires. It was just a tale, a stupid tale, Azamel, that people in the East told each other, to spook each other about the folly of mistreating or underestimating the anger of elephants.

“It was when I heard about a man who’d died, long ago, that I pieced it together. This man was supposedly a big believer of the tale, and due to unfortunate circumstances, found himself trampled to death under the feet of an enraged elephant. Worse than trampled, he’d been skewered first, by a tusk.”

Oh. That made a lot more sense. Jack had been racking his brain, trying to figure out why Azamel’s horror was some sort of twisted, corrupt version of Ganesha. He’d even looked it up. Ganesha was a god of intellect, wisdom, and a ‘remover of obstacles’. Nothing about that, at all, was scary.

Now, a spooky campfire story about some sort of evil elephant that looked like Ganesha, maybe a story meant to dissuade people from aggravating elephants, or a warning to avoid the dangers of an elephant, that idea made much more sense. He could imagine it easily, a person trekking through the jungle or savanna, forced to move at night, being terrified of running into a lion or tiger or something. Then, they stumble onto a fucking elephant, sleeping. Elephant wakes up and panics, or maybe hates humans for hunting their kind, or goes on a rampage for any number of reasons. All Jack knew, was a raging elephant was a fucking terrifying idea; it’d give most Kindred pause, let alone kine.

Running into that, in the night, and having it attack you, skewer you with its tusks, and trample you to death? Yeah, that must have qualified for creating a nightmare chamber, according to what Fiona told him. Maybe the tale created the Horror, and that experience created the chamber it needed to exist? Fuck him, he had no idea. But it definitely painted Azamel in a new light. She wasn’t a Ganesha knock off. She was an embodiment of the terror people felt, before the might of an enraged creature, a symbol known throughout dozens of cultures, suddenly going on a rampage. A majestic creature, corrupted by fury, murder, and bloodlust. Badass.

Except, badass was not what he was seeing. As Jeremiah approached Azamel, the woman stepped away from him, and her eyes were wide. From what Jeremiah had said, the knife must have been ivory, specifically the ivory of an elephant tusk.

Jeremiah lunged. Azamel yelled, and threw her hands up as she stepped back. All of this happened maybe ten feet from Jack, but no matter how hard he tried to close the distance and help Azamel, he couldn't get closer. The ritual, the soul ritual, didn't allow for interference apparently. All he could do was watch, as a man lunged at a woman, with a knife.

It didn't play out like Jack expected. Azamel should have landed a punch on Jeremiah, and the man would have fucking exploded in a gory mess; she was that strong. But instead, Azamel tried to push him away, and all she got for her efforts was Jeremiah slicing down at her, and cutting into her skin with the knife. She had no strength here, not in this place, where her Horror's strength was bound.

The scene quickly went from the one-sided tussle Jack expected, obviously favoring the monster, to something out of a horror flick. The blade left a gash along Azamel's arm, and she screamed as she fell back. Blood flowed from her skin, and splashed over the floor, sliding into the cracks between slabs of stone.

"I'm sorry," Jeremiah said. "I never wanted to do this!" He came at her again, and now that the reality had sunk in, Azamel reacted more realistically. She was just a person, in this strange ritual Jeremiah had pulled her into, without the strength of her Horror to call upon. And while young Azamel looked like a sturdy and tough woman, she didn't have a knife. There were things around that she could have used to defend herself maybe, like the metal poker beside the fireplace, but Jack knew why she couldn't use it. Illusion.

Young Jeremiah was real. Young Azamel was real. The knife Jeremiah had was real, somehow. Everything else wasn't.

Azamel fell onto her back, and Jeremiah got on top of her. He brought the knife down again, holding it dagger style this time, underhanded, and Azamel shrieked as it pierced through her blocking hand.

"I'm sorry!" Jeremiah yelled. Tears were in his eyes, but they didn't stop him. He brought the knife down again, and again it cut into Azamel, this time her other blocking hand, but this block was nothing more than a panicked throw of her arm.

Jack ground his teeth until he felt his fangs emerge from their sheaths. Get up, Azamel. Get up! Punch him, kick him, do something, you god damn woman. So your Horror was bound, and all you had left was the human part of you to fight off Jeremiah. Jeremiah was human, too. Kick him in the balls. Headbutt him, and break his nose. Use your fucking feet, and get him off of you. Just fucking hit him!

It was no good. Jeremiah was in a full mount, and Azamel had nothing to defend herself. Jack doubted muscle mass played any part in this confrontation; they were illusions, projections of something inside them. Jeremiah was winning the fight, because he came armed, somehow able to take his special tool into the ritual with him, while Azamel had nothing. All the damn woman could do, was scream, as Jeremiah's knife cut deep into her right hand.

The next stab got passed her bleeding, ruined hands, and sank into the shoulder of her right arm. Jack heard the thunk of the ivory blade hitting bone, and winced as Azamel's screams rose an octave. She tried to beat the man off of her with her bleeding hands, one of them with a hole carved clean through it by Jeremiah's earlier stab, but the arm with the stabbed shoulder was out of commission. The best she could manage, was some weak slaps with her other hand.

Jeremiah did not budge, as her red fingers painted his face and chest with blood.

Save her!

I can't save her, dumbass. This ritual is showing me what's happening, but it's all in their minds.

How?

Fuck me, I don't know. He said he commandeered the nightmare to do it, so, I guess we're still in Sándor's nightmare.

We have to save her.

What? Why? The fuck has she ever done for you, Jack?

It wasn't like he wouldn't try and save her if he could, but only because it'd help him achieve his goal. He didn't care if Azamel died.

She doesn't need to have done something for me, for me to want to save her from a death she doesn't deserve.

She doesn't deserve this? You heard what Jeremiah said, and the man's definitely got that 'so psycho he can't help but speak true' thing going for him. She's done some nasty shit.

You're worse, curse.

I didn't say I wasn't. And when someone comes to take my head, I'll fight them. But I won't stand there and say I haven't rightly earned their ire.

Jack shook his head. Old Jack could complain about present circumstance all he wanted, it didn't change that, for all new Jack's power, for all the destruction he could unleash, he was currently unable to do shit. He was a vampire. His world was flesh and bone, blood and smoke. The fuck could he do about dreams, nightmares, and the creatures that lurked inside them? The fuck could he do about a ritual that, evidently, commandeered them?

Staring at Jeremiah, Jack clicked his teeth. The man had spent fucking decades setting this up. He'd journeyed the fucking world, extended his life with witchcraft, enlisted the help of dozens of hunters, and a witch, and had captured another Begotten, all with the express purpose of killing Azamel. It made for a great villain, and Jack found himself torn between respecting the man's devotion, and being sickened by his obviously emotional state. He was crying, as he stabbed Azamel to death. In the end, he was a blubbering fool, driven by emotions as pathetic as lost love.

Jeremiah raised his knife, ready to plunge it into the woman's body yet again; she'd already been stabbed in the hands, forearms, and shoulder. No longer able to defend herself from her old lover's blade, this stab would kill her. It was plain to see that, with every stab, Jeremiah was getting weaker, too. The ritual was a last resort for him, and if Jack had to guess, that wasn't just because it required sacrificing a bunch of people to fuel it. The ritual was probably, literally killing him. Would killing Azamel fast spare him? Did it matter?

Before Jeremiah plunged the blade, the world shook, and a loud, echoing crash ran through Jack. He stumbled, didn't fall, and looked up at the elephant above, still bound to the sky in a haze of black endlessness around the illusions of the old town. The world shook again, and the elephant above vibrated with the impact. It wasn't her.

"No! You will not be saved, monster. This has to end, here and now!" Jeremiah, stunned, quickly reestablished his grip on the knife, and brought it down toward Azamel. But the third time the illusion and the darkness around them shook, it was like God had decided to smash Jeremiah's silly bullshit with a fucking sledgehammer.

Jack, Jeremiah, and Azamel, all flew back, landing on their asses and rolling over the black nothingness beneath them, as the illusion exploded. The town, the sun, the roads, the people and horses and buildings, even the taxidermy, fur rugs, and hunting trophies, all shattered like glass. The shards glinted, catching the sparks of a destroyed universe, before they faded away into the oblivion around them.

Existence reemerged from its slumber. Jack was back on the ground, grass, and dirt, exactly where he'd been before Jeremiah had enacted the ritual. Azamel, the giant elephant Azamel, lay on the ground, beside the clearing, half slumped over against trees. Her giant eyes were closed, and her four hands were limp at her sides. Her enormous weight was enough that many of the trees broke trying to keep her from falling over, but some of the fatter ones managed to stop the giant from crumbling back into the forest.

Jeremiah lay in the center of his circle, and his four bodyguards, and adopted daughter, stood over him. Their mouths were hanging open, staring at the intruder above them. Jack looked up, and for a single moment, he grinned, as the shape came into focus.

Sándor, the gargoyle, flew above them, hovering, the flap of his wings sending waves of air down against them. In his four hands, black strands of nothingness were dripping away, falling like drops of water, and disappearing into the fire-lit night air. As if the beast had grabbed onto oblivion itself and ripped it asunder, the flaps of blackness draped over its palms and fingers hung like flayed skin, bleeding onyx onto the clearing beneath the gargoyle. In the bleeding droplets, Jack could see hints of the illusions he'd seen, of the village, the sun, the people, the houses. The black drops splattered and vanished against the grass, as if the ritual had never existed.

“You killed my family!” Sándor fell from the sky, and landed with a great, resounding thud. He wasn't nearly as big as Azamel, but unlike the giant elephant, a lumbering oaf of a creature, the gargoyle moved like a fucking tiger. It sprinted through the fires of the clearing, and fell upon the hunters, just like a fucking tiger would. Only the amber circle that circled the hunters gave it pause.

“Run!” Jeremiah said. The four hunters did just that, though Angela showed a second’s hesitation, before she turned and ran into the woods, out of the amber circle, through the fire, and past Azamel. One of the hunters had literally grabbed Elen, and thrown the old woman onto his shoulder, leaving her breather and wheelchair behind. Considering who she was, Jack imagined the woman was actually immortal, and wouldn’t die from not being able to breathe

Jack grinned after them, and got ready to chase. Oh yes, this was going to be fun. But, he could spare a moment, a single moment, to see what Sándor was going to do to Jeremiah.

“You killed my Ashley! You killed my Sam!” the beast bellowed again. That sexy voice of his, so deep and booming, with just a hint of snake rasp underneath it, echoed throughout the forest like it owned the trees, the grass, the dirt, the rocks, and the fucking air. And he did; not ‘it’ anymore, ‘he’. The difference between the Horror Jack had fought, and the proper, merged and whole creature he was looking at now, was colossal.

Jeremiah brought himself to standing, glaring defiance through teary eyes up at the gargoyle. All he got for his stubbornness, was Sándor flapping four titanic wings down toward Jeremiah, again, and again, and again. Jeremiah faced into the wind, but fell to his knees a moment later as the air hit him without mercy. The ground around him suffered the same fate, and bits of dirt and grass succumbed to the insane pressure of the wind, until a small tear ripped through the circle. A small tear was all that was needed, for the amber circle to die, and when it did, the gargoyle stopped beating his wings.

His prey was defenseless. The following silence sealed that reality in beautiful inevitability, and it would have made Jack's mouth water, if he'd been Blushing.

"I did what I ha—" Jeremiah's voice was cut short as the gargoyle reached down, and scooped the man up with all the gentle care of an angry rugby player.

"Did you really think I'd let you use my home for this ritual, once I was free?" The gargoyle squeezed, and Jack licked his lips as he saw Jeremiah's face change color several times in Sándor's huge, clawed grip. "You killed my son! You killed my wife! No more. You don't get to hurt anyone else. You don't get to use me, or my home. No more!"

Sándor was more than strong enough to crush Jeremiah into pulp, and probably instantly at that, but he didn't. There was a moment, a fleeting, perfect, beautiful moment before a kill, and Jack could see that Sándor, for all his rage and indignation, was craving that moment. He found it, when Jeremiah tried to scream, and couldn't. The gargoyle had thoroughly compressed on the man's body, like a constricting snake, and likely broke most of his ribs besides.

When Jeremiah failed to scream, the glint of beastly satisfaction was blatant on the gargoyle's face. He'd achieved nirvana, in the throes of fury. And now that he was satisfied, Jack knew Jeremiah was a dead man.

Sándor lifted the still squirming, still trembling and kicking and fighting man up to his mouth, and bit off his head.

Glorious. As much as Jack, the new Jack, was a creature of power and animal fury, the strength of the Beast unleashed in all its glory, there was something he simply wouldn't do: eat his prey. Vampires drank of their prey, sure, and while to Kiss prey to death was the ultimate expression of a vampire's predator status, there was something so delightfully carnal about the enormous gargoyle literally crunching down on Jeremiah's neck, and tearing off his head. Crunch. Crunch.

Sándor didn't stop there. He tore the man apart, and devoured him piece by piece, quickly at that. Maybe he didn't want to savor it? Jack would have savored it. Rip, tear, arms and legs, guts, they all went into the gargoyle's mouth, disappearing between his sharp teeth and fangs. It was strange, seeing a mostly human face, Sándor's, eating human flesh. But within his dark, steel-colored skin, those teeth were big and sharp, and they destroyed Jeremiah's bones like they'd been made for it.

As much as Jack wanted to savor the death of that fucking asshole, time was a wastin'.

"Sándor!" Jack yelled.

"... Jack." The gargoyle turned to face him. He was still standing in the center of the clearing, surrounded by fire and the corpses of thousands of rats and crows. Standing, standing, aaaaand falling. With a heavy thud, the gargoyle fell to his knees, and his wings flopped weak to the ground around him. They touched fire, and Jack winced instinctively, but as far as he could see, the gargoyle didn't react to the flame.

The monster was exhausted. Well, he did spend weeks locked up in a cell, unable to move. And he did just literally rip a ritual apart with his hands. Damien freeing Sándor during the ritual was something Jeremiah had not expected, and was probably trying to beat, like a race. Fucker lost.

"Alright, you look exhausted. Do—Clara!" He motioned to the rising werewolf on the other side of the circle. "You and Clara, help Damien and Othello ... and Azamel, I guess." The giant elephant creature looked unconscious, not moving, but seemed to be breathing.

“... alright.” As if someone had ripped all energy, or reason to keep on living, straight out of the monster, the gargoyle let his head droop for a moment. After a second, he looked around, first to the werewolf that he’d fought twice now, then to Damien currently unconscious by the altar. The colossal monster reached down, scooped Damien up, and set him directly on the altar, safe from the fire that continued to eat at the grass. With four hands, Sándor began to squash fires with his palms with all the hurry and hustle of a drunk turtle. Fucker really was out of it.

“Sándor, where can Angela get to from here?” Jack said.

“Nowhere. The forest is endless. It—” Sándor raised his head with a snap, and looked in the direction Angela and her friends had run off. “Another Begotten comes.”

“Another Be—Athalia! Now!?” Jack threw up his hands, and ran off after Angela. If Athalia helped Angela escape, he’d kill her. He’d rip her head off and drink the god damn blood. If he had to kill her while she was merged with her Horror, he’d break every stupid bone in her big skeleton body, one at a fucking time.

He glanced in Beatrice’s direction, back to Sándor, back to Clara, then to Beatrice again, who stepped out from behind her tree, and was jogging around the fires toward him. She was beat to all fuck, and limping like crazy. Anyone else would have been lying down and doing their best to recuperate, but not her. She had hate behind her, pushing her, driving her toward a very clear goal. And Jack could not help but fucking love that.

He hopped over to her, and before she could say anything, he slipped under her arm, and helped her give chase to the fleeing hunters. She deserved to be a part of this.

“Jack,” the gargoyle said over his shoulder. “Your Prince is here ... at the castle. She’ll be here in seconds.”

Antoinette was in the nightmare? Now things made more sense. Azamel had gone to her, after Jack had recruited Athalia, knowing that there was a chance that, in all this chaos, Sándor might be freed. It was the only possible way Sándor could have escaped the cell. She'd known about Elen's control of Sándor, sure, but how the fuck did she guess it would come to this? Well, for all her omniscients, she didn't predict that by entering the nightmare, Sándor's nightmare, she'd be giving Jeremiah the opportunity he needed to kill her.

Jack glanced back, past the forest, the fires, and to the haunted village. Yeap, he could see her, other Jack's lover. If she'd been foolhardy, she could have rushed into the forest in seconds, once the ritual was broken. But she was too smart for that, and she was approaching at a more reasonable pace, her sheriff beside her, both scanning for threats.

Wait for her? Nah. She'd probably try and stop him or something. And besides, the longer he waited, the bigger chance Angela had of getting away. Getting Beatrice had slowed him down enough, but damn, the way she was riding her hate to the point it was the only thing keeping her on her feet, was admirable. He couldn't leave her behind. She was the only one who understood, and who'd appreciate what he was going to do.

He took off through the forest, in the direction the hunters had gone. They wouldn't be able to move fast, not in this forest, with all its evil, sharp branches, twisted trunks, and roots sticking out of the ground. He could smell them, too, sweating. And as he took off after them, it wasn't long before he could hear them, their boots snapping twigs, their limbs breaking branches, and the grunts of their exertion. A few seconds later, he could see the light of their flashlights.

“Still with me?” Jack said to the woman hooked over his shoulders.

“Why ... are you ... helping me? I thought—”

“Ha, thought what? I’d kill Angela and leave you out of it? She killed Julias.”

“You’re not Jack. The fuck do you care about—”

He looked to her, and leaned in close; easy enough, considering she was draped over his shoulder. Her snake eyes met his, and she froze, staring.

“I’m not a demon, Beatrice. I’m Jack. Not the same Jack, but Jack all the same. Got his memories, and got my thoughts, his and my thoughts, going through my head. I want Angela dead as much as you, so does old Jack, and unlike old Jack, I can make it happen.” There was a moment of realization in her eyes, and he chuckled. She hadn’t thought of him as a person before this, as someone who could think, as someone who could use their fucking brain. Well now she knew. Now she knew the kid carrying her wasn’t some mindless force with a stick up its ass. Now she knew, he was Jack, and he was going to bathe in some blood tonight.

“ ... really?”

He winked at her, and took both her arms, pulled her onto his back, and started running proper.

It didn’t take long to reach the hunters, slow as they were. Hell, the one with Elen on his shoulders was starting to fall behind. Elen probably weighed ninety pounds, but the dense forest didn’t treat the hunter kindly. Jack could smell fresh blood, and spotted the telltale shine of bits of the liquid when the moonlight peeked through. They were getting cut on the branches.

How to kill the old woman? She was a witch, and obviously had great power, though it seemed like she needed time to set up whatever it was she did with her occult shit; not unlike a Crúac ritual, he supposed. She could be valuable. Well, once he caught up to her, it'd be easy enough to Dominate her, and tell her to sit down and shut the fuck up, while he dealt with the others.

And there they were. Five hunters, plus one witch. Angela was leading them, limp and all, while the dude with the old woman on his shoulders was in the middle of the pack.

He didn't bother to tell the Nos to hold on. She would or she wouldn't. If she wanted to be part of this bad enough, she'd hold on, and close as she was, it wasn't like she wouldn't be able to tell he was about to unleash a bit of his power. And it'd only take a little bit.

“He's here! He's here! Stop him! Stop—”

The woman, the one who'd been using the flamethrower, was taking up the rear. She had a rifle now, and she pointed it straight at him, its muzzle light shining into his eyes and blinding him. He didn't care. When the gunfire started, and the explosion of bark and wood began, he didn't mind. When some of the bullets crashed into his body, he didn't flinch or wince. The pain was minor, and a little will was enough to summon his Kindred blood, and begin filling and healing the wounds.

He ran up to her, and she screamed a mix of rage and fear as she emptied her magazine into his chest. Maybe if there'd been more room, more light, and less roots tripping her up as she walked backward, she'd have been able to aim for his head. That'd have at least have slowed him down. But as her bullets went thunk thunk in his chest, blocked by his building wall of blood, he didn't slow down at all.

“Hi,” he said as he got in close, reached out, grabbed her shoulders with both his hands, and squeezed.

Things were a bit awkward with Beatrice on his back, her legs hooked on his hips. But he was strong enough to carry dozens of Beatrices, and she was doing a good job keeping her arms out of the way of his, and her head behind his. It meant he was clear to go nuts, and nuts did he go. The hunter shrieked bloody murder, and started twisting and turning as he squeezed on her shoulders harder, and harder, and harder, until his fingers sank through skin, muscle, and bone.

Her arms didn't come off completely. Clothes got in the way, and probably a few bits of skin hidden inside, but they were basically both completely off, popped off like squeezing a stick of butter until it separates. Her screams rose to a climax, and she foamed at the mouth before the pain became too much, and she passed out. Damn.

“Jack,” Beatrice said. “You ... don't need to be so—”

“These fuckers hunted us, killed us. These worthless, pathetic humans had the audacity to kill us!” He snapped the idiot Nos a harsh glare over his shoulder, and she recoiled. Good. “They're fucking sheep, and they killed Julias. You want me to spare them?”

“No...”

“Then shut up, and let me get revenge for the both of us. And hey, I'll even let you have a shot at Angela.”

“Fine! Fine, just ... fine.”

He caught up to them again pretty quick. A man this time, the one without Elen. He had a shotgun, and that was substantially more dangerous than the rifle. Unfortunately for the hunter, the forest was the perfect guard against it. A rifle might penetrate through trees, but a shotgun wouldn't.

Jack slipped between the trees, ducked low underneath nearby branches, and closed the distance over the seconds, as the hunter roared his fury. Boom, boom, shotgun shells unloaded their pellets, sending bark everywhere, but only managed to clip Jack every so often. He'd summoned his blood to protect him fully by this point, as he had with Sándor. The pellets hit him, and then fell to the forest floor, as Jack got in close.

Very close, close enough for eye contact. Perfect. The hunter met his eyes, and only too late realized he'd done it. Maybe he thought his tattoos, his bracelets and necklaces, his bullshit, would keep Jack out of his mind. Jack reached out with his thoughts, and smashed through all that crap instantly.

“Cut out your stomach open, and pull your guts out.”

The man's eyes went wide. There was a kernel of awareness in there, a part of him that knew what Jack was demanding he do. Perfect. What was the point of a torturous death if the person being tortured wasn't aware of it?

Jack sped past his victim, and didn't look back. He didn't need to. The sounds were telling. A knife being drawn. A quiet cutting sound. Screams of agony. It was a shame Jack couldn't really indulge and watch, but they were appetizers anyway. He couldn't let the main course escape.

The next hunter, the other guy, had Elen on his shoulder, and was running, not even bothering to turn around and shoot. Jack made no effort to be gentle. He hopped in close, jumped at the man's back, pushed down on the man's head with his left hand, and grabbed Elen with his right. He was right, the old woman weighed basically nothing, and her shitty old gown didn't tear when he yanked her off the man's falling body, then dumped her on the forest floor. And the hunter, his real target, fell with a satisfying crunch against the cruel forest floor.

With Beatrice on his back, Jack actually had a bit of weight to him. He stood beside the downed hunter, waited a second for the man to look up, winked at him, and brought his foot down on the side of the man's neck. Crunch.

Breaking someone's neck wasn't a good way to kill someone, if the goal was efficiency. People survived a broken neck all the time, or took a long time to die. The man's scream ended quickly, but he was still twitching, squirming, dying. Perfect. The night was starting to look bright again.

"What do we do with her?" Beatrice said, nodding toward the old woman lying on the ground. A quick glance showed she was on her back, looking up, and not moving. Breathing, but not moving. In the tussle, her dress had come up a bit, enough for them to see her calves. Skin and bones, to the point that the woman should have been dead. A walking corpse.

Not walking. A living, breathing mummy, sure, and probably immortal. But not walking. She wasn't walking anywhere anymore, hence why the hunters had her in a wheelchair. The breather was probably so she had enough oxygen to think straight when performing her rituals. Aging, and aging, and aging, but never dying.

"She's not going anywhere, and I have questions for her." And even if she did somehow manage to escape, despite the Prince being on Jack's heels, it wasn't really Elen his hate was pointed at. She was a tool. His hate was saved for the wielders of the tool. One was dead, and another was going to die a horrible, horrible death soon enough.

Noise up ahead, besides the screams of panic and grunts of exertion, announced the location of the two remaining women. Jack took off after them, chuckling with every thud his boots made against the wood and grass. The dark chuckle, the kind villains practiced in front of the mirror. He knew Angela and her remaining hunter could hear him, and that made it all the better.

This was how the night was supposed to go! Fuck Jeremiah and his stand-off bullshit. This was how things were meant to be, a vampire running after humans, in the dark, and bathing in the slaughter. It felt good, god it felt good. He was closer to his Beast than old Jack would ever be, and his Beast was howling with joy at getting to unleash its instincts tonight. Catch them, kill them, maybe save one, and drink them until they were nothing but a dry husk.

“Here,” the darkness whispered. Not Jack, not Trissy, and not the two hunters. “Here!” He recognized that voice. He’d recognize Athalia’s monster voice anywhere.

There they were. He slipped around a fat tree, and found the two women running, huffing and puffing. And falling. Just as Jack reached out to grab onto the Angela, she stumbled down into the earth, and disappeared beneath grass and twigs, with her hunter friend beside her. He got a glimpse of her eyes for only a split moment, and found a mix of pain, likely from her running with a limp, and utter despair. But not fear, like her friend.

He’d have to fix that.

He stopped before the pit, and looked down into the blackness below. A hole, but not a natural one. Around its edges were finger bones, sticking up from the around the roots and dirt. They held open the hole, unmoving, and certainly not inviting, but Angela and the other hunter had gone down the hole like Alice.

“Athalia?” Beatrice said.

“Athalia. Fucking bitch. Probably has Fiona tied up somewhere, and was waiting for an opportunity to save her daughter.”

“She ... opened a door to one of her nightmare chambers, then?”

“Yeah. Ready?”

“You’re going inside?”

“Yep.”

“For all you know, Athalia’s opened the chamber to—”

“To somewhere her daughter could survive.” They wouldn’t land inside a volcano or something.

“Maybe Begotten can give guests immunity to their lairs?”

“Maybe. I’ll deal with anything she throws my way. And then I’m going to kill her, too.”

“But—ah!” Beatrice squeaked, as Jack jumped into the hole.

The transition from one nightmare chamber into another was seamless. Just like when he’d went to visit Azamel in the tunnels, found nothing, and then took a magical stairway down into a room covered in sewed-up faces. How their lairs managed to blend into each other, and the physical world, he had no idea, but it meant things could get difficult. Lairs were evidently big, and complicated. Linking them together meant he might have to navigate a maze if he took too long chasing after Angela. Better to throw caution to the wind, and stay on her heels. Momentum! It was all about momentum.

He was not, not not not going to let this become a long, drawn out chase. He was ending this in the next five god damn minutes. Killing Angela might take longer, but in the next three hundred seconds, he was going to get his hands on her, break her legs, and make her watch as he drank her one remaining hunter to death.

While they'd jumped down a hole, the hole didn't go down. It went up. Physics, gravity specifically, decided to go on a bender, and before Jack could reorient himself, he was being thrown out of a hole by his own bodyweight. Up and up, and then down and down, onto more grass and dirt.

He got up quick. Beatrice had let go of him in the strange gravity reversal, and was lying next to him in the grass. Clean, green grass, a bit damp, and almost glowing under the moonlight. Where the fuck were they? It was cold, and it was windy. Some nearby trees bent and blew with the wind. Tombstones stood defiantly against it. And the moon above was enormous, without a cloud in the sky. The moon, hilariously, had a subtle skull face drawn by its craters.

A cemetery. Jack and Beatrice had tumbled out of an open grave, literally. And moments before, so had Angela and her friend. Said friend now had Angela's left arm over her shoulders, and the two were currently stumbling away toward what looked like an old church. Like, 1600s church, like a bunch of Amish had built a big barn in a day, put a cross over the front door, and some pews inside, church. He assumed there'd be pews, anyway, with no cushion, and probably all aimed at a pulpit.

"Angela!" Jack yelled. "Stop running already! Christ, I've had a long night, and I'm getting sick of having to chase you guys down."

"Fuck you! Fuck—" The words were lost under the explosion of a gun. Angela pointed her sawed-off shotgun at him, and boom.

He'd been ready for a fight though, and as the pellets slammed into him, his skin, his jaw and neck, his chest, and his right eye, the blood wall coated his skin and protected him. It was enough to make both hunters pause, before they pressed their backs against the large doors of the church, and disappeared inside.

For just a second, when the door was open, Jack could see into the dark church, and noticed movement. Large arms of bone shifted around in the darkness, and so did the two white dots he recognized as Athalia's eyes, inside the huge skull of her monster body. He was going to have to kill her, to get to Angela.

"Trissy, you good to walk on your own?"

"Yeah. I'm fine. Not fine to fight, though."

"Just stay behind me. I'll deal with them." He marched up the small wooden stairs up to the church door, and opened it.

Immediately, he was hit with bullets. Shotgun shells were unloaded upon him in quick succession, only for Angela to reload in record time, and do it again. The female hunter with her held down the trigger on her rifle, and the much larger bullets slammed into Jack's flesh.

Two hunters wouldn't be enough to stop him. He laughed as he walked through the storm of bullets, through the dark church lit only by their flashlights, and headed toward the muzzle flashes. He had to pour vitae into his blood shield to protect him, but it was enough to stop the assault of both hunters cold. A waste, but scaring them to death was half the fun.

"What is this?" he said, throwing up his arms. "Now? Now you finally accept your mother's help? Now, at the end, when it doesn't matter, now you accept the help of a creature you've been hunting for years?"

Angela glared at him, trembling. The two of them had their backs against the back wall of the small stage, and while they were trying their best to shoot him down, they made no headway. The reality of the inevitable was sinking in for them, and Jack relished the terror building in their eyes.

Jack glanced back, to see where Beatrice was. But, Beatrice was Obfuscating herself with her Cloak, and doing a pretty good job of it, too. He could see her, mostly, but she was a natural at the Cloak, and as long as she moved slowly in the darkness of the old church, he doubted anyone else would be able to notice her. Except for, of course, a nightmare monster of shadows.

Looking behind him had been a mistake. He knew it the moment he did it. Angela and the hunter were now out of bullets, and Jack didn't see any grenades or anything on them. He also didn't see Athalia anymore either, and he should have fucking realized she'd attack him the moment he turned his head, and the hunters had stopped shooting.

Athalia came down, and Jack snapped around, jumping back and away. She'd been hiding up in the darkness of the high ceiling, and had a good opportunity to attack him. Hell, she might have even hurt him. She was no Sándor or Azamel, but that didn't mean she wasn't dangerous. Maybe she knew it'd be pointless in the end, or maybe she was afraid of him after seeing the things he could do, but she didn't take the opportunity to attack him. She stood there, in the isle of the church, enormous hands crushing pews as she placed herself between Angela and Jack.

“Curse,” the black skeleton creature hissed, “remember our deal. Angela is beaten. Leave her be.”

“I'm not beaten!” the bitch in the back screamed, and she drew her knife, the shiny one. Heh, out of ammo. She tried to run at Jack as well, but her friend pulled her back.

“Fuck you, Athalia. Your daughter looks plenty threatening to me. I'm afraid I'm gonna have to put her in the ground.”

“You will not touch my daughter.”

Jack snorted, and started to pace the width of the small isle. He didn't glance toward Beatrice, or acknowledge her presence in any way. The others knew she had to be nearby, but they knew she was injured, and probably thought she was still outside. Then again, if this was Athalia's lair, there was a good chance Athalia knew more about her surroundings than was obvious. Besides, she was a creature of darkness, a monster of shadows. Maybe she'd be able to spot Beatrice no matter what.

She didn't seem to, though. Maybe she was too distracted with him, or she was baiting him. Maybe maybe maybe. The hunters also had a nasty habit of being able to spot Kindred protected by the Cloak, but it was so damn dark in the church, that as long as Trissy crouched low and kept pews between her and the targets, she might just make it.

"This wasn't part of the deal," he said. "Sparing your daughter was only if it was guaranteed she was incapacitated."

"She's beaten, Jack! She has nothing to defend herself with."

Rolling his eyes, Jack took a step forward. It was enough to make Athalia flinch, but not step aside. Making her flinch with a single step sent a shiver of pleasure up his spine; not as much as if she'd jumped back, but fear was fear, and it felt fucking good to use it.

"Get out of my way, Athalia. Your daughter doesn't even want your help." He looked past the skeleton, to the two women on the stage. They both had knives now, and looked ready to die swinging. But, even with that resolution to die in combat, there was fear there, plenty of fear, and he licked his lips as he smiled at them. Not enough on Angela though. There was time to correct that.

"She is my daughter!" The black skeleton creature, a beast with bone wings, a massive size with no legs to speak of, slammed her claws against the church floor. The wood splintered, and the church rumbled with the impact. "You will not touch her!"

Jack rolled his eyes, licked a fang, and stepped in closer. "Yeah, well, we'll see about that."

Chapter 111

~~Antoinette~~

Jack had seen her. She knew he must have. And yet, he gave chase into the forest, with Beatrice over his shoulders. So committed was he to his plan, to his need for revenge, that he would ignore her approach, the Prince of Dolareido, and his lover, to pursue it.

It was not Jack she saw. It was the curse, a relic from ages past, from those infuriating striges and their obsessive need to disrupt the lives of Kindred. The curse. The damned, bloody curse, that crawled into her thoughts all minutes of the night. Of course her love would use its power to achieve his goal, for vengeance, to settle the ghost of Julias over his shoulder, and the very real ghost of his sister. She knew it would happen, and yet, she was still surprised.

The carnage the curse had wrought was extreme, and she stared in nigh disbelief as she came closer to the forest. One hundred, two hundred, perhaps three hundred feet wide, a clearing of destroyed trees and shredded earth. And corpses. The corpses of crows and rats, but corpses nonetheless, thousands of them. Only Jack could have summoned such an army to his side, and only a battle between him, hunters, and Sándor especially, could have created a field of mayhem such as the one she walked through.

She checked back over her shoulder for Mark, or perhaps someone else. There had been someone else nearby, a young Kindred, but she did not see them, eyes locked onto Sándor as they had been. Mark, on the other hand, she knew was to follow behind her. And he was, though he stayed away, far away, a lowly creeping skeleton covered in grime, insects, and gore. One could barely see his shifting shadow in the darkness of the night.

A werewolf leapt down from a tree, Othello in her arms. She looked at Antoinette as she set the man against a large rock, near the center of a rather disturbing clearing connected to the zone of destruction. Fire awaited her, but the gargoyle made quick work of the flames, flattening them with his palms, one after another. And, unless her eyes deceived her, the nightmare itself began to fight back against the flames, trees regrowing when she was not looking, and grass rising from the ashes. In the clearing with the gargoyle, corpses were crucified to trees, and perhaps a dozen hunters lay dead in the burning grass.

“Prince,” Sándor said, “Jack has...” Sighing, the beast pointed to the forest with one hand, while his other three continued to squash the fires as if flame had no power over him. Perhaps it did not. Blood coated his mouth, and Antoinette did not need to guess whose it was. Jeremiah’s clothes, or what remained of them, were on the ground about his feet.

Azamel lay beside Sándor. Breathing, alive. Good. Antoinette would have questions, once she had a moment to process what was happening.

“I will be back, and I will deal with this insanity,” she said.

She took off into the woods, and Daniel followed. Once again, she had arrived too late to help in the battle, and found nothing but the remains. But, perhaps if she caught up to Jack, she could influence the outcome of the curse’s actions. Without a doubt, it was the curse enacting its will to create such chaos, and while Jack may have been willing to let it unleash its will, in order to achieve victory, he would not be able to stomach the carnage it might force upon him.

Past the clearing, she noticed a man sitting behind a tree. The others must have known of his presence, but did not react to him.

Harcourt then, the hunter Jack had mentioned in his message to her. She decided to leave him be, and kept after Jack's trail.

She and Daniel came to a dead stop, as a black wave of thick water oozed and boiled between some trees. An aura of dread, of fear, of death and of power flowed out from where it bubbled on the ground, and Antoinette steeled herself as she dashed toward it. Mark? It was similar, and yet Mark was but an ant compared to the aura that buried her. She knew that presence. Here? How? Why?

She expected a confrontation, of wills or of fists, but as she slipped past the twisting trees and found the spot where the ooze bubbled up from the dirt and grass, she found the ooze vacating. It slipped back into the earth, and it took something with it. Someone? An old woman with sickly thin limbs, and a tattered dress, disappeared into a black void.

And then, Black Blood was gone. It was Black Blood, it had to be. The cold air, the sense of decay and death, as if someone had distilled a cemetery, its tombstones and mausoleums, into perfume. It could only be that blasted spirit. But it was gone, and had taken someone with it.

Elen. The shaman. The flesh witch.

She bit down her teeth, and followed after the curse currently controlling her little Ventrue. Black Blood and Jacob could be dealt with later. For now, her love mattered more.

---

~~Beatrice~~

Sneaking in the shadows with her injuries was difficult. She was injured, in pain, and ravenous. No more blood flowed through her, and she was forced to run on fumes to power her Cloak. No choice. If she let Athalia stop her, this opportunity might slip away. She had to, even if she had to drain herself until she fell into torpor, she had to do it. At this moment, nothing else mattered.

Jack shook his head, snarling. “Athalia, you know damn well she has to die. She’s a hunter, and—”

“Beatrice!” the skeleton shrieked, and lifted her giant skeleton head to look around. Beatrice froze solid. She knows you’re here. Not like you could hide from a monster of darkness, in darkness. Do it now, before she stops you. “I know you’re in here. The shadows will not hide you from me. I will—”

Bang.

The hunter beside Angela went down, and her blood splattered against the wood behind her. Beatrice had aimed well, and the bullet went straight. The hunter went down like a bag of sand, a hole in her head, and chunks of her brains everywhere. It was a church in a nightmare, so, it felt kinda proper to fill it up with murder. Angela yelped and jumped back, like a frightened animal.

Athalia, the giant, black, alien skeleton thing with no legs, turned to face her, shock somehow chiseled into her bone face. Triss looked at her from halfway along the wall of the church, outside the pews, pistol hanging at her side.

“Thought I might need this,” she said, “cause my legs are all fucked up. In all the chaos, especially when Sándor showed up, the real Sándor, and broke Jeremiah’s ritual, it was easy to take a moment to find a gun.” And she knew how to use a pistol like this. You checked the slide and flipped the safety. Easy.

“Beatrice, do not—”

Jack stepped up to the woman, the huge monster creature, and glared. “Athalia, the only reason I haven’t broken you in two, or Dominated you and made you move, is because you’re a creature, like me, like Trissy, like all of us. But if you don't get out of my way, I'll do more than break you. I'll make you watch."

Triss winced, and looked away from the skeleton monster. Jack, this curse Jack, may have had more going on in his head than Triss realized, but that didn't change that he was so fucking twisted, it made her sick. Twisted, cruel, and sick. Jacob paled in comparison to how fucking mean the kid was, and the shit he was willing to do to make his desires a reality.

Asking him to Dominate some kine, and bring them to Jacob for the execution and ritual to the Crone, may have hurt Jack, but this Jack must have enjoyed it.

Triss looked to Angela, who clutched her knife in front of her, eyes wide, and panic ripping through her. This was the fucking cunt who killed Jack's sister, and nearly killed his mother. This was the psycho who stood with Jeremiah, shoulder to shoulder, when the man threw away the lives of his hunters, for a shot at killing Azamel. This was the bitch who killed her Superman. Triss was going to enjoy killing her.

"You're a fucking monster!" Angela said. "All of you! Fucking monsters, every last one of you. You kill humans, you eat them, you hunt them and you infect them! Monsters! Monsters! Monsters!" Tears were in her eyes now, and she almost tripped over her fellow hunter's leg as she stepped further back. "You killed Jeremiah! My father!" She knew she was trapped. She knew the only reason Beatrice hadn't shot her too, was because getting shot to death was too quick a death for her. She knew the only thing standing between her and a painful, torturous end, was the monster in front of her, her mom, the monster she'd been looking to kill for years.

The struggle was blatant on her face, and Beatrice couldn't help but smile as she took a step closer.

“Angela, please!” Athalia turned more, until she was looking at Angela on the stage. “Please, I’m trying to help you! I know I couldn’t help you before. I know I ... that I ruined your life, daughter. Please, let me help you now, before these—”

“Fuck you, monster! You’re not—”

“I am your mother, Angie!”

“Don’t call me that!” The hunter’s voice rose so high, it silenced them all. They all stood frozen, stunned, as Angela took a step closer to the stage edge, undoing her retreat seconds before. “Jeremiah is the only family I ever had. And now he’s dead! Killed, by monsters. All of you, you’re nothing but monsters.” Tears flowed from her eyes until they dripped from her chin. “We would have done anything to make sure you all died. If I had to kill hundreds, thousands of innocents, to make sure your kind were wiped out, I would! It’d save more lives, in the end. And you!” She pointed to Jack, eyes wide, hand shaking. “You. You’re the worst thing I’ve ever run into, ever dealt with. You—”

Beatrice shot her in the stomach. The shock on Angela’s crying face was delicious, for a second. As the weeping girl fell onto her ass next to her dead friend, Athalia turned and lunged for Beatrice. She didn’t get far. Jack grabbed a pew, a long, heavy slab of wood, and slammed it down on the skeleton monster. Wood shattered, splinters and shards going everywhere. He hadn’t been gentle, and Athalia crashed down into the floor of her nightmare church. She didn’t get back up.

Beatrice looked down at the skeleton monster, who had one of her huge arms outstretched, reaching for her. Triss was on the outside edge of the church, though, and as long as she stayed that way as she walked toward Angela, the monster couldn’t reach her. It was hard, damn hard, to not look down at Athalia, as she marched toward her daughter, but she managed. Angela was the target. Ignore Athalia. Nothing else mattered.

Before Athalia could recover and get back up, Jack came around to her face, and met her eyes, her strange, skull eyes with small glowing white dots in them, and snarled.

“Do not move from this spot, and do not interfere.” His voice was resonant, filling the church with far more bass than the little guy should have been able to summon. But, he did, and Triss felt his voice roll through her as the curse stared down into Athalia’s soul.

The monster did not move.

“Please ... Jack ... she’s my daughter.”

“Your daughter killed my sister, and my sire. Your daughter stabbed my mother. Your daughter has slaughtered ... I’m wasting my breath, aren’t I? I could describe a thousand atrocities your daughter’s committed, and it just wouldn’t matter, would it?” He squatted down in front of Athalia’s huge, strange, alien skull, and shook his head like an annoyed dog trainer. “Where’s Fiona? What’d you do to her?”

“Nothing. She’s ... in Azamel’s lair, waiting. I told her Jeremiah was likely to go there.”

“You really wanted to save Azamel, didn’t you?” Triss said. Fiona, spider monster Fiona at least, was supposed to help with the assault on the hunters if things went into the dream. They did, and instead of getting her help, Athalia told Fiona to stay out of the way, essentially. At least if Fiona was in Azamel’s lair, she might have been able to help the old woman if Jeremiah had gone there.

Christ, Athalia had risked their lives on that gambit. If any paranormals had died on this assault, Triss probably would have shot Athalia in the head, because she kinda deserved it. But maybe Athalia knew Jack, the cursed Jack, would be able to handle whatever Jeremiah threw at him. The whole time, she'd been looking for an opportunity to save her daughter, even if it meant they all died. It was hard to hate her for that, even if she did deserve the hate, and worse. She was a mom, doing mom things.

“... yes, I did. Azamel's been our caregiver, and we owe her much.” The skeleton monster shook her head as her massive claws dug at the church floor. Did she have a way out of this nightmare chamber? Cause it certainly seemed like a dead end. Maybe she expected Angela to accept her help faster. Maybe she had another escape route, from this chamber into another, and into another, and into another, and Jack had simply caught up faster than she'd hoped.

As Athalia began to sob, the joy Triss felt drained away, until all that was left were the sounds of the weeping monster. It was a fucking sad night, for everyone. Try as she might to be elated over this, to find the joy she had moments before, Triss couldn't wipe away the cold feeling in her gut that only grew with every moment.

“She's a monster!” Angela said, spitting blood over her lips as she did. “You ... you all are ... monsters ... every last one of you. Fucking monsters. You killed Dad. You ... you...”

“Please don't kill my daughter, Jack.”

Jack stepped over Athalia like stepping over roadkill, and made his way toward the stage, and Angela. “She's got to die,” he said, speaking to Athalia, eyes on Angela, “and you know it.”

Athalia may have been bound by Jack's Dominate to not move from her spot, but that didn't mean she couldn't turn around and watch the two vampires closing in on her daughter. She was crying. In her monster form, it didn't sound like sobs, but a strange, grinding rasp, quiet, and unnerving.

Jack and Beatrice stood on the stage, and looked down at Angela. She still had her knife, and she held it in front of her with one hand, like she'd be able to use it in a fight. But, she was sitting on her ass, back to the wall behind her, and her blood was pooling down the fingers of her other hand, pressed to her gut.

“Do you know who I am?” Beatrice said.

Angela hocked up a nasty, bloody bit of snot and saliva onto Beatrice's pants. Triss could have dodged it, even with her busted legs barely held together by what little vitae she had. But, something about the moment, the scene before her, of a defeated, crying human expending their last ounce of effort to spite her, demanded she let the hunter have her final act of defiance.

“I'll take that as a no.” Beatrice squatted down in front of Angela, ignored the corpse next to her, and glared. She had a good glare, when she stared hard with her snake eyes. It was enough to unnerve other Kindred, let alone a bleeding kine. “Beatrice. In the hospital, when you were going to kill Jack's mom, you killed a vampire named Julias. Julias was Jack's sire. He was also my lover.”

Maybe Angela realized what Beatrice had realized, that in this final moment, some rules weren't to be broken. Angela got to have her last moment of heroic defiance, and Beatrice got to have her evil villain monologue speech.

“Vampires don't have lovers. You have—”

Beatrice snarled, loudly, until she felt her guts threaten to spill from how tight her abs clenched. She jammed the barrel of the pistol against Angela's forehead, hard enough to pin Angela's head to the wall. The bitch dropped her knife with the impact, and once her brains probably stopped rattling around in her head, her eyes opened wide, meeting Beatrice's.

“He was the love of my life, you fucking bitch! He was my everything. My ... everything.” Like a tidal wave, everything she’d been keeping down slammed into her. The sound of his voice, the touch of his fingers, the way he held her from behind and set his chin on her head, the way he told jokes, bad ones, the way he could be loving and soft one moment, then imposing and powerful the next.

If she’d been blushing life, she’d have cried tears, as she held the gun to Angela’s head. This person was the reason the greatest thing she’d ever had in her life was gone, this fucked up psychopath, this broken woman, this idiot. All Angela was, was a disturbed kine who’d met up with a fucker named Jeremiah. He’d slipped into her life, filled the parent role, and channeled her fucked up brain into being a hunter.

With a gun to her head, Angela froze, but the defiance in her eyes didn’t leave. Beatrice thought that, just maybe, Angela would break, and become a sobbing baby who’d whine and beg for her life. She didn’t. As the cruel, harsh reality of a gun against her head sank in, Angela’s face changed into something Beatrice never expected.

She looked relieved.

“Don’t shoot her,” Jack said, grin growing as he stared down at the woman. “At least not yet. Come on, she killed Julias. I was there. She ordered another hunter to shoot him dead, when the man had given everything he could to save my life, Jack’s life, and my mother’s. She executed him, Beatrice. The man was on his knees, spent and ruined.” He squatted down next to her, mad smile growing wider as he looked the woman in the eyes. “We should have some fun with her at least. I can make her pull her intestines out, one foot at a time. I can make her do worse. I still owe her for torturing me.”

Beatrice slowly turned her head from Angela, to the demon next to her. Tony, Viktor, they'd been fucking assholes, but even they didn't talk like that. What the fuck.

And now that she was here, with a gun pressed to the head of the woman who ruined her life, the idea of torturing her was fading away. Dancing in her blood, delighting in her pain, none of that appealed to her anymore. Maybe it was because Jack was next to her, providing a very clear image of what it'd be like to completely give into her Beast's dark urges. Or maybe it was because Athalia was forty feet away in the center of a creepy church, crying as inevitability finally came crashing down. Or maybe it was because Angela was nothing more than a rabid animal, deranged and violent, and needed to die.

There had been satisfaction, for a little while. Beatrice loved watching the fuckers get destroyed by Jack, but that part was over. Now it was just slaughter. She thought she wanted that. She thought she wanted to string Angela upside down, and slit her throat, after thoroughly beating her within an inch of her life. She'd plant Nightmares in the girl's head, if she could get past the warding on the woman's body. Jack could get past them easily, and he'd happily make her torture herself to death in ways Beatrice probably couldn't even imagine. And she thought she'd love that. Now, in the end, she knew she wouldn't.

"Do it," Angela whispered. Her voice was a wavering mess, on the verge of sobs again, but never breaking. Even as tears continued to stream down her face, she kept her eyes open, glaring at the two vampires. "Do it."

"Alright ... Angela." Triss lowered her head, stood up, and pointed the gun at Angela once again.

The world froze, as it had a habit of doing the past couple years. Often, something big would happen, something dangerous, something epic, something deadly, and everything would freeze as her brain tried to understand and process the sensory overload. But, this wasn't like those times. This was like that one other time the world froze for her, when she saw Jack's face, seconds before he told her Julias was dead. This was the world freezing because it'd grown so cold, it had to. This was the god damn universe telling her, forcing her to feel with agonizing cruelty, the reality of what was happening.

A final tear dripped off of Angela's chin, and Triss pulled the trigger.

The bullet hit Angela's head, and came out the back end, with all the horrific detail Triss didn't want to see anymore. She forced herself to watch, forced herself to meet Angela's dying gaze, and watch the light leave her eyes as her brains splattered the wall behind her. The pistol fell from her hand. The world ceased to be for a few seconds, an empty void of nothingness left in the wake of the gunshot. Vengeance had. Mission successful.

All she felt, was cold.

The pistol hit the wood of the stage, and Athalia shrieked. Her alien voice, fucking freaky as it was, sounded a hundred times worse as the Begotten erupted into horrible cries of rage and sadness. So much for victory. So much for feeling satisfied. All she could feel, was the cries of agony of Athalia, and not because of empathy. She didn't care about Athalia, not a lot, at least, but the mother's desperate screams captured the empty feeling overwhelming Triss's insides. This sucked.

"Trissy, really?" Snorting, Jack kicked Angela's leg, hard enough that it snapped up over her other leg, and hip. Crack. "We could have had fun with her. I was looking forward to making her rip her fingernails off."

“You said you wouldn’t kill her, if she was defeated!” Athalia screamed.

“And you said you’d come help us catch her.” Jack turned on his heel, like he was dancing, and marched over to Athalia. “We could have died, because of you. Give me one reason I shouldn’t—”

The church doors opened. Beatrice knew who it was before the two became visible. The presence of the two vampires approaching the church had been massive, and obvious.

The Prince and the sheriff stepped into the church, Daniel first, with his ridiculously long sword held ready. Antoinette was only a foot behind him, and Triss smiled as she realized the Prince wasn’t wearing any shoes or socks. Well, it did kind of make sense. Shoes, even combat boots, paled in comparison to the grip and feedback actual feet provided. And it wasn’t like stepping on broken glass or a nail would stop an elder.

“Annie! Dan. Didn’t expect you guys to come with Azamel. Didn’t expect Azamel to get involved at all, really.” Jack offered the two of them a small wave, before he unleashed a heavy kick into the enormous skeleton monster’s skull. If he’d been heavier, he could have put more power into it, and likely pierced the bone. But he only used enough strength to send the huge skull away from him several feet, and earn a grunt from the still weeping mother—woman.

Triss stayed on the stage, and watched the train wreck unfold before her. Daniel looked ready to fight, eyes locked solidly on Jack. Antoinette looked like she was ready to deliver a hard speech in a board meeting. Both looked ready to kill.

“Where’s Elen?” Jack said. “I left her on the ground, when I knew you two were following me. Tempted to kill her, but, you know, she could be useful.”

The two elders looked between each other, each offering only the tiniest sliver of shock through their expressions, before they both solidified to stone again.

“Jack,” Antoinette said, taking several steps forward. “The battle is over. Jeremiah is dead, and ... so is Angela.” Her guard was up, weight on the balls of her feet, and vitae coursing through her. Didn’t need Auspex to feel the power flowing from her. She’d come ready for a fight, and for a moment, Triss couldn’t figure out why. Did she expect to fight Athalia, or the two final hunters? No...

She’d come ready to fight Jack.

“Yeap. Mission successful. Though I’m wondering about this bitch right here.” Again, Jack kicked Athalia, this time one of her enormous arms. Same result. Her arm flung away from the impact, crashing into some pews and knocking them over. If there was any wiggle room in Jack’s Dominate for her to try and resist, or at least not flop around like a dying fish, she didn’t use it. She lay there, sobbing, and turned her head toward the stage.

This whole fucking night sucked, and it was only getting worse.

“This is ... Athalia, I imagine,” Antoinette said. “What has she done?”

“Tried to save her daughter. Bailed out on helping us. I’m thinking, I’ll break every finger in this monster body of hers. Teach her to—”

“Jack.” Antoinette came closer, and stared down at the boy as she came within arm’s reach of him. “She was a mother who wanted to spare her daughter. And you should spare her.”

“What? Why the fuck would I do that? She—”

“Jack.” She came in closer again, until only a foot separated her from the tiny, shirtless Ventrue. “You would not harm Athalia.”

Jack stepped back. Triss couldn't see his face from where she was on the stage, but the body language was clear: startled, and then annoyed.

“Are you shitting me, Prince? She nearly got my crew killed. I could have died. Me. Me! I could have died because of her selfishness.” The hypocrisy of the statement was probably lost on the curse.

“Jack ... she is just a mother, who wanted to save her daughter. Surely you must be able to understand that.”

The kid swung his arm out in front of him, dismissing her words as if they were utter insanity. “She's a fucking ... traitor ... and...”

It didn't come quickly, like Triss thought it might. Slowly, as if waking up from a dream, Jack looked around at the mess around him, the destroyed pews, the weeping monster, and the two bodies on the church stage. It was a sickening scene, and Triss found herself taking a step away from the two dead kine, as if she'd committed a crime. She hadn't, she knew that, but that didn't change that the scene of the two dead hunters was a sobering sight.

Sobering for more than just her. Jack looked up to her where she was, still on the stage, then to the bodies, then to Antoinette and Daniel, then back down to Athalia.

“I ... I uh...” He teetered for a moment, before reaching to grab his side, as if he'd been stabbed. “I ... I'm not ... I won't...” His other hand found his head, and he rubbed his hair in that way he always did, as he stared down at Athalia. “I ... won't ... won't...”

After taking a deep, pointless breath, Beatrice walked through the pews, down to Athalia, around her, and then to Jack. “It's over, man.

It's ... it's over.”

Jack looked up to her, eyes wide with panic. He blinked a hundred million times, before looking to the stage again, and the two corpses there. It was a long moment of silence, except for Athalia's sobs, before Jack, trembling, took a few steps closer to Athalia's giant skull.

“You're ... released.”

The skeleton creature sat up, stared at the small boy standing beside her, and the world froze again. The tension was there, Triss could feel it, a string ready to snap. If it did, Athalia would attack, maybe try and slice Jack open. Maybe try and slice her open? Unless someone jumped in the way, Triss would get cut to ribbons if the giant, half-body skeleton creature nailed her with one set of those claws.

As the monster got up onto her hands, and her strange bone wings spread out behind her, she stared at Beatrice. And, Beatrice met her gaze, for a few seconds at least. There wasn't much to say. 'I'm sorry I killed your daughter'. 'Be happy I didn't torture her'. 'Be especially happy I didn't let Jack torture her'. 'I hate you for defending your psychopath offspring'. 'I can't imagine the pain you're going through'. It'd have all been empty words. There was no way anything Triss said could have come across as anything other than insulting, pandering, bullshit.

The best she could manage, was a few seconds of eye contact with the strange monster, and her two white dots for eyes inside her large, shadowy eye sockets. Then, she lowered her gaze, and lowered her guard as well. Yeap, she was done. Take your shot, Athalia, if you really want it.

The skeleton stared at her for many long, painful seconds, before she walked past her. She had no legs, so her huge hands were her legs, and her palms didn't make a sound as she walked across the church floor toward her daughter's corpse.

"We ... we should ... go," Jack said. Jack, the real Jack, the original, and not the curse that made Beatrice want to run in the opposite direction every time they met eyes, said that. Thank god. Thank fucking god.

It was over. Fucking finally, it was over. Are you happy now, Julias? Probably not.

---

~~Jack~~

Are you happy now, Julias? Did I do good? Was it worth it?

Whether Athalia left the gateway open, or had reopened it, he didn't know, but the hole in the grave was still there. Daniel went in first, then him, then Antoinette and Beatrice. As they jumped in, he could hear Athalia screaming in the church, weeping, and shrieking. It sounded like his sister did, his ghost sister, the wailing screams of a banshee.

He was going to be sick. He was a vampire, a corpse, and unless he Blushed Life, he wasn't going to be vomiting. But even without the Blush, he felt sick, to his bones, to his soul.

"I was ... awake," he said, once the four of them were back in the forest of Sándor's nightmare. "Aware, I mean. I ... I saw everything. I remember everything. I—where's Elen?"

"We can discuss the shaman later," Antoinette said. "But know that she is detained."

Jack looked up at the white-haired vampire, and caught her glance for a moment. There was something there, in her gaze, that told him she wasn't saying everything, and hiding even more than was obvious.

"Triss, you good to walk?" he said, looking back over his shoulder.

He almost wished he didn't. Of course she'd seen all the shit he'd done, the destruction he'd created, and the pain he'd inflicted. Hell, she'd probably been hoping he'd have been as nasty as he was, at first. As the mission went on, he could see her resolve waning, the more people died, the more horrible things got. And at the end there, when he'd tried to goad her into having a torture-fest, that conversation stuck out in his memories and made him sick. Really, really fucking sick.

Angela was dead, though. Beatrice killed her; even got to have some final words, too. He felt happy about that. Athalia was devastated, and he felt horrible about that. Jeremiah was dead, killed by Sándor, who apparently had more reasons than they realized to want the man dead. He felt good about that. But, Azamel had been seriously injured by Jeremiah and his crazy ritual. He felt sad about that. Much as Azamel was a bitch, she wasn't nearly as bad as Jeremiah thought she was.

"Yeah, I'm good," Triss said. She tried to meet his eyes, but it didn't last. Thinking the same thoughts he was, probably. Mission successful, but it didn't feel as good as they'd hoped.

It took a few minutes to get back to the clearing where all the shit had gone down. The fire was out, and the smell of cinders was in the air. As they broke through the walls of trees and into the open space, the damage the fire had done, and the much greater damage Jack and Sándor's Horror had done, looked like a scar on the land. If it'd been real, people would have assumed a bomb had gone off, a big one, the kind used to blow up large buildings. But it wasn't real, and even as Jack walked toward the clearing where Sándor stood, he noticed some of the damage was repairing itself. It was subtle, hidden, but in the corner of his eyes, he could see the trees regrowing, reforming, along with the grass.

Mulder and Scully came to him, as he knew they would. When they perched on his bare shoulders, they weren't as gentle as they should have been, and he winced as their claws scratched his skin. But it was understandable. They both crooned and crowed, and rubbed their heads against his neck and ears.

"I'm fine, guys, I'm fine." They didn't seem convinced. Or maybe, they were happy he was back, and not the other Jack. "You guys were great tonight, really great. That ... that other ... Jack, he ... he didn't..." With a heavy hand, Jack gestured to the dead rats and crows that littered the forest floor. "Don't listen to other Jack, if it puts your lives on the line, ok?" They both nodded, as if they knew who other Jack was, and what kind of villain he was. "Do me a favor, if you're up to it? Get Aaron, Jen, and her prisoners, ok?"

The two crows nodded, and took off. Mulder remained for a few seconds though, and Jack could see he was hesitant to leave him; worried, about him. Jack leaned his head toward the bird, and nudged his nose into his friend's neck until the bird eventually took off.

With both birds gone, he scanned the clearing for his crew. Harcourt was hiding behind a tree, but in reality, everyone was just ignoring him for now. Clara, in her human form, stood by the altar, and she was looking over Othello, who sat against the side of the big rock. He was still in torpor, but at least he was out of the tree, and the hole in his chest seemed smaller than the branch he'd been skewered on would have left. Maybe Clara gave him some of her blood.

More surprising was Damien, and Fiona. Judging by how Fiona scooped Damien off the altar rock and clutched him close, borderline panic blatant on her spider legs and clutching arms, she'd just arrived. She wasn't crying, but she was close, and she trembled a little as she clutched the vampire tight to her body.

"Jack!" she said, turning her head to stare at him; he thought. She had no eyes, so knowing if she was staring was hard to do. "Jack, you ... you're..." Vrrall's voice was so different to Fiona's, it took a second for him to adjust.

"Angela's dead," he said, and he couldn't keep a sigh out of the proclamation. "All the hunters are dead." Barring those still in the city, or captured. No need to bring them up and ruin the victory.

Fiona's smile brightened, and she nodded before tightening her grip on the vampire. "And Athalia?"

"Alive, and unharmed. And..." His head dropped again. Neck pain was in his future, if tonight continued as it did. "She tried to save her daughter, but ... but..." She could have attacked him, in the church. She didn't. Much as she loved her daughter, she wasn't willing to attack Jack. At first he thought it was because she was afraid of the curse, but in retrospect, Athalia would have fought a volcano if it meant saving her daughter, under normal circumstances. No, she didn't hit him, because he wasn't her enemy.

And they'd killed her daughter anyway. He winced and glanced back at Triss. She had the same look in her eyes he knew he probably did. Guilt. They shouldn't feel guilty. They'd saved other Kindred from these hunters, and got revenge on a woman who was a psychopath and needed to be put down anyway. Guilt was the last thing they should have been feeling. But the sounds Athalia had made, and the destroyed look in her alien eyes, had been horrible.

The whole fucking night was horrible.

The gargoyle turned to face them, but once he saw them, and the blood covering them, he looked satisfied. He got to his knees beside Azamel, and set one of his many hands on her side.

Azamel. Jack gulped as he stepped around her titanic leg, and moved in front of her. She was on her side, breathing, but it didn't sound good. Who the fuck knew what a monster like this would sound like when breathing normally, but she sounded exhausted, and beaten. Her eyes were open, and Jack shivered as he came in close to her face, and those huge eyes. Her tusks were big enough that he had to step around them, as well.

“How you doing, Azamel?” he said.

The elephant creature tried to laugh, a quiet — relative to her usual noises — trumpeting noise, before her trunk went still again. “I live.”

“You sure?” He offered his best, goofy smile, anything to ease the tension and sorrow grating at his insides. “You look like hell.”

A quiet chuckle from the monster announced his success. “Yes, but I do live ... for now.” She tried to sit up, but even with four hands pressing on the grass, she couldn't get her body upright.

“Are you—”

“I will heal, little vampire. But it will take time, and I ... I...”

He winced as his head dropped, again. She didn't need to say it. The soul ritual or whatever the fuck it was may not have been completed, but that didn't change that Jeremiah did some damage to her, and not just to her, but her her, the stuff underneath the skin. She was wounded down to the soul, or her Horror, or whatever. They weren't wounds that healed like flesh, and she didn't know if she'd recover.

“Sándor,” he said, “how are you feeling? I ... should apologize. The curse, it—”

“I am free,” the gargoyle said, bass-filled voice almost enough to make Jack’s teeth rattle. “Thank you.” As if Azamel’s exhaustion was contagious, the gargoyle fell onto a knee, before slumping onto his side against a tree, beside the giant elephant monster.

“I would have killed you, if that continued much longer,” Jack said. “Er, I assume if I kill your Horror, you—”

“Yes. That would kill me.” He shook his head, and his mighty horns grazed against the tree behind him. It was quickly becoming obvious the gargoyle didn’t enjoy chatting. A stoic dude. “Azamel explained the curse to me. I ... You have my sympathies, Jack.”

The big gargoyle had sympathies, for him? The creature whose family had been killed by Jeremiah, and had been a slave to the man for who knew how long, was pitying him? The words struck Jack cold, and he took a deep breath as he tried to ignore the Beast in his guts.

“Thanks...” He tried to look at Antoinette, who seemed content to follow and listen, but a quick glance was scarring. Despite the obvious anger he could feel, her frustration that he’d done something this stupid, it wasn’t the most powerful emotion he could sense from her. She wore her mask, her Prince mask, as she always did, but he’d been around her for two years now, and could recognize the more subtle things that told how she truly felt. She could have probably hid those ticks, if she wanted to, but she didn’t.

The truer emotion she was feeling, was more pity, redoubled by Sándor’s comment. She was pitying him, the same as the Begotten was. Every time she seamlessly avoided stepping on any of the bird, rat, or hunter corpses around, she looked to him through the corner of her eye, and bit her bottom lip slightly. Not in the sexy way, but in the ‘oh god my poor love, how will he ever survive this?’ sort of way.

In the past, it'd have pissed him off. Now, he was starting to think, he could accept a little pity. Just a little. After all, he was going to be pitying Athalia until she was likely to kill him.

“Clara,” he said, and he walked over to where she sat, next to the unconscious Othello, against the altar rock. “You ok?”

“Yep.” She saluted him, and even met his gaze. He wished she hadn't. There was something there, something new in her eyes, something that replaced the borderline flirtation she usually held when looking at him. For a second, he thought it was concern, and it was, but that was mostly buried under something else. Fear. Not a lot, not enough to overpower her expression, but he recognized fear.

God damn it.

“Um ... hello.”

They all turned around, and looked at the tree they all knew Harcourt had been hiding behind. He hadn't moved from there, since helping Damien. A frightened animal knew better than to move, when escape wasn't an option. They played dead, or bit anything that came close. Playing nice, on the other hand, wasn't the usual, but it was Harcourt's only choice if he wanted to live.

Once everyone slowly settled their monstrous gazes on the hunter, he froze solid, and for the life of him, Jack couldn't help but smile a little. Three monsters, four conscious vampires, and one werewolf, any of which could have taken on multiple hunters at once. And all of them were looking at Harcourt like he might be an enemy. Poor guy.

“Harcourt's the reason we were able to pull this off,” Jack said, looking to Antoinette. “We made a deal. There's two other hunters spared, and—and there they are.” Jennifer and Aaron came down along the village road, and while Aaron kept his cool, Jennifer did not. Her eyes were wide with fascination and fright as she looked the surroundings up and down. They kept the two hunters in front of them, and the two hunters looked more terrified than anyone else, by far. They were no threat.

Two crows flew overhead, and Jack smiled up at Mulder and Scully as they found a perch on a tree nearby. Too many unknown faces around for them to feel comfortable on his shoulder.

“Marge! Dennis!” Harcourt ran out to meet them as they bordered on the forest edge. Daniel reached for his sword, but Jack threw the man a quick glance. He wasn’t in a position to boss a sheriff around, and—maybe he was? Maybe he was strong enough to beat Daniel in a fight? No, he refused let the curse twist his thoughts. Logic, civility, they were his tools, his best tools.

Christ, how easy it was to let power corrupt. Make a decision you think is the right one, and instead of dealing with others and red tape, simply brute force your decision onto everyone else with that power. It was fine as long as it was done with good intentions, right? The birthing thoughts of a tyrant.

Daniel met his gaze, and held it for a couple seconds longer than Jack thought he would. For a moment, the possibility that Daniel would act and kill the three hunters was very real. But, Antoinette said nothing. She folded her arms across her chest, and watched the three hunters, ready to kill at a moment’s notice, same as Daniel. To them, the hunters were the only threats in the room.

“You promised them amnesty?” Antoinette said.

“I ... yeah, basically. For Harcourt, and at his request, any hunters that laid down their arms.” And now the tricky part, following through on promises he hadn’t been in a position to make.

Jennifer ran to Beatrice, wrapped her arms around her, and squeezed. Aaron ran to Othello, and shook the man a few times by the shoulder before sitting beside him. Fiona guarded over Damien, clutching him tightly to her dark, beautiful spider body. Sándor sat by Azamel, exhausted and, unless Jack was reading him wrong, ready to pass out. He might have even been ready to cry, if he'd been alone. Considering what he'd just done, and what Jeremiah had done to him, Jack wasn't surprised. Harcourt, and Marge and Dennis hugged each other in the chaos, and they were crying, Marge loudly, and the two guys doing their best to keep their tears silent. Christ, what a mess.

And Antoinette could see it, too. It was a mess, a huge fucking mess. Decisions could be made later.

"I will take the three hunters into custody," she said. "I will talk with them, and we will see what I allow."

"Fuck, really?" Harcourt said. The reality of his situation was finally sinking in, the adrenaline of the action fading away. "I thought, since I helped Jack that ... um ... I guess we don't have a choice, do we?" He wiped away a tear, recovering quickly from his emotional reunion, but it was obvious he was terrified of what Antoinette might do to him.

"No. You do not. Understand that Dolareido is my city, hunter, and you three are prisoners of war. It is only by my good graces, and Jack's impulsive actions, that you survive our encounter at all." She came a step closer to the hunter, glared ice daggers into his eyes, and the man visibly shrank. "Daniel, take them to the tower, and imprison th ... constrain them, in the first floor cells." Well, at least she took a stab at some measure of civility.

Harcourt looked to Jack, but Jack nodded back to him, confident. As long as the hunters didn't know some sort of weakness about Dolareido they could exploit, Antoinette would be lenient. Daniel probably less so, but he wasn't the one making the decisions.

Daniel stepped up to the three hunters, and they quivered. They'd surrendered to a powerful and terrible enemy, as far as Marge and Dennis were concerned; it was painted on their faces. One wrong move, and they'd get sliced up, Kissed to death, or embraced against their will. A bunch of bullshit that wasn't accurate, at least not in Dolareido, but Dolareido was unique. According to Harcourt, vampires could get pretty nasty in other cities.

Yeah, as if the curse hadn't just unleashed a whole bunch of nasty for all of them to see. And now, when he looked to the hunters, he could see fear. A mountain of fear. A fucking galaxy of fear. As much as Marge and Dennis looked at everyone, especially Antoinette and Daniel, with considerable fear, they looked at Jack with abject terror. In the past, it'd have made him happy to know the hunters feared him so. Now, it only added to the nausea eating at him.

Elen's whereabouts itched at him. She couldn't have gotten up and walked away, not with a body like that. Someone had to have come and taken her, and the only people capable of that, Jack was looking at. No one else was in the nightmare. Right?

Antoinette had dismissed worrying about her. Had she taken Elen somewhere before coming into Athalia's nightmare? No way, no time. Did someone else come? The portals were still open, and—“Oh shit! Are the doors still open?” Jack said.

“The door I opened still is,” Beatrice said. “I can close it by ending the ritual. And it'll probably close with sunrise, anyway.”

Aaron shook his head. “The one Jeremiah cut open isn't. It closed the moment I stopped holding it open.”

“Don't worry,” Fiona said. “I can take us out. Or ... or Sándor can.” The spider woman looked — again, Jack could only guess she was looking — at Azamel, and sighed. “Azamel will want to stay in the nightmare, for now, until she ... heals.”

“Yes, she will,” the elephant said with the labor of someone breathing on one lung.

If there was any doubt that Azamel wasn't deeply injured, Fiona wiped it away. Azamel was hurt, badly. And fuck him, after all this, it was a sour note that really jived with the sour mess he'd left in Athalia's chamber, minutes ago.

What was that old line? Gotta take the bitter with the sweet? For once, it'd be great if it was just sweet, and not bitter.

God, he missed candy. Heh, random thought.

“Surprised you didn't see me, Prince, when you showed up,” Aaron said. “I was in the ... I guess I was literally in the wall, behind you. More in the flesh chamber, than in the nightmare. Could barely see through the hole.” The nightmare did keep trying to go back to its original state, so that made sense.

The Prince considered that for a moment, tapped her chin as she looked at Aaron, before finally turning to Jack. “Jack, come with me. The rest of you”—Antoinette turned and faced the unusual group—“should go home. Sándor, I freed you from my cell, but if you remain in Dolareido, you will still be under my rule. If you decide to stay, visit my tower as soon as possible.” Slowly, she turned to look back at Beatrice, who was sharing a weak hug with Jen. It looked like she wanted to hug harder, but the poor girl was beat to fuck. “All Kindred present will visit my tower tomorrow night, understood?”

If Othello were conscious, Jack got the impression he might say something stupid, like ‘you're not our boss’. And then Antoinette would promptly break his arm, given the ice Jack could see in her eyes. It was true that, while none of them were members of the Ordo Dracul, the Prince was still the Prince, and they all had to answer to her. Normally she'd go through their bosses, but she was here, in person, and it was perfectly within her rights to dole out some orders, and punishment, if she felt like it.

“Sándor,” she continued, “can you open a doorway to ... somewhere convenient?”

The gargoyle nodded, before gesturing to the rest of them with one of his many hands. “You all can ... stay, if needed. It’s ... been a long time, since others have...” His voice trailed off, and he held still as he looked down. Completely still, like a statue.

The gargoyle, despite the booming bass and almost hidden rasp underneath his voice, talked casually, if rather unemotionally. It was strange. When something that big and ancient-looking spoke, you expected to hear something regal. And he did, a little, in how calmly he spoke, and how clearly he roared when killing Jeremiah. But now that the battle was over, he’d grown quiet, stern, and curt.

Poor guy. He’d lost his son and wife to the fucker, and was turned into a tool. Killing Jeremiah, literally eating Jeremiah, was the ultimate revenge, and yet he still looked broken, and defeated. His wife and son weren’t coming back. Mary wasn’t coming back either, and neither was Julias. Revenge soothed the aching rage Jack felt in his guts when he thought of Angela, thought of her corpse with a bullet through the skull, thought of the cold body that couldn’t hurt him or his loved ones anymore. Soothed, but didn’t heal. He felt drained, and tired, just like how he knew Beatrice felt, and Sándor too.

And while Angela’s corpse couldn’t hurt him anymore, it could still hurt Athalia, hurt her like a dagger through the soul.

Before they left, Daniel walked around and collected the various artifacts, the strange occult items that’d been handed out to the hunters, and the big book that looked like someone with a chainsaw for a hand had read from it. Groovy. Well, it made sense they’d want the items, and better they take it, he supposed, than them just sitting around. And, better them than Jacob.

Jack looked to Beatrice one last time, before he followed Antoinette in the direction Sándor pointed.

---

Up the road, into the castle, and into the hallway they'd all come from. This time, leaving the hallway was as simple as opening one of the doors within, and stepping into a dark room. From the dark room, they opened another door, and voila, they were in Antoinette's Elysium Tower, in the hallway outside of the cell he recognized as Sándor's.

Jack and Antoinette went first. Daniel and the three hunters followed behind. The sounds of their gasps was enough to make Jack smile a little, but the smile vanished when he caught a glimpse of Antoinette's icy stare. She was angry in that special way only a lover could be, but also combined with the anger mastered only by bosses, and queens.

Maria and Michael were going to be livid with him, but also happy. He'd produced results. He'd done what everyone else had been failing to do. He'd defeated the hunters, and had gotten revenge. The first would earn him great esteem with the Invictus, and the second would seal his reputation with the First Estate as a Ventrue to not be trifled with. The issue was smoothing over his rashness with Michael; Maria, not so much, since she was officially no longer a true member of the Invictus. Michael held the reputation of the Invictus in great importance, almost the most important thing, and Jack was sure he could appeal to that side of him.

"You're ... not going to kill us, are you?" Harcourt said.

"I am a woman of my word," Antoinette said. "You hunters believe us vampires soulless brutes, who indulge in murder for the joy of it.” Sighing, she shook her head, and motioned down the hall of black marble. “Do not think so highly of yourselves. We have souls, hunters, and that is how some of us are capable of enjoying murder. It is also how some of us refuse to give into such blood lust. Be happy we do have souls, hunters, else little would stop me from simply killing you to protect what is mine.”

And with that, Daniel took the hunters. They looked a bit stunned, on top of all the stunning they’d been getting all night, but said nothing as the vampire in the trench coat with the big sword guided them along.

Soon, Jack was alone, with Antoinette, in a long hall of marble. The stone felt especially cold, and Jack struggled to keep from looking down. He failed, and looked at his filthy shoes. Filthy, but not filthy. The dirt was fading, dissipating, in a not dissimilar manner to Kindred blood, just without the tiny bits of flame and ash. It was material from the dream world. Made sense it’d fade away.

Unfortunately, the damage to his clothes did not. He was shirtless, didn’t have his weapons, and his pants had large tears cut into them. And now that everyone was gone, he did notice, for a tiny fraction of a second, an intrigued look from Antoinette. She liked what she saw. The look was replaced with frustration and annoyance instantly.

“Your phone?” she said.

“My phone? I—shit. It’s still in the nightmare.” Along with all my other gear. “Guaranteed it’s shattered.”

Sighing, Antoinette withdrew her own, and began texting. It was funny, watching her use a smartphone. He almost expected her to give orders to a servant to do it for her, or for her to use speech-to-text, since that’d be more in line with giving orders.

“Your mother is now aware you live.”

“My mom. Right ... right.”

“You are to meet with her in thirty minutes, in the recreation room on floor B5.”

“Yes sir!” He stood up straight, rigid, military posture, and saluted. But attempts at humor failed, unable to melt the ice wall standing before him.

“Let us go to my room, to speak privately. When we are done, you will speak to your mother. And then, you may contact the Invictus however you wish.”

“Right, right.” Sighing, he followed after her, down the many stairs into the deepest parts of her tower. The safe door was open, and once he stepped in, she pulled the enormous door closed, sealing them in her master bedroom.

He knew Antoinette wouldn't hurt him, but for a moment, he felt like a boy trapped in a cage with a tiger.

“Sit,” she said, and she gestured to her bed. Gulping, he did just that, and waited for the inevitable verbal lashing. “The hunters are defeated?”

“Yes.”

“I saw many corpses, some crucified upon trees.”

“The ones on the trees were already there. And all the dead hunters on the ground in that clearing, Elen killed with her magic. I killed a few before that, on the way to that clearing.”

“Ah, oui. I found one corpse at the door to the village, from Sándor's castle.”

“That one was Clara. I killed some others. You know I killed the hunters helping Angela. I killed some in the flesh chamber, too. But the majority were killed by Elen to fuel her rituals.” Antoinette had Elen’s knife now, since the old woman had dropped it when fleeing, but he doubted it was special. The book, on the other hand, must have been, and deadly powerful, if Antoinette could read it. And all the other artifacts, maybe they had special powers. “I’m pretty sure Elen can do everything she does without any of those artifacts though, or she can create more.”

“I see. Then ... I find it terribly frustrating that Jacob has her.”

Jack blinked at her, stood up, sat back down, and winced. “Elen disappeared, didn’t she?”

“In a way. I noticed the presence of Black Blood, and her disappearing body. I can only assume Jacob, or perhaps Black Blood alone, came to the dream, and stole away the shaman when the chance presented itself.” With a sigh to mimic his own, she came to sit next to him, took his hand, and set it on her lap.

“Fuck. I knew Black Blood could penetrate dreams, I just ... I didn’t think—”

“You did not think at all, my love.” She stared down at his hand, but her expression softened considerably. Soon, she was stroking his knuckles with her left hand, while her right held his hand against her leg. With her head aimed down, her hair flowed down over her shoulder on the opposite side of her head from him, a white curtain reaching down to her other leg. “So obsessed with defeating the hunters, you forget that other threats could take advantage. Forever the Carthians seek to hit the Invictus when they are weak. Forever, Jacob stirs chaos, and invites struggle to my city, in his barbaric need to weed out the weak. And ... and, I know that you know, my love, about the unseen presence that lurks within my city, something powerful and deadly, with unknown intent.”

He winced again, and looked down at her hands, same as she was for his. Damn it, she did know. He knew she knew, and he knew she knew he knew, but they'd never really said it, talked about it, and laid it out in the open. It wasn't the vampire way. Better to keep secrets, than to spread them and lose a valuable tool. Worse, better to keep the mouth closed, than have a loosed secret get someone killed.

“And ... and because I went full ham attacking these hunters, I—”

“You created chaos, and these factions could have taken advantage in any number of ways. What if Garry had discovered what you were doing, my love, and arranged for troubles to befall you? Your curse may be strong enough to protect you, but what of your friends, Damien, Beatrice, Fiona, and Clara.” The word Clara came out of her mouth with the tiniest hint of venom. “This unknown thing that hides within my walls may have struck out in this madness. Or, Jacob may have ... as he did.”

A slow, cold chill worked up through Jack's body. Jacob would have happily waited, while Jeremiah killed more vampires and monsters, until an opportunity presented itself for him to benefit. And to Jacob, anything to shake up the peace of Dolareido was a good thing.

“It's Jacob though. We can trust him, a little, right? I've seen him ... seen him at his worst, I think, and I don't think he'd actively harm Dolareido. He loves this city, in a strange way.”

“Do not underestimate the man's ability to deceive. And, do not underestimate an elder's desire to control and dominate.” Her right hand slipped away from his, and slid over his shoulders. “I can understand your actions, my love. For all my anger and annoyance with your brashness, I can both understand, and appreciate what you have done tonight. A great thorn has been removed from my side, and only time will tell if Jacob's actions will be a detriment to my city."

"But, uh, you seem pretty angry. Like, I'm half expecting to get staked and thrown in a dungeon, Antoinette."

That managed to pull a smile from her. Good. He was really getting worried.

"I am beyond livid ... but not with you, not truly."

"Say what?"

Her right arm hugged him in close, tight to the side of her chest. "Were you in your elder years, it would be easier to explain. My kind naturally incline toward decisions that pit time against our enemies. Rashness and bravado is how most young Kindred die, Jack. Of all the fates that can befall neonates, it is hastiness that has destroyed the most."

"But, I knew with the curse that I'd be able to—"

"And perhaps, that is what has angered me, Jack. To know that you willingly embraced its power, this mark of the Strix, terrifies me. Striges are our enemies, Jack. They exist to create chaos, and suffering. They exist to spread their destructive view that Kindred must be predators, and kine can only be prey; at least, so one Ordo hypothesis proclaims." She got up, and started to pace, one arm hooked under her breasts while her other, elbow held by the other hand, moved about in the air as she talked. A professor, giving a lecture, pacing around in front of a white board. "It angers me to no end, that these trials fall upon you, a neonate barely out of his fledgling years. You should be deferring to your sire, who would then defer to the leader of your covenant. I can guarantee you, little Ventrue, that Michael would have voted against this attack, in favor of something safer."

“But more people would have died! I didn’t have time to debate it, or get a second opinion. We only had hours, and—”

“I am not finished.” Again she glared at him, and he froze. Gulp. “People die. We accept that. It is in our best interest to make decisions that have the greatest chance of success, with a calculated loss. Surely you understand that. From the many conversations you and I have had, my love, I have come to know your mind, and I appreciate your ability to think logically. For all the words of poets and the courageous, life rarely rewards carpe diem. Those who take the path less traveled, those who pounce upon opportunity without looking where they leap, those who believe strong will and determination will lead them to success against their obstacles, fail. They, in overwhelming droves, fail, and often die. Life is cruel, my love. Do you understand that?”

He nodded as he looked down. Christ, she was reading his mind.

“Yeah, I understand. And ... and for once, I felt it was worth the risk. With the curse, I knew I could do it, and ... and...” His face disappeared in his hands, and he leaned forward until his elbows rested on his knees. “I had to do it. I had to stop them. I had to ... to get her, Antoinette. I had to get her.”

The great elder, done with her lecture, reached down, took his hands, and nudged them aside. He looked up, and she smiled down at him, a mix of pity and knowing on her face.

“You did, my love. Revenge has been had. Are you satisfied?”

“No! No, I’m ... I’m not satisfied. I feel horrible. I feel sick. I ... fuck, the things I did.”

“The things it did, Jack.”

“I let it. And for a bit, a part of me liked what it did. Fuck, I told a guy to cut his own guts out.” He shivered as he looked away. To Dominate someone to the point they'd not only commit suicide at order, but do it in torturous manner, was a level of Dominate he doubted many Ventrue ever managed. "And, fuck me, it's not even that that's bothering me. Killing those hunters, even in the brutal way I did, that's not what's eating at me."

"What is?" She sat beside him again, and resumed her previous position, hooking her right arm over his shoulders and pulling him to her chest.

"Killing Angela. Or rather, letting Beatrice kill her. You showed up, and the things you said, about Athalia..." It was enough to shatter the curse's grip on him, just like last time when he saw his mother in the hospital. "It wasn't supposed to be like that, you know? It wasn't supposed to be this ... execution scene. It was supposed to be a battle! We were supposed to take her down in a big fight, and it'd be ... I don't know, epic I guess." At least, that's what he'd been expecting. The curse, on the other hand, had been expecting to put Angela through some twisted shit, like a regular Jigsaw, but worse. "But we didn't do that. We executed her like a wild dog, while her mom watched, screaming and crying.

"Fuck," he continued, "I sound pathetic, don't I? You're centuries old, and must have been through a lot of horrible shit, right? This must sound like ... it must sound trite." That borderline sounded like an insult about her age. Shit. He winced, but managed a small shrug as he smiled up at her. "You know what I mean?"

"I do, my love. I do. Another harsh reality, is that revenge is never a glorious battle, where the party seeking vengeance wins through grit and effort. And it is never the delicious dessert many others think it will be. Revenge is a messy affair at best, a colossal nexus of ruin at worst. Perhaps most surprising, is how revenge will always involve others, whether you wish it to or not."

“Athalia.” He gulped down the rising bile in his throat he knew wasn’t there. “I’ve ... really fucked up, haven’t I? I let Jacob capture Elen, and I’ve strained our relationship with the Begotten and Uratha.”

“Perhaps.” Her voice had a hint of anger, but also a touch of contemplation. She was looking for something from him. He knew what.

“And I’ve strained our relationship. I made you worry. Hell, I made Mom worry.”

Bingo. With a subtle smile, she nodded.

“I will not punish you, my love. And I do not imagine Michael will either. For all your rashness tonight, you defeated the hunters without a single casualty. While it frustrates me to no end that you gambled, the reality is that your gamble paid off. We will worry about Elen another night; Jeremiah and Angela were the threats, while she was but a tool.” A very scary tool. “And, while that blasted spirit has taken the shaman, I acquired many artifacts tonight to add to my collection.”

He blinked at her, and the smile she gave him made him shiver again, for a completely different reason. It was easy to forget sometimes, that the Prince was a dragon, a member of the Ordo Dracul, and she was devoted to her covenant, a covenant that did secret things in the dark. Now she had Elen’s book, and her artifacts. Just because she wasn’t as nasty as Jacob, didn’t mean Antoinette didn’t do her own dangerous, maybe even nefarious things in secret.

“Can we ... not talk about unusual, spooky, magical things for a while?” he said. “No talk about the curse, or Crúac rituals, or flesh magic, or magic of any kind? Kinda just want to do the vampire thing for a while. Normal vampire stuff.”

“Normal ... vampire stuff?” she asked, an eyebrow raised. “I received word from Elaine not long ago. She will arrive in three days. With the hunters defeated, I believe I will host a ball, both in her honor, and to celebrate your victory.”

“A ball? Like, last time?”

Antoinette laughed and stroked his buzzed hair. “Yes, though with, perhaps, less sex. I do not wish to scare my new childe with such displays, yet.” A thought danced along her eyes, he could see it, and she looked up before tapping her chin with her left hand. “I would not be surprised if Jennifer tries to escalate that situation, in an attempt to push Beatrice past her sorrow, now that vengeance has been had.”

“I doubt it’ll work. When Beatrice killed Angela, she was ... she was pretty...” Broken.

But, sad as that was, sad as he felt he felt about Athalia, and about how Angela died, and the thousands of animals he sacrificed, he smiled. Yeah, tonight sucked. It really sucked. Clara, Triss, Othello, and Damien all nearly died. The slaughter had been a hectic mess that didn’t go the way any of them thought it would. Azamel was injured, and might die. And Athalia lost her daughter, something Jack doubted she’d ever forgive them for. But for all that shit, he had so much to be happy about. Stop being a dumbass, stop focusing on the negative, and look at the positive.

He smiled because Damien saved Sándor. He smiled because the hunters were all dead, every one of them except three, who were now prisoners, and some leftover drifters. He smiled because none of his friends or crew died. He smiled because Julias’s murder had been avenged. He smiled because, now, he could begin to heal, and so could Beatrice. Maybe his mom could, too.

And, maybe his sister could, too.

“And, I would not be surprised if Elaine attempts to escalate the situation in a similar manner. She will delight in teasing you, knowing that you are my lover.” She chuckled, a hearty sound rich with joy and memory, and she shook her head to dislodge it. But her smile remained. “I feel that, perhaps, I corrupted her when we were younger.”

“Wait, you corrupted her?”

Antoinette nodded. “Indeed. We visited each other dozens of times in our most promiscuous years. I taught her much of the joys of sex, and how to relish each orgasm with precision and delight.”

Jack stared at her, and gulped. “So, um, you’ve ... slept with her.”

“Indeed, hundreds of times.”

Antoinette’s story about the orgies she’d had with kine, when she’d owned her own castle, now suddenly included another vampire, another dominant figure doing things in the middle of all that flesh. Good god.

“With kine around?”

“Oui, though there were many times no kine graced our bed, and we had only each other for company. She is quite talented in the erotic arts.” She said it like it was the most casual thing, that her ex-girlfriend from centuries past, was someone she’d fucked a fucking fuckload. When she saw his expression of shock, she laughed again, and rubbed his buzzed hair. “You have nothing to fear, my love. We were never romantic with each other. Friends with benefits, as it is said. But I know Elaine, and she will tease you for the game of it. Be careful with her.”

Friends with benefits. Uh oh. The phrase hit a note in his head, and he couldn’t help but sit up straight. And naturally, Antoinette noticed, and the evil grin she donned struck him still. He knew that grin. That was her ‘I’ve thought of a new personal barrier of yours to shatter, my love’ grin. Double uh oh?

---

~~Damien~~

He woke up with a jolt, sat up straight, and regretted it instantly. Through the pain, he reached for his sword. Gone. He reached for his pistol. Gone. He reached for his silver knife; still there.

“Calm yourself, Damien,” a familiar voice said. Half of him shivered a bit at the sound, and another half relaxed as he attached a person to the familiar voice. Vrall, Fiona’s monster half. Fiona was here.

Damien eased back, and felt his spine press to a rock. A turn of his head showed it was the altar he’d been shot on. Beside the altar and beyond it, was a gigantic creature, looming, two massive horns donning its ... his head. Sándor. If the gargoyle was just standing there, not trying to rip him in half, then Damien had been successful in freeing him.

A smile sneaked onto his face as he looked around some more. Yes, there was Vrall in her spider silk dress. She was hovering over him, her eight spider legs pressed to the grass, and her two human arms reaching down and stroking through his hair. Beside him was Othello, and Clara in her human form. She had a knife in her hand, and was leaking blood from her wrist into Othello’s mouth.

Oh. Clara had given him blood. The last time he’d awoken from torpor, he’d had to fight a mild vitae addiction, and partial Vinculum with Beatrice. A werewolf’s blood would elicit no such reaction, and from what he could gather, it was potent blood. The hole in Othello’s chest began to close almost immediately; not completely, as it was a large wound, but a day’s sleep with some wolf blood in his gut would heal that, Damien was sure.

“Thank you,” he said to Clara, licking his teeth the moment the words were out. He could still taste her. It was different from both kine and Begotten, richer, and so full of life it was almost overpowering.

“Don’t sweat it. You did good, real fucking good.” Clara put the knife away, and gestured to Sándor. “Tall, dark, and handsome over there owes you his life. Well, he would have, but he saved our asses. So, kinda even, I guess.”

Damien grinned slightly, and looked to the gargoyle. “Is that so?”

“It is,” Beatrice said. She was sitting on a nearby rock, one of the stones in the center of the clearing. Jennifer and Aaron stood beside her. “He interrupted Jeremiah’s ritual, which you missed. Fucker nearly killed Azamel.”

“Is Azamel—”

“She lives,” the gargoyle said. And then said nothing. The creature’s voice boomed, and Damien found himself staring at him for more than a few seconds, before he looked around yet again.

Clara chimed in. “She’s been hurt badly. Mark says she’s going to stay in her lair for a while. He helped her get back.”

“What of the hunters? Jeremiah, and Angela?”

“All dead,” Beatrice said. There was no joy in her voice, and that confused Damien. Why wasn’t she happy?

“Mission successful then?”

The Nosferatu nodded. While she was sitting on the rock, she had her left arm out and draped over Jennifer’s shoulders, as if she’d fall over any minute. She looked like she might.

“Yeah, mission successful. The Prince showed up with the sheriff, and took Jack out of here, along with Harcourt and the two hunters who surrendered. She took Jeremiah and Elen’s shit, too.”

“What of Elen?”

She shook her head. “Don’t know. She didn’t have her, and Jack didn’t kill her.”

He tried to sit up again, and again regretted it. Looking down revealed many holes in his chest, mostly closed but not completely. The rifles had pushed their bullets straight through him, so healing wouldn’t be as bad as it could have been, but it was still a painful task, and he looked forward to sleeping come sunrise.

“She escaped?” he said.

Beatrice shook her head. “From the look I saw on Antoinette’s face, I ... I don’t think she did. I don’t know where she is, though. Maybe the sheriff took her when we weren’t looking.”

He shivered again, thinking of the magics the strange shaman had done. The symbols carved into the flap of flesh he’d ripped apart would never fade from his mind. The sight of the corpses on the trees calling out his location, and the sound, wouldn’t either. The corpses were silent now, but still there, and he grimaced as he looked at them, before back to the spider woman stroking his head.

“The hunters are defeated,” he said. “I ... I think that means we won?”

“Yep,” the werewolf said, getting to her feet. Her wrist wound didn’t close as quickly as it would have if she were in her werewolf form, and Damien glanced to it for probably a little longer than he should have. A lick of his fangs earned a subtle, but very real jerk of his hair from Fiona, hidden so the others wouldn’t notice. Ok, yeah, don’t go staring at other girls, even if it’s just because you’re hungry.

“Sándor,” Aaron said, walking over to the colossal creature as if he was walking over to just another vampire. “The others said you ate Jeremiah.”

“I ... did.”

“Do you eat the flesh of humans to sustain yourself?”

The titan shook his head, and began to walk around the clearing circle. He had no trouble scooping up corpses, one per hand, and setting them in a lone spot by the clearing edge. He wasn't so big that a human body fit into his palm like a fork, but he was fifteen feet tall, and was big enough he could scoop each up and hold them, like a human holding oddly large dolls. If the humans were alive, it would have been terribly uncomfortable, their own weight causing them to folding like pretzels around his fingers and palms.

“I ... feed, upon those I hunt. They must know that I hunt them, and it is that fear I feed on. I ... often eat the flesh. I often must.” With time, he collected all the bodies, including the ones crucified to trees, and sighed as he looked down at the pile of dead.

It seemed obvious that the man didn't like who he was, or at least didn't like how his Horror operated. Fiona had to feed on the fear of the guilty, and it only worked if they deserved to be punished. A more specific taste, but she didn't have to literally eat and kill her prey. She only did that if she wanted to gorge herself. If Sándor literally had to hunt and kill — or eat — his prey to sustain himself, that was a far harsher hunger to satisfy.

“Jack,” Damien said, “or the Prince, should be the one to welcome you to the city in an official capacity. Has he, or did the Prince when she was here?”

The titan nodded, a lazy and tired motion, before he started digging up the ground with his claws. The earth gave way to his fingers easier than it should have. His nightmare, his rules.

“Yeah, Antoinette told him he had to drop by for a sermon,” Beatrice said. “But, he doesn’t need a fucking lecture. He’s here. He —”

It was Damien’s turn to shake his head. “You know the Prince is going to want to speak to him, explain the rules to him.” Blinking, Damien looked to the gargoyle. “That is, of course, if you plan to remain in the city. It’s not your home, is it?”

“It isn’t. And for now I ... I will ... remain within my lair.”

“It is nice in Dolareido,” Vrall said. “Now that the hunters are dead, there is only peace in Dolareido ... of a sort.” She smiled down at Damien, leaned down, and kissed his forehead. He tried to lift his head so he could properly kiss her, but craning his head back didn’t agree with him, and he stopped the motion short before he could ruin the moment.

Only when Fiona pulled away, did he notice Beatrice looking at him. There was venom in her eyes, and sadness on her face, and when she noticed him noticing her, her eyes fell away. Or maybe, it was when he noticed her noticing both him and Fiona, that she looked away. Right, Julias.

Something had happened. Something, while he was deep in his forced torpor, had destroyed the joy he would have otherwise expected to see upon learning the hunters were defeated. No one looked happy except for Fiona, and even she seemed worried. Did everyone care for Azamel this much, or was it something else? Jeremiah was dead, dead at Sándor’s hand, and yet the gargoyle seemed morose. Angela was dead, surely at Beatrice or Jack’s hand, and yet Beatrice seemed quite defeated.

Was this how he’d have felt, if he’d managed to kill Antoinette and Daniel, when he assaulted the Elysium Tower? If the revenge he’d wanted for so long had been obtained, would he have felt defeated for acquiring it? Perhaps, especially once Lucas's madness became obvious.

"Can you help me up?" he asked.

"Of course." Vrall held him up, and he hooked his arm over her shoulders. Her feet, or rather, pointy blade things, never touched the ground. If she did try to walk on them and them alone, she'd likely sink a foot into the earth, considering how sharp they looked. But with her eight spider legs, enormous and smooth, jutting out of her back and tapping along the ground around her, her foot points stayed an inch above the ground, hovering.

"I'd love to get a drink," he said, "but I need to speak to Michael and Maria."

The werewolf, of all people, was the first to get up and agree, nodding. "Makes sense. Burning resources hunting for hunters that aren't a problem anymore—"

"No, wait," Damien said. "That isn't true. Harcourt said there were hunters still in the city, maybe a dozen."

Beatrice shrugged, as if the effort to lift her shoulders was colossal. "Harcourt will deal with them. And the ones that don't listen to him won't be a big threat without Elen to let them cheat shit."

True. The shaman's magics allowed the hunters avenues of attack and retreat that bordered on cheating.

He laughed, and leaned the side of his head toward Vrall. His temple met one of her gorgeous horns, rather than meeting her actual head, but it was the side of the horn, and he set the weight of his head against it.

“It’s hard to relax, isn’t it?” he said. “I’m trying to relax, about our success, but a part of me is telling me I shouldn’t relax, that I should keep my guard up.”

He shouldn’t have said that. Everyone looked at each other, and where he should have found shock or confusion, he found only knowing eyes. They all felt the same way, and while he’d only thought Fiona and Jack were in the know about the mysterious threat lurking within Dolareido, their expressions suggested otherwise. Everyone knew about it, or knew about something.

Lovely.

Chapter 112

~~Beatrice~~

Everyone left. Sándor was apparently a really, really strong Begotten, to the point he surprised Fiona when he opened a pathway back to the real world without issue. A wave of the gargoyle's hand, and the darkness in the forest flickered. Fiona, or Vrall or whatever, went through it with her man, and they disappeared, supposedly to arrive near Damien's apartment so he could take a moment to recoup. Two crows sat on Damien's shoulders, and several more plus a few rats scurried along with them. Mulder, Scully, and the few that survived Jack's assault. A second later, Sándor did it again for Clara, opening to somewhere in the Carthian district. And then again, for Aaron, who was dragging the now barely conscious Othello. Sándor opened a portal to the outskirts of town, guided by Aaron's suggestions. Mark had already left with Azamel, so, that left Beatrice, Jennifer, and the gargoyle.

"Why did you not leave with your friends?" the beast asked.

Triss shrugged, and dragged herself over to the altar she knew had been Sándor's imprisonment. This was where Elen had done her ritual, with knife and skin. Triss could almost feel the residue of a strange power emanating from it. Not so strange, really. It felt similar to Crúac.

"I thought Athalia might come through. I wanted to talk to her," she said.

"The door between our lairs has closed. I am, once again, closed off from the other Begotten."

"Closed off?" she said.

“Yes. Athalia, Fiona, Azamel, and Mark have linked their lairs. They may travel between their many realms freely. I ... have not linked my lair with anyone in many years.”

“Sounds lonely,” Jennifer said. She came up behind Beatrice, and hugged her, arms looping around her stomach. She either wanted to keep close in case Triss started to fall, or she just wanted to be close in general. It was good, either way. Triss was too exhausted to be surly and dismissive. And it felt good to let Jennifer in close again. She leaned back into Jennifer’s body, and sighed.

Triss turned her head enough to give her friend a small kiss on the cheek. “How long were you under Elen’s control?”

“Four years.”

“Jesus Christ.” She shivered, and set her hands on the altar. It was sloped upward, but at the lowest point where it pointed toward the center of the clearing, it was low enough that her arms came down in order for her palms to reach it, with a bit of a slouch, too. “He murdered your family, to capture you?”

“... yes.” Slowly, with delicate hands completely at odds with the Horror she’d seen earlier, the gargoyle lowered some of the many bodies into the hole he dug. They didn’t deserve a burial, especially if they helped Jeremiah capture Sándor, and yet the monster was burying them. From how careful he was being, she suspected he’d give them a proper burial, if it’d been viable.

“Horrible,” Jennifer said. “Absolutely horrible.”

Triss winced. Yeah, it was horrible. But how long ago did Triss and Jen brutally butcher a bunch of kine, sacrificing them into a big rusty bowl, so Triss could communicate with some otherworldly entity of blood and pain? Those people had been brothers, sisters, sons and daughters, maybe even mothers and fathers too. Tough to think of the hunters as being so low, when—no. No, don’t think that shit. The people you killed were just scumbags and worthless cockroaches. What you did is not the same as killing the family members of the people you were hunting. Jeremiah and Angela were the lowest of the low. Don't compare your journey into the world of blood sacrifice, to their pathetic, cowardly, shitty tactics.

“Well,” Triss said, “fuck him. He taught Angela to fight dirty like that, and it got them killed.”

“Yes ... yes, it did.” The gargoyle put on the smallest smile, before he came over to them, and squatted like he was perching on a jutting stone of a church wall. God damn he was huge, muscular as all fuck, and she stared at the beast for a few seconds as he pulled his huge wings in snug to his back.

His face was expressive in a way she hadn't been prepared for. It was a demon face, yes, but a human demon face, with dark steel-colored skin, deep set eyes, pronounced eyebrow ridges, and of course, giant horns. Like, big, curly, scary, giant horns. And with his very hard, broad chin, he would have looked perfectly at home sitting on a throne, looking stoic, and giving orders to his army of demons. When he talked, she could see hints of his teeth behind his lips, all of them sharp, with some very nasty, pronounced fangs. Those teeth had chomped Jeremiah into bite sized chunks.

Speaking of teeth, and biting.

“Your neck ok?” she said, gesturing to it.

That, of all things, brought a real, if momentary smile to the squatting monster's face. “Yes, mostly.” He raised one of his hands to his neck, and rubbed at the wound. The skin was mostly closed, but she'd managed to fuck his neck up pretty good. Damn proud of that.

“I guess Athalia didn't come back,” Jen said.

Triss nodded. "I'm not surprised. It ... it..." Fuck it. She turned around, and hugged Jennifer, full on hug. She set her face in her friend's neck, and just held on. No crying, no sobbing. She'd cried enough for a decade, at least. But, she wanted a hug. "Killing Angela wasn't fun."

Jennifer chuckled, a tiny laugh, only audible cause Triss was close enough to feel it. "You thought it would be?"

"Yes. I thought I'd kill her, laughing and dancing the whole time, you know? It'd be great. I'd feel great." Sighing, she ran her hands up and down Jen's back a little, continuing the hug. "Instead, all I did was ... execute a defeated, broken, stupid girl. And I did it in front of her crying mom." After making sure the hug was good and long, she backed off and set her hands on Jen's shoulders. "Felt more like ... like a scene from Old Yeller, or something, you know? I was putting down a rabid dog. I wanted to be screaming with joy! Not ... not..."

"Jeremiah's last words," Sándor said, his quiet voice rumbling with so much bass, he sounded more like a subwoofer, "were to tell Angela to run. His last words ... were an attempt to save her, while he died." The gargoyle, still squatting with his two lower arms resting on his knees, raised his two higher arms out in front of him, and slowly grabbed the air, as if grabbing Jeremiah again. "I did not kill a monster. I killed a person. It had to be done, but that does not alleviate the weight such death places on our ... souls."

Ugh, she hated that that sounded right. Killing people brought with it something she couldn't quite put her finger on, until Sándor just said it: weight. She'd been killing a lot of people lately, and that weight was starting to pull her down, like shackles tied around her throat. Killing Angela was more weight on her soul, and good god, that fucking sucked. Killing the bitch should have freed her, not added to a growing mountain of bones tied to her.

“You sound ... wise, I guess,” she said, smiling up at the gargoyle. Jen slipped behind her, and started hugging her again, this time putting a kiss on her ear as she did. Triss didn’t pull her head away this time. It felt nice, to have Jen’s hands on her, and after tonight, after the misery of Athalia’s sobs faded, maybe she’d let her do more. Not tonight, but later.

“I’ve been around for many centuries,” the beast said. “I guess ... wisdom snuck up on me.”

“Centuries?” Jen said from over Triss’s shoulder. “We thought Begotten aged. Slowly, but they did.”

“It depends on whichever Horror has cursed us. The ... gargoyle, ages very slowly, like the stones of a castle wall. I will live for centuries yet, I imagine.” With a great, heavy sigh, the beast slid his long tail along the earth, until it was curled around the front of his ankles, and then behind him again. “I ... I have to apologize, Beatrice.”

“Apologize? For—oh ... right.” Right. Sándor was a big part of the reason Julias was dead. “You were under a fucking spell, dude. And after learning about what Jeremiah did to you, the fuck am I going to do, yell at you because you were forced to help kill my boyfriend? Christ man, you lost your wife, and your son! I...” She’d started yelling, and only after her volume rose, did it slap her in her stupid face that she was yelling at herself. “H ... How was he, at the end? Julias, I mean.”

“Ridiculously strong. I knew of the ancilla, and what was to be expected of a Ventrue his age, and yet he surprised me. Defeated me. He demonstrated resilience, and strength that I had not expected. I could tell he was fighting for something, for someone.”

God damn it. She smiled, and took a breath, forcing down the sudden urge to cry again. “Tch, yeah, he was. Me, and for Jack, too.”

“Jack...” The gargoyle shivered, and that included his wings, all four of them reaching out with their long arms to shake, as if dislodging snow. “The curse is a horrifying taint. I ... I would have lost that fight, if he’d really tried to kill me.”

Jen and Triss both shivered as well. Yeah, she could believe that.

“So, Mr. Sándor, you’re going to stay here in your lair?” Jennifer stepped around Triss, and walked up to the squatting titan. Without a bit of fear in her step, but definitely a bit of sway in her hips, she came up under the monster’s head, and grinned up at him.

“I ... yes. I will heal faster here. And ... I have nowhere else to go, for now. Sándor’s life, my old life, is gone.”

The damn Ventrue put a hand on the gargoyle’s knee, and chuckled. Or, giggled, if Triss was hearing right. “So, you could stay in Dolareido?” Oh good god she was flirting with the gargoyle.

The gargoyle tilted his head to the side, as if perplexed by her blatant flirting. Maybe he was. Well, he’d helped them a fuckload, least Triss could do was save him from Jen’s legs.

“Jen, stop flirting with the giant gargoyle. It—he’s a gargoyle.” She was tempted to make a comment about his obvious lack of a penis, but then, she knew Jessy had sex with Eric when he was transformed, and werewolves didn’t walk around with dicks and balls. Maybe it formed when the desire was present? Werewolves were spirit things, not biological, and Sándor was a dream thing, not biological.

Hell, did vampires really count as biological? They may have lived in a world of blood, but blood and flesh were proving capable of more than she’d ever thought, considering what Elen had done, and what she’d done with Crúac. Maybe it was time she stopped thinking of vampires as simple bodies of flesh and blood, and more like how she thought of dream monsters, spirits, and ghosts.

“Athalia’s not coming,” Triss said. “Let’s go.” It was probably a good thing she didn’t. Triss wanted to talk to her, but she still hadn’t resolved her feelings about the whole situation, and she knew it. It made her feel guilty, not knowing how to feel. She’d killed a woman’s daughter, and that woman was a fellow monster, too. The least she could do was understand how she felt about it, so she could feel justified, or something. It was the least she could fucking do, so she could talk to Athalia, and know where they both stood.

“Fine, fine.” Jen rejoined her, and the two of them started toward the village road. At least, until Jen stopped, and leaned in close to Triss’s ear. “We should ask him to come home with us.”

“Jen, Angela’s been dead thirty minutes. Can’t you—”

“Not to sleep with, dumbass.” She looked over her shoulder back at the gargoyle, and draped her left arm over Triss’s shoulders. Ow, legs, not healed, ow. “Though, I mean, we’ve both seen him in his human form, without his shirt. He’s a sexy man. Hell, he’s sexy right now. But, not what I meant. I meant, he’s has no home, and he’s lost everything. Perhaps we should extend him a hand?”

Triss rolled her eyes. Jen wasn’t fooling her. It was true they’d both seen him without his shirt, that night they fought him and a few other hunters in Elen’s flesh chamber, and he’d been a gorgeous man. A little tall, quite lean, muscular but not overly thick. He actually kinda looked like Jack, just scaled up; even had the short dark hair. Only difference besides the overall size, was the Begotten had had some gruff on his face.

She tried to think about how hot he’d looked when they’d been fighting him, with his abs and shit on a sweaty display, but the image was ruined. That was the night Julias died. But, hey, if Jen wanted to fuck him, she was free to fuck him. Poor girl hadn’t fucked anyone since Superman died.

“Go ahead,” she said, and immediately regretted it. No, she didn’t want a stranger around. She wanted to be alone, or maybe talk to Jacob about all this shit, about revenge, about this hole in her fucking gut that wouldn’t go away. He’d understand; ancient fucker understood everything.

“Sándor,” Jen said, turning around, and hooking her other arm around Triss’s throat gently, so her wrist dangled over Triss’s further shoulder. “Did you ever find out where the Circle of the Crone sleeps during the day?” Except for Jacob, of course. Elders didn’t expose their backs when sleeping, even to their comrades.

“No.”

“We sleep on the outskirts of town, in a cave hidden in a ravine. It’s not far from the path you made for Aaron, East of there. You’ll know you’ve found it when you see three giant rocks propped up next to each other.”

The gargoyle stared at her, his steely expression so damn hard to read. Fucker was stoic, so stoic it was almost comical. It was so hilariously different from the raging bull that’d been trying to kill them before, she wasn’t even sure it was really him. If he got angry, would he become that raging death machine, like his Horror had been? It’d been scary strong.

And a scary strong Begotten would be a powerful ally.

Triss raised a brow as she looked at the Ventrue still hooking her neck and shoulders, and Jen spared her a quick, knowing smile. That crafty slut. Well, she said her sire had sired her because she was both attractive, and conniving.

“I will ... visit, sometime.”

“Wonderful!” Jen let go of Triss, and clapped her hands together once, before rising onto the balls of her feet for a moment, then landing on her heels. Just enough of a tiny, 'girly' flirtatious jump, to make her tits jiggle a bit inside her suit top. If it'd been someone like Fiona, Triss would have chalked it up to just natural flirtiness; the redhead flirted like breathing. With Jen, on the other hand, it was calculated, always calculated.

Calculated boob jiggle. The thought made Triss laugh, and she struggled to get it under control. Pain ripped through her, but she laughed anyway. When Jen turned to face her, Triss hooked an arm over her shoulders, and leaned on her, desperate to get some weight off her legs and ribs. But she still laughed. The pain didn't matter. It felt good to laugh.

"Before ... you go," the gargoyle said, "I..."

"Yeah?" Triss asked.

"I ... do not know who to tell of this. But, the presence that ... attacked me in my lair, months ago, the one that rescued Jack and the others..."

Oh shit. Triss's laughter came to a quick stop, and she turned her and Jen around so she could look at the gargoyle again while keeping her arm on Jen's shoulders. They hadn't gotten very far, just to the edge of the clearing, and she wasn't looking forward to limping over all the destroyed trees back to the creepy village road anyway.

"You're talking about Black Blood," she said. "A spirit."

The titan nodded, and slowly looked down. "It came."

"He came? Like ... like, tonight, he came?"

"Yes."

Of course he did. Of fucking course he did. The damn thing had probably been watching from outside the nightmare somehow, looking for an opportunity to take advantage of the situation.

“What’d he do?” she said. “If he showed up, he was up to something.”

“I do not know. Except ... it ... he helped me break the ritual.”

“Say what?” She stared at the gargoyle, but the beast simply remained where he was, squatting over the grass and death around him. Stoic bastard. “Black Blood helped you?”

“Jeremiah’s ritual took the nightmare from me, and blinded me. The ... the spirit, removed the veil from my eyes.” He snorted, just like a big, heavy animal that didn’t like its situation might. A damn powerful sound, and Triss shivered as she felt the heavy bass of it flow past her. “The spirit was ... cold.”

Triss and Jen looked to each other, and sighed. Yeah, that was Black Blood. His presence was cold, but not in temperature. It was cold, the way death felt cold.

“Thanks for telling us,” she said. “I’d avoid telling anyone else except for us witches. Black Blood isn’t exactly well liked in Dolareido.”

The monster nodded, and turned his head back to look down at the ground in front of him. He didn’t move. Literally. He didn’t breath, didn’t shift, didn’t adjust, he just squatted there like a statue. Like an actual gargoyle.

“Hungry?” Jen said.

“Oh god, very. Fucking starving.” She gave her friend a smile, and started to limp toward Dracula’s knock-off castle.

Angela was dead. Jeremiah was dead. The hunters were defeated except for some still hiding out in the city, and they weren't nearly the threat they'd been with their leader. Triss and the gang had won. Yeah, Athalia probably hated them, but they saved Azamel's life too, so that was a point in their corner for keeping the Begotten on their side. Jack managed to become Jack again, normal Jack. And they'd made an ally in Sándor. Everything was looking up.

She could go home now, maybe go visit Julias's mansion, and do something to seek finality. Burn it down, maybe? The Invictus would probably have her head for that. Maybe walk around the mansion for a while, and just absorb the sad memories. Maybe cry until it hurt, like she'd done so many times already? No matter how bad she felt about killing Angela, about how horribly the night had gone and had been, there was a piece of her that was genuinely happy. Vengeance was had. Time to move on.

But, why was Black Blood here? How did he know what was going on? What the fuck was Jacob up to?

---

~~Natasha~~

Flowing Sanctuary kicked them out of the Hisil, under threat of reporting them to Avery, and beating them to a pulp. And it had the power to make it a reality. It became clear, as the strange entity guided them to the nearest locus, and then sent them packing, that Flow was a very powerful spirit.

The boys told Tash a story, a third hand account of how Avery, who'd lost her pack and her previous totem spirit, met Flow when she was dying. They didn't know what, but something happened to Simon and his pack, between now and the last time Avery had come to the city. Flow had been tiny then, apparently a water spirit who'd obtained a desire to protect others somehow. It wasn't far fetched. Water could be a very protective force in certain circumstances. A river could be a wall between predator and prey. The surface of a lake could be the barrier between predator and prey. She'd have to ask to find out, and after tonight, she was afraid to ask Flow anything.

Together, Flow and Avery had helped each other survive, and forged a friendship. That friendship was how Flow became her totem spirit, instead of a deal struck or forced enslavement. Flow was too powerful to be forced to do anything, probably.

So, Tash and friends had been forced out, back to the physical world. Eric looked upset. The man was finally reaching out to affect the paranormal world, instead of being pulled into it, and got shut down for his efforts.

Natasha frowned down at the sidewalk as she turned the thoughts in her head. "I wonder..."

"Mm?" the boys said, looking over their shoulders at her. She'd fallen behind the group, trapped in her thoughts.

"I w-wonder how Flow found us. Dolareido is a b-b-big city."

"It probably tracked Matt and me down," Art said. "We've been working together for years. I'm sure it can find us if we're in the Hisil."

That made sense, she supposed. She wasn't sure how spirits sensed, but if Flow was acutely familiar with the 'scent' of its pack, then—"Um, then m-maybe Eric should do what he wants ... without you?"

Eric glanced over his shoulder at them, shrugged, and continued on. He was cranky, but she was confident he'd get over it. And the streets of Dolareido weren't the best place for this sort of conversation anyway.

“She’s right,” Matt said. “Sorry Eric. I mean, we knew Flow would disagree, but we didn’t think it’d actively block us.”

Art sighed as he shrugged. “Avery must have warned it, tipped it off that we might do something like this. Damn woman knew what you were going to do, Eric, and of course whatever Avery thinks is right, she does.”

Avery was strong willed, to the point it’d be a problem if she ever disagreed with Antoinette about something important. She’d willingly fight the elder, if she thought it was the right thing to do. And, while the werewolf must have been extremely dangerous, Antoinette was half a millennium old. Eric, on the other hand, was a fresh pup, and Avery would have no trouble smacking him around.

She pulled out her phone, and checked her messages. She’d gotten into the habit of turning off the vibration, for fear it might get her in trouble someday in a precarious situation. And—oh, oh god. One from Jack, one from Antoinette, each a couple hours old, and a new one from Antoinette. Uh oh.

“Um, I have t-to get back to the Elysium, immediately.”

“Business?” the boys said together.

“Yes. Um, Jessy, you’ll w-want to talk to McDonald, too. Something happened. Something ... b-big.”

“Big?”

“Y-Yes. Um ... we ... we d-d-don’t need to worry about the hunters anymore. M-Most are ... dead, including Jeremiah, and Angela.”

Everyone stopped, and stared at her. She’d had to whisper it, so quiet they wouldn’t have been able to hear it if they hadn’t been paranormals. The text said some hunters were still in the city, and she couldn't risk them hearing. Even letting normal kine hear such a profound statement was risky.

“Wow,” Matt said, “um ... ok? I guess we'll head back, and see what Avery knows.”

Natasha stared at the text again for a moment, took a second to nod to each person in the group, including a knowing one for Jessy, before she vanished.

---

As she descended the stairs of the Elysium tower, she froze. People were talking, voices she recognized.

Jack, and Samantha. The two were sitting in one of the recreation rooms, the one with couches and an enormous TV, meant for digesting news in luxury. Jack was talking about his fight with the hunters, from the little Natasha picked up, and mentioned Angela was dead.

So, Natasha did what any self respecting Mekhet would do. She Cloaked herself, and pressed her back to the archway of the room's entrance. Spying! No, not spying, but she just couldn't help herself.

“Angela's dead?” Samantha said.

“Yeah, she's dead.”

“I ... I ... I don't know what to say.”

That earned a chuckle from the kid. “Neither do I, Mom. I don't know how to feel about it. It ... it...” Natasha couldn't see him, from how she kept her back to the frame of the arch entrance, and Jack might be able to spot her if she peeked, with his new power. If he could sense her right now, he wasn't letting it affect his conversation. Maybe he was too tired to.

“It must have been horrible.”

“Yeah, it was. We won, really won. We took them down and didn’t lose a single person. But ... yeah, it was bad.” After a long sigh, one Natasha knew Jack often made while rubbing his buzzed hair, he continued. “But, we’re safe. Or at least, a lot safer. There’s still some hunters in the city, but—”

“What about Athalia?”

“Athalia? She ... she was there, yeah.”

“Oh no. She helped kill her daughter.”

“No. It was the plan that she’d help kill her, or possibly capture her. In the end, she ... she tried to save Angela, and we had to kill her anyway. I ... I don’t think ... Athalia’s ever going to forgive me, for that.”

“Oh Jack. I can’t imagine. I ... I can’t imagine.”

“I have to go talk to my bosses in a minute, Mom. But later, we can—”

Some shuffling fabric sounds signaled that they were hugging, and Natasha felt her heart break. She’d been super happy to learn the hunters were defeated, so happy she’d forgotten about Athalia. Antoinette would tell her to not concern herself with Athalia’s pain, but it was easier said than done. Maybe with a hundred years under her belt, Natasha could close off her heart like that, but for now, it all hit her no matter how hard she tried to keep it out. It was one of the reasons she didn’t hang with people as much as someone like Jessie. She absorbed the emotions of people around her, whether she wanted to or not.

She didn’t stick around anymore, and instead moved on to the primary experimentation room, where she knew Antoinette awaited her. It wouldn’t be good to come to Antoinette feeling emotional about poor Samantha and poor Athalia, and poor Mary, and poor ...

whoever else was hurt. Undoubtedly, other people had been hurt. But Antoinette would want her calm, smart, and logical.

She walked into the grand room where Antoinette stood by the massive table off to the side, covered in laptops. In the center of the huge room, was the dangling chandelier of blue, though it was off, and some regular white LEDs were on instead. All the laptops were on, and around the laptops, were a host of strange items Natasha had never seen.

“Prince, I—oh, w-what are these?” Immediately, the shrunken head grabbed her attention. It’d have creeped her out in the past, and while it was still definitely creepy, it didn’t bother her anymore. After months of dealing with Antoinette’s strange research, a shrunken head was pretty normal.

Except, it wasn’t just a shrunken head. There were a whole bunch of things! A knife that must have been carved out of a bone. A necklace that had bits of bone hooked on it. It was a smörgåsbord of occult objects, and they all had a very obvious motif: the key aspects of each were made of human body parts. And, in the center of it all, was a very creepy book, a big, fat, thick book that demanded she read it. Except, the cover was obviously made of skin, probably human skin, and if she opened it, she was likely to summon the Apocalypse.

The book put everything else into context. This was the hunters’ stuff, the shaman’s stuff, and Antoinette had taken it from the dream.

“Oh m-m-my god...”

“Indeed.” Antoinette looked to her, grinned a knowing grin, and sat down at the table as she gestured for her to do the same. “The hunters are defeated, and I have gained many new items for my collection. We will have much to study, I think.” And, without fear, she opened the book. Natasha froze, expecting it to scream, to burst into flame, to unleash a black demon arm, or at least do something more than be a book. But it just sat there, doing book things, waiting to be read; deciphered, actually, as she didn't recognize the letters.

"I can't b-b-believe it. The hunters are gone?"

"Yes, except for, as I warned you, perhaps a dozen that remain in the city, leaderless. Though tomorrow night, you, I, Daniel, and Jack will talk with Harcourt." She frowned at the mention of the hunter's name, the one she'd mentioned in her text. "These hunters must come to my tower, and only after I have personally inspected them, will I allow them to leave. I expect that there will yet be more deaths, hunter deaths, before this problem is completely resolved."

"The p-part of war no one talks about. It never stops instantly, d-d-does it? It always ... trickles to a stop."

"Quite true, Miss Vola." Antoinette smiled at her, proud, and Natasha buzzed with joy. Teacher's pet. "The realities of war are never as final or definitive as in literature. But, for all my frustration with Jack for the reckless assault he led tonight, the hunters are defeated. Only one true problem has been created in the aftermath."

Uh oh. "Problem?"

"Elen lived through the encounter. And, while I admit that I had hoped she would, so I could capture her, and learn what she knew, it is not I who possesses her."

"She lived, b-b-but she's not here? Then, who ha—Jacob. J-Jacob has her."

Again, Antoinette smiled. "Your deduction skills improve, my student. Oui, that infernal Nosferatu has taken her, with Black Blood's aid. And now, my strongest ally, and perhaps strongest enemy, is potentially armed with the skills of a terribly skilled shaman of flesh.” Sighing, smile gone, she gestured to the assortment of occult goods. “And while both Jacob and I gained from the fallout of my beloved’s assault, I fear he has stolen the better of the spoils.”

“B-But, we have her book, and—”

“I doubt she needs this scripture, Miss Vola. For a creature that absorbed in her craft, it is likely that she can wield the art as easily as a musician plays their instrument.”

“B-But, even a musician needs their sheet music for really long and complicated songs!”

That pleased the Prince, and she nodded as she sat back, tapping her chin with a finger. “Correct again, little one. Yes, it may be true that Elen will need the book, or her tools, for some of her more grand efforts. Jacob may come to bargain for said tools, or, he may attempt to take them by force.”

“What!? W-Why would he do that?”

“Because, Miss Vola, Jacob is forever obsessed with his rituals. He toys with barriers, as you and I do, and I fear that Jacob will ... No. I judge the man too harshly. But remain vigilant of the possibility, Vola.”

“I will.” The idea of Jacob going from his usual, strange, unpredictable but still-a-friend self, to a genuine enemy, was terrifying, far more terrifying than the hunters, or the werewolves, or Azamel.

Antoinette leaned in then, and offered Natasha a rather predatory grin. “And do not think I do not know, that you know I sent you a text earlier today, Vola, one that you ignored. Knowing you, you either had your phone off to help hide your presence and not annoy others, or more likely, you were out with your boyfriends, on an ... adventure. Perhaps you were out, learning of the Hisil?”

Natasha froze, gulped, and nodded. Better to not say anything, and put her foot in her mouth.

The Prince chuckled. “You are free to be adventurous with your desire to learn of spirits and of Uratha. As long as you are careful, as I trust you to be, and to share with your teacher valuable information.” Natasha nodded vigorously. “Good. I summoned you here to familiarize yourself with these items before sunrise, as you can imagine. But also, your priorities have changed with the defeat of the hunters.”

“Oh, r-right. If Jack’s taken them down, then I d-don’t need to be hunting for them anymore.” If she hadn’t been in the Hisil tonight, she would have gotten Jack’s call, or following text. She would have come. Maybe it was a good thing she didn’t?

“I wished for you to explore ways to defeat Begotten. For now, consider such an activity as your lowest priority. Azamel and Sándor can be ... trusted, to an extent. I wish for you to continue learning of spirits and the werewolves, though that is to be your second priority. Your primary task, young Mekhet, will be to discover whatever it is that haunts my city.”

“Haunts?”

Antoinette leaned back, and adopted her serious face, like steel. “Surely you have noticed it. Something lurks within the shadows. It watches. It affects in ways I have yet to determine.”

“Black Blood? Or ... Maria?” The thought of her old boss being up to something so nasty that Antoinette considered it to be a ‘thing’ haunting her city, was not a comforting thought. At least with Black Blood, it was practically expected.

“I do not know, Miss Vola.” She shrugged. That was scary, Antoinette shrugged. To see the elder straight up admit to not knowing something was always startling. “Perhaps. The Begotten have noticed the presence of something, and Jack is aware of it. I imagine several of his interactions with the Begotten brought this strange presence to light. It creeps and crawls, just at the edge of my awareness, Vola. I have learned more of its presence through things not seen, rather than seen. The spirits we summon have mentioned something that scars the land, and cuts holes through the Gauntlet, but know not what. I cannot help but—”

“Um ... I m-may have an idea.”

The Prince raised an eyebrow, her steel expression shattering for one of intrigue. “Oh?”

“Y-Yes. I d-d-don’t know if it’s connected, but ... when I was in the Hisil, with Avery, a little while ago, one of the spirits, and David, they ... they umm ... said that the strange spider monster, the Azlu, it didn’t come naturally. Something ... d-drew it here.”

The Prince froze for a moment, and her eyes slowly, slightly squinted at Natasha, like she was lining her up as a target. “And you wait until now to share this with me?”

Natasha felt her whole body suddenly encapsulate in ice. Antoinette almost never looked at her that way, that angry way, with cold fury flowing out of her. Fix it fix it fix it!

“I-I’m sorry! I had planned to, in a more ... d-d-detailed report.” It hadn’t been long since that first trip into the Hisil, and she’d been a little more concerned with the hunters. Yeah, the hunters! “The hunters were t-taking p-p-priority! And ... I ... didn’t think it was important.”

Antoinette’s fury always came in two forms: fire, and ice. Fire came and went predictably, and Antoinette was better at controlling it than most. Ice, on the other hand, made Natasha feel like she was staring into the eyes of an alien intelligence, something with a mind greater than hers, something that looked at her with disdain like how a human might look at an ant that'd had the nerve to get on their food. It was the sort of anger only someone who'd had decades of experience being a leader could truly wield.

But, Antoinette sighed, and the ice melted away. "I apologize, my student. I have not truly involved you in this hunt for the mysterious force. I should not expect you to make connections regarding it."

"I should have m-mentioned it, though."

"Perhaps, but I am sure you would have eventually, as you did." Leaning back, Antoinette looked up at the ceiling far above them, and combed her hair over her right shoulder down onto her chest. "So the Uratha have also had their attention drawn to something unusual within the city."

"Y-Yes. One of the spirits ... um, Street-Tail King, it said it would give them information about the Azlu, if they promised to ... p-pursue the mystery, to its end, and deal with it for Street-Tail. It was ... afraid."

"Pursue the mystery to its end. That does sound undoubtedly linked, does it not?"

"It d-does."

Antoinette shook her head as she looked at the table, and Natasha could only guess at the million thoughts running through her head.

"There is a connection we are not seeing, my student. The hunters have been a distraction, and I fear the Carthians and Terra Den will continue this trend of distractions. You will be my eyes and ears, Natasha, in a way my sheriff cannot. Continue to learn of the Uratha and the spirits. And make more of an effort to befriend the Begotten. And, if possible, learn more of Black Blood.”

“B-B-B-Black...” Oh god.

“Tread lightly, my student. Black Blood does not care for my presence, and undoubtedly knows you serve the Ordo as well. Should an interaction occur, it should only be because an Uratha acted as catalyst. You are not to broach the spirit on your own. Understood?”

“Yes ma’am!” Her boss didn’t need to tell her twice. Black Blood was legitimately the scariest thing she’d ever seen. Scarier than a psycho Lucas. Scarier than a spider monster. Scarier than any of the Begotten, and she’d seen three of their Horrors by now.

“On a far more enjoyable note, I am hosting a ball in several days, Miss Vola, in celebration of the defeat of the hunters. Everyone is invited.”

Ooh, a ball, another opportunity for Tash to feel awkward and out of place. Yaay.

“Everyone?”

“Indeed. Tensions run high between the Invictus and Carthians. With the hunters defeated, it will be far safer to host a gathering, and it presents me an opportunity. I would like to announce victory officially, and to insure those who achieved it are known, the witches in particular. All four were there.”

“Oh, r-right. Aaron, Othello, Jennifer, and Beatrice. If ... if you m-make it known that they helped defeat the hunters...”

“Then the city will appreciate their presence, and it will help sooth tensions with them. I will do the same for Clara, if she agrees. It would help with soothing tensions with the Carthians; they like the werewolves.” Sighing, a painful and weary sigh, she looked at the waves of hair she combed with her fingers. “I am not sure whether to invite the Begotten though, or at least, I am not sure what to do of Athalia. She acted against Jack, indirectly, but against him nonetheless, in a futile effort to save her daughter.”

That was a dilemma. If Antoinette was trying to host a ‘all paranormals invited’ ball, not inviting one would a pretty big statement. Bad politics. It’d put a red flag over Athalia’s head, and would insult the Begotten as a whole, probably.

“M-Maybe ... ask Samantha?”

“Ah, that is an interesting proposal, my student. Of all that would disagree with Athalia’s presence, Samantha is the most truly damaged by the Begotten’s daughter, even more so than Beatrice.” With a satisfied nod, she smiled. “And, I would like to warn you of Elaine. She will be there.”

“You’re old friend, right. B-But, warn me?”

“Oui. Elaine is a Ventrue of the Ordo Dracul, as you know, and as old as I. She is ... dangerous, Natasha, and while she is a close friend of mine, I am not so oblivious as to think this visit of hers is purely coincidental. She is up to something, my student. Keep your eyes open.”

---

~~Damien~~

“What?!” Maria and Michael said, together. There was a considerable amount of venom in their words, and plenty of surprise, enough that Damien wasn’t sure how to continue. He looked to Jessy beside him, but she was staring at him in a similar manner.

They were in the Xnomina headquarters, in the top floor for an impromptu meeting at Jack's request, with very little time left before sunrise. Considering the circumstances, the two elders had known it'd be a serious meeting before they arrived, but Jack shocked them both.

"The hunters are defeated," Damien said again. Maybe it wasn't a good idea that he opened this conversation, Longinus help him. Damien had decided to, but it was clear that as Damien tried to direct their focus to him, they were quickly catching on that this night was Jack's, good and bad.

Part of him felt relieved. He was tired, hungry, and sore. He needed sleep, and the sun would be up soon. Let Jack deal with the two elders.

Jack looked down, rubbed his head a couple times, and took a deep breath. And so began the tale of how a rather outgoing and dull-witted hunter named Brace Harcourt came to them with a proposal. Jack told them of the help the Circle of the Crone provided, that Fiona and Athalia helped, and how he used the power of the curse to blitzkrieg the hunters. Conveniently, he left out how the curse had its own personality, and relished in the chaos it'd created. He told them about the nightmare, about Sándor, and how Damien freed him. He told them about Azamel, and how Jeremiah nearly killed her. He told them about how Antoinette now had the three hunters as prisoners, how Elen was still alive, and that Jacob likely had her.

That sent a shiver up Damien's spine. Elen was still alive. And it wasn't Antoinette who'd got her, Jacob had. Knowing that psychopath had a flesh witch to torture secrets out of, was not a pleasing thought.

Jack didn't mention Clara. And he didn't mention how Athalia hadn't helped them like she was supposed to. Damien noted these.

Last thing they needed right now was holes in their story. Jack wanted to protect Clara, and he wanted to protect Athalia. If Athalia had truly betrayed them in an effort to save her daughter, Damien was surprised he felt that way. But, he didn't know the details of what happened at the end, and judging by the somber look on Jack's face, and everyone else when he'd woken up in the nightmare for that matter, it hadn't been good.

"Let me get this straight," Michael said, sitting back against the office table edge as he folded his arms across his chest. "You did not contact either me or Madam Turio. You did not even contact the Prince, someone you have sway with, Mister Terry. You did not contact the Invictus at large for aid either. Instead, you decided to trust witches, and this curse that you still do not fully understand." His voice rose until it was booming. He didn't yell, but he came close, and Damien found it growing more and more difficult to hold still.

"Yes, Mister McDonald," Jack said. "I had no time. Harcourt's offer was legitimate, and the time frame small." Sighing, Jack looked to his boss, and met the man's gaze in a way Damien never would. "And I knew this curse was strong enough to deal with them."

Damien winced, and finally looked down. Yeah, it was strong enough to deal with the hunters, and Sándor, and maybe both at the same time. If, instead of fighting inside alien and unusual places, the fight had been in Dolareido itself, he bet Jack would have had an even easier time beating them. A vampire, in a city, with walls and shadows and nigh infinite creatures to summon, was a far more dangerous creature than one in a strange place, like a fish out of water.

"And where were you during all this," Michael said to his child.

Jessy stood up straight, ripped out of her shocked expression that'd been locked on Jack for some time. "Uh, I was out with some of the werewolves, and Natasha ... sire."

And if Jessy didn't join them, that meant whatever it was she was up to with the werewolves, had prevented her involvement. Considering how important dealing with the hunters was, that put a sign over her head saying she was doing some shit with the werewolves that was either a big deal, or involved the Shadow realm. Either way, it was clear Jessy hadn't told Michael about it, and her sire growled as he glared at her.

Throughout all this, Maria watched, and glared as well. Michael was content to wear his rage on his surface, but Maria kept it buried, only leaking out through her eyes.

"The hunters are defeated," Maria said at last, standing up from her seat at the huge table. "I am sure you realized as you launched this assault, that Mister McDonald would not approve, Mister Terry."

The boy nodded. "I did, Madam Turio. But there was no way I could convince you that this curse was strong enough to succeed, except victory." His voice rose as well, a little louder than Damien thought smart. "I had to make a decision, where only I could be fully aware of the elements involved. I knew I could do that, that the curse could do it, and we did."

The two elders aimed their stabbing eyes at the boy, but Jack did not back down. Jessy and Damien both inched themselves away from him, just a little, afraid he might spontaneously combust under the power of their glares.

But, after a few moments of painful silence, the two elders looked to each other, and sighed.

“You speak truly, Mister Terry,” Maria said. Damien sighed as he felt the tension melt out of him. “While your actions were extreme, it is true that these are unusual circumstances. The Circle and the Ordo acquiring new toys to fuel their experiments does not bring me joy, but knowing that the majority of the hunters have been defeated, does.”

Michael nodded. “This is a great thorn out of our side. As much as I’d like to be angry with you, Mister Terry, you’ve beaten an enemy, and secured your own revenge. Now, we can focus on the Carthians, and their infuriating need to disturb the balance.”

Michael went on, talking about the politics of Dolareido, how the Carthians were pushing against the Invictus, using Terra Den to fight Xnomina, and how Garry Tones was a loose cannon. Maria, on the other hand, was happy to let the man rant as she looked at Damien. The knowing glance traded between them was plenty. She did not like what she’d heard about the curse, and was reminding Damien that it was his responsibility to deal with Jack, if it came to that.

After tonight, it didn’t seem like a such a ridiculous notion, that he might have to kill Jack. He prayed he wouldn’t have to, but unless he found a way to reseal the curse, the possibility of Damien having to do something was very real, and sickening.

---

“Can’t believe it,” Jessy said as she stepped onto the elevator. “You fucking killed them all?”

Sighing, Jack shook his head. “No. Like I said, Elen killed most of them.”

“But, you would have killed most of them, if she hadn’t done it for you, right? Hell, you had them on the run.”

“I did ... it did.” The boy shuddered and shook his head again. “It was nasty, Jessy. Not like, a great war story I want to share, ok?”

“But, you won! Julias is—”

“Yeah, I know. And I get it. But later, ok?”

She put her hands up in surrender. “Sure, sure. But, I mean, you must be a little happy, right? Angela’s dead! Jeremiah’s dead. Christ, you got em!” Laughing, she clapped the man on the shoulder.

“Julias avenged! No more sweeps every fucking night. No more worrying about that fucker blowing us up during the day. Parties are back on the menu?”

As much as Damien was trying to appreciate Jack’s rather sober and serious attitude, Jessy got Damien smiling. Him, and a moment later, Jack as well. Perhaps the man wasn’t as depressed as he seemed. Jessy was right, after all. They’d won.

“Yes, parties are back on the menu, you fucking dumbass,” Jack said, throwing his hands up not unlike Jessy had moments ago. “The Prince is going to be hosting a party soon. Or, you know, ball.”

“Ooh, like the last one? I got this new dress that—”

“Not like the last one. Well, maybe a bit? My mom’s going to be there, and this will be the first, real social thing she’s gone to since her embrace, except for a couple trips to Bloodlust for drink. So, you know, lay off fingering and blowing the kine that come?”

“Agreed,” Damien said. Social gatherings, parties, balls, they weren’t things he enjoyed, and seeing kine being stripped, Kissed, and sexually pleased, only made said things more difficult for him. Now that he had a girlfriend, maybe it’d be different? Fiona would be there, and being that she wasn’t a vampire, she couldn’t simply turn off her body’s desires. It’d be a night of her trying to get into his pants, because everything around her would be lighting her blood on fire.

In retrospect, maybe it wouldn't be so bad?

“Well, I won't be enjoying myself that way, anyway. Eric doesn't seem interested in getting more legs in the bed.”

Damien shrugged. “Perhaps he's happy with your relationship, sexually speaking? Not all relationships need to include wanton sex orgies.”

“Of course he's happy, I'm fucking awesome. And I'm damn happy with Eric, too. But I keep thinking, man it'd be hot to have some more legs in this bed. Like, I'm thinking he'll really love it, too. He's a guy, right? What guy doesn't want two, or three, or five sets of lips sucking on his cock?”

Rolling his eyes, Damien gestured to Jack. “Does having more legs in your bed make your nights with the Prince more enjoyable?”

The kid shook his head, without hesitation either. “Honestly? No. I mean, I enjoy Ashley and Julee's company, and I enjoy that Antoinette enjoys their company. The sex isn't better with them there, but it certainly is different.” He tapped his chin then, and Damien and Jessy waited for his growing thought. “It can actually kinda ruin the romance sometimes, you know? Antoinette loves her ghouls, but it's not romantic love, and when she and I want to be romantic, it can be a little hard to do that with them around.”

That got Jessy thinking. “Romance, right. I ... I guess I don't do the romance thing very well. Never been in a real relationship, you know? Not good at this whole ‘hey I like you, we should be friends and fuck, but also emotionally support each other’ thing.”

Jack laughed. “Eric's divorced, right? He's probably got a bunch of triggers you're setting off, warning him that you're not taking the relationship seriously when you propose having more people in bed.”

“I am taking it seriously!” Like a child throwing a tantrum, she stomped around the elevator as it continued its descent. “Like, really seriously; by my standards at least. I don’t normally let myself get all ... mushy, you know? But I do with Eric.”

Nodding, Jack leaned back against the wall of the elevator. It was a long way down, and they had a little bit to talk. “I’m sure if you keep trying, you’ll have more legs in your bed eventually. But in the meantime, I’d suggest dialing down on the orgy pushing a bit, and dial up the romantic lovey dovey stuff.”

“Bleh. Bleh!”

Jack and Damien laughed, and Damien leaned back against the elevator wall next to his friend. He said nothing though, this particular topic well outside his expertise. Better to let his friend talk, and he could absorb and learn. Jack didn’t seem like the sort of guy to be well versed in social romance constructs, but then again, he was very smart, and had Antoinette for a lover.

“You were out with him tonight?” Jack said.

“Yeah, with Tash, visiting the Shadow realm. Scary shit! Those spirit things are fucking weird. Some of them look like they came out of a Dr. Seuss story. Some of them look like they came out of a nightmare. And now that we’ve all literally been inside nightmares, I can say that with authority.”

“Learn anything useful?” Damien said.

“Nah, just that the werewolves have a spirit, Flowing Sanctuary, and she won’t let us stir up trouble. Black Blood wasn’t around either, but if Jacob has Elen, then I’m guessing that’s why.”

Before Damien could ask what sort of trouble the damn Gangrel was attempting to cause, the elevator door opened. Fiona jumped in place at the door, several times, wearing her usual leather jacket and jeans, and helped Damien out of the elevator. Much as he'd been holding up well for the last minute meeting, truth was he desperately needed to lie down and sleep. His insides ached, and Clara hadn't given him enough blood to fully recover; even if she had, he still needed sleep to use it.

"Fiona," Jessy said, "ball happening in a few days. Gonna celebrate! The boys here are suggesting we vamps tone it down, you know, sexually speaking, compared to last time."

"Well fuck that! Ye want to celebrate, right? I say, more sex than last time!"

Damien, who'd just finished hooking his right arm over Fiona's shoulders, facepalmed with his left. Of course Fiona would agree with Jessy. She'd have agreed to skydiving without a parachute, if someone suggested it, especially Jessy. Those two were not good for each other.

"Please don't," Jack said. "My mom's gonna be there, and she's not exactly, uh ... a slut, like the two of you?"

Damien winced, expecting a backlash. But Fiona and Jessy laughed, shrugged, and stuck their tongues out at him. At the same time. Had they been hanging out together?

"Only one man in my life, ye wankstain." Rolling her eyes, she leaned in and put a kiss on Damien's cheek. "Now, I'm gonna take that man home, and take care of him."

---

They went to his apartment. The sun would be up very soon, maybe twenty minutes, and there wasn't time for a visit to her place to drop her off. His apartment was a typical expensive apartment, except that he hadn't decorated it, at all. Nothing but cold steel colors, with plenty of blacks, including blackout curtains. While he'd slept here before, he'd mostly slept in Maria's den, with the rising threat of the hunters.

Now, with the hunters shattered, no leaders, no special flesh chamber to hide within, the chances of them attacking was minuscule; attacking his apartment building specifically, beyond minuscule. And with the reinforced walls, extra locks on the door, blackout curtains, and bedroom with no windows, the chances of someone or some sunlight managing to reach him while he slept was extremely low.

Dolareido had been built from the ground up to house vampires after all. Only the elders slept in places more secure, and perhaps the witches and their cave.

"Victory!" Fiona said, and she giggled openly as she set him on his bed. Black sheets, black pillow cases, white walls. His girlfriend couldn't help but laugh when she looked around, shrugged, and sat on the bed with him. "The hunters are gone!"

"Not completely gone."

"Na, but close!" Nodding like she understood the world and its secrets, she started to undress him.

"You don't have to—"

"I want to. I was so worried! Ye coulda died, and I wouldnae 'ave been there! Athalia, she ... she tricked me, and—"

He shook his head, and set a hand on her shoulder. "I don't know what happened exactly. Do you know the details? Of what happened between Jack and Athalia, at the end, with Angela."

“Na.” Sighing with a big, heavy sound, she turned to face him, and flomped on him. Flomped, like a big dog not aware of its own size. He was flattened to his bed, and he groaned as the impact of her body awakened his wounds. “Fuck! Sorry. I’m such a dobber.”

He smiled, and hugged her as she cuddled into his chest. Sunrise was coming, and they didn’t have much time for anything. He doubted either of them would really be in the mood for sex anyway, not after tonight. Even monsters could only look so much death in the eye before it made them sick.

“Athalia...”

“What?” he said.

“Athalia, she’ll be ... sad. She talked about her daughter, ye ken? Blethered on about her, about how ... how much it was her fault, that Angela turned out like she did.”

“Everyone’s responsible for their own actions.”

“Aye, but it’s nae the same! Athalia’s Horror couldnae help it, and it ... it really hurt Angela, ye ken? She grew up with nightmares, all the time. And Athalia, she was so ... so...” Sniffling, Fiona nuzzled her face into Damien’s neck, and sighed louder, straight into the side of his throat. The warmth of her breath was pleasant. “I’ll talk to her, but I know she’ll be so sad!”

“Sad enough ... that she’ll want revenge?”

Fiona shrugged into his body, and kissed his neck once before growing still again. “I dinnae think so, but ... I dinnae know. She’ll be...” Sad. Fiona couldn’t find a better word for it. It was a sadness Damien knew he’d never be able to appreciate it, but he didn’t need to. For the moment, his concern was whether Athalia would be a problem, and if it was a good idea to leave her alive.

He could kill her, he knew he could. He wasn't Daniel, but that didn't mean he couldn't sneak up on Athalia and end her, or snipe her from a distance. All these events had been driving him to be better, faster, sneakier, and with Daniel to train him, he knew he'd be good enough to kill the monster if he caught her in the physical world.

Good Lord. It was frustrating that he kept framing his problems with 'could I kill this person?' First Jack, now Athalia. Who next?

He kissed Fiona's hair, wrinkled his nose as the frizzy mane tickled his face, and hugged her. "Can you get home from here? Or should I—"

"Aye, I can, easy. Ye rest. I'll burrow home from under yer bed, once ye're down."

He laughed at that. It was a sound he didn't make often, but a lot more when she was around. He was dating a monster that came from under the bed, literally.

"Can you get into places the same way?"

"Kinda. Getting back to my lair is nae the same as opening a door. If I've been there before, I can burrow there, if there's some darkness around. But I cannae take others that way. I need to open a door for that, and that would need a lot of similarities between a place in my lair, and where I'm opening up to." She kissed his neck again, and nuzzled in close, as if she was going to sleep. Maybe she was?

He was lowering his guard down quite a bit, having someone else in his bedroom while he let sunrise come. Vampire instinct told him he should go find somewhere safer to sleep, somewhere where people didn't know his location, or at least do it alone. But, he trusted Fiona, far more than he figured he'd ever trust another. She was too damn sweet to do anything to betray him.

And, there was a painful reality he and the other Kindred had trouble accepting: Begotten could get almost anywhere, go almost anywhere, as long as they'd been there once before. They were the Houdinis of the paranormal world, evidently, and if you were unlucky enough to get pulled into their lair, they were insanely powerful.

One of those inescapable monsters, someone that could get you from under your own damn bed, now hated Jack and Beatrice. Jack with his curse could take her in a straight fight, sure, but Athalia didn't have to play nice. She could strike out from the shadows in a way that'd make any Nos or Mekhet jealous. No wonder Antoinette wasn't happy they were in her city.

Well, Damien was happy they were, or at least, happy Fiona had come. As sunrise came, and he let Kindred instinct pull him down into the deep slumber of his daily coma, he indulged in the sensation of Fiona's body on him.

They'd won. No more hunters, mostly. They could take a moment to relax, and worry about other problems now, problems that seemed less liable to blow up buildings in a reckless attack. But, for the second life of him, he could not completely relax. Something or someone was out there, creeping around in Dolareido, sneaking, cutting holes and creating portals, according to Fiona. As much as Damien knew he'd have to deal with the Carthians, and potentially Jack, and maybe even Maria or Jacob, as least they were known quantities. Knowing something else was out there, maybe harmless, maybe not, was itching at the Mekhet half of him.

He had to learn more.

---

~~Antoinette~~

The next night, she awoke, and without a word, began to fuck her little Ventrue. First for his pleasure, and then for hers.

Antoinette relaxed into the mountain of pillows against her back, bed beneath her, and grinned at the boy between her legs. With her ass on her blankets, her knees were raised, and thighs hooked over Jack's shoulders. His mouth was wrapped around her sex, completely, and his tongue lapped and massaged her clitoris. His weight was on his elbows, left hand hooked around her leg to rest on her stomach, while his right hand stretched her open with several fingers, and pressed up against her g-spot.

Oh, how she had taught her little Ventrue well. After burying her clitoris in rough, almost frantic licking for several seconds, and nearly bringing her toward her second orgasm, he slowed down. He switched to a gentle suckle, drawing her lips with his own, before doing the same for her clitoris. No longer did her lover dedicate his efforts simply to making her orgasm. As his skills had developed, he had long learned how to insure each orgasm was teased out of her, so each was powerful once it finally arrived. He had learned to trust his skills, trust in her arousal, and build the pleasure.

She smiled down at the buzzed head between her milky white thighs, and offered him a small moan. She did not need to moan of course, despite the coursing bliss she felt sparking outward from her swollen clitoris and aching depths, but the sound not only elicited joy from her lover, it also added to the art of the experience. Her moans were, after all, honed, and masterful.

With a slow, teasing motion of her own, she ran her right hand down from her shoulder to her right breast, and trailed through the cum that coated her. Once her fingers reached her nipple, she teased her middle finger around and around her swollen, pink areola, where it jutted out from her large bosom. Instant sparks, tiny jolts of electric pleasure that danced from her large nipple, into her chest, and down to her core.

It was the combination of the gentle, playful friction of fingertips along the engorged skin, combined with the pleasing heat and wetness of her lover's cum, that sparked the greatest pleasure from touching her breasts. In truth, she craved it. Massaging her lover's seed into her skin, and drawing pleasure from her breasts and swollen nipples as she did, had become a regular aspect of their love making. All the better to masturbate with her breasts, as her man licked her sex and fingered her insides.

As she watched the boy between her thighs, she smiled. Jack had proven capable of suppressing the curse twice now, and that settled many of her concerns. It was still a great threat, but after last night, she no longer let it scratch at her thoughts all hours of the night. Jack not only had some degree of control over it, but the curse proved that it desired as other Kindred desired. Perhaps it would become another Viktor, or Tony, or Lucas, and she would be forced to deal with it and its rising ambitions. For now, it had climbed down her list of concerns considerably.

"Jack, my love," she said, talking smoothly, despite the rising pleasure dancing along her thighs, down into her toes. "I have been thinking of Elaine, as of late." Her climax was fast approaching, and she licked her lips slowly, putting on a display for her watching Ventrue. When her words stirred his eyes to open wide, she gently squeezed the whole of her right breast with her right hand, causing his cum to trickle out from between her fingers as she eased her cupping grip down her breasts, before her hand slipped underneath the heavy weight.

"Ou hav?" he said, words muffled.

She laughed. He knew better than to stop kissing her, unless she requested it, and she had not. But, just to remind him, she squeezed his head and neck with her large, curvy, hard thighs, and the boy's eyes went wide again for a single moment, before he resumed his suckling and licking with emphasis. Laughing once again, she released his skull from the death trap of her thick legs, and resumed teasing her breast.

“I have indeed. I cannot help but wonder what she will do, to attempt to draw you from my embrace. I trust her to not perform Disciplines upon you, especially now, considering your condition. And even if you did not carry the curse, she would not resort to such tactics, as you are mine. No, I expect Elaine to attempt to—” Jack started to finger her faster, and her breathing stopped for a moment. Perhaps he was annoyed with her, for teasing him so? His hand hooked about her hip pressed on her pelvis, a couple inches past her sex, and his other hand drove three fingers up toward it in a rapid pulse. Her engorged g-spot lay between the two hands, and the assault sent pleasure washing over her like a tidal wave.

She closed her eyes for a moment, and released a single, precisely arranged moan, with a beautiful pitch and perfect volume, as her insides clenched. The boy ceased licking and suckling, and kept his tongue flat to her clitoris, holding still and letting the bliss spread as he continued to finger her slit. She arched her back slightly, jutting her breasts outward, and while she was making an obvious effort to show off for him, to put her body on display and let her lover drink in the sight of her beauty, it was also true that orgasm was coursing up and down through her. The delightful sparks erupted outward from her sex, earning drops of her juices onto the boy’s face and fingers, as the bliss flowed down to her toes, and back up to her chest. She drew the pleasure further, massaging her breasts and teasing her soaked, swollen nipples. With his fingers pressing up against her depths again and again, as she teased her aching areola, massaging his cum into them, she had little trouble milking the pleasure to its fullest.

“I expect her to attempt to seduce more directly,” she said, voice a touch softer, and a touch higher. Her climax was only just beginning to fade, after all, and even one as skilled as her could not keep her voice perfectly level, as orgasm aftershocks rippled outward from her between her legs. “She is Ventrue, after all, and does not do subtlety well.” Better than a Gangrel, of course, but that meant little.

She relaxed her thighs, releasing them from Jack's head, and the boy lifted it. He kept his fingers inside her though, gently pushing up on her depths, in a similar rhythm to her milking grip on her breasts. Oh yes, she had taught him well. To milk the final sparks of climax was vital, after all.

“And, um, you're just going to let her?”

“Oui.” With a small grin she knew her lover recognized, she leaned down for him, kissed him on the forehead, and slipped off the bed. Her legs and breast still tingled with orgasm aftershocks, but alas, she had several emergency meetings to arrange, after all, and could not wait much longer. “I look forward to seeing her fail. And, truthfully, I look forward to watching you squirm as Elaine makes Jennifer seem quaint.” Both were terribly attractive Ventrue, and in typical Daeva fashion, perfectly content using their beauty to persuade and manipulate. Unlike Daeva, they did not care to guard themselves with pretense, or disguise their manipulations in any way.

“You really like watching me squirm, don't you?”

“Oui. Call it a guilty pleasure, my love, and punishment, for your rashness last night.”

“A guilty pleasure.” Her lover frowned at her, but it was a weak frown, melting within moments as she grinned at him through the corner of her eye. “I'm never going to be as comfortable with all this sex stuff as you, am I?”

“Nonsense. With another century or two under your belt, I am sure you will be freed of all sexual ... hangups, as people refer to them in present times.” As she started touching up her makeup, Jack stepped behind her, and started combing her hair. The both of them were nude, and yet the boy no longer stared at her in unending awe; one of his barriers already shattered. Jack probably did not realize that, were he still human, he would now be comfortable on a nude beach. Mostly.

“I dunno. I don’t think it’s fair to really call it a hangup that some people just kinda prefer to be private about their sex lives.”

“Oh?”

“Yeah. For a lot of people, privacy kinda increases the intimacy, you know?”

“Perhaps.” It did not take long to finish; she had been perfecting her beauty for centuries. She smiled at her lover through the mirror, analyzing his expression. “I do not believe it is the literal act of sex where such intimacy is found, my love. I believe proximity is merely the bridge that allows two to connect their emotions, and that that bridge can be built in many ways.” Chuckling, she turned around again, and set her hands on the boy’s shoulders. Now, he was no longer able to hold his composure, and his gaze fell to her breasts several times before finally stabilizing on her eyes. “I could love you with all my soul, you damned fool, even with ten pairs of legs wrapped around you, and a thousand eyes watching. As long as your hunger, lust, and emotions were centered on me, and mine upon you, that bridge would form without issue.”

Jack returned her smile, nodding. “I guess if I get as old as you, I’ll be more comfortable with intimacy, or, I mean ... well, you know.”

“Oui. You will learn to not attach simple, physical touch, as the guiding force of romance.” She tapped her chin at that, before she walked over to her wardrobe, and began to dress. “I would be remiss to not mention gender differences. Men, even elder male Kindred, are perhaps a little more limited to opening themselves so.”

“Ha, maybe. But then, what about Natasha? Her relationship is pretty unique. I keep expecting to hear that Matt and Art have started fighting over her, and she has to choose. Typical girly paranormal romance trash, right? Instead, all I hear is that they both seem to like her a lot, and are good friends.”

“Indeed. I did not expect her relationship to survive as long as it has, before devolving into something juvenile. I underestimated the emotional maturity of Matthew and Arturo.” As she slipped on her bra, a black and uplifting thing, she turned to face Jack, so he could watch. He enjoyed watching her, and she enjoyed having his eyes on her. “Our relationship is simpler. We love each other, my love, and others who wish to partake of the sexual energy we create are welcome to do so.”

“Are they?” he said, eyes locked firmly onto her body. “I believe you once said you didn’t want other Kindred in our bed.”

“That I did. Kindred are selfish creatures, that wish to acquire and control all they can. I said I would share our sexual energy, not release to another.” She paused in front of the mirror for a moment, considering. “The relationship that has developed between Beatrice and Jennifer has also surprised me, though that is mostly a question of Jennifer, and her bizarre tastes.” Grinning, Antoinette slipped into her business skirt, and made sure to display her curvy derriere in its full glory for her lover. “The only Kindred I would trust to respect our relationship, if they joined us, is Elaine.” The boy sat up straight again, and she slowly licked a fang as she drank in his reaction. Shock, surprise, wonder. “Does that idea interest you, my love?”

“I uh, I mean, the last thing I want is to do something you don’t want to do, Antoinette. And, I mean, I’m already having sex with three women on a regular basis because of you. I’m the luckiest guy on the planet! Last thing I need is even more ... you know, women in bed.”

“But?” She sensed a but, and she again smiled at the man as she slipped on her white shirt.

“But, um ... I gotta admit, I am a guy. There’s something alluring about, you know, having more women in bed. Kinda appeals to some lizard brain part of me, I guess? Gotta build my harem.” He shrugged at that, as if admitting to tomfoolery. All she could do was laugh at his delicious self awareness.”I do kinda like all these experiences you keep putting me through, too. Most of them kinda shock me at the time, and my reflex is to say no, but you put me through them anyway, and I end up kinda loving it.”

One of the many reasons she loved her little Ventrue. Not only did he agree to do the things she borderline forced upon him, he was always happier for the experience.

“I am glad to have expanded your tastes, Jack.”

“But, I don’t know anything about this woman.”

“Ah, of course.” She came over, sat beside her still naked Ventrue, and set an arm behind him so she could rub his buzzed hair in that way he enjoyed. “Elaine, a tall and curvy woman, not dissimilar to myself. Wavy blonde hair, and exquisitely large breasts, almost as large as mine.” Naturally, a comment about breasts was enough to grab Jack’s attention, and she laughed as she stroked his buzzed head a little harder. It was a delightful sensation, the feel of such short hair fighting against her fingers, almost prickly.

“I uh, I meant personality, and history. Like, what sort of ... things, have you done with her?”

Nodding, she leaned in close, and set her lips to her lover’s ear. With slow, husky breaths, she slid her hand down from his head to his back, while her other reached out, slid down his stomach, and reached for his flaccid length. Her touch was signal enough for her surprised Jack to reignite his Blush, and she made one of her perfected, calculated moans for him. She Blushed as well, and licked her tongue along her teeth, preparing.

“Elaine has joined my bed enough times, that we have touched every inch of each other’s body, my love. We have locked our legs together, and rubbed our slits against each other’s until juices were literally dripping.” The boy went rigid once again, as did his shaft in her grip. “I have had a dozen kine paint our breasts in white, and we have rubbed our bodies against each other until the seed was spread and massaged into our skin. I have kissed away the cum of men, and the juices of women, from her breasts, as she has mine. I have held her close and delighted in the sensations of her climaxes, as she was fucked by several men, and women, at once.”

“Good ... god...”

Laughing, Antoinette pulled Jack up onto the center of the huge bed, light as a feather. She spread his legs, and the boy’s body went limp as he submitted; his shaft did anything but.

“I would never invite another Kindred into our bed without your express permission, my love. It is a threshold, a border I would not cross lightly.” She lowered herself down onto him, and set her lips to the already wetting head of his cock. Her story had elicited a strong reaction in him, as she knew it would. No doubt he was imagining himself now, painting her breasts with his seed, and watching her rub her body into another curvy woman’s bosom. “But, as I said, I trust Elaine, and we know each other well. Something tells me you would enjoy having me sit on your girth, while my friend caresses my body until I climax upon you?”

“I really do wonder why”—his own moan interrupted him, as she slipped her lips around his glans, and began to lick and suckle —“why you enjoy having sex with me so much, with a history like that.”

Without removing his cock from her mouth, she rolled her eyes, grinned her succubus grin, and sank her head down onto the naked man's length. Once every inch of his shaft was buried inside, with her leaning down over him between his legs, and Jack lying on his back, she reached out, pressed her hands down against his hard stomach, and bathed his length in bliss. She had done this hundred of times with her lover, and as the boy said, she had quite the history. It took four minutes to bring him the orgasm.

Jack, panting and shaking for the moment with the sheer brute force of the bliss she had forced upon him, managed to push his weight up onto his elbows, and gazed down at where her lips were still locked around the base of him. She knew how to milk him, how to best draw out the final sparks of pleasure, before she at last lifted her head. Swallowing was not necessary. He had cum down her throat, and within five or ten minutes, his seed would fade into nothing more than the faintest trace of dust.

Once she lifted her head, she offered him her succubus smile again as she pat him on the chest lightly. "We have discussed this before."

"I know, I just—"

"Jack, as one becomes well versed in any particular thing, skill, hobby, they go through phases. Excess and indulgence is one of those phases, but with time, it passes, and instead, the practitioner learns to enjoy quality over quantity." She stepped off the bed, found her work shoes, and slipped them off. "The way your eyes sparkle as I bring pleasures to your door, entices me to no end, little Ventrue, in ways no orgy ever could."

The boy sat up, and scratched his head in that wonderful way, as he watched after her. "I'm uh, glad you like them. I grew them myself."

She rolled her eyes at the hilariously poor attempt at humor, but chuckled nonetheless. “And, I admit, your body delights me as well.” Standing at the edge of the bed, she leaned over him. Her hands found his abs, and she traced the chiseled lines, the subtle indents at the bottom that hinted at the famous ‘eight pack’ she knew men — and women — craved. His pectorals were equally as defined, with small indentations that ran outside them, and his shoulders, and along his legs. He was a short man, small, but that simply made it easier for her to fit him in her embrace when she wished to.

“I grew that t—”

She slapped his chest, hard, enough to earn a loud slap sound, and send the boy into groans of pain. Exaggerated groans, but groans nonetheless. He enjoyed playing her games. She loved that he did.

“As for Elaine, she has grown to appreciate more refined and specific tastes as well. No more does she bathe in the seed of two dozen men as a weekend treat.” Nodding as she dug through her hazy memories, she cleaned the dust from several, and marveled at the sheer excess she and Elaine had once enjoyed. “She once played the proverbial Jezebel, and danced the streets of England centuries ago, pretending to be a whore, and luring men into sexual situations that ... damaged their lives, in a way. Once, she had a banker and the owner of an esteemed company fighting each other for her affection. First, with currency, then with fists.” Antoinette could not help but laugh at the memory, and the joy of which Elaine told her of her manipulations. A Daeva would have delighted in the obsession of her adoring doters, but Elaine delighted in the skill of which she used to control them. “Another reason to be careful with her, Jack. She does oh so enjoy to manipulate, as most Ventrue do.”

“Whoring in England? Like, a prostitute?” Jack sat up, and looked up with thought. Something had sparked a memory in him, and he dug through it, not unlike her. “She, uh, does sound kind of dangerous.”

“Indeed. Dangerous, but my oldest friend, save for Daniel. And she is a member of my order. We may trust her, mostly,” she said. Again, the boy’s eyes looked up, hunting for something in his own mind, but unable to find it. What was he searching for?

Chapter 113

~~Beatrice~~

Jacob hadn't been in the cave when she came back with everyone. She was kinda thankful for that. Stressful conversations could wait until another time.

Waking up was a strange feeling, and the memories hit her hard. Angela, Jeremiah, Athalia, the fucking twisted curse Jack, the huge gargoyle Sándor, it all came back to her a little faster than she'd have liked. Joy, over knowing Angela was dead, and Jeremiah too. Sadness, about Athalia; not a lot, but enough to make things bittersweet. She felt real good that every one of her witches lived, and hell, she even felt good about Azamel living, too.

Sándor was a bit of an anomaly. While Jack's attack had gone freakishly well, to the point it hadn't really been a fight, but a slaughter, she did completely forget they weren't just killing some hunters. They were also freeing a slave. Christ, she'd completely forgotten that Jeremiah had a fucking monster as his slave, during that attack last night. All she knew, was she had a way to get past Elen's magic, and with Jack's curse, they could get revenge.

Revenge had. Now what? She wouldn't be surprised if they had to hunt down a few of the remaining hunters, but compared to the shit they'd been through for months now, it'd be a cakewalk. Maybe Athalia would try and kill her. Certainly possible. If Athalia wanted to kill her, well, let her come. But something told her that it wouldn't come to that, at least not yet, and not without at least one more conversation between them.

That meant she didn't have a good reason to get up tonight. If she wanted, she could just lie down, and sink into a hole of depression.

Fuck, who'da thought achieving revenge would leave her so empty? At least when Angela was alive, she had something to distract herself, something to pour her efforts into. Now, she had nothing.

Not completely nothing. The damn Ventrue slut next to her was a reason. Stupid girl wouldn't let her drown in her pit of despair and self-loathing, and Triss knew that must have been hell for her. Triss was very much a 'let people who can't swim, drown' sort of person, or at least she was, in the past. If she'd known a woman who was drowning in sadness because her lover died, Triss wouldn't have helped her. You can't get stronger when other people save you from your struggles. Few things terrified her as much as the idea of a clingy person dragging her down, until she drowned with them.

She hadn't become clingy since Julias died, but she'd certainly been drowning. Jen helped her stay above water. Damn idiot.

Triss looked over at the stupid woman, who was sitting up with the vitae jolt that came with every completed sunset. Both were still clothed. Jen's clothes were in good condition, but Beatrice's looked like hell, and she smirked as she compared them.

"So, what now?" Jen said.

"Dunno. I suppose we talk to Jacob, next time that asshole shows his face." She had a sneaking suspicion the man had been involved last night, and she didn't know how. "And the Prince wanted to talk to us tonight. We should probably call Jack and see when she wants to do that."

With a heavy sigh, Jen nodded, and lay back on the furs in their alcove. "I'm ... happy, that you got her."

"I am, too."

"You sure? You look torn about the whole thing."

Course Jen would be able to read her, considering how long they'd been friends. And Beatrice was dogshit at hiding her feelings about anything, anyway.

“Yeah, I am,” she said. She whispered it, she realized, after she'd said it. Aaron and Othello were in the cave, and she didn't want them hearing. Her voice grew quieter again, and she scooted in closer to Jen. “You know what her last words were? ‘Do it’. Christ, she was fucked up, Jen. Like, majorly fucked in the head, fucked up. She was happy to die.”

“Yes, you told me last night, but it still sounds terrible. She must have had a horrible life.”

“Athalia fucked her up pretty bad, judging from the ... the last words they had. In the end, she just wanted to save her daughter, but her daughter wouldn't accept her help. It was ... it was so fucked up.” Triss pulled her knees up to her chest and hugged her legs close to her body. “I didn't get to kill an evil woman who ruined my life. I didn't get to beat some horrible bitch. I was just putting down some sort of injured, rabid animal.” She was on repeat, saying the things she'd already told Jen, but her mind was stuck on it and couldn't work past it. Her vision of revenge had been ruined by the reality, and it fucking sucked.

Jen slipped in closer, hooked an arm around her, and hugged her tight. “Then, instead of being happy about revenge, be happy you did something good? You stopped her from killing more people, and it sounds like she was happy it was over. That's a lot of pain you helped stop. Maybe even Athalia will be able to move on now?”

Triss managed a small smile for her friend. There was truth in what she said, and hell, maybe Triss could even start thinking of it that way. “Yeah, but I don't know about Athalia. She ... really wanted to protect her daughter.”

“A wound can’t heal when the knife’s still jammed in there, Triss. Now that Angela’s gone, I think Athalia will ... probably get worse, first, and then she’ll recover. It might take weeks, months, or years, but she’ll recover. No more false hope dragging her down.”

No more false hope. Painful truth. Triss didn’t like it, but truth was better than bullshit. This whole thing didn’t have the ending she’d been hoping for, but it was over. Time for people to heal, and move on.

“So,” Jen said, “that Sándor. Wow.”

Oh good god. “Jen, the dude was getting revenge for a dead wife and son. I think you can safely say he’s off the table.”

“For the moment.” She grinned, and tapped her fingertips together, classic evil villain style. “It was four years ago.”

“And if I didn’t know better, I’d say you were giving his monster form bedroom eyes.”

Jen giggled, a sultry and very feminine thing; undoubtedly a sound she’d practiced. “Well, you have to admit, it was gorgeous. He was utterly massive. Can you imagine, disappearing between those arms? Yum.”

Triss rolled her eyes, and looked around for some clothes. If she was going to the Elysium Tower, the least she could do was not wear clothes with giant tears cutting through it. The others would probably wear suits or something, but the witches would go casual. Casual didn’t mean with half her skin exposed.

She threw off her tank top, reached for another one, and before she could slip it on, Jen was on her. Hugging her from behind, she cupped Triss’s breasts, and pressed her chest into Triss’s back with a very obvious intent to squash her big tits into her. And to make matters worse, she hooked her chin over Triss's shoulder, and set a small kiss on her temple.

“Jen. Seriously?”

“I know I know. Still too soon. But I think it's good to remind you that, I'm perfectly willing to help you alleviate some of your stress.” And to make her point clear, her hands cupping Triss's breasts found her nipple piercings, and lightly teased, circling around her areola with her fingertips. God damn it. Even without the Blush of Life, it still felt damn good.

So, for a little while, Triss just sat there, before leaning back a little, and letting herself melt into Jen's body. Jen remained snug to her back, keeping her upright, and continued to gently massage her breasts. With slow, tender fingers, she circled Triss's nipples, and set slow kisses on her neck, more relaxing than anything. And of course, Jen knew just how to touch her, just how to gently caress her moderate breasts, and how to place delicious, tender squeezes on them that were half massage, half tease. God damn. If Triss blushed, her body would have lit up like the Fourth of July.

“Thanks, for putting up with this stick in the mud,” she said.

“Ha, you are welcome.” Jen got up, held out her hand, and Triss took it once she got the cleaner shirt. “Call me a strong believer in sexual healing.”

---

Standing in the office room of the top floor of the Elysium Tower was a strange feeling. Everything was so clean, pristine, and expensive. The black marble with white lightning lines, the lights built into the walls, the fucking chairs, it was all so god damn richy rich. It made her cringe. All that money, and this was how Antoinette spent it? Then again, this probably didn't scratch the surface of the money Antoinette had, and it was definitely a powerful symbol of her control.

Jennifer, Othello, and Aaron were all there with her, though each of them stood a little bit behind Beatrice, just enough so she would be the first others looked at. Kinda dumb, considering Jen was the one in a suit. She liked suits. Fucking Ventrue.

Clara was there too, dressed just like Triss, blue jeans and a tank top, white versus Triss's black. Damn she was an attractive woman, and she screamed confident. Except, some of that confidence looked damaged.

It was Jack. Jack was standing in front of the group of them, and Clara was a couple feet behind. Whenever her eyes went to the little guy, they fell after a few seconds, and it took a few seconds after that before she lifted her eyes again.

Yeah, understandable. They were all having trouble looking at Jack. Even Jennifer and Aaron, who'd missed half the party, weren't able to look at the kid's back for very long. It was massive, on such a small body. The aura of his Beast was absurd, and dark, and being this close to him made her Beast reel in disgust and fear. Having a very real mental image and memory to attach to its horrid nature made it a thousand times worse.

Only Damien seemed to be ok with it. He stood beside Jack, in his suit and trench coat. No sword. Heh, maybe the broken thing was still in the dream? He didn't waver, didn't shake or quiver, didn't do anything but stand there beside the demon. Solid.

Fiona was there. Sándor was there as well. Both were giving Jack plenty of room, hanging out in the back of the office. Fiona was in her usual leather jacket, but Sándor was dressed a little more formally, some dark jeans with brown boots, black belt, and a blue, button shirt, undone a few buttons so the top half of his chest was visible. Where'd he get the clothes? Probably stole them just for this night, considering they didn't fit him very well, a bit tight on his frame.

Beatrice couldn't blame Jen for getting so flirtatious with him, attractive as he was. The buzz-length black hair, short dark gruff on his hard chin and lean face, along with his strangely dreamy blue eyes, made for a pleasing image. Deep-seated eyes, that held enough buried pain that the man just oozed tormented soul.

She hated that he reminded her of Julias. He helped kill Julias, against his will, but still, it made looking at him difficult. The fact that she recognized that morose look from Julias, back before she helped fix his life, made looking at Sándor beyond difficult. He was a sad soul, racked with pain, and guilt, all the things that screamed emo. Justifiably emo. And he was old enough that he didn't grow hair over one eye, put on mascara, and wear a black t-shirt with some vague anarchist expression on it. Emo on a guy like him was a darker thing, subtler, and a hell of a lot more serious.

If he'd started fake smiling, and suddenly being flirtatious and suave to cover his depression, it'd have been so Julias, she would have had no choice but to rip his fucking throat out. But he didn't. He just stood there, face solid stone like the gargoyle monster, once he'd merged with it. A cold face.

Maybe he'd start to heal. Maybe not.

"Everyone involved in your suicidal assault on the hunters is here, save for Athalia," Antoinette said. She was sitting behind a big desk, and leaning back in a black leather chair that may as well have been a throne. "I am sure you can understand why she is not."

No one said anything. Antoinette was giving some sort of speech, and the atmosphere was clear: let the boss woman talk.

"What you did was foolhardy," she continued, "but ultimately, details of the circumstance were simply beyond my, or the Invictus's, or Avery's, or Jacob's, or ... the Sanctum's ability to quantify or qualify. Jack and the curse that plagues him have proven a powerful tool, and he made a decision to use it, one that he knew the Primogen would not have agreed to.” She smiled at that, and Beatrice raised an eyebrow. Ok, not expecting the smile. “Better to ask for forgiveness than permission, Mister Terry?”

“Uh ... in a sense, Prince,” the kid said.

She nodded, smile remaining. The whole tone of the conversation changed from the military whooping Triss expected, to something a lot more lighthearted. Was the Prince happy with them? It kinda seemed like she was. “The hunters are defeated. Jeremiah and Angela are dead. Three hunters have surrendered. Harcourt has already sent a message to his fellow hunters explaining what has happened, a message I helped craft. Jack, I ask that you Dominate the man later, to insure that he is truthful about his intentions.”

“Will do, Prince. It’s ... difficult, to get past his barriers though, and with the curse, I could end up hurting him.”

“A risk worth taking.” She brushed a hand aside, dismissing the concern easily. Well, he was a hunter. No use crying over spilled milk in that regard, Triss supposed. “The remaining hunters in the city are considered a deadly threat, and are to be killed on sight unless they surrender first. I imagine they will flee, once receiving Harcourt’s message.”

“And ... Harcourt, and his friends?” Jack asked. “I made them a promise.”

“We will see. You overstepped your power, Mister Terry. I do not need to honor your promise to them. Be thankful your promise was to kine, and not another Kindred, or they would have had claim to a dispute.”

Beatrice grinned a little at that. Well, at least Antoinette wasn’t playing favorites with her boy toy.

“Yes, yes you’re right. I apologize,” he said.

“Lying to the enemy is a part of warfare, Jack Terry. Do not apologize.” She shrugged, again dismissing Harcourt’s life value with a small gesture. “My point was that, were such a promise made to Kindred, and it became a part of the Danse Macabre, you would be ... up shit creek, without a paddle, as it were. Be careful with such promises in the future.”

“Lesson learned, Prince.”

“I will be hosting a ball in several days. All Kindred are to attend. Defy me at your peril.” She offered each witch a harsh glare, before looking to the others. “Uratha and Begotten, you are invited, but your presence is optional. I would appreciate your attendance. I—” She stopped, and raised her hand to her ear for a moment. Oh, she was wearing an ear piece, a tiny thing Triss almost hadn’t noticed. And she was too good to poker player to do something as stupid as call attention to it by lifting a hand to her ear. So, if she was willing to let them know she was hearing something, then—

Everyone snapped to awareness, weight going onto the balls of their feet, as Daniel stepped out of the corner of the room, from behind them. Holy fucking shit, he’d been in the room all along, Cloaked, hidden, invisible. Everyone was caught by surprise, everyone except Jack.

A grunt came from Daniel’s direction, and that did draw Jack’s attention, as if he’d known about Daniel, but not who was going to make that noise. Everyone turned to watch the deadly fucker walk toward the center of the room, and they made way for him, and his prisoner.

“Mark?” Jack said. “You...”

The dude said nothing. In jeans and a hoodie, the man frowned up a storm as Daniel, with a sword drawn and pressed to the Begotten’s throat, escorted him to the big desk Antoinette sat behind.

“Mark.” Antoinette said. “You never gave me your last name.” The dude said nothing, but it was clear he hadn’t expected to be found doing whatever it was he was doing. “I suspected, based on my last conversation with Azamel, that she knew far too much, about a great many things. She hinted that you had helped her learn of Jeremiah’s defenses, and to extrapolate from that was not difficult.” She leaned forward, and glared ice into the monster. “I wondered why Azamel kept you close, Mark. You do not seem to possess combat prowess. What value would you have as bodyguard? It took time before I realized that you are not a sword, but eyes and ears. A rather devious set of eyes and ears.

“Unfortunately for you, your underestimated my sheriff’s ability.” She netted her fingers in front of her, elbows still on the desk, and she smiled a deadly smile. My god, she was enjoying this, indulging in catching the fucker who’d been spying on her. Dude had balls, Triss had to give him that, to spy on the fucking Prince.

Triss found her eyes drifting to Jack more than anyone. He hadn’t reacted to Daniel’s sudden appearance, while the rest of them had. But, he’d been surprised by Mark’s presence. Did he sense Daniel? Did he just assume the sheriff was always around, Cloaked? Either way, Mark had managed to surprise him. Hell, even Antoinette looked pleased that the fucker had been caught, as if she hadn’t been able to sense him either. Giant balls and insane sneaking skills.

“Release me,” he said eventually.

“Fiona.” Antoinette turned to look at the redhead, and the tiny girl stood up straight. Poor girl probably thought she’d be nothing but a sideler through all this, but Mark’s presence changed that. “Did you know of your colleague’s ambitious attempts at spying?”

“N-No! I didnae ... know...” She couldn’t hold Antoinette’s gaze for long. After a few awkward moments, where Antoinette was obviously waiting for Fiona to fill in some blanks, the redhead lowered her eyes and glanced Mark's way. "I only knew that he works close with Azamel, and he spies for her, and stuff."

The Prince glared at Fiona for a few more seconds, and the room waited for something to happen. Fiona was innocent. No way that dumbass ditz was up to anything sinister; other than her usual Begotten stuff, hunting kine and feeding off their fear.

"Needless to say, this damages my trust of Azamel." Sighing, Antoinette got up, stepped around her desk, and looked down at Mark. Damn tall woman. "The only reason I do not kill you, is because—"

"Because you're afraid of Azamel. I—"

Everyone took another quick step back from Mark and Daniel, when Antoinette snapped out her right hand, and wrapped her fingers around Mark's throat. Her arm moved fast enough, Beatrice fucking heard it moving the air, long after the Prince'd already gotten her hand around the monster's throat.

Like a queen of ice, the white-haired woman squeezed on Mark's neck, silencing his grunts as she lifted him a foot into the air. With her arm outstretched and solid, she glared at the man, and Triss swore she could see literal blades of ice shooting out of her red eyes, and into the man's body.

"I have been far too passive in this ridiculous game, but my patience has been stretched to its limit. You think I spare you for fear of your master? I could kill Azamel myself, worm, and I was capable of such a feat before her injury. She is injured now, weakened, and I could have her head on a platter if I so choose." A quiet growl rumbled in her throat, and Triss gulped as she felt her Beast do its best to disappear into the environment. Mark, clutching her wrists, squirmed and wriggled, obviously unable to breathe, and the only reason he wasn't kicking Antoinette, was probably because she'd literally squeeze until his head popped off if he did.

"The only reason you live," she continued, "is because it brings me no pleasure to make enemies of fellow paranormals. The only reason you live, is because Azamel has never directly attempted to harm me. The only reason you live, is because she proved true to her word last night. The only reason you live, is because I can understand the measures of an old, dying woman, doing her best to control her world." She still wasn't letting up her grip, and it was clear the man was beginning to feel the effects of asphyxiation. As fucked up weird the Begotten were, with strange powers, and Mark himself probably being immune to something like being choked to death when he was in his rot form, here in the real world, he was vulnerable.

"Hear me, filth," Antoinette said, and she brought the man in close to her face. "You are not invited to my ball, and for this transgression, neither is Azamel. One more misstep from her, and I will have the Invictus detonate the explosives placed in the precious tunnels. Go back to the old crone, and give the shadow creature Athalia a message. If she behaves, she is invited, and will be safe under the protection I give all those who enter my walls." After a quiet growl, Antoinette threw the man back, and everyone spread apart to let him crash into the office floor.

Mark got up, looked around, eyed the sheriff with what Triss could only guess was professional rivalry, before glaring at Antoinette again. But, he said nothing. He turned, and walked out of the room.

"Uh ... you invited Athalia?" Triss said.

Antoinette snapped her a look, and she froze. Ok, yeah, talking without being asked to talk was not a good idea right now.

Once Antoinette calmed down in a second, she nodded. “Indeed. Samantha wishes to speak with her, or at least see her once for herself.”

Triss winced and looked to Jack. His mom wanted to see the mother of Angela. Fuck, what was that interaction going to be like? Hell, what would any interaction with Athalia be like, after the death of her daughter?

“Can Mo—Samantha be trusted with such a decision?” Jack said.

“Yes, she can.” Antoinette gave the small Ventrue a harsh glare not unlike the one she gave Triss, before she stepped around her desk to sit in her chair again. “We may discuss your mother later, Mister Terry. For now, understand that all are invited to my ball. All, except for that ... thing”—she gestured to the door—”and his master. If last night had not gone as it did, if Azamel had lied to me, or deceived me, Mark would be dead, and I would personally see to killing Azamel myself.” As she said it, she looked to Fiona, as if daring the woman to challenge her.

Fiona did not. She put up her hands, an exaggerated surrender, before putting them down and doing her best to disappear by holding perfectly still.

“Miss Moreno,” Antoinette continued, looking to Clara, “I understand that Avery may disagree with your actions last night. Should I not mention you at the ball?”

“Um, the boss already knows, the sneaky bitch. So I guess it doesn’t matter. But, mention?”

“Oui. I will be making an announcement at the ball, of who defeated the hunters.” Her eyes fell to Sándor, and she looked at the quiet man for a little while, probably trying to gauge how the gargoyle would react. The problem was, the man barely reacted at all. His eyes were locked onto her, and the room as a whole, obviously paying attention, but Mark and Daniel's sudden appearance, and Antoinette's aggression toward his fellow Begotten had barely made him move. He just, stood there, like a gargoyle.

Which the Prince took as a silent yes, apparently.

“Excellent. Dolareido has come unto strange times, and I expect that, by explaining the different forces involved in this act, I can nurture an atmosphere of cooperation. The assault was a joint effort of many groups, after all.”

Ah, politics, the worst reason to do anything. But Antoinette was smart, and good at the Danse Macabre, better than Triss would ever be. Better to just do what she said. Not like Triss had a choice anyway, since only the Uratha and Begotten were optionals. Everyone else was just expected to do what Antoinette wanted them to, and they would, too, unless they wanted to get on her bad side. No one wanted that.

“Dress well. Suits, dresses, and do not be afraid to show some skin. Some, mind you.” Nodding, Antoinette waved a hand, a tiny gesture, motioning for them to go. “Jack, please explain the rules of my city to Sándor.”

“Me?”

“Oui. I trust you, and I am pressed for time.”

Jack nodded, and everyone left.

---

“So, your mother is coming to the ball?” Jennifer said to Jack, in the elevator. In it were Triss, Jen, Jack, Clara, and Sándor. Othello, Aaron, Fiona, and Damien took another one, not wanting to crowd.

“Yes, she is,” Jack said, and he glared at Jen with a hard squint. “Please don't wear what you wore last time.”

“Jack! A woman never wears the same dress twice. Not to a ball, at least.”

“You know what I mean. Can you cover up a bit? Mom’s been single since my dad died years ago, and now she’s getting hammered in all directions by”—Triss snorted on a laugh, and Jack glared at her as well—”by changes.”

“She’s Daeva!” Jen said. “Daeva love new experiences.”

Jack jammed a finger in the girl’s shoulder. “New experiences does not necessarily include an orgy buffet.”

Orgy buffet. Well, Daeva did have a habit of becoming addicted to sex, and lining up kine like a buffet to drink, and then fuck. Or fuck, then drink. Or drink fuck. Triss could understand Jack having trouble imagining his mom doing that, but then again, the kid basically got to do just that, frequently.

So, she elbowed him in the side a bit. Half of her said don’t do that, don’t touch the demon, but the other half won over. This wasn’t Jack the psycho. This was Jack, kid Jack, growing up far too fast but still her friend Jack. She could feel the curse, but it felt like it was asleep or something, or lurking under the surface. Strangely, she managed to relax around him, a little.

“Jack, come on, your mom’s an adult. If you can survive a foursome on the reg, I think your mom can, too.”

The kid cringed, and she laughed. Yeah, that was Jack, young Jack who could still get caught off guard by aspects of Kindred life he never predicted. Orgies and whatnot was one hurdle most Kindred dealt with; not her, considering she was Nosferatu and had a stick up her ass, but still. The hurdle of a family member also becoming Kindred, and then getting involved in their own orgies? It happened to a lot of Kindred, she supposed, those who got their family pulled into the Masquerade.

“Seriously Jack,” Jennifer added, “you let go of your issues with sex, didn’t you? That should extend to your mother, and I’m sure she’ll let go of hers, with a little incentive.” Smiling, Jen combed back her shoulder-length black hair over one ear, and took a step toward Sándor. “Mister Sándor, I ... what is your last name, if I may ask?”

The man, who’d been watching them with an unreadable, muted expression, softened his stone gaze. Or at least, softened a little, as if he was making an effort.

“Pavel.”

“Mister Pavel! I know your life has been quite hectic as of late. You’ve only been a free man for a single night, and the ball is in several days. Would you like some help finding clothes?”

That sneaky, crafty bitch. She was roping him in, giving him reasons to want to lean on her, and trust her considering she’d given him the location of their base. Not that it was a secret base, but there were plenty of Kindred who didn’t know where it was; not exactly widely circulated info.

“I didn’t plan to go.” Again, deadpan face.

“You must come!” She came in closer again, until she was only a foot from him, fluttering her eyelashes up at the man. “Everyone will be there, and it will be the perfect opportunity for people to meet the Begotten who killed Jeremiah.”

Mentioning Jeremiah managed to get a reaction from the statue, but it passed quickly.

“I’m only here because I know Dolareido is a safe enough place for me to rest this body. Once I ... feel well enough to move on, I probably will.”

Jennifer stood up straight, and frowned. “Move on? Why?”

“Because ... this place is not my...” He didn’t need to say it, he’d said it before. His wife and son were dead, and they were his home. His human half had been a slave for four years, too, so if he went back to his old life, the result would be obvious. He’d be accused of killing his wife and son. Christ, that’d suck.

“Well,” Jennifer said, “I think Dolareido could be your new home. It’s a huge city, with endless indulgences and interesting distractions.”

“I don’t have—”

“If you need money, I’m sure Jack will help you. Invictus are all rich. And they can create a new identify for you.”

That earned a raised brow from the man, some of the largest expression Triss had seen from him yet. He looked to Jack, and the little guy nodded.

“Yeah, that’d be easy. There are Invictus in every branch of government, keeping information under control. It’s the least I could do. And money, too.”

Triss grinned at the Begotten, not having to say a word as the two Ventrue, predictably, handled the negotiations.

“Something tells me the Prince—”

“Nonsense,” Jen said. “The Prince will be glad to have you in the city. She ... may not be happy about the Uratha and other Begotten, but you seem a good deal more civil. And it is civility that the Prince seeks in others.” She came in even closer, and held out a hand, just as the elevator door opened. Planned, no doubt. “Come, let us help build you a wardrobe.”

Stoic as all fuck, the monster looked down at her hand, back to her, all without moving his head, and stood there. But even as Jack, Clara, and Triss walked out of the elevator, Jen remained where she was, waiting, smile unwavering. Damn, she was relentless.

The man sighed, and nodded. “Very well.” He took her hand, and Triss watched him suppress a groan as Jennifer beamed.

“Excellent. Triss, coming?”

“Yeah sure.”

“But I don’t—”

Jennifer waved a hand, letting go of Sándor’s but obviously implying for him to keep following. “You’re in the company of vampires now, Mister Pavel. The city is our banquet to take from as we see fit. You won’t need any money tonight.”

Triss glanced to Jack. Yeah, he saw it too, that Jen was obviously manipulating the man because he’d be a powerful ally. But, she knew he knew, Jen was also earning the man’s trust because she was trying to get Triss to open up more, since Julias’s death, and she was going to use Sándor as catalyst. And Jen knew Triss knew, too, but she did it anyway, because she was a Ventrue, and that’s just how Ventrue rolled.

“I’ll walk with you,” Jack said. “Gotta explain to Sándor about the rules, and ... well, he probably knows most of them, and—” The other elevator opened, and Fiona came out, arm hooked with Damien’s. God damn it, she was so cute. And the way she clung to Emo Boy like he was her everything, was sickeningly adorable. “Damien, Fiona, wanna walk with me for a bit?”

Before Damien could say anything, Fiona threw up a hand, jumped once, and dragged Damien over to him. For a moment, Triss thought Jack might ask Clara to follow, but Clara had already started walking away.

---

Fifteen minutes later, Sándor, Jen, and Triss were in a men's wear store. It was open, which was insane considering it was 3:00 AM, but hey, it was Dolareido, with a bustling nightlife that any smart company would take advantage of. Rich morons with cocaine in the blood did love to waste money on expensive suits, especially when they had a half naked gold digger to admire it, or mimbo dumbass on their arm to wear it.

Triss was getting better at Obfuscate, particularly Face in the Crowd. It no longer took as much effort to blend in, be unnoticed by the kine, and basically be a fly on the wall. She knew Sándor could tell what she was doing, so she didn't need to explain it to him. The man was a lot older than he looked, based on what he said, so he probably knew plenty about vampires anyway.

"May I help you?" the man behind the desk said.

"Yes you may," Jennifer said. "My friend here"—she gestured to Sándor—"needs a suit in two days."

"Two days?" The man, a tall, skinny fellow with a mouse face, squinted through his glasses at Sándor. "It cannot be done, Miss. Even minor alterations will require several days to move through our queue."

"Two days," she said, and she leaned over the glass counter at the man, over the various mens' jewelry. Her eyes met the man's, and his breathing stopped for a moment as Jennifer grabbed his mind. "We will try several suits tonight, black tie, and the alterations will be ready two days hence. Understood?" No theatrics, no explosive battle of wills, just a Ventrue dominating a simple, unsuspecting kine.

Deadpan, obviously brainwashed, the man slowly nodded. “Yes Miss. Come this way then, and I’ll show you our selection.” Not once did he glance Triss’s way. Perfect.

Jennifer picked out three suits, each of them ‘black tie’ or whatever, lavish, practically tuxedos, with enough modern flair that they looked more like really nice lawyer suits. Sexy, the sort of suits Julias wore when he was feeling fancy. Triss frowned at Jen until she noticed, but Jen rolled her eyes, took the suits, handed them to Sándor, and took him to the changing room.

“Why are you doing this?” Sándor asked, eyes solid as he looked at the dotting Ventrue.

“Beatrice told me what happened in the dream, about how you saved everyone.”

“I didn’t save everyone. I saved myself. Everyone else just happened to be there.”

Jennifer grinned at the man as she leaned in toward his face. He didn’t move. Hell, Jen probably could have kissed him and he wouldn’t have moved, or blinked, or showed any expression.

“I don’t believe you,” she said. The Begotten raised a brow slightly before lowering it again. “And I heard about what happened to your family. Horrible. The least I can do is help you get adjusted to Dolareido.” And, without asking, she started undoing his shirt buttons. So damn forward, but Sándor still didn’t react.

“It’s a city, like any other.”

Triss snorted from her corner of the changing room. “Yeah, uh, no it ain’t.”

“Indeed,” Jen said, smile growing wider. “The Prince and Jacob built this city to be a haven for vampires. I don’t know how much you learned from Jeremiah, but paranormal beings are quite safe here, usually. The only problems we get are the ones we give each other.” She slid him out of the blue shirt, and reached for one of the white ones she’d picked out for him.

“Yeah, Jack gave me the rundown on the way here,” he said. A snarkier person would have said ‘remember?’ since Jen had been beside him the whole time while Jack explained. But Sándor didn’t say it. He just stood there, and let the woman cross every personal boundary the man had. Yeesh. Either he just didn’t mind, or was too broken to care. Maybe both.

God damn, that body. Yeah, those were muscles, lots of muscles on his slightly pale skin. He wasn’t as big and bulky as some other guys, but shirtless, it was more obvious that half the reason for his leaner shape was he didn’t have any fat on his body. Like, shredded, good lord. The fuck did this dude do in his human life to warrant a body like that? Or was it an effect from his Horror?

Heh, look at her, objectifying him based on his looks. Maybe Jen was right, and she was healing, sexually speaking.

Of course, Jen took his stoic attitude as a challenge. She started undoing his belt, while Sándor put on the white shirt.

“Jen, for the love of god, ease up.”

“I’m just helping him undress. Calm down.”

Triss wanted to say something, like ‘good fucking god he just avenged his dead wife and son, leave him alone’ but it’d have sounded dumb as fuck, especially coming from her. Besides, Sándor was an adult, and older than either of them. Dude must have had the balls to tell a pretty girl to back off if he wanted to.

He didn’t say a thing, though he made sure to keep his eyes on Jen as she did her thing while he buttoned up his new shirt. “I’m not used to being ... doted on.”

“Well, get used to it,” Jen said. “I did nothing last night but babysit a couple hunters, who’d surrendered already. You saved my girl’s life breaking that ritual, and many of our friends’ lives. I feel indebted, and a bit guilty for not participating.” Nodding, she handed the man the black—charcoal, Jen had insisted—pants, and stepped back, watching.

“Be careful using words like doted,” Triss said. “You’re going to be famous after the ball, and I can guarantee a lot of girls, and a few guys, are going to want to fuck you. Hell, if you want to, just ask someone and they’ll lend you their ghouls, or enthrall a few kine for the night for you.”

Of all the reactions she expected from the man, she didn’t expect him to look at her with the most quiet, smidgen of a frown ever.

“No thanks.” He finished with the pants, and reached for the jacket as Jen handed it to him.

“No?” the Ventrue said.

“No.”

Jen persisted. “Not interested in sex?”

Triss almost jumped in. Yeah, Jen was crossing some lines. The man had had a wife and a son. The chances of him not being interested in sex were pretty small. Combined with the subtle odor of masculinity Triss could smell with her vampire nose, she doubted he had any biological issue, especially considering Begotten could heal from quite a bit. Maybe not as much as Uratha or Kindred, but far as she knew, their human bodies did heal better than kine.

Sándor’s gaze hardened, but only for a moment. Triss recognized that face. She’d seen it in the mirror. Something had triggered a memory in the man, but he let it go, realizing it wasn't fair to hold onto it.

“I am. But not with strangers.”

The Ventrue laughed, came up behind Sándor, and turned him to face the mirror. With roaming hands, she adjusted his suit for him, tugging on his shoulders and reaching around to help slide his shirt into the pants. He let her, face emotionless and looking into the mirror. The fact he was being so standoff-ish to Jen, instead of straight up telling her to back off, was probably triggering every instinct Jen had to try and break him. Poor guy, playing hard to get and not realizing it.

“Shoulders are a bit tight,” she said, “and you can't trust a tailor to fix that, in my experience. Let's find a size larger, and we'll trim down on the waist. And the sleeves, of course.” Nodding, she grinned at Triss over her shoulder, before leaving to find the suit jacket in a larger size.

“Your friend is ... indecent,” Sándor said, voice a touch quieter.

Triss snorted on a laugh, and shrugged. “She is, but she's great. Her heart's in the right place.”

“Is it?”

“You don't think so?”

“I ... no, that's not what I meant. I'm just ... not used to someone being so familiar with me.”

Triss nodded, walked over to the man, and stood beside him to look at them both in the mirror. “She's the only reason I'm not in a cave somewhere, crying over Julias.”

“I see.”

“Plus, you said it’s been four years since your life was fucked? That’s a long time. Jen’s probably thinking you’re ready to move on, and get you some pussy. Because, well, Jen thinks that’s how you heal any man’s wounds. Good pussy.”

The word pussy earned the smallest twitch of one of his eyebrows, and she snorted on a laugh again. Ok, yeah, he was a perfect straight man, and it was just too damn fun to try and crack his shell. She owed Jen an apology.

“I don’t think I’ll be comfortable in this city,” he said. “I ... I lived in a smaller city, miles from here, when Jeremiah came. A normal city.”

“You’re safer here. And your human half needs a place to go to eventually, right?”

“Yes.”

Shrugging, she sat down in one of the fancy chairs, because everything had to be extravagant in the overpriced store, and she gestured to the man in the mirror. “Stick around for a while, at least a few weeks. The vamps will take care of you, as thanks for what you did. Kick back, relax ... grieve, you know?” Four years of being brainwashed probably meant he’d never had a proper opportunity to do that. “And, once you have, move on. It’s been four years. Have a little of Dolareido’s primary export.”

She knew she was really talking to herself, not him. Jen, you crafty slut.

His expression softened just a bit, and he looked at her through the mirror as well. “Which is?”

“Carnal indulgence.”

---

~~Eric~~

“Man, looks like so much shit happened while we were getting shut down by Flow. Can’t believe we missed it.”

Eric raised a brow as he blinked at the woman. The two of them were in his apartment again, and Kat slept in the living room while they were in his bedroom. She was lying down on her stomach on his bed, and she had her laptop open and in front of him. It was clear she was working some slick software, typing in messages to various people, and speaking in code words Eric didn’t know. Well, that made sense. A secret organization of high tech vamps probably did all the crazy shit he’d seen in spy movies.

“Um, yeah. Think you can focus on—”

“Eric, I’m a little busy. Just keep doing what you’re doing. I’ll be with you in a minute, or ten.”

He frowned down at the naked woman underneath him, and gave her ass a rather harsh slap. The huge, firm mounds jiggled hypnotically, but she didn’t flinch or react otherwise. She laughed, grinned at him from over her shoulder, and got back to typing.

Rolling his eyes, he eased his hips back, sliding his shaft out of her several inches, before he slowly sank himself balls deep into her ass once again. She had several pillows under her hips, putting her ass up in the air for him, and she’d insisted he fuck her while she did some work. And, well, he was horny. Can’t blame a guy for fucking his girlfriend when she shakes her booty at him, right?

Somehow, despite the wholly unsexy situation, and despite having immediately jumped into anal sex with absolutely zero foreplay, he could feel some subtle wetness forming along the lips of her sex, as he ground himself into her ass until his hanging testicles nudged them. And that was strangely hot. She wasn’t paying him any mind, and was looking through what looked like financial reports from Xnomina, and updates from other Kindred about secret things. Despite that, with each gentle thrust of his length into her well-lubed butt, he could feel her body responding. A wet spot was growing on the pillow underneath her slit, where her pelvis rested.

She had her legs almost completely together, and his were outside them, weight on his knees, so she was lying, and he was basically sitting on his knees and her thighs. A very casual, leisurely way to fuck. It was especially nice for him, cause with her ass in the air from the pillows, and him sitting around her legs, he barely had to do anything. With his hands on her hips, all it took was a little thrust, and he was treated to the most amazing sight in the world: a fit woman's large ass wrapping his length, jiggling with the soft impact, and pressing toward her back as he pushed his pelvis forward. Hell, several times he simply buried himself inside her, and ground into her, just to watch her ass and how its mounds pushed toward her lower back.

He sank his fingers into the meat of her ass, and massaged, working the muscles in with his thumbs, and earning a small groan from Jessy. Bingo. She squeezed her ass together, and he shivered as the ring of muscle around the base of his length gripped tight, before she released her grip on him.

“Jeeze, these reports are so dull. Jack and friends got to have all the fun. Everyone else in the city was quiet, except for a scuffle between Joe and Hella. Fucking Gangrels.”

Eric laughed. This woman, good god. “You’re a Gangrel.”

“No shit! And I make my boss’s life hell all the time. Now my Gangrel subordinates are making my life hell.”

“She’s your subordinate?”

“Eh, not exactly. I’m a Right Hand, so I have access to all the data the rest of the Invictus puts out. When someone does something super dumb, I might have to clean up the mess. So, subordinate, no, but I’ll break her god damn skull if she stirs up more trouble with Joe.”

He leaned down over her, and set a kiss on the back of her neck. Instant shivers. “We were causing trouble with Joe not long ago.” More than trouble. Eric had transformed, Caleb had transformed, and the two of them had practically destroyed a building, until her sire interfered.

She swatted at him, wearing a comedic and exaggerated frown before she looked back to her laptop. “They started it, that time.”

“But not this time?”

“No. Hella wanted some revenge, apparently.”

“I see.” Right, revenge. He was tempted to bring up Julias, about how Jack had killed Angela and had gotten his revenge, and see how Jessy reacted to it. Then again, maybe it was time he start putting his boyfriend knowledge to use, and see if he could read her.

What did Jessy do when she was feeling sad? The sadder she felt, the more outgoing she was, the harder she tried to be sexual, to be social, to distract herself. The last thing Jessy liked doing was thinking about things, and when Julias died, she’d tried extra hard to get Eric to come to the club with her, dance with her, and after the initial shock, fuck her. She was smarter than she let on, wiser, but she hated contemplating things. If she was contemplating, she probably had some unconscious tick telling her she was wasting her energy, when she could be having fun.

Now, she’d literally just lain on his bed naked, and told him to fuck her, cause she was busy and had to take care of some work stuff. Of course he’d suggested they have sex later, but she told him that, after getting shutdown by Flowing Sanctuary, the least she could do to make it up to him was let him fuck her ass while she did some work. She'd even said don't worry about making her orgasm, cause she had to get her work done asap. Well, he'd make sure to surprise her.

So, boyfriend detective work completed, he came to a conclusion: she was happier. Not completely happy, and probably still grieving, but happier than she'd been, after learning that Jack had gotten revenge and killed Julias's killer. And that made him happy. God, that was a nice feeling, just feeling better because she was feeling better. It'd been forever since he felt that way.

“So there's a party, in a few days I think. A ball. You weren't at the last one, right? Should be a lot of fun. Wanna be my date?”

“A ball?”

“Mhmm. Shit load of vamps will be there, probably a bunch of the werewolves, and maybe even some of the monsters. I doubt Athalia will be there, but Fiona probably will be.” She grinned over her shoulder at him again, and bounced her ass up and down for him a few times. The way it rippled was beyond hypnotizing. “Remember her? God damn, she was hot. Huge tits that shook like jelly.”

“She has a boyfriend.” Though, Jessy was right, Fiona had been terribly attractive, in that cute and curvy sorta way. Twice he'd almost had sex with her, and he was glad he didn't. Too young, emotionally speaking.

“Yeah, I know. She got her hands on Emo Boy.” Laughing, she shrugged and got back to work. “Though Damien is pretty hot, I admit. That half buzzed head look, long black hair on the other side? Plus, I've seen him changing gear at the HQ, and he's built like a fucking ninja. Skinnier than you, but damn, those abs.”

Eric rolled his eyes, and looked down at his own body. His muscles had grown a little since his awakening, and his body fat percentage had dropped a little as well, turning his abs into a rather chiseled washboard. No wonder everyone in Avery's pack were so fit. They were all on natural steroids, and now he was too. He'd always been a fairly lean fighter, but he'd gone up a weight class in the past year, despite having apparently lost a few pounds of fat. All muscle. He kinda liked it, and he could tell Jessy liked it as well; considering the size of her ghouls, it made sense.

"So it's a ball for paranormals?" A quiet groan escaped him, and he stopped his gentle thrusting as he felt the first tingles of a rising orgasm. Warmth grew between his legs underneath his testicles, and he breathed deep to calm his body. Eventually, the heat settled, and his glans no longer sent tingling sparks down his length. A couple moments after that, he was able to start thrusting again, nice and slow, each to the base so he could see the glorious sight of her ass pushing toward her lower back each time.

"Dude, just cum. You're a fucking werewolf, you can go like twice more."

"Doesn't mean I don't want to make each one last."

Chuckling, she tapped on her keys a few times, and used the track pad to bring up a picture of a building. "The Black Hall. The Prince's favorite building for hosting balls. No one outside can see inside, so it's a great place for Kindred to really indulge in what we do, you know? Last time, there must have been a hundred thralls or ghouls, probably more, being shared around. And at least half of them were naked and thoroughly drained by the end of the party. Drained in both ways, you know?" She sighed happily, and pushed her ass back into him as she recalled a memory. "So many tits out, and pussies being licked and fingered. So many kine dicks getting stroked and sucked. Orgasm makes the blood taste a little different, you know."

Wow. That definitely painted an image. “Really?”

“Yeap. Most of the young vamps aren’t comfortable enough yet, but the ones with a couple decades under their belt were all over it. No Kindred actually did any fucking, but some of the girls had their tits out, to give the guy kine plenty of encouragement when they started stroking them off, or sucking them off. And while that was happening, Kindred took turns Kissing them, slowly draining them. Same for the girl kine. Never seen girls cum as hard as some of those ghouls, when they got surrounded by Kindred, usually dudes, and were fingered, choked, and Kissed.” Jessy started pushing her ass back into him harder, some small moans of her own slipping into her words as she recounted the tale. “God, I love this city.”

“Clearly.” He laughed, but it faded quick as he started to thrust faster, and tightened his grip on her hips as he did. Each thrust was enough to have her ass shaking back and forth, a wave that met his rhythm with each lap. She squeezed on him in spurts as well, tight ring of muscle locking firm along his length as he worked himself in and out of her.

When his cum started to flood her insides, Jessy grinned at him again, rolled her eyes, and got back to work. “Finally.”

“Hey,” he managed to say, “I’m ... just...” His words faded as he continued work his hips in motion, using the strength of his arms to make sure she didn’t go anywhere, as he sank each thrust balls deep into her. He could feel his own cum coating his length inside her ass along with all the lubricant, and he shivered as each stroke sent powerful waves of bliss down his length, and into his core and testicles. And, of course, he could not take his eyes off the sight of her ass as he filled her.

“K, you keep going. I gotta finish a quick report here.” And back to typing.

Luna bless Uratha longevity, he supposed. He could keep going. Paranormals may have had hard lives, but they were utterly spoiled for sex.

He started fucking her again, nice and slow, and he smiled as he noticed the wet spot where her mons sat on the pillows had grown quite a bit. What a sneak, pretending to be more into her work than she was. Or, maybe she really was focused on her work, and just knew how to do that while aroused anyway. Probably the latter, now that he thought about it. Well, he wasn't in any rush. The night was young, and he was perfectly content to keep fucking her while she finished up her work. He'd make sure she was satisfied after she was done, but until then, back to slow, deep thrusts.

Ten minutes later, she flicked her hand toward her laptop screen. "Oh my fucking god. Terra Den is going full hostile takeover on Xnomina. Fucking assholes. I'm going to have to pay them a visit."

"I could come, if you need back up. I still have bone to pick with them."

"Heh, I guess you do." That sparked her interest, and she looked over her shoulder at him, contemplating. "Yeah, actually, I think I will bring you. Jack or Damien will probably come, too. It'll be a proper conversation for the Right Hands. And—oh, speaking of, I need to call Natasha, and I see she's online. You mind?"

"Now?"

"Sure. I mean come on, we've both seen her naked, getting DP'd by her boyfriends. I seriously doubt it'll be a problem if she hears my cheeks clapping a bit."

He laughed again. God damn it, she was too funny, and utterly spoiling the mood. "Fine." In the past, he'd have been concerned something like that would destroy his erection; awkwardness had a habit of doing that to any man. But since the wolf spirit took up residence in his guts, it was the last thing he was worried about. The creature inside constantly begged for an outlet for his energy, his hungers and needs, and Jessy was content to take advantage, or in this case, placate. And, with all the things that'd happened to him since he'd met Jessy, phone call sex probably wouldn't affect him at all.

Nodding, she set the laptop out a little further from her, maybe two feet from her head on the sheets, and dialed Natasha on some app he didn't recognize. Probably something specific to the Invictus or Xnomina.

When Natasha's picture came up on the screen, and then started moving, Eric quickly realized it wasn't a phone call, it was a video call.

"Hey Jessy, I-oh my g-g-god! Eric, I ... um..." Natasha threw her hands up to her eyes, covering them and most of her face with both palms. "Jessy, you d-d-dumbass!"

"Hey Tash. Wanted to ask about the ball. I assume you know more than me, what with it being your boss's party." Laughing, Jessy shook her head, and looked back at Eric so she could grin at him before looking back at her friend. "Oh come on, lower your hands. We've both seen that video you sent, and you know it. I think we're past the shy phase, right?"

Frowning, Natasha shook her head, refusing to lower her hands; except one, and just enough so Tash could get a peek. Eric squinted at the corner picture, which showed the video feed that Natasha could see. Yeap, there was Eric, and Jessy. Most of the picture was Jessy, weight on her elbows, breasts hanging underneath her, but the laptop was angled and off to the side just enough so Tash could see the way Jessy's back was arched down toward the bed, with her ass up in the air propped up by pillows. Eric, with his knees out and around Jessy's body, was on full display in the background of the video, though the actual penetration was hidden by Jessy's ass.

"That was a video! This is ... l-live."

"Don't worry about it. Seriously, about the ball. Got any details for me? It's pretty sudden. A few days isn't exactly a long time to plan."

Sighing, Natasha spread the fingers of one hand enough so a single eye peeked out. "Um. Uh ... Antoinette says she d-doesn't expect there to be as much ... you know, kine b-being molested, this time. Maybe some? Jack's m-mom is going to be there, and—"

"Oh come on, really? That's the opposite of what she should do! The hunters are dead, and we should celebrate! Balls to the walls celebration. And Samantha's a Daeva. She's been to Bloodlust before, and I can just tell she's itching to fuck someone."

"N-No no no. Jessy, not every D-Daeva is like that."

"Bullshit." Shrugging, Jessy slid the laptop further to the side, and then more toward her profile. Now, while Jessy was still the main focus of the video, her large breasts were hidden by her left arm, where her elbows were propping up her chest and shoulders. It wasn't her breasts Jessy wanted her friend to see, it was the arching body of the athletic woman, and how Eric's thrusts were making her ass jiggle back and forth.

If he'd told her to turn it off, Jessy would have turned it off. She may have shocked him by making it a video call without telling him, but she wasn't so mean that she'd keep making him do something he didn't want to do. He really liked that about her, the fun balance she had, being aggressive with her ideas and her wants, but also leaving room for him to say no. Natasha would certainly understand if he did.

The only thing stopping him from closing the laptop was, he was kinda enjoying this. It was obvious Natasha wanted to watch, and was trying to not. Both hands were still on her face, but both had also spread her fingers enough that she was watching anyway. Damn it, Jessy had corrupted the both of them.

“Daeva,” Jessy continued, “are hornier than anyone, all the time.”

Her friend shook her head. “That’s, um ... racism?”

“Ha, it’s not racism. Daeva — at least the ones in Dolareido — obsess over sex, and you know it. Samantha will give into the Prince’s ‘sex for everyone, anywhere, anytime’ philosophy sooner or later. I mean come on, look at who her sire is.”

With an exaggerated and obviously not truly serious groan of annoyance, Natasha lowered her hands and glared at Jessy. “She’s depressed! Bad things have happened, Jessy. And now, thanks to J-Jack, maybe she can start to ... heal...” Her eyes ran down Jessy’s body, and landed on Eric’s.

Eric moved his left arm off Jessy’s hip, and set it on his own hip. It let the tiny vampire see his body. He didn’t even think to do it, he just did it, showing off for the crowd a bit like he did back in the old days when he was a fighter. The last thing he expected to do tonight was put on a porn show for someone, but considering how much he’d seen of Natasha, and how close Jessy and Natasha were, he probably should have. And, despite himself, the old thrill came back to him, the joy of having an audience, of having the people in their seats focused on him.

MMA fighting was a spectator sport, after all, and he’d been drawn to it because ... because of a lot of reasons, really. He liked being in shape, he liked the skill of fighting, and he liked money. But damn, he’d forgotten how awesome it felt to have people watching you, their attention focused on you, as you did what you did. Back then, the thing he did was kicking ass. Now, because Jessy was an evil woman content to corrupt everyone around her, it was fucking her ass.

“You know what heals? Sex! Sex heals. Sex, with the Kiss, is a concoction that will soothe her soul.” Jessy turned her torso over, propped her head up on her right fist with elbow to the sheets, and reached out with her left hand to start working her laptop again. Surprising that she didn’t start doing something a lot more blatant, like playing with her breasts and putting on an even lewder show. But, she was serious about having work to do, and she pulled up another app on the screen with her left hand, and scrolled through blocks of information. More stuff about Xnomina. Looked like receipts for purchases of things Eric couldn’t understand, ID codes likes XEMR233 and FRTE421.

“M-Maybe, but—”

“Jesus Christ, have you seen these reports, Tash? Terra Den is royally screwing with us.”

“What? N-No, I haven’t seen them. I’m not an Invictus anymore, remember?”

“Ah, right. Figured you might have been spying on Xnomina’s purchase history or something, you know? Guess you wouldn’t be allowed to tell me if you were.”

“And are you ... w-working?”

“Yeah.”

Natasha’s frown returned all the meaner. “You’re having sex, right n-n-now! P-Poor Eric.”

“Poor Eric? Dude’s getting treated to the best ass this side of the planet.” She reached behind her with that left hand, and gave her ass a good slap. It rippled with the impact, a large ripple that faded quickly. Large as Jessy's ass was, it was mostly muscle, and damn firm.

And of course, Natasha's eyes went to Jessy's ass. They stayed there for a while, and Eric could see from the mirror video in the corner of the screen, that the tiny vampire could see a bit of Eric's cock as he eased out of Jessy, before sinking back into her. It wasn't long before the vampire was looking at him again, his abs, his ass, and frequently looking back to where he was penetrating his lover. The angle made it obvious which hole he was fucking.

"I ... sup-p-ppose," she said.

Jessy grinned at her friend. "Gonna make a new movie?"

"Movie? Oh, I ... I um, d-don't know." She squirmed. If she'd been Blushing Life, Eric bet she'd have turned solid red. "The boys enjoyed it."

"And, from what we saw in the movie, yooooou enjoyed it. How many times you cum making that vid? Five? Six?" With a hearty chuckle, Jessy shook her head, and resumed scrolling through the Terra Den receipts. "And I know you. When something's got your attention, you analyze and nerd out over it. So, what's your next movie gonna be like?"

"Um, it ... it's already filmed. I'm editing it."

"Knew it. Pervert."

Natasha's frown kept returning, only to flee in a second. She, like Eric, could just not stay mad at the Gangrel for very long.

"It's uh ... a b-bit of a ... you know, um, reluctance fantasy."

"Oh fuck yeah." That got Jessy's attention. She stopped scrolling, and set her hand on the blankets as she smiled at her friend. "Can't wait to see it.”

“Well now you w-won’t! Surprising me like this, and Eric. I assume Eric d-d-didn’t even know you were calling me.”

“I knew,” Eric said. “Not that it was a video call, though.”

“See! Horrible.”

The Gangrel laughed again, a hearty laugh Eric hadn’t heard her do often since Julias died. Maybe that’s why he was willing to do this? Much as he felt the old thrill stirring of being the center of attention for an audience, it was nothing compared to the sound of Jessy laughing.

He eased his cock out of her, and laid it upon the crack of her ass. It was hard, long, thick, and as he slid it back and forth along his girlfriend’s butt, spreading some of his earlier cum, he watched Natasha through the corner of his eye. She was staring hard now, with zero effort to hide it, eyes locked on his body, his muscles, and his wet shaft easing back and forth along her friend’s firm ass. Much as it was obvious Natasha thought Jessy was attractive, it didn’t take much to see that Natasha was more into men than women. Jessy had to have known that, too. She was showing him off for her friend.

“Seriously though, the ball. What’re you wearing? I won’t be touching any kine, since Eric’s my date, but that doesn’t mean I won’t put some goods on display. Gotta show those Carthian fucks that I’m hotter than them.”

Natasha stared at her friend for a moment, before she erupted into laughter. “You w-want everyone to think you’re hotter than them.”

“Damn straight.”

“How ab-bout ... the black dress, the one you wore to Bloodlust a few w-weeks ago?”

“Yeah, maybe.”

As the two ladies started talking dresses, Natasha half caught between trying to watch him, and trying to bounce ideas with her friend, Eric eased his knees back a bit, set his left hand on Jessy’s thigh for support, and sank two of his right hand’s fingers into Jessy’s pussy.

The Gangrel groaned immediately, but he knew what would happen. It was part of the game. He got to do what he wanted to her, and she had to try and ignore him and keep talking with Natasha. So after a quick glance from Jessy, a tiniest hint of worry in her eyes, she refocused and looked back to Tash.

“How about you, Tash? Hoping you’ll wear something really revealing.” Her voice wavered a little. “You can do the fashion runway model thing, you know? You got the frame for it. Lots of dresses go better for a girl with your proportions, like, scarf tops that dangle over your tits.”

“Um, maybe? I d-don’t know. I mean, I suppose ... b-but, if I bend over, then everyone could see.”

“Ha, so? L—nnng!” Jessy moaned, loudly, as Eric started to finger her g-spot, hard and fast. With a rigid hand, he drove his index and middle finger straight down into her g-spot like a jackhammer, until her whole body was shaking.

The sounds of her pleasure filled the room, and the bed trembled, as the Gangrel quickly came to orgasm. She’d be on edge for forever now, he figured, since he’d been fucking her ass for so long. But the angle, the pace, none of it had been good for getting her off. If he’d lain on top of her, and started thrusting down a lot harder, then maybe. Or if he’d transformed, and relied on the sheer size of his girth, that'd have pushed her over the edge as well. But, much as she enjoyed anal sex, he knew she came easier this way.

As her insides clamped down in a desperate attempt to stop him, he kept fingering her. Tiny splashes of her juices landed on the pillow and her thighs, and he kept fingering her. She clenched like a vise, and the liquids grew until they were more than splashing, they were soaking. He kept fingering her, a consistent, fast rhythm that drove her g-spot down toward the pillows underneath her, and forced another tiny squirt from her, and another, and another, little things that went no more than an inch before soaking the pillow.

Jessy had given up keeping her torso twisted to face Natasha. She went onto both elbows again, and her head dangled between her shoulders, groans escaping her that soon turned into weak pants as she struggled to get more air; she didn't need the air, but damn she liked to make noise. Her legs were quivering, and a quick peek behind him showed her toes were curled hard.

After he was satisfied, having earned a dozen small squirts from her over maybe thirty seconds, he eased up, and pulled his fingers out of her soaking hot depths.

“M ... M ... Maybe s-s-s-something like ... Jennifer wore at the last ball,” Tash said, her eyes wide and locked onto Jessy. “That top, um, d-dangled.” Poor girl was doing her best to keep playing the game she'd noticed the two of them were playing, but Eric had already won. Everything from here on out was a victory lap.

After a few groans, Jessy lifted her head, and turned to the laptop. “Y-Yeah, something like that. I was thinking, less inner boob, and more underboob. Something that—” A moan cut her short, as Eric got comfortable back where he'd been before, set his cock against her drenched, trembling slit, and sank himself balls deep into her pussy in one, hard thrust. “Fuck!” She took a second to recover. “Uh, maybe something that ... really ... lets people see how tiny your waist is, and how flat your stomach is, you know?”

“I b-bet I can ask Antoinette, and she’ll—” This time it was Natasha who went quiet, as Eric reached out, took each of Jessy’s hands in his, and pinned them to the small of her back. She fell onto her chest, head turned to face the laptop, and Eric couldn’t help smile as he saw the wicked grin on his girlfriend’s face. Jessy was looking at Natasha, still trying to play the game, as if Eric wasn’t affecting her, but the spasms of her insides around his cock told a different story. She was just coming down from her orgasm, and it wouldn’t take much to make her cum again.

The sight of pinning Jessy’s hands to her back stirred something in Natasha, as well. Her eyes locked onto him, his arms, his side, where his pelvis was snug to Jessy’s ass, and most often, where his hands were wrapped tight around Jessy’s wrists. What did she say, that the second movie she made was a reluctance fantasy? Getting pinned like this was probably a big kink for Natasha then.

Eric didn’t want to make her feel too uncomfortable though, so he never looked at Natasha, not directly, only through the corner of his eye. Most of the time, he made sure to keep his eyes on Jessy; not like that was hard. And as he started to thrust into her, going slow for now, he watched her expression with joy as her eyes rolled up in pleasure. Every inch was met with a hard clench of her soaked insides, and he shivered as her boiling depths sent pleasure sparks down his length.

“Antoinette, right,” Jessy said, voice barely more than a whisper. “I bet she’ll have lots of options for you. She’ll—nng ... she’ll have better ideas than me, but I still think you should wear a top that—nnng! ... that really shows off your waist, with a bit of boob.”

“I’ll ... m-make sure to t-tell her that, and ask, um, what she thinks.” Natasha fell silent, and stared, eyes fixated on Eric and growing wider and wider by the second. He was getting faster, and now each thrust was enough to make the bed shake; must have looked like an earthquake to Tash, considering the laptop was on the bed. Each thrust also caused the fit woman's thighs and ass to ripple, in that special way that demanded Eric stare.

The laptop started to drift. Before Jessy could say anything, Eric reached out, and adjusted it, setting it between some blanket folds so it'd stop shifting. He also moved it closer to him, and pointed it directly at where he was penetrating Natasha's friend. The small, whimpering gasp from Natasha signaled he'd lined up the shot perfectly. The small vampire could now see everything, could see Eric and his body thrusting back and forth at the hip, see his cock plunging into Jessy's soaked slit, and see Jessy's ass jiggle with each impact.

Vaguely, he was aware that this was very much outside his comfort zone. He felt mostly comfortable with Natasha's presence now, and considering she'd sent a sex tape of her to her friend, a friend she knew would show it to him, it was clear that Natasha was willing to let him see her naked. Naked, and with two huge dudes pumping her full of cum, both holes. Compared to that, letting her watch him fuck her friend, a friend that very much loved this sort of stuff, seemed tame. And hell, he'd been used to putting on a show, just not this kind of show.

Damn, Jessy really was corrupting him.

By the time his second orgasm came around, Jessy had already cum twice more, groans blatant. He'd have lasted a lot longer, but she kept wriggling, squirming, trying to fight him but unable, not with pleasure running up and down her body. Each motion meant muscles clenching and milking his length, along with the random spasms her climaxes forced on her insides, and all that gripping and squeezing on his cock built up the heat underneath his testicles quickly.

He slammed his hips forward, and Jessy groaned openly. Her eyes were half open, head still turned to face the laptop, and she had a strange, almost dopey smile on her face as she came again. She was loving this. Tightening his grip on her wrists, he slowly eased out most of his length, and slammed into her again, a drastically slower rhythm, but each thrust was much harder, earning separate and defined moans from the Gangrel, and a gush of cum from him. It was leaking out of her by the third thrust.

He slipped back again, and withdrew his length, all of it, from his girlfriend. A heavy strand of the white fluid connected them, and another small gasp from Natasha announced that she could see it. He looked at her, again through the corner of his eye, and smiled as he watched the tiny woman stare at his dripping cock.

When he wrapped his hand around his girth, and started to slowly stroke it, working his and Jessy's cum back and forth along his veined skin, Natasha sat up straight with a jolt. Her eyes lit up with fire.

"I ... I ... g-g-g-gotta go!" And with a small, panicked motion of her arm, the call ended.

"You ... scared her off. Heh, probably running to ... find her boy toys and ... fuck them silly." With a heavy groan, Jessy tried to push herself back up onto her elbows. "Dude, I ... didn't think you'd get so into it. I mean, I've been offering threesomes and foursomes on a plate, and you kept shooting them down. I figured—" Her voice cut short as he set the head of his cock back onto her asshole, and he again sank into her. "Again? Oh ... fff ... uuuuck."

This time, he lay atop her, and used his greater weight to gently pin her underneath him as he began to fuck her ass again. Like this, with his cock driving toward her abs, and her body hypersensitive, he knew she'd be cumming in no time.

“Didn’t think I would,” he said, and he thrust, hard. She didn’t just groan, she squeaked. “I used to like being in the limelight, you know? I never admitted it to myself, but I guess I did. Kinda reminded me of that.” His hands found hers again, and he pinned them into the blankets, a foot over and past her head. “But, honestly, it was just seeing how much you enjoyed it, that really got me into it.”

“Of course,” she whispered between pants. “I’m ... awesome.”

“Uh huh.” He slammed down into her, hard enough to make her ass jiggle despite his pelvis being pressed firm against it. It drove his glans deep into her, stretching her, and down against her pussy through the walls of her insides. Instant groans from the exhausted vampire.

“She ... was really into watching ... you fuck me. She likes guys.”

“You don’t like guys?”

“Heh, I do, but—nnng!” She turned her head to bury her face in the blankets for a second, before turning it to the side again so she could look up at him. “I’m like, sixty percent down for fucking guys, forty for fucking girls. She’s more like an eighty twenty mix.”

“Bisexuality on a spectrum?”

“Exactly.” Nodding, she sucked in a breath as he withdrew his length, and let out another moan as he slammed down into her. He didn’t thrust as hard as he would if penetrating her pussy, but she was thoroughly lubricated with lube and cum. He was in the clear to get rough.

“I did kinda like it though,” he said, and he set his lips to Jessy’s ear for a kiss. “Wouldn’t mind doing it again, especially since we know she’s making another movie. Wouldn’t mind watching it with you, either.”

“Awesome.” Nodding, Jessy melted into the blankets, and stopped squirming or wriggling. Instead, she went limp, tiny shivers working up and down her spine, as he continued to fuck her ass with a heavy rhythm. “Think ... you could transform, and let her watch ... that?”

“I think transforming would fuck up any cameras watching.”

“Damn.”

He rolled his eyes, chuckled, and kissed her neck between thrusts. “I’d never agree to swinging. I’m way to into you for that. But, if Tash ever caught us having sex and I was transformed, I seriously doubt I’d stop fucking you. Especially when transformed.”

Jessy managed her own chuckle, but a moan ripped it away. “I’ll make sure to ... to plant the idea in her head.” Her body started to tremble again, mostly in her legs, and he made his own groan as he felt her ass clench hungrily, as her legs kicked at the bed a couple times, weak little kicks made only below the knee. “You’re ... into me?”

Oh good god. He chuckled again, and did not let up his pace, even as she came. The feel of her rings of muscle trying to stop his cock from sinking into her deep enough until he felt her stretching to fit him, but too wet to provide any resistance other than a milking massage, was heaven.

“Very into you.”

She moaned, and unless his ears were lying to him, it almost sounded like a swoon. “Girl could ... get used to ... talk like that.”

“Get used to it.” He started to thrust a little faster, instinct demanding he satisfy the building pleasure running up and down his length. Each thrust made his glans more sensitive, more swollen, until each sent a shock of pleasure down his length, into his testicles, and into his body. Muscles clenched within, and then released, allowing the first wave of warm cum to flood up his cock, before the muscle clenched again, causing it to squirt into his lover.

“I ... I think I will.”

He smiled down at her trembling body as his rhythm slowed but his thrusts grew harder, the almost desperate sensation of needing to milk every wave of his cum a natural instinct taking hold of him. He sank himself into her again and again, until Jessy managed to get some breaths, and matched each thrust with a grunt and moan. And, the occasional, girlish mewl.

When he was done, he rolled over, lay next to her, and before he could say anything, she inched over to him to put the top half of her on top of him, breasts to his chest, and didn't move. Cuddle time, evidently. She'd liked what he said.

He'd liked saying it.

Chapter 114

~~Jack~~

He'd been tempted to ask Clara to join him. She was scared of him now, he knew that, and it hurt to all fuck every time he glanced at her. The curse was done with its rampage, but it'd been an asshole in that time, and had left an impression on everyone who'd gone on the mission with him. Damien, he knew wouldn't let it stop him from being his friend. They'd been through too much together. The others, on the other hand, he wasn't so sure about.

So hanging out with Fiona and Damien was a good way to test the waters. Fiona no doubt knew about what he'd done, had the details, and he could judge how she felt about him as the night went on.

“Let's go talk to yer sister!”

He froze on the sidewalk, and blinked at her. “Uh, what?”

“Yer sis, Mary. Ye said she's a ghost now? I'd love tae meet the lass.”

Jack blinked at the redhead several times, before looking at Damien. Yeah, Damien was wincing a bit, knowing full well Mary's death wasn't exactly an easy topic for Jack to broach.

But, hey, maybe it was a good idea? He hadn't done it yet, just that one time, and telling Mary about Angela might help her pass on. And if Fiona was suggesting it, the horror stories she'd undoubtedly heard about the curse and the assault on the hunters hadn't scared her too much.

But, maybe it wasn't a good idea. He didn't really think he was that close with Fiona, not yet anyway, and Mary might straight up attack her or Damien. His sister was strong as fuck, in the house. Straight out of a horror movie, complete with throwing furniture.

But, maybe it was a good idea. Telling Mary about Angela had to be done, for him and for his mom, so they could both move on. And it'd be good to show Mary that he'd made some friends, that he didn't need her watching over him or Mom.

He settled on the good idea gamble.

“You know what? Let's do it.”

“Really?” Damien said. “Seems like ... something pretty personal. Sure you want us there?”

“It is personal, but we've been in a shit load of life and death situations together, Damien. And Fiona's been in at least one with me. Just ... don't make any sudden movements, or say anything without being asked to, once we're inside. Ok?”

Damien and Fiona looked at each other, the Mekhet obviously uncertain, and Fiona brimming with excitement over the possibility of seeing a ghost.

“And yer mum?”

“You want Mom to come?”

“Aye!”

---

He stood in the driveway of his old home, with Fiona, Damien, and his mom. Fiona had done her usual bit when she saw Samantha, saying hi and bouncing up to her to hug. And his mom rode that wavelength easily, hugging back and smiling; Fiona probably reminded her of Mary. Damien did his usual silent introduction thing, until Jack had introduced them himself.

Damien and Fiona were strong, especially Damien. If shit went sideways, he could trust them to get out if they had to. As for himself, well, the curse would protect him. It wanted to live, and Jack dying would put a dent in that plan. And no matter what happened, Mary wouldn't hurt his mom, not directly anyway.

"I can't believe you invited Athalia to the ball," Jack said.

His mom raised a brow as she looked at him, dressed in a blue business suit with a knee-length skirt. She looked nice, far better than she did weeks ago when Antoinette had sired her. It felt good, seeing his mom recovering, another piece of his guilt melting away. Still plenty of guilty pieces stacked up, but with some time, he was confident he'd be done with them.

"I need to see her," his mom said.

"She's not going to come."

"I think she will."

"It'll only have been four nights since her daughter died. I imagine she'll be—"

"You said she's been separated from Angela for years, right? And in that time, Angela started hunting her?"

"Well, yeah, but—"

"I think she'll come. And I want to see her. I want to ... see her eyes."

Jack frowned at his mom, and she returned his gaze. Memories slammed into both of them, so many conversations had, so many times they'd gotten into arguments but never let it escalate to yelling, in the past. There wasn't any reason to start yelling, yet, and he didn't want the conversation to get heated, not with Damien and Fiona right there. And not with Mary's ghost so close.

"She's a Begotten, Mom, a nightmare monster. She'll ... she's dangerous."

"It'll be a ball, right? And Antoinette will be there, and that sheriff fellow. I trust them to keep me safe. Besides, Antoinette was the one who asked me if she should invite Athalia."

He still didn't know how he felt about that. Sure, his mom had been a vampire for a little while now. She'd fed many times, mostly with Antoinette to supervise, but still. She didn't spend every night mourning Mary anymore, especially not since learning that Mary was haunting their home. Not healthy. The last thing he wanted was for his mom to become a recluse, living in the basement of her old home, with her dead daughter.

"Everyone will be there," he said.

"Aye! I'll be there, with my jimmy 'ere." Fiona hugged Damien's arm and rested her temple on his shoulder. In the past, such an obvious display of affection and crossing a personal boundary would've unnerved Damien, made him uncomfortable, but now it didn't. It would have with anyone else, he was sure, but not with Fiona. Those two were getting very close.

"I think what Jack means," Damien said, "is a lot of people are going to be there, who will care about what happens. People know Athalia was Angela's mother, and some people know about what happened at the end. How Athalia presents herself at the ball will be a big statement about the Begotten, especially now that Azamel has pissed the Prince off, having Mark spy on her."

Mark, right. It surprised the fuck out of Jack that the curse hadn't been able to sense his presence. Sneaky fucker. He'd felt Daniel around, lurking, though the sheriff was so good at his art that Jack hadn't the vaguest idea where he was, just that he was nearby. Mark, on the other hand, had felt like a literal fly on the wall, an insect and no more. His presence hadn't been hidden, so much as altered to feel like a nearby insect. A bit annoying, sure, but entirely ignorable.

He should have realized that feeling meant Mark was nearby. Not like Antoinette didn't keep her tower in pristine, clean condition. Christ, the man's spying had made Jack's job so much harder now, keeping peace between the different races. He had to visit Azamel soon, but, he didn't want to, not so soon after killing Angela. He wanted to avoid Athalia. Wanted, and didn't want to.

If she came to the party, he'd talk to her. It'd probably end badly, but he'd have no choice.

"I was hoping," Jack said, "that after Azamel helped Antoinette come to the dream that night, that things would be better between vamps and monsters. And then Azamel had to ruin it."

"Can ye blame her?" Fiona shook her head, and took a few steps up the driveway, leaving the rest of them behind as she turned around and walked backward. "She's ... she's hurt, ye ken? I dinnae think she has long left, and she ... she just wants to know what's going on. She wants to know we'll be safe, when she's gone."

"She takes care of you?" his mom said.

"Aye, she does. I think, maybe she's trying tae ... be who she was, ye ken? Before Jeremiah ruined everything for her."

Jack nodded. "A leader." Maybe that was another reason she came to Dolareido? Considering the city was practically a utopia for vampires, mostly safe from hunters, and with peace between the paranormals, it'd be a good place for any monster with delusions of grandeur to set up camp. Maybe Azamel would have joined the Primogen at some point, if she stayed long enough. Now, he doubted she'd live long enough.

“Trust me,” his mom said. “It'll be fine.”

God he hated that. Really, down to his bones, hated that, how his mom would dismiss the realities of situations and cover them with useless words like ‘it'll be fine’. She never attempted to reason through her conclusions, to create any sort of logical framework for her beliefs. She just went with whatever she felt made sense, or thought was a good idea because it felt good.

His disappearance and Mary's death hadn't broken that, apparently. Hopefully Antoinette would teach her better, before her naivete got her killed.

Once the four of them reached the side door which led to the kitchen, Fiona knocked. Everyone raised a brow as they looked at her, and she giggled, shrugged, and stepped back. Jack motioned to his mom, she unlocked the door, and they followed her inside.

The coldness was back, like when he'd opened his sister's bedroom door, that first time revisiting the house. It wasn't as bad as last time, but it was there. Mary was there, somewhere in the dark, invisible, watching. She could see him, see his mom and his friends. She could attack, if she wanted to like last time, and turn utensils and plates into missiles. She could probably do whatever she wanted, since this was her domain, and she was a ghost.

Half wincing, Jack turned on the kitchen light. Nothing happened. He breathed relief, and reached down to take off his shoes before stopping himself. Old habits died hard.

Damien and Fiona both looked around the quaint kitchen, Damien with inquisitiveness, and Fiona with obvious familiarity. She'd come from a home, with a family. It must have looked similar to her old house.

He wanted to invite Antoinette, to show her the simple little world he came from, and for her to see his sister. He wanted to invite Clara, for the same reasons, and because he knew she'd be able to understand in ways Antoinette couldn't. It was a painful truth that Antoinette was too old, and came from too different a world, to understand why something as simple as seeing his old kitchen, and the silly tablecloth his mom kept, would be such a powerful experience for him and his mom. Clara would be able to understand it.

Except, Clara was afraid of him now. Hell, he knew Fiona and Damien were too, but they were doing a good job of keeping it from affecting them. Fiona could see the curse, and Damien was his best friend. That was probably the only thing keeping them calm around him. Clara, on the other hand, had kept a healthy distance from him during the meeting in the Elysium tower, and kept glancing his way. Maybe if he talked to her, he could convince her the curse wasn't something to worry about?

He'd have to convince himself of that, first.

"Mary?" he said. Silence. "Mary, it's me, Jack. Mom's here, and I brought a couple friends." Nothing.

"I can ... feel her," Fiona said. "Mary? Mary, ye there, lass?"

Jack winced, but said nothing. He didn't expect Fiona to try talking to a ghost, especially since he'd given instruction to not, but in retrospect, he was an idiot. Of course she'd do that. Damien'd warned him weeks ago that, as he got to know her, it'd become obvious the girl was sort of a fear junkie. She loved taking risks, being exposed to life-threatening situations, and overall being dumb. If she lived long enough, she'd learn.

God, listen to him, sounding like an elder vampire, judging young people for being rash. Antoinette was right, he was growing up too fast.

“Mary. It’s Mom. Can you come out please?”

That did it. The dark, empty house grew darker and emptier. The still air started to turn, and a thin mist began to cover the floor, more and more until it covered their feet, ankles, and touched their knees. The air grew colder, a harsh cold that skipped the skin and went straight for the bones. And silence settled on them like a heavy, wet blanket, drowning the outside world until all that existed was the house they were in.

If they’d tried the doors, Jack bet they would have been locked.

Jack spun his head as movement blipped in the corner of his vision. A face stuck out from around the wall between the kitchen and the upward stairway of the living room, Mary’s face. It was too high though, as if Mary had grown a foot, and was peeking around the edge of the white surface. Her face was white and see-through, and she only stuck her head out enough for him to see her forehead and eyes.

“Mary,” their mom said, and she looked to the living room archway. “Mary, you doing ok, baby girl?” Taking a cue from Jack, she didn’t approach the ghost, not yet, but it was obvious she wanted to. It was obvious to everyone that she’d have thrown herself at Mary to bury her in hugs if she could. But, she couldn’t, and she knew it.

Mary didn’t say anything, but she did manage a small nod.

Damien and Fiona both turned, and froze. Seeing Damien freeze felt almost natural, because the man always froze when he was taking in his surroundings. It meant he was hyper focused on absorbing as much data as he could, as quickly as possible, so he could be ready to react the moment he had to. Mekhet did that, especially the good ones like Tash, and the sheriff. Fiona, on the other hand, froze because she was deer-in-headlights surprised by the sight of a real ghost. Jack could sympathize.

“Mary,” Jack said, smiling and offering his sister a small wave, but otherwise not moving. “Hey. These are my friends, Fiona and Damien. Damien’s a vampire, too. Fiona is ... uh.” Wow. How to explain a nightmare monster succinctly?

“I’m a monster, from nightmares! Rar.” Fiona pawed the air once, like a cat, and she smiled.

Very slowly, like a frightened animal exploring new boundaries, Mary came down the stairs. She had legs down to her knees, and then they faded into a cloudy fog, mixing into the mist covering the floor. Her shoulder-length hair, once dark like his mom’s, was a ghostly white, the same as the rest of her. Her simple shirt, her jeans, her skin, all of it was a sad white, like fading chalk. It made looking at her painful.

“You ... have friends,” Mary said. Her voice was inhuman, but quiet, a whisper; a far cry from the banshee shrieks of last time.

“I do.” He took a step toward her. She didn’t back away. Ok, progress, he could move around and not expect his sis to smash him through a wall again. “Something happened last night, a ... good thing, I guess. Mom and I wanted to talk to you about it.” And Fiona wanted to see a real, actual ghost. He left that point out.

Getting closer to her increased the sensation of cold cutting to his insides. It was coming from her, no doubt about that.

“Something good?” Mary swayed left and right slightly, as if she wasn’t entirely solid. A stiff breeze might have knocked her over, if she had been.

“Yes Mary.” His mom came up beside him, and she hugged his arm, patting his side as she nodded to her daughter. “He ... he got her, Mary. He got Angela. K ... Killed her.”

The room went quiet, again. Only now, after his mom said it, did he truly appreciate just how much he'd changed, compared to his old life. Hearing his mom say the word 'killed' struck him hard, and he winced openly, looking down and letting the harshness of it pass.

Momma, I just killed a woman. Put a gun against her head, pulled my trigger, now she's dead?

"She's dead?" the ghost said.

"Aye! Dead as ye!" Fiona said. She would have continued, but Damien gave her a small elbow jab in the side.

Everyone slowly turned, and stared at her. Damien visibly winced, and made the tiniest step away from Fiona, as if afraid she'd be getting tossed across the room by a ghostly force in a moment, and he didn't want to join her. Not exactly the most chivalrous move, but hey, Fiona made the bed, let her be the one to get ghost-swatted in it.

But Mary didn't throw her around, or stab her with a dozen forks, or do anything. The hovering specter stared at her for a few seconds, before she laughed. Mary's laugh. Man, how long had it been since Jack had heard his sister's laugh? Except now it was a twisted, distorted thing, like nails on chalkboard mixed into a normal, human laugh.

"So much ... so much has changed," the ghost said. "She's really dead?"

"She is." Jack walked around the ghost, and did his best to act like it was Mary. He still didn't know anything about the ghost, whether it was some ghostly afterimage, or actually Mary, or her soul, or anything. Looking at her hurt. He'd said his goodbyes to her corpse, and while his mom didn't get to do that, she'd gotten to say similar to Mary last time they were here.

Similar, but not close enough to a proper goodbye. And he knew he was going to have to force his mom to have that final goodbye eventually. It was going to suck.

He sat down on the stairs, the ones leading from the upstairs bedrooms hallway into the living room, the one Mary had just floated down from. Mary was a ghost, but whether she was the real Mary or a ghostly afterimage didn't matter, she was still Mary in a sense. The least he could do was stop treating her like some monster hiding in his old house, and be more at ease around her, if not for her sake, then for his mom's. She definitely thought of the ghost as the bona fide Mary.

"I killed her," he continued. "Er, well, Beatrice killed her, actually. I was with her, and helped make it happen."

Mary floated over to him, and before Jack could say anything, the ghostly creature sat down beside him.

Memories hit him, powerful, painful. They used to do this, before their dad died, sit on the stairs and talk; not that he'd been very good at it, but they did anyway, usually while their parents sat on the couches ten feet away. After their dad died, they didn't talk all that often, but it still happened from time to time.

"Who's Beatrice?" Mary asked.

"Another vampire, and a friend. Angela killed her boyfriend, Julias. Remember Julias?"

"Angela ... killed Julias..." The ghost shivered, and her image shuddered along with the motion. Her empty eyes looked down, and her hands rested on her knees over the fog that swallowed the floor. "She hurt a lot of people."

"She's gone now, baby," their mom said. "She's gone now, and she's not going to hurt anyone anymore." She came over to them, stood in front of them and leaned on the railing. Old positions, the way they used to talk while things were cooking in the kitchen beside them. Did they fall into old habits like this because it was the house they grew up in and nostalgia was a powerful force, or because they were trying to keep each other at ease?

“There’s still hunters in the city,” Damien said, “but none of them compare to Jeremiah and Angela.”

“Jeremiah?” the ghost said.

Jack nodded. “Angela’s boss. And adopted father, I suppose. Another person they’d hurt, someone whose wife and son they’d killed, he uh ... ate him. Literally.”

Mary’s eyes went wide. Chilling, seeing those empty sockets. If eyes were windows to the soul, and Mary’s eyes were gone, did that have any significance? So many unanswered questions. He knew Antoinette delved into this sort of stuff, and Samantha was her student, but he also knew Antoinette wouldn’t have shared much information with her new child yet. All in all, it was quickly becoming apparent that Jack really should have invited Antoinette on this trip.

He was happy to bring Damien because Damien was his best friend. He was ok with Fiona coming because he trusted her, and he knew Fiona and Mary were similar. But neither of them would be able to help with the real problem here: what to do about Mary.

“Monsters,” Mary said, ghostly voice wavering. “We’re ... all monsters.”

“Aye, we are,” Fiona said. She slid over to them, literally sliding her shoes over the floor, and smiled at the group of them. “But that’s awright. I know for ye, it must be strange, being dead and aw, and learning yer family is a bunch of vampires now.”

The idea that Mary might not be the actual Mary apparently did not once cross Fiona's mind. Or maybe it did, and she just didn't care. Nice to a fault.

"You could say that." Mary smiled, a disturbing image, empty gaze pointed at Fiona.

Fiona didn't even blink. Despite it being Fiona's, and hell, everyone's first ghost encounter, ghosts probably ranked pretty low on the strange things Fiona had seen, considering her origins. Or rather, Vrall's origins. Maybe Fiona knew more than Jack figured?

"What about her mother?" Mary said. "The other ... monster. Athalia."

Jack frowned. He didn't remember mentioning anything about Angela's mother to Mary. Which probably meant his mom had been visiting Mary without telling him, and without telling Antoinette either. God damn it.

"She lives," Jack said, after giving his mom a harsh glare. "She wasn't the enemy. But, she's ... she's ... pretty broken. I'm not sure what she's going to do."

His mom put up a hand, just a few inches, enough to get their attention. "I'm going to talk with her."

Jack shook his head. "I still don't think that's a good, Mom. I don't even think she's going to come to the ball."

"Then I'll talk with her somewhere else."

"Mom, you can't—"

"I'm going to talk to her, Jack. I have to ... have to talk to her."

"She could kill you!"

“She won’t kill me. You don’t understand.”

“Damn right I don’t understand. She’s a broken woman, Mom, and she hates me. She’ll blame me for what happened to Angela, and—”

“And I blame Angela for what happened to Mary! My daughter is dead because of her, and her mother is a part of that!”

Jack lifted his head, and stared at his mom, eyes going wide. The ghost beside him shimmered, broke into pieces, and melted into the fog. It’d already been cold, sitting beside her, but the temperature dropped a few more degrees, and the mist around their feet rose a foot. Everyone held still and looked around slowly as the lights flickered, darkness creeping up around them. Darker, and darker, until the lights went out entirely.

The mist moved, rolling over the floor, the stairs, and around people’s legs as it began to swirl. The curtains flapped against the rising breeze, and Jack stood up as it increased to a full wind. He grabbed the railing as the cold seeped into his bones, and he gulped down the rising panic. It was stupid to bring Damien and Fiona. Now they were caught up in family drama that was quickly going to turn into a horror story if he didn’t do something.

“Mary,” Jack said, “I ... I came to tell you about Angela, because—”

“I know!” the ghost screamed. Her voice was short, harsh, and a bit of the banshee wail he’d heard from her before joined in. It was not a pleasant noise, and Jack pulled his head back a bit when she spoke. “I ... I’m dead. I’m dead. I’m dead I’m dead I’m dead.”

“I’m sorry baby!” his mom said to the darkness around them. “I’m sorry! I’m so sorry. I didn’t mean to ... to say it like that.”

Jack shut his mouth and ground his teeth into powder. Much as he loved his sister, his mom was much closer to her. The best Jack was likely to do right now was put Damien and Fiona through what he went through, the first time he met Mary the ghost. Damien could survive that, Fiona might not.

“It’s ... it’s ok...” Slowly, with far greater control than Jack figured an angry banshee creature would be able to summon, Mary calmed down. It took time, a painful eternity of listening to the ghost cry, shriek, wail, and sob. It was crazy how she went from calm and talking one moment, to psychotic the next, but despite that, she started to settle.

“What now?” His mom said. “What ... what do we do now?”

The fog lowered until it covered only their feet again, and Mary’s ghastly noises stopped. With a couple more minutes, Mary’s form reappeared, in the living room a few feet from them, drifting around in a circle close to the ceiling. She looked so sad, even when she smiled.

“I don’t know. I ... I’m happy, happy that Angela’s gone, and Mom and Jack are safe. But I don’t ... don’t know what to do. I don’t want to leave.”

“Oh, Mary.” Their mom moved from the railing to the living room, and stood in its center, looking up at her daughter. If Mary had been solid, Jack knew his mom would have been doing everything in her power to hug her as much as she could. “You don’t have to leave! You can stay, as long as you want, and—”

“Mom, you can’t say that.” Jack joined her, and gave Damien a glance over his shoulder as he did. The message was clear: sorry I let you two see this, mistake, please leave. Damien nodded, took the staring Fiona with him, and left.

“I can say what I want. This is my house, and she’s my daughter.”

“Mom, she’s dead! This ... Mary isn’t alive, you said it yourself. This isn’t good for anyone. We have to let her go.”

“We don’t have to do anything!” His mom marched up to him and glared at him, a classic glare he’d grown to hate in the past, her ‘this is how I feel and my feelings are valid no matter what your logic says’ glare. He’d have any easier time breaking a wall with his face, than getting through to her when she was like this.

“Mom,” Mary said, “I—”

“No! No, I don’t want to let you go! I ... I ... don’t want to lose my daughter, like Athalia did hers!”

Silence fell on them again. Even Mary, still hovering around in the air above them, didn’t make a peep, no moan or banshee wail or anything. Everyone stood still, and let the reality sink in.

“Mom,” the ghost said, “it’s ok.” It was eerie, how deathly calm Mary had grown, after listening to her mom lament.

“It’s not ok!”

“Mom.” Mary hovered down to float in front of her. Jack had a hard time looking his dead sister in the face, but his mom didn’t flinch. The fact her daughter had empty eye sockets and gaunt cheeks didn’t bother her at all. “I’ve been ... thinking, a lot. It’s hard to think. Every thought feels real, and I get so lost in them, in the memories, in things that aren’t real.”

“Honey, please, you can—”

“I need to speak, Mom! I need to say this. I need to ... before it slips away.” She shook her head hard, enough for her hair to bounce around in a motion far too jagged to be natural. “It was there, and now it’s gone. Angela, I mean. She ... she killed me, and now it’s gone, the chain around my feet. And that’s ok. It’s all ok. Please, don't ... don't make things harder than they have to be. I don't want to go, but I know I should."

"But ... baby, that ... that doesn't mean you have to go."

"It does, Mom. It does! It ... does!" Mary screamed the last word, and Samantha flinched back. Flinch turned into squeak as Mary's arms reached out and tried to grab her. Not try, did. Their mom's squeak turned into a gasp and short-lived scream as Mary's grip sank into her shoulders, and the moment Mary realized she'd hurt her, she let out her own scream. A proper scream. A banshee's scream.

Mary flew back, and threw herself into the corner of the room, the corner where they used to keep the Christmas tree. Her body hit the wall hard, and Jack froze for a moment, watching his sister twist and squirm in the corner, as he ran to his mom and set his hands on her shoulders.

"Mom!"

"I'm ok, I'm ok. I..." Her suit jacket was torn in both shoulders, and Jack could see through it to the torn shirt underneath, and torn skin underneath that. If she'd been alive, she'd have been bleeding from ten nasty gashes.

"Sorry! I'm sorry. I'm sorry I'm sorry I'm sorry I'm sorry I'm sorry." Mary, now curled up in the corner with her hands wrapping her head, peeked up from behind her forearms at them. "Please don't be mad. Please, I—"

"Mary Terry, you know I could never be mad at you." As if a ghost hadn't just nearly ripped her arms off, their mom walked over to the corner with Mary, and knelt down into the mist Mary was half merged with. "I'll be fine. Vampire, see?" She showed her arms to her daughter's ghost, smiling the whole time. "It's ok. You just focus on telling us what you wanted to say.” The pain must have been great, but his mom acted like she wasn’t in pain at all.

Jack frowned from behind his mother, but watching Mary shudder in her corner like a frightened dog, frightened by her own temper, ripped the frown off his face. Ow. The sight of her, trembling, struggling, was cold ice over his body, and all attempts to be impartial about the ghost haunting his old home faded away. He wanted to help her, same as his mom did.

No, you fucking idiot. It’s a ghost. It’s not your sister. You have to help her move on, to pass over into the afterlife, or to disperse into the ethereal or ether, or do whatever it was that ghosts did!

“Sorry, sorry! I ... I have to tell you though, have to, have to.” She forced her arms down, and Jack gulped as he met her face again. The empty eye sockets, the gaunt features, it’d all grown worse, as if she’d begun to rot before their eyes. But, after a few more seconds, she managed to return to her earlier self, doing her best to look good for her mom and brother. “Thank you Jack, for getting ... for killing Angela. I can feel it, a tether, a noose, it’s gone.”

“Then—”

“I can’t! I can’t. Something’s ... something’s out there, Mom. Something’s going on, and I can see it.”

“See it?” Jack said.

“See it! There’s lines. Someone drew lines. They’re ... they’re in the city.”

“In the city?” He came closer and knelt by her. This was starting to sound dangerously like information about the lurking presence in the city.

“Yes, in the city. Something’s out there, Jack. Something’s ... drawing lines, and they’re ... tearing. I can see through them sometimes, see to places where things are ... are moving, shapes in the darkness. I don’t want to go there. I don’t want to go there. I don’t want to go there. I don’t want to go there.”

---

~~Antoinette~~

Antoinette leaned back in her office chair, and looked up at the ceiling.

“Problems?” Elaine said, her voice coming through Antoinette’s laptop speakers.

“Of a sort.”

“Do tell.”

“Jacob.” Antoinette looked back to the laptop, and offered her old friend a small smile.

Based on the background she could see, Elaine was in a different room compared to last time. Her exact location, Ann did not know, but it was better that elders did not trade exact locations when on the move. Crossing territory was when an elder, or indeed any Kindred, was at their most vulnerable. Should a hunter catch wind of where Elaine was at this exact moment, it was not unthinkable for them to organize a strike against her while she slept. Her current location would no doubt not be as defensible as her home fortress.

“What is the old bastard up to?”

“He conspires with spiritual forces of ill intent, or rather, unknown and likely ill intent.”

Elaine laughed and shrugged. “That does not sound unusual for Jacob.”

“No. No it does not.” But something else crept within the walls of her city, and as the months went on, the more she was convinced Jacob and Black Blood knew of it. More than simply knew, but were likely involved somehow.

Something had upset the spirits. Several more creatures that she had summoned were hesitant to speak, but one had been bold enough to speak of ‘tears’ in the world. She had suspected the spirit was referring to the infamous Gauntlet, the wall between the physical world and its mirror, the Shadow world. Now, she was not so sure. Perhaps it had something to do with Natasha’s information, about how one of the most powerful spirits that lurked within her domain, the Street-Tail King, thought the arrival of the Azlu was not natural. The ecosystem of spirits was difficult for her to discover and catalogue, and she knew utterly nothing about monsters related to that ecosystem. To extrapolate from what little information she could glean from the other realm, was beyond difficult.

But there was something out there, something hiding within her city. The monsters knew of it. Catching Mark in the act of spying on her, and then threatening him, was perhaps not the wisest course of action, with an unknown threat looming over her. Not entirely unknown, since more than she knew of its presence. Azamel had known of it, according to Jack. Perhaps the Uratha knew of it? Perhaps it was time to speak to Avery directly of this.

“Large problems, then,” Elaine said.

Antoinette forced her eyes back onto Elaine. “My apologies.” She had been drifting, trapped in her thoughts, and forcing poor Elaine to watch her in silence. “My studies of ephemera suggest danger lurks, Elaine. A ritual, perhaps? An entity? It...” She sighed, and leaned in toward the laptop. “I do not know. I am inclined to point my eyes to Jacob and that infernal Black Blood, but there are other possibilities.” Telling Elaine this information was dangerous; mostly due to professional rivalry from her fellow dragon, more than anything. But she trusted her old friend, and perhaps Elaine could help, once she was within Dolareido. Except, maybe not with all information over potentially hackable means of conversation. “I will tell you more once you have arrived.”

“I look forward to it. And I look forward to making my grand entrance at your ball. What should I wear?”

Antoinette chuckled, combed her hair over her shoulder, and ran her hands through it as she considered. “I told my childe, and my lover, that this ball would not be as sexually explicit as my last.”

“I assume you were lying?”

“I was not!” Laughing, Antoinette flicked her right hand while her left continued to comb her hair. “Though, I suspect people will be quite joyful over the news of the defeat of the hunters. The moment someone — likely Jennifer Denver, or Jessy Herrington, or Othello Manu — shows skin, I am sure many kine will be stripped, and buried in fang and pleasure. Poor Samantha.”

“Your childe? Ha, let her sink or swim. I am sure she will adapt.”

“So you say. My childe is a sweet creature, Elaine, and her son will be at the ball as well.”

“He is her son biologically. They are Kindred now, Ann, dead creatures, same as you or I. The hold our biological ties placed on us with birth are quite weak to us undead, and you know it.”

Antoinette nodded as she looked up again, considering. It was true that Jack and Samantha would slowly stop considering each other mother and son, at least with the insistence of living beings, but it would never fade completely. Ultimately, the bond between sire and childe was stronger. Jack had only been two years embraced when Angela killed his sister and attempted to kill his mother. In another ten or twenty years, his reaction to the murder and assault would have been much different.

She did not tell her little Ventrue this. His refusal to let go of his humanity, despite his capacity for cold logic, was a trait she would cherish for as long as he held it.

“You believe the presence of her son will not prevent her from ... enjoying the delights presented to her?” Antoinette said.

Elaine nodded. “I doubt she will engage in an orgy in clear view of her son, but I think she will indulge more than you think she will. She is your childe, after all.”

Antoinette rolled her eyes, licked her lips, and grinned at her old friend. “I hope you do not mind, but I have planted several images into my lover’s thoughts, images related to you.”

Elaine leaned back in her chair as well, a black leather office chair behind a desk of glass. No windows. Behind her was a white wall, plain and without a single marking. A bunker of a sort, if Antoinette had to guess.

“Images? Do tell.”

“I regaled my love with tales of our past.”

Elaine laughed and shook her head. “Your lover is but a boy! A young man, with two Kindred years to his name. Why would you torture him so?”

“I do oh so delight in watching him squirm.”

“Sadist.”

“Aha, perhaps. But I love my little Ventrue, and”—she pointed a finger at the laptop screen—“I know full well you will tease, taunt, and torment my Jack.”

“Will I?”

“Oh yes. He is quite ... tease-able.”

That earned a sparkle from her eye, and she leaned in closer to the camera. “Then I think I will wear something up to that task.”

“I do not wish to see any blatant nudity, Elaine. Although...”

“Mmm?”

“During my last ball, a Ventrue that shares many similarities with you wore what was, essentially, a cross sash across her breasts, that exposed her chest completely whenever she leaned forward.” Jennifer Denver, someone Antoinette would have been interested in as a potential dragon, if Jacob and the ethos of his Circle had not seduced her first. Aaron as well. Othello, not so much. “She turned many heads that night.”

“I shall have to do better, then, mm? Something that would give your little Ventrue many fantasies?”

Distant memories danced in Antoinette’s mind, and she shared a sly grin with her friend. The thousands of dresses they had worn, the hundreds of different styles and aesthetics, the sheer eroticism of many of the encounters such dresses led to, it all made Jennifer and her silly attempts at being the center of attention, seem quaint.

“Do not try too hard, old friend,” Antoinette said. “He is my lover, and my love. You will not be able to seduce him from me.”

“But I can try.”

“Ha. You may try.”

Elaine's grin widened. "And I have your permission to make him squirm?"

"By all means. His squirms are an utter delight." Perhaps she was a tad sadistic. The way her little Ventrue squirmed when she bathed him in new experiences always sent a thrill up her spine. She loved to care for him, pamper him, but she also delighted in making him uncomfortable. She did not think of herself as a dominatrix, but between her phases of caring for and spoiling her Ventrue, she did love to force him into situations she knew would make him nervous.

"And ... if I wanted to do more?"

Antoinette glared at Elaine, but only with half seriousness. "As I said, he and I are in love, and—"

"I would never violate that, Antoinette. But it has been many years since I have touched you." After a slow lick of her lips, her old friend leaned back again. "And from what you have told me of your Jack, I cannot help but remember a certain hunter we once captured. Sir Eric Franzalod, if you recall?"

Ah, yes, the hunter Eric Franzalod. Unfortunate that their encounter had ultimately ended in his death, but a week prior, she had seduced the man. In her attempt to enthrall him, she had used her sexuality, along with Elaine's, and the week had been filled with enough sex to kill a lesser man. He had been quite nervous, and they had bathed him with their bodies and breasts, squashing him between their bosoms and satisfying every fantasy the silly fool had ever dreamt.

It had been an enjoyable week, Elaine and Antoinette doing their best to pleasure the man, to sway him, to seduce him. His hunter charms had prevented his mind from being broken by her Majesty, or Elaine's Dominate, so they attempted to use sex instead. Oh, such a joy, to milk the man onto Elaine's skin, and watch the hunter's jaw drop as Antoinette massaged and licked her friend's body until it was clean, and ready for more. A true shame that their efforts had been in vain.

"I can see your thoughts," Elaine said. "A small smile, when your eyes look up in memory."

Antoinette refocused her gaze on her old friend, smile remaining. "While I would normally delight in entrapping my little Ventrue, and forcing delights upon him, to allow another Kindred into my bed with him is a different matter entirely. It is a border I will not cross lightly." She combed her hair, considered, and nodded toward Elaine. "If you proposition him, about joining our bed, I will let him decide."

"Ah, so it is on me to seduce your little Jack Terry, until he relents, and lets me join your bed? You must take me for quite the slut, Ann."

"That I do."

More gentle, ridiculous chuckles between them. It felt wonderful to be silly, to be foolish like this. It had been ages since she had truly entertained silly.

"Very well. I will seduce your little Ventrue, and dare I say, half of your city with him, with what I will be wearing at the ball."

"Oh, does that include Daniel?"

That shattered Elaine's smile, and she fell back in her seat hard enough for her blond, wavy hair to bounce. "It would! But your infuriating sheriff has abandoned all sexuality."

"He is Mekhet, not Daeva."

“I am Ventrue, not Daeva, and I can still enjoy the bliss of skin touching skin. Why your blasted sheriff refuses to let me touch him remains beyond my reasoning.” She reached out for her desk and began to tap index and middle finger against it, almost violently. “And you tell me he shares a bed with no one?”

“Not that I am aware of. He feeds privately, and when he is not embarking on the tasks I give him, he is studying what knowledge I have gathered on ephemera.” A part of her wanted to share knowledge of Mary, a ghost, and invite Elaine to perform experiments. Anyone in the Ordo would be excited to learn of a ghost they could actively engage with. So many specters were obscure, difficult to lock down, or otherwise impossible to interact with. Mary was a tantalizing treat that Antoinette had to resist, lest she offend her lover and her childe. Frustrating.

Speaking of her childe. Antoinette’s phone began to ring, and the ring tone announced it was Samantha Terry.

“I must take this, Elaine. I look forward to your arrival, and ... and, I acquiesce. If you wish to wear something far too revealing, you have my permission, as I know other Kindred will wear similar.” Antoinette would too, no doubt. The thought of making her lover stare in awe was forever too great a guilty pleasure. Perhaps she could convince her childe to wear something revealing as well? She knew, with a little nudging, that the precious Natasha could also be convinced to wear something très risqué, considering the odd turns her sexual life had taken. Convincing Samantha to do the same would be a little trickier.

“I will speak to you when I arrive tomorrow night then. Au revoir.” And the conversation ended with a silent blip.

Antoinette answered her childe’s call. “Yes, my dear Samantha, how may I help you?”

“Hi sire. I wanted to tell you that Jack and I went to visit Mary.”

Antoinette blinked several times, before finally saying, “Oh. I see.”

“I ... I wasn’t sure you’d want to come, Antoinette. He wasn’t sure, either.”

“And why would I not?”

“Because it’s ... it’s just an old, small house, you know? It’s so, I don’t know the word ... plebeian? And Mary and Jack I, it was—”

“Please, childe, the next time you speak to your daughter, I would like to be there. She is a part of your past, a powerful part, and as your sire, I feel I will know you better, if I meet a part of that past.” And while that was true, Antoinette also ached to speak directly with something she only managed short encounters with in the past, a true specter.

“Oh, that’s a good point. I’m sorry.”

“It is alright, dear Samantha. I had honestly not considered that, perhaps, you would feel this way about your past life. I admit, I know Jack through Julias and the Invictus, a world of suits and money. But please, do not fret. Such homely beginnings are far from unusual, and nothing to be judged over.”

She could almost hear Samantha smile over the phone. While Antoinette thought her words sounded patronizing, she knew Samantha well enough by now to know the woman loved direct, honest, heartfelt communication. She was Jack’s mother, after all, and while Jack was a far more intelligent and scrutinizing, analytic sort, much of what made Jack tick, made Samantha tick. Namely, direct honesty.

“Thank you. I’ll make sure to invite you next time.”

“Please do.” A gentle touch of insistence, to remind Samantha of who she was. She was the Prince of Dolareido, and the woman’s sire. Samantha had a responsibility to acknowledge that, and treat her with the respect she deserved. At the same time, teaching Samantha was a delicate affair, after the trauma she had suffered, combined with her personality. Antoinette had to be careful how she worded things.

Some Kindred could be taught with pure information, like Jack, Natasha, and likely Damien. Others needed to be dominated, pushed around, perhaps sometimes bullied, like Jessy and many Gangrels. Some needed to be outwitted, and shown that they were not as intelligent as they thought themselves to be, such as Jennifer or Isabella. Others responded best to emotional support. Samantha was such a person.

“How is your daughter?” Antoinette continued. “Has learning of Angela’s death helped her move on?”

“No ... no it hasn’t. That’s part of the reason I called. Mary, she says ... she says she can’t go yet.”

“Cannot?”

“Can’t, or won’t, she doesn’t even know! But, but she says there’s something going on, something in ... in the afterlife, I guess? I don’t know, she doesn’t know. And she won’t go until whatever this thing is, something that’s ... in Dolareido, something that she can feel, is gone.”

That, was intriguing. Mary was a creature of ephemera, and while it was unknown whether she was a ghostly afterimage, or the literal soul of Samantha’s daughter, it was still true that she was no longer among the living. Mary, someone who had been blissfully unaware of the world of the paranormal in life, was now aware of something that fit Antoinette’s vague and hidden threat.

It was settled then. She would have to visit Mary, and perhaps do so on her own.

“Merci ma petite, for sharing this with me. This information helps me more than you know.”

“Um, you’re welcome!”

“And, as the ball will soon be upon us, I would have you return to the tower. We must find both you and I something to wear.”

---

~~Natasha~~

The room was huge, as big as a basketball court, with high walls of black marble. Within one wall was a closet almost as big as the actual room, filled with wardrobes and clothes racks on wheels that Antoinette pulled out to be sifted through. Leather stools sat about, with enormous mirrors against walls lined with light bulbs, for sitting at and adjusting make up and whatnot. A very ‘showgirl backroom’ sorta room, if the showgirls had all been millionaires.

How the times had changed. She’d only just been getting used to Antoinette, and her sire Daniel again, when the Prince had held the last ball. And the ball before that, Lucas had crashed. Back then, she’d thought of Antoinette as this immovable force that could not be stopped or denied. Lucas and his assault on the tower had shown her otherwise.

Antoinette wasn’t some unstoppable force, some immutable or invincible deity. She wasn’t a god, or demon, or volcano or tornado. Antoinette was a woman, a woman who knew what she liked and what she wanted. Rare, but then, she’d had centuries to figure out what she wanted from her second life. Maybe it was that sense of direction, combined with her power, that made Antoinette such an intimidating figure. But, intimidating or not, it’d been some time now that Natasha no longer thought of Antoinette as an unapproachable god.

That didn't mean she didn't still think of her as a very intimidating woman, someone who was too smart and wise for Natasha to ever truly outwit or outsmart. Natasha prided herself on her intelligence, and she used it to run circles around most people; quiet circles that she kept to herself. With Antoinette, she ran no circles. Every word, every motion, every eye glance Antoinette made was a calculated action, and Natasha quickly realized it was better to just do whatever it was Antoinette wanted her to do.

Tonight, that was try on dresses.

“J-Jessy says I should try a loose hanging scarf ... that's also the t-top.” If there was a name for the absurd fashion item, she didn't know it.

Samantha giggled. Antoinette chuckled. Natasha, despite herself, smiled as she squirmed a little on the leather stool seat. All three of them wore suits, though only Natasha's had pants. They were in Antoinette primary dressing room, where she kept literally hundreds upon hundreds of dresses, and had apparently taken it upon herself to fill her rows upon rows of hangers with clothes for her two students as well. Well, student and childe. Samantha had yet to join them in matters of the Ordo.

“I would have to agree with your friend,” the Prince said. “Your small bust allows you to wear clothes that expose much of your torso, without it becoming blatantly erotic so quickly.”

Tash frowned at that. “I need b-bigger boobs.”

Jack's mom snorted on a laugh, and pat her shoulder, also sitting on the large stool. “Me too?”

Tash's frown grew. Now Samantha was making fun of her. The woman had perfectly normal breasts. Tash basically had none, tiny mounds that were only noticeable in skintight clothes. Which didn't seem to bother her boyfriends, because all she had to do was show the slightest bit of skin, and they were all over her.

Last night, after seeing Jessy and Eric enjoying themselves, she'd pretty much thrown herself at them. Damn that woman, corrupter of all good and pure.

"Nonsense," Antoinette said, and she pulled aside one of the coat racks that was utterly crammed with dresses and things preserved in clothes bags.

"Easy for you to say!" Her loud tone earned a raised brow from the Prince, but when Tash shrank, Antoinette just laughed and shrugged.

"I admit, being well endowed has provided me with many advantages, when it comes to controlling the sexuality of others. But that does not mean it is always a blessing, Vola. And besides, a small, dainty figure allows a woman to stir all sorts of sexual hungers. Many men fantasize about holding a small creature such as yourself in their grasp, someone très petite, someone that they can bury inside their arms and legs, and hold, pinned on their lengths as they squeeze you to their chests."

Natasha's frown slowly faded, and try as she might to stop it, she knew she was smiling. Yeah, that was exactly what Matt and Art liked to do. They liked to make her disappear against their bodies, manhandle her a bit, pick her up and move her around cause she was so small, and squash her into the bed. They did it last night.

She smiled with the memory, and the memory of what triggered it. Eric was getting bigger. It wasn't that she found him necessarily more attractive because he'd grown bigger since she first met him, but after spending so many nights with two very large guys, her tastes were changing. Once upon a time, she'd figured she'd have preferred guys like Damien, thin, without any bulging muscles. It made more sense for someone like Fiona to be into big guys with big muscles. And yet, it was the super extroverted redhead with the giant boobs going for Damien, and little Natasha getting, as Jessy would put it, 'DP'd on the reg by two huge dudes'.

So of course, Jessy thought it'd be a good idea to show her everything Eric was doing to her. And what shocked Tash more, was how quickly Eric got into it! Those two were meant for each other, assholes. She smiled to herself as she remembered the sight of Eric, his length in his hand, all covered in cum and juices.

It really was Jessy's fault. It had to be. Only—

A sharp pain made her sit up, and she blinked at the vampire beside her.

"Your mind's running away without you, honey," Samantha said, lowering her hand after flicking Tash's shoulder. The grin on her face showed she knew where Tash's mind went, and Tash looked down at her knees.

"And you, Samantha," Antoinette said. "I hope to see you engage with others at the ball."

"Engage?"

"Oui. Talk to Kindred, learn who they are, introduce yourself to them. You are my childe, and that will lend you weight; others will respond to you whether they wish to or not."

"People won't want to talk to me?" Samantha put a hand to her cheek, genuinely surprised. Natasha had to suppress the need to giggle.

“The Danse Macabre, my childe. While this ball is meant for all to relax, feed, and mingle, most Kindred will find it difficult to speak with you without considering your position. They will worry that, if they offend you, they may offend me. Or different but similar worries will bother them.”

“Oh. I’m the daughter of the mayor. I’ve seen this movie.”

Tash laughed. Would the Prince even get the reference? Apparently she did, because she chuckled, nodded, and continued to comb through the various dresses she had hanging.

“Oui. I suggest you use the others as a catalyst. While Natasha or Damien could help you, I know Jessy or Jennifer will happily bury you in socialization.”

“But ... not Jack?”

Natasha winced, and looked to Samantha for only a second before looking down again. Say something? No, Antoinette would handle this.

“I fear Jack will be the most feared character at the ball, Samantha.”

Samantha gasped, a sound so classic, Tash could have sworn she’d taken it straight from a soundboard.

“They’ll be afraid of Jack?”

“Jack has gained a strange infamy, my sweet childe. His defeat of the hunters, combined with the spreading rumors of his curse, has painted a dangerous image of my love. This ball is also to show others that Jack is perfectly in control, and calm the fears of the city.”

“In control, b-b-but ... still ridiculously strong,” Tash said. “Garry will p-probably poke and prod, to see how much of a threat Jack is.”

The young Daeva sighed, got up, and looked at the many hanging dresses. “It hurts, to think of Jack being the target of so many horrible things.”

“As it pains me,” Antoinette said. “With his sire gone, I fear that your son will continue to put himself in harm’s way, taking up tasks that would normally fall to Julias.”

Natasha sighed, and the two Daeva looked to her. “I miss Julias.” Sighing again, she kicked the bottom of the stool with her heel gently. “He was r-really ... kind.” Damn it. It’d been many weeks since Julias died, but it still stung, remembering that her friend, second only to Jessy, was dead. And Julias, of all Kindred! The last man who deserved it.

“Come now, my sweet.” The Prince came over to her, and pet her shoulder as she smiled down at her. “I knew Julias as well. Not as personally as you, but better than you may suspect. He would not want you to feel such sorrow.”

“I know. I know. I just...” She shook her head with a quick shudder, dislodging the sadness as best she could. Antoinette nodded, and Natasha stood up to join her and Samantha. “M-Maybe some girly stuff will make me feel better.”

That earned a proper laugh from Antoinette, and she withdrew several dresses from her many, and set them over the rack. “Referring to the art of embellishing the body as ‘girly’ does not do justice this ancient game, little Vola. Men groom beards, wear suits with accented shoulders, build muscle unnecessary in the modern world, and in addition, attempt to display their financial security through fashion, vehicle, and other tools, knowing full well women find such things attractive. This game is played by both genders, and those between.”

“I dunno,” Samantha said as she pulled out a dress, and held it in front of her along her body for the other two to see. A pretty, classic, long black dress with sleeves and modest cleavage. “I mean, I know what you’re saying, sire. But, you don’t think women have a bit of ... uh, a bit of a bias, in this department? I mean, Jack never put on make up when he was living with me, and I think that’s still true.”

Natasha smiled at the young Daeva, nodding. “I agree with Samantha. P-People are going to be looking at us more than the men, at the b-b-ball.”

“There was once a time,” Antoinette said, “where it was the other way around. But, yes, I admit that in this modern age, the pendulum has swung in our direction. Perhaps it has been in our direction for many centuries.” She took Samantha’s dress, put it back on the rack, and pulled out another. It looked similar to the one Samantha had picked, but the cleavage was much deeper, and a diamond was cut out of the stomach to expose the navel.

Samantha looked at the dress, gulped, took it, and stepped around the clothes rack. Out of sight, she began to change, and Antoinette rolled her eyes at her childe.

“I still think,” Samantha said, “that women have been judged by how they look more than men, since forever.”

“Perhaps, but men have been judged by a larger group of factors, and many of those factors are indicated visually. And while those factors may not draw the eye with such hypnotic attention as a woman’s bust or derrière, that does not change that men are judged by how well concerning factors appear visually, and they are judged with great harshness.”

Natasha smiled to herself. Her boss was a student of the human condition, which was kind of strange, considering she hadn’t been human for a bunch of centuries. At first, she’d thought maybe Antoinette was a ‘woman for woman-kind’ sorta person, but the more they talked, the more it became clear Antoinette considered men with her assessments with as much rigor as she did women.

Samantha made a sound, almost like a disbelieving scoff, but she was too sweet to double down on an aggressive sound like that. “Example?”

“A man in uniform.”

Oh. Right. Natasha nodded to her boss, before peeking to the side a bit to get a glimpse of Samantha’s expression over the shoulders of the clothes bags. Antoinette’s example had frozen Samantha solid for a moment, before she started squirming again, getting the dress up over her shoulders. The ancient Daeva was too damn smart.

A uniform was sexy, no doubt about that. Could be anything from a tool belt to a proper military outfit, something about a man wearing clothes that said ‘I am self sufficient, skilled, and dedicated to a craft. I affect the world’ crossed a line from simply being attractive, to straight-up arousing.

“But,” Antoinette continued, “dare I say such a thing, I believe women do enjoy... ‘showing off’ more than men, at least in the realm of fashion. I know that personally, it will forever be a guilty pleasure of mine.” With that, she withdrew another dress, and held it across her front as she looked at Natasha.

“Um ... you could go t-to the ball naked, instead?” She stared at the flimsy thing, nothing more than hanging silver flaps that connected in loops to what couldn’t have been anything more than a string around the neck, and another around the waist. It was like someone turned a sling bikini into a dress. Well, Antoinette would have looked amazing in it for sure, but it’d look better in a strip club, not a ball.

Shrugging, the tall woman put the dress back, and removed something a little more appropriate for a ball. A single piece, white, with a single loose strap that hooked around the neck, before dangling in front of her to connect at the waist. The skirt was similar, a loose flap for the front and another for the back. Naturally, you couldn't wear underwear with a dress like that.

“Very p-pretty, and, um ... arousing for everyone at the ball, I'm sure.”

“Merci. I do wish to indulge in a little flaunting, but I am not sure to what extent. Elaine will undoubtedly flaunt her body, brazenly, in a manner similar to Jennifer, and she will be both my guest and companion. I would prefer to wear something similar to what she wears.”

“You d-don't know exactly what she'll wear?”

“Non. Elaine hopes to surprise me.”

“How long have you known her?”

“Centuries.”

“So, she says surprise, b-but you already know what she's going to wear, right? At least, can b-ballpark it.”

Antoinette grinned at her. “Indeed. I know what she will do, and she knows what I will do in response. An ancient game we have played, but we are both too old to change our ways now.” With a nod, Antoinette set the dress on a stool beside Natasha, and started digging through her infinite clothes for another. “She will wear something terribly seductive, brazen, and proceed to flaunt her beauty as she learns of what new Kindred have come to my city.”

“Sounds like a D-Daeva,” Natasha said, unable to hold back her smile.

“Ha, in a way, my student. But Daeva are far more subtle, and we play games of misdirection and controlling pretense. To be Daeva in the Danse Macabre, is to insure an opponent can never call you out on exactly what you mean by your words. Every sentence must drip with subtext.” She held another dress in front of, similar to the previous one, but shining silver instead of white. Natasha nodded, and Antoinette set the dress down with the other. “Ventrue, on the other hand, love to state things plainly, and back their words with power, monetary or political. Elaine has learned much from me, and I her, but she is Ventrue, and she will be quite bold and direct.”

This Elaine woman was starting to sound dangerous. Tash would have to keep an eye on her.

Samantha stepped out from behind the wall of clothes, and Natasha smiled in awe at the Daeva. She was so pretty! A little short, with shoulder-length brown wavy hair, and big, soft, green eyes she recognized from Jack. The black dress also made sure that her flat stomach and plentiful breasts were on display, in a tasteful but blatantly erotic way. It was a ‘come fuck me’ dress, and everyone at the ball would come to that conclusion instantly.

“It’s so revealing,” Samantha said, looking down at her cleavage. “I’m going to—”

“Blend with the crowd, my childe. Come, we have discussed this. Do you not trust me? You look beautiful.”

“I trust you sire, it’s just ... still hard for me to picture myself wearing this kinda stuff.”

Antoinette sighed, a long and playful sound, and stepped over to another hanging rack of clothes. She fished out several more dresses, all meant for Samantha, and all of varying degrees of tightness and raciness. The one Samantha had was the tamest by comparison. With a far less playful sigh, the young Daeva scooped up the dresses, and stepped around the rack again to try them on.

Natasha's turn. Antoinette pulled another rack of hanging clothes from the wall of black marble, out into the white LED light, and dug through the layers and layers of fabrics.

"Your son has removed a great thorn from my side, childe," Antoinette said, voice raised so Samantha could hear while she hunted through more clothes, "and my city's side. It is time to celebrate. I expect you to feed on someone at the ball, Samantha."

"Feed? I ... um, I don't know..."

"Come now. Did you not enjoy yourself with Jessy's ghouls?"

Natasha couldn't see Samantha through the clothes, but she could hear her squirm and struggle against her dress, and her old personality.

"I did. It was nice, being the ... center of attention like that. And, you know, the blood was ... delicious." A hint of wonder filled her voice, and Natasha grinned up at Antoinette. They both knew what was happening to Samantha.

"Think of how much more enjoyable it could have been, my childe, if you had let them do what they wished to do to you in that booth."

"What they wished?"

Antoinette chuckled, and found a dress for Natasha. It was just like Jessy had suggested, something with a super short, tight skirt, and a top that wasn't anything more than a hanging scarf. Tash had expected black, but the dress the Prince pulled out was a dark, rich burgundy. Natasha had never worn any clothes in this color, let alone a revealing dress.

Natasha had pale skin and long black hair. The dress would compliment that, she supposed, in a strange way. Sort of like how Antoinette had eyes so red they were almost crimson, and they matched her white hair.

“Yes, my childe, what they wished for.” Nodding, Antoinette handed Natasha the dress, and began digging for more. “They wanted to have sex with you, dear Samantha. It would have brought them great joy to have pulled up your skirt, and sat you on their laps, taking turns enjoying your insides, as you enjoyed their blood.”

More gasps from Samantha. Again Antoinette looked down at Tash, and rolled her eyes. The Prince had probably had this conversation with her childe a bunch of times now, and was having it again.

“Sex, in a club?”

“Oui, in a club. You were the predator, Samantha, the vampire. They were prey. If you wanted to, you could have hurt them to your desire.”

“Hurt them!?”

“I am only making a point, sweet childe, be calm. You were in a dark booth where few could see, and you had two gorgeous men, experts in the art of sex, enthralled by you. A small nudge would have been enough to push you over the edge, and into a rather enjoyable ménage à trois, non?”

“I ... I don't know.”

“The point I make, is that you were in control of the situation. You could have enjoyed every carnal desire you have, and not only would no one have judged you, I am sure Jessy's ghouls would have been delighted to partake in your fantasies.”

Samantha stepped around the rack again, and stood in her new dress, frowning at her sire. The dress was very racy, with only a thin, silver metal ring connecting a blue tube-top to her breasts, with some itty-bitty shoulder straps, and some straps tight to her waist that crisscrossed down to her hips, to attach to a short skirt with a split thigh.

“I uh ... I don’t know, you know?”

“Hmm.” Antoinette turned to face her childe, and looked the dress up and down. “Perhaps it is the wrong color. I could—”

“No, not about the dress. I mean, uh, I don’t ... don’t really want to be the predator, I guess? I mean sure, I could have went further with those boys. And maybe I would, now that I’m a little older, a little more comfortable with who I am. And this ... this Beast thing inside me, I can tell it ... it wants to be aggressive. I don’t know. But, I mean ... This is just between us girls, right?”

“Of course, ma petite,” Antoinette said.

Natasha nodded, and did her best to not laugh at Samantha’s word choice. This girly locker room talk was so silly to her, but she had to admit, it was kind of fun. With Jessy, it wasn’t girl talk, it was boy talk from a dude with boobs who happened to like dresses. And much as she enjoyed talking with Matt and Art, they didn’t really talk about this sort of stuff. Antoinette and her childe were the only real ‘girly’ types Natasha ever talked to, and she was quickly growing to like it more and more, especially Samantha.

Much as Natasha loved her friend Jack, she was pleasantly surprised by how different he was to Samantha in so many ways. Samantha was a fluffy pillow, content to receive everything thrown at her, and provide nothing but softness in return. Definitely a trait someone could take advantage of, but Antoinette was confident in her childe’s future. For Natasha, it was nice to have someone she could talk to, who was happy to listen, smile, and be tender with her replies. Sort of like a much calmer, gentler Fiona, now that she thought about it.

“I don’t really want to be aggressive with guys. I ... kinda like the idea of them being aggressive with me.” Samantha squirmed some more, doing her best to look comfortable in a dress she was clearly uncomfortable in, and admitting to a secret she was clearly uncomfortable admitting.

“How aggressive?” Antoinette said. “Miss Vola enjoys a rather aggressive pair of werewolves most nights.”

Natasha tried to frown, but it didn’t last. There wasn’t any point in denying it or being shy about it anymore. Everyone knew she was having sex with two huge, aggressive guys regularly, and considering how long the relationship had been going on, everyone knew it wasn’t a fling. And besides, while everyone else was probably only picturing little her getting fucked by two huge guys, she knew them for the cuddling, the laughs, the stories they told, and the confidence they gave her. The frequent sex was a bonus. A huge bonus.

Samantha met Tash’s eyes for a second before looking down, and squirming some more. “Uh, maybe not that aggressive. I’m too old for—”

“Natasha is older than you, childe.”

“Oh, right. Um, I mean ... I don’t know. I guess what interests me is a man who will ... hold me down a little during sex, and then cuddle with me afterwards.”

Tash aww’d, a little louder than she meant to, and Antoinette gave her a gentle flick in the temple, before handing her another dress. This one was black, and had a similar shape to the first.

“I am sure,” Antoinette said, “that we could find you a man willing to perform the former, and with great skill. The latter, on the other hand, is a difficult quest.”

“How about that Jacob fellow? He visited Jack once, when I was there. He seems interesting, and handsome.”

Natasha blinked at Samantha, several times, trying to see if she was making a joke. She wasn't. Any moment now, Antoinette was going to give Samantha a harsh warning about Jacob, which Tash was sure she'd given her before, but probably always about the Danse Macabre. Dealing with Jacob on a personal level was an entirely different minefield.

So, Natasha backed off a little, stepped around the other rack, the one Antoinette had pulled out full of dresses for her, and started changing. Changing, and eavesdropping. It's not like the two Daeva didn't know she was listening!

“Jacob is a dangerous man, my childe.”

“I know. I mean, I could tell that from when he visited Jack. And I remember your lessons, sire.”

“Then you should know that Maria, Michael, Garry, and above all, Jacob, are dangerous Kindred to be given their space.”

“I know, but Jacob seemed ... interesting.”

“He is interesting, my childe. Very interesting. Behind the bandage that covers his empty eyes, there is a deep soul filled with emotion and wisdom. He is a reservoir of knowledge, of experience, and of living poetry.”

Natasha gulped as she set aside her suit jacket, shirt, and slipped out of her pants. Never, never ever, had Antoinette described Jacob with those words. She didn't just respect Jacob, it almost sounded like she liked him, or maybe liked the man Jacob used to be.

“I sense a but coming,” Samantha said.

“But the man has lost much. The woman he cared for more than anything, died decades ago. I ... I do not know if Jacob has the capacity to be romantic with another anymore, sweet Samantha.” Antoinette sighed, and shifted some of the hangers. “And even if he were, I would caution you to avoid him nonetheless. He is a witch, or warlock if you prefer, and that vocation includes some of the most disturbing, brutal rituals you can imagine.”

The more Antoinette described Jacob, the more Natasha was getting Phantom vibes. It was obvious the Prince was trying to scare Samantha away from the deadly Nosferatu, but she was also painting the man in a powerful light. He was an imposing man, Jacob, but intelligent and wise. He had depth, emotions, and he'd been scarred by a horrible loss. He was deadly powerful, but also a leader, and teacher. What woman wouldn't be interested in a man like that?

A woman who'd seen the sick sort of shit those witches did in their rituals, that's who.

Natasha threw on the burgundy top over her neck, and reached for the straps to tie behind her back. There were no straps. At a glance, she'd suspected halter top, but no, it really was just a heavy scarf, the heaviest part meant to hang to the sternum, with the thinnest and lightest part around the back of her neck. With a ridiculous dress like this, every motion she made would have to be calculated, or everyone would see her breasts; it already showed off her stomach, all of her sides, and all of her back.

She already knew what Antoinette would say, what Jessy would say, and hell, what Jennifer would say about nudity concerns. ‘So?’ Laughing quietly, she pulled on the skirt, and stepped around the rack to rejoin the Daevas.

Antoinette looked to her, tapped a chin, and shook her head. “I thought perhaps the burgundy would work, but I think the color demands a more grandiose ensemble. And with your très petite physique, I think slim is your best option, without the rolling folds or ruffles that I think believe work with burgundy better.”

Natasha nodded, and stepped around the rack again. Ok, burgundy not good for tight little clothes according to the boss. Black though, black worked with everything, especially with clothes that were basically nothing but fancy lingerie. And, as she slid out of the burgundy dress and got into the black one, it was obvious the black dress really was nothing but lingerie. Unlike the previous dress, this one’s dangling chest was a bit tighter, and hugged her torso, using a single tiny strap around the mid back to keep it snug. Sort of like a halter top, if the intent was to slowly peel it off during in a strip tease. The skirt did a better job covering her legs, reaching to the knee, but each thigh had a split, with zigzag straps that exposed every inch up to the waist.

She came out, and showed the two women. Samantha looked at her like she was crazy for wearing something so revealing, since the top was super tiny, and hugged to her chest tight enough that the shapes of her breasts were defined. Well, at least it wasn’t the loose scarf top Jessy wanted her to wear!

“Delicious, Natasha,” Antoinette said, smiling and nodding. “Though, if you wear this, understand that it is meant to be worn without undergarments.”

“Oh.” She looked down at the thighs of the dress, and where it showed her outer thighs all the way up to the hip, completely exposing where hip met waist met stomach. She could go commando, right? A lot of the women Kindred would. Jessy and Jennifer, and Antoinette and her friend probably would.

The more she thought about it, the easier it became to see Jessy’s side of things. It wouldn’t be long before everyone just went to these parties naked, dispensing with pretense and just fucking the kine on the ballroom floor. Antoinette may have even preferred that, too.

Antoinette handed her another dress, and turned back to her childe. “Jacob will be at the ball, I imagine. If you truly wish to learn more of him, then you may talk with him. If the conversation turns to the covenants, or his Crone, or Crúac rituals, you are not to entertain such subjects. Understood?”

“Yes sire. What do I do if he brings them up?”

“Tell him your sire forbids such topics. He will understand.”

Natasha shivered as she slipped on the third dress. The idea of Samantha telling Jacob no was hard to imagine. Partly because Samantha wasn't the sort of person to say no, because she wanted to make everyone happy. And partly because Jacob was Jacob. Just being around the man was oppressive, the weight of his Beast crushing anyone nearby.

“The P-Prince is right,” Natasha said from behind the rack. “I've seen Jacob d ... d-d-do some very horrible things.”

“Horrible?” Samantha said.

“Yes. Those rituals he d-does, and the experiments with occult stuff. It's all very ... scary.”

Natasha came around the rack again, and did a small spin to show the third dress. A one piece that connected a black halter top to a very short black skirt. It screamed ‘night club dress’ that was meant to dance in, and fuck in, but the material was some sort of strong silk instead of leather, and it had subtle embroidery on its edges, silver thread almost impossible to notice unless you got close. Slightly fancier than a typical nightclub dress.

And of course, since it was silk and tight to her chest, it meant the shape of her nipples could be seen. Combined with how small the front of the halter top was, exposing a lot of her chest, all of her stomach, and all her sides and back, she felt very much naked.

“Perfect,” Antoinette said, nodding.

Tash frowned at her. “I thought you w-wanted less skin than the last ball?”

Her defiance must have hit Antoinette’s funny bone, cause the elder laughed heartily, and pulled out another rack of hanging dresses from the deep cavern of endless clothes.

“I am a creature of habit, I suppose,” she said. “Tell me, little Natasha, what do you think of, perhaps, Harcourt attending the ball?”

“Harcourt? The hunter who helped J-Jack?”

“Oui.” Without a care for the two women watching her, Antoinette started undressing where she was. “He and his two companions still remain within my tower, and a part of me feels that, it could very well be an interesting experience to invite them to this ball. Harcourt betrayed Jeremiah, and that alone will protect him at the ball. His two friends will be protected under that umbrella as well.”

Natasha looked down as she imagined the scene. Harcourt and two hunters, in a ballroom full of vampires and other monsters. Horny vampires, and likely horny werewolves and monsters. Well, it was true that Harcourt would be seen as something of an anomaly, considering what he did.

“Um, I think ... honestly, I think s-some vampire will probably try to f-f-f-fuck him, before the night is over.”

Antoinette laughed again, nodding. “You are likely correct. I am unsure whether to bring him, in some sort of likely doomed effort to convince him not all paranormal creatures are as based and predatory as his ilk believe. It could very well backfire, and lead to his death and the death of his comrades.” As she slipped out of her shirt, revealing a ridiculously huge black bra that made Tash almost roll her eyes, Antoinette nodded to herself. “But, I admit, to see a trio of hunters, disarmed and dressed for the occasion, surrounded by hungry, aroused Kindred, is an experiment I think I would very much like witnessing.”

Chapter 115

~~Jack~~

“Oh my god,” Jack said.

“Oh ... dear Lord,” Damien said.

“Now arriving, Mister Jack Terry, of the Invictus, and champion this evening. With him, Mister Damien Burksen, of the ... Lancea et Sanctum, and champion’s guard,” the ghoul in the tuxedo beside them called out. The crowd turned to them, clapped for a few moments, nodded their heads, and resumed socializing.

Somewhere along the line, Antoinette’s invite to the ball, which had included a ‘some skin but not too much’ message, had gotten mixed up. Or people read something from it that Jack didn’t really think was there, because he’d honestly thought everyone was going to dial down the sexiness factor for this ball. It was his mom’s first ball after all, and everyone knew that. And hell, there were some other new faces in the crowd too, freshly embraced Kindred from before the hunters had made their presence known. They’d yet to see a ball either, and he didn’t think they’d want their first experience to be ... this!

There was even more skin than last time.

Jack looked down at his handsome, gray suit, fancy and expensive as all hell, but far less sexual. Antoinette probably knew what he’d decide to wear would be woefully overdressing, and would delight in stripping him once she arrived. For the sake of saving time, he sighed, unbuttoned the jacket, and undid a few buttons of the shirt.

“Blending in?” Damien said.

“I guess. We stick out enough as is.”

“You’re right, I guess.” With a quiet groan, Damien also undid his jacket, and a few buttons. His suit was black, and decidedly sleeker, with thinner legs and sleeves meant to highlight his lean physique. A perfect suit for a Mekhet.

The two of them walked down the front stairs of the Black Hall, and onto the main floor where everyone was chatting. The grand stairs in the back led up to a balcony that circled the main floor from above, but no one was up there, not yet at least. There was a band up there though, or what looked like a small orchestra? A bunch of cellos and basses and whatnot, playing some relaxing classical music Jack didn’t recognize. The music would have fit proper ballroom dresses and tuxedos better, but something about everyone being Kindred added a certain atmosphere that demanded the ‘upper-class’ music. Quite the stereotype, that vampires loved pretending to be nobility. It was true.

Jessy wore what amounted to a bunch of horizontal leather straps, tied tight together around her body, with a lot of gaps between them. Each strap left a gap in the front, and a strap zigzagged through the ends where they stopped in the front, exposing enough of her body that nothing was left to the imagination. She had a fit figure, muscular without losing the hourglass physique, with surprisingly large breasts for someone so lean. She knew it too, and loved to show off; her breasts only had one strap across them, and it barely reached far enough across her bosom to cover the nipples. Their undersides were completely exposed.

Eric was on her arm, and the man was wearing black suit pants, and a black shirt that was slightly see-through. The first three buttons were undone, showing some of his chest, a silver necklace Jack was sure Jessy got for him, and he had a fancy silver watch on. Both of them looked like they should have been in a club, but he could see the clothes weren't cheap; not that club clothes were cheap, but ballroom clothes were a step above, price-wise. Fine silks, embroidery on the hems, luxurious jewelry, they looked like they were wearing a million bucks, a particularly horny million bucks.

"Really?" Jack said, frowning at her.

"What?" She shrugged at him, turned a bit to aim her hip at him, and pointed at it. "I'm wearing a thong, see? Could have gone without."

"I ... don't think that dress is meant to be worn without underwear," Damien said, eyebrow raised. It was true. Much as a lot of the dresses Jack expected to see tonight were probably worn without underwear, Jessy's naked front would have meant her sex would have been completely exposed. Considering how small the thong was, it almost was.

"That's what I did, last time I wore it. Though, I wore a pussy pastie with it then, so I guess—"

Eric elbowed her in the side. She elbowed him back. Jack choked on a laugh. God, those two.

Sighing, Jack looked around, and scoped for familiar faces. There was Maria again, wearing a proper, normal, ridiculously expensive, old fashioned white dress. No chance the disfigured Nos would show off her physique, not when she looked like a cracked, broken, wet corpse. Few Nosferatu came to the ball for that very reason. Michael, on the other hand, wore a white suit with shirt completely open, showing off huge muscles that almost bulged out of his chest and stomach. He may as well have had a tattoo saying 'Kingpin' written across his pectorals. He wasn't wearing sunglasses, but it would have fit if he did.

The witches hadn't arrived yet, but he knew it'd be a sight when they did, considering Jennifer and Othello were bound to show off. A bunch of the werewolves had already arrived though, and Jack smiled as he noticed they were wearing fancier clothes than he'd ever seen them in. Well, the Invictus were doing their best to seduce the Uratha into their employ. Money for expensive suits and dresses wasn't exactly the best way to spend a fortune, but then again, this way the werewolves were getting more involved with the city and its vampires. Even Avery was there, wearing a tight one-piece white dress that reached halfway down her thigh, long sleeves with shoulders, and the classic boob window. Very mature, and it fit her mature visage well.

Jack did a double take when his eyes landed on Natasha. Holy shit. It was already hard to look at her without thinking sexual thoughts, with everything he'd learned and seen. But now, she was wearing a dress with a tiny black halter top connected to a tiny skirt. If she'd been wearing a small towel, it'd have covered more. Yep, those were the sides of her small breasts, and the entirety of her back, and her ridiculously small waist and stomach, and thin, lean legs.

She was talking with Caleb and Noah, while her boyfriends were talking with Avery. Probably trying to, again, explain themselves and their foolhardy trip into the Hisil with Eric that Tash told him about. Jack wasn't in a position to judge, but Avery was, and Jack smiled as he watched the tiny woman glare and frown up at the two huge men. Neither of them were wearing suit jackets, but they had the pants, and their partly open shirts had some colors streaking across them in slick patterns, a cross between classy suit shirt, and something you'd find at a night club. Undoubtedly picked out by Antoinette, or Jessy.

"She looks so fuckable, doesn't she?" Jessy said, following his gaze. "God damn, just imagine that tiny thing on your dick. Bet you can barely fit a finger in there."

Eric grabbed his girlfriend by both shoulders and pulled her away from Jack. “Jessy, I swear.”

“Sorry! Sorry. I’m just so excited!” She bounced in place, one arm hooked behind Eric’s back. “It feels so fucking good to get back to this shit, you know? Even the fucking Carthians are here, and not being assholes for once.”

Right, the Carthians. Jack looked around and spotted a bunch of them. Joe, Mike, Tilly with her wolf boyfriend Mason, Marcus, Kathy, Jody, Debby, those he recognized, but there were many more he didn’t know by name. And of course, the man himself, Garry. They’d definitely dressed up for the occasion, though a trained eye could see the difference between an expensive, tailored suit, and an expensive, stolen one. Still, they looked good, and it was obvious they were making an attempt to play nice. Considering how much trouble they’d been causing the Invictus lately, border skirmishes, and Terra Den getting in Xnomina’s way, their playing nice here felt insincere. The Danse Macabre was a persistent pain in the ass.

“Where’s Fiona?” Eric said.

“She...” Damien scratched the back of his neck as he looked to the werewolf. “I don’t know if she’s coming. She wanted to, but after Mark was caught spying on the Prince, Azamel might not want her here.”

“Then again,” Jack said, “Fiona is Fiona. She might just sneak out.” The girl did have that ‘sneak out for the party’ sort of vibe to her. “Mom here yet?”

Jessy shook her head. “Nope. Natasha says she’s going to show up with Antoinette. And you know the host has to be fashionably late.” Her following eye roll made Jack laugh. Yeah, Jack didn’t really get things like that either, the social back and forth of impression, something outside the Danse Macabre that kind engaged in as well. If he got an invitation for a late night party, and it said it started at eight, he'd show up at eight. He knew he'd be the only one to do that, but being clear with the instructions on invitations was important, damn it.

“Jack.”

Jack winced, looking away from the source of sound so hopefully she wouldn't see it. But when he turned around and looked Clara in the eyes, he knew she had. Meeting her gaze got a similar reaction from her, a borderline wince, but she forced herself to keep looking at him, only a single moment spared to admire his suit.

He spared more than a single moment admiring her and her dress, though. The Uratha and Carthians loved to wear clothes that were closer to casual, and hints of that still came through in their evening wear. Clara, on the other hand, was wearing something far closer to what an Invictus would wear: a fancy dress that screamed money, and sex. It took every ounce of effort he could muster to not let his jaw drop, but he knew it had anyway, if only a little.

The dress was black, like most of the dresses tonight. Strapless, the one-piece sat very, very, very low on her chest, no shoulders or sleeves, and wrapped super tight to her body. Any lower and the nipples of her handful breasts would have peeked out. The bottom of the dress was only just low enough to cover her sex, and it hugged her fit physique tight enough that he could see every curve and indentation of her muscular ass. Her box-braids were tied together in something like a ponytail, and she had it pulled over her shoulder.

It would have been a simple, tight, black dress wrapped around her like a towel, except for all the cuts along it that exposed so much more of her skin. Her dress had cuts arranged in V shapes along her front, very specific and precise cuts that had to have been made for her, a strange combination of erotic and sleek professional. Most of her breasts were left completely exposed saved for her nipples, and her flat stomach was on display as well, showing off her subtle abs.

And she was wearing jewelry. Large diamond earrings? Whatever they were, they weren't subtle. And a necklace! He never, in a million years, figured someone like Clara would wear a necklace like this, large, glittering, and what looked like more diamonds. For the life of him, he couldn't help but stare at it, and how the large thing sat between her breasts against her amazing tan skin. He'd seen those breasts bare before, and damn it, his mind forced him to picture them adorned with the jewelery.

He didn't say anything. She didn't say anything. They looked at each other for a while, and only when Damien, Jessy, and Eric left, did Jack realize they were just staring at each other. Jack spared a glance for Damien, only for the man to give him a small grin as he disappeared into the crowd. Traitor.

He tried to speak first. "Did ... did you, uh..."

Clara chuckled, but it was quiet, and awkward. "No, I didn't buy the dress, or steal it. Marcus set me up." Marcus, a Ventrue of the Carthians. 'Set me up' meant he'd used Dominate to insure she was well dressed. Carthians could make money if they had to, but their covenant wasn't set up to take advantage of it. "I thought he was crazy, but he insisted people were going to be ... uh, under dressed, I guess?"

"You mean half naked." He did his best to not stare at her breasts again as he said it. But, damn, just saying the word naked demanded he look down at her body for a second time.

Which was her plan, of course. He looked down, and she smiled. He forced his eyes back up to her, and she smiled again, this time with a grin smirk. Yeah, she knew she looked amazing, and she was enjoying making him squirm.

Why did women love making him squirm?

“Ha, yeah. And I guess I am pretty much half naked.”

“Seems to be the theme for the party,” he said, gesturing to his own shirt and the buttons he’d undone. His chest was exposed, and while he was a small guy, there was a fair amount of chiseled definition there.

“I wanted to talk to you,” she said.

“Did you? I got the impression you’d want to avoid me.”

“What? Why—”

Now wasn’t the time for this topic, but he was just stupid enough to bring it up anyway. “I saw the look on your face, Clara, after the incident. And I remember everything that happened during it, too.”

She looked down, then around, before motioning for him to walk with her. He did, stepping out of the center of the ballroom floor, and heading over toward the wall close to the grand stairs that led up to the second floor.

“The look on my face?” she said, once they had a few feet between them and everyone else, with the music band closer to block out their voices.

“The look I saw on everyone’s face, really. The curse scared everyone, and disgusted them, including you.”

“Yes ... yes it did.” Sighing, she leaned back against the white marble, a dragon carved into its surface, and she let her shoulders sag. “I guess I wanted to see if you were ok.”

And that’s why you dressed to kill? To ask me if I was alright?

“I’m f—”

“You’re not fine, Jack. You saw the look on my face, but I saw the look on yours.” She leaned in closer to him, half squinting, half dripping with sympathy. “It’s lurking around in there, isn’t it? Inside you.”

He froze for a moment. Shit, he shouldn’t have, but that was enough for her to nod and lean back a bit. He’d confirmed her suspicion without saying a word.

“I can manage it, Clara.”

“Can you? That thing was twisted and cruel, Jack.”

“It just wanted to kill the hunters.”

“Did it? It gave the impression it would have happily, and literally skull fucked one of them if given the chance.”

The grotesque image of him doing something like that to someone’s head made his throat clench up, and he shook his head as he looked to the crowd. “Yeah, it’s twisted. But it wants what I want ... wanted, to defeat the hunters.”

She turned as well, looking to the crowd mingling as she stepped in a little closer, until her shoulder touched his. “For now.”

“For now,” he said. “And when it doesn’t, I’ll shut it down.”

“Jack, this thing is strong enough to singlehandedly mow down a dozen hunters, and fight a monster that kicked my ass, twice. You’re barely over two-years embraced. Do you actually think you could shut this thing down if it really wanted to get out?”

She makes a good point, Jack.

Shut up. You’re just a tag along. I’m the real Jack, and you’re a shadow. If you could take me over permanently, you would have.

Perhaps. Or perhaps I don't want Miss Tits and that witch Jacob getting in my way.

Getting in the way of what? There a secret you're not sharing with me?

Ha, nothing so stupid. I'm you, Jack. I'm what a Kindred can be when they give into their Beastly nature. This city will be mine eventually, and we're going to make some changes! None of this pacifist bullshit your boobs-with-legs girlfriend is so attached to.

You said you wouldn't ruin things.

I won't. I'll make them better! I'll show you a better way to live, Jack. Jacob's figured it out, but he isn't pushing hard enough for it. The only way to live is on the backs of kine, on their corpses. Seriously, when's the last time you Kissed a kine until they were dead? Remember how fucking good it felt, to drain the life out of them until they died in your embrace?

I didn't enjoy that, you sick fuck. I—

"I can see it right now," Clara said. Jack snapped his head up to her, and she pulled back an inch, meeting his gaze. There it was again, that expression on her face, fear. "You're fighting with it right now."

"I'll be fine."

"You're not fine, Jack. Christ, does Damien know about this, or the Prince? Do they know this thing's inside you, fighting to get out?"

He clenched his fists at his side, and kept his glare on the crowd. People walking past were soon avoiding him, and anyone who did glance at him was quick to look away. God damn it.

“No, they don’t know.” They probably suspected, but until he straight up told them the curse was actively talking in his head, he doubted they’d come to that conclusion. Clara had managed to though, so maybe they would, too.

“You don’t think you’re being overconfident, Jack? Thinking that you can handle this problem on your own?”

He looked down as her words brought up a nagging feeling from his gut. Ventrue hubris, sneaking his way into his life again, and again, and again.

“I ... I’ll tell them. Damien’s already looking for a way to shut this curse down, like someone else in the Second Estate did for Susanna, centuries ago. And Antoinette, I’ll ... I’ll...”

Clara frowned at him, and gave his shoulder a nudge. “You really hate the idea of appearing weak in front of her, don’t you?”

“It’s not that. I appear weak in front of her all the time.”

“Do you? Because I get the impression you probably just lower your manly-man wall, be emotional with her, and think of that as being weak.”

He ground his teeth together. “That’s ... not what I meant.”

“Uh huh, sure it isn’t. What I meant, Jack, is are you willing to look her in the eye, and say ‘I can’t handle this and I need help’?”

“She knows about the curse, and—”

“Dodging the question.”

He frowned at her, but it didn’t last. He knew what she was getting at, that he had a hard time lowering his guard about some things. His life as a Kindred had been unusually brutal, and he’d shared that with Antoinette readily. Now, he had something he thought he could handle, and he wasn't sharing it with his love. Antoinette was smart enough to guess he was holding something back, and she was trusting him to bring it up when he felt comfortable speaking about it. Clara, on the other hand, was content to approach him directly, and call him out.

Maybe he could use a little bit of that directness?

"I'll hold on," he said. "I'll keep it under control, until Damien and I can figure out a way to deal with it. I'll tell her about it, too, but I'll deal with it."

"Whatever you say." She folded her arms across her chest, and nodded out toward the crowd. "Well, you did save the day. Now everyone gets to party and fuck, all thanks to you."

He winced again, this time a lot more obviously. "No no, no fucking. I don't see any naked kine being Kissed and fucked."

"Yet. You don't see kine being Kissed and fucked, yet. I remember the last party."

"My mom's coming to this party!"

"Well, she's going to get an eyeful, I'm sure."

He shuddered at the idea. Yeah, it was dumb that he'd embraced the sexuality of Kindred life, but couldn't imagine his mom doing it. And not fair of him. He wanted his mom to move on, and he wasn't helping.

"So ... how is your sister?"

Jack stepped over to the white marble wall by the stairs again, and leaned against it. Clara joined him a moment later.

“Better, now that I’ve told her about Angela. But she’s still a ghost. She’s so unstable, talking to her is dangerous.”

“Must be rough. I can’t imagine how I’d have handled it if I ever ran into my brother.”

“You were close?”

“Pretty damn close, yeah.” The life left her eyes as she looked down, but it came back to her as she recovered. Not only recovered, but scooped up a glass of wine from a passing waiter heading toward her pack, and downed it. She downed a second, gave the waiter the two empty glasses, and took a third.

“You’re going to get sick,” he said.

“I’ll be fine. Just ... you kinda stirred up some bad memories. My fault, I know, bringing up your sister. But unlike you, I can use some nice alcohol to—”

“Now arriving, the Circle of the Crone, and elder Jacob. With him, Beatrice Damor, Jennifer Denver, Aaron Jones, and Othello Manu, champion’s guards during the assault on the hunters.”

The crowd looked to watch the witches enter the ball. Or, two witches, three warlocks? He still wasn’t clear on that.

Jacob was wearing a gray suit, something with the modern flair Invictus fashion demanded, but at the same time, it had enough old school flair that it reminded Jack of something worn by maybe a Roman soldier? Or even older, like, Greek? The suit jacket had something like a toga flap to it, and a sash. It would have looked ridiculous, if not for how seamlessly it was blended together.

Did the elder have a tailor? The idea of the eyeless bastard with his own tailor made Jack laugh.

Othello and Aaron wore tuxedos, though Jennifer obviously had a hand in picking them, because they left a fair amount of the chest exposed, no tie or bow tie, with jacket unbuttoned and under shirt unbuttoned to the pants. Clothes you could only get away with if you had the body for it.

Jennifer and Beatrice wore similar dresses, both in black. They were long enough to go past the knee, but each skirt was barely anything more than strips of black fabric, circling and connecting like rope. The ropes connected in the back, and crisscrossed in the front along the sternum, with thin slices of fabric just enough to cup the inner edges of their breasts and hide their nipples, barely, before tying around the neck, with a black choker. The only difference between the two women were the patterns in the dresses, the way the rope-like construction left slits of flesh exposed. Beatrice went for gaps that looked a lot more visceral and fleshy, harsh, uneven diagonal slashes. The message was clear: sexy witch. Jennifer's dress, which must have been made from the same starting point, had her straps all arranged in even patterns that crisscrossed along her whole body. The message was very clear: two sexy witches, different but similar. Considering they had similar hair and height, it was definitely an image. Anyone with a twins fantasy would be looking their way a lot tonight.

Zigzag, crisscross, Jack noticed that pattern in a lot of women's dresses. He didn't know shit about fashion, but it did seem to be a recurring theme. The kindred were dressed more formally, with tuxedos and classy suits, or beautiful — if dark — gowns. They looked good, and tasty. The Kindred on the other hand, were dressed to kill. Apparently, only Damien and Jack hadn't managed to put that together, but it was easy enough to undo a few buttons. Not so easy for a woman to put a dozen strategic gaps in her dress to show skin without actually going naked.

Then again, as Jack looked around, he noticed a few of the Kindred took his cue, and undid some buttons. Not their own buttons, they'd already been undone. They were undoing some of the buttons of the kine they'd brought with them, exposing the chests of their male kine they'd undoubtedly spent months grooming into fit, lean, strong sources of food.

Yeap. There was going to be a Kissing buffet tonight. Damn it.

“Oh. And arriving with the Circle, is ... Sándor Pavel, Begotten,” the announcer said.

That surprised Jack. It shouldn't have, considering how obvious it was Jen was manipulating Sándor into being her friend. But for her to bring the man, literally on her arm, was a pretty huge a statement to the other covenants. She had dibs. Of course, in the Danse Macabre, dibs meant shit all, and everyone was undoubtedly going to try and manipulate the man into their good graces. She was smart to get there first.

As the witches walked down the white stairs and onto the main floor, people gave them plenty of space. Much as everyone was giving Jack room out of fear of his rumored curse, they knew Jack, knew Julias, and knew the Prince. He'd become an anomaly for them, someone they used to be able to predict and trust, but not anymore, not quite. The witches, on the other hand, were entirely the latter. No one trusted them, especially Jacob. Now they had a Begotten with them, a nightmare monster, and one everyone knew was a deadly beast who'd been a slave to the hunters. To say that people gave them their space as they stepped onto the ballroom floor was an understatement.

But, much as they were giving them their room, they were all looking, and more than a few people were looking with hungry eyes. Yeah, the witches cleaned up good. And Sándor, now that Jack got to see him in a proper, fitted suit, was definitely a handsome man. A bit tall, with a lean, muscular figure, and enough width to his shoulders to give him an imposing mass; highlighted by the suit, of course. Jennifer knew what she was doing. A lot of the women in the crowd, who'd backed up to give the newcomers room, set their eyes on him, taking in the sight and presence of the monster, and how good he looked.

People probably knew by now that Damien occasionally fed on Fiona, and that it was a powerful experience. Sándor was a taunting fruit dangling from a forbidden tree, for the Kindred eying him hungrily. And, kine or Kindred, women wanted what they couldn't have, as if forbidden was tantalizing icing on a cake, and not a deadly decree.

Time to get to work. It kinda was his job to have everyone getting along. That job wasn't meant to focus on the covenants, but with Sándor in their group, it was a good idea he get involved anyway. He walked up to them, and Clara followed.

"Sándor," he said. "I'm glad you came."

"Are you?" he said coldly. It would have been offensive if he'd been looking at Jack, but he was looking around, doing his best to absorb the sight of almost two hundred Kindred and nearly a hundred kine all looking at him. He was distracted, and uncomfortable.

"Yeah, I am. There's a lot of people here who need to know Begotten aren't terrifying nightmare monsters ... er, well, you know what I mean." As Jack talked, Othello and Aaron walked off. Aaron found a Mekhet Jack knew, and began a conversation. Maybe about a book, given what Jack knew of the man. Othello, on the other hand, walked over to Isabella, of all people, and started talking. The beauty was wearing a corset and a gown, surprisingly making her one of the more clothed vampires in the Black Hall, though the corset had pushed her breasts together and up to the point they looked like balloons ready to pop.

Isabella was a lesbian, as far as Jack knew. Othello really wasn't the smartest man. Except, maybe he was? He wasn't alone. He'd brought a woman with him, not a vampire, a ghoul maybe, a black woman with very short curly hair. And she was wrapped in a black sheet, a fancy sheet that someone probably lied about and sold as a dress. One tug and the dress would come right off her, probably as planned. Whoever the ghoul was, Isabella and Hella both looked at her with the same eyes Jack saw on a lot of the women looking at Sándor.

“Jack, my dear,” Jennifer said, coming straight up to him. Her eyes slid away, fell on Clara, and looked her up and down a couple times. “Oh my, Clara. Dare I say, damn.”

Jack rolled his eyes, but he did look to Clara to see how she responded to the compliment. The werewolf grinned, a small and sly thing. Probably trying to figure out if Jennifer was manipulating her, or being sincere. Jack could see the sincerity in his fellow Ventrue's eyes, but to Clara, it probably seemed a little too forward. But that was Jennifer being Jennifer, Ventrue being Ventrue.

“Thank you. I figured, after the last ball, I'd be better off dressing ... uh, less?”

Jennifer nodded, smile growing bright. “Exactly! I had to convince Sándor here, and the tailor, that the party would require some skin.”

The begotten frowned slightly. “The invitation—”

Jennifer cut him off with a small wave. “You're new to Dolareido, and don't know the subtext of things, or people's proclivities. You'll learn.”

“You're looking great too,” Clara said. “Tits not hanging out this time.”

“Yes, well, I don’t plan to get frisky with the kine tonight.” And with that, she leaned in close to Triss, and nudged her cheek against her friend’s for a moment. Cheek against crocodile teeth.

Jack expected Triss to pull away in friendly annoyance. She didn’t. She didn’t exactly reciprocate with her own cheek rub, but that was just Triss being Triss. There was a twinkle in her eye, a touch of happiness Jack hadn’t expected to see. Angela’s death had fucked with Triss, Jack knew that much. Half of him had expected her to suffer another session of depression, like she’d suffered after Julias died, but based on what Jack was seeing, Jen hadn’t let her.

On the surface, Jen seemed like nothing more than a typical Ventrue manipulator, content to use her intelligence and beauty to control conversations and get her way. But, if that’d been all there was to her, Julias and Triss wouldn’t have let her get so close. Even knowing that, he still hadn’t expect her to be able to help Triss. Dumb of him to think like that.

He looked past the two girls for a moment, to Jacob. The man had walked past them with only a second’s glance for Jack, complete with a knowing grin, before joining Garry. While everyone made sure to give the old bastard his room, the Carthians didn’t seem as scared of him. Still scared, sure, but not as scared, since their boss was talking to the man regularly.

“How you doing, Triss?” Jack said.

“Better than expected, honestly. Was kinda tempted to stay home, but I thought Athalia might show up.” Her shoulders slumped, and she looked down for a few seconds, before recovering. “And because I’m an idiot, I thought I should be here if she does.”

“Right, Athalia.” Jack shuddered and looked around some more. “Hard for me to sense Begotten when they’re hiding. I couldn’t sense Mark, and I bet I won’t be able to sense Athalia either.”

“You think? Mark seemed to specialize in being a sneaky fuck. Athalia, I don’t know.”

“Good point, but I’m still not going to let my guard down.”

“Guard? Your mom invited her, Jack.”

“My mom isn’t the smartest woman,” he said. Everyone looked at him like he’d just insulted a kitten, and he rolled his eyes. “What? I love my mom, but I’m not delusional.”

“How’s your sister?” Triss said.

“She’s ... It’s complicated, I guess. She wants to leave, but something’s happening that’s making her stay. Or at least, not want to leave yet.” He almost didn’t say it. There was a good chance whatever Mary sensed had something to do with the unknown force sneaking around in Dolareido’s shadow, and he didn’t want everyone knowing about that. But after everything present company had gone through, he felt he could trust them, at least more than a week ago.

“Doesn’t want to leave?” Triss raised a brow, before looking past Jack to Jacob. “I’ll ask the boss about it. We haven’t had a chance to talk to him at all since the incident, but I ... I think we all know he’s up to something.”

They all chuckled, nervous, small chuckles. Except for Sándor, of course.

“So,” Jack said to the gargoyle, “I guess I should probably show you who’s who?”

“I’ll educate him.” With a grin and a small wink, Jen took Sándor’s arm, hooked elbows, and started guiding the man through the crowd.

People didn't avoid them as much anymore, finally picking up on the atmosphere that the witches and Begotten weren't a threat. Well, they were, but not a threat at the moment. Everyone was here to relax, and as the music played and people mingled, the crowd stopped staring at Jack and his friends like they were going to snap and kill them all. That was Antoinette's intention, to get everyone to settle and be calm around each other, something Kindred didn't exactly do naturally without some coaxing.

"You really do look great," Triss said, smiling at Clara. "Thinking of partaking?"

"Partaking? Oh, right, the inevitable buffet. You know I'm not a vampire, right?"

Triss shrugged. "Doesn't mean you can't get involved. Hell, you're a werewolf. Put your neck out there and you could have vamps lined up to have a taste of you."

"I ... I really should just say no to that, but Matt and Art, and Mason have gone on and on about how good the Kiss is."

"Any girls in your pack get Kissed yet? One of them you can ask?"

"No."

Triss grinned. "From the occasional girl kine Jen and I had in bed ... from before, I can attest that the effect is pretty damn strong, sexually speaking. Maybe give it a shot?"

Rolling her eyes, Clara couldn't help but laugh. "I'm gonna go hang with the pack. Jack, think about what I said, ok?"

"I will. I am."

Her following sigh said a thousand words. She didn't believe him. Well, she was wrong.

She walked away, and Jack and Triss stared after her. No need to glance at Triss to see where she was looking, both were staring at her ass and how the black dress hugged it so tight, nothing was left to the imagination.

Once she was a ways away, in the crowd and mingling with her fellow werewolves, Triss leaned in to whisper in his ear.

“Dude, you can’t make room for her in your bed?”

“I’m pretty sure she wants more than just a fling with me and Antoinette, Triss. She wants a relationship.”

“And you’re still dead set on that being a no? I think you two have a lot more in common than you and the Prince.”

“I love Antoinette. Like, a lot, you know? And Antoinette would never share me in a romantic sense.”

“I guess I’m just suggesting it, because it ... it’s really helped me, you know? Julias died, and I thought everything was over. And that damn slut over there,” she pointed at Jennifer, who was showing off Sándor to some Carthians, “has helped me more than I can ever repay her.”

“I guess I just don’t see it happening. Antoinette’s very possessive of me, and I kinda like that.”

“She shares you with her ghouls.”

“Eh, it’s not the same. She’ll share me in a purely sexual context, you know? She’s so ancient, sex and romance are two completely separate things for her. But, I know she’ll never do that with a woman who’s interested in me.” Never, never ever ever, would he get used to the idea that two women were into him. For all his Ventrue hubris, that seemed to apply only to his willpower and strength. The idea that maybe his looks and personality intrigued multiple women? Madness.

“Sucks to be her, then.”

“I hear she’s been getting it on with Jessy’s ghouls.”

“Yeah, but like you said, she’s looking for romance.”

Sighing, he nodded. Guilt sucked, and the more he thought about Clara being romantically into him, and him having to say no, the more guilty he felt. It really was a shitty feeling. Infinitely less painful than how guilty he’d felt over Mary and Julias’s death, but now that the hunters were dead, those aches were starting to fade. More subtle aches, like this strange feeling he had with Clara, were reappearing and growing.

“So, Jen and Sándor?” he said.

“Ha, well, he is really sexy. And he pulls off that whole dark and brooding thing super well.”

“But?”

The Nosferatu sighed, set an elbow on his shoulder, and leaned against him a bit. “Jen sees some similarities between him and me, after what the hunters did to the both of us. She’s planning to use him to help me get over Julias.”

“She’s too smart.”

“Ch’yeah. Not so smart I can’t tell what she’s up to, though.”

“Is her plan working? She making progress with you?”

“Eh, well ... I mean, not sure about her plan, but yeah I guess she’s making progress.” Sighing, she lowered her elbow from his shoulder, and stepped in close enough to nudge half her body into his, a sort of armless hug. “It hasn’t been very long since your sire died, you know? Not ... not long enough, anyway. Jen’s doing everything she can to help me move on, and she’s convinced sex is the way to do that.”

Jack laughed. Yeah, that fit what he knew of Jen.

“I’m gonna talk to Garry,” he said. Jacob had just moved on from a conversation with the man, leaving him open. “I figure now’s a good time. Less chance he’ll start a fight.”

“Need back up? He is my old boss.”

“Nah, I’ll be fine. Go have fun. Or, you know, keep Jen out of trouble?” Laughing, he looked toward the girl and the man she was dragging around on her arm. “She’s going to get him into trouble.”

“Yeap, she definitely will.” Triss nodded, and walked after her twin.

Jack smiled after her. It felt great, seeing how much better she was doing. Yeah, Julius’s death really wasn’t that long ago, not even a couple months yet, but she was recovering. He was, too. Beating the hunters was like removing a ball and chain from around their ankles, like Mary said.

God, what was Mary talking about? Lines that tore? Things in the darkness? Much as he wanted his sister’s ghost to pass on, before the situation killed his mom, or him, he was damn glad she hadn’t. He needed more information from her. Maybe he could find a way to bring her with him, out of the house?

He walked over to Garry, and immediately, the nearby Carthians backed off, keeping their eyes on him but otherwise giving him his space. Annoying that everywhere he went, he became the center of attention, but it was kind of nice having that leverage. This was how Viktor must have felt when walking around in his parties and balls, the feel of power and thrill of authority. An addicting feeling.

“Jack,” the Gangrel said.

He nodded to the man. “Garry.” How to play this, how to play this. “Gonna stop shitting down Xnomina’s throat any time soon?” Smooth.

Smooth enough to make Garry laugh. “It’s not personal, Jack. Xnomina’s been a pain in the Carthians’ asses for decades.”

“Yeah, I get that. Is it the money?” Garry liked cutting through bullshit, and Jack could do that. Garry also liked it when people came at him with a little aggression, and Jack could do that too. Not in the past, but now? Easy, with or without the curse.

“Money’s a part of it. Just because I got Terra Den working for me doesn’t mean I’m swimming in money.”

“You could be, if you—”

“Ha, what, conspired to take over a bank? All the banks in Dolareido work for the Invictus, in some way or another.”

“True. I guess we got a rubber band around your balls.”

“You did. I’ll punch a hole in your bullshit with Terra Den.”

Jack nodded, and as a waiter walked by, Jack scooped a wine glass from the tray, filled with red. A sip confirmed it was blood, and Jack smiled down at the drink as he leaned his back against the white marble wall.

“I don’t mind.”

“Say what?” Garry said, eyebrow raised.

“This economic stuff? Fighting over territory and money? After everything that’s happened, some scuffles in the streets, the occasional brawl, a broken arm here or there, and maybe some blackmail, sounds like a vacation.”

Laughing, the Gangrel leaned back against the wall with him. “Your boss disagrees.”

“Michael? Well, he’s old, and smarter than me. He probably thinks all this shit between you and him will turn sour, and Kindred will start dying.” Jack offered Garry a single, harsh glare, but only kept it up for a second before he took another sip of the blood. “I’d prefer it if Kindred didn’t start dying, Garry.”

“You and me both.”

“Then why are you pushing so hard?”

“Because your boss has been pushing on us for long enough. Before you were even born, let alone embraced, that asshole’s been in our grill, fucking shit up, ruining lives and causing problems.”

“Thought you said it wasn’t personal.”

The Gangrel snorted, shrugged, and nodded in Michael’s direction. On the other side of the ballroom stood Michael and Maria, now talking with Damien and Jessy. A business conversation, based on the expressions on their faces.

“It’s not personal ... mostly. Doesn’t mean I won’t take any chance I get to break Michael’s nose in.”

Sighing, Jack shrugged slightly, took another sip, and gestured to his boss with the glass. “Go ahead, if you want. All I care about is keeping people alive.”

“You’re still a Right Hand of the Invictus, Jack. If Michael tells you he wants me dead, what do you do? With that curse juicing you up, that’s a problem.”

“He won’t do that.”

“If he does?”

If he does, Jack could just say no. Much as Michael was still his boss, and had a thousand ways he could ruin Jack’s second life, Jack was confident he—that the curse was stronger than him. But he had to be careful. If he pissed Michael off, it could lead to any number of problems, from having his account frozen, to having an Invictus sniper blow his brains out, then set his body on fire before he woke up. Strong as Jack was now, Michael was still a deadly man to deal with.

“Then ... I’ll fix that problem, too. Been doing that a lot, lately.” More than he could tell the man.

“It’s pretty fucked up that you’ve got this curse thing in you, kid. I already knew there was something to Viktor and Julias, but—”

“Don’t,” Jack said. “Don’t ... just don’t.”

Garry looked at him, and said nothing for a few moments, before he also grabbed a glass of blood from a passing waiter. “Either way, thanks for dealing with the hunters. They really were a huge problem. And for what it’s worth, I’m glad you got Julias’s killers. He didn’t deserve to die.”

“Thanks.” Don’t make me do to you what I did to them, Garry, please.

---

~~Beatrice~~

She watched Jen's ass for a little while. Not like she stuck out doing that, when everyone else was doing it. Everyone was looking at Triss's ass, too. Well, Triss did have the bigger ass, and the dress, chosen by Jen, highlighted it nicely. It felt nice, having eyes on her, admiring her, getting horny for her. Some people noticed her freaky extra teeth where her cheeks should be, and the hunger in their eyes evaporated, the younger Kindred in particular. But, plenty of the Kindred — and some kine — didn't mind her extra teeth, or the snake eyes or short claws, and they watched her with brazen interest.

It felt good, to think about sex again. She knew she wouldn't be sleeping with anyone anytime soon, except maybe Jen, but it still felt nice. Lots of hunks standing around in really nice suits, many with chests showing or muscles highlighted in some way or another. Natasha's boys looked fucking great, with sleek shirts that really showed off their size. Lucky girl.

Garry looked good, too. Nice to see the old bastard playing nice, talking with Jack and not throwing any punches. Yet. She was tempted to go talk to him, but it'd probably feel kinda weird. He wasn't her boss anymore. She'd dumped him for a crazier boss, Jacob.

And Jacob, wow. The old bastard cleaned up good. He actually looked genuinely handsome, gorgeous even, with his salt and pepper hair combed back a bit so it had some body. He wasn't a muscular man, but he'd been in decent shape when embraced, and he filled out his suit well enough. And that suit, holy shit, she never expected her boss to have his own tailor. Dumb of her, now that she thought about it. Of course Jacob had a tailor. Much as he acted like he lived in the woods, the man had a bunch of connections in the city, thralls and ghouls she didn't know about, and probably a shit load of money in a bunch of different accounts.

Still, she didn't expect to see him wearing a suit that looked like it'd been made for a fashion runway last year. The odd, streamlined shape of the sash and skirt that screamed Greek or Roman, while still looking kinda like a suit, was great, and she smiled at the man's back as she admired it.

Admiration turned to nervousness, and she gulped down the lump in her throat as she made her way toward him. She had to ask about what Sándor meant, about Black Blood showing up. What happened? Why did he show up? Where the fuck was Elen?

People gave him his room, as expected, so catching him alone to talk ... would be damn difficult, evidently. Avery walked over to the man, Noah at her side, and she stared coldly at the old Nos.

Beatrice came to Jacob's side, and met Noah's gaze. He met hers. The message was clear. Avery wanted to have a quick chat with Jacob, and Noah was there to make sure no one got in her way, someone like Beatrice. At least she didn't sense any direct hostility.

"Jacob," Avery said.

The old man glared at the old woman, and looked her up and down a few times. While Avery wasn't dressed to kill like everyone else, the white one-piece dress with the boob window looked great on her. If Jacob was going to insult her based on her looks, he gave up after a few seconds.

"What do you want, Avery?"

"To talk." Her eyes drifted to Beatrice, and she offered her a small nod. Yeah, the woman wanted a peaceful talk, but she knew Jacob didn't want to give it to her. At least at the ball, she had a chance of making it happen. Heh, good luck with that.

"Nothing to say to you."

“So you say. But I want to talk anyway.”

Growling, the elder looked between everyone present, eyes hidden behind the bandage, and shrugged. “Yap yap, dog.”

“Not going to work, Jacob. Not going to let you bait me. I want to settle the animosity between us.”

“Us? You killed my lover, dog. And you still won’t tell me why.”

“You know she was fucking with the Gauntlet, Jacob.”

“And? That tells me nothing. Still don’t know why that’s a bad thing, and I still don’t know what exactly she was doing that warranted the assault you launched.” Jacob stepped in closer, and glared down at the small woman. Didn’t need visible eyes to see the glare, with how his neck muscles constricted and jaw clenched. “Was it a ritual? Did she figure out a way to bring it all down? Or maybe she was summoning something?”

“You know I can’t tell you. The more people who know, the harder it makes my job, Jacob. Can’t you just—”

“Just what? Take your word for it that it was a good thing, that you killed the most amazing person I’ve ever known? That you stripped away the best thing that’d ever happened to me?” His voice rose just enough that the Kindred nearby turned to look to them. Triss put a hand on her boss’s shoulder, a soft touch, hopefully enough to warn him to lower his voice. It was. “Consider it from my point of view.”

“You don’t think I have? Come on, Jacob, I’m trying to work with you here. I didn’t want to kill her, and Simon caused a shit load of grief for so many people. But he made the right call with her.”

“Simon—”

“Is dead, Jacob. He died pissing off some fucking spirits he thought he could take on. I lost everyone because of that asshole. Christ, he’s dead and gone, so can’t you ease up a little here?”

Jacob stepped in even closer, and Noah and Triss both stepped up, in case they had to jump in. Not exactly a viable option, considering Jacob could kick Avery’s ass, and Noah’s, and Triss’s, all at the same time.

“Tell me exactly what she was doing that warranted her death, and I’ll consider easing off. But we know you wont, so I suggest you leave me be, mutt.” And he was off. With a quiet scoff, the man stepped around Avery and Noah, and moved to the stairs that led to the second floor. No one was socializing on the balcony that circled the ballroom floor from above, and that’d make it a good place to calm down, Triss supposed.

“Beatrice,” Avery said, looking to her, “can you help me out? The pack wants to stay in Dolareido, but we can’t if Jacob’s going to flip out and try and kill us randomly.”

Triss snorted on a small laugh. “Try?”

Avery’s eyes settled into a hard squint. “Yes, try. Don’t underestimate the pack, Triss. Jacob may be one of the oldest vampires around, but he’s a vampire. He’ll always have that weakness, that solitude and inability to trust others working against him. If I send the pack at him, all of us, we’ll win.”

That was a terrifying image. Clara had been a serious threat to Sándor in the dream, alone, and even scarier, was how deadly the pack had been in the tunnels, fighting that spider monster months ago. Yeah, she had to give it to Avery there. Jacob might have an easy time kicking the ass of a couple werewolves, but if they all threw themselves at it him, especially the queen bitch herself Avery, it’d be a different story.

“Just, give him his space,” Triss said, and before Avery could respond, she walked after Jacob.

She'd planned to jog after him, but the moment she put some real impact into the balls of her feet, she slowed it down to a walk instantly. High heels suck. High heels suuuuuuck. Catching up to Jacob took a little while, but thankfully the man came to a stop once he moved into the East balcony. He put his back to the wall, away from the balcony railing, and pointed his head down as he brooded. Even with his eyes covered, the brooding expression was obvious, frown chiseled into his lean face.

“Boss,” she said. “How you doing? Haven't seen you for almost a week.”

“I've been busy.”

“Yeah, I can imagine.” She stood next to him, back to the wall, far back enough that no one in the ballroom below could see them. “Lot of shit's happened, and you haven't been around. I've been wanting to talk to you.”

“You want to know if I have Elen. You want to know if Black Blood helped me get her. He did.”

Sighing, she nodded. “Did you really let me walk into fire, just so you could have a chance of getting her?”

“Yes.”

Well, fuck. Nice of him to be honest about it, at least. “You couldn't have helped us?”

“I don't stick my neck out for stupid shit, Triss.”

“The great and mighty Jacob, afraid he might get hurt?”

“The great and mighty Jacob, afraid he might miss his chance to get something that’s got his attention.”

“Elen. The flesh witch. Of course she has your attention. Sick bastard.”

The man looked at her, and slowly formed a smile. “When I’m ready, I’ll take you to her, Triss.”

“Thanks, I guess. But I don’t know what the fuck’s going on. Why did you capture her?”

“Because she’s a practitioner of arts similar to our own. And I know damn well you’ve been wondering what I’ve been wondering.”

What she’s been wondering? “Wondering ... wondering if Elen could ... help us perform resurrection.”

“Exactly.”

She shivered with the word. Resurrection. A fantasy. A dream. It was stupid to think about it, to consider it a possibility, but she’d be lying if she said it wasn’t on her mind all the damn fucking time.

“You said ... that you had to kill a lot of people, just to get a small peek through to the other side.”

“Yep.”

“And even if you could get a peek, how the fuck can you turn peek, into reaching into the ... the beyond or whatever, to grab someone’s ... soul?”

“With a lot of experimentation and practice.”

“ ... Black Blood. You’re talking about Black Blood.”

The old bastard winked at her. No eyes, but she could see the muscle of his brow and cheek flex.

“The Prince isn’t the only one doing experiments with the crazy realms that lurk among our own, Beatrice. We’ve both been poking and prodding at the walls between realms for decades, centuries. This Elen woman is a unique opportunity.”

“Because she manipulates flesh. You think she could ... could...” Oh good fucking god. “You think she could be a regular Doctor Frankenstein.”

“Exactly. You told me about her flesh lair, Triss. Imagine the flesh vessels she could carve. She could make any body you could think of, and then we, you and I, could reach out, pluck a soul from the beyond, and place it within.”

This was a horrible place for Jacob to confirm all the things Triss had been suspecting. She couldn’t freak out here, get excited or angry or anything. And there was a good chance someone might hear them. Course, if Jacob was willing to say it, it was because he didn’t care if people knew, or he figured they’d have pieced it together already. Antoinette probably had.

“You think this will work?” she said.

“No.”

“No?” Well, fuck.

“No. People older than me have tried this kind of stuff, Triss. Cults as ancient as mankind have tried to reach across the barrier, to grab souls, and put them back into bodies. And every mythos, when you dig deep, exposes the folly of this idea.”

“Then...” She came around to look at him straight on. “Then why are you doing this?”

He grinned at her, reached out, and pat her shoulder. “Because, I want you to give it a shot.”

“Me? You want me to try something that you’re sure won’t work?”

“Not completely sure, just mostly sure. I’m hoping you’ll prove me wrong.” He pushed away from the wall, and started to walk back toward the stairs. “It’ll be a teaching opportunity. The best teacher is experience, after all.”

She grabbed his arm. “Wait! Jacob, please, for fuck’s sake, tell me what you’re doing!”

“Don’t worry about it for now. When it’s time, I’ll come for you, and you can start your experiments.”

“My experiments? The fuck makes you think I’ll be doing any experiments?”

Jacob turned around, and stepped in close to her. Too close. She tried to take a step back, but he stopped her, grabbing her arm and yanking her in close until they were almost kissing.

“Because I did. When Minerva died, it was all I could think about. Every fucking night, it consumed my thoughts, that maybe I could find a way to bring her back, that maybe the Crone would reward me. Every day, it’s all I dreamed about. I know it haunts your thoughts too, the idea that maybe you can bring Julias back.”

Fuck. Fuck fuck fuck.

“But, I ... I spoke to her, remember? The Crone. She said it herself, to let him go.” And that horrible, painful conversation was carved into her mind with a rusty knife. It’d be with her until she died, in every excruciating detail.

“And you’ll let that stop you?”

Ah, fuck, the trigger word. ‘Stop’. Someone ‘stopping’ her, getting in her way, blocking, preventing. It immediately made her want to fight, to be obstinate, to be a fucking child and bitch and whine until she managed to break through whatever it was stopping her. Stubborn, but not so stupid she couldn’t recognize it.

Still too stupid to not let it control her, though.

“No, I guess I won’t.”

The old bastard grinned at her. “I’ll come get you when I’m ready. I’m thinking a week or two. Depends on how long it takes to break her. Be ready.”

Before she could ask what the fuck that meant, the old Nos walked away, and back down the stairs to rejoin the crowd. She didn’t get to ask him about Mary. She hadn’t even got to ask him about Avery, and if he was really going to let the werewolf get him so angry. It did sound like Avery was genuine, that she wanted to fix things between her and Jacob. But, until the old wolf told Jacob what Minerva was doing that warranted her death, Triss couldn’t blame him for holding the grudge. Triss had been so consumed by revenge when Julias died, it dominated literally every moment of her waking life. And Jacob had known Minerva a lot longer than Triss did Julias.

Sighing, she walked over to the railing, and looked down at the crowd below. Christ, up here, it was just tits, tits everywhere. Big ones, small ones, tits tits tits. Most of the dresses the women wore had exposed necks and plunging cleavage, so, tits. And it was obviously affecting the kine they’d brought. Anyone with a heartbeat was doing their best to keep themselves under control, but as the night went on, and people got more comfortable, and drunk, it was easy to see they were getting aroused. Hell, she could smell it.

The female kine were looking at the female Kindred of course, but if Triss had to guess, they were looking at the men just as much. The male kine were mostly looking at the women, and some were looking at the men. She laughed and shrugged. Natasha would have found that interesting, the distribution of sexual preference. Triss, on the other hand, found herself licking her lips as she watched the kine grow more and more horny. It'd been so long since she'd fed and got off at the same time.

There was Vivienne, hanging out with some of the young female Invictus. With them was Carter, the older wolf dude who was staying at the same building Clara and Eric stayed in. Carter was a handsome, rugged, old man kinda dude, big and gruff. Damn handsome, in a 'I live in the woods, chop wood, built my house from wood, and can break wood with my bare hands' kinda way. There was exotic appeal in that, definitely, especially to a bunch of city girls like Invictus Kindred.

The female Uratha were getting a lot of attention too. Rumor was that Avery had a boyfriend, so they stayed clear of her, but the other girls were getting more attention than they expected. Triss knew some of their names. Erica and Brianna looked to be in their forties, but like all the werewolves, were pinnacles of fitness and athleticism. Monica, on the other hand, looked to be in her early twenties, and one male vampire was obviously hitting on her. The poor girl looked to be in a daze, and not from any Discipline. The air smelled of sex. Not gross sex, like a couple's bedsheets that hadn't been washed in weeks. It smelled of sex like a great cologne or perfume might. It was affecting the Kindred, and that meant it was probably affecting the werewolves ten times more, considering how stronger their noses were, and how they couldn't turn off their biology like vampires did.

She looked around her, and gulped down the rising sadness. She'd talked to Julias on this balcony. At the time, she'd worn a veil over her face to hide her mouth, because she'd thought her crocodile teeth were ugly. And, well, they kinda were, but most Kindred didn't mind. Julias had helped her see past her own infatuation with misery, and consider that maybe her second life didn't need to suck so much.

And then he died.

She growled to herself, grit her teeth, and shook her head hard. Stop it. Stop it, just let him go. The fucking Crone herself, or whatever that thing was, told you to let him go. Don't let yourself go down this road.

She looked around again, and the memories sucker punched her. It was this spot that brought it all back, the feel of his arms around her, the way he smiled, the god damn mother fucking sound of his voice.

If Jacob really was offering even the possibility that she could bring him back, then she had to try.

---

~~Eric~~

Good fucking god.

“Good fucking god,” Jessy said. “Look at these sluts.”

Eric choked on a laugh, but nodded as he looked around. “Um, yeah, I guess people did get a little crazy. Like, you know, you did.”

“I'm over fifty years embraced. I'm allowed to do whatever I want. But I see a bunch of neonates just putting their tits out like rotisserie chickens. And look at all these dudes, showing off their abs. No class.”

Eric looked at Jessy's dress, which was just a bunch of horizontal black straps connected at the front by a zigzagging string, and a thong that hid her sex. Then he looked down at his own, slightly see-through black shirt that was unbuttoned down to his navel.

“Uh—”

“You’re my date. If I wanted to, I could fuck you right there in the middle of floor, and no one except for five people could say shit. I have the power, so I get to flaunt! Them’s the rules.”

Five people? Antoinette, the sheriff, her sire Michael, and probably Maria. And? Oh, probably Jacob. Well, he was a scary bastard, and commanded as much respect as the Prince in his own, strange way. Eric was perfectly content staying on his good side.

“So the people at the top get to flaunt. People at the bottom should be more conservative?”

“Exactly.”

“I get the impression Antoinette would disagree. I think she’d prefer everyone feel comfortable doing whatever they wanted, sexually speaking.”

His girlfriend rolled her eyes, hooked her arm with his, and started pulling him around the ballroom again. “Yeah, but she’d still push for some kind of hierarchy.”

“All the older vamps are tops, all the young vamps are bottoms?”

“Ah!” She beamed at him, eyes wide with genuine surprise and wonder at his suggestion. “I like that idea!”

He elbowed her in the side, again. “You have a boyfriend.”

“And you have a girlfriend. Don’t think I haven’t noticed all the tits you’ve been staring at.”

He laughed. Well, it was true, but it was also true Jessy was staring at them as well, and more than he was. Though, as the night went on, he could tell that was slowly changing. Try as he might to ignore the smell of flesh and desire, his Uratha nose picked up on it all. His eyes certainly didn't miss all the breasts barely contained, or asses, or thighs, or stomachs; Jessy kept pointing them out to him. No matter how hard he tried to keep his blood cool, it was getting hotter and hotter.

“Eric,” a voice said, one he barely recognized.

He turned and looked at the woman, and then up for a moment as he dug through his memory. “Brianna, right?”

“Yeah.” Brianna was a bit tall, a black woman with short black hair straightened, and brown eyes. Quite muscular too, like Jessy, though her breasts were smaller. He kinda hated that he couldn't help but make that comparison, but Brianna was wearing a revealing dress, lacy, with shoulders and sleeves and a long skirt, but the lace made sure most of her body was visible through it. Only the convenient curls of solid black through the black lace over her sex and nipples kept it from being indecent.

She was damn attractive, and Jessy looked her up and down a couple times before smiling. Eric got ready to elbow her before she said anything, but she waited, grin barely contained.

“I wanted to talk to the both of you,” Brianna continued. “I ... uh ... wanted to talk about sex.”

Jessy's grin exploded into a large smile. “You can totally jo—”

Eric elbowed her. She elbowed him. This was quickly turning into an abusive relationship. If this kept up, he was going to have to use ju-jitsu on her ass. She'd probably like it, too.

Brianna blinked at them, several times. “I uh, meant about you two. Word is Eric has sex while in Gauru form?”

“He does,” Jessy said, grin growing again.

“I ... wanted to know, how?”

“How?” Eric said. “Not sure what you mean.”

“Well, it’s just that ... for the rest of us, Gauru form is damn hard to control. I know you’re Cahalith, and not Rahu like me or Matthew, but still.”

Well, he figured this conversation would happen eventually. Caleb had poked him about it, but they hadn’t actually had the conversation. Considering all the skin visible everywhere tonight, now was as good a time as any.

“Well, I guess a part of it is because I’m a city boy. Born and bred here in Dolareido.”

“No, I don’t think that’s it,” Brianna said. “A few of us in the pack grew up in cities, too.”

“Hmm. Maybe it’s because I used to fight professionally? You get used to keeping a cool head, despite being in a fight.”

“Maybe, but I doubt it. A lot of us are good at keeping cool heads when fighting, just, not when in Gauru form.”

He shrugged. “Not sure what to tell you then.”

“Can you ... describe it for me?”

“Oh fuck yes,” Jessy said, stepping in close and dragging Eric in with her. “The dude gets so huge, and then he kinda grows a di—”

Brianna held up a hand. “Uh, I meant from Eric, and I meant mentally.”

Fun time ruined, Jessy frowned, but hooked her arm with Eric again and leaned in close to him.

“It’s ... a powerful rush, I admit,” Eric said. “There’s been a few times I’ve lost control, but never with Jessy. With her, when I’m transformed, I can still hear my human thoughts. And they’re ... aligned, I guess, with the wolf’s thoughts? Same for the desires.” Well, this conversation was about to get pretty damn personal, but he was going to say it anyway. “When I’m in that form, every part of me thinks of Jessy as my ... mate. All those urges you get for the hunt in that form, they get sidelined for a while, replaced with this need to be ... to...”

“To pin me down and make me his bitch, literally,” Jessy whispered, leaning in close so only Brianna and Eric could hear. She had the most evil smile on as she said it. “It really is like fucking some sort of horny wolf, a giant one. Like, half of him is ready to fight for his territory or go on a hunt, but the other half is looking to fuck and make puppies.”

For all her jokes, Jessy grinned up at him, and a hint of something more was there. She’d caught on to the word ‘mate’, and after their conversation a couple nights ago, the word had a lot more meaning than it used to, for both of them.

Brianna raised a brow as she looked at Jessy. It was probably her first conversation with the woman, and considering the topic, was bound to be a shocker for her. Jessy was brash, brazen, and a lot wiser than she let on. He really did love that about her.

He really did love her.

“Why?” Jessy said. “You find a man interested? Cause, I mean, I’m not sure how that’d work physically. You girls get pretty big.”

Brianna frowned. “Not that big. I’m ... sure it could still work.”

As if Eric no longer existed, Jessy let go of his arm, stepped around Brianna to get on her other side, and leaned in to her, shoulder to shoulder. “Who?”

“Who what?”

“Who’s the dude looking to bang a big werewolf girl?” Jessy said. Eric facepalmed, but before he could say anything, Jessy shushed him.

Eric took a couple steps back, and let Jessy corrupt another soul. There was no stopping her.

But before she could get very far into spreading her evil tendrils into Brianna’s brain, the front doors of the Black Hall opened.

“Now arriving, Prince of Dolareido, and Voivode, Antoinette of the Ordo Dracul. Introducing her childe Samantha Terry. Accompanying, ghouls Ashley Ronald and Julee Hemmertin.”

Everyone looked. Guys, girls, vamps, wolves, humans, everyone. Antoinette was the tallest woman in the whole damn city, with white hair and red eyes. Even without the absurdly massive rack, there was no way people couldn’t take a moment to look at the woman. You had to look at her, if even only for a second, to know what she dressed like for the night, like witnessing a celebrity out in the real world.

Straight up obvious was the corset. Eric glanced over across the ballroom to another tall woman wearing a corset. Isabella, according to Jessy. For just a second, Eric spotted a little envy, and maybe a little venom to join it, as the Invictus Daeva looked at the Prince.

Antoinette’s black corset covered her bust, but only barely, and it really had both her breasts pressed up and together to the point someone could have jumped on them and enjoyed a waterbed. From the corset hung a skirt, except as she moved, her legs broke through many hanging black strips of fabric. So, less a skirt, more a bunch of thin, dangling slices of black that did a very, very poor job of covering her legs when she moved. Each step exposed her black — low — heels, and he gulped as he noticed from certain angles that, of course, she was wearing a micro thong. When she held still, she looked like she was wearing a black skirt. When she walked, staring eyes could get a glimpse of her smooth mons and large ass. And there were a lot of staring eyes.

It was a simple dress, one that screamed ‘I own this building, this city, and everyone in it’. It was working. Her two ghouls were dressed in tight black dresses, strapless, with long skirts. They were meant to accent the Prince, like living jewelry that proved who she was, and the power she wielded.

Her childe, wide-eyed and scared, followed after her, glancing left and right with each step. It was obvious she was doing her best to keep her arms at her side, and not cover herself up. As was apparently in fashion, according to the dresses currently surrounding Eric, her black dress was a lot of straps, connecting horizontally to a long front and rear piece for a skirt. They connected behind her back, around her breasts for a sort of tube top shape, before hooking around the neck.

The straps along the thigh that connected the front and back of the skirt, went all the way up past the hip where they connected behind her. Yeap, no underwear. Poor woman look so frazzled and awkward, and with every step she took, it was obvious she was getting overloaded on the sheer amount of skin everyone was showing off.

She was beautiful, though. Must have been in her forties, but had put in the work to get in shape. Jessy would—“Total milf,” Jessy said. “And embraced at that age? She’s one kiss on the neck away from getting wet.” She’d snuck back over to him, and he’d been too distracted to notice. As a great man once said: a penis and a brain, and only enough blood to run one at a time.

Eric chuckled as he looked back to her. Brianna had followed, but her eyes were locked on the newcomers. Yeah, everyone was staring, half because it was the Prince and that demanded respect, but half because four beautiful women had just walked in.

Five? Everyone looked up to the stairs that Antoinette stood at the base of. There stood the sheriff in a tuxedo, and on his arm was a woman Eric had never seen before.

“Now arriving, the sheriff of Dolareido, Daniel.” The name hung in the air, as if the announcer was waiting for a last name. Daniel didn’t give him one. None of the super old elders seemed to have them. “Accompanying him, esteemed guest Elaine, of the Ordo Dracul, Architect of Terror, companion of the Prince.”

Eric literally heard the shifting fabric of every suit and dress in the place, as everyone looked to the front entrance of the Black Hall. She was gorgeous, this Elaine person. His inner wolf told him vampire; made sense, considering she was the Prince’s friend, and a member of her covenant. He couldn’t tell what bloodclan she belonged to, but whoever she was, she had certainly dressed for the occasion.

Her black dress came with gloves that reached past her elbows. She wore black high heels, and the long split along the skirt made sure every inch of a long, pale, curvy leg was visible. It was a classic black dress, the sort you’d expect a lounge singer to wear in the fifties, except with a shit load more cleavage than a dress of that era could get away with. Open back, and a single strap that hooked the neck so the loose, dangling front straps barely covered her enormous breasts. A black strap wrapped around her waist was the only thing keeping the dress snug to her stomach and bosom as she walked down the stairs.

Long blonde wavy hair, red lipstick, and grinning brown eyes. If she'd had a long, black cigarette holder with a lit cigarette in between her fingers, she could have walked straight out of a film noir flick. Except for one very specific detail.

The dress was slightly see-through.

Eric gulped again, and did his best to not stare at Elaine's huge breasts, and the barely visible large nipples that fought against the loose front straps. Every step she took made them jiggle and threaten to escape, and despite the fact his girlfriend was literally touching his side, he couldn't help but want them to do just that. Well, Jessy was probably hoping for the same thing.

The fact they could both see through the skirt enough to tell that she was not only not wearing underwear, but that she shaved her sex smooth, only added to the ensemble. Yeap, this was Antoinette's friend, another bombshell sex goddess that didn't mind people seeing her parts. And here he was worrying that Jessy was going to corrupt everyone, when the real threats had just arrived.

"She," Jessy said, "is dangerous."

"You're telling me," Brianna said.

The Gangrel shook her head. "No. I mean, that's Elaine. She hasn't been to Dolareido in decades. I think I saw her maybe once, when I was just a fledgling. Maria and Michael avoided her. Viktor did more than avoid her, he outright dodged her company. I think he was afraid of her."

"Really?" Brianna said. "Viktor, afraid of someone?"

“Yeah, crazy, right? That motherfucker could take on anyone, but her, he put in time to keep his distance from.”

Eric frowned, but said nothing. He barely knew who Viktor was, just that he was dead. But it didn't take a genius to pick up on the cues he was seeing from Jessy and others, older vamps giving Elaine plenty of room as she came down the stairs to join Antoinette. With the two women standing beside each other, it was hard to not stare.

“Just imagine,” Jessy whispered as she leaned in close to his ear, eyes still on Elaine, “those two women in bed with you.”

“Uh...”

“You'd drown in tits. Death by boob smothering.”

“That, um, is a kink for some people, apparently.”

“I think I may be coming down with said kink. A shame vampires don't need to breathe.”

He laughed, and slipped his arm behind Jessy and around her waist. “Picking up kinks like kids pick up the flu?”

“Exactly. Probably the best part of these balls, getting introduced to all these new fashion statements, and seeing which stroke a new kink, like sparks starting a fire.” Nodding, as if stating a most obvious truth, she turned the two of them to look at Brianna again. “So yeah, I say go for it. Just find someplace with thick walls, first. Much as Eric is in control when we fuck, I can tell he's walking a line, you know? But your dude's a vamp, so I'm sure he can handle it.”

Brianna nodded, lifted her fingers to her chin, and held it as she walked off, deep in contemplation.

“Did you really convince her to have sex with someone while in werewolf form?” he said.

“Yeap.”

Well, he had to admit, the female werewolves certainly didn't lack for curves. But they were eight feet tall, and all the best bits were covered in fur. Maybe her form would adapt to the sexual stimulus, like his did?

“Can I ask who?”

Jessy touched her nose. “Nope. Just a horny dude who's into strong girls who can kick his ass.”

“Is he a dumb dude?”

“Ha, yes. Very dumb. A charming, dumb dolt, I guess. Kinda like a big kid.”

That did narrow it down a little. Kindred generally weren't stupid. A dumb, big kid in an adult body? Maybe Joe. Then again, for Jessy to talk about him without scowling meant it probably wasn't Joe. Maybe Othello? From what he'd heard from Jessy, Othello was an old, strong, lazy and dumb Daeva. So maybe him, but the man had brought a pretty woman with him. Heh, like that mattered to Kindred.

The crowd's murmurs resumed, only to die off again as Antoinette raised a hand, silencing the music. Everyone looked to the Prince, who stood by the front stairs, with her childe, her ghouls, her sheriff, and her friend. Time for a speech, apparently. Anyone else probably would have needed a mic. In Dolareido, people shut the fuck up when the Prince wanted to talk.

“My dear Kindred, Uratha, and Begotten,” the Prince said. Only one Begotten at the ball, but maybe that'd change as the night went on. “I host this ball to celebrate the removal of a great thorn in our sides. My love Mister Terry, with the help of the witches of the Circle of the Crone, and Miss Moreno of Avery’s pack, have defeated the hunters.” She nodded to Jack, to the witches, to Clara, waited, and everyone took the cue to applaud. “And, lest I forgot, we cannot ignore that the hunters were defeated in large part due to the aid of one of their own. Brace Harcourt unveiled the hidden location of the hunters, and his two companions Marge LeBlanc and Dennis Hemmer allowed the assault to proceed. They knew their masters were villains, and we should acknowledge and appreciate our human guests’ contribution to their defeat.”

Well, holy shit. Some more murmurs went through the crowd as three people walked in through the front door. The two guys were wearing some normal tuxedos, and the girl was wearing a white dress with big shoulder straps and a skirt that went down to the knee, zero cleavage or anything like that. To the watching Kindred, the three probably looked like very well wrapped snacks.

“Um, hi!” the black dude in front of his two friends said. Probably Harcourt.

Antoinette threw him a harsh glare, enough to make the human shrink, before she looked back to the crowd. “I have given them sanctuary. Until I decide otherwise, they remain within the city, and under my protection. Treat them as you would any thrall or ghoul.”

Any thrall or ghoul? That was a dangerous statement. Far as Eric knew, the Kindred had license to get pretty hands-on with thralls and ghouls. So, as long as the three hunters weren’t killed, embraced, or harmed in some nasty way, Antoinette basically just gave every vamp license to have some fun with them. And, the ball was filled with hungry vampires, who’d be very horny the moment they got a drink of someone. Unless the hunters defended themselves, chances were they’d be getting Kissed, and probably fucked, before the night was over.

Eric glanced to his side. Jack was nearby, standing with Damien, and while Damien was looking over the newly arrived Kindred and hunters, analyzing, Jack's eyes locked onto Elaine. For a moment, Eric figured the kid was admiring how fucking gorgeous the woman was. He wasn't. The kid's eyes were wide, as if someone had shocked him to the core.

Whoever this Elaine was, Jack knew her.

Chapter 116

~~Jack~~

Her. It was her. No doubt about it. As if someone popped a balloon in his face, snapping out of his memory to the present was loud and painful.

That was Susanna's childe, and Jack's great grandsire.

"In the name of peace," Antoinette continued, "these three hunters were invited to the ball to be shown that Dolareido, my city, is not as devolved as other cities with a Kindred presence. We are better than our baser desires." She adopted an evil smile, and looked back to the hunters. "Mingle with my Kindred, dear hunters. Be at ease, and enjoy the pleasures we provide, for they are many." It sounded less like an offering, and more of a command.

Jack's eyes flicked over to the hunters. Harcourt, Marge, and Dennis, three humans who were very out of place, but Antoinette was manipulating them into being merged into Dolareido, or at least not hostile toward it. Considering what she said, no one would be stupid enough to dose them with blood and bind them with the Vinculum, or kill them, and especially not embrace them. But that didn't mean they wouldn't get manipulated into a night of amazing sex and Kisses. And the hunters knew it, too.

But the surprise of seeing them at the ball was nothing compared to the surprise of seeing his great grandsire. Elaine. An elder, and a member of the Ordo Dracul. Antoinette's friend. He rubbed his head, seeking the feel of buzzed hair against his fingers and scalp, desperate for the soothing sensation. His great grandsire, alive, in the Ordo, and his lover's friend. Think think think.

There were no way this was coincidence. Elaine must have known who Viktor was, she sired him after all. She must have known about Julias then, since Elaine had visited Dolareido several times before, according to the Prince. And, if Antoinette and Elaine were friends, that meant Elaine likely knew about Jack. She knew he was Julias's childe. She knew he was Viktor's grandchilde, and her great grandchilde.

Why did she come now? There had to be—the crows! At the hospital. When he'd first let the curse out, and it'd summoned a legion of crows, that shit had hit the news. The Invictus had done an excellent job suppressing the fallout of that, but that didn't mean people hadn't learned about it. Or maybe Antoinette had just told Elaine about Jack's curse directly, considering researching shit like that was probably something the Ordo did.

She had to know about him, and she had to know about the curse. Did she know it spoke to him? Did she know it had contaminated his mind, had him half convinced he'd devolved into a killer, before he broke the seal. The curse's desires had morphed and solidified into a separate personality now, no longer tampering with his mind covertly, but overtly. Did it do that to her, too?

Jack snapped his head around. Where was he, where was he? There, Jen, and Sándor. He slid over to them, taking advantage of how Maria, Michael, Garry, and Jacob all came up to shake Elaine's hand. They were a nice distraction for Antoinette. She'd want him to come up to her in a moment, but he needed to know something, and know it now.

"Sándor," he whispered, once was close to the man.

"Jack," the monster said. He almost slid away, once Jack got close. Right, the man was a Begotten, and while other Kindred could sense the curse, and how it inflated Jack's Beast, Sándor could see it in all its twisted, disturbing glory. Perfect.

“Jack?” Jen said. Jack leaned in closer. Hint, be quiet. She raised a brow, but stopped talking.

“Sándor, that newcomer, Elaine. What does her Beast look like?”

“Her Beast?” Sándor, one brow slightly raised, looked at Jack, then around at the Kindred around him, then to Elaine, who was shaking hands with Maria. “Normal. The only one here with an unusual creature beneath the skin, is you, Jack.”

“Really? Uh, how about ... chains? Anything like chains, or something that could be tying her Beast down? Like, a binding?”

“No, Jack. The creature of shadow and fog, claws and beaks, fangs and talons and feathers, the strange malleable cloud that is the Beast, is the same in her as I see in everyone. Only the ... titanic monstrosity in you, is different.” Quite verbose for the gargoyle.

Frowning at him, Sándor took a small step away from him, toward Jen. And Jen didn't miss a beat, hooking her arm with his again, and smiling up at him before throwing Jack a 'sorry about this' look.

Jack managed a smile for her. It was obvious she was manipulating Sándor, so obvious that Sándor must have known, and Jen knew that he knew. It was kind of cute, honestly, how the Begotten was just too closed off and stoic to stop her from dragging him around like an arm candy himbo. And it was obvious she was using him as a tool to help Triss. The girl had a kind heart, despite her demeanor.

Sighing, Jack nodded to Sándor. “Thanks.”

He didn't wait for the Begotten's response. The elders were done greeting Elaine, and were dispersing back into the crowd, after giving the hunters some distrustful glares. Right on time, Antoinette looked around for him, and Jack met her eyes as he walked toward her.

Elaine's curse was ... gone? No chains? Jack could still remember the Beast from the vision, and how it'd been covered in chains until he'd destroyed them. The other Begotten had seen them on him, but hadn't called them out; a classic 'nobody asked' sorta situation. And now that the curse was loose in Jack, the Begotten were afraid to even get close to him. Except Fiona of course, but Fiona was Fiona. If Sándor said Elaine's Beast didn't look mutated or bound, he believed him.

As he approached his great grandsire, Antoinette, his mom, Daniel, and the two ghouls, Jack reached into his core, and did his best to sense what he could. His Kindred senses, his Beast, found nothing out of the ordinary. It did its usual song and dance with Antoinette, though now that his Beast was a twisted, cursed thing, what used to be a purely submissive gesture, wasn't nearly as passive. It bowed to Antoinette, but because it wanted to, not because it had to.

He could feel his mother's Beast, shrinking into itself at being surrounded by so many elders. His approach didn't help, and he winced as he watched his mom turn to him, freeze for a moment as her Beast shuddered at the sight of him, before her conscious mind pushed past it. The older his mom got, the better she'd get at listening to her Beast and Kindred instincts, and that was going to be painful for him, if he didn't get rid of this curse.

And maybe, just maybe, considering Elaine's condition, he could do just that.

"Mom," he said, "you look amazing." And he did his best to avoid looking at how much of his mom's skin the dress showed. Hard to do. He'd never seen her look so amazing, and as much as he could see his mom had hit probably ninety percent maximum embarrassment load, there was a bit of pride and joy in there too. She liked looking good, and having so many eyes on her. Once she got past the embarrassment phase, her Daeva blood would kick in, and she'd enjoy being in the limelight like Antoinette, Isabella, and Othello did.

Much as he felt he should be kinda freaked out by the idea of his mom likely having orgies in her future, he was too damn distracted by the tall blonde who'd jumped out of his memories.

"You do too! But, I look like a harlot." His mom frowned as she looked down at herself.

"Please," Elaine said, grinning and waving a hand with a small flick, the barest touch of a English accent coming through. "If you are a harlot, then your sire and I may as well dance naked in the streets."

"As if you have never done so." Chuckling, Antoinette walked past Elaine, up to Jack, bent down, and leaned in for a kiss. He gave it to her, drawing on every bit of teaching Julias had ever given him on how to manage a poker face. It was enough to fool his mom and the ghouls, but the three elders? No chance. At least he could mostly trust Daniel to remain indifferent.

Antoinette's brows furrowed, and she blinked at him twice, searching for whatever it was that was bothering him. He smiled for her, letting her know he realized she knew, and silently mouthed 'later'. She nodded, but a speck of uncertainty remained on her face.

"My love," she said, "this is Elaine." No last name, like her, like Daniel, like Jacob. "A Ventrue, and valued dragon in the Ordo Dracul. Elaine, this is my little Ventrue, Jack Terry of the Invictus."

Jack glanced around quickly before looking back to Elaine. If people watched too closely, they might notice Jack's behavior, and he knew he didn't have the skill to not give something away if everyone was watching.

The crowd had begun to mingle again, and the hunters were promptly surrounded by some very hungry looking vampires. But before things got crazy, the witches of all people, save Jacob, went over to join the hunters. Well, Harcourt knew them, so they were a decent familiar face in the crowd for him. More and more Kindred drifted toward the hunters, even the younger ones, all pretty excited that some hunters had actually helped defeat the threat. No one at the party had expected to actually get the opportunity to talk to them, and potentially, maybe even feed on them.

No one even looked at Jack or Elaine anymore. Perfect.

Jack offered his fellow Ventrue a small bow and nod. “You look lovely, Elaine.”

“Don’t I?” Laughing, Elaine tossed her hair back over her shoulder. “I was told that this ball would be less scandalous than what I would normally expect from my good friend. A lie, obviously.”

“Not a lie,” Antoinette said with a touch of laughter, “but I did suspect the joyous occasion would have my Kindred happy to show skin.” After motioning to the crowd around her, she laughed again, and stepped in close enough to Elaine that they were almost touching shoulders as they looked at Jack. Damn, they were tall. “Have the Begotten not arrived? I see the gargoyle Sándor, but neither Fiona or Athalia.”

His mom nodded with her sire’s question.

“They haven’t.” Sighing, Jack looked around the crowd again, then gave his mom a quick ‘I don’t know’ glance, before looking to the two elders again. “They might. Night’s still young.”

“I hope they do,” his mom said. A moment of silence followed, and everyone pursed their lips for a moment. The chance they’d show up was small, especially if Fiona wasn't here yet; Azamel probably keeping them home.

“Samantha.” Antoinette leaned down over her childe, and set a hand on her shoulder. “Go, mingle. Bring Ashley and Julee with you, and introduce yourself to some Kindred.”

Samantha gulped as her eyes went wide. She looked at her sire for a second, then looked around again. Judging by how she squirmed, she couldn't help but be intimidated by all the skin on display. Combined with her young Kindred age, it'd be hella intimidating for her to approach strangers.

“Um, you ... don't want to introduce me, sire?”

Laughing, Antoinette shook her head. “I introduced you to the Primogen. Beyond that, you need to make an effort yourself. But, I suppose this is your first ball. Find Natasha, and ask for her help.”

“Oh right. Natasha.” Nodding, Jack's mom started walking past, but not before stopping beside him and smiling at him. “Um, have fun?”

He choked on a surprise laugh. Good god, his mom. “I've done this before, a few times actually. And my date is hosting the ball, remember? I'll be fine. You, on the other hand, need a shove in the general direction of fun. You're not my mom here. You're a new vampire with powerful connections.”

“Powerful connections,” Antoinette said, nodding.

“Powerful connections!” the two ghouls said, and they pulled Samantha off, practically against her will judging by how she dragged her heels.

Antoinette leaned toward her sheriff, and whispered something. Jack couldn't hear over the music, but it probably amounted to 'keep an eye on her'. Daniel nodded, and stepped away from them until he was near a wall where he could watch the crowd.

That left Jack standing alone with the two elders. Ok, so, tell them? There was no way he could keep his awareness of Elaine secret for very long. They might not figure out what was going in his head, but they'd realize something was up in no time.

He looked at them, and tried to focus his thoughts. Hard, so very damn hard, when both women were utterly gorgeous. Antoinette's dangling hip straps masquerading as a skirt had let the entire city see her micro thong, and how little it covered. The corset, which had cinched her waist so tight it was basically a torture device, was ornate and beautiful. And while it raised high enough to cover her breasts, the cups that held them sat very well, and were barely existent. A hint of both her areola were visible along the top of the corset, and both breasts were pushed up to create the most arousing pair of enormous pillows he'd ever seen.

Elaine and her see-through dress cut through the pretense of wearing revealing clothes, and instead opted to literally reveal everything to anyone who looked long enough. The simple dress with its two dangling black straps over her breasts, and the long skirt with an equally long split, did look gorgeous, but the fact he could see through it added an air of command that he recognized as very Ventrue. And she was almost as tall as Antoinette, with huge breasts, a tight waist, and wide hips. If she'd bleached her hair and put on red contacts, she'd have looked pretty damn close to the Prince.

Both sumptuous women were looking at him, Antoinette with a hint of confusion, and Elaine with some obvious intrigue. She looked him up and down, and slowly licked her lips as her eyes lingered on his stomach.

“Your little Ventrue,” Elaine said, voice dark and husky, “is a delicious thing.”

“Is he not?” After giving Jack a wicked grin, Antoinette motioned for a nearby waitress to join them. Soon, the three of them had glasses in their hands, and were sipping blood, nonchalant and relaxed. They weren’t relaxed. The three of them were trying to figure out what was going on, without saying it. Fucking Danse Macabre.

“Thank you,” he said to his great grandsire. “I ... understand that you’ve been friends with the Prince for a long time?”

“Centuries.” She took a step closer to him, then another, and once she was almost close enough to touch him with her shoulders, she started to slowly walk around him. She may not have had a foot of height on him like the Prince did, but she still had good eight inches; more, with the heels. “She speaks highly of you.”

He tracked her with his eyes, but didn’t turn his head to follow her. Couldn’t show weakness to a fellow Ventrue, or he’d be asking for trouble.

“She’s the best thing to ever happen to me,” he said.

Elaine crooned as she came back around to the front of him, and stood shoulder to shoulder with the Prince. “You two are utterly adorable together. I hope to get to see more of you. A lot more.”

And there it was, what Antoinette warned him about. The sly grin. The direct eye contact, with another lick of her lips. A slide of her fingers over her ear to adjust her hair. She’d stuck her hip out more than she needed to, and as she folded her arms under her bosom to relax, one arm out at the elbow holding her glass, she made sure to hug her breasts as she did it. The body language was blatant: look at me, I am beautiful, and you want me.

Well, she certainly was beautiful, but he wouldn't touch her with a ten foot pole if Antoinette didn't want him to. Kinda the whole deal with a trusting relationship. But the fact Antoinette had basically given him permission to invite Elaine into their bed, and had shared stories with him of the naughty things she'd done with her old friend, put a wholly different spin on the situation. A beautiful, half-naked curvy woman was hitting on him, and his girlfriend liked the idea of having her in their bed. Antoinette, naked, breasts pressed to Elaine's, both of them wriggling on him, writhing, and—

God damn it, it sucked being a man, sometimes. Even without the Blush of Life, his dick was trying to lead the show, and it demanded more boobs. Good fucking god, focus! Do not listen to the dick. The dick is not your friend. The dick wants immediate satisfaction, and the consequences be damned.

"I ... can't say I'd mind that," he said. Ok, yes, that was dangerously close to asking her to join him and the Prince. Not quite, but almost. Christ, asking a vampire, half a millennium old, to join him for a threesome? Or ... fivesome? She's your great grandsire for fuck's sake. Susanna's childe! Be more concerned with how she got rid of the curse, of her possible motivations for coming here, not how to get that dress off her.

"Neither would I," Antoinette said. She stepped up behind him, and while she held her glass of blood with one hand, the other reached down, traced along his buzzed hair, down his neck, down his chest, and down to his exposed abs where his shirt was open.

Oh god, he was squirming. Squirming squirming, like the first night he spoke to Antoinette in Bloodlust. It didn't matter that the curse had given him the strength of an elder, and that in a contest of pure strength, he felt he could probably win against most of the elders in the room, if not all. But Elaine was a woman, an older one at that, with centuries of all sorts of experience. He was a child compared to her, and to be the target of her flirting, and Antoinette's as well, was making him wriggle like a worm on a hook.

Jack gulped down another sip of his drink, did his best to not stare at Elaine's breasts through her dress, and looked up at Antoinette beside him. Did she know who Elaine really was? It didn't look like it. Should he say it? No, not here in the middle of the ballroom floor.

"Um..." Shit. Get control of your words. "I wanted to ask, what brings you to Dolareido, Elaine? Experiments for the Ordo?"

She grinned at him as she watched him. Almost like an evil scientist, complete with evil smile, she kept her eyes on him, taking mental notes of him. If she'd had a pad in her hand and a white lab coat, it'd have fit perfectly.

"The Prince's delving into the world of ephemera is of great interest to many in my order. I would love to see what she has learned lately."

"That's ... not it." Ugh, he shouldn't have said it. He should have just nodded and smiled, pretending to believe her. But it would have been written on his face that he didn't believe her, anyway. Better to at least admit that he knew something.

Elaine's smile changed. It didn't disappear, but it did change, no longer the playfully evil PhD scientist, and now something far more serious. It was the sort of smile Michael put on when he was negotiating.

"Oh?"

"You're here for something else." He quickly glanced to Antoinette, still behind him, but she looked intrigued more than anything.

“Am I?” The sparkle in Elaine’s eye announced her excitement that he had the balls to confront her like this. “Then do tell, Jack Terry. What am I here for?”

So much for not bringing this topic up in the middle of the ballroom floor. Ugh, being surrounded by beautiful women did a number on his thinking ability.

“I—” No. Wait. Be smart about this. For once, stop being direct and honest about things, and try playing the game a bit. “Let’s talk after the ball?”

“Oh. Dangling a carrot in front of me?” Elaine laughed, reached out, and touched his shoulder. “Very well. I await with bated breath. Ann, I shall rejoin you in a moment or three? I wish to speak with that blasted sheriff of yours.”

“Please do, Elaine.”

With a small nod, Elaine grinned at Jack again, gave Antoinette a proper smile, and walked off in search of the sheriff.

“Why does she want to talk to Daniel?” Jack said.

“She has been interested in my sheriff for many decades.”

“He doesn’t reciprocate?”

“He does not reciprocate with anyone.” Shrugging, Antoinette stepped around him again, and smiled down at him. “You believe Elaine wishes to learn more of your curse.”

“I assume you told her about it. Or that she’s here to look into whatever summoned those crows that showed up on the news.”

“I did tell her, weeks ago. I trust her with much, my love. Though, I would trust her with my life, before I trusted her with all my secrets; professional rivalry, you see. Many in the Ordo have dealt with strange phenomena, such as this curse that plagues you.”

“Yeah, I would have told her too, if I were you.” Sighing, he looked down, and stared at his shoes. How to handle this? What to do?

“Something bothers you, my love, something to do with Elaine. What is it? If she is being too direct about her desire to partake of you sexually, that—”

“No no, that’s not it. Er, well, I mean ... I got the impression she enjoyed making me squirm.” He couldn’t help but smile as he looked up at his love. “Easy to see how you two get along.”

“Ah oui. Birds of a feather.” She leaned down, and kissed him proper, lips to lips. And of course, she didn’t close her eyes when she did, keeping them open a crack, until he eventually closed his. “If it is not her sexuality that has frazzled you, what has? It seemed as if you knew something, something I do not.”

He could keep it a secret. Antoinette wouldn’t even hold it against him if he did, not really. The Danse Macabre was played by everyone, and that meant he should always make decisions with that in mind. But now that Julias was gone, he didn’t have anyone to come to with this. Everyone else was a friend, but Antoinette was a genuine force, a powerful figure in the Danse, and most of all, someone whose motivations he trusted.

“It can wait. Tell you later tonight? She can come, too.” Might as well tell them both, since Antoinette trusted Elaine so much.

“I suppose I must acquiesce.” Laughing again, she kissed his ear, and started to walk. He was expected to follow, and he did. After all the shit that’d happened to him the past few months, he was damn happy to shut off his brain for a while, and do whatever Antoinette wanted.

Except, he couldn't stop thinking about Elaine. And sure, some of that was because she'd basically offered herself up to him and Antoinette, sexually speaking. But his thoughts kept pulling to the elephant in the room: she was his great grandsire, and her curse was gone. Great grandsire! Curse, gone!

He settled his mind for a moment, and waited for the twisted thing in his guts to speak up. Nothing. He was sure the curse would start talking, but it said nothing. Afraid, maybe, of Elaine? She was a walking, talking example of someone from his bloodline who no longer had the curse; assuming it was the woman from his vision, and not some identical twin. It damn well better be afraid. Now that the hunters were gone, he didn't need the curse.

He looked to Elaine again, who had found Daniel, and was proceeding to get up in his face until she was almost nose to nose with him. Daniel wouldn't back down, but it was clear he wasn't interested, or his poker face was amazing. Considering how gorgeous Elaine was, Jack bet on the former.

Antoinette did her rounds. She always made sure to check up on every single Kindred she could whenever she hosted, or came to a ball. Maybe it was to personally insure every vampire in her city was afraid of her; a little fear was healthy. Maybe it was so she would always be able to identify people by their faces if the need ever arose. Maybe it was because she genuinely enjoyed getting to personally meet every single Kindred in her city. He couldn't imagine it being that, but the fuck did he know, antisocial as he was.

They found his mom after a while, Ashley and Julee sticking with her like cute bodyguards. Natasha, Arturo, and Matthew were introducing her to the rest of the Uratha. And the Uratha, were getting quite drunk.

"Jack!" his mom said, joining him in what seemed like an effort to escape some heavy gazes. While the Kindred at the ball weren't Blushing Life, so they could keep their hormones out of the picture, the Uratha had no such option. When a woman in a revealing dress starts talking to you, he couldn't blame any dude — or gal — from kinda staring.

“Mom. I see you met Avery, Matthew, Arturo, Monica, Brianna, Caleb, Noah, Clara, Erica, Carter, and Mason — and Tilly.” Tilly, dressed in a red dress that hugged her body so tight, every curve was visible, stood with Mason, a grin on her face. At least, until she saw him. The grin vanished, replaced with a mix of trepidation and concern. Another vampire who was afraid of him.

There were a few more in the pack, but they weren't there, out mingling with the rest of the crowd.

Avery smirked at him. “Think you can charm me by memorizing our names?”

“It's a start, isn't it?” He returned the woman's smirk, before looking to Antoinette.

“Avery,” the Prince said, “I hope you and your family are enjoying the ball.”

“We are,” she said. “Jacob's still being an asshole though. I'm trying, Prince, really trying to make nice and play nice, but that fucker's going to throw a punch eventually.”

Frowning, Jack looked around until he spotted Jacob. He was speaking with Beatrice again, and the rest of his witches, who'd left the hunters now. Sándor wasn't far off, but Jen had let him go, probably so she could speak with her fellow witches and her boss. That might have been a mistake, considering several women had taken the opportunity to approach the Begotten now. Jack would have been tempted to save him, but it was clear that the women were getting nowhere, unable to break the man's cold exterior.

He looked around until he found Damien. He was with Jessy and Eric, and he looked a bit sad. No Fiona yet. Maybe no Fiona at all. Much as that'd suck, he was glad Athalia wasn't—

“Now arriving, Begotten Fiona Young, and Begotten Athalia Gardner.”

Antoinette threw up a hand, and somehow, someone somewhere saw the cue, and stopped the band. Everyone froze and turned. Just like when Antoinette arrived, the silence was deafening, the only sound the rubbing of fabrics as everyone looked at the front door. Athalia, and Fiona.

Damn it.

---

~~Damien~~

He raised his head, looked to the door, and smiled.

Fiona came down the stairs a little faster than was probably expected. No slow, sexy walk for her. She bounced the whole way down, which of course, was damn sexy in its own way. In the tight red dress, it meant lots and lots of jiggling. Red? Darker. Burgundy? It contrasted her pale skin and freckles beautifully, and her big mountain of frizzy red hair matched it nicely as her curls sat on her bare shoulders. The dress had ruffled off-shoulder straps, and the chest hugged her breasts tight with cups of the thin fabric that showed the shape of her nipples. The skirt was long, but the split nearly reached her hip. She had burgundy shoes, too.

No way did she have clothes like that lying around. Someone had to help her get those. Maybe Athalia? Fiona had worn a purple dress to the last party, something classy but with plenty of cleavage, and an open back. That dress had hung loosely, but the burgundy thing she was wearing was a lot tighter, and was actively pressing her breasts up and together. As she practically hopped down the stairs, her breasts bounced up and down on top of their cups, to they point they almost leapt out of them. Lord, give him strength.

“Damien!” she called out, fully ignoring the fact the ball had gone quiet. She jogged over to him, nearly tripped in her heels, recovered, and continued. Once she got to him, she threw her arms around him and pulled him down for a kiss. Not a small peck on the cheek, but a big kiss, long, dramatic, and one that demanded he hug her in return, half just to keep from falling over. His hands found her naked back, and he groaned quietly into her lips.

“Fiona,” he said once she released him. “I’m glad you came. Did Azamel get in the way?”

“Nae! She was angry, sure, but nae angry enough to stop me. We’re late cause I had to convince Athalia to come.”

Damien slowly lifted his gaze from her, to Athalia, and did his best to keep a frown off his face. He succeeded, but he knew Fiona could see the coldness set in his eyes. He felt it, too.

Athalia wore a black dress, and while Damien would have expected a black dress on Athalia, something meant for mourning, this one was not. It was gorgeous, a strapless, tight thing with some ruffles along its front and cleavage. The skirt reached her ankles, no split, and the cleavage wasn’t ridiculous like everyone else’s tonight. Modest, by Dolareido standards. Her long black hair was tied into a braid behind her head, and her eyes were just as cold as Damien’s felt.

She didn’t want to be here.

With a slow breath, Athalia took a step down the stairs. The clack of her heels echoed in the silence. With each step, she glared around at the crowd, as if daring them to say something, daring them to confront her, daring them to make something of her arrival. No one said a word. No one moved. The only movement was Daniel, who stepped away from Elaine, and joined Athalia at the bottom of the stairs. For a moment, Damien thought his fellow Mekhet might attack her, cut her to bits, or kick her out. But, a small glimpse of his eyes past his glasses showed something Damien had never seen on the man, ever, except when Lucas had held Tash hostage. Compassion.

Daniel held out a hand for her. With a heavy sigh, she took it.

Just when everyone started to relax, someone else stepped out from the crowd. Samantha. Oh no. Damien stared at the young Daeva as she made her way across the ballroom floor, dripping of anxiety and fear. Jack came up behind her, but she turned and glared at him. For all her obvious fear, she wanted to do this alone, that much was clear. Poor Jack. The kid backed off, and stood with Antoinette again.

Antoinette. Damien had almost forgotten about her in the moment, but when he looked at her, he could see a small smile on her lips, her eyes locked on her childe. Pride, in her childe and the courage she'd mustered. All Samantha's courage did was make Damien expect the worst, but he was Mekhet, that was his nature. But, that awareness didn't mean he was about to lower his guard, as the fledgling Daeva approached the shadow monster.

"Athalia," she said, once she was close enough. She had to look up to meet the monster's gaze. "I'm Samantha Terry." The ballroom was completely silent, no movement, no music, and everyone could hear their words clearly.

"... I see." Athalia's gaze lowered for a few, long, painful seconds, before meeting the vampire's again. She opened her mouth, ready to say something, but the words died in her throat. Eye contact died seconds later, and her eyes fell again as her shoulders slumped.

Ten seconds went by. Ten long, horrible seconds, the only sounds the breathing of those with working lungs in the ball. Ten seconds of Athalia, frozen, staring at the floor, while Samantha looked at her.

Samantha spread her arms, reached out, and hugged the woman.

The tension in the room melted away. A lot of held breaths released, and people began to stir around, quiet whispers turning into murmured conversations, as people watched the strange scene. Samantha whispered to Athalia, and combined with the returned noise, Damien couldn't make it out. But the look of palpable relief on Athalia's face said more than words ever could.

Samantha was too nice, way too nice, nicer than even Fiona, and that was saying a lot. But, maybe that's what the city needed, because after what happened less than a week ago, it was amazing to see Samantha crack Athalia's rage and sorrow with nothing more than a hug. After a few seconds, Athalia returned the hug, and blinked away some rising tears.

"I thought so," Fiona whispered up to Damien.

"You thought so?"

"Aye. After what we saw at her home, with Mary and Jack, I knew Samantha was a kind lass. Took a while to convince Athalia it'd be awright to come."

Damien smiled down at Fiona, and pulled her into a half hug beside him. If it'd been him, he'd have told Athalia to stay away. There was no reason to risk something like this. Except, there was. It never crossed his mind that maybe, by having the two women interact, that closure could be found for both of them, or that he should even be concerned about that. But seeing the two meet and speak with each other, seeing something meaningful happen, seeing — practically feeling — untold tensions he would never be able to appreciate, dissipate before his eyes, was moving.

He looked to Jack again, and smiled. The kid looked back to him, rolled his eyes, but smiled too. No need to say it, Damien could tell what he was thinking. His mom's niceness worked, this time. It might not work the next time.

The crowd resumed their conversations. The heaviness that had hung in the air was gone, and Damien could feel how lighter everything grew, how free. Like a bunch of children with no cares or concerns for tomorrow, people started talking louder, laughing, and smiling. The band started playing again, and picked a happier classical piece.

“La finta giardiniera overture,” he said.

“What?” Fiona said.

“Uh, a piece by Mozart.”

The redhead beamed up at him. “Ye listen to classical music?”

“Maria makes me. There's a lot more depth to classical music than modern, and she insists I develop my ear.”

Fiona swooned, an exaggerated and playful, half sarcastic sound. “Yer so deep.”

He rolled his eyes, took Fiona's hand, and made his way toward Jack. A glance to Samantha and Athalia showed they were still talking, and with Daniel next to them, Damien figured he could relax. If something happened, the sheriff would deal with it, and judging from the expression on Athalia's face, nothing would. Her rage was broken, defeated by Samantha's kindness and compassion. For now at least.

“My Prince,” Damien said as they arrived. “Mister Terry.”

“Mister Burksen,” Antoinette said, eyes settling on him with a balance of disdain and appreciation. Yeah, she didn’t like the Lancea et Sanctum, and him by extension, but she appreciated his existence. Better than nothing. “Miss Young, I am glad you could come. I see that you brought Athalia under better circumstances than I could have imagined.”

“Aye! I convinced her to come, but ‘twas Athalia who calmed down on her own.” Sighing, the young girl shook her head and shuddered a little. “She was so sad, ye ken? When I told her ‘twas Samantha who invited her, she didnae know what tae do! But,” Fiona scooped a glass of red wine, did a quick sniff test to make sure it wasn’t blood, and took a deep sip, “but she came. I’m glad. Maybe the two of them can become friends?”

Antoinette looked doubtful, but she looked to her childe and the shadow monster on the ballroom floor with consideration, before looking down at the tiny redhead. “Perhaps. My childe could become friends with a stone, if the stone was willing to share a word with her. The question is, will Athalia be capable of doing so.”

Jack laughed, nodded, and took a sip of his own drink. “I’m glad I was wrong. I’m glad I ... I’m glad.”

“Should ye talk to her?” Fiona said. “Athalia, I mean. She might—”

“No no, no, bad idea.” Shaking his head, Jack downed his drink, and grabbed another one as a waitress came by. To Damien’s surprise, someone had undone a few buttons of the server’s shirt, exposing a black bra underneath the white fabric. Good Lord, it was happening already. “I ... I think we should give Athalia her space. The fact she came is a miracle, and after ... after what happened, I’m sure it’ll be weeks before me or Triss can say a word to her, without it escalating.”

Damien nodded. “Makes sense. Let’s leave her be, and—”

“Who tae fuck is that lass?” Fiona downed her drink, and stared off into the crowd. “The tall one, with the tits!”

While Antoinette laughed and rolled her eyes, Damien saw the wince on Jack’s face. Damien had noticed before, when Elaine first stepped into the Black Hall, that Jack had reacted to her presence differently than Damien figured he’d would. Considering the woman was Antoinette’s close, personal friend, it probably meant Jack would get to see Elaine naked in short time, and likely more. Something to be excited about, considering the sexual Olympics Antoinette enjoyed. But Jack hadn’t looked excited. He’d looked shocked, and worried.

“That is my friend, Elaine of the Ordo Dracul,” the Prince said. “Elder, and Ventrue.”

“Does she know we can see through her dress?”

“Undoubtedly.”

“Awright then.” Fiona grabbed another glass from a waiter, did a double take at the waiter’s exposed chest, and downed half her new glass of red. “I see we’re having one of thooooose parties.”

“Do pace yourself, little Begotten.” Antoinette made a small gesture to the glass in Fiona’s hand. “I will throw you to the street if you vomit on my floors.”

Fiona scoffed, but didn’t down the other half of her drink. “Awright awright.”

Damien laughed. Too cute. Poor girl looked heartbroken.

Jack looked past them to Elaine again, and Damien followed his gaze to the Ventrue. She really was utterly gorgeous, a tall blonde with large curves despite her thin waist. If it wasn’t for the rumors about her, about how dangerous of a dragon she was, Isabella probably would have been over there already to recruit her for her show.

“Antoinette,” Jack said, “do you mind if I speak with Jacob?”

“Hmm. Be careful, my love. The old snake has been missing quite a bit, since the incident. I am sure he is up to something.”

“Yeah, agreed. Damien, back me up?”

Damien nodded. “Fiona, can you—”

“I’ll take her,” Jessy said. The Gangrel came up to join them, slipped an arm over his girlfriend’s shoulders, and grinned down at her. “Fiona and I haven’t talked in ages.”

“I saw ye at Bloodlust a week ago!”

“Ages.” Nodding, Jessy took Fiona with one arm, Eric with another, and guided them in the direction of Isabella. If Damien had to guess, Jessy was going to show Fiona off for her fellow Invictus. And based on the looks Isabella gave Fiona as they approached, it was working.

“Your girlfriend is gorgeous,” Jack said, smiling at him as the two of them made their way toward Jacob.

“She is. I’m very lucky.” He was tempted to compliment Antoinette as well, but it seemed pointless. They’d talked about her absurd beauty before, and considering how Antoinette was dressed, any compliment seemed almost like an insult. The Prince was beautiful, unnaturally so. The white hair, red eyes, and unusual ... proportions, weren’t natural. Bringing up her beauty always felt strange to him, as if broaching a subject the Prince might find offensive.

She certainly was beautiful, no doubt about that, like some mythical entity from a bygone era. But Damien preferred the very real, lovely Fiona, to the almost monolithic presence of the white-haired dragon.

“Think Isabella will recruit Fiona?” Jack said.

“Potentially? I hadn’t thought about it.”

“Isabella’s plays can get pretty sexual. And I’m sure she’d love to have a tiny, curvy redhead in her crew.”

A hint of something Damien had rarely felt, but instantly recognized, shot up his spine, hot and unwanted. Jealousy. It was not a sensation he was used to. Thoughts of Eric and Fiona being together before Damien was with her did spark the feeling, a little. Thinking of Isabella doing things to Fiona also sparked the feeling, and the feeling increased as he thought about the crafty Daeva manipulating his girlfriend.

“I trust Fiona,” he said.

Jack laughed and shrugged. “I didn’t think it was a matter of trust, at least not Fiona’s. Isabella, on the other hand ... well, she is a Daeva, and I wouldn’t put it past her to try a little Majesty on Fiona.”

That, Damien did not like the sound of. “Do you think she’d be so horrible as to ... slip Fiona some of her blood?”

His friend winced at that. The power of the Vinculum was extreme, and they had no idea if the Begotten were immune to its effects. Since it could affect both kine and Kindred, Damien guessed it could affect anyone.

“Hard to say. I’d guess no, if only as a favor to us for killing the hunters who killed her student Barry.”

That was true. Damien, Jack, and the witches were heroes in a sense. As much as the city's Kindred looked at them as if they were dangerous, they also looked at them with a mix of pride and wonder, too. Pride, because it was Kindred who defeated the enemy. Wonder, because it was Kindred they knew, who'd managed to defeat a deadly threat, deadly enough to enslave a Begotten and kill Julias Mire. No one in the city would have expected them to succeed in what looked like a suicide mission on the outside.

They were champions, according to the announcer. Or at least, Jack was, and the rest of them were the champion's guard. An accurate enough assessment, and enough of a title boast that Damien noticed several women were looking at him, women that had ignored him in the past. Which made him wonder if Fiona would feel jealousy like he did. Considering the amount of wine she was inhaling, if she did feel any jealousy, she might throw a punch before the night was done.

The image of little Fiona throwing a tiny fist at some Kindred's face, was strangely hilarious.

The two of them arrived at Jacob, who'd been rejoined by Aaron and Beatrice in the meantime. Jennifer was still taking Sándor around the room, introducing him to Kindred without missing a single name as far as Damien could tell, save for the recently embraced. Impressive of her, to memorize so many names and titles.

Jack and Damien nodded to Triss and Aaron, they nodded in return, and Jack stepped up to Jacob.

"Jacob," Jack said, "been looking to talk to you." Not the most respectful greeting Damien had ever heard, but it seemed fitting. Jacob didn't like pleasantries, or formalities.

The Nos smiled, an evil looking expression, and he ran his fingers back through his hair. "Me? You're the hero of the night, Jack, you and the crew you took with you on your ... excursion. Should be me looking to talk to you.”

“You’re the one who has Elen. You know damn well I’d be coming to talk about that.”

“Touché.” Jacob raised his glass, didn’t bother to wait for Jack to reciprocate, and took a sip. “Don’t you worry your pretty little head about it, Clarice.”

Jack stepped in a little closer, until only a single foot separated the two men. “I worry, Jacob.”

Damien looked between them, and found his hand reaching for his sword. His sword wasn’t there. No one was allowed to carry arms in the Black Hall, and that was particularly problematic for Mekhet. Nosferatu and Daeva were quite strong, and Gangrel and Ventrue were tough as hell. Mekhet were neither. They used their speed and stuck to the shadows. Out in the open like this, he’d rely on a sword and gun, and without them, he felt naked.

If Jacob and Jack started fighting, it’d be chaos in seconds. Jacob could summon insane strength, maybe even greater than Jack’s curse, and he could bestow literal nightmares on the Ventrue. Jack’s curse could summon a legion of creatures to his aid, and could likely manifest endurance to match Jacob’s strength. Jack could also attempt to Dominate the man. If he succeeded, that would be terrifying.

So Damien stood there, feeling terribly useless, but smart enough to keep watching and look for any detail that might be useful. Beatrice and Aaron had backed off, giving Jacob enough space to have his conversation, but close enough that they could jump in if something happened. Damien nodded to them, and they nodded to him, a bit of camaraderie forming. They’d all survived the same mission together. That had to be worth something, as far as trust was concerned.

“Elen is under my ... protection,” Jacob said, grinning into his drink as he sipped. “Her flesh chamber has collapsed, since she hasn’t been able to manage it, bound as I have her. And no hunters have even attempted to find her.”

Jack frowned, and stayed where he was. It’d have been too close for comfort for Damien, to have someone standing this close to him, but Jacob didn’t seem to notice, or care. “She’s ancient, Jacob. How is she even still alive?”

“Her magic keeps her alive. She’s done some interesting things to herself. She doesn’t eat, doesn’t sleep.” He chuckled, and dipped his glass left and right until the blood swirled inside it. “Pretty fucking disturbing shit, if I do say so myself.”

Damien smirked at that, for a second. Jacob calling anything disturbing, was disturbing.

“What do you plan to do with her?” Jack asked.

“I plan the to enact the great ritual of Nunya.”

Damien blinked. “Nunya?”

Before Jacob could respond, Jack put up a hand and looked to Damien. “Nunya business.” Oh, a joke. Forever the trickster, and juvenile, deranged lunatic, was Jacob. Damien and Jack both rolled their eyes, before Jack continued. “I felt something, when Sándor broke the ritual. Something that felt familiar.” Jacob smiled, but said nothing. “You nearly let Triss die, so you could have a shot of stealing Elen? What, was that a plan? Something you’ve been cooking up since we learned about her? Pretty damn cold.”

Beatrice took a step toward them, but Jacob held up a hand, and she stepped back, frown growing.

“Cold, is it?” The man shrugged as his smile went through twenty phases. Was he angry, sad, happy, furious, manic? It was impossible to tell. Damien tried, analyzed Jacob every chance he could, but the man was such a question mark, that Lucas had warned him about the Nosferatu on several occasions before his extended torpor, and several times again thereafter.

“Yes, it’s cold. She could have died, Jacob.”

“All my witches were there. One of those fucking dogs was there. This assassin-in-training,” he gestured to Damien, “was there. And let’s not forget, the Strix curse was there.” His grin grew until Damien thought his lips would split at the cheek. “You know, that horrible abomination you willingly used? A dark, twisted thing that you’ve embraced? A very witchy-witch thing to do.”

Jack snarled, and Damien found himself taking a step back. In the past, Jack snarling would have meant little. These days, it meant quite a bit.

“I haven’t embraced it.”

“Ha, sure you haven’t.” He took another sip, before he nodded in Elaine’s direction. “You know her?”

That made Jack freeze. Damien raised a brow as he looked between the two men, and it was clear the Nos had said something to disturb Jack. The old man always knew what to say to get under a person’s skin. Damien could only be content that Jacob never seemed interested in harassing him. Once, Jack had told Damien that Jacob had been interested in him, when he worked for Lucas. That interest had died when Lucas died. All the better.

“I don’t know her.”

“Sure you don’t. You looked like you saw a ghost when she came in.”

“I ... don’t know her.”

Laughing, Jacob sipped again, shrugged, and looked to Elaine. She’d rejoined Antoinette, apparently done with her conversation with Daniel, and the two of them chatted with the werewolf pack.

“I’ll find out eventually, Jack. You know I will.”

“I’d prefer if you just stayed out of it.”

With that, Jacob stepped close, until only six inches separated him from the small Ventrue. It was enough to stir Beatrice and Aaron a step closer, but they calmed when Jack didn’t move.

“Then let’s make a deal.”

Jack frowned, but remained where he was. “What deal?”

“Don’t interfere with me and mine, and I won’t interfere with you and yours.”

“Interfere with me? What could—”

Jacob leaned in until he was almost kissing Jack, and he chuckled. “Think about it.”

That time, Jack did back away a little, and he looked to Damien through the corner of his eye. Which was a mistake, because it let Jacob know they had an inkling of what he meant, but it was a mistake anyone would have made.

“Jacob ... we’re all on the same team, right?” Jack said.

The elder grinned his usual, crazy grin, shrugged, and stepped back. “I think we are. Sometimes, I don’t know. Maybe that’s a problem that needs fixing.”

“That you don’t know?”

“That we might be on the same team.”

---

~~Antoinette~~

“I cannot tell if I like her or not,” Elaine said, rejoining Antoinette. She gestured to the wolf woman the two of them had finished speaking with, moments before.

“Avery? She is ... difficult to deal with, I admit. Less so than Simon, though.”

Elaine nodded as she stood shoulder to shoulder with her, sipped her blood, and looked out at the crowd. The two of them stood in the center of the ballroom floor, and while the crowd gave them their space, people had begun to enjoy themselves to the point they no longer avoided them due to their Beasts’ fear. By the end of the ball, perhaps her Kindred would no longer avoid her at all, drunk on blood and desire.

She grinned subtly at the thought. No, her city would never fully be comfortable with her, both due to her altered body, but also due to her position. She was the Prince. This was her city. Such was the way of things.

“Daniel,” Elaine continued, “seems to be ... interested, in Athalia.”

Antoinette looked past her friend to her sheriff, who stood in a corner with the Begotten, and her childe Samantha.

“Yes, I fear he is, old friend.”

“A shame. I would very much like to crack that cold exterior of his.”

“You have known my sheriff for centuries, and have made no progress. Why pursue him so?”

She tapped a finger against her chin, looked over her shoulder, and let out a quiet sigh as she looked at the man. “I am not sure, honestly. I cannot help but sense much sadness in him, and I would very much like to warm him.”

Antoinette doubted that was all there was to it. Elaine, like many women, craved what they could not have.

“There has been much sadness in his life, but with the return of his childe, a grain of joy has been found. That joy is perhaps the only reason he speaks to Athalia.” Antoinette sipped her own blood, and lightly traced a finger along her old friend’s beautiful shoulder. “Could you not have worn something less brazen?”

“I am more covered than you.”

“You cannot see through my clothes.”

She shrugged. “And you cannot see through mine, unless you stare.”

Antoinette laughed at her friend’s knowing grin, and looked around. People were staring. Many had never seen Elaine before, and were obviously enraptured with her beauty. Antoinette could not blame them.

“You knew very well my love would gawk, from what I told you. Poor Jack has not been able to stop looking at you.”

“That is your own fault, for planting images in his head.” She sipped her drink, and looked to the boy as she did, currently conversing with Jacob. “I admit, he is very handsome. And the way he squirms is ... very ... appealing.” She licked her lips, sipped again, and kept her eyes on Jack as she swayed gently with the music. “I did not expect the intensity in his eyes, the sheer openness of them. But after seeing his mother, I can see where his eyes came from.”

Antoinette nodded, but her eyes lingered on Jack and Jacob. While it brought her limitless discomfort to see the old snake talking with her lover, she trusted Jack. He had proven capable of managing the curse, at least to some extent, and he was proving intelligent enough to handle scenarios she would never have trusted a neonate to handle. Speaking with Jacob, an elder, someone no neonate would willingly speak with, was something Jack was equipped to handle, intellectually, and now thanks to the curse, in power.

“He knows something,” Elaine said.

“Oui, that he does. But I do not know what. My love said he would tell us though, and I trust him.” It did have her mind running in circles trying to predict what that knowledge would be, however. He had looked upon Elaine with the awe and lust Antoinette had expected to see, that she had helped create with her stories, but he had also looked at her with the shock of someone surprised. For the second life of her, she could not figure out why.

“He leaves us in suspense.”

“That he does.”

Elaine giggled, and looked back to her as she sipped her drink. “A man after my own heart.”

“Then I regret to inform you, that he is taken.”

They laughed. It was a strange, silly discussion, talking over a man like young girls. To the Ordo, little meant more than the mastery of their coils, and talk of romance was largely discarded once they reached their ancilla years, let alone into their elder years. She had not spoken with Elaine like this since she had sired Tony, so long ago, blurry memories she could not recall beyond vague notions. It sent a joyful chuckle through her, to once again be talking of something as simple, juvenile, and yet as all powerful, as love.

She guided Elaine toward one cluster of Kindred she looked forward to speaking to.

“Miss Leauvion,” Antoinette said with a nod to Isabella. “Attempting to recruit Miss Young into your troupe?”

The Daeva smiled at her, a fake and pompous thing, but well crafted and seamless. Such a gorgeous creature, Isabella, with her long dark blonde hair, sharp features, above average height, and piercing blue gaze. She did not look dissimilar to Elaine, though Elaine, a touch taller, wore her hair free instead of in ponytails, and had brown eyes.

A tiny flicker in Isabella’s eyes betrayed her, a glance at Antoinette’s bust and corset that clearly dwarfed her own. A petty thing, for Antoinette to enjoy a grain of pride and ego in that moment, but she did. The men about clearly looked at each other in a similar manner, and not-so-subtly analyzed physiques to see who had the broader shoulders and flatter stomach. Such was life, and unlife, an unending game of comparing the self to others.

If Isabella devoted herself more to the future of the Invictus, instead of her own pursuits and obsessions, as many Daeva did, she would no doubt have risen in the ranks of her covenant. But no, she spent her days mastering the art of acting, teaching her troupe to act, and by large, she had succeeded. Her plays were held in high regard, but were ultimately of zero use to the Invictus. The arts would never earn the income of a corporation brought to its knees by blackmail, or insider trading, tools the Invictus often used.

“She is beautiful,” Isabella said, smiling at Fiona and earning a loud giggle from the intoxicated redhead. “But I do not believe she holds the ... discipline, to be an actress.”

Jessy snorted on a laugh. “You mean she probably can’t memorize lines.”

Little Fiona’s eyes set into a hard glare, and she took a weak swing at Jessy. The vampire let her, and Fiona’s fist bounced harmlessly off Jessy’s arm, while Fiona simultaneously spilled some of her wine from her other glass.

“I can memorize lines!”

“You couldn’t memorize a menu.”

“I ... I...” Suddenly, the tiny girl started to weep. Not a loud sob, but tiny sniffles. “Yer right! I couldnae! I tried, but they had to let me go. Fired!”

Jessy blinked at her, before leaning in and hooking her arm over the woman’s shoulders. “Ok, guess I was a bit on the nose there. Don’t worry about it. You don’t want to work for this bitch anyway.”

“I beg your pardon?” Isabella scoffed, and looked to her lover Hella beside her. “Can you believe this?”

Hella offered her lover some silent condolences, and Antoinette turned her attention to the nearby hunters. They were surrounded by Isabella’s troupe, a group of beautiful young Invictus Kindred, and things were quickly growing sexual. They had stepped quite close to the hunters, and the female Kindred were not only touching them with roaming hands, they were exposing their legs and breasts in subtle, flirting displays. Predictable, considering Isabella and her proclivities, but Antoinette did not mind. In truth, she had hoped for this, that the Kindred would approach the hunters with aim to seduce.

If hunters could come to Dolareido, leave Dolareido, and spread word that the city was to be ignored by their ilk, it could save her great trials in the future, especially after so many died under Jack's hand.

The small group of Kindred surrounding the hunters stepped aside when Antoinette and Elaine approached. The hunters had seen her dress already, but not Elaine's, and the three of them looked to the elder Ventrue for several moments, jaw's dropping, before looking to the Prince. The two men did their best to hide their growing erections.

"Harcourt, LeBlanc, Hemmer, I trust you are enjoying yourselves?"

"Um, y-yes Prince," Harcourt said. The man may have been a strange, overt, and silly individual, but he had courage.

Elaine grinned at them as she sipped from her glass. "But you have not tasted the wine." Before Harcourt could respond, she flicked her hand upward in dismissal. "We can smell the lack of alcohol on your breaths."

"Um ... well, we thought ... maybe it wasn't a good idea to get drunk in a room filled with vampires and werewolves and monsters?"

"Nonsense." Antoinette snapped her fingers, and several servants joined them immediately. One of them had wine, and she dismissed the other two, before motioning the final servant, a waitress, toward the hunters. "Your lives are in no danger, and you are to be rewarded for your aid in defeating Jeremiah and Angela."

The woman, Marge, stepped up beside her friend. With a slow, trembling hand, she took a glass of the wine.

"Thank you. B-But, you can understand why we're so ... scared, right? We're still your prisoners." With a trembling hand, she raised the glass, and took a cautious sip. "The three of us, we're vampire hunters. We're all very aware of the things you can do to us with a glance, or a drop of blood."

Marge was a beautiful woman, a touch short with a lean, almost skinny physique. Her curly brown hair reached her shoulders, and her brown eyes stared at Antoinette as she sipped her wine. A black woman, with light skin and pink lips. To think of her as a vampire hunter was difficult. She looked more an innocent doe than a hunter. Perhaps that was part of her hunting tactics, to feign weakness, before striking.

Dennis, a white man with short blonde hair and green eyes, took a glass as well, and sniffed it several times. The fool must have known sniffing wine would never discover tampering, but he did anyway. He was taller than Harcourt, bigger, and while Harcourt was an attractive man, it was clear some of the women nearby with similar tastes to Jessy, were looking to Dennis. Though, a glance Jessy's way showed the Gangrel was looking at Marge, more than the men.

"You have my promise that no harm will come to you," Antoinette said, and she spoke a touch louder so those nearby could hear over the music. "Any who attempt to place you under the Vinculum will quickly find themselves witnessing a sunrise."

That earned at least a small bit of trust from the hunters, and the three of them took another sip of their new drinks, though none of them looked down when they did, eyes up, scanning.

"Still can't believe you're really letting us be here," Harcourt said.

"Forever a visionary, the Prince," Elaine said. "Be happy your bosses met their end in Dolareido. I have lived in cities where your corpses would be left for the crows. But here in Dolareido, my lovely friend insists on peace where she can find it."

Antoinette rolled her eyes, but her smile remained. Elaine did love to joust with her, and she enjoyed the game.

“If and when I decide to let our three hunters leave the city, their opinions of Dolareido will have changed.”

“I don’t think we’ll give up our jobs,” Harcourt said. Fear was in his face. It terrified him to admit that truth, but he knew very well she had discerned it on her own.

“I do not expect you to,” she said. “But, in the future, perhaps you will consider the reality that not all Kindred so blindly give into their hungers? Not all paranormal creatures willfully listen to the call of their inner monsters.”

Isabella, her troupe, Jessy, Fiona, and Eric all stood nearby, all looking at her, all listening. She had not meant to give a speech per say, but there it was.

“I ... think we can agree to that,” Marge said. “We’ve all had dealings with friendly vamps before. Just, usually, while surrounded by not-so-friendly vamps.”

“Ha.” Jessy laughed, and took a step closer, taking Fiona and Eric in with her. “We’re all friendly in Dolareido. Well, except for eyeless over there.” She pointed over her shoulder with a thumb toward Jacob, who still spoke with Jack and Damien. “And maybe her.” Again, she made the gesture, this time for Maria. “But, yeah, considering the situation your bosses had you in, we’re all pretty damn happy with the three of you. You especially, Harcourt.”

“I got a lot of people killed,” the man said, voice heavy.

“Yea but, from what I hear, it was a shitty situation that would have ended a lot worse if you didn’t do something.” Shrugging, she nodded in Isabella’s direction, then in the direction of the Carthians, the witches, the werewolves, then in the direction of the rest of the Invictus. “You guys are welcome at the party, so get partying! Get drunk, get laid, get Kissed. These whores here will make sure you’re all well taken care of.” She gestured to Isabella’s actors, who only smiled at the playful insult.

Antoinette suppressed her urge to groan at Jessy’s brazen words, but it was not as if the woman was incorrect. A glance around showed that the ball was going, quite predictably, in a sexual direction. While she had originally doubted the paranormals would actively engage in sex in her ball, she had not put a ban on such an activity. That tantalizing possibility drew many Kindred toward the thralls and ghouls, with obvious intent to render them catatonic in sexual bliss, only to be taken back to their lair to be thoroughly ravaged. Tonight, it would not have surprised the Prince if the kine were ravaged here instead.

She grinned as she noticed Harcourt gulp. Yes, his eyes had begun to look past the Kindred that currently surrounded him, and out to the rest of the ball, where the creatures of the night were beginning to give into their more appealing natures.

Many of the female kine’s dresses no longer covered their breasts. Dresses had been pulled down, revealing bosoms of all sizes, bare and beautiful. Skirts had been pulled aside, and panties removed, giving free access to their smooth, wet slits. Not far from Antoinette and the group around her, one woman had a set of fangs in her neck as a man hugged her from behind, and fingered her, earning tiny squeaks of desperation and pleasure. Not far from her, was another female kine, and this one had been stripped bare, not a shred of clothes left on her save for her cute heels. Two men and two women surrounded her, Kindred, and all four of them had their hands on her, massaging, kneading, prying, opening, fingering.

On the other side of the ballroom, where some tables were adorned with trays and glasses, a male lay on his back. His shirt was open to reveal his chest, and one Kindred leaned over it to both kiss and Kiss his muscles. Another Kindred, a woman, stood between the man’s legs, and had the kine’s shaft in her hand, through the man’s boxers. Judging by the small trail of blood on the corner of her mouth, she had already fed, and was eager to see the kine orgasm as her friend also partook.

Not far from them, another male kine was in the same position, lain upon a table. Two women were Kissing him, each draining the man slowly, with obvious intent to milk his pleasure, and their own. Another Kindred stood between his legs, and was letting her impressive bust devour the man's length. She had pulled the black straps of her dress apart to reveal her breasts, though Antoinette could see she had yet to feed. She was waiting for her turn, and would likely have her chest coated in cum before it was. Naturally, after having been dismissed by Isabella earlier, Othello was enjoying his ghoul's touch, and sharing her with one of the female Kindred as well.

For all this blatant sexuality, it was witnessing the Uratha involve themselves that earned a smile from Antoinette. Avery's attempt to communicate with Jacob had been doomed to failure, but that did not stop her pack from integrating themselves with the rest of the Kindred. Mason and Tilly were enjoying themselves, chatting and laughing, and from the body language, Antoinette expected the man to be inside his girlfriend within the next fifteen minutes, likely pinning her to a wall while she Kissed him. Natasha, sweet Natasha, stood with her boyfriends, and while she was trying to talk, the two men were touching her. The balance of frustration and enjoyment on her face was delightful.

The werewolf Brianna stood with a man, and—no, two men, both Kindred. Surprising. Antoinette knew them, Invictus neonates about to enter their ancilla years, a Ventrue and a Gangrel. Both of them were close to her, quite close, enough for chests to be touching her shoulders, and for the two of them to have their lips to her neck. The Ventrue had a hand pressing against the front of her long skirt, fondling and caressing through it against her panties, and the Gangrel was hugged from behind with one hand, while his other hand fondled one of her breasts through the lacy dress. The only reason they had not removed the dress from the drunk, and clearly excited werewolf, was that her dress covered her shoulder to ankle. Mostly see-through, with only a few coiling bits of solid black to hide her nipples and underwear, the dress was ultimately too thin a fabric to prevent thirsting Kindred from indulging themselves with her body.

Once they sank their fangs into her, they would have to hold her up to keep her from falling in orgasm.

More of the Uratha mingled with the Kindred. Carter spoke with several female Kindred, young things that were clearly intrigued by the man's older looks. One of them was quite content to press her breasts into his arm, and the other looked to be quietly begging for the man to lower his neck, so she could Kiss him. Her hand massaged the erection Antoinette could see pressing against his pants. Caleb was in a kissing match with a very fiery woman Kindred, and his hands were kneading her ass with abandon. Noah was doing his best to fend off the advances of literally five women, though as their attentions grew more and more blatant and erotic, Antoinette could see the rising hunger in the werewolf's face. Erica and a Carthian were also engaged in a rather passionate kiss, and grinding their bodies against each other against the side of the stairway. Judging from where their hands were going, they would be the first to charge past foreplay and into actual sex.

Antoinette gestured to Harcourt, and then to the scene around them. The hunters, finally noticing the extreme eroticism that surrounded them, each downed their drinks, and reached for seconds. Fiona giggled and reached for a drink to do the same, eyes scanning the sexual wonders around her, but a small slap on the hand from her Gangrel friend stopped her.

“Ha, I know, right?” Jessy said to the hunters, while simultaneously holding off Fiona's advancing, fist-throwing body with a hand to the small woman's forehead, arm stretched out. "I—Samantha!" Jessy abandoned Eric and Fiona, and slid over to grab Samantha's hand as the woman approached. "Girl, can't believe you did that."

Ashley and Julee, no longer needed as guard for Samantha, rejoined Antoinette.

"Did what?" Samantha said, though as she said it, her eyes looked around in shock at the sexual displays. Her gaze lingered on Brianna especially, as the woman, still being fondled and stroked through her dress, quickly approached orgasm, judging from the embarrassed expression on her face, and the hanging jaw.

"Forgave Athalia."

"Well, I ... um..."

"Miss Herrington," Antoinette said, with a hint of ice in her voice, "do not broach such personal subjects with my childe so freely."

Jessy winced as she realized her mistake. "Ah, right. Sorry."

With an annoyed sigh, Antoinette looked over her shoulder to Athalia. She remained with Daniel, and likely would continue to do so until she left; he was the only one at the party she knew, that she did not despise. It was too much to hope that the woman would socialize and enjoy herself tonight, not after losing her daughter a mere four nights past. But, she was speaking with Daniel, and he with her. That alone was a surprising step.

Jack approached, Damien behind him, their conversation with Jacob done. Aaron joined the old Nosferatu, while Beatrice rejoined Jennifer as she continued to walk Sándor around the ball. They talked with the Carthians, Garry mostly, and they spoke with some Invictus; it was more accurate to say that Jen spoke. Beatrice seemed largely disinterested with speaking with others, except for perhaps a few short exchanges with her old covenant leader. Sándor seemed largely disinterested with speaking with anyone at all. Watching the young Ventrue try and break the Begotten made Antoinette smile, as she made the inevitable comparison to Elaine and Daniel. Elaine's efforts with Daniel had proved fruitless over the decades, but perhaps Jennifer's efforts would find better results.

"Prince," Jack said, returned. He nodded to everyone, and his smile grew as he stepped up to his mother. "Mom. Glad things worked out."

"I told you they would."

The boy's smile faltered for a moment. Undoubtedly, he was struggling to suppress his natural desire to argue, analyze, and bombard his mother with irrefutable facts that proved his point. But the boy had grown wisdom, and decided to not pursue his overwhelming urge to debate. Later, Antoinette would entertain his need to do so, and let the boy vent.

"I'm glad you were right."

With a happy smile, Samantha hugged her son, gasped, and looked past Jack to some of the sexual sights beyond.

"Jack, cover your eyes!"

He raised a brow, looked behind him, and before he could say anything, Jessy roared with laughter. Poor, sweet Samantha, attempting to hide her son from the sexual feast around her.

"Lass," Fiona said, accent far thicker than before, "yer wee lad fucks three lassies almost every night, ye ken?"

Jack, Eric, Damien, and Jessy laughed more, some others groaned, and before Fiona could continue, Damien took her hand, and pulled her away from the group. From the look on his face, he was not upset with her, but a sympathetic look from him for Jack made it clear he was doing his friend a favor.

“I’m going to pretend I didn’t hear that,” Samantha said with a nod.

Elaine laughed, a hearty sound that had everyone smiling. “Come now, young Daeva. Embrace the pleasures around you. Your enemy is defeated, and food is in excess. What possible reason could you not have to indulge yourself?”

“I ... I’m not sure I’m ready to indulge myself, like that.”

“And,” Jack said, “I’m not entirely sure I’m ready to see my mom indulge like that. We can at least wait until the party’s over?”

Antoinette smiled down at her lover, leaned in, and set a kiss on his forehead. “A reasonable request.”

“And ... um.” Samantha scratched her arm several times as she cast her gaze past them, to the eyeless Nosferatu standing with Aaron. “Can Natasha show me around again, sire?” Yes, Natasha had not shown many to Samantha, before Athalia arrived and interrupted.

It took effort to keep the frown off her face. “Yes, I am sure she will. Go speak with her, before she vanishes into the night to be with her lovers.” A momentary trade of eyes between her and her childe made it clear what she thought of Samantha’s intent. Speaking with Jacob was not an intelligent idea, but the current venue was one of the better ones, if the foolish girl insisted on such a dangerous game.

Samantha nodded her head to her, pat Jack on the arm once, and walked toward the pack of wolves, where Natasha stood near Avery, Clara, Matthew, and Arturo.

Jack watched after her, sighed, rolled his eyes, and looked to the hunters. “I hope you three can enjoy the party, after the shit that’s happened.”

“Ch’yeah,” Harcourt said. “I mean, before, I definitely would have said no. But, after getting to meet a bunch of you, and ... well, getting to meet her,” he gestured toward Samantha, “I can ... relax a little more.” As if to seal his point, he downed his second drink.

Jack smiled at them, and Antoinette watched the tension in his shoulders fade. Forever her Jack concerned himself with the reactions of others now. No doubt her assault on Mark in her tower likely weighed on his mind, and the possible ramifications it would have with Azamel. And, as much as the night was meant for celebration, to relax, enjoy, and bask in the feast, the boy looked left and right constantly to take stock of the situation. But, as the night went on, and not only did the Kindred succumb to their sexual hungers, but the Uratha did as well, she could see the stress on her lover ease. He was slowly abandoning his role as peace maker, for the night at least.

The stress returned, when he looked to Elaine.

“Jack,” Antoinette said, “the ball goes well. I believe that, perhaps now would be a good moment to speak to Elaine and I, of what you wished to speak of?” And, it would be good to distract him before he interfered with his mother’s intent. Antoinette did not agree with Samantha’s actions, but would not stop her, either.

He looked up at her, met her gaze for several moments, searching, before nodding. “Sure. Is ... there somewhere private we can talk?” There was hesitation in his words. He would have preferred to have this conversation later, but she ached to know what secret her lover hid from her. One did not need to be a Mekhet to be lured by the promise of knowledge.

“I believe the roof will suffice. Coming, Elaine?”

“Of course.” Elaine smiled, her usual, confident, but analyzing smile. A Ventrue smile.

Antoinette guided the two Ventrue through the crowd, though truthfully, the crowd parted for them. Those in the throes of passion were far too lost to acknowledge her presence though, and did not move from their perches; she did not mind. She smiled at them as she walked past, and let her eyes rest on Brianna for a moment longer than the others. The two men had finally begun to truly Kiss her, each taking one side of her dark neck, while rubbing her clitoris through her skirt. The effect was pronounced. The werewolf’s moan was quiet, and almost lost to the music, but her quivering legs were far more obvious, and the two Kindred held her close to keep her from falling.

The Gangrel lifted her long skirt. She did not stop him. Soon, the fabric was pulled up to her hip, exposing her long, dark legs, and the tiny black panties she wore underneath the mostly see-through dress. The man slipped his fingers underneath the underwear, and began to finger the woman in earnest, earning some rumbling groans from the Uratha that sounded far more wolfish than human. Such a delectable display. Were it not for the kine being treated to similar pleasure around her, Antoinette doubted the werewolf would have let the two vampires feast upon her, let alone feast while fondling, caressing, and fingering. Brianna was blending in.

Better still, was how the other Uratha did not seem disturbed by this. They had expected it. Their integration with Dolareido was complete, more or less, and while Antoinette did not appreciate them sticking their long noses into her business or her city’s business, she had to admit, they had their value.

Up the stairs, and past the band, she guided the two Ventrue to a third stairway, something far less luxurious and lavish. Up and up it went, until a door opened onto the roof of the Black Hall.

The Black Hall was not a terribly tall build. Quite wide, its ballroom its single purpose. And she had insured no towering skyscrapers stood too near, allowing for the building to stand beautiful in its surroundings. It certainly did not carry the power and imposing demeanor of her grand Elysium Tower, but it was beautiful.

Jack walked to the railing, nearly waist high, thick and ornate marble with curving surfaces. He looked out to the city streets for a moment before turning his back to it as he folded his arms across his chest. Where Antoinette had expected to find a smile on Jack's face, as the looming possibility of seeing Elaine naked drew near, she instead found neutrality, and perhaps a touch of concern. Even anger.

“Jack,” Antoinette said, standing next to her friend, “what is it?”

The boy looked at her for only moments, before his eyes settled on Elaine. Again, where Antoinette had expected to have thoroughly corrupted her lover's thoughts, so that he could think of nothing else except for her and her friend nude, she instead found something else entirely in his gaze. His eyes were locked onto his old friend's eyes, as if battling her.

“How much do you know about Elaine?” Jack said, asking her, but gaze locked onto the elder Ventrue.

“I ... have known Elaine for centuries. She is a fellow dragon, and we have shared in our experiments, our secrets, and more.”

With a slow, heavy sigh, Elaine's unending, confident smile faded, and she looked down. “How did you find out?”

What? Antoinette snapped her head back to look to her love, then to Elaine, but said nothing. It appeared she was the ignorant one in this exchange.

“Before I broke the curse free of its seal, it showed me things. It showed me ... shadows of memories, of things my sires experienced, before they embraced their childe. I saw things Julias did before embracing me. I saw things Viktor did, before embracing Julias. And I saw things Viktor’s sire did, before she embraced him. A whore in the streets of England, playing her games, until she found someone she...” He shrugged, and rubbed his head as he looked down. Much as he was trying to sound confident, it was apparent the conversation was painful for him. “And, I can remember Susanna, my great, great grandsire, embracing—”

“Elaine,” Antoinette finished for him. She took a small step back from her old friend, and squinted her eyes at the woman.

Elaine let out a long, sad sigh, looked up, and offered her a small smile. “I guess my secret is out, Ann.” Slowly, she looked to Jack, and the small smile remained. “Hello, my dear great grandchilde. I am ... glad, that the curse has not undone you, as it nearly did me.”

Chapter 117

~~Natasha~~

“Sire,” she said.

“Natasha.” Daniel looked down at her, then to Athalia. “Athalia, do you—”

“Speak with your childe.”

The sheriff adjusted his glasses, a single finger against the bridge, same as always. “I’d prefer you stayed for a while.”

Athalia rolled her eyes. “I ... will, ok? Jesus, I’m not going to explode or anything.”

Natasha tried to meet Athalia’s eyes, but the moment the tall, dark-skinned woman looked at her, Natasha looked down. Those weren’t eyes she wanted to look into, not now, not yet. Just the thought of what Athalia must have been feeling was enough to have Natasha on the verge of tears; not that she could cry while not Blushing, but still. The poor woman.

Athalia didn’t go far, just a few steps back. Other than Daniel, Fiona was the only person at the ball Athalia would want to be near, and Fiona was with Damien. It’d been an adorable sight, Fiona trying to walk while drunk, in high heels, dragging Damien around the ball. The twinkle in the drunk girl’s eyes said everything: she wanted to have sex with her dark, mysterious, well-dressed vampire. That meant she couldn’t be a social anchor for Athalia, while Daniel could be.

Natasha peeked past her sire at the woman again, before nodding to him, and then nodding toward Jacob in the distance. “Um ... is that ok?”

“You tell me. You took her over there.”

Samantha had asked Tash to introduce her to Jacob. She had, stuttering up a mess, but she had. Then she'd backed off, and did her best to casually join Daniel, to get his take, or at least get his eyes on Jacob.

“I d-don't know. I ... have a hard time trusting Jacob. I can't t-t-tell what he wants.”

“Wants from what?”

“From ... life? Or unlife?”

Daniel sighed, nodded, and watched Jacob with cold eyes. “He's up to something, Natasha. Keep an eye on him.”

Keep an eye on Jacob, right, like she wasn't already doing that with extreme prejudice. The man was terrifying, and it blew her mind that Samantha didn't seem to care. Despite her warnings, and Antoinette's warnings, Samantha was content to talk to the man, like she had with Athalia. Even more surprising, was how Jacob looked happy to talk to her. Samantha's body language grew calmer, as did Jacob's, and the two laughed as Jacob told some sort of joke.

Samantha adjusted her hair and shifted her weight from foot to foot a little, in a subtle but not too subtle flirt. Natasha frowned. Jack was not going to like this.

Natasha looked across the ball to her boyfriends, who were hanging with Avery and Clara. Sex surrounded them. Not actual sex, since no one had penetrated anyone yet, but the room was filling with soft moans, as arousal began to soar. The poor werewolves, surrounded by hormones, and unable to control their own.

The music changed to something a little less classical, and a little more ... jazz? Slow, but pleasing, and almost naughty sounding. Something Antoinette had picked out probably, and told the musicians to play when things began to heat up.

She looked to her right, and sighed as she watched a male kine, now completely naked and lying on a table, begin to cum onto his stomach and onto a woman's breasts. Two women were around him, Kissing him, and a third one strolled up like everything was perfectly normal, and sank her fangs into his wrist. A female kine was in a similar boat, lying on a table as well, and being devoured from all directions, including between her legs.

Several of the waiters and waitresses had been robbed of their clothing, left to walk around in their underwear and bras. Those would be gone soon, once a hungry Kindred decided to partake of them, instead of the unfulfilling glasses of old blood. And from the looks on the waiters' and waitresses' eyes, and from their erections and hard nipples, they were eagerly anticipating that moment.

Natasha squirmed as she spotted Mason through the crowd. It was hard to see him past all the shoulders, but between moving bodies, she managed to spot him with his girlfriend Tilly pressed to a wall. He wasn't just kissing and fondling her. He was fucking her.

Things quickly devolved from there, as people noticed the hungry werewolf had actually penetrated his girlfriend. While these balls had a habit of being very sexual, with thralls and ghouls being caressed and massaged first, then kissed and fondled, then Kissed and treated to fellatio, cunnilingus, and everything up to, just not including, actual sex. The Kindred didn't indulge themselves to orgasm at these parties, usually. That came when they took the kine home after the party, or they rushed out to find unsuspecting kine to hunt, Kiss, and fuck into comas.

That wasn't what was happening tonight. Maybe it was because of the Uratha, and Mason's actual willingness to fuck. Maybe it was larger than that, tensions having finally given way since the hunters were no longer a threat. Or maybe it was the spice of having some of those very hunters in the ball, who Tash could see were slowly getting more drunk, and more aroused. Something had snapped in the crowd, and Kindred began to indulge more than Natasha had ever seen.

Brianna suddenly had her two vampire friends pressing their bodies against hers, from front and behind, and the one in front of her pulled his pants down, took out his cock, and sank it into her. Not exactly the best position for her to enjoy, except, from the expression on her face, she looked like she came instantly the moment the man entered her. He pressed his body tight to hers, as did the man behind her, hiding the fact they were having sex, though her skirt was still pulled up over her hips, and her panties were gone. She hugged the man in front of her, ground her pelvis against his, and shuddered as the two men continued to slowly drown her in pleasure with the Kiss.

Natasha gulped and looked around some more. According to her boss, balls used to be like this, before Lucas, and before Garry rose to be a covenant leader. When Dolareido was still young and a lot smaller, and light bulbs hadn't become a thing yet, Kindred would gather in a big room in a mansion, filled with thralls and ghouls, and everything would descend into a feast orgy. In the darkness, lit only by gentle candlelight, kine would be Kissed and fucked until utterly exhausted. And when they were, Kindred would fuck each other.

No candles this night, and a lot more people. She doubted it'd turn into a full orgy, with everyone fucking everyone, but that didn't mean it wouldn't get very, very close.

She licked her fangs, and looked around a little more. The hunters were defeated, unable to resist the approaching vampires, or the tingle of alcohol in their veins. Isabella's troupe had likely used some Majesty on them, but it'd be temporary, and as much as Natasha didn't necessarily like being that forceful with kine, she could see the three hunters were enjoying themselves immensely.

Both Dennis and Harcourt each had two women on them, kissing and kissing. One of them pulled up her skirt, lifted a leg, and leaned into Harcourt, encouraging the man to hook her leg with his arm, while she looked him in the eyes, and talked to him, a casual conversation Natasha couldn't hear. Poor guy was way too nice, and drunk, to say no, and the moment he gave in, Dennis found himself in the same situation.

Marge had three men on her. Natasha was tempted to interfere, since Marge looked like such a small and innocent thing, but after looking at her for a few seconds, Natasha quivered. It was like looking into a mirror. Much as Marge was clearly being forced into a super embarrassing and overwhelming situation she didn't seem to want to be in, Natasha recognized the sweet hunger in her eyes, those 'oh please don't ravage me, I'm too sweet and innocent' eyes. She wanted to be ravaged. It may not have been what she expected to happen tonight, but that didn't mean Natasha couldn't see the obvious desire on her face.

One of the vampires leaned in and sank his teeth into her neck, and she melted instantly, mouth opening and eyes rolling upward. She struggled, tried to get away, but it was a weak attempt, and not because of the Kiss, but because she didn't really want to escape. Natasha squirmed as she watched the small woman disappear between the three men, but between two of their bodies, she could see a sliver of the woman, and the trembling of her body, as one of the men slid his hand under her skirt. Her tiny squeaks were audible, and as she started to quiver in bliss, a few more of Isabella's troupe turned to watch the hunter orgasm.

Humans were slaves to their hormones, and it wouldn't take much from any Daeva to break them. Well, maybe it would, since the hunters had tattoos and stuff that supposedly fought off vampire Disciplines. If those tattoos were working, then either they weren't working very well, or the hunters found themselves giving into the erotic atmosphere naturally, same as the thralls and ghouls.

It took a moment for Tash to realize she'd lost track of time, and had spent the past ten minutes watching people have sex. She snapped her head back to Samantha, except, there was no Samantha. She blinked several times, leaned forward, and tried to see past as many shoulders as she could.

“Um, sire, where is—”

“Samantha's outside, with Jacob.”

“What?”

“He hid them both in his Cloak, and now they're outside.”

“What!?” She stepped in close to her sire, and elbowed him in the side. Not the smartest move on her part, irritating her sire, but this was an emergency. “G-Go after them!”

Daniel let out a quiet sigh, set a finger to his ear, and touched the earpiece there. “Report on the warlock? ... alright.” He looked at Natasha, adjusted his glasses, and smiled slightly. “They're sitting on a bench and talking, not far from the ball. Samantha probably felt uncomfortable with...” He gestured to the growing eroticism.

“I ... can't b-believe she's talking to him.”

“She doesn't know Jacob, like we do. To her, the man is an intriguing figure.”

Well, Jacob was intriguing, Tash had to agree with that. But he was also terrifying. She'd dealt with elders for a couple decades, when her skills had launched her career in the Invictus, and soon earned her a position as a Right Hand. Of the three elders she'd dealt with dozens of times, Viktor had been the most intimidating, sometimes outright horrifying to speak to, but even he didn't scare her like Jacob did.

Which, now that she thought about it, wasn't really fair. Jacob was terrifying because she knew he was powerful, possibly the most powerful vampire in the city, and he was very unpredictable, but his actions weren't all that horrible. As far as she knew, he'd never actually done anything to directly harm the Prince, the city, or even actively fought to acquire territory. Jacob was content to do his own thing, and barely involve himself in the Danse Macabre. And, even more strangely, the Prince considered him to be something of a friend.

Natasha was more concerned with Samantha talking with Jacob, than the Prince would be, or than Daniel apparently was. If Jacob wanted to get his hands on Samantha, it wasn't like the elder couldn't just sneak-sneak and kidnap her. He might even protect her, if a circumstance arose that meant Samantha was in danger.

Or, he could slip her some of his blood, addict her to vitae, addict her to him, and turn her into a bound thrall, a vampire trapped in the Vinculum. Well, true as that might be, it wasn't like Samantha had the acting skills to hide such a condition.

The more Natasha thought about it, the more she couldn't find a circumstance where letting Samantha talk to Jacob was a real problem. If Jacob was doing nasty things, things that the Prince would want to stop, Samantha talking to him would hardly change that. And she wouldn't be able to stop Jacob from kidnapping, enslaving, or killing her anyway, if that was his goal. Better yet, if Jacob wasn't actually an enemy, the two becoming friends would be good for relations. Minerva had been friends with both Antoinette and Jacob, after all.

So, the best course of action, was to trust Jacob ... a little. And that was a very hard thing to do.

“So you’re going t-to let her go?”

“She has a phone, my childe. I am sure she will contact the Prince to let her know what’s happening.”

Tash frowned. “Do you ... w-want to let her go?”

“No. I trust Jacob less than the Prince does. But you know as well as I, that if Jacob wished to strike us through Samantha, we could hardly stop him ... only retaliate.” And, retaliation would mean Jacob’s death, judging from the stone cold glare her sire gave her.

Tash doubted her sire trusted anyone except for the Prince. The two had worked together for centuries, and were huge figures in the Ordo Dracul. An unbreakable pair. A shame Jacob had no one like that for support.

Sighing, she nodded. “I’m going to t-talk to Beatrice. Maybe ... maybe.”

Daniel nodded. “Maybe.”

Maybe Triss could give her a hint about Jacob’s intentions. A long shot, especially since Jacob told his witches less than Antoinette told Tash, and Tash only knew a little about the Ordo Dracul.

She found the witches, and walked over to them. The quiet one, Aaron, was gone, or maybe hanging out where she couldn’t see him. Maybe he went outside, like she wanted to, cause parties were overwhelming. Moving through the crowd was horrible, and she shuddered as she brushed shoulders with people. Way, way too many people for her to be comfortable. Once she talked with Triss, she'd go get her boyfriends, and they'd leave.

All around her, the sex continued. This was crazy! Never ever had these parties gotten so out of hand before. It wasn't just the kine getting treated to Kisses and orgasms, it was Kindred as well. While plenty of Kindred were now actually having sex with kine, some Kindred were having sex with each other. More than a few of the Carthians had taken advantage of each other, when one was busy Kissing a meal. A feeding vampire was a momentarily helpless, very horny creature, and a horny friend could easily turn that into a sexual situation. And they were.

Beatrice, Jennifer, and Sándor were near the stairway, where they could stand beside it so they had at least one flank not surrounded by sex.

"Hi Triss. J-Jen. Sándor," she said once she got close.

"Tash," Triss said at her, smiling. It was always a little disturbing, Triss's smile. Such a beautiful face, but the crocodile teeth where cheeks should have been always threw her off, until she adjusted. But, it was great to see the young Nos smile again. "Surprised you're still here. Your boys are, uh, yeah." She gestured toward Matthew and Arturo.

A few women had approached the two werewolves, and were blatantly flirting with them. The three vampires had fed, judging from the smiles on their faces and warm tints in their skin, and all three were likely looking for someone to satisfy their Blush-awakened urges. Jealousy crept up Tash's spine, but she dismissed it with a shrug. She trusted her boyfriends, and it was only natural that the werewolves would be feeling the impact of the bubbling sexuality in the room, more than the other races.

Once she left the party with them, she knew what was going to happen. They were going to take her, pin her down, and do naughty things to her, even if she said ‘no, please, stop’, just like Marge. Which sounded horrible! Horrible, bad, mean, and ... tantalizing.

“They’ll b-be fine. I wanted to ... um, I d-don’t know. Check up on you? I missed the fight, and I feel guilty.”

Triss laughed and shrugged. “It wouldn’t have mattered. Everything was finished by Jack, in the end. And Sándor, I suppose.” She gestured to the man beside her, his arm still locked with Jen’s.

Sándor’s expression wasn’t too different than Tash’s. He didn’t want to be at the party either. But, unlike Tash, it looked like he was uncomfortable with all the sex. Not that Tash was comfortable with it, but considering the twists and turns her life had taken lately, being in a ball that was evolving into an orgy, was not all that overwhelming. Being almost shoulder-to-shoulder with them was overwhelming, but the fact many were half naked, and fucking either thralls, ghouls, or each other, only hit a six or seven on her embarrassment scale; it would have hit a nine, just a few years ago.

Sándor was a gorgeous man. A little tall, and thinner than her boyfriends, but since his shirt was open, she could see he was nothing but muscle. His buzzed dark hair, dreamy blue eyes, and hard chin, combined with the dark gruff on his face, were very attractive, and she smiled at him as they made eye contact. He looked away a second later, eyes yanked by the sounds of moans and groans. The Kindred did a good job of being quiet as they Kissed and fucked. The humans and the werewolves, not so much.

Tash watched the Begotten for a few seconds, analyzing. He seemed very closed off, stoic even, and it only added to his attraction. No wonder Jennifer seemed so intent on cracking his shell. And there was the gargoyle monster too, Natasha remembered that well. It’d been enormous, imposing, terrifying, and strangely majestic, even handsome, in a ‘oh god it’s going to eat me’ kinda way.

“Look at this, look at this,” Jennifer said, looking to the hunters. Isabella’s troupe had surrounded them, to the point it looked like a bunch of lions circling prey. Dennis and Harcourt each had hands down their pants, the hands of female Kindred, and several of them at that. Marge still had three men with their hands inside her dress, fondling, massaging, fingering.

“Think we should ... d-d-do something?” Tash said

Jennifer shook her head. “Oh come now. They’re perfectly safe, and the least they can do to repay Antoinette and Jack for sparing their lives, is share their blood. Though, I suspect by the time the ball is over, the three of them will be catatonic.”

Tash rolled her eyes, but watched a little longer. The way the three men pushed themselves onto Marge despite her weak struggles, and the obvious pleasure in her eyes, was just too damn erotic, and familiar. It was giving her ideas for her next movie.

“How are you, Sándor?” Tash said. “Uncomfortable? Me t-too.”

“This is...” The man looked around at the evolving sexual display, and carried a tiny frown for a second, before he turned into stone again. “I’m not used to so much open sex.”

“You said you were a lot older than you look,” Beatrice said. “I’m sure you’ve been around vampires before.”

“Yes, but ... never this close.” Sándor nodded his head slowly, but his eyes flicked around to some more sexual displays. Brianna was still being fucked, and she wasn’t too far from them, around the corner of the staircase where it met the wall. She had her hands on the Ventrue’s shoulders, still standing, still penetrated from the front, still with her breasts pressed to his chest. The Gangrel ground against her ass, not penetrating, but Tash could see his pants were open, and his cock was wedged along the crack of her ass.

“No wonder Samantha left,” Triss said, laughing. “Holy shit, this place just exploded, didn’t it?”

“She left ... to speak with J-Jacob.”

“Ah, right.” The Nosferatu nodded, and stepped in a little closer to Natasha. “I suppose you wanted to ask what that’s about?”

“Y-Yes. I worry about her.” Samantha was far too nice and naive to be in the Ordo. Considering who her sire was, Samantha would have plenty of time to grow up into tougher, smarter Kindred under Antoinette’s protection. But she did have to grow up. In the mean time, Natasha had to worry about her fellow, young dragon. “Has Jacob spoken t-to you about her?”

“He mentioned her once. Said he thought she was cute, and interesting, cause of her eyes.”

“Her eyes?”

Triss nodded. “She has Jack’s eyes.”

Tash smiled at that. It was true. Samantha had Jack’s eyes, and their capacity to say a million words with a single look. Intense eyes.

“Jacob’s outside, t-talking with her right now. Should ... should I be worried?”

Laughing, Triss shrugged. “Uh, I’m not sure how to answer that. Jacob won’t do anything to hurt her, if that’s what you mean.”

A tricky situation. Tash couldn’t outright say she didn’t trust Jacob to not do something to Samantha, but then again, it wasn’t like Beatrice wouldn’t already suspect Tash of suspecting that. How to play this, then? Antoinette could dance the Danse as easily as kine breathed. What would she do? She’d say something that committed to nothing, but held powerful subtext.

“Jacob ... is a d-dangerous man,” she said. “He makes p-p-people nervous.”

Jennifer and Beatrice looked at her, and their eyes widened slightly. Her words were a hint, just a tiny hint, that maybe some people didn't like that Jacob was talking to Samantha. Antoinette didn't. Daniel very much didn't. And Jack most certainly wouldn't. The Prince and the sheriff were scary foes to have, but it was Jack that the witches had seen in action. It was Jack, that the whole city was now a little scared of. It was Jack, that Natasha was warning them about.

“He is dangerous, I'll give you that,” Triss said, nodding. “But I'm keeping an eye on him. I can't imagine he's talking with Samantha for any other reason than because he thinks she's interesting. Cross my heart.”

Natasha smiled, nodded, and looked around some more. Othello was nearby, and was sharing his ghoul with a woman, a vampire of the Carthians. The poor ghoul was completely naked, dark skin visible for all to see. But, instead of being fucked from the front for a very intimate Kiss, it seemed like she'd already been Kissed, at least a little. He was fucking her from behind, hands wrapped around her hips, her breasts bouncing and her large ass rippling as it collided with his pelvis. The Carthian stood in front of Madison, pressing her chest into the woman's bare breasts, and Kissing her neck, as Othello fucked her into what must have been a fifth or sixth orgasm.

“I don't understand,” Sándor said, eyes squinting slightly as he glared around at the ever growing eroticism. “How can everyone be so comfortable with sex?”

Jennifer laughed and pat the man on the arm. “It's what happens when Kindred are at peace, and we have no need to fight for food. When we can enjoy the hunt and the pleasure the Kiss brings and gives, things get sexual very quickly. Combined with the Prince's natural Daeva tendencies, and her view that sexuality should be embraced as an art form, displays such as these are inevitable." After a moment, she tapped her chin with a finger. "Though, they don't usually get so ... blatantly sexual. Kindred would normally indulge the kine, but not have sex with them. At least not here."

"I think it's the wolves' fault," Triss said, gesturing to them. "Just the smell of their horniness is bound to draw people in, flies to honey." The pack had spread out quite a bit, and at least half of the pack were sharing their blood with horny vampires. Well, the Uratha had spent many months in Dolareido now, and had made friends with various Kindred. It was only a matter of time before more vampires than Tash or Tilly got to sink their teeth into them.

"You can smell them specifically?" Sándor said.

The three women raised brows as they looked at him.

"You can't?" Jen said.

"No. I hunt by sight."

Ah, like an eagle or something. Well, he was a gargoyle. If it was his Horror's nature to stand on top of super tall buildings, and look down below for tasty targets, quality eyesight over smell made sense.

"We c-can smell it," Tash said. "And, if we can, the Uratha are p-p-probably—"

"Boiling in their clothes," Jennifer said, her evil grin now pointed at Natasha. She knew what Matthew and Arturo were going to do to her, the moment they were out of the party. Or possibly before they were out of the party. If Tash wasn't careful, they might grab her here and now, and fuck her where everyone could see.

Would that be so bad? It wasn't like she was as uncomfortable with sex and her body as she used to be. She'd had sex in front of Jessy and with her ghouls, before she even met Matt and Art! And now she was making sex films, because it was fun and satisfying. It was a project she could nerd-out on, obsess over, master, while also being super enjoyable, sexually speaking. And showing it to Jessy, and Eric, had been nerve racking, but also exciting. The result, knowing that it had been a very arousing watch for them, had been exhilarating, and validating. It felt good, knowing that people found her attractive, and it felt good to show off a little. Antoinette would have loved to hear her say those words.

Of course, there was a difference between the very controlled environment of a film shoot, and knowing only select people would get to see said film, than having sex in the middle of a Kindred ball, where the majority of Kindred would get to see her naked, and penetrated. Too much, way way way too much. Maybe in a hundred years, but for now, too much.

Tash spotted many of the Uratha, but Avery and Clara were gone. Avery probably left to find and have sex with her kine boyfriend, some random man she'd apparently become close with. Clara, she didn't know. Maybe she was still having sex with Jessy's ghouls? If Jessy was attempting to convert Clara into being as sexually open minded as her, it didn't seem to be working. Clara probably felt guilty, for giving into her hormones and having sex with four attractive men, rather than satisfied.

Maybe Tash should talk to Jessy about that.

Shaking out her shoulders a little, Tash adjusted her hair, and looked for her friend. "I'm going t-to talk to Jessy again. I'll speak to you guys later?" Sándor didn't say anything, and continued to look around him, bewildered by the growing orgy. Jen and Triss nodded, though. "And, uh ... Sándor, um. I know it's ... w-weird, in D-D-Dolareido. But, this is the happiest Kindred have been in ... d-decades. This is how a lot of Kindred express that. Sex, and similar things. D-Dolareido is like that.” She almost said ‘you can enjoy it too’, but didn’t. It wouldn’t be fair to push him too hard, considering what he’d lost. Hopefully Jen realized that.

It took a little while to find Jessy, but she found her at last. She expected to find her having sex with Eric, or at least groping him, but she stood with a glass of blood in her hand, still completely clothed, and not Blushing Life. The wicked grin on her face said a million words. While she was capable of ignoring her arousal, poor Eric looked around with flicking glances, not unlike an animal scanning for prey. The smell of sex, of lust, hunger, sweat, and blood, was driving him closer and closer to an animal frenzy.

“Tash,” Jessy said, “those witches looking to fuck Sándor?”

“Um, I ... don’t think so. Jen’s d-definitely trying to make him an ally, but I don’t know if she’s actively trying to have s-sex with him.” Jen was young, and Natasha still didn’t understand her very well, except that she carried the same confidence and directness most Ventrue did. At the last ball, she’d gotten her hands and breasts quite messy, pleasuring multiple kine for the feast. To see her take her time with Sándor was confusing. Then again, Sándor seemed to have more than enough self control to dismiss her if she pushed him too hard.

Beatrice was the reason. Jennifer liked Beatrice, a lot. Her behavior had changed because of her, and if Jennifer was trying to seduce Sándor, she was doing it because she thought it was a way to help Triss. The thought made Tash smile. Well, good luck to her, because Sándor looked like as hard a nut to crack as Daniel.

“Well, I hope they succeed,” Jessy said. “Dude’s fucking crazy strong.”

Eric nodded. “Yeah, he is.”

“And hot,” Jessy amended.

Eric rolled his eyes. “Yeah, I guess he is.”

Jessy laughed and thumped her boyfriend in the shoulder with her free hand. “Ha, gay.” Politically correct, Jessy was not.

Tash smiled at Eric. “Um, how are you d-doing? Things are getting ... p-pretty crazy.”

The man shook his head, a hard shake meant to dislodge rising thoughts. “Even at the craziest parties I went to at the height of my fighting career, with people getting wasted and high in every corner of the room, snorting lines off tits and silver trays, people didn’t start fucking like this.” He frowned, scratched his neck, and looked beside him at how one of the waitresses, now completely naked, was still taking her tray of blood-filled glasses around. From the look on her face, and hardness of her nipples, she was just waiting for someone to pounce her and Kiss her. “Granted, they were a lot louder, and sometimes rowdier.”

The beautiful waitress came close to Jessy, Eric, and Tash, obviously hoping for something to happen, but Jessy shooed her along, and the poor girl walked away. Natasha had no doubt someone would satisfy her before the night was done, though; Kindred only grew hornier the more they fed, not the other way around.

“I can see it,” Jessy said, “a bunch of rich fucks, hanging out at a celebrity party, cutting loose after a fight? I wonder how many of them were just kids, barely eighteen, living the highlife on their parents’ money.”

“A lot of them. Way too damn young and stupid.” No wonder Eric had a thing about wanting to clean up some of the drug abuse in Dolareido, if it’d been a part of his environment as a poor child, and then again as a rich adult. The werewolf shrugged, and took a sip of his wine. Probably not a good idea, considering that being intoxicated was why so many Uratha were giving themselves over to their arousal.

“I’m surprised you’re ... not ... I d-don’t know, groping Eric, or that waitress,” Tash said, gesturing at the naked woman walking away with the tray.

Jessy laughed. “Eric thinks I’m a hornball with no control. I’m proving him wrong.”

Poor, poor Eric. As long as Jessy didn’t Blush Life, or feast on someone, her body would remain a lifeless husk, incapable of being physically aroused. Mentally was a different matter, and Tash could see Jessy’s eyes jumping to the various sexual displays. She watched the naked waitress walk away, and then looked down at Eric’s crotch. He wasn’t erect, but he was getting there.

As if cursed by some sort of sex god, determined to make her life awkward, Matthew and Arturo joined Natasha. The two men stood behind her, leaned down, and each planted a kiss on her cheeks at the same time. So close, she could smell the hunger on them.

“This party,” Matthew said, “uh ... took off, didn’t it?”

“Yes, it did!” Jessy said, raising a glass. “Finally. I’d heard stories about how sexy these parties used to get, back before my time. Glad to see people getting Kissed and fucked in the open like this.”

“Because you want to corrupt everyone,” Eric said.

“Yes, corrupt them with the awesomeness that is sex. The Prince knows what she’s talking about. Everyone should get over their shit, and fuck in the streets.”

Arturo laughed, smiling. “I don’t think even the Prince and Invictus could suppress the news bomb of people fucking in the streets.”

Fantasy ruined, Jessy sighed and lowered her drink. “Yeah. That sucks.” Before anyone else could say anything, she smiled an evil smile and looked at Tash and her two boyfriends. “I look forward to more movies, by the way.”

Natasha frowned, squirmed, and glanced up at the two men. They blushed, but barely. They weren’t embarrassed, or at least not very much. They probably just didn’t know how to take a compliment.

Eric coughed, and did his best to not look the two men in the eyes. “It won’t be long before the Prince, or Jessy, has us all—”

“No no!” Tash said, waving her hands. “No no, no. T-Too much.”

Everyone laughed, and then stopped, as Fiona dragged Damien past them.

“Up ‘ere!”

“There’s a way up to the roof from here, yeah.”

“Then let’s go! Ah want to see the roof!”

Tash coughed, and stared at Fiona as she guided the vampire up the stairs the way the Prince had gone. She was a very horny drunk, and apparently, very intent on fucking Damien. Poor Damien. If there was anyone in Dolareido who understood Tash’s pain in balls like this, it was Damien, and now his girlfriend was dragging him off somewhere to likely have sex.

That said, Damien had a dark side. He was calm, collected, cool and quiet on the outside, like Daniel, but Tash knew better. There was an aggressive aspect to him, hidden underneath that cold exterior. If Damien could be coaxed out of his shell, he would probably be quite the sexual animal, same as Tash knew she was.

What kind of man was Damien, when he gave into arousal?

---

~~Jack~~

Mulder and Scully flew down, and perched on a nearby power line. They didn't know who Elaine was, and until they did, they were probably happier staying out of immediate reach of potential attackers. He smiled up at them, but snapped his head back to Elaine a moment later.

“All this time, and you never told me Viktor was your childe?” Antoinette said. “And ... and ... contaminated by the Strix curse?”

“I did not want that stain to be a ... a wedge between us.”

“And yet you let him come with me to Dolareido, to help forge this city.”

Elaine frowned at her, stepped up to her, and touched her arm. “I knew you could protect yourself. Daniel was with you, as was Jacob. And I did not expect Viktor to become an enemy.”

The Prince sighed, but didn't step away from her friend. “And the curse?”

“I asked Sándor,” Jack said, “if he could see the things I know give the curse away. He said she looks perfectly normal. She's not cursed.”

Antoinette raised a brow at that, but Elaine cut in before she could say anything.

“I rarely ever deal with Begotten. I had no idea they could see the curse.”

Jack nodded. “They can see the monster in everyone. They say it's difficult to pin down exactly what a Kindred's Beast looks like, except that they saw chains on mine and Julias's, and ... and that mine has ditched the chains, and is now grown, and twisted. Infected."

The two women looked at him then, and the difference in their expressions was startling. Antoinette was stuck somewhere between pity and surprise, concerned about him, and shocked about the whole situation. Elaine's was stuck somewhere between intrigue and dismay, probably unhappy that he knew her secret and that she was forced to share it. Her intrigue, on the other hand, sent a little chill through him. It wasn't sexual, but her eyes were pointed at him. Intrigue in the curse?

"You should have told me, Elaine."

"Yes, well, surely you can understand why I wanted to avoid speaking of Viktor. The man quickly became a ... cruel creature."

"Yes, I remember you introducing me to him, when he was still a neonate. A ... hazy memory, but I remember his cold, subtle rancor." Sighing, Antoinette pushed her friend's hand away. Gently, softly, but still away. "Yes, I can understand. Tony became a menace, as I have told you."

"After embracing Viktor, and enjoying the pleasures that path in life took me, I realized how ... problematic he was quickly becoming." Sighing, she shrugged, and started to slowly pace in a circle. But before she could continue, Jack jumped in.

"You got rid of the curse. I assume that's why? Because you saw the sort of person Viktor was becoming?"

"There were many reasons. And many were greatly personal, reasons I do not wish to divulge. Some of them are lost to time, and the haze that curses all elders."

He frowned. He needed details. Her avoiding giving them was a big red flag waving in the night sky. She should have been bombarding him with details, offering help, doing something to solve his dilemma, if she really was Antoinette's friend. Why wasn't she?

"I want this curse gone, Elaine," he said.

She raised a brow at that. "Do you?"

"Yes."

A small frown flickered across her face, before she strutted up to him. He did him damnedest to not stare at her breasts through the see-through dress.

"Why?"

"Why?" His frown only grew, even as hers disappeared. "Because —" He stopped, and looked to Antoinette. This was a conversation they should have been having in private, just him and his lover. He didn't like exposing this part of himself, especially to a stranger. But Elaine was his great grandsire. He had to say something to her, if only to try and get on her good side. She wasn't infected anymore, and maybe she could help him accomplish the same. "Because the curse is a sick and twisted thing. It crawls into my thoughts and ... christ, it's fucked up, Elaine."

The flicker of pain on Antoinette's face cut into his insides. Elaine didn't show pain, just more of that intrigue.

"I can only assume," Antoinette said, "that the reason you have come to Dolareido this time, is a desire to interact with Jack, now that his curse has been unleashed."

Elaine slid behind him, and he struggled to keep looking ahead to Antoinette. If Antoinette was comfortable with Elaine stepping behind him, then she didn't think her old friend would suddenly attack him. Still, it made him nervous, and he glanced to the side to see how Mulder and Scully were reacting. They watched, like hawks.

It made him especially nervous, when Elaine set her hands on his shoulders, still behind him.

“Yes, I admit it. I have come to ... bear witness, to this moment. I have come to document, study, and learn. I have come to understand this thing that my sire had sealed away from her, that I abandoned, and—”

“Susanna,” Jack winced with the name. “Your sire Susanna.”

“Susanna. I have ... forgotten nearly everything about her, memories worn by the sands of time.”

“Know what happened to her?”

“No. I imagine she is dead.” Elaine stepped out from behind him, and leaned her ass against the railing beside him. “With her lust for carnage, I imagine someone has killed her. There is no way she could have survived all these centuries with no one knowing about her.”

Antoinette watched, silent, analyzing. This whole thing had come as quite a shock to her, too, and Jack could see the frustration and pain hidden in her stone gaze. She felt betrayed by Elaine's secrets.

“How did you get rid of the curse?” he said.

“I do not know.”

He turned to face her directly. “Um, what?” Well, that would explain why she wasn't bombarding him with details on what to do to fix his problem.

“It was centuries ago. I have ... blurry memories to offer you, but I fear they will not aid you.”

Sighing, he shrugged, and leaned his ass against the railing a few feet from her, eyes pointed down at the roof underneath them. “I guess it was pretty dumb of me to expect a ... convenient solution to my problem.”

“Indeed,” Elaine said. “I am not here to solve your problems. I am here because I am a dragon, an Architect of Terror, with a need to know and learn of the Beast. That does not mean I will not aid you if I can. And...” With a quiet chuckle, she gestured to Antoinette, hand outstretched, and waited with open palm. “I wanted to visit my old friend, and this new lover she speaks of, this young man who has filled a hole left by that loathsome Tony. Knowing that it was my great grandchilde that has helped her, was a secret I was dying to share with her. But I did not know how, until you forced my hand.”

With a heavy sigh, Antoinette walked over, took Elaine’s hand, and pulled her into a hug. Seeing Antoinette hug someone almost as tall, and almost as busty as her, was a strange mix of emotional, and comical. Antoinette didn’t normally let her guard down like that, but with Elaine, she did. The only people Jack had ever seen Antoinette be even half this open with, was himself and her ghouls. And it was funny how the two of them were too busty to actually get in a proper hug without things getting in the way. Funny, and erotic.

Apparently he was staring, because Antoinette, looking at him over Elaine’s shoulder, smiled. Slowly, she turned her friend around, and resumed looking at him over Elaine’s shoulder, though now with Elaine facing him, her back to Antoinette’s stomach.

“Jack has become a grand force in my life,” she said, and her hands set on Elaine’s hips. “And I in his.”

He nodded, the wariness and distrust he felt for his ancient sire slowly fading. If Antoinette still trusted her, even after all that, he could trust her too. A little.

“Yeap. She’s the love of my life.”

“Aww,” Elaine crooned.

“And,” Antoinette continued, “as I have told you, old friend, nothing delights me, or arouses me, quite like seeing his eyes go wide as I bathe him in new, delicious wonders.”

Uh oh. He froze, eyes going wide, just like Antoinette said they would, as she started to trace one hand up Elaine’s bare stomach and sternum.

Elaine didn’t flinch. Hell, she looked perfectly comfortable with what Antoinette was doing, like it was a dance they’d done a million times. “I see what you mean. Those eyes of his are ... enticing. I am filled with a desire to ... I do not know, draw something from them?” Her hands found Antoinette’s, rested on her wrists, and her gaze stayed on him as her smile grew.

“I know how you feel, my dear. His gaze stirs hungers in me, and I feel a need to extract his eyes and feast upon them.” His eyes opened wider, and she laughed. “Metaphorically, of course.” Her second hand joined the first, teasing fingers running up and down the bare chest between the straps of Elaine’s dress.

Until she pulled them apart, so the straps sat outside her breasts. Jack froze, eyes locked onto the blonde woman’s enormous bosom, and he gulped. Elaine still didn’t flinch, but even with his eyes locked onto her chest, he could see her mischievous smile grow, along with Antoinette’s.

Oh god, they really were similar. Two powerful women who liked making people squirm, were looking at him like he was a tasty dessert they were preparing to devour. Every moment he stood there, he was a statue with jaw dropped and hands stuck on the railing. Two of them. Two of them! He couldn't handle one!

Antoinette's hands cupped Elaine's bust, and her fingers and palms sank into the overflowing softness of her friend's breasts. And, because she knew damn well it'd hypnotize him until he'd be drooling if he'd been Blushing, she gently bounced Elaine's breasts in her palms. The rippling waves of softness stirred a groan from him he didn't even realize he'd made until the two women were chuckling.

"Oh yes," Elaine said, "I can definitely see why you are so enraptured with him now. The way he gazes upon us, it is ... intense."

"My love wears his emotions openly with me."

"Indeed. I have not had a man lust after me so ... honestly, and wholly, in decades."

Finally, Jack managed to find some measure of control, and gulped. Still had his eyes locked onto Elaine's huge breasts, especially because Antoinette refused to stop playing with them, but his mouth did start working again.

"It's, uh, a bad habit for a Kindred. I need a better poker face." He should have been hiding all his emotions behind a mask, but it just wasn't a skill he'd ever master, at least not when it came to sex.

It was surprising, how quickly Antoinette had gotten over the secrets Elaine had shared. Was it because they'd been friends for centuries? Was this just how elders behaved, dismissing monumental issues as minor hiccups compared to multiple lifetimes of friendship? It was strangely endearing, but he was still suspicious as all hell of Elaine, suspicious and utterly hypnotized by what the Prince was doing to her tits. Jiggle. Jiggle.

“Perhaps,” Elaine said, “but it is ... deliriously ... beguiling.” Her hands entwined with Antoinette’s, but didn’t stop her. The white-haired, taller vampire continued to play with Elaine’s breasts, bouncing, massaging, gently squeezing and softly kneading, and Elaine did nothing but watch him.

“Just wait my dear, until you see his eyes gazing upon you, when his length sits between your breasts, gushing white onto your skin.” Antoinette, devil smile unwavering, set a kiss on Elaine’s earlobe, and then lower, lips trailing kisses down Elaine’s neck until her friend moaned. And all the while, she never broke eye contact with him, drinking in his shock and arousal like it was some kind of drug.

Oh fuck. Seeing Antoinette kiss Elaine’s neck was like a fireworks explosion in Jack’s mind, and all the images Antoinette had planted in his head of the orgies she’d shared with Elaine, were suddenly replaying with a thousand times the resolution.

“I think I would very much love to see those eyes, in exactly that situation.” She reached out for him, and before he knew what he was doing, he took the single step needed to be within touching distance. He didn’t fully trust Elaine, and was pretty sure she was still hiding something, but for some dumb reason, he went to her anyway. Her right hand touched his sternum, and her index danced down his skin to find his abs, where she traced the shapes she found.

These two were a dangerous pair. This wasn’t like with Ashley and Julee, where Antoinette directed them in everything. He could see the same confidence, and reservoir of experience in Elaine’s eyes as Antoinette’s, and the same brutal intelligence. Scarier, was how Antoinette didn’t seem to mind Elaine making physical contact with him at her own choosing, something she’d never let anyone else do. Even now, Antoinette was watching him, drinking in his gaze, and very purposefully making a show of her friend’s body while kissing her neck, all for the sake of making him hornier, and hornier, and hornier. Judging from the soft sighs of Elaine, it was a kiss she was both familiar with, and one being done in just the way she liked it.

“You...” He forced down the rising panic. It was an old sensation, the sudden shock and uncertainty of being in front of a beautiful woman who’d shown interest in him. Most women, in romantic situations, could be scary as fuck for any man to deal with. These two, tall, busty, half-naked women with mountains of power and money, were utterly horrifying in their sheer confidence.

“Yesssss?” Elaine said as her hand slid down and down, until her fingers started to slide into his pants. If he’d been Blushing Life, he’d have been hard as a rock, eyes still unable to peel away from what Antoinette was doing with her friend’s breasts.

“You, uh ... you’re—”

The roof door swung open with a bang, and Jack jumped up with a half spin. Mulder and Scully cawed and flapped their wings in surprise. Elaine and Antoinette barely moved, though when they saw Fiona and Damien come up, Antoinette gracefully slid her friend’s dress back on over her bust.

“Ah’ve never been up ‘ere!” Fiona’s voice, cheerful and fun. And drunk. “Bet ah could piss on someone below!”

Damien, pulled by a bouncing Fiona, stepped up onto the roof. He looked at Jack, Jack looked at him, and then the Mekhet looked at the two women standing around.

“Per ... haps we should go back downstairs, Fiona?”

“No!” Jack said. Everyone blinked at him. “Um, no, uh ... we’re done up here. Right, Antoinette?” He knew his expression must have said something like ‘please save me from this extremely squirmy situation’. Part of him screamed at him, telling him to bathe in the divine land of unending, enormous boobs. Another part wanted him to back off, until he could get a better sense of who Elaine was; much as he trusted Antoinette, she hadn't known Elaine as well as she thought she had. Another part of him found the idea of two elders, two obscenely strong vampires with centuries of sexual expertise, turning him into a boy toy for an evening, terrifying and thrilling. It was making him hesitate, like everyone does the first time they go skydiving.

He knew that look in Elaine's eyes, though. Sure, she probably had all sorts of secrets, but the look in her eyes was one he saw on Antoinette all the time: desire. He'd expected the desire to be pointed at Antoinette, but Elaine looked at him like she wanted to do ... well, the things Antoinette liked to do. And it wasn't like he didn't want to, it was just a bit scary, looking at the two five-hundred-year-old women who'd seen more sex than anyone, ever.

Plus, he needed to stay on Elaine's good side, if he wanted to learn how she got rid of her curse. She said she didn't know, but he doubted that was true. Even if it happened three hundred years ago, or longer, he could not believe a memory like that wouldn't be chiseled into her brain.

Ok, so, plan, stay on Elaine's good side. Recover!

"I would like to get together later though," he said, looking at Elaine and Antoinette.

That was enough to make the two women smile. Antoinette's mischievous, devil smile was always enough to send a thrill through his body. Elaine's smile was almost identical, and that made it terrifying.

"Yes, I would enjoy that," Elaine said. "Ann?"

"Oui. I do believe I would." She gave Elaine another small kiss on the neck, let her go, and the two women walked toward the door Fiona had just opened. Fiona stepped aside, eyes wide at what she'd just witnessed. The two vampires left the roof, leaving Jack alone with Fiona and Damien.

“That ... is a dangerous woman,” Damien said to him, once a few seconds had past.

“Aye. Ye know ‘er, Jack?”

“I don’t, not really. But ... eh, I’ll tell you later.” He took a slow, useless breath, and stood at the top of the doorway.

Elaine, was gorgeous. Utterly fucking gorgeous. And from remembering how casually Antoinette had pulled the girl’s dress apart, exposing her breasts, and then played with them, it was clear what Antoinette, and Elaine, had in mind. It really was like that first night with Antoinette, the nervousness and shyness all coming back to him. Maybe it was because Elaine was his great grandsire, and he’d been given a glimpse of her past. He knew what Elaine looked like three hundred years or more ago, what she did, what the city looked like, what the kine around her looked like, and how she fed on them. It made it so much more real, how crazy old those two vampires were, how much experience they had, and how little he had.

Like Garry said, he’d been given a nuke, but he was still just a child, a young boy compared to the elders. And two ancient, beautiful, ridiculously sexy women, were eying him like he’d look good tied to a bed, naked, with hot candle wax being dripped onto his stomach.

Gulp.

---

~~Antoinette~~

She looked back to her love, and smiled. To her utmost delight, Jack had been completely enraptured by her teasing using Elaine’s body. She had been concerned the man might be uncomfortable with her touching another vampire, but the sheer wonder in his eyes when she had touched her friend's breasts, had said everything. As long as she drew a clear boundary for Elaine that she was not to cross, as she had with Ashley and Julee, Antoinette was free to use her friend to test the limits of her love's sex drive.

She laughed quietly to herself. Faded memories reminded her she had indulged in sexual fantasies with Elaine, long ago when the two only recently entered their elder years. For centuries thereafter, they expressed their sexuality whenever they met, and Antoinette had invited the woman to join her in many erotic forays. At that time, such dances were exciting, with her still new to the power of an elder vampire capable of enthralling entire groups of kine. To explore such extreme eroticism, often with Elaine at her side, had been some of the most enjoyable nights of her life, ages past.

Jack made her feel as if she were experiencing those nights once more. Jack made her feel young again.

But, Elaine had kept a secret from her. Viktor, a capable Ventrue that had quickly risen in power in the Invictus in Europe, was her childe. The man had decided to join Antoinette, when she left Europe for greener pastures, and only now did she realize it was likely a decision influenced by their secret. Viktor, ancilla at the time, had promised to help her build a new city, where Kindred could live in a utopia, and he likely only agreed because he knew of her relationship with his sire.

Elaine had been ashamed of Viktor, in much the same way Antoinette had grown ashamed of Tony. Perhaps Elaine thought the curse responsible for Viktor's cruelty, and had performed whatever ritual she had to be rid of it in response to that. Perhaps something else had triggered her seeking of the ritual. Or, perhaps the ritual had been performed upon her against her will, by a third party.

The curse of torpor, and being an elder. How many memories had she lost to time, and the erosion torpor and its chaotic dreams buried the mind in? It had been ages since her last deep torpor, to let the rising blood lust all Kindred suffer settle. How many memories had it stripped from her? Even now, as she thought back to the wonderful times she had shared with her good friend, there were gaps. Had Elaine already sired Viktor when she met her, or did that come later? Had Antoinette sensed anything strange with Elaine when she first met her, perhaps indications of the curse? Entire decades, lost to a frustrating mist, and twisted images that lied to her, memories altered by the vivid dreams of torpor.

She stopped at the top of the stairs that led to the second floor, and looked down at the paranormals of her city.

“Well then,” Elaine said beside her. “It seems things have ... escalated, while we spoke.”

Antoinette laughed. “Indeed.” Sex was everywhere. It did not hold a crown to the younger years, when Dolareido was small, and before electricity, but that did not change that the ball had succumbed to the sexual frenzy she had partly hoped it would. The Kiss was wonderful, and Kindred could spread neither disease nor pregnancy. Why not encourage her city to indulge, and share in that pleasure?

“Holy shit,” Jack said, looking around from the stop of the stairs. “Uh, ok, things kinda exploded. Um...” The look in his eyes was obvious. His mind already wandered with thoughts of Antoinette and Elaine, thoughts planted and nurtured by her, and now he was treated to the sight of dozens of Kindred Kissing, kissing, and sexually engaging with dozens of thralls, ghouls, and surprisingly, Uratha.

“How delicious.” Antoinette licked her lips, held out her hand for her lover, and started down the stairs. He fell in beside her, holding her hand and looking left and right in bewilderment.

People were beginning to leave, either satisfied, or eager to pursue sexual endeavors in privacy. Jessy and Eric left, with Natasha, Matthew, and Arturo immediately behind them. Maria was gone, but she did not feast during the balls, and always left early. Michael and Garry shared a few final words with Kindred of their covenant, and were soon to be off. The witches remained, poor Sándor trapped by circumstance, and Jennifer's arm. Jacob—“Uh, where's Mom?” Jack said.

Frowning, Antoinette looked across to the room to Daniel. A quick glance and nod toward the door from him, was all that was needed for a conclusion to be drawn. Samantha was outside, with Jacob. Oh dear.

Surprisingly, Athalia remained, standing with her sheriff, and looking out at the crowd with a strange mix of annoyance, moroseness, and arousal. Samantha had done more to crack Athalia's shell, than anything Antoinette had ever seen. Perhaps now the woman could let herself feel joy for once in her life. Perhaps Daniel could be the one to show her some.

“I believe my childe is outside,” Antoinette said. “And, I believe I would like to depart for the evening. Perhaps we should say goodbye to her, as we leave?” With a small wave of her hand, Ashley and Julee emerged from the crowd, untouched and fully clothed, though perhaps a bit drunk, and quite aroused from how their nipples pressed through their thin dresses.

“We're going to leave her here?” Jack said.

“Do you believe her in danger?”

“I...” He frowned as he looked around again. Sex, sex, and more sex, but the room and those within were all allies, or at least, neutral parties. “I guess I don't. Just ... it's been so damn long since we could walk around without worrying about a hunter sniping us or something. I can't picture Mom out there, just ... being a vampire, doing her own thing, living her own life."

Antoinette ran a finger over her lover's head, kissed him on his forehead, and guided him through the crowd. Ashley and Julee fell in step beside her, though the two aroused little creatures kept their hungry eyes on Elaine.

"Look," Antoinette said, gesturing to the hunters as she walked past. The three of them were lost to the bliss of the Kiss, enraptured in pleasure, and from the looks on their faces, orgasm. They were kine, after all, drunk and helpless to fend off the many Kindred that wished a taste. Whatever hesitance they might have had was but a paltry defense, against the seductive powers of Kindred, especially Isabella and her Majesty. But, the hunters were safe from physical harm, and would be sent back to Antoinette's tower before the night was done.

"I hope they don't mind, come the morning," Jack said.

She shrugged. "They were our enemies. Every moment they are alive, is a moment I have given them. I am sure they would happily share their blood, and their bodies, with Kindred, rather than die." Not that she planned to kill them, but it was within her power to do so, and the hunters knew it. And, despite the frightening situation the hunters found themselves in, she could see relief in their eyes, that they were not to be killed, only Kissed. Relief turned to surprise, when the kine found themselves succumbing to pleasures they had never experienced before.

They walked past Daniel and Athalia on the way out. It surprised Antoinette to no end that Athalia remained, both for the growing sexual display, but also the obvious disdain Athalia must have felt for Jack and the others. She held polite, quiet, somber conversation with the sheriff, and as Antoinette walked past with her lover, Athalia grew silent, and looked at them.

Elaine, Ashley, and Julee all gave the woman space, and waited at the doors of the Black Hall, as Jack made eye contact with Athalia. Antoinette remained beside her lover, though she did not stare at Athalia, keeping her gaze on Daniel instead. So long had she known her sheriff, that it took little more than subtle twitches of their mouths and eyes to convey simple messages. Yes, Athalia was dangerous and unstable. No, she would not attack Jack. Yes, there was hope for her.

“Athalia,” Jack said at last, “I—”

“Don’t,” she said in return. “Just don’t. It’s over, and ... I was wrong ... to do what I did.”

The words hurt her. Pain dripped from Athalia so thick, Antoinette could almost see the black ooze of it splash on the floor. The mother’s eyes fell, and she shuddered as she struggled to contain her misery. Mother no longer.

“I’m ... sorry,” Jack said, wincing. Before the situation could turn worse, he walked out of the Black Hall.

“For all the solace useless words can provide,” Antoinette said to the Begotten, “understand that I am glad you came, Athalia. Paranormal creatures should not war with each other.” And there were other reasons she was content. Athalia’s presence pleased Daniel, for one. And it had brought new strength to Samantha, for another.

“No, I suppose they shouldn’t.”

“Indeed. Good night, Athalia.” Antoinette offered the grieving woman a small nod, before she followed the little Ventrue out of the Black Hall.

The night could not have gone better.

Outside, with Elaine, Jack, and her pets in tow, Antoinette walked toward the wide driveway where a driver waited for her. Tiny squeaks of pleasure filled the air, and she looked up. Fiona dangled over the ornate, marble railing of the roof of the Black Hall. Her dress had been pulled down to expose her large, freckled breasts, and they rippled underneath her as someone thrust into her from out of sight. Not out of sight for long, as Damien pulled Fiona up to stand, came in close to her to press his chest to her back, and held her to him, hands clutching at her body, one hand sinking into her breast while another wrapped her stomach. The Begotten looked drained, and from the look in Damien's eyes, he had Kissed her, taken of her deeply, and was now unleashing his arousal upon the defenseless woman. He sank his teeth into her for what must have been a second, or perhaps third Kiss, and began to drain the helpless creature as she squirmed, trapped on her man's length, unable to escape, as the Kiss forced a climax upon her.

Such a beautiful sight, Antoinette found herself watching. Jack coughed, and the ghouls giggled as they looked up to watch for a little while too. If Damien was aware, he did not show it. The man was lost to his hunger, his desire, hands groping and squeezing Fiona's naked chest roughly, with hard thrusts that had her whole body quivering, each earning a little squeak from her.

Antoinette had not imagined Damien could let himself go so completely. In her experience, creatures like him were wrapped in complexes so deep, no joy could be found within their fortress of solitude, bitterness, delusion, and hypocrisy. Claude Frollo, Damien was not. Upon her Black Hall, the man devoured his girlfriend, fucked her with reckless abandon, and gave into his desires.

The more she learned of the man, the less she disliked him.

“Mom?” Jack's voice.

On a concrete bench, near some of the sculpted bushes that decorated the grass around the Black Hall, sat Samantha and Jacob. They had been chatting, and laughing, until Jack spoke up.

Before Antoinette could say anything, Jack marched over to them, the impact of his feet a touch harsher than necessary. While it brought Antoinette much joy whenever Jack exercised some of his more masculine traits, there was a time and place for it. Now was not such a time or place, and she almost stopped him from interfering.

But she did follow him, as did Elaine.

“Jacob,” Jack said. “Talking to my mom?”

“I was talking to him,” Samantha said, frowning at her son. “Can’t I do that?”

Jack frowned at the grinning elder, though he spoke to his mother. “You can. I just don’t think it’s a good idea.”

For all Jack’s obvious annoyance with the situation, Antoinette could not help but continue to smile. It was pointless to tell Jacob to stay away from her childe, strong and talented as the man was. Unless Antoinette locked her childe up in her tower, never to leave, it was impossible to keep Jacob from interacting with her, or whomever he wished, for that matter. The young Ventrue had to know that.

“I’m starting to feel judged!” Jacob said brightly, and he placed the tips of his right hand’s fingers against his chest. “Can’t I have a nice, evening chat with a beautiful woman?”

Antoinette’s smile hardened. What game was Jacob playing?

“Oh, stop!” Samantha dismissed his compliment with a tiny flick of her hand, and she radiated joy from every pore. Jacob had thoroughly demolished whatever defensive measures Samantha had, with a simple word of admiration. Teaching her childe to defend herself against the words of others would take time, but Jacob was a master at manipulating people. Samantha would never be able to defend herself against him.

But, Jacob had no reason to come after her, unless he genuinely found her attractive or interesting, or both. Surely Antoinette's old friend would not attempt to use her childe to manipulate her? He was smarter than that. If push came to shove, Antoinette would destroy him in retaliation, and he knew that. For all the man's grand plans and hidden motives, he knew that she could kill him, if the situation was forced. But he had no reason to force her hand, and she had no desire to kill him.

In the end, she trusted him with her childe, to an extent. And if her request of Beatrice, to help the man out of his pit of depression over Minerva's death proved fruitful, who knew how he would evolve?

But regardless, she was not stupid enough to not keep a close eye on the old Nosferatu.

"I was talking to your lovely mother about history," Jacob said, head pointed at Jack. "Imagine my surprise when I learned she's never left Dolareido."

Jack folded his arms across his chest, frown unending. "You haven't left Dolareido in hundreds of years."

"Says you!" Chuckling, Jacob gestured to the streets beyond. "I've taken a few trips to various places, over the past few centuries. I was in France during World War II, for a few months. I was in South America a century ago."

"Oh, what was South America like?" Samantha asked.

“Hot. Very hot.”

“You were close to the equator then?”

“Yeap. I was looking for some ancient, lost text about different rituals the indigenous people used to perform, many hundreds of years ago.” Jacob gave Jack one last, quick smile, before turning his head to Samantha. “I was borderline naked, crawling on my stomach through the pitch black of the jungle. The foliage was so thick, I had to ditch the clothes. Centipedes crawled over my skin. Monkeys howled. An encounter with a jaguar taught the jungle I wasn’t to be bothered, but I didn’t expect the lesson to last. And worse, sunrise was in a couple hours.”

Jacob proceeded to regale Samantha with a tale of adventure, with the discovery of ancient ruins, and the horrors that awaited within. And she was enraptured. Jacob was a masterful storyteller, and edges of his rather obtuse personality shone through as delightful accents to the pacing. Samantha only grew more enamored, and she watched the man with hypnotized eyes, drinking in every gesture the old Nosferatu made as he told his story.

“Mom,” Jack said. “I ... I’ll ... see you later, ok?” The hesitation in his voice painted a clear picture for Antoinette, and likely for Jacob and Elaine as well. He wanted to get angry, and act the protective father for his daughter. But for all his greater wisdom and intelligence in matters of their second lives, he was the son, Samantha the mother. “Jacob, don’t do anything—”

“I’m half a millennium old, Jack. I know how to be responsible. I’ll make sure your mom’s home before sunrise.”

“I’ll be fine, Jack, really. Jacob’s not so bad.” And as she said ‘bad’, she smiled.

Antoinette could barely contain her own, resurfaced smile. Not due to her child’s strange interest in Jacob; she also wished the woman would leave the old man be. No, it was the inflection she used in the phrase ‘Jacob’s not so bad’. It was flirtatious, obvious without being too obvious, a compliment handled with a social mastery Antoinette expected of older Daeva. Delightful.

“Come, my love. Your mother will be fine.” She set her hand on Jack’s shoulder, drew him toward her, and offered Jacob a final glance. A flicker of knowing bounced between them.

Jacob was difficult to read. He always was. Even if he had eyes, and did not wear a bandage to hide them, he would have been as predictable as a chaotic wind. But she could see the hint of understanding in the muscles of his face, when he looked her way.

I know you are up to something, Jacob. Harm my childe, and I will kill you.

And of course, the man returned a wordless reply.

You’ll never know what I’m up to. I’m too good at this. But relax, your childe’s safe.

She frowned, but wiped it away before her childe could notice. “Samantha, I expect you to return to the tower before the night is over.”

“Yes, sire.”

A final glance for Jacob, before she left with Elaine, Jack, and her precious ghouls.

---

“Jack,” she said, once they stepped onto the stairs, leading down into the maze beneath her Elysium Tower, “do you mind if I speak to Elaine alone?”

“Um, sure.” He seemed hesitant. No doubt, he wished to speak to his great grandsire in private as well. “I’ll wait for you in the rec room, B4?”

“Very well. Ashley, Julee, go with him.”

The two ghouls nodded, and joined Jack down the stairs to disappear around a corner. Leaving Elaine and Antoinette alone.

Elaine knew her way around the tower. As much as Antoinette updated it routinely with technological advancements, the purpose of individual rooms remained largely unchanged, and Elaine headed toward one of her smaller rooms, one meant for updating journals and recording personal developments. Sound proof, perfect for speaking, and in the modern era, for recording data privately.

They stepped into the small room, and Antoinette turned on the light, before sitting down at the large, beautiful, wooden table in the center of the black marble floor.

“You have been keeping secrets,” she said.

Elaine laughed, sat down opposite from her, and snuggled into the luxurious leather chair. “As have you, and Jacob, and Daniel, and the others.”

“Yes, but this is not a secret of the Danse. This is personal, Elaine. I...” Sighing, Antoinette pulled her hair over a shoulder, and combed it as she looked down at the table while she folded her legs. “Why did you not tell me?”

“About Viktor?”

“About Jack, and the curse.”

Elaine matched her sigh, and managed a weak shrug. “I am free of its reins, Ann.”

“But I am not.” A frown sneaked its way onto Antoinette’s face, and it took concentration to dismiss it. “The curse now infects my love, and my city. If it only affected him internally, that would be a different matter, but it does not. It expresses its power and desires outwardly, and has summoned the media to my city, ravenous for answers for the unusual.”

“That, is part of the reason I am here, as I am sure you have deduced.” Elaine traced a finger along the wood, eyes on Antoinette. “I wish to learn what I can of the curse, and if possible, to help your little Ventrue be free of it.”

“Did you expect to do this without me learning of the connection?”

“Maybe?”

Laughing, Antoinette shook her head. “What I cannot understand, is why you did not tell me about Viktor, and the curse? Surely you must have realized the curse was dangerous.”

“It was centuries ago, Ann. I cannot remember Susanna, and I can barely remember embracing Viktor.”

“But you did remember. And you remembered the curse.”

Elaine shook her head. “A lingering shadow in endless mist, at best.”

“Do not hide behind your age, Elaine. When you embraced Viktor, your memory would have been intact. When you let Viktor join me in my plans to create a new city, riding the colonial wave, you must have known, then.”

“I ... hoped, perhaps, the curse would fade away. I can remember, and I know I have it written, that I was forever unable to free the curse from its binds, and use its true power.”

Antoinette squinted her eyes at her friend. “You attempted to?”

“I ... did. I can barely remember, and I did not catalog my efforts well. I have written some remarks about Susanna, small things, hinting at her great power.” The poor woman shuddered as she dug through her memories. A painful process for any elder, to dig through memories destroyed by the centuries and torpor. “I scratched the surface, I believe, but in the end I failed.”

“All that, and you never thought to warn your friend that Viktor carried this infection?”

“I should have, but it was a shadow of my past I wanted to forget. And, after my failed attempts to unleash the curse’s power, I did all I could to be rid of the nightmarish presence.” Again, more shudders from her old friend. “I found some way to remove it, and I broke all contact with Viktor.”

“You did not offer Viktor a way to remove the curse?”

“I ... never told him of the curse.”

Antoinette sighed heavily, and buried her forehead in one hand, while the other continued to comb her hair. “Why?”

“I was unable to summon it. I assumed Viktor would not be able to either. And the idea that maybe he would manage to accomplish what I could not, and unleash its power, was terrifying. After my own failed attempts to summon it...” The poor woman. It hurt, to watch her suffer as she dug through her faded memories. Antoinette almost asked her to stop, but this conversation was too important. Their friendship depended on it.

“Why go on a quest to remove the curse?”

“I am not sure. My journals mention that the curse ... clawed at me.” She laughed as she looked down. “I wiped it from my past, and cast Viktor aside.”

“Is that why the two of you avoided each other, during your visits?”

“I imagine yes. And, he had come into his own, without my help. I suspect he resented me, ignorant of my reasoning. Or ... that, perhaps, the curse wore away at him, and devolved him.” Elaine leaned in closer, and a hint of vulnerability passed her face. “It had crossed my mind, to perhaps speak to the man, after your stories of how much he had become ... twisted, and cruel, crueler than I could have imagined. But then you told me of Julias, and how great a man he was.”

“Julias was a great man, and ... and gone.”

“And gone. I cannot imagine the pain your little Ventrue is going through.”

The two shared a sigh, and Antoinette reached out to pat her friend on the hand. “You thought, if Julias could be such a good man, surely the curse was something that faded between sires?”

“Yes. And now, to learn that my great grandchilde is not only plagued by it, but has unleashed it? And that he is your beloved? I had to come.” She withdrew her hand from Antoinette’s, and looked up. Misery draped her shoulders. “Why must our past haunt us so?”

Elaine was not telling her the whole truth. Something else was on her mind, and if Antoinette had to guess, it was something to do with the curse, and the Coils Elaine pursued. She was a master of Coils that dealt with the Beast, and Jack was likely of great interest to her, professionally. And perhaps personally, since the boy had managed to do something Elaine admitted to not being able to do: free the curse from its chains.

Antoinette trusted her friend with much, but she was no fool. She would have to keep an eye on her friend, as one dragon competing with another. But, in matters personal, she felt far more comfortable sharing her secrets and feelings with Elaine.

“Such is our curse. And ... I must apologize, for plotting Viktor’s demise.”

Elaine chuckled and shrugged. “I bear you no ill will for that. Tony died as well, did he not? You plotted to kill both of them.”

“Yes, and...” Sighing again, Antoinette leaned back in her chair, and looked down at the table. “Jack killed them.”

“Jack?” Elaine’s eyes went wide. “Your little Ventrue?”

“Oui, my little Ventrue. He killed my childe, and your childe,” she said. Elaine’s stare was powerful. Rare, for an elder to let their shock show on their face. “Self defense. He was caught between them as they fought over the fabrication I had sent them after. He set the building on fire, a cotton mill, in order to prevent Viktor from killing him.”

“Oh ... god. I had no idea.”

“Of course you did not. I did not speak of it. I have no desire to involve you in the Danse here in Dolareido, Elaine. Surely you must struggle with your own games in England.”

“Yes, but ... but if I had known—”

“Nonsense. Viktor has been his own man for over two hundred years, Elaine. His actions are not of your make. If Julias could suppress the urges of the curse, then Viktor had no excuse.”

A smile slowly returned to Elaine’s lips. “You are correct, of course. And ... I must say, I am surprised. Jack did this?”

“Oui. Forever the boy is thrust into circumstances no neonate should face.”

“And yet he thrives.”

“Thrive is not the word. He has nearly died several times, and the death of his sire, and sister, hit him hard. Considering the stress that befalls my love, I fear for his sanity.”

Elaine laughed. “Knowing you, you have likely pampered and spoiled the boy rotten, in order to soothe him of his pains.”

“Ben oui. That is why I have let you get so close to him, after all.”

“Oh, is that how it is, old friend? I am nothing but a tool for you to use, to overindulge and mollycoddle your lover?”
Lightheartedness had returned to her friend’s voice, and Antoinette laughed with the joy of it.

“Naturally.”

A twinkle shone in the woman’s eye. “Naturally. And I admit, I look forward to it. He is a scrumptious morsel, is he not? But, I am worried that this ... unveiling of my past has damaged that possibility.”

Laughing again, Antoinette shook her head. “Jack trusts me. And I trust you.”

“Trust is dangerous.”

“Quite, but I do nonetheless.”

Elaine’s smile brightened. “Thank you.”

“And despite the surprises this evening, we both saw the look in my love’s eyes.”

The old Ventrue licked her lips with a hunger Antoinette recognized. “Yes, indeed. I am surprised a man who has seen so much violence, and has grown into such a powerful individual in many ways, can be rendered so paralyzed by the sight of breasts.”

“As strong as Jack is, in will and mind, something about him cannot seem to fathom the existence of women, of breasts and legs, and sex.”

They both laughed. Surely there was a time in her life when such stubborn innocence in a man would have been thoroughly unappealing. Now, with endless years of experience to draw upon and sculpt her outlook and tastes, Antoinette found it extremely enticing. And so would Elaine, before the night was done.

“But, he has been your lover for two years now? Surely he is comfortable with sex, considering you ... are you.” A sly grin announced her true meaning.

Antoinette rolled her eyes. “As if you are any different to me.”

“I did not arrange orgies of over fifty kine, Ann.”

“No, but you did join them. Excitedly, if my blurry memories do not lie to me.”

With a playful sigh, Elaine shook her head. “They do not.”

Nodding, Antoinette stood up, and motioned for Elaine to do as well. “Jack defies my attempts to acclimatize him to the sexual possibilities of sharing his bed with an elder Daeva. Every night, his eyes fill with wonder as I take him into my arms. And every time I treat him to a new experience, he paralyzes, as if struck dumb by the sheer idea that multiple women find him attractive.” Nodding, she pulled out her phone, and prepared a message. “No matter how many times I have bathed him in not only my sexuality, but also that of my ghouls, he is still shocked by such pleasures.”

“He lacks confidence?”

“I considered that, at first. Now, I believe the boy simply cannot ever be bored with erotica.”

“Lucky you.”

Antoinette grinned her playful, devil grin. “Indeed.”

For all the insanity the evening had wrought, secrets upon secrets shattered and innards exposed, everything turned out well. Her invitation for Elaine to visit her in Dolareido had not backfired with the new knowledge, and if anything, she understood her old friend better now. Telling her who killed her childe, and Elaine’s childe, had been a strange moment, balancing on a knife’s edge. But Elaine did not care for Viktor anymore than Antoinette did Tony. The threat of ill will passed, and Antoinette found her tension fading away. Tonight, was a wonderful night.

“Who are you texting?”

“Ashley and Julee. My pets will join us. We will feed, and then I will show you how wonderful my little Ventrue can be.”

Chapter 118

~~Beatrice~~

The night went so much fucking better than she thought it would have. After her heavy conversation with Jacob, she thought maybe things would get intense, in a bad way. Nope. Dude hung out, chatted with Aaron a bit, and Jack, and now Samantha. More surprising, was how the dragons let him.

Peace was the name of the game tonight. Carthians and Invictus were getting along, at least for now, and everyone else was more than getting along. They were getting fucked, in the good way. Othello was sharing his beautiful ghoul with a Carthian. The hunters were getting gang-Kissed by Isabella and her troupe. The werewolves were getting involved with plenty of people, Carthians and Invictus, and were literally fucking where people could see them. Damn, werewolves were all jacked and ripped.

Some people found it a little too uncomfortable. Avery, Clara, Aaron, Maria, Michael, they all left eventually. Jacob was outside with Samantha. Fiona and Damien were—well, they were probably having sex, on the roof. A few others had left too, but for the most part, the ball still had plenty of people. Over a hundred Kindred, a bunch of werewolves, a bunch of thralls and ghouls, and two Begotten, all remained within.

Sándor, she could understand sticking around, since Jen still held his arm, and the man seemed reluctant to forcibly remove her. He kinda looked like he wanted to, but unless he manually got rid of her, Jennifer just took his defiance as a challenge. It was cute.

Athalia, on the other hand, remained, and Beatrice did not understand why. Jack, Big Tits and Bigger Tits, along with two ballerina ghouls, walked past her, and after a few seconds talk with Jack, Athalia looked better. Legitimately better, like, maybe she didn't want to kill everyone and everything in the universe anymore. It was clear that she didn't want to talk to Jack, and the conversation had been very short, but she looked better for it.

But Jack hadn't been the one to kill Angela, Beatrice had. Sure, Jack did everything to get her there, including drag her broken ass, but he didn't pull the trigger, she did. No way in hell was Triss going to push, and try and talk to the dead woman's mother.

Daniel, on the other hand, chatted with her, and she listened. Hell, she even chatted back, and unless Triss was seeing things, she smiled a few times too. Daniel ignored all the sex around him like he was used to it, and he probably was, considering his closest friend thought sex was a literal art form, and had likely indulged in it like a kid in a candy store, for hundreds of years. The sheriff barely acknowledged it. Instead, his focus remained on Athalia, and a sliver of a smile sneaked onto his lips.

The sheriff. Smiling? Triss knew Daniel was one of the first people Athalia had met in Dolareido, when she'd first become a monster. And judging from the looks the two of them shared, she liked him. She might not have liked that she liked him, but she did like him. And Daniel, so closed off he made Sándor look chatty, apparently liked her, too.

Everyone was getting along, every single person. It felt way too weird, and too good to be true. Probably was. In a week or two or ten, something would happen, and shit would get problematic again. The Carthians and Invictus would step on each other's toes, or maybe the werewolves would pick a fight with someone they thought was fucking with the 'balance' or whatever. But for now, it was nice, how everyone was enjoying the peace, peace she'd helped bring.

She looked down, and let a memory up from the grave for a bit. Julias, hugging her, holding her, stroking her hair, kissing her. Just a little, just for a moment, just to remind her why she did what she did.

Except, the memory didn't go away. She'd gotten good at suppressing them, but after what Jacob said, she couldn't, not right now. Could he revive Julias? Could she use Crúac, and that bitch Elen, to somehow revive him? God, she shouldn't, she really shouldn't. Even Jacob thought it wouldn't work.

But, god, to hear his voice again, and ... to hold him again, and—“Triss, you alright?” Jen said.

“I ... I think I want to go now.”

Jennifer let go of Sándor, and set her hands on Triss's arm. “You —” Her mouth shut when they made eye contact. “Right, right. Let's go.”

God damn it, it was great having a friend. Didn't have to explain herself, didn't need to justify anything, didn't even need to say a damn thing. Jen recognized the look on her face, knew she was suffering with memories of Julias, and knew she had to get her out of the party asap.

“Sándor,” Triss said, “you could stay or—”

“I'll leave too.” And without a further word, the man started for the door.

Jen managed some small chuckles, and followed after him. Triss tried to chuckle too, cause Sándor was funny, a perfect straight man. But, she couldn't chuckle. It choked in her throat, and turned into a quiet sob that forced her to look down and hide her face in the frame of her hair.

On the way out, she spotted Garry. He was chatting with someone, someone Triss didn't recognize. A vampire, and probably a Gangrel by the way he carried himself. Jeremy Long, Garry's new childe? Had to be. The Asian-looking fellow had dangerous written right on his forehead, but he managed to stay out of the limelight like an expert Mekhet might. Well, whatever, he was the Invictus's problem, not hers.

Once Triss, Jen, and Sándor were outside, a quick glance showed Samantha chatting with Jacob on a nearby bench, surrounded by grass and bushes. The Nos looked Triss's way, offered her a small, knowing nod, and returned to his conversation. She knew Jacob could flirt. Hell, Jacob was a smoother fucker when he wanted to be. But, the look she saw on his face was a little different, a little softer, a little kinder, almost like he was just having a genuinely pleasant conversation. Crazy, to think of Jacob doing something normal, like talking to someone, for the sake of talking to someone. No way he was just talking to her for fun. Jacob, like every elder, always had a bunch of things lined up, so every action benefited him in multiple ways. But, he did really look like he was enjoying himself.

Before she could stop herself, she pictured herself where Samantha was, and Julias where Jacob was. She never did the girly-girly flirts with Julias, and Julias didn't try and spin fairytale adventures for her. But, that didn't change that seeing them together reminded her of times with Julias, and—

Jennifer touched her arm. "Don't do that."

"I ... I'm not trying to." Sighing, she shuddered, crossed her arms and rubbed her biceps. "Can we just go?"

"Back to the catacombs?"

Right, the catacombs. If she went back to the cave with the other witches, they'd hear her crying.

“Anywhere private, I suppose. I—”

Sándor looked at her, and she met his eyes for a second. He knew. He knew exactly what she was feeling. And after a quiet moment, the man let out a short sigh, and nodded toward the shadows around the building.

“You want privacy, quickly? Come with me.”

Jen and Triss looked at each other, brows quirked, but after they realized what Sándor was doing, Jen smiled. She took Triss’s hand, and pulled her after the Begotten, as he disappeared into the shadows that sat behind the Black Hall.

It wasn’t the first time Triss had gone through one of the strange holes Begotten dug through reality, or the second. It came with a strange feeling, like walking at night when a thunderstorm was brewing. Electricity in the air. But with Begotten, and the strange ways they opened doors to their nightmare realms, the tingle in the air was less electric, and more like goosebumps. It was a nightmare realm, nightmare, with every intent to be scary, so goosebumps made sense. She wouldn’t get goosebumps without Blushing Life, but that didn’t stop a chill of fear from sneaking up her spine.

She stepped out of the shadows, onto a solid, dark platform. Concrete? Stone? With a few moments to think, she managed to piece together what she was looking at, and she sucked in a quick, useless breath.

There was a stone throne, enormous, and imposing. Around her were titanic pillars, dozens, maybe even hundreds in the gigantic room. Braziers lit the walls, gargoyle-shaped braziers, and they lit the pillars as well, showing frozen statues at the top of each. Gargoyles, each the same size and shape as Sándor’s Horror, giant beasts that could have squashed her like a grape.

Movement in the shadows drew her eyes, and she froze as one of those titanic gargoyles crept around one of the pillars, and onto the huge throne of stone at the end of the room. Sándor didn't sit in the throne; he couldn't have, with four wings and a tail. Instead, the monster perched on it, squatting and holding onto the edge of its back with two of his hands, while his two others held his knees.

Triss looked behind her, at a large wooden door, opened, and it led into a hallway she recognized. This wasn't the place that opened up into the haunted village on the cliff edge. This was the place where Jack and his crew had rescued Eric, Jessy, and Clara. A nightmare chamber, linked to the other one, but not exactly the same place.

Triss and Jen both stared on as the giant got comfortable on his perch, his wings stretching out wide enough to hide a bus. Christ, he was huge, so god damn mother fucking huge.

"Take that door," the beast rumbled, and he pointed to one of the massive wooden doors that lined the walls of the colossal room, identical to the she'd stepped out of, "to emerge near the South Hill Cemetery." Right, right, Jen had told him that Triss and she often hung out in the catacombs in the South Hill Cemetery. Nice of him, and impressive, to open a portal straight there. Fiona, er, Vrall, had said his ability to control his lair was crazy strong.

He was a scary strong creature, Sándor. And terrifying. The gargoyle body he morphed into wasn't gross or anything; hell, it was pretty hot. The issue was her Beast recognized a stronger predator in its blatant superiority. She was a mouse before a tiger.

"Thanks," she said, and she took a step toward the door.

Before Jen could follow, she stopped.

"Triss?" Jen asked.

“I ... I’m so sick of being sad, you know?” She reached out, set a hand against one of the nearby pillars, maybe thirty feet away from the huge throne. “Christ, it was going well! The party was going well. Everything’s better, right? And ... and then it hits me, out of nowhere.” After a heavy sigh, she turned, pressed her back to the pillar, and slid down until she was on her ass. The dress did not like that, and she didn’t care.

Jen sat down beside her. She did a bit better with her dress, keeping it from getting too bundled up or torn, but the dress was not made for anything but standing or sexily sitting on expensive chairs. The two of them looked ridiculous.

“Come on, we can go to your favorite spot, and—”

“Oh I don’t fucking care if Sándor sees. Dude knows exactly what I’m going through.” She pulled her knees up to her chest, hugged them tight to her body, and let her forehead fall onto them. If she’d been Blushing Life, tears would have been streaming down her cheeks, and Jennifer knew it too. Her friend wrapped an arm over her shoulders, hugged her, and didn’t say a thing.

Triss really should have gotten up and left. It was pretty pathetic, hanging out in Sándor’s nightmare, struggling to not cry. Struggling, and failing. Sobs broke through, and she leaned into Jennifer as she felt the misery course through her. At this point, she recognized the pains, and could anticipate the phases she’d go through, the way the ache would change over the minutes, until it either exhausted her, or turned to rage. She did her best to stay quiet, to let the agony do its thing, torment her, rip her stomach open and her organs apart, and then be on its merry way. Sometimes it went quickly, sometimes, not so much.

“You might not care,” Jen said eventually, voice soft and delicate, “but ... he might. He—”

“I don’t mind,” the enormous creature rumbled, his own voice quiet, despite the thick bass. “Take as long as you want.”

Triss lifted her head and looked to the creature on the throne. He didn’t move. No tail slithering, no wing shaking, no breathing, nothing. The only movement she’d noticed after he took his perch, was when he bothered to say something. Outside of his few words, nothing, a statue.

“You’re being awfully nice,” Triss said between quiet sobs. At least she wasn’t gushing tears everywhere. “I figured we were being a pain in your ass.” We, including Jen, for obvious reasons.

The gargoyle made a small grunt, and Jennifer chuckled softly in response.

“Two gorgeous women were on his arm all night,” Jen said, “at a luxurious ball. Hardly being a pain in the ass.”

Sándor scoffed, except, in his giant dragon gargoyle body, it sounded more like a heavy rush of air, mixed with a bassy rumble. “You weren’t.”

“Ha, see? It won’t be much longer before he’s asking for our numbers.”

Triss choked on a laugh that forced its way up through her sobs, and she leaned her head into Jen’s side as her friend hugged her.

“Sorry, about Jen. She’s ... she’s...”

Jen sighed, a happy, heavy sound, and kissed her ear. Triss turned, and set a quick kiss on her lips. Not a deep kiss, but long enough to let Jen know she loved her stupid ass, in the strange ‘very close friends’ love they’d developed.

After a long, quiet rumble, the gargoyle spoke. “Not a day goes by ... where I don’t wish I was stronger.”

Triss choked down another rising sob, and looked through the dark to the colossal creature on his giant perch. “Say what? You’re already ridiculously strong.”

“If I was stronger, faster, smarter, I could have saved my family.” His wings, limbs, and tail still didn’t move, even as his mouth did. Creepy. Maybe the little bit of wine he’d drank was getting to him, to actually talk like that, to open up a little. “And Julias Mire would still be alive.”

Beatrice choked again, this time laughing, and she forced herself up to her feet. After stumbling, she growled down at her feet, kicked off her stupid heels, and walked over to the huge throne. Jen followed, though she kept her heels on, and scooped up Triss’s. Strange for a witch to love heels, or be so comfortable in them, but that was Jen.

“You were held in a fucking curse, Sándor. I can’t blame for you what happened to Julias.” She wanted to. Fuck, she wanted to blame him, blame Jack, blame everyone and everything. Blame the whole god damn fucking world. But, she didn’t, and she wouldn’t. She couldn’t let herself sink any deeper into that pit than she’d already had.

“I wasn’t held in the curse, when that monster first came for me.”

The monster, calling Jeremiah a monster. It was so poetic, she’d have vomited if she’d eaten at the ball feast. That’d be a sight, a vampire puking up blood like a fucking geyser.

“Did they just show up in your city or something?” She regretted saying it the moment the words came out of her mouth. “You don’t have to answer that.” God, how fucking nasty a memory was it for the huge fucker, to lose his wife and child to Jeremiah? She hadn’t even seen Julias die, and the memory of learning about it from Jack ate at her every night.

The gargoyle shook his head, slow, lumbering motions, as if he was moving hundreds of pounds with the small movement. He probably was, considering those horns.

“When Begotten grow hungry, and we’re in the physical world, our Horror can become ... unruly. While I sleep, or when I am distracted, it may go out hunting dreams, spreading nightmares. Those nightmares can summon ... people like Jeremiah. Hunters who specialize in hunting monsters.”

“Summon?” Triss said. “How?”

The creature rustled his wings, and dragged his claws along the arm of the stone throne. “I don’t know. But they followed the signs, like dogs on a blood trail.”

“Scary,” Jennifer said.

Triss nodded. “You’re telling me. Christ, we’re really spoiled in Dolareido.” Sighing, she climbed up onto the huge throne, and sat in it. “We weren’t prepared for anything like this.” The colossal gargoyle above her looked down at her, confused, but she didn’t care. Sándor was basically a stranger, and one of the few people who’d understand what she was going through. Maybe talking to him as an outlet was a good idea.

Damn Jennifer, she’d planned this from day one. She was too damn smart.

“Neither was I,” the gargoyle said, his heavy, rumbling voice cold and sad.

Jennifer came over to the throne, stood by one of the huge arms, and looked up at the creature. “You said you weren’t hunting?”

Why?”

“It ... is difficult, for me to hunt.”

“How so?”

Triss almost jumped in, to tell Jen to leave the guy alone. He'd lost his wife, his kid, and it was indirectly because he was a Begotten. Fucker probably spent every moment of every day racked with guilt, hating himself, wishing he could have protected them, wishing he wasn't a monster, so psychopath would-be 'heroes' would leave him the fuck alone. Poor bastard.

But, after a quiet rumble, Sándor continued.

“I hunger for the chase. I must hunt, and my prey must know it is being hunted. My Horror, it...” The gargoyle sighed, shook his head again, and let it droop. “It is difficult to satisfy. Sometimes, its hunger is too strong, and I devour my prey.”

“Sounds kinda like a vampire problem,” Triss said, “times a thousand.”

“Yes, I suppose it is. Satisfying my hunger is difficult, so I either suppress it, or find a target I do not mind dying, if I fail to control it.” He sighed, and shifted around on the throne for a moment, gargantuan size causing the stones to rub and creak, before he went completely still once again, except for his mouth.

Jennifer raised her hand slightly. “Is there no way to feed more safely?”

“The gargoyle,” Sándor said, voice rumbling with something that sounded almost like anger, deep, rumbling, and raspy, “and any Begotten with predatory hungers, must hunt. I feed on the fear of those that know they are being hunted. The fear can only be consumed, when I chase prey, and then catch them.”

“The fear, not the flesh?” Triss said. “That means, you could spare them?”

“Yes,” he said. “I used to be a detective. I’d hunt criminals. It satisfied the hunger, for a while. But the gargoyle, it ... it is not easily satisfied. I grew hungrier, and killed my prey sometimes.”

A detective. She smiled as she looked down, imagining the man dressed as a detective in the fifties, complete with fedora and trench coat. The smile faded, as she imagined him running down a criminal, catching them, then struggling to keep from ripping the person into literal bits, failing, and eating them while still in his human form.

Part of her kinda wanted to ask about his wife and child. If Jennifer was willing to put so much effort into turning Sándor into an ally, and someone for Triss to talk to, or to fuck, then maybe she should ask about the wife and kid? Or, maybe, she should just shut the fuck up. She didn’t want to talk about Julias, and the man undoubtedly didn’t want to talk about his dead family.

Triss had no intentions of fucking the man, but she had to admit, it was kind of nice, being around someone who knew what she was going through. Hell, he had it worse.

“That’s tough,” she said. “I ... don’t know how to deal with that sort of hunger. Maybe Azamel can help? She’s helped Fiona deal with her hunger.” Azamel was old, but so was Sándor. The two were very powerful, ancient creatures, and if Azamel knew something, Sándor probably would too. Or, maybe not? Sándor didn’t seem to like being a Begotten, while Azamel seemed quite happy being what she was.

The gargoyle sighed again, and nodded. “Perhaps I will.” He was thinking the same thing, from the sound of his voice.

“We can help,” Jennifer said, “with your hunger, I mean.”

Sándor let out a heavy snort. Only heavy because the monster was so damn huge. “How?”

“Dolareido,” Jennifer continued as she began to pace around in front of the throne, “is a huge city. Millions of people live here. There are thousands of criminals and assholes in Devil’s Corner that you can hunt down and beat up. The city was built to be a utopia for vampires, and that includes some places where Kindred can feed ... more violently, when needed.”

Another heavy snort from the giant. “This city is cruel.”

“Now now, it’s not cruel. Dolareido is better off than most cities of this size. But yes, the Prince insured some typical economic and cultural distribution kine habits emerged. That led to poor people, to criminals, and sometimes, poor criminals.” Jennifer shrugged, but her face was hard. “We don’t kill if we can help it, but it is allowed, for a reason. We’re not kine.”

Triss raised a brow at Jennifer, then looked up at the giant gargoyle over her. Sándor did not look happy. Something about Jennifer’s suggestion irritated him. He didn’t like the idea of a city being built, specifically to treat kine like cows or fattened pigs.

Oh god, he was a nice guy. A fucking nice guy. She could understand not wanting to hurt humans; hell, they’d all been human once. But, a nice guy? Christ. He’d looked sad, after she came back from killing Angela. Not ecstatic for killing Jeremiah, like Triss figured he would have been. Nope, he’d been sad, very sad. He didn’t want to hurt people, and it bothered him to hear about people being kept in situations where they could be hurt. He was a nice guy.

The last nice guy she knew was dead.

“I still don’t understand why you’re so intent on helping me,” he said.

“She’s trying to—”

“I,” Jennifer interrupted, “am just doing what Kindred do. You’re a powerful ally. Any self respecting vampire has no choice but to buy you into service. Money, support, sex, whatever works.”

The gargoyle grunted, and the deep sound vibrated the huge throne, straight into Triss’s ass. “At least you’re honest.”

Triss laughed, and buried her face in a hand. That bitch interrupted her, to keep her real motivation a secret. Well, at least Triss wasn’t on the verge of crying anymore. God, it felt nice to laugh.

---

~~Jack~~

He had no idea what to think, no idea at all.

Trust her? Don’t trust her? Antoinette trusted her, and that trust hadn’t faltered for very long, despite the massive truth bomb. Well, they had known each other for literal centuries. Jack hadn’t even been alive, including his first life years, for a quarter of a single century. The two of them probably had gaps between speaking, due to the nature of their careers in the Ordo, that were literally as long as Jack’s entire lifespan. And then they’d probably picked up talking to each other again, chatting about the latest fashion trends that’d come and gone, as if they hadn’t ever stopped talking.

He should trust the Prince. She was smart, really damn smart. If she trusted Elaine despite everything that happened, he probably should too, at least when it came to personal things. When it came to the curse, he’d have to make that decision on his own.

Another memory hit him, and he struggled to force it down. His mom, talking with Jacob. It bothered him so damn much! It couldn’t have been, like, a misplaced issue over his mom finally moving onto another man. His dad died years ago. He'd have loved for his mom to find romance, just, not with Jacob. The man was too sneaky, too crafty, and too hard to predict. He was up to something, him and Black Blood.

Stop thinking about Jacob and your mom! Think about something else.

He looked down at the hot water coursing around him, and rubbed his head. Ok, reality check. He was in a jacuzzi, in his swimming trunks, because Antoinette told him to sit and wait for a surprise. Naturally, his penis assumed surprise meant lots of boobs wrapped in far-too-small swimsuits. But maybe that was just because he'd been surrounded by so much sex tonight. Sure, Antoinette had made it obvious that she was looking forward to bringing Elaine into their bed, but then she went to have a private chat with her old friend. For all he knew, that private chat might have gone badly.

Heavy, heavy topic, that Elaine had kept secrets. Heavier, that Elaine had once been infected with the curse. He wasn't sure—

The sound of feet drew his eyes, and his jaw dropped. Antoinette, and Elaine. The two women walked together side by side, and they made sure each step was a calculated, prowling motion, meant to draw his eyes and lock them onto the swaying S shapes of their bodies. They wore bikinis, tiny tiny, tiny, tiny black, string bikinis. Only tiny triangles covered their nipples and sex, and each step they made insured lots of jiggling.

His penis's assumption had been, evidently, correct.

"H ... Hello," he said. He'd been thinking about something stressful seconds before, but he hadn't the slightest idea what it was anymore.

“Hello,” Elaine said, smile only growing as she approached the tub. “I hope you do not mind me joining, Jack?”

“Joining? I ... uh...”

The Prince chuckled softly as she stood beside her friend. “If that is alright? I understand a great many secrets were unveiled tonight, but my friendship with Elaine will hardly be broken by a few secrets. Her connection to you, on the other hand...”

“Um, no! No, I’m ... fine ... with whatever you want to do.”

“Wonderful,” they said together, in unison. They even had the same, evil smiles on.

He stared up at the two women at the edge of the jacuzzi, and offered his smile. It was weak, shaken, confidence destroyed by the sight of two utterly beautiful women. Didn’t matter how strong he was, a confident, beautiful woman put strong Jack away, and brought shy, nervous Jack to the surface. Doubly so, when it was two women.

“W-Where are Julee and Ashley,” he said to them.

Antoinette laughed. “Unconscious.”

Elaine nodded, and ran a finger along the right corner of her mouth. “And delicious.” More than just a taunting gesture, it was a statement. Jack could smell blood, and hints of the two ghouls on their bodies. Antoinette didn’t sleep with her ghouls without Jack since they’d become lovers, but that didn’t mean Elaine wouldn’t get a little frisky when Kissing them.

Ok, so, both elders were coming into the pool with full bellies. He could see they were Blushing Life, because their skin had a touch more color than usual, and more importantly, their nipples were pushing out against the tiny triangles of their string bikinis. He’d fed earlier tonight before the party, but he wasn't Blushing Life. They were Blushing Life with the natural reflex of a Kindred who'd just gorged themselves, an involuntary reflex, and erotic as all hell.

"Matching bikinis?" Jack said.

Elaine laughed and shrugged. "Your lover knows my measurements. She knew I was coming, and she knew you could not resist my charms." She stepped down into the hot water, sat across from Jack, crossed her legs, and smiled at him as she set her hands on her lap. Every motion she made was sensual, obviously made to flaunt her body for him, and it was working.

"I ... could resist." He frowned at that, but he knew it was a damn weak protest.

It was Antoinette's turn to laugh, and she settled into the water next to Elaine. She hooked her left arm up onto the wall of the jacuzzi, and slid in close so Elaine was snug to her left side, the Prince's left arm now behind her. Jack gulped as he watched the side of her left breast press into Elaine's right. Skin-on-skin contact, boob to boob. Good god in heaven.

"Oh my," Elaine said, eyes locked onto him. "You are most definitely correct, Ann. His eyes are delicious when he squirms."

"Are they not?"

"I can see how one could become addicted to making them light up like that."

"Indeed. It sends a tingling buzz through my body every time." With a long, pleasant sigh, Antoinette also folded her legs, left arm still up so her body remained snug to Elaine's side, while her right arm rested on her lap. "Jack, Blush for me."

He Blushed, but kept his hands firmly locked onto the jacuzzi seat beneath him as he felt every drop of blood in his body rush into his dick. Damn painful, having a raging boner pressing against the inside of his swimming trunks, but he refused to give into wanton need. It was the game Antoinette wanted to play, to tease him until he was ready to explode. It was simultaneously fun, and torturous.

Elaine's right hand slid down her bare, smooth leg, walked on fingertips to Antoinette's leg, and started to stroke the inside of the Prince's thigh. Antoinette unfolded her legs, giving Elaine more access, and Elaine didn't hesitate to slide her roaming hand higher up Antoinette's leg, all while never looking away from Jack. Antoinette didn't either, eyes locked onto him, occasionally glancing down at his erection trapped in his swimsuit, and licked her lips.

Good god it was happening. What was that thing Damien said? Lord, or Longinus, give him strength? He'd need it, with the way these two evil women were looking at him.

"He has patience," Elaine said.

"He does, oui. I have enjoyed many nights with my lover, where I have spent an hour or more, teasing him to his first orgasm of many."

"Poor man. You are a wicked thing, Ann."

"So you say, Elaine, but, I will show you why I cannot resist." Antoinette pointed her right hand at him. "Jack, undress, and come stand before us."

Jack took a useless breath, glanced down at his trunks, back at the two women, sighed, and did as commanded, sliding the trunks off. Who the fuck was he kidding, he loved this game. It always ended in some ridiculously powerful orgasms, almost painfully powerful. And Antoinette loved the game. He loved doing anything she loved doing, and as the years had proven, vice versa.

He stood two feet in front of them, water cutting halfway across his pelvis and raised penis. There was always a moment of embarrassment and worry, showing his dick to a new face. Big enough? Not gross? But the worry passed quickly as he saw Elaine's smile grow as her eyes slid down his chest, his abs, and down onto his shaved smooth pelvis and penis.

"You are surprisingly muscular for such a small creature," his great grandsire said.

Antoinette nodded, and licked her lips again as she looked him up and down. Apparently, Elaine's admiration of him was doing something for Antoinette, sexually speaking. He could see fire light up in her eyes.

"Is he not? He is so utterly ... delectable." She sighed with a growing hunger, and looked up to him. "Closer, Jack." He took a step forward. "Closer." He blinked, and came closer again, until Elaine had to unfold her legs like Antoinette had, and he was literally standing up against the edge of their seat, his left knee between Antoinette's knees, his right between Elaine's.

Since they were both sitting, their breasts were at the same height as his dick, and now that he was so close, a single foot of water was all that was between his length, and the front triangles of their tiny bikinis. The bikinis really were doing a horrible job containing their breasts, and considering breasts floated in water, he could not be more thankful.

"I suppose he spends every night with his shaft between your bosoms," Elaine said with a playful eye roll.

"Perhaps half. The other half, he spends inside me, with his lips upon my body."

"I admit, that is a heavenly way to spend an evening."

He almost said something, but no, that wasn't the game. Shut up, and let the two gorgeous devils torture him, that was the game. It was the greatest test of self control he could possibly imagine.

“Jack, my love, come, lean closer. Masturbate onto my breasts, and let my old friend indulge her eyes.”

He blinked at the white-haired goddess, then his great grandsire, before he slowly wrapped his right hand around his cock. Immediate shifts of anticipation from Elaine, and she set her eyes his shaft as he leaned in closer to Antoinette. He set his left hand to the jacuzzi edge just outside Antoinette's right shoulder, and guided his swollen, aching glans toward her breasts.

“Come now, this is no good.” With a teasing chuckle, Elaine reached behind Antoinette's back, and pulled on something. The bikini loosened. She did it again behind Antoinette's neck as the Daeva leaned forward to let her, and the bikini top fell away entirely. Antoinette was now topless, and her pink, swollen areola demanded to be touched.

And then, Elaine did the most erotic, absurd, ridiculous, amazing thing he could have possibly imagined. She half twisted to face Antoinette, and with her closer hand, she reached underneath Antoinette's left breast, and cupped it. Jack stared down at his great grandsire, and how the blonde Ventrue grinned first at Antoinette, and then at him, as she gently bounced the enormous breast in her palm.

“Cum, on this breast,” she said.

“By all means,” Antoinette said, and she relaxed back against the jacuzzi wall, eyes half closing, as if preparing for a massage.

After a few seconds to make sure he wasn't hallucinating, Jack leaned in again, set his cock's engorged head against her swollen nipple, and began to nudge the sensitive, pink skin of his glans against it, as he slowly masturbated. Antoinette moaned, a quiet and controlled noise, one of those calculated sounds she loved to make to purposefully send him into a frenzy of erotic hunger. Of course, she loved doing that when the rules of the game were about him trying to control his arousal. And now, watching Elaine gently bounce the huge tit in her hand, making it softly stir the flowing, hot water of the jacuzzi, and causing the hard nipple to rub against his cock's head, his arousal was already maxed.

Elaine was a lot, lot lot lot more comfortable with the situation than Julee and Ashley ever were. Even Ashley, a ball of joy and energy, was always hesitant to do anything off the cuff. She was Antoinette's pet, through and through. Elaine, on the other hand, was Antoinette's equal. That, sent a surge of hunger and need through Jack he hadn't expected. That someone else, not someone influenced by the Vinculum or Antoinette's presence in any way, someone as old and experienced as Antoinette, would happily join her in a threesome with him, was a huge stroke to his sexual ego. It was also kind of frightening, because she wouldn't just take Antoinette's cues for what to enjoy, and what to do. She had her own tastes, her own desires, and who the fuck knew what would happen.

He already felt a drop of precum tingle down through his length, and leak out onto Antoinette's areola, before disappearing into the hot water. Damn. He slowed his hand down until it was almost still, and Elaine chuckled as she smiled up at him.

"Ann's nipples have always been terribly sensitive. I hope you have been using that to your advantage."

"I ... I have," he managed to say, voice wavering and quiet as he struggled to keep his orgasm from arriving. Three minutes in, and ready to cum already, Jesus Christ. He knew he'd be able to go again, being Kindred and all, but still, embarrassing.

Antoinette's right hand found her right breast, and teased it, fingers running along and around its edges before tracing circles into her areola, while Jack teased her left breast. Several times, she lifted the enormous pillow to her mouth, and gave her own nipple a tender kiss, all while grinning at Jack with her eyes. But she said nothing, happy to watch and smile, and see where things went.

"That is good," Elaine said, "I would hate to know my friend has not been enjoying her sexual endeavors."

"I—"

"Ha. Do not worry, Jack Terry. Your lover speaks highly of your attentiveness." While her right hand continued to cup Antoinette's closer breast, her left hand slid her blonde hair past her ear before she leaned in toward the breast, and set a kiss on Antoinette's bosom. The kiss started high, closer to her friend's shoulder, before inching down closer and closer toward the areola.

Jack pulled back, but Elaine reached out with her left hand, and pulled him back in.

"But I—"

"Do not stop," the Ventrue said. The Ventrue ordered. It would have been audacious of her, if Antoinette hadn't looked like she'd been ready to say the same thing.

He gulped, and resumed, very, very slowly stroking his length as he rubbed his aching glans along Antoinette's nipple. Elaine's kisses get kept getting closer, and closer, and he continued to masturbate, eyes locked onto the gorgeous woman's lips planting kisses on his lover's breast. Finally, her lips found Antoinette's nipple, and set a heavy kiss against it, and the head of his cock.

Antoinette groaned, another masterful sound Jack recognized, one of her 'I am most pleased, continue' sounds. He did, staring, eyes locked on the sight of Elaine kissing and suckling on the head of his cock, just above the surface of the water. Christ, it felt good. It felt really, really good. Elaine wasn't afraid to be forceful with her lips, to put pressure into her kisses, and bathe his cock's tip while also making sure to draw Antoinette's nipple in with her kisses.

Jack gulped as he looked down through the water, and saw Elaine slide her left hand down from his leg, across Antoinette's, and up her thigh to find her bikini bottom. Her fingers slid along his lover's smooth mons, disappeared under the fabric, and started moving. Another quiet moan from Antoinette announced her pleasure, and her left arm lowered to settle along Elaine's back and shoulders. She smiled down at the woman kissing her breast, before looking up at Jack with a much more mischievous grin.

"I hope you do not mind, if Elaine helps in pleasuring me, my love. To make it up to you, I am sure Elaine will not mind if we bathe her in your seed, later." She licked a fang as she continued masturbating with her other breast, massaging her nipple more forcefully, matching the increasing desperation of Elaine's kisses.

It wasn't like he hadn't seen someone else make Antoinette cum before. Ashley and Julee often made her cum while Jack enjoyed playing with her breasts or something. And, he'd made Ashley and Julee cum, while Antoinette masturbated or some such. Seeing an equal, a fellow Kindred with all the implied privileges and earned power of Antoinette, start fingering the Prince without so much as asking, let alone be guided to do so, was a completely different experience.

It was fucking arousing as all god damn hell.

"I ... I don't mind," he said, even as his eyes locked onto the sight of Elaine's lips suckling the side of his glans. She hadn't asked if she could pleasure him, either. It just happened, because the woman was riding the exact same sexual wavelength and rhythm as Antoinette. Well, Antoinette had said they were old friends, and they had not only fucked hundreds of kine together, and probably some other vampires too, but also fucked each other occasionally purely for the erotic joy of it. They had a much larger sexual history together, than he and Antoinette did.

He thought maybe he should have been kind of jealous about that, considering the situation. But, as Elaine continued to kiss his cock, until he felt the rising heat flow up his length, and powerful sparks of pleasure down from his glans, he couldn't find any jealousy for the life of him. Just a white blanket snuffing out his thoughts, as he started to cum onto his lover's breast, and Elaine's lips.

She eased the power of her kisses, adopting a far gentler suckling pressure. Her left arm pumped up and down in the water, earning some quiet moans from Antoinette, all while she continued kiss and lick his glans and her friend's nipple. Multitasking expert. Antoinette looked down at her breasts, and let out a long, happy sigh, as she started to cum, the intimately familiar, if subtle expression on her face announcing her pleasure. She didn't stop them, content to watch Jack cum onto her body and onto Elaine's lips, as Elaine fingered her.

Jack squeezed on the base of his length, and pushed out the final drops of his cum, milking the last sparks of bliss. Elaine didn't miss a beat. She pulled her head back a bit, and Jack pressed his glans against Antoinette's breast, sinking it into the mountain of softness as he forced out the final drops of his white fluid. When he pulled back, Elaine wrapped her lips around his glans completely, and smiled up at him as she did. He almost gasped as she suckled on him, ran her tongue around his cock's tip in circles, sent electric pleasure down his length, and milked him until there wasn't a drop left. And then, she turned back to Antoinette, and began to devour his lover's breast all the more.

Jack stared, eyes wide, as he watched this gorgeous woman, hair wet with water now, arm trembling as she continued to finger Antoinette's insides, suckle, kiss, lick, and utterly spoil his lover's breast. His cum slid down the heavy teardrop shape of Antoinette's breast, but Elaine lowered her lips, caught the descending trails, and licked them clean before setting her mouth back to the Prince's areola.

Antoinette looked up to him again, and for a moment, he could see a hint of worry there. Would he be jealous that he was watching another vampire bring her to orgasm like this, was probably going through her mind. Well, judging from how she relaxed a second later, the expression on his face must have eased her worries. He probably looked like a starstruck child, utterly hypnotized by the sight of the elder vampire licking cum, his cum, off his lover's tit, while fingering her to a second orgasm. Yeap, that was hot. That was very, very hot.

"Jack," Antoinette said, mid orgasm, eyes still half closed, "I assume you would like to do the same to Elaine now, oui?" Even as she talked, looking up at him, the blonde woman continued to kiss and lick her breast, and fingered her underneath her bikini bottom hard enough to churn flowing water. Antoinette's left hand slid up Elaine's back, into her hair, and cradled her head, massaging her scalp and pushing her toward Antoinette's breast until the woman's face half disappeared into the mountain of softness.

It didn't stop Elaine. The blonde woman grinned into Antoinette's breast, and kept going, left hand pumping up and down inside Antoinette's, while her right settle on Antoinette's hip for balance. The Prince's breasts jiggled hypnotically in the water, enormous pale pillows that floated in the hot waves, though her left one remained firmly pinned to her chest where Elaine smothered it in kisses. Antoinette's smile never broke or faltered, but her lips did part slightly as her orgasm continued, or was renewed by a third. Good god, Elaine knew what she was doing.

“Yes, yes I would,” he managed to get out, eyes still locked onto Antoinette, and Elaine.

Elaine finally stopped. She sat up, leaned back into her seat, and grinned up at Jack as she licked her lips. “I suppose it is only fair. Though, why you would prefer to fuck my breasts, when your lover and I could bathe your cock in kisses, is beyond me.”

“Jack loves breasts,” Antoinette said with a shrug, “and I am glad that he does. But, perhaps the next time you join us, we could test our lips and tongues against his length, together.” And, because she knew he was picturing it now, she grinned up at him, and licked her lips.

Her left arm, behind Elaine and hooked on the edge of the jacuzzi again, reached out and grabbed a bottle of lubricant, one they kept nearby pretty much all the time after a few incidents in the past. If you were aiming for some serious, sexual friction in a tub, you needed lubricant. Water washed away the natural stuff, but a really, really thick silicone lubricant mitigated that. So, as he'd seen Ashley and Julee do to Antoinette's breasts many times, Antoinette reached over Elaine's breasts with her right hand, squeezed, and buried the woman's breasts in the gel.

Elaine's long, pleased sigh, was intoxicating. She half closed her eyes, but kept them open as she reached up, undid the knot of her bikini top, peeled it down, and did the same for the bottom knot. After setting the cloth on the jacuzzi wall, she cupped her huge breasts in her hands, caught the waves of lubricant trickling down them, and began to massage it into her skin. Jack was hypnotized, instantly. Elaine may not have had the utterly absurd bosom of Antoinette, but she still had enormous breasts that filled her hands and overflowed her fingers with their softness and size. Her large nipples were a shade darker than his lover's, a little smaller, and sat a little higher, so that the undersides of each breast were huge. She saw that he was staring at the underside contours of her bosom, and she used it, chuckling as she ran her fingers through the water to spread the lubricant along and beneath each breast.

“I think,” Elaine said, voice huskier than before, “that I would like to relax for a bit. Be a dear Ann, and pleasure me, while your lover fucks my breasts? I want to watch.”

“Forever lazy and spoiled,” Antoinette said as she rolled her eyes. Left arm still hooked behind Elaine, she reached out with her right, and temporarily hugged her as she used the leverage to coat her right hand in lubricant. “I suppose you still do this regularly, sit there and do nothing while your thralls and ghouls do all the work.”

“And why would I not? They are my servants, after all.” Her grin turned toward mischievous, a grin Jack recognized from Antoinette, and she spread her legs. Antoinette, now pressed to her side, reached down her right hand, slid it underneath the black, tiny bikini bottom, and began to fondle and caress what she found underneath.

Elaine moaned, and Jack melted. Antoinette was snug to her side with how her left arm was behind Elaine, so her left breast was squashed to Elaine’s right. Her right hand was between Elaine’s thighs, obviously working an already very horny Elaine toward what would be a quick orgasm. Judging from the fire in Elaine’s eyes as she grinned up at him, he knew he was right. They’d both just fed, and Jack was fairly certain Elaine had probably fingered, or licked the two ghouls into submission when she did. Both elders had been super aroused when they’d joined him in the pool, before he’d even touched them.

“Come, Jack. Use your hands, take my breasts, and enjoy yourself.”

He gulped, stepped around their legs a bit so both of his were between Elaine’s knees, and reached down to scoop up both of Elaine's breasts into his hands. They spilled over his palms, fingers, and wrists.

Antoinette looked up to him just long enough for a wink, before she leaned in, and started to kiss Elaine's neck. So close, Antoinette's left breast squashed Jack's hand where it held Elaine's right breast, and he stared down at the valley of softness before him. Elaine's mouth parted in another moan, and she relaxed her back against the jacuzzi. Neck was her sweet spot, then. It wasn't like Antoinette's kiss had shattered Elaine's control; Antoinette didn't lose control, even mid orgasm, and he doubted Elaine would either. But seeing the Ventrue melt, and hearing a genuine moan of bliss come from her devious smile, a moan earned by his lover's kiss and fingers, was too damn much.

He leaned in, set his cock between her breasts, and pressed them together around his girth.

Elaine's eyes slid down his body to his chest, to his abs, to his length now surrounded by her breasts so only his glans poked out from between them, and then back to his stomach. He gently thrust forward, and shuddered as he felt the friction of breasts along his shaft and on his aching glans. Elaine sighed happily, reached up, and ran both her hands along his abs, until she was tracing the lines of them with her fingertips.

"You must do this often," Elaine said, head tilted slightly toward the woman currently giving her a hickey, "let this gorgeous little man fuck your breasts like this, while your two precious pets pleasure you?"

"Of course," Antoinette said into her neck. "Can you blame me? Look at that boy's body, how his stomach flexes with each thrust, how his cock boils against the skin, how his eyes beg for more." Her right arm shook slightly, her hand doing something inside Elaine that looked a lot closer to an up-and-down pumping motion, rather than a clitoris massage.

The Ventrue nodded, eyes half closing again as she looked back up to his face. “I admit, the way he shows his hunger so clearly in his eyes and his body language ... is ... captivating.” Her voice wavered, only slightly, and her body quivered in the water as Antoinette pumped her insides faster. Orgasm danced in the woman’s eyes, and she made sure he saw it, eye contact making it clear how much she was enjoying this. She wanted him to see that she was in bliss, or, she wanted to see his eyes when he did see.

Her hands slipped around, grabbed his ass, and gently sank her fingers into the muscle of his buttocks. He gulped as he thrust, and she laughed as she eased her grip, but kept her hands where they were. It made it so he was thrusting between her arms, and into the valley his hands created with her breasts. He couldn’t see what Antoinette’s hand was doing to her, but he could see Antoinette’s arm slowing down at the shoulder, only to pick up pace again, and slow down again. Elaine’s expressions matched the speed, eyes settling and calming when the Prince slowed, and half closing with lust when she sped up. When she did, Elaine’s breasts jiggled within Jack’s grip, and he shuddered as he felt the vibration flow into his cock.

Elaine’s following sigh was higher pitched than he anticipated, and he stared down at her as her eyes finally closed completely. She leaned her head back onto Antoinette’s arm, and came again. Her hands lowered, let go of Jack, and fell aimlessly beneath her in the water.

“As you can see, my love,” Antoinette said, “a belly full of blood, and Elaine here takes but only moments to climax. Quite the hungry vixen, is she not?”

The Ventrue giggled, a tiny, pleasing sound mixed into her soft groans. She lifted her head again, and leaned in toward Antoinette to rest her cheek against the woman's head. "I admit, it is true. And your two pets were so wholly delicious. But..." Her wandering eyes found Jack's again, and she licked her lips as she slowly lowered her gaze to his body, down and down, until she was looking at how his hands squashed her breasts together around his cock. "Your lover here, is ... strangely ... arousing, how he stares at me as if I were one of Michaelangelo's statues. And yet, he does not leer."

Chuckling, Antoinette nudged her head into Elaine's cheek, and resumed kissing her neck and shoulder. "Wait until he coats you with his cum," she said between kisses. "The sheer pleasure in his face, is addictive. You will crave it."

He knew his expressions were always blatant and obvious, at least more than other Kindred. He'd been learning to hide his emotions, but something about erotic scenarios destroyed any possibility of that. Worse, or better as far as Antoinette was concerned, he regressed to a shy and nervous young man whenever she buried him in some new sexual scenario. This was very much like that, and he knew the look on his face must have made him look like a hypnotized, paralyzed, drunk fool, with jaw hanging open and cheeks blushing. Apparently, that seemed to turn the two women on quite a bit.

Elaine closed her eyes for a moment, a long, quiet groan escaping her as Antoinette fingered her faster. The vibration of her body filled Jack's palms where he held her breasts, and he thrust up into the valley between them faster as he watched her tremble. His pelvis hit her breasts hard enough to make them ripple with the impact, and deep enough he could see his engorged glans poke out from between them, beneath her collar. Each thrust buried his cock, every inch, in the glorious friction of her lubricated, huge breasts snug and tight around his length. And, staring down at the beautiful woman as she came for what must have been the fourth time, it was too much.

He slowed his thrusts down, and came. A small groan announced his pleasure, and Antoinette stopped fingering her friend long enough for Elaine to open her eyes. She looked down, and watched with a hungry gaze, as the first gush of his cum splashed up onto her chest. But, before she could say anything, Antoinette started to finger her again, and leaned in close to set her perfect kisses deep along her neck. The elder Ventrue quickly fell back into waves of pleasure, but she forced herself to keep her eyes open, and watch Jack cum on her body.

Seeing the ancient woman, gorgeous and moaning in bliss, was icing on each and every gush of pleasure that ran through him. Antoinette was good, really really, really good. She wasn't just a master of eroticism, she knew Elaine's body better than she knew even his. She knew where to kiss, where to finger, and how hard to finger, to have Elaine shivering in obvious orgasm in mere moments, so that the Ventrue had to work to keep her eyes open. But she did, and she stared down at the mess he was making over her body as he came. Another gush, and another, each sending sparks of pleasure down from his engorged cock into his pelvis and underneath his testicles. More, until the heavy strands of white leaked down, over, and around each of her breasts, to fall into the splashing water.

When he was done, Antoinette stopped. The two Ventrue looked at each other for a few seconds, taking in the sight of each other recovering from orgasmic pleasure, before they looked down at her breasts. Coated in white, and still snug to his pelvis. His hands stayed on them, and he gently eased his cock back and forth an inch while staying balls deep in the valley of her bust, as he milked out the final drops of his climax. Even when he was done, he stayed there, between Elaine's legs, her enormous breasts still in his hands so he could enjoy the intoxicating sensation of their softness squashed around his girth.

“Oh my,” Elaine said at last, her eyes sliding up from his cock, to his pelvis, abs, chest, then to his face. “So much.” She reached out, ran a finger down his abs, tracing the lines between them down onto his pelvis, before she continued down his arm, onto her breast, up to her collar, and then up to her lips where she kissed her finger free of his cum. “Perhaps you would ... like to go again? I must admit, that was ... terribly appealing to watch.”

Antoinette chuckled into her friend’s ear, gave it a small kiss, and sat up straight. “I thought perhaps, we could both pleasure my love, at the same time?”

“Oh?” Elaine said, raising a brow and looking to her friend. She was still trembling, and Jack found himself gently fucking her breasts again, just to enjoy the feel of her shivers.

With a pleased, husky chuckle, Antoinette reached out, and pushed Jack away from Elaine until he stood a foot back. Damn.

“Oui. I thought ... perhaps...” She leaned into Elaine’s ear, whispered a few words, and set a taunting kiss on her earlobe.

Elaine giggled, nodded, and stood up. Antoinette did as well, and the two tall women smiled down at Jack. Uh oh? They turned to face each other, and while still looking at Jack, they stepped into each other, and pressed their breasts together. Uh oh.

He gulped as he watched the wet pillows mold to each other and fight for space, as the two women made an obvious show for him. Elaine still trembled a little, but she didn’t let that stop her as she nudged her body into her friend’s. She leaned in closer, set a kiss on Antoinette’s neck, and grinned at him as she did. Then Antoinette did the same, leaning down to kiss her slightly shorter friend’s neck, while pulling her in close at the hip. They didn’t just hug, they moved their torsos up and down a few inches opposite of each other, so their huge breasts slid against the other's, conforming to each other in round shapes as they fought for space. His cum, and the lubricant, spread readily, and he stared all the while as it did.

“Are you two trying to kill me?” he said.

Antoinette chuckled, and Elaine outright laughed.

“He is a treasure,” his great grandsire said.

“That he is.” Antoinette reached over to the jacuzzi edge, grabbed the lube, and poured a generous amount onto their breasts. And then, they resumed, rubbing their bodies against each other, spreading the lube and his cum around, and around, until he could see the mixed liquids trickle down their stomachs.

They got on their knees, pressed their breasts together again, and motioned for him to come closer.

Ok, this was happening. This was actually happening. Antoinette knew he was basically obsessed with her breasts, and while she indulged that kink to his heart's content, what she was offering now was completely outside the realm of anything he'd ever expected. Hell, he would have been surprised if Antoinette had found a female kine with a huge rack, to let him try this with. But, a fellow vampire, one as old as her? Two deadly creatures, that were looking at him like he was a snack, and happily inviting him to slide his cock between their breasts, was taking the fantasy to a whole new level.

He gulped as he stepped closer, and stared down at the two women. He could see how his cum coated all four breasts, spread thin and mixed with the lubricant. And when he got a little closer, the two women reached out with their closer arms, Antoinette her right, Elaine her left, and they guided him toward them. He took a slow, deep breath, eyes locked onto the hypnotic sight of four breasts squashed together, and he slowly, determined to enjoy every single inch, very slowly sank his cock between them.

He put his left hand on Antoinette's further shoulder, right hand on Elaine's, and shivered as he watched his cock disappear into the supple mounds of their bosoms. They turned to face him just slightly, enough to that their breasts squished into his pelvis, while also staying together. And as they snuggled in toward his hips, he shivered as the head of his glans poked up from between four breasts.

Yeap, it was happening. He was fucking two enormous sets of tits at the same time. One belonged to his lover, the other to her friend.

If there was one way he was going to die, it'd be from sex fantasy overload.

Antoinette grinned her devil grin at him, and looked to Elaine. "I assume we will continue this the next night we are all free, oui?"

"Of course. I look forward to reliving some of our best nights."

Were they ... ignoring him? Ignore wasn't the right word, but they weren't looking at him anymore. They were having a chat, while simultaneously squashing their breasts together, and into him. Their torsos were still partly turned to face him at a mild angle, but their faces were looking to each other, each with devious smiles on.

"Oh? What nights did you wish to relive?"

Elaine looked up at Jack, licked her lips, and then looked back to Antoinette, all the while ignoring that Jack was gently thrusting his cock back and forth against the tight bed of wet softness they'd created for him.

"He is Kindred. He can last much longer than the kine we have taken."

“Oui. Perhaps we should not have rendered my pets unconscious? The four of us could have taken turns with him.”

Oh good god, they really were going to kill him.

“True. Or perhaps, you could sit on your lover’s length, and let me enjoy you while he holds on as long as possible.”

“That is a fun game, one we have played many times with my pets, Jack and I.”

Elaine grinned. “But I am not some small ghoul, Ann.” She leaned in, and set a kiss on the left side of Antoinette’s neck, opposite of Jack. It let Jack see how her body arched to reach her, how her breasts squashed harder against him and Antoinette’s breasts, and how Antoinette’s eyes fluttered for just a moment before looking up to Jack again. Elaine’s threat was very clear. She could make Antoinette cum and cum hard, while riding Jack.

He struggled to keep his thrusts slow, but the images they were painting were driving him insane.

“Or,” Antoinette added, “I have many toys, some that would allow us to join and fuck each other, legs entwined.”

Scissoring? Gulp.

“But then what will your precious boy toy here be left with?”

Antoinette leaned in this time, and mirrored what Elaine did moments before, kissing the side of her neck opposite of Jack, so he could see how their breasts squashed all the harder around his cock when she did. And of course, see the pleasure in Elaine’s eyes as the Prince set a hungry kiss on her skin.

“He will be forced to content himself with our breasts, and our mouths.”

The conversation, obviously meant to tease him into a frenzy, would have sounded utterly silly and dumb, if it wasn't for the situation. Not only were they perfectly willing to do the things they were saying, they said them while he was fucking their breasts. It turned the cheesy dialogue into a very real stimulus, mixed with enough heat and hormones — fake, but still effective — running through his body to make anything resembling a flirt sound intoxicatingly erotic. The fluttering of their eyelashes, the subtle up-and-down shifting of their chests, the husky, quiet moans, it was all a perfectly choreographed dance the two women had mastered centuries ago, to make people like him completely lose their minds.

It was working.

“Perhaps tomorrow night,” Elaine said, “instead of you, you will let me wrap my legs around him?”

Antoinette's chuckle was gentle, husky, and obviously meant to sound sexy. God damn it, she was too good. “I have struggled to not let sexual addiction run our second lives, Elaine. I fear you will be my undoing.”

Chuckling in the same way Antoinette did, husky, with pleasant moans thrown in, Elaine leaned backed in, and started to kiss along the Prince's neck. The kisses went higher, and higher, teasing along her neck and under her jawline.

“We have both known Kindred who literally had ghouls eating their cunts and devouring their cocks during Primogen meetings, Ann.”

“Even we do not do that in Dolareido.”

Jack suppressed his smile. Yeah, they didn't do that, but if the covenants got along better, they probably would.

“Then why the concern?” Elaine said between her kisses, each placed with delicate precision leading back down onto Antoinette’s shoulder further from Jack.

“Because my poor little Ventrue here is soon to have his third orgasm, and knowing you, you will push it to six, or seven ... or twenty.” Antoinette nudged her cheek down against Elaine’s, encouraging her friend to continue kissing. “You may damage his sanity, or turn him into a mindless addict.”

“I can assure you, Delavon enjoyed his stay with us.”

“I am sure he did, what he can remember of it.”

“Twenty times?” Jack said, eyes shifting between where his glans poked up between the four breasts at the apex of each thrust, and Antoinette’s teasing gaze.

“Oui, vingt. Elaine tied the poor man up, and being a young Mekhet, he could not escape.” She laughed again, and pushed herself harder against her friend’s breasts, trapping his cock in more slippery heaven. “Naturally, my cruel friend tortured every climax from him. It took the entire night.”

“You enjoyed it,” Elaine said. She matched Antoinette’s pressure, and Jack did his best to keep up his rhythmic thrusting, as the two women squashed their bodies against each other, with him between them. “I expect to be in the city for some time. We elders do not travel often, Jack, as you can imagine.” She grinned up at him, licking her lips. “I do hope we can do this regularly? These old stories stir such wonderful memories, and awaken urges I have not indulged in decades.” Her eyes told a thousand stories with just a glance. They weren’t eyes like Ashley and Julee, where each night was an explosive experience full of delightful flavors that threatened to overwhelm them. They were experienced eyes like Antoinette’s, eyes that had seen tens of thousands of sexual scenarios, and had refined her taste over the centuries like an immortal wine connoisseur.

Two women, who'd had sex with each other hundreds of times, and sex with probably tens of thousands of other people, and now complete and total experts in the art, were bathing his cock in their breasts. It was enough to make his eyes roll up as the pleasure waves started down his swollen glans, into his pelvis and underneath, until he shuddered. He forced his eyes open and down, refusing to miss this, as he started to cum.

“I do believe,” Antoinette said, grinning up at him for a moment before looking down at where his hard, desperate thrusts caused his cock's head to poke up between their jiggling breasts, “that my love and I would enjoy that.”

A gush of cum rose over the splashing water, the heavy strand coating one of Antoinette's breasts, until Elaine raised her torso a few inches, causing her bosom to slide up along Antoinette's until the next gush of fluid landed on her breasts instead. Their up-and-down rhythm was subtle, just enough to occasionally alter whose breasts was coated in cum in between Jack's thrusts. Each thrust was hard enough to make the whole bed of supple skin ripple in the hot water, and bathe his length in the massaging pressure of their tits.

“I would indeed,” Elaine said, also looking down, and smiling at the sight of his cum squirting up from the bed of cleavage. “Would you, Jack?” She pressed her body in as snug as she could, making sure each thrust was so, damn, fucking, good. Just the sight of their breasts, struggling to fit into the tight space they were making, was enough to have him melting. But the heavenly friction of their lubed, cum-soaked pillows surrounding his cock as he fucked the bed of cleavage, was almost painfully blissful.

Much as a Kindred's Blush of Life allowed vampires to manipulate their bodies, and push them to some pretty absurd extremes, sexually speaking, he couldn't cum forever. But he did his best, and focused on keeping the part of the Blush that allowed, and triggered sexual desire, to keep going. When his orgasm finally started to fade, he gulped down at the sight of both women's breasts coated in cum, and finally stopped thrusting. Four breasts, each with several heavy strands of white cum, eased their pressure, and started to float in the hot water. But they didn't back away completely, content to keep his cock half buried inside the hot, heavy heaven.

"I ... I think I would," he managed to say between pants.

"Wonderful," his lover said, and she stood up. Elaine did as well. The two of them looked at him over their shoulder, and without saying a word, or even looking at each other to confirm what they were about to do, they both raised their hands, and started to slowly massage his cum into their skin. Close enough so their breasts touched, they rubbed, caressed, and teased each other, their fingers overflowing with his cum, and soon his white fluid trickled down their stomachs, and along the undersides of their heavy breasts.

These two women really were going to kill him with sex. Ah well, it was a good way to die.

Chuckling, the Prince ran her fingers through the water to wash them, took his hand, and pulled him toward her as she stepped out of the tub. Elaine walked beside her, and the two of them laughed between themselves as Jack followed along, staring at the two women's asses, and the back contours of their jiggling, swaying breasts. They knew he was, and when they glanced back, they laughed again.

Antoinette was enjoying this, and that surprised him a bit. He knew she'd enjoy spoiling the ever loving shit out of him, because she really got off on watching him struggle to manage new, or massive amounts pleasure. But, she was really, really enjoying this. There was a bounce in her step, and he smiled as he noticed her glances occasionally jump to Elaine. Much as Antoinette was attracted to Elaine, those weren't the sort of glances she made when she was thinking sexual thoughts. Her glances to her friend were the sort of glances Jack and Damien made when they were having fun, or sharing a hidden joke.

The two elders were having fun. And, well, that was such a nice change over the past few months, he smiled. Yeah, the whole night had been a ridiculous indulgence of every fantasy a guy like him could have, and he knew Antoinette was doing it half just to treat him because of how rough his life had been lately. But, she was also half doing it because she found it fun.

Fun was good.

---

He gawked as he watched Antoinette and Elaine. Either the two women were psychic, or they just understood each other on a strange, succubus wavelength that allowed them remain in sync, without saying a word. Antoinette took Elaine to her favorite shower, the large one of black marble — always with the fancy black marble with the white veins — and with a huge slanted split overhead that poured hot water like a waterfall. They slipped out of their thongs, exposing their smooth slits, and as Antoinette turned on the water, Elaine reached for the soap.

Jack stood outside the shower, naked, and watched the two women begin to lather each other. Not themselves, each other. Vampires didn't need to bathe unless they got something on them; in this case, very thick silicone-based lube. Jack, paralyzed, stood there and watched the two women soap up their bodies, specifically their coated breasts. Chuckling, they half looked at him, half looked at what their hands were doing, and began to wash away the soap under the falling water.

Part of Jack could tell he was standing there, five feet away, frozen and hard again. A much larger part was hypnotized, turning off all thought, and bound by the spell of the two women washing each other.

“I trust my quarters are prepared?” Elaine said. “As are the accommodations for my servants?”

“Of course.” Nodding, Antoinette stopped washing Elaine’s now clean breasts, and took Jack by the shoulder. Soon, he was standing with his back against Antoinette’s stomach, and she, looking down over him from behind him, reached down, and covered his hard length in soap. “How long did you imagine you would be staying, dear friend?”

“Six months at minimum, but I am not sure. I would love to see your latest research.” Without hesitation, Elaine stepped forward, her breasts nudging against Jack’s chin and neck, as she reached down, and netted her fingers with Antoinette’s. “Perhaps a year or two. Perhaps more.”

“Year?” Jack said, gulping, and looking up. With a giant set of tits pressed against the back of his shoulders, and another nudging against the front of them, and the top of his chest, chin, and neck, it was very hard to think straight. He was literally being squashed between boobs. On top of that, both women were using both their hands to lather his cock, and he couldn’t help but groan quietly as he felt expert hands massage and caress him.

“Elders rarely travel,” Antoinette said. “It is dangerous. Elaine will not leave until she has made the trip worth it.”

“Oh, right. That—” He sucked in a breath as the two women turned slightly, aligned the falling water, and washed his length free of lubricant and soap. The tingle of hot water on his swollen glans, along with four hands squeezing along and around his girth, was fucking heaven.

“And, as you have no doubt surmised, my great grandchilde, I wish to learn more of you and this curse. I am an Architect of Terror, a leading name in researching all that pertains to the Beast.” Elaine stepped in a little closer again, until her breasts squished against his chin, neck, and shoulders. Her grip on his cock tightened. “I am not above trading pleasure, for information.”

Before Jack could say anything, Antoinette laughed and shook her head, her long, wet, white hair nudging against his back. “Above? You enjoy it.”

“That I do. And I openly admit that you were correct, Ann. Your love’s eyes are ... utterly ... entrancing.” Slowly, Elaine lowered herself down, and down, dragging her breasts against his chest, his stomach, his hips, down his pelvis and cock, and down until she knelt in front of him.

“You’re, um, being awfully honest about your intentions,” Jack said. He squirmed a little, but froze again as his great grandsire set a succulent kiss on his cock’s tip. She looked up at him as she did, her blonde hair flattened to her head like a swimsuit commercial.

“Yes, well, I had planned to tell Ann about our lineage someday, and after learning about you and how you awakened the curse, I knew now was the time. Better late than never, I can only hope.” She set another kiss on his glans, and another, before she leaned forward, and set the whole of his cock’s engorged head in her mouth. She smiled up at him, watching his gaze as she slowly ran her tongue around and around, while her lips inched back and forth along the base edge of his glans.

She was too damn good. Just like with Antoinette, he really had no chance of lasting any longer than two minutes, if she wanted to make him cum quickly. Apparently, she did. Worse, was that while Elaine set her hands on his legs for balance, Antoinette continued to squeeze and gently stroke his cock at the base, while Elaine gave him a blowjob.

He was so spoiled, it was painful.

“I would not let her do this if I thought her intentions ill, my love,” the Prince said. “I trust her, and I trust she will aid you in removing your curse.”

“She—” He sucked in another breath as he felt the pleasure waves start to build underneath his testicles, and his glans grow sensitive with the sparks of pleasure her lips and tongue milked from him. “She, uh, says she doesn’t remember what she did to get rid of it.”

“Elaine is a dragon, like myself. I am sure she has records she can search through. Do you not, my friend?”

Elaine nodded, and lifted her head from his cock, just before the pleasure jolts would have tipped him over the edge. God damn it, she’d never even seen him before tonight, and she could already read him well enough to know when he was about to cum.

“Poor records, but I did record a few things, and I have retained a few, hazy memories that may be of use. I wish to learn about the curse, now that it is unleashed, and I am sure that there will be hints within my records that could be useful to you.”

Again, before he could say anything, Elaine put her lips back onto his shaft, and bathed the aching head of his cock in slow, sensuous licks of her tongue, while her lips slid back and forth in a tight suckle along the base of his glans. As much as he was utterly obsessed with breasts, breasts couldn’t provide the delicious, wet, tight friction of lips and tongue. Combined with Antoinette gripping the base of his length, and jerking him off into her friend’s mouth, he couldn’t hold it any longer.

His lover's grip slowed, but remained firm as she started to milk him. Elaine's mouth did the same, and her eyes gazed up at him with delight as he filled her mouth with cum. Each gush was a hard jolt of pleasure from his engorged cock's head, down through his length, and into his pelvis and thighs. He did his best to hold still, hands at his side, but holy fuck, with one woman stroking and squeezing, and the other licking and sucking, he couldn't help but gently ease his hips forward toward Elaine, and sink another inch of his cock into her as he came. A subtle rhythm allowed him to softly fuck her mouth, as the two women drained him.

"Now," Antoinette continued, "do not tell Elaine everything. Dolareido secrets should remain with Kindred of Dolareido." Before Elaine could pull back and say something, Antoinette reached out with both her hands, cupped the back of her friend's head, and at the same time, pushed her own hips forward. Elaine arched her spine backward, leaned her head forward, and created a straight line of her neck, as she was forced to deepthroat Jack.

He stared down at Elaine, who didn't break her smiling gaze, as he squirted the final drops of his cum straight down her throat.

"But," Antoinette said, hands still on Elaine's head, and keeping her buried balls deep on his cock, "the mystery of your curse is one I want solved. It is dangerous. As Prince of Dolareido, consider it an order, my love, that you and Elaine should work together to be rid of it. In return for her aid, answer whatever questions Elaine may have for you, regarding the curse."

Jack gulped, nodded, and stared down at his great grandsire as she gently nudged her head around, while her tongue bathed the underside of his cock. The two women had no issues discussing business, and making business decisions, while having sex. Antoinette had told him in the past that she tried to avoid letting sex dominate her life to the point it seeped into her work, but Elaine seemed to bring out some naughtiness in her. And the idea that someone else could make Antoinette even more naughty, was scary.

Finally done, Elaine stood up, and smiled down at him. The way she looked at him now was not the same as when she'd look at him on the roof of the Black Hall. Whether she'd been faking it or not, he couldn't really tell, but now, there was something else in her eyes, something he'd only seen hints of before.

She was plotting something.

---

~~Author's Note~~

Sorry about this chapter, but sometimes, I just wanna write about boobs for 10k words. I'm weak, forgive me!

Part 8

Chapter 119

~~Jack~~

“It’s been a long time,” Michael said, and he pushed open the door.

Jack, Jessy, and Damien followed. The leader of the Invictus, and the three Right Hands, together, in the home of Viktor Honors, and then later, Julias Mire. A beautiful mansion, very Victorian, with its grand entrance room and big wooden stairway with fancy railings. Hell, there was a chandelier.

It was very Viktor. It was very not Jack.

Michael stepped over to the stairs, but didn’t go up. Instead, he leaned back against a railing as he folded his arms across his chest, and looked at Jack.

“As you’ve probably already guessed, Mister Terry, your victory against the hunters has earned you enough status to own Mister Honors’s home.”

“Julias’s home,” Jessy said. She shut up pretty quick though, when her sire glared at her.

Michael was an imposing man, big, tall, strong, with a shaved head, a nose piercing, and hints of tattoos here and there hidden under his suit. Piercings and tattoos on someone like Beatrice made them look punk and new age; not on Michael. On him, they seemed more like battle scars. He looked like a strange mix of a street fighter, and mafia boss, especially in his expensive suit.

In the past, Jack was terrified of him. He could still remember the night he met him, the same night he met Viktor and Maria, the same night he'd died, and was reborn as a vampire. Well over two years ago, holy fuck. Felt like yesterday, or an eternity ago. Which made the contrast in strength he felt between himself and Michael now, all the more powerful. Back then, his Beast had cowered in the presence of the elders. Now, he knew, if he had to fight Michael, he could.

He could destroy his boss, if he had to.

But that wasn't how the game was played. It wouldn't help Jack in any way to kill Michael, and not only that, Michael had a million connections. The man was smart, and probably had several contingency plans for dealing with Jack, including plans that'd be set off if Jack killed him. It was a smart idea to still fear the man. Plus, it'd only hurt Jack in the long run to kill his boss. He was an ally.

Ugh, he hated thinking thoughts like this. Power corrupts. At least the ravenous, insane rage and malevolence of the curse no longer infected his personality subtly. Nope, now it rode around in his head as a second personality. Lovely.

"Thank you, Mister McDonald," he said. "I ... I believe I know why you've been hesitant to give me this mansion."

"Oh?" A small smile graced the man's lips. "Do tell."

"I have no thralls or ghouls." The closest he had were Scully and Mulder. They waited on the mansion's rooftop as the vampires spoke, and were utterly useless in keeping a mansion in good condition.

His boss's smile grew. "That is the primary reason, yes. Do you plan to change that?"

"I don't know if I should. I've never given my blood to another." He glanced back to Damien and Jessy, who waited quietly. Damien didn't have any thralls or ghouls either, but Mekhet often didn't. They usually flew solo. Jessy, on the other hand, had four ghouls, and probably some thralls Jack didn't even know about. But she didn't have a curse to worry about.

Ventrue lent to thralls and ghouls more than the other bloodclans. Even the Daeva didn't rely on having an army like the Ventrue did. Until Jack started building up a host of thralls, and maybe even ghouls, he wouldn't really be a Ventrue.

"Your sire, and grandsire," Damien said to him, "had ghouls and thralls. Were any of them a problem?"

Jessy shook her head. "Nope. Regular dudes and dudettes."

Sighing, Jack took a single step, and stopped. "It's not the same. The curse was sealed inside them. It's not in me, not anymore."

The room went quiet, and they all stood there for a few moments. Yeah, much as they were all damn happy the hunters were no longer a threat, the curse still was. It made every conversation where it came up get kinda awkward.

"The mansion is yours, Mister Terry," Michael continued. "As much as Madam Turio and I don't think it's a good idea to give it to you, you've earned it. Now, see to it that you do not insult your station. Acquire some thralls or ghouls to maintain it."

Jack nodded, and did his best to keep the sour expression off his face. He could Dominate some people and turn them into thralls, but using Dominate, especially on an innocent kine, would be like using a wrecking ball to open a screen door. The curse was liable to really hurt someone.

But there was another way to create a thrall. A serving of blood bent the mind of anyone, kine or Kindred, to liking the owner of said blood. A second serving, and they adored the owner. A third servicing, and they became bound in the Vinculum, completely devoted or obsessed with their new master.

To create a ghoul was a similar process, except he'd have to infuse his vitae into his blood, to give the ghoul their special properties. Immortality, great regenerative abilities, and supposedly, even some minor Kindred ability if they lived long enough.

Julias gently used Dominate to create his thralls. Viktor likely enjoyed breaking kine with the Vinculum. The stark contrast between them was a painful reminder of Jack's circumstance, and he sighed as he looked down at one of his hands. He wouldn't be able to do things the way Julias did, not until he got rid of the curse, and he had no idea if that was even possible. And doing things the way Viktor did might be dangerous. Who knew what his blood would do if he fed it to someone.

If he wanted to keep the mansion, Michael was right, he needed thralls. It would be very unbecoming an Invictus to own a mansion, and let it fall into disrepair. Image was everything to the Invictus.

"I will figure something out, Mister McDonald."

"See that you do." And with that, the big guy nodded, and left.

After a heavy sigh, Jack sat down on the stairs, a few from the bottom. Damien and Jessy joined him, sitting on either side of him, and before Damien could say anything, Jessy pat him on the shoulder.

"New digs! Sweet."

Jack frowned at her. "Your sire's right. I can't keep a big fucking mansion unless I'm willing to ... you know." So much easier to keep a nice, big apartment in good condition, than a fucking mansion. He hired a cleaner to take a trip through his place once a week, and even that was unnecessary. A mansion was a completely different beast, and this one had some dark secrets that demanded it be tended by thralls and ghouls, not hired help.

The Gangrel shrugged as she looked around. “Is this an ethics thing? You know there’s plenty of humans in the city you can convince to accept the Vinculum before they’ve even had a taste, right? Just dangle the carrot of immortality in front of them, and bam, you have a thrall. If they’re good at their job, upgrade them to ghoul. If they’re good at that, someday, sire them.”

Groaning, Jack got up, and started down the right hall. Damien and Jessy followed, and he opened a door that led further into the house. He knew his way around the mansion, a little at least, enough to know how to find things like the kitchen, some of the reading rooms, guest rooms, recreation rooms. They were all absurdly fancy. Made him think of Disney’s Beauty and the Beast, the interior of the castle in the cartoon movie.

“I can’t say I really like the idea of doing that,” he said, drifting from room to room. “I mean, yeah, I get it, I’m not human anymore and I need to stop thinking of myself as one. But even then, I don’t know what’ll happen if I give a kine my blood.”

Jessy shrugged as she followed behind him. “You can just give it back, you know; the mansion, I mean. No one expects a vampire your age to manage a place like this. You’re what, three years embraced?”

“Not even.”

“Well there ya go. If anything, Michael gave you this mansion so you’d try and own it, fuck up somehow, and then he’d get to knock you down a peg on the social ladder.”

Ah, right, the Danse Macabre. Michael wasn’t his friend, not really, and Jack would be stupid to just blindly accept anything the man did for him.

“Yeah, you’re right. I’ll ... think of something.” He picked a random room, one with fancy couches and fancy tables and fancy curtains, and threw himself onto a couch, on his stomach, face down in the cushions.

“How did last night go?” Damien said.

“Yeah!” Jessy jumped onto the couch with him, and didn’t bother to control her landing. Her ass drove straight down into his back, and he yelped as he flopped like a fish.

“It ... it went well, I guess,” he said, frowning up over his shoulder at her. She didn’t move, and grinned down at him.

“Better than well, yeah? That Elaine chick was totally into you.”

Damien smiled slightly, but shook his head. “I’m not sure it’s simple attraction, Jessy. I got the impression she knew Jack, or maybe, knew something about him.” Subtle smile unwavering, Damien crouched down by Jack’s head. Pinned as Jack was, it almost felt like he was a captive, being interrogated. “And it looked like you knew her too, Jack.”

Jack rolled his eyes, and let his cheek collapse against the arm of the chair. “Yeah, kinda. I recognized her from the memories the curse showed me.” No point in lying to these two, not about this. “She’s my great grandsire. Viktor’s sire.”

The other two Right Hands looked at each other, eyes wide, then stared down at him.

“Seriously?” Jessy said. “Holy shit.”

“Yeah.”

“Then, the curse?” Damien asked.

“She’s not cursed. I don’t know how she got rid of it, and she’s not sure either. It was hundreds of years ago, and the best she has is some journals from way back when that might help us figure it out.”

Jessy got up, and eyed him, like he’d said something stupid. “And you believe she wants to help you? Out of the goodness of her heart?” Ok, yeah, maybe he had said something stupid. If Michael gave him a mansion as a way of manipulating him into a bad position, Elaine helping him might fit the same bill. But, why would she try and sabotage him? Made no sense.

Jack sat up and shrugged. “She’s Antoinette’s closest friend, save for maybe Daniel. The Prince trusts her. But I’m not stupid enough to think she’s come to Dolareido just to help me out. She’s up to something. I don’t think she’s trying to ruin me or anything, but she’s definitely up to something.”

Now that there was room on the couch, Jessy sat down next to him, and her grin widened. “And?”

“And what?”

“And, how was last night? She looked like she wanted to fuck you.”

“I—”

“Maybe fuck’s not the right word. She looked like she wanted to tie you up and do sexy things to you, in that motherly way Antoinette does. Strict, but tender, I guess?”

“Hey! Antoinette does not mother me.” He looked to Damien for support.

Damien offered no support.

“No no! It’s cool, Jack,” Jessy said. “Everyone’s got their kinks. You know how many girls got a daddy kink? Hint: fuckloads. No one’s judging you for having a mommy thing.”

He facepalmed. This wasn’t happening. “I don’t have a mommy kink!”

“Come on, you can’t lie to me. I bet Antoinette just loves to pamper the shit out of you, right? Smiles at you sweetly and strokes your hair while you fuck her tits? Or says you’ve been a bad boy, ties you up, and fucks you in a I’m-in-charge-but-I’m-gentle kinda way?”

He raised a hand, finger pointed. And, lowered the hand. “Let the record show, that at no point have I ever called her mom, or mommy, and she’s never called me son.”

Damien choked on a laugh, and Jessy didn’t bother trying to hide her laughter.

“Ok ok,” she said. “I believe ya. So, Antoinette’s friend, Elaine. She join ya?” He rolled his eyes, but nodded. “Dude, that is epic. Two elders in the bed? The two of them combined have probably seen more sex than God. Or, you know, Satan.”

Damien coughed, bothered by the ‘God’ comment, but watched and listened, evidently interested.

Jack offered him a knowing glare. If he wanted to, he could call out how at least a few dozen people had seen him fucking Fiona last night. The glare was enough though, and Damien coughed again as he looked away.

“Ok, yes, I admit it, Antoinette loves to pamper me. And she and Elaine are very similar, and ... enjoy doing a lot of things together.” A lot lot lot of things.

“Knew it,” Jessy said. “Bet you spent the whole evening being smothered in giant boobs. Christ that Elaine is stacked. Makes a girl envious.” She frowned down at her own boobs hidden inside her suit, and Jack rolled his eyes. Jessy had large breasts, especially for a woman as fit and muscular as her. Just, not as large as Elaine’s.

He stuck his tongue out at her. “And you? Still failing to get more legs in your bed?” Welp, if Jessy was going to steer the conversation into sex, like she so often did, he was going to tease her about her own, failed attempts to corrupt Eric.

“... yes. The dude is just thoroughly uninterested in indulging those fantasies I know damn well every man has.”

Jack shrugged at that. “I mean, yeah, not gonna lie, multiple girls with one guy is pretty awesome, but like I’ve said before, some of my best nights with Antoinette are the best specifically because we enjoy each other without Ashley or Julee ... or Elaine now, I suppose. We can be romantic. Not that we’re not romantic when they’re with us, but it’s much easier to be very romantic and intimate when alone.”

“Ugh, I suck at this romance thing.” She threw up her hands before letting her arms collapse on her knees with a slap. “Like, how the fuck do you ... do the romance thing? I mean, I hang out with Eric all the time, but I don’t really do lovey dovey.”

Jack smiled. That wasn’t true. Much as Jessy was a very outgoing hornball who struggled with the quieter aspects of socializing, and had a somewhat masculine personality, that didn’t mean softer parts of her didn’t come out. When Julias died, Jack had seen her express them in her own, strange ways. And Eric was a smart guy. He probably picked up on them, in ways Jessy didn’t even know about.

“How ... how do you know if you love someone?” she added. Both guys froze, and she threw her hands up again. “I’ve been seeing Eric for a while, right? A long while, longer than I have any other guy. I mean ... fuck, I don't know. I don't do dating! I just know that I want to keep him. Hell, I'm even trying to help his dad get out of the hospital."

"How?" Damien asked.

"Gonna show him my tits if he manages to get his lazy, fat ass together."

Damien and Jack facepalmed, in unison.

Jessy frowned at them. "And Eric and I have said ... like, almost said the words, you know? It's just hard! I don't know what the fuck to do."

Damien held up his hands and took a step back. "I'm the last person to ask. My relationship with Fiona is still new, and I know less about romance than you."

That left Jack as the only one with any experience in this area. Except his relationship was anything but normal, even relative to Jessy and Damien's, and for him to describe how love felt was like trying to describe a color someone had never seen.

"When I said the words to Antoinette, it was after I killed Lucas." He glanced to Damien, and caught the man's eyes looking down at the mention of his sire. "It was when I realized that I couldn't live without her. Antoinette and I have a pretty strange relationship. She's so much older than me, and we connect over odd things. No way we talk about the same things you two talk about with your lovers. But, that night, I realized that if she died, I'd be devastated. I couldn't let it happen."

"I nearly killed you," Damien said.

Jack shrugged. “Yeah, you did.” That was then, an era past. “Bygones.”

The Mekhet smiled, but before he could reply, Jessy jumped in again.

“I ... haven’t thought about what it’d be like if Eric died. I mean, I have, but I haven’t, you know? When Julias died, I felt so bad for Beatrice, but I never really thought about it happening to me.”

“It won’t happen to anyone anymore,” he said before he could stop himself. “The hunters are gone. And—”

Jessy got up, and headed for the door. “I’m going to see Eric. Dumbass is visiting his dad tonight. I should do a surprise visit, see how his pop is doing.”

Damien and Jack smiled at each other, and followed after her. Jessy probably didn’t realize what she was doing right now was romantic. To her, she was just being her usual, impulsive self. It was obvious Eric liked that impulsive, aggressive woman, and also liked it when she was being impulsive and aggressive.

Back at the front door, Jessy threw up her hands again, this time in a cheer as she opened it. “Hey! No more sweeps, right? I’m going to run to the hospital, alone, for the fucking fun of it.” And before Damien or Jack could say anything, she slammed the door behind her. Thud. It resonated, shaking the whole house, and Jessy popped her head back in a moment later. “Holy shit, this thing really goes boom. Sorry!” She closed the door again, and was gone.

Damien and Jack laughed, and sat down on the stairs again. Jack could continue on the tour of the mansion, but he knew Damien didn’t care. He didn’t care, either. Just a bunch of empty rooms now, empty and meaningless. Part of him thought maybe he should have felt more attached to this place, but Julias hadn’t owned it very long.

All it was to Jack, was a big house that'd be a huge pain in the ass to take care of.

“Elaine is your great grandsire,” Damien said, eyes on the door Jessy had just closed, and his elbows on his knees.

“Yeap.”

“And she shares in Antoinette’s ... sexual preferences, and activities?”

Jack snorted on a laugh. “Yeah. The two of them are quite a pair. If I were human, I’d be dead.”

“It makes me wonder how your relationship with Antoinette functions.”

“What do you mean?”

The Mekhet shrugged, eyes still on the door. “Jessy and Eric have similar interests, and are at least somewhat of a similar age. Fiona and I don’t, but that’s mostly a case of me having done so little for half a century. She’s exposing me to new things all the time. She enjoys doing it, and, I admit, I enjoy that. She has so much joy to share, and...”

And Damien had a reservoir of misery to shed. Jack smiled at the man, before he let his gaze drift to the door as well. It was easy to forget sometimes that Damien spent fifty years hiding and sneaking around in Dolareido, waiting for the day he could get revenge. When the opportunity had come, he’d become a lot wiser over half a century, and had seen past Lucas’s madness. But, too late. The only reason he still walked the night, was Daniel and Natasha.

The man was racked with guilt, and plenty of self loathing. Fiona didn’t know the meaning of those words, and was happy to pull the man up into a happier place.

“I getcha,” Jack said. “With Antoinette, it’s ... it’s strange. There’s a lot of things you find in normal relationships you don’t find in ours. She’s not interested in having fun conversations where we could trade silly stories about our pasts. She’s not interested in chilling on a couch and watching a movie, unless it’s profound.”

“Those are things Fiona and I do quite a bit. Jessy and Eric too, I imagine, trading silly stories and watching movies on a couch.”

“Yeah, exactly. But, with the Prince, I can sit down and have a conversation about ... storytelling techniques, and she’s instantly engaged. We’ll have a back and forth about it, comparing points, and she’ll counter me with examples from history. Or maybe I’ll get stuck on an existential thought, you know? And when I bring it to her, she doesn’t just try and humor me or stare blankly. She engages, and challenges my mind. When I bring up music, she doesn’t throw up her hands with enthusiasm and squeal about her favorite band. Instead, she talks about different musicians, different instruments, different playstyles, and we compare the things that strike a chord with us.” He didn’t stop to draw attention to the pun. And Damien didn’t draw attention to it either. No friend in the world is as good a friend, as one who ignores puns.

“She sounds very intelligent.”

“Extremely. But, I still manage to surprise her. Sometimes I find a way to phrase a hypothesis she hadn’t considered, and her eyes light up, intrigued. When I can find a silver lining in dire assessments about things like the future, humanity, etcetera, it makes her so damn happy. Sometimes, I can poke a hole in a philosophy she’s proposed, and she’ll almost bounce with joy.”

“The Prince? Bounce?”

“Ha, I know, right? But she will, or you know, almost, when she’s with me.” Bounce was probably the wrong word. More like, purr. “She likes talking to me, because when we talk about things, it’s both an intellectual exercise, and we both genuinely enjoy analyzing and dissecting things. Our egos don't get in the way. It's fun."

Damien nodded. "I think if I asked Fiona to analyze why she likes a movie, she'd ... give up, in seconds. She just likes things."

"I'm surprised you don't want to debate with her."

"I ... don't enjoy debating, analyzing, obsessing."

Jack raised a brow. "Really? You're a natural at it, and you're a Mekhet. I just assumed—"

"I'm good at it, but honestly I wish I could just ... enjoy things mindlessly, like Fiona does."

Ah, yeah, Jack could understand that. He could never do it, but he could understand why someone would want to.

"And when we're not debating or analyzing things, Antoinette and I, we can just ... lie down and hug each other, you know? We can cuddle," he dared not say that Antoinette was usually the big spoon, "and talk about emotional things. I confide in her about all the shit that's been happening to me all the time. She confides in me about her struggles with Dolareido, about how frustrating it is for her, to try and get everyone cooperating. She..." He laughed as he rubbed his head. "She likes to talk about her day, and I like to listen. And vice versa. Our days, er, nights, are pretty strange compared to kines', but still, we genuinely enjoy talking about them with each other."

"That does sound a lot like love, when combined with everything else. Not that I would know from personal experience."

"You haven't been dating Fiona very long. Give it time. And it's not like you have to love her."

Damien sighed and nodded. “I guess. But ... I don’t know how I’d feel if I lost her. Never, in my whole damn worthless life, did I feel happy to wake up, until now. Is that too dramatic?”

Laughing, Jack buddy punched his friend in the shoulder. “A little. But I can tell Fiona likes that dramatic stuff.”

The Mekhet smiled, but it faded after a while. “Speaking of drama ... you were talking to Clara at the ball yesterday.”

“Yeah ... I was. I didn’t think it was a very dramatic moment though.”

“To everyone observing, there was drama. Your eyes—”

“Fuck! Ugh, fuck. I should start wearing a bandage over my eyes, like Jacob. They got see-through bandages and shit, right?”

Damien shrugged. “Yeah, maybe.”

Sighing, Jack got up, and started pacing. Damien had gone quiet, obviously waiting for Jack to speak on his own. Nice of him, but now that the man had brought up that painful conversation with Clara, it quickly dominated Jack’s thoughts.

“So, what do people think, after seeing me talk with Clara?”

“They think you’re caught between a rock and a hard place.”

“Well, fuck, I mean, yeah, I am.”

“Why? Just tell Clara to back off.”

Jack walked over to the door of the mansion, and set his back against it as he looked down at the beautiful floor, and then up at the more beautiful chandelier. “I don’t want to hurt her feelings anymore than I already have. She’s great.”

“She’s insistent. You’d think she’d have backed off on her own by now.”

Jack shook his head. “She thinks my relationship with Antoinette is doomed.”

That earned a startled expression from Damien, and then, a nod of understanding. “I can see why she thinks that, considering what we just talked about.”

“The age difference?” The heart of the differences between Antoinette and Jack. Sure, Damien was a fair bit older than Fiona, as was Jessy and Eric. But that didn’t hold a candle to the difference between Jack and Antoinette.

“The age difference. You’re so much younger than her. I get that you and the Prince connect and love each other, but ... Clara’s concern is warranted, don’t you think? Antoinette is absurdly old. She has watched the rise and fall of nations. She’s so old, Dolareido is a petri dish she’s been working on for over two centuries.” Damien shrugged and stood up. “What happens in five years from now? Will she grow bored of you? Or will you start to crave a more ... even relationship?”

“Even?”

“Well, Clara isn’t that much older than you, compared to Antoinette. The Prince has experienced so much, that nothing is new to her. If a couple is meant to grow together, then I’m not sure how you can do that with Antoinette.”

Leave it to his friend to say what he was thinking.

“You think I could have a healthier, more normal relationship with Clara.”

Damien put up his hands in surrender. “I don’t think anything. Like I said, I’m the last person to ask about this sort of stuff. But Clara’s probably thinking: Jack’s dating a succubus, and even if Antoinette means well, she’s so old that she’s just reliving her youth, and hurting you in the long run.”

“Reliving her youth...” It was a line of thought he’d gone down several times, and each time, it always scared him. Was Antoinette actually in love with him, or was she just reliving her youth through him, and was addicted to that feeling? “I don’t think so.”

“No?”

“No. Well, I mean, she probably is, but it’s no different than how I enjoy her intelligence, wisdom, and maturity. She knows a billion more things than me, about everything.” He shrugged, opened the door, and waited for Damien to follow. “I don’t think it’s the basis of our relationship or anything, though. But, I see what you mean. It’s a very strange relationship.”

Damien followed him out of the mansion, and they stood at the top of the small stairway that led down to the huge driveway. In Rich Side, places like the mansion had long driveways that twisted left and right over small hills, before eventually connecting back to South Side. It was quiet. Behind the mansion was the edge of the city, and the rocks and sand of the desert. Secluded. The perfect place to be a scary Ventrue with a host of ghouls and thralls guarding his home twenty-four seven.

But he wasn’t an elder. Creating and maintaining thralls was draining. Creating and maintaining ghouls was even more draining, supposedly. If he created them, it wouldn’t be from his own power, it’d be from the curse. Sounded like a recipe for disaster.

Back out in the night air, and without Michael to scare them, Mulder and Scully rejoined him. Each found a shoulder to perch on, and each gave Damien some inquisitive looks before taking a turn nuzzling their heads into Jack's temples. Without thinking, Jack reached into his pockets, into a hidden bag, and pulled out a little bit of oat mix for each of them.

"You owe Clara a favor," Damien said, smiling at the two crows, but speaking to him.

"Yeap."

"Know what she'll ask for?"

"Not a clue. You ... you don't think she'd ask for something like a date, do you?"

His friend shrugged, and joined him as the two started to walk down the driveway. No need to explain, or ask, Damien just followed him as Jack wordlessly decided to go for a walk. Or had Jack decided to follow him, when Damien decided to go for a walk?

Two friends, talking about girls, and not having to say a word about where they were going. They just went. God damn, it felt nice. Even with Julias, he hadn't ever really been in sync with him to that point. Julias was a good mentor, and a great friend, a father figure, but he'd been a very different person than Jack. Damien and Jack weren't nearly as different. Hell, they were similar in a lot of ways.

Which made Damien's opinion on what to do about Clara very important to him.

"I think she might," Damien said. "Maybe if there was something more perilous going on, she'd ask for a favor about that. But since things have calmed down a bit, she might ask for a date."

"Seems kind of dirty."

"Maybe. To her, she's rescuing you from a relationship with an ancient succubus, someone she assumes is just using you for her enjoyment.”

“I really don’t think that’s fair.”

“Neither do I. I trust you Jack, when you say your relationship with Antoinette has depth. But, playing devil’s advocate, I can see where Clara’s coming from.” Damien stroked his chin for a second as he considered. “Maybe spend some time with her to tell her that?”

Spending time with Clara wasn’t high on his todo list. Hell, he was avoiding her. He didn’t want to have a beautiful, fun woman trying to convince him he shouldn’t be with Antoinette. There were too many valid points she could make, and he liked Clara lot.

A week ago, Antoinette would have shot Jack down, and prevented him from going on that mission to kill Jeremiah and Angela. Clara hadn’t. She’d joined him without hesitation.

He liked her more than he liked to think about.

---

Damien and Jack stood side by side, deep underneath Dolareido in the abandoned tunnels. The trip wasn’t nearly as stressful as it’d have been in the past, what with hunters laying traps around back when Jeremiah was still a threat.

Well, there was still a little stress. This deep underground, he couldn’t call the Begotten and tell them he was coming, and attempts to contact Fiona before going underground proved unsuccessful. Either she was in her lair, or she was with Azamel. Considering Damien had drained her last night, probably in her lair, sleeping a monster’s sleep, or maybe passed out on her real bed. That meant Jack was about to commit a great sin: the surprise visit, assuming Azamel was in her chair. He kinda hoped she wasn’t. If she wasn’t around, he could just leave and forget about his responsibility of keeping peace between the paranormals. He could leave, and not worry about having a conversation with Athalia.

But, she was there. So was Mark. Athalia, on the other hand, was not. Thank god.

“Azamel,” Jack said as he sauntered up to stand in front of the raised concrete platform her strange living room was built on. “How are you?”

The old woman looked horrible. The cigarette between her fingers had a long tail of ash on it, ready to be tapped onto her ashtray, and her sunken eyes stared ahead, only occasionally glancing at Jack. Her breathing was labored, and her skin sagged more than usual. She looked like she’d aged a decade in a single week.

“What do you think? Idiot child.” She raised a shaking hand, and blew smoke. Normally, she’d have blown the smoke straight at him. Not tonight. Blowing smoke six feet was probably too much effort, based on how she looked.

“I think ... you look like you’re dying, Azamel.”

His brutal honesty managed to get a smile from the old woman.

“I am. Jeremiah’s ritual was partly successful, as you saw.”

“Yeah.” Sighing, Jack pulled himself up onto the stage. Mark got up immediately from lying on a nearby couch, but Azamel waved him down with a tiny, trembling gesture.

A living room on a concrete stage. Such a horrible way to live, but then, Azamel and the other Begotten used it because it was easy to portal in and out of their lairs to here. No need for a bathroom, he guessed, if they just went into their lairs to do ... that.

“I suppose you want to know how much longer I have left,” Azamel said.

Damien tilted his head to the side, eyebrow raised, and looked to Jack. Jack shook his head. Trying to be friends with Azamel would be harder than ever, after what Antoinette did, and especially now that the old woman was dying.

“No, Azamel. I wanted to thank you.”

The old woman coughed, coughed, coughed some more, and looked over her shoulder at him, eyes a little bloodshot. “Thank me?”

“Thank you.” He grabbed a simple kitchen chair, one they kept near their old, dingy couch, and sat down on it reversed. “You’ve been a royal pain in my ass, Azamel, but in retrospect, you’ve been a greater help to me than my bosses Maria, Michael, or Viktor ever were. And everything that happened because of Jeremiah and Angela is ... understandable, I guess.”

“Understandable?” She choked on a laugh. “Did the Prince tell you what I was up to?”

“That you were trying to kill Jeremiah here, in some sort of grand battle, to make your name a legend? Yeah, she told me.” Shrugging, Jack slid the chair in closer, and eyed the woman while wearing a small smile. She didn’t scare him half as much as she used to. “But you didn’t actively try and get us killed. You didn’t go out of your way to hurt anyone. And, you even offered advice and information every so often.”

“Pfft. You fucking vampires and your incessant need to fight each other over every scrap. I simply don’t attempt to usurp you, and you think I deserve thanks.”

“Yeap.”

Again, she scoffed, and took a drag of her cigarette. “What else did you want?”

“I thought, maybe ... you’d want to talk?” If there was one thing, one thing in the whole world he new about old people, it was their love of telling stories to anyone who’d listen. “Some crazy shit happened, you know? Jeremiah got his hands on, what I guess was a knife made of elephant tusks? Ivory?”

Much as old people loved to talk and tell stories, they also weren’t stupid. One glance from her told Jack she knew what he was doing, getting on her good side by luring her into telling a story. But, it also told him she didn’t really mind.

“You heard the story, from Jeremiah’s own mouth. And the knife, he ... had on his person, hidden. It was a part of the ritual, I suppose, that it would join him, and he would use it on me while I was vulnerable.”

“That ritual. That was ... insane. So many people died.”

Azamel breathed smoke into the air after another puff. “Heroes like Jeremiah have always found ways to do strange things, tools to allow them assaults of such. Elen was a tool.”

“Is a tool.”

“Ha, yes, I suppose. That snake Jacob has her, doesn’t he?”

Jack sighed and let his head droop. “Yeah, but, I’ll deal with Jacob. And—”

“Jack.” Azamel set her cigarette down, and stared at him with heavy eyes. “Don’t underestimate this thing that’s wrapped itself around your insides. Don’t underestimate it or rely on it. It’s merged with your Beast, Jack, the very thing that makes you a vampire. It's strong, and it is not to be trifled with, by others, or by you."

That was painful to hear. He'd heard it before, from her specifically, but with the dead look in her eyes, it hit particularly hard.

"Thanks, again, for the warning. But, I'm not here to talk about Jacob, or even Elen. I wanted to talk about you, and what happened. Like, what happened to that knife? If Jeremiah had it hidden on him, on his physical body, then—"

"Then Sándor ate it. And I doubt it could survive in the gargoyle's gullet."

"Heh, I guess that's one way to get rid of a deadly weapon."

Laughing, Azamel managed another puff, and tapped out her cigarette again. "It was deadly to me, because of my past. I was ... well, you heard Jeremiah. I was just a roaming fool, little vampire. Just a roaming fool, caught up in nightmares I could not understand." She shuddered as she looked down again. "Do you have any idea, Jack, what it's like to roam fields of tall grass, of jungle, or savanna, in total blackness? Do you have any idea what it's like, to hear the rumble of the earth as something colossal crushes rock and tree underneath its feet?"

"No, I don't."

"Neither did I. But the nightmares came nonetheless. And this ... this creature, it drove me insane for years. Always I ran, and I ran, and I ran, until I went to the Middle East in search of answers." Another laugh quickly turned into a coughing fit, and she set the used cigarette down once the coughing past. "I listened to the locals as they told tales about elephants, and then finally, the horrific tales of warning. I always thought elephants were cute, large creatures. I had no idea, no idea at all, how terrifying they were, before the nightmares came. And deep in the jungle, I learned ... the nightmares weren't an exaggeration."

Jack put up his hands for a moment. "Don't need to convince me, Azamel. I grew up watching nature documentaries. Elephants are terrifying." Lots of videos out there of elephants going on rampages, flipping cars like they were nothing. "I suppose Jeremiah got that knife made, when he realized the origin of your Horror wasn't based on Ganesha, but real elephants. Or, rather, a horror story spun because of real elephants."

"Yes. But the knife was useless on its own. He needed a way to trap me and expose me. The ritual."

"I'm ... sorry, that I couldn't stop it in time."

"Yes, well, all things must come to an end eventually, I suppose." She reached for her breast pocket of her old sweater, took out the pack of cigarettes, and fought to open it.

Jack snatched it from her hand. Before the stubborn woman could say anything, he snatched the lighter from her other hand as well.

"You know, you really pissed the Prince off, spying on her." He slipped out a cigarette, gave it to her, and flicked the lighter on. Fire, even a tiny fire like this, was vampire bane. It was to him what that strange ivory knife had been to her, what silver was to werewolves, something the universe deemed meant to kill them. The universe was a strange place with strange rules.

Azamel eyed him, obviously annoyed. But after a few seconds, the annoyance faded, and she set the cigarette between her lips. He lit it.

"Sorry, if I don't like surprises," she said. "Mark is good though, isn't he? Hard to detect."

“Yes, he is.” Jack eyed the man, and the man eyed him back, the barest hint of a smile on his face. “He’s also very lucky to be alive. Any other city, and he wouldn’t be.”

“Perhaps.”

“Perhaps? Antoinette is the nicest elder vampire on this damn planet, and you know it.” He grinned at the old woman and rolled his eyes. “What’s your opinion on Sándor? And where is he?”

“Why should I tell you?” She took another puff, and this time, did blow the smoke at him. He was a lot closer, so she didn’t have to try hard. But he also didn’t have to breathe, and the smoke past him without getting into his mouth or nostrils.

“Because I’m not your enemy. I’m your friend, Azamel. And I think you know that. Otherwise, why would you have told me about ... whatever it is, sneaking around in Dolareido?”

The old monster let out a long sigh, and a long puff of smoke with it. “Sándor is powerful, very powerful. And broken.”

“Broken? Right, because of his family.”

“Yes. Outside of that, I know little of Sándor. He has not spoken to me more than once, since the incident, and his lair remains sealed off from mine.”

“Sealed?”

“We could break in, but that requires effort, and is hardly courteous to a neighbor.” Another puff. “He prefers to be alone.”

“Heh, I think Jennifer is trying to change that.”

“Whore.”

Damien laughed. He'd been still and quiet the whole time, but as the conversation went on, Jack could see his friend slowly become more comfortable with Azamel.

“And the thing,” Jack said, “the thing that’s sneaking around in Dolareido. Other people know about it, but no one knows what it is. Is—”

“It’s still here. I stumble onto the scars it’s left in the dream, every so often.”

“Jesus. The dream, too?”

“Yes. It’s torn at the ... the ... fabric of reality.”

“Now you sound like a comic book character.”

That earned a laugh from her, and she continued to laugh, even as she coughed and smoke came out of her nose. “I struggle to describe it any other way. Fiona has shown you the scars it’s left in the Shadow realm.”

“Yeah, but they, uh, didn’t give me ‘breaking the fabric of reality like a shitty comic book writer with their head jammed up their ass’ kinda vibe.”

She sighed and shook her head. “Whatever it is that hides in the city, it tears holes in the realms. I don’t know what it is, or why it does what it does, but it doesn’t take a genius to understand that it does what it does, knowing full well it could lead to problems.”

“Problems?”

She shrugged, sucked in a hard breath between her teeth, and Jack struggled to hide a wince. Even shrugging was difficult for her.

“If you have a room, and half the room is a giant aquarium, what would happen if you started damaging the glass that separated them?”

“That...” He frowned as he looked down and rubbed his head. “That ... might have something to do with the azlu.”

“Oh?”

“Those spider monsters that showed up. Natasha tells me the Uratha mentioned that azlu like to spin web, to strengthen the Gauntlet separating the physical world and the spirit one. Apparently it’s some kinda instinct thing for them.”

The old monster nodded as she tapped ashes into her ashtray. “Perhaps they sensed what I found. I do not know, vampire, but I do know that these tears continue.”

The tears. He frowned as he looked down and scratched his head. Ok, hunters were gone. Next mission, figure out this mystery, which probably meant getting Fiona’s help, and maybe stepping on the Uratha’s toes by going into the Shadow realm.

“Thanks, for telling me. Not now, I mean, but before, when you didn’t have to.” He was tempted to offer her an olive branch, like removing the explosives the Invictus put up around the tunnels the Begotten loved. But, much as Azamel was proving helpful, she was still a threat. The Jack in him wanted to be nice, and remove that stress for her. The growing vampire in him knew better.

“You’re welcome. Any other freebies you wanted, vampire?”

Laughing, Jack shook his head, but slowly, another question came to him and one he didn’t want to ask. Two, actually.

“Where’s Athalia?”

“She is with that blasted man, the sheriff.”

Jack blinked. Damien blinked. The two of them looked at each other, trying to find some explanation in each other’s faces, but they were both confused as hell.

“Uh ... is ... he still with her?” Jack asked.

“I believe so.” A small, knowing grin said a lot more than her words. Sex implied. The monster and the sheriff were fucking, if Azamel was right.

That was a surprise. He knew Athalia and Daniel knew each other, and had gone through some shit long before Jack came around, but he had no idea it might be like that; assuming Azamel was correct. Athalia being romantic with Daniel was actually pretty awesome, if it meant the woman could find a little peace and happiness.

It was a strange image, the cold, hard Daniel, holding a likely weeping Athalia. She was such an aggressive, angry, bitter woman. But, thinking about it, Daniel might be the tide breaker she could rage against. When her rage settled, he’d still be there, unmoved, unchanged, and he’d get to see what no one else got to see: Athalia, with her guard down, vulnerable, and alone. Cue romance?

“And ... and the last thing,” Jack said, “is...” He waited, knowing damn well she’d interrupt him, like she interrupted him a dozen times before, and did to everyone.

Except she didn’t. She stared out, not looking at anything, and took a long, slow drag of her cigarette.

“Is what I thought you’d ask before,” she said at last, “how much longer do I have left.”

“Sorry, but, yeah. Horrible thing to ask, I know, but it’s important. I need to know what’s going to happen to Fiona, Athalia, and that jackass over there, too.” He pointed over his shoulder with a thumb to Mark. No point in checking the man’s reaction. “They all work for you.”

“They don’t work for me. They’re family.”

“Like the mafia.”

“No, young fool. A family. Surely you remember family?” With a heavy sigh, she shook her head.

Well, it was kinda hard to see things from her point of view, being a vampire and all. Human instinct was to socialize, to form tribes, to find safety in numbers and create groups that could protect each other, coexist, and share resources. Kindred instinct was a lot closer to that of a tiger. Territory was sacred, and not to be shared. Even now as he listened to her, he knew his human half wanted to agree with her, but the Beast in him balked at the idea.

“I remember family,” he borderline lied, “it’s just...”

“Yes, I know. There’s a reason paranormals struggle to trust vampires, Jack. But, if you must know, I ... don’t know. Weeks. Maybe months. Every day, I can feel my life drain from me, a wound I can’t heal from.”

“That’s awful.”

“Yes, it is. But I have lived a long life, and I have helped many Begotten understand their place.”

Many Begotten? She was old, very old. She’d probably lived in a lot of places over the past couple hundred years, and if she treated other places like she treated Dolareido, she’d helped Begotten learn how take care of themselves. It was who she was, a leader, in a strange way. Jeremiah’s ritual, and the past it’d put on display for everyone to see, had confirmed it.

“Thanks, Azamel. I mean it, you old bitch.”

She laughed and blew some smoke at him. “You’re welcome, leech.”

He smiled at her, and jumped off the stage to land beside Damien.

“Let’s—”

“Before you go, Jack, please speak with Sándor.”

“Sándor? Why?”

“I’ll be dead soon, and I ... would not have my kin be without someone strong to protect them. The gargoyle is old, and strong. He can do that.”

Jack and Damien traded glances. She was right, Sándor was strong, very strong. But he was also a quiet guy who didn’t seem interested in merging with the paranormal community. Jennifer, a gorgeous woman, had latched onto him, probably in an attempt to use him to help Beatrice get over her own trauma, but the man remained steadfast.

“Reluctant leader?” Damien said, reading Jack’s mind.

Jack shrugged. “Maybe. He does owe us a favor, considering all we’ve done for him.” It was as good a plan as any. And besides, it didn’t really make sense to let the witches get their claws in him so quickly. “Goodbye, Azamel. I ... I really am sorry, you know? That things went the way they did. I wanted to stop Jeremiah and Angela, and—”

The old woman waved a hand, dismissing him. “What’s done is done. Now, begone, leave an old woman to her solitude.”

---

“She’s afraid,” Damien said, once they were a ways down the tunnel.

“Yeah. She’s dying, so, I mean, I can’t blame her. Death is terrifying.”

“I could preach of Longinus, if you wished? He’s found a path for us undead, a way to save our damned souls, and a way for us to find purpose in our second lives.”

Jack stopped, and looked at his friend. Slowly, Damien’s mouth broke into a grin, and the two of them burst into laughter. Jack was, at best, agnostic, and Damien knew it.

“Speaking of. How goes the revival of the Second Estate?”

Damien furrowed his brows as he looked down and started walking again. “It goes well enough. A few Kindred visit the cathedral regularly, and Maria has been allowed to speak to the Invictus as a whole of the Lancea et Sanctum.”

“Sounds like you’re up and running, then?”

“In a manner of speaking. There’s still ... issues, from the Carthians.”

“The fuck is Garry up to now?”

“He’s blocked me, from speaking to his covenant.”

Jack grit his teeth. Damn that man. Every time Jack felt like things were going better in Dolareido, that things were looking up, that he could relax, someone mentioned Garry. Terra Den and Jeremy Long, Garry’s beef with the Second Estate, it was all going to be a pain in Jack’s ass. The Invictus and Lancea et Sanctum were often called the First and Second Estate for a reason. They usually ran cities together, one subservient but still cooperative with the other. According to the Prince, it was perfectly normal for the Carthians to be picking fights with both Estates in most cities, and the only reason the two Estates didn't crush them completely, was because of typical Kindred bullshit. The Invictus and Lancea et Sanctum schemed against each other as with all covenants, and secretly fought for control of the city, despite the outward appearance of cooperation. If one pushed themselves too hard defeating the Carthians, they weakened themselves and left their backs exposed to their supposed ally.

But they worked together when it came to blocking the Carthians, to a point. So, for Garry, now was the best chance he'd get at dealing with the Invictus, with the Lancea et Sanctum down and not able to block him. The only reason shit hadn't escalated to a full on war, was Dolareido's peaceful disposition, and how Antoinette forced it. In any other city, the Prince would either be an Invictus or Sanctified, and be personally invested in defeating the Carthians, while manipulating their allies, be they First or Second Estate. Sometimes the Prince was a Carthian, and those cities were supposedly quite crazy, borderline anarchy.

Dolareido having a dragon for a Prince was, apparently, very odd. Dragons were hands off, doing their own things and being regular Doctor Frankensteins with their secret research. In Antoinette's case, Dolareido was her experiment, or one of them at least, and she was content to let the Invictus, Sanctified, and Carthians beat on each other as long as the peace wasn't broken. Garry knew that, so, what did he hope to accomplish with Terra Den, and now getting in Maria's way with the Lancea et Sanctum?

A chilling thought ran up Jack's spine. What would Dolareido be like if Jacob was the Prince? Probably like The Purge, every day of the year. Only the strong would survive.

"Has Maria brought it up at the Primogen meetings yet?" Jack said.

“She’s been hesitant. You know what the Prince thinks of the Sanctified.”

“Yeah, I guess. But, you were a big part in helping take down Jeremiah, dude. You freed Sándor! That’s gotta have weight.”

Damien sighed and nodded. “I’ll mention it to Maria later tonight. It would be nice, if Garry got off my back.”

Jack nodded, and they continued on in silence for a while. Comfortable silence. Neither Jack nor Damien were chatty types, and it was great how they could both shut up, and just enjoy silence.

Once they got back up onto the streets, Damien turned to head off in the direction of the cathedral, but stopped. He looked at Jack, struggling with something.

“Jack,” he said quietly, and he stepped in close so the kine nearby wouldn’t hear, “I’m worried about Elaine.”

“Yeah, me too. I know she’s up to something, and it probably has something to do with the curse.”

Tension eased from Damien’s shoulders. “I’m glad you’re not letting your guard down with her. Does she know about your sister?”

“My sister? I ... oh, you mean ... the ghost.” Cold weight pulled Jack’s eyes down, and he frowned as the memory of the specter haunting his old home haunted his damn head. “No.”

“Still don’t think she’s really her?”

“I think it doesn’t matter. She has to go.”

Damien grimaced. “That’s cold, Jack. Your mother—”

“My mother is the one I’m trying to save. If Mary sticks around, it’s going to hurt her more and more.” It was a sad story, and frustrating because it seemed like he was the only person with enough sense to realize it. It didn’t take a genius to see how badly the situation with Mary’s ghost was going to end.

---

~~Eric~~

His dad was getting better.

Eric tried to hide his knowing grin, but he couldn’t, not as he watched his dad sit his fat ass up out of bed, and actually start walking around. And under his own damn power, he managed to walk around the hospital with him. The old bastard was tough. The host of health problems, caused mostly by his weight gain, and exasperated by shit like age, stress, and atrophy, were destroying his health. But apparently the promise of getting to see Jessy’s tits was enough to get him moving again.

“How’s the job?” his dad said, limping alongside him, a cane in hand. The cane had four legs, the type Eric had seen before, except there weren’t four tennis balls wrapped around the feet of this one.

“Pretty good. Pay is ridiculously good.” And it better be, considering how expensive a stay like this was at South Center Hospital.

“That Jessy lady treating you right?”

Eric rolled his eyes, and continued along the hall with his old man. The evening was still young, the sun having set only an hour ago. Not exactly normal visiting hours, but the Invictus had pulled some strings to let him visit his pops whenever he wanted.

“You’re just thinking about that promise she made.”

His dad grinned at him. “Maybe.”

Eric rolled his eyes, again. “Get well enough and I’ll take you to Bloodlust. I’m sure I can find some drunk girl to throw herself at you.”

“Eugh! A club? Son, you can’t be serious.”

“No, I’m not. It is pretty horrible.”

“Hate working there?”

“Nah, not really. I’d hate to go there as a customer, but working there is pretty chill.”

His dad raised a brow as he looked at him. “Chill? You look like you’ve been beefin’ up.”

Heh, leave it to his dad to notice if he’d been putting on muscle. “I am a bouncer. I should be pretty strong to do my job well.” Course, he hadn’t done much exercise since he’d changed. It seemed like the wolf in him knew the best form for his body, and was building it for him. He doubted he could sit on his ass and eat 10,000 calories every day and not get fat, but it did seem like it took very little effort these days to push his body toward new fitness heights.

“Looks like your knee is doing better.”

“It is. The pain is minor,” he lied. No pain at all.

“Get into any fights at the club?”

“Eh, not really. It’s pretty quiet there ... except for the music.”
That damn music.

“Must be kinda dull. You ever miss being in front of the camera? Being in the ring?”

“A little.” Though, considering his recent reintroduction to being on camera, he was missing it more. It was fun, having an audience. He didn’t expect to be doing porn like Natasha suddenly found herself doing, but that didn’t mean it hadn’t been fun.

“That Jessy gal looks like she could kick your ass. She ever fight?”

He snorted on a laugh. “She’s fought plenty, but never professionally.”

“Tough girl.”

“Very.”

“Think she’ll treat you better than Sheryl?”

Eric raised a brow as he looked down at his old man. His dad had never been under any illusion about the divorce; both Eric and Sheryl were to blame. They didn’t communicate, didn’t share interests, didn’t get along unless the money was flowing, and by the end of it, didn’t want to be in the same room. Of course Eric felt it was mostly Sheryl being a bitch, and liking him only for his money and fame, all lost when he’d hurt his knee. But time was a good teacher, and slowly but surely, he started to realize how much his own bitterness had contributed to that divorce.

But now he made an amazing salary, lived in an amazing apartment, and dated an amazing woman. It was a lot easier to look back on the past and see the error of his ways, when not currently out of his mind miserable, driving a taxi, piss poor, and dealing with a bum knee.

“Honestly? ... yeah, I think she will. Jessy’s an awesome woman, and I...” And I love her. “And I think I’ve learned a thing or two, from my first marriage.”

“Ha!”

“Think I’m kidding myself?”

His dad shrugged as they eventually came back to his room. He waddled over to his bed, pulled himself up onto it, and rubbed his legs. Walking wasn’t easy for a man as broken and unhealthy as him, but with how much better he was treating himself, it wouldn’t be long before he’d be walking out of the hospital.

“I think it’s dangerous to go thinking you’ve got women figured out. Ain’t nobody got women figured out, boy, women included. You want things to work with this woman, talk to her, figure things out.”

Eric sat in a chair against the wall, and smiled at his old man. For the first time in a long time, his dad didn’t turn on the TV.

“The old ‘communication solves everything’ idea?”

“Fuck that. Communication just helps you spot the problems before they explode and ruin your day. Only thing that solves those problems, is hard work! Relationships ain’t easy. Your mother and I had lots problems, and it took work to iron them out.”

His dad went on and on, hitting Eric with various speeches about how lovely Eric’s mom had been, and how stubborn she could be. On and on, about the work they had to do to raise him, poor as they were, and how rough their neighborhood was. On and on, about how much he loved her, and it was such a damn shame she was gone.

In the past, Eric would have rolled his eyes and dismissed his dad’s ranting. Just an old man, a bitter widower, sharing his woes with whoever would listen. Except now, it didn’t sound like bitter ranting. The tone was the same, the inflections, the words. The difference, was Eric.

“Am I interrupting?”

Eric and his dad looked to the door as Jessy stuck her head in. He'd heard her coming, even over his dad's ranting, but he was getting better at not letting his new, enhanced senses show outwardly.

"Hell nah," his dad said. "How you doing, girl? My son treating you well?"

"He is." She reached out, and when Eric took her hand, she pulled him up. A big kiss soon followed, but Jessy kept it short. "And you, you old fart, you look like you're doing better."

"Yeah well, if the boy's getting his life together, I should too. Got a few more years in me yet."

Eric blinked. Was that the real reason his old man was finally taking care of himself? When Eric hurt his knee, and his whole life had fallen into a spiral, his dad's health had done the same. And now that Eric's life was looking better, especially romantically, his old man's health was on the up. Fuck, did his dad care about him that much?

Of course his dad cared that much. Jesus, the fuck is wrong with you, Eric? Took you this damn long to realize your dad, a single man, is attached to you? You're his son.

"The deal is still on," Jessy said, grinning at his dad. "Get to it."

"Yes ma'am."

"I'm going to steal your son now." And she did, pulling him out of the room.

Eric managed to poke his head back into the room for a second before Jessy got him too far. "See you Monday?"

"Yeah yeah, now get outta here."

Eric nodded, and disappeared around the door frame with his girlfriend. Nurses walked past, along with a doctor here or orderly there, and none of them looked happy to see Eric and Jessy. The two of them were a couple hours past visiting hours, and the staff knew it. But the staff also knew Jessy worked for Xnomina, and that Xnomina owned the hospital. They couldn't do a damn thing.

“Hard to believe that this hospital got swarmed by crows,” he whispered.

“Ugh, the damage was insane. Dead birds everywhere.”

He leaned in a little closer. “And the staff just go along with it?”

“We got a few thralls working on the staff, and high up in the chain. Shit's managed. Same with most of the big companies in the city.”

“Invictus really control the city, don't they?”

“I'd like to think so, but Terra Den has their fingers in a lot of stuff.” Frowning, she took him to the cafeteria. It was well after supper, and not many people were around. Jessy found them a secluded booth by the window. “Garry's finally figured out that money's the way to control shit in Dolareido.”

“Think that'll be a problem?” He slid into the plastic booth across from her, and watched her for a moment. She was in a casual suit, jacket open and shirt undone a few buttons, enough so a bit of her bra was visible. Fucking gorgeous. Honestly, given her personality, he usually expected her to wear jeans and regular shirts more often. But despite her tomboy personality, she seemed to prefer the Invictus look.

Nowadays, if given a choice, he'd take a good suit too. A well tailored suit was comfortable, and looked good. He was wearing a casual suit right now, without the jacket, and he could admit to himself it felt good to look good. And that's probably what the Invictus wanted, for him to get attached to the money. Well, he was thoroughly attached at this point, and had basically forgotten about Azamel's offer.

“Yeah, it'll be a problem. First, Viktor died. Then some Invictus Kindred died, when the fucking idiots joined Lucas, got brainwashed in that weird place — because apparently brainwashing was a thing — and attacked the Prince. It hurt our numbers. That put the power in Garry's hands. He took advantage of that opportunity, and sired Jeremy Long.”

“Right, right. Was Long at the ball last night?”

“Yes, but he's been doing a good job of avoiding attention. I can't get him alone, and I just know if I talk to him when he's with Garry, I'm going to start a fight.”

Garry's new childe, Jeremy Long. Eric didn't know the man, but he did owe one of his thugs, Montoya, a lot of money once upon a time. Killing Montoya's goon Mr. Pitt, and literally eating him and his henchmen, had been Eric's introduction to the power and berserk rage of the Gauru form. Nauseating as it'd been, he could still remember the taste, and he could still remember liking it.

“How much you know about Mr. Long?”

Jessy shrugged and peeked out the window. A mostly empty parking lot, with street lights shining on pavement.

“I know a lot more about Terra Den, the only real threat to Dolareido in a lot of financial districts. Long himself is pretty secretive. All I know, is that he's a ruthless businessman, practically a predator.”

A predator. Eric smirked at that as he looked down at the cafeteria table. Well, it made more sense now for Garry to sire someone like that, if the man had the instincts of a predator. Gangrels were drawn to people like that.

“Considering how things went last night, I figured everyone was getting along,” he said.

Jessy snorted and shook her head. “Vampires are fucking horrible. Lowering our guard long enough to fuck, isn’t fully lowering our guard. You didn’t notice? A bunch of them vamps, mid-fuck, were looking around and scanning for what other Kindred were doing, recon and assessment shit.”

“The fuck can you learn from watching how someone fucks?”

“A lot! You can get a sense for who’s really letting their guard down, who’s too stupid to watch their ass, who’s smart enough to keep their eyes open.”

“You plot devious plans in the middle of sex, don’t you?”

She laughed and winked at him. “Only when you’re going slow.” After a few, silly laughs, she leaned in close to him, elbow on the table. “Looking to take another stab at being Batman?”

“Say what?”

“You know, sneak into the Shadow realm, and clean some scum off the streets?”

Eric raised a brow. “Thought you didn’t really agree with my idea?”

“What? I—oh, you mean about what Matt and Art said.” Sighing, she slid out of the booth, but slid back into it on his side. After a few moments to get comfortable against his shoulder, she traced a finger along the table. “I dunno. It’s not like Kindred hate kine or anything. But we’re not kine, and neither are you, not anymore. It doesn't make sense to put yourself out there for no other reason than to be a good Samaritan."

"I ... I guess. But my dad's human."

"Yeah, but..." Sighing, she rubbed her cheek into his shoulder. "I don't know how you werewolves deal with it. Vampires, we spend the first ten, twenty, even fifty years of our second lives, struggling with this issue. Eventually, we accept that we're not human anymore, and we stop feeling much sympathy for them. They're food."

Ouch.

"I ... don't know if I can ever do that." How the fuck could he even think in those terms? Another fifty years? He'd gathered that Uratha lived a long time, maybe a couple centuries from what he'd seen of Avery, but that was nothing compared to immortality.

"I get that. And besides, I'm not against what you want to do. Sounds like fun. And I like the idea of pissing Avery off."

"Yeah?"

"Yeah. Bitch is arrogant."

Eric smiled at his girlfriend, leaned down, and kissed her forehead. No need to say what he was thinking, especially since she promptly punched him in the leg for the silent insult.

"Ow."

"I'm different than Avery. I'm awesome."

"Of course."

"And she's probably a prude."

“Probably.”

---

~~Antoinette~~

Elaine took one of the guest rooms meant for vampires, with a sealable door capable of withstanding an explosion. It did not have the strength of Antoinette’s personal vault door, but it was more than enough for an elder to feel secure come the dawn. And besides, both Elaine and Antoinette had thralls within the tower, armed and ready to defend their masters.

It had been decades since Elaine’s last visit, but her old friend fell into her routine smoothly. There were rooms that, while not dedicated to the woman’s research, were easily converted to such. Secure connections to various networks the Ordo had established could be made, allowing Elaine to pursue her research, or at least access it.

And no doubt, Elaine would attempt to continue her research, with Jack as her new focus. Antoinette knew of her friend’s intentions, and Elaine knew that she knew. The issue was, whether such pursuits would be harmful to Dolareido, or to Jack. If they were harmless, then Antoinette had no reason to block her old friend’s efforts. If they were potentially harmful, well, then Antoinette would put an end to her friend’s experiments. It was not unheard of for one dragon to interfere with another.

It was unheard of for two elder dragons as old as them, to interfere with each other directly, though.

“Did you enjoy yourself last night?” she asked of Elaine.

“You know I did.” They laughed. It was true. “I did not expect the boy’s presence to be so ... alluring.”

“He pulls you into him, does he not? I get lost in his joy.”

The two of them walked her halls, both dressed in suits and ready to work. Natasha awaited them, and Samantha would join them soon.

“And he enjoys my company, or my body, at least.” Elaine frowned as she looked down at the floor. “Unlike your sheriff.”

“Daniel did seem preoccupied with Athalia last night.”

“Very.”

“I cannot judge the man for his tastes. I do not agree with his tastes, but I cannot judge him for them.”

Elaine chuckled and nodded. “I suppose. It is not fair of me to judge this Athalia creature. I cannot understand why Daniel would be interested in a woman so volatile and broken, but I shall do my best to leave him be.”

“There is no accounting for taste.”

“Indeed.” Nodding, Elaine pulled out her tablet and checked her messages. “Your lover, Jack. I am surprised you have become so attached to one so young.”

Oh this again. Antoinette sighed and nodded as well. “You do not approve of my tastes, then.”

“Now that I have seen him, I am less surprised. There is an old soul inside that young body. The contrast of his youth with his attitude is beguiling, and I cannot blame you for your attraction to him.” After a sigh, she lowered the tablet, and looked at her closely. “But, I am still concerned over your shared love.”

“Yes, I imagined you would be.”

“Can you blame me, old friend? You loved Tony with all the zeal of a Daeva.”

“That was centuries ago. And ... and he was a loving man, back then, Elaine.” It almost felt condescending, to be reminded she was Daeva, that the curse of her bloodclan would forever stir her to obsess over that which stirred the soul. Love was no exception.

“He was an artist that wooed you with his skill and passion.”

“And Viktor? What did he seduce you with?”

A hint of a frown crossed her old friend’s face. “I was never in love with Viktor, Ann. You are quite in love with this young man, this boy, and I am concerned that you share too little in common for such a powerful relationship.” Elaine leaned in closer, and her face softened. “Sex and friendship are one thing, but love? You love him, I believe that. But it is such a dangerous thing, Ann.”

“Yes, it is dangerous. But it is worth the risk.” Antoinette set a hand against one of the doors in her maze of halls, and looked at Elaine with a somber gaze. “I have not felt such joy in centuries, old friend. Surely you can understand why I would hold onto that?”

“I understand, but do you not worry that, perhaps, Jack is too young to know whether this relationship is healthy for him?”

Antoinette paused for a single second, before smiling at her friend. “That is one of the many reasons I love my little Ventrue. He has the awareness to have undoubtedly asked himself that question, and have looked for an answer on his own.”

Elaine smiled, satisfied for the moment, and followed Antoinette into her primary experimentation room.

“Ah, Natasha Vola,” Elaine said as she entered the room. “Hard at work, I see.”

“Um, yes, um ... w-what title should I call you?”

Elaine smiled as she sat at the table, covered in artifacts, laptops, and tablets. “Officially, you may address me as Elaine, Architect of Terror, just as you are Natasha Vola, Slave. Unofficially, Elaine is fine.” Upon the table, was the book, cover made of skin, and contents a strange, forgotten language. One of the many artifacts she planned to show her old friend.

“Slave?” little Vola said.

Nodding, Antoinette sat next to Elaine, and smiled at her growing student. “You have yet to learn any Coils, and some in the Ordo use the title Slave to refer to ones such as yourself. I prefer Attendant.”

“I think I d-do too.”

“Naturally. But, understand that if you are to remain within the Ordo, you will eventually have to learn Coils of the Dragon.”

The little Mekhet nodded as she looked down, summoned some courage, and looked back to the Prince. “I understand.”

“Good,” Antoinette said. “Is that Samantha I hear running down the hall?”

“Um, Samantha’s—”

“Here! I’m here!” Samantha said as she swung open the door. She sat down at the table, and straightened her shoulders. “Sorry! Not used to putting on suits.”

Antoinette smiled at her silly childe. “It took many months before your son became familiar with them. Months more, before he was comfortable. But with time, he grew to love them, as all Ventrue do.”

“Ventrue love presentation,” Elaine said with a shrug. “As do Daeva.”

“We certainly do, but we enjoy the art of presentation. You, like a thug, enjoy the power and intimidation of it.”

“That is hardly fair!” Giggling and rolling her eyes, Elaine picked up one of the tablets, and grinned at the screen as she examined the footage available to her. “Samantha, you and I have had little time to speak. A true crime. You are my friend’s childe, and I would be remiss to not learn more of you.”

“Of me? I’m nobody. Just a widow, who got pulled into a crazy world by ... horrible circumstances.” Samantha furrowed a brow slightly before looking to Antoinette. “I thought ... we were doing experiments today.”

Antoinette shrugged and nodded toward Elaine. “Forgive my friend, dear childe. But she is the great grandsire of your son, and is thus interested to learn of the boy’s mother.”

Natasha and Samantha both sat up straighter. “W-What?” They said together, stutter included.

Poor Elaine. Perhaps her old friend had meant to sneak it into a conversation, or use the secret to toy over Antoinette’s students, but Antoinette spoiled her fun.

“Your Prince speaks truly. I came to Dolareido only partly to visit my old friend, and see the latest developments in her research in ephemera. The larger part is, your son, Samantha Terry.”

“My son? And ... and the curse.” Oh, dear childe. The woman shivered, rubbed her arms, and looked down at the table as Elaine’s words ripped the joy from her. “Does that mean you’re—”

“Hundreds of years ago, I had the curse removed,” Elaine said. “The ... details of the event, are lost to time. I have some records that may help, and I will use them to the best of my ability to help your son.”

Samantha’s joyful energy returned instantly, and she beamed a big smile at Elaine. “Thank you! Jack’s ... ugh, that boy just doesn’t know how to share the load, does he? Always has to do things himself.”

“A valuable trait, in many ways,” Antoinette added. “Stubbornness and strength of mind often go hand in hand.”

“So does self-destructive bullheadedness.” Laughing, Elaine shrugged, and scrolled along her tablet. “As any Ventrue can attest to.”

“Then it is good I can temper that stubbornness. My love is not the child he appears. He has grown in leaps and bounds, forced by circumstance.”

“He’s growing up a little too fast,” Samantha said. “At least, I think he is. He’s—”

“He is Kindred now, my childe. As much as it pains me, there is great value in a vampire growing as quickly as possible. Many of us are devious creatures, more than willing to manipulate each other for personal gains.” Antoinette leaned in over the table, and smiled at her childe. “Speaking of devious Kindred, how did your evening with Jacob proceed?”

“Jacob? He...” Samantha squirmed in her seat, and squirmed all the more when she realized three sets of eyes were on her. “He’s so interesting! Scary, but interesting.”

“Scary,” Natasha confirmed.

“I know little of Jacob,” Elaine said. “He and I have rarely interacted. His circle was a small thing, when he nested in Europe near Ann and I. It remains small, here in Dolareido.”

With a heavy sigh, Antoinette leaned back in her chair, and combed her hair over her shoulder. “Jacob believed as I did, that if several elder Kindred cultivated a growing city in a new land, we could create a utopia of sorts. Of course, our views of the nuances of that utopia differ. Jacob is a strong believer in Darwinism, Samantha.”

“Darwinism?” her childe said. “Like, evolution?”

“In a sense. Jacob, and all members of the Circle of the Crone, believe that individuals and groups must struggle, as a natural part of our second lives. I push for cooperation, and fight for it. But that man refuses to understand that his views on our second lives, his and his covenant’s, are antiquated.”

“And this,” Elaine said, “is where Ann and I often disagree. She assumes our old way of life, of predator and prey, of letting the weak die and fostering the strong, will not survive the oncoming tide of technology.”

“Technology?” Samantha said.

Elaine nodded. “Indeed. In a couple hundred years, humans will be spacefaring. Will our way of unlife survive such a change? Many Kindred fear technology, and the potential ramifications of billions upon billions of kine learning of Kindred.”

“Would that be so bad?” Samantha said. “We can’t all get along?” The room went silent as, again, three sets of eyes stared at her, though this time with a gentle air of disbelief, and maybe a touch of annoyance. “I ... suppose not.”

“Non,” Antoinette said, “I suppose not. Kindred must cooperate to survive the oncoming genesis. If we work together, we can find ways to keep our society a secret, even in the advent of extreme social upheavals, and total, global alteration at the hands of technology.”

“And Jacob ... doesn’t?” Samantha’s eyes fell, and she tapped her chin several times. Cute as a squirrel.

“Jacob,” Antoinette continued, “is difficult to understand. I imagine he would happily cast the world thousands of years into the past, stripped of technology. He, like all witches and warlocks, encourages Kindred to listen to their instincts, and in extreme scenarios, perhaps even listen to dark voices that whisper to us from shadows.”

This time, it was Vola who raised her head and stared at her.
“Dark voices?”

This conversation had quickly grown far heavier than Antoinette had intended. But, if it would give Samantha the necessary perspective to understand Jacob, all the better. She did not want her childe getting close to the man, but to simply forbid her was not fair, to her or Jacob. And, perhaps, Samantha could succeed where Beatrice would now likely fail, lost to sadness as she was.

“One of the reasons I study ephemera, this material that exists beyond our eyes, that permeates reality in strange ways, is to understand the entities that exist beyond our eyes as well.”

“Entities!?” Samantha squeaked.

“Entities. Beyond the walls of existence you are familiar with, my childe, creatures exist beyond description. Natasha has ventured across the Gauntlet and into a realm of spirits. Nightmare creatures, monsters of literal fear, roam a realm of dreams, and my city. Beyond them, above and below, exists realms so grand and alien, I have struggled for centuries to scratch their surface. Creatures, or gods if you prefer, exist within these realms. And the Circle of the Crone often worship, or seek to communicate with these gods.” Enough verbosity. “Jacob has communed with such entities before, as many in the Circle often struggle, and fail, to do.”

Samantha stared at her for several moments, before speaking at last. “That ... is scary.”

“So be warned, my childe. While I strongly encourage you to avoid Jacob, I will not prevent it. Jacob is a wise man, but while you understand my goals, to understand his is an entirely different matter. Be careful with him.”

The look on Natasha’s face spoke volumes. She did not understand why Antoinette allowed her childe to talk with Jacob at all. Never mind that Jacob could simply force the situation if he wanted, why did the Prince not simply forbid her childe from speaking with the dangerous man?

Because, if cooperation was to be had with her old friend, she needed to extend the olive branch.

No, that was not the only reason. While Samantha, on the surface, seemed a naive and sweet woman, she was Jack’s mother. Beneath her surface, there was an anvil of strength that could survive where others would perish. Perhaps it was cruel, to let her childe enter such dangerous circumstances in hopes that she could accomplish what Jack accomplished.

Perhaps, Antoinette could be a little cruel, when she needed to be.

Chapter 120

~~Jack~~

“Consider a glass cage, my love, and within, a glowing sphere bounces up and down. The cage holds the sphere perfectly still on the horizontal plane, forcing the sphere to remain locked on its vertical path. It bounces at the speed of light, which, as you know, is the limit matter may travel. No faster. 299,792,458 meters per second.”

Jack nodded, eyes wide and engaged as he watched Antoinette. Understanding the world in terms of special relativity was always a troubling mental exercise, but it was one he'd taken a few shots at when he was younger, and he knew Antoinette likely had as well. Course, her 'younger' would have been when Einstein suggested the theory, and Antoinette, forever looking to the future, would have added the hypothesis to her list of key scientific theories to understand.

He smiled as he listened to her, half absorbing the knowledge and trying to wrap his mind around it, half admiring the way her lips moved, and how damn good she looked in that business suit.

“This cage begins to orbit you at a great distance, and in this hypothetical, you are able to see and monitor it instantly; do not worry for the nuances that light must reach your own eyes in reality, as we ignore that in this hypothetical. As you watch, the cage orbits you faster and faster.”

“But ... if the speed of light is the fastest something can move, then ... isn't this example violating that?”

Her own smile grew. “How so?”

“Because, if the ball is going up and down at the speed of light, and it’s rotating around me, then ... Pythagorean theorem, you know? The ball would have angled paths that would be a combination of its bouncing speed, and the orbiting speed. It’d be moving faster than the speed of light on an angle.”

A twinkle danced in Antoinette’s eye, and she leaned forward, elbows on the glass table of her office. “Exactly. But the law cannot be violated. The bouncing sphere will have to slow the speed of its bouncing, so its angled velocity will always have a total velocity of the speed of light.”

“I could literally watch time slow down and the bouncing ball slow down too, the faster the glass cage moved around me?”

She nodded again. “The infamous time dilation. This example is crude, filled with hypotheticals and caveats, but functional.”

He leaned back in his chair and buried his chin in his palm. He was next to her, at the table in her big office at the top of the tower, and also dressed in a business suit. They were having a Primogen meeting later, and he was invited, both to speak of details of what happened during his attack on the hunters, but also to speak for Azamel and Avery.

The meeting wasn’t for another hour though, and he was free until then.

“But, now I’m all confused. What if two people were zooming past each other at high speeds? Do they both see each other as aging slower? Sounds like a paradox.”

“And that is where the hypotheticals and caveats betray us. With them, we are discussing scenarios that simply cannot be measured. If two individuals flew past each other at great enough speeds to notice such a thing, they could not see any paradox, due to perspective, and the vary nature of the speed of light being the limiting factor in how we perceive each other. There is simply no way for both parties to be able to compare their experiences instantaneously. Any and all forms of communication would suffer the very same time dilation you are attempting to measure.” She sighed and shook her head. “It is forever mentally taxing, is it not? Down this rabbit hole, and suddenly, you realize your very experience of existence itself is subject to the whims of the materials of the universe.”

“I have heard some mathematicians go mad.”

She laughed and shrug. “Understandable.”

“Wait, so, if I left Earth at a super high speed, I’d see the Earth as aging slower, and an observer would see me on the ship, aging slower?”

“Yes, but again, that measurement cannot be made.”

“But, if I turned around, and came back at a high speed until I was face-to-face with whatever observer was on Earth, then ... I’d have created a paradox, where both me and the observer expect to find each other aged slower? Because I’m flying away super fast, the observer sees me age slowly, but to me, they’re the one flying super fast away from me, and they’re aging slowly. I fly back, same effect occurs. Me and observer both see each other as having aged slower than the other?”

“No, because your journey had two elements to it. Flying away, and flying home. Two different measurements, that create a different skew of the flow of time, not unlike two sides of a triangle being compared to another, single side, the side of the observer whose initial frame of reference did not change, while yours did.”

Jack dropped his forehead onto the table, and started gently sliding it back and forth so it bumped along. “Ugh, ok, so ... if ... I’m flying away, and the observer sees me taking a trip that takes a year to reach my destination. Observer knows that, while he saw it take a year, from my perspective in the spaceship, it took less. In my perspective, a year hasn't gone by yet ... let's say a three quarters of a year went by, for me to arrive at a distant planet. Then I fly back, and ... but ... in my perspective, I'm thinking the observer is aging slower than me, and—”

“Except, in this problem, your frame of reference remains the Earth. You must adjust your coordinate system in two separate circumstances if you are to measure and consider this problem from the point of you, the person in the space ship, but normally your reference point should remain unchanged through this hypothetical dilemma. You accelerate away from the earth, and then accelerate toward it to return home. Even if you changed the point of reference to be your space ship, and it was the Earth moving away from you for the first half of your journey, you would then be the one that has to catch up to the earth, speeding away from the reference point you original chose. Your point of reference would be your original vector, a vector you leave behind on the return trip. It would not simply follow you, because while velocity is relative, acceleration is not. We can objectively assume that you have left your frame of reference halfway through the journey, or arrived at it, depending on how you measure it, because we can measure the acceleration you used to create that change.”

Jack just stared at her. “ ... you are so hot right now.”

Laughter filled the room, sweet, delicious, and a touch husky. After a time, she smiled at him and rolled her eyes. “I could wear glasses, if you would like? It has been some time since I have dressed as a sex-starved librarian for my pets.”

Jack choked on another laugh. “Ashley and Julee are into that?”

“Are not we all? A quiet, intelligent woman, with a grand reservoir of knowledge, who desperately hungers for a frequent outlet for her large, endless sexual desires?”

He had to admit, that was a very sexy image. Lots of masturbation sessions to porn in that general category.

“Hey, Antoinette, I ... I wanted to talk to you about something.”

More chuckles. “Are we not talking of something at this very moment?”

“Ha, I meant something ... something less fun.”

Her laughter stopped, her smile faded, and she settled back in her chair. “Oh?”

“Um, yeah. It’s...” Oh god, how to word this. Maybe he shouldn’t have said anything? Why question a good thing? “Sometimes, I wonder ... about us.” Her eyebrows shot up, and he cut her off before the world exploded. “Not what you think! Not, not really. Just, sometimes I wonder about us, because ... well.” He slid his chair in a bit closer. “I love these kinds of conversations. I love being able to talk to you about shit like physics, and you take it seriously, and give amazing insight. I like that I can talk to you about music, and you take it seriously, and give amazing insight.”

“Are you saying you only appreciate me for my mind?” The shock on her face faded, partly replaced with a playful grin.

“Ha, no. I’m saying ... our relationship is unique. Very unique. And honestly, sometimes I wonder what ... what I can give you,” he said. She tilted her head to the side, grin vanishing again, but said nothing. “You know so much, and have been through so much. Growing up, I was always under the impression committed relationships were about two people growing together, but I ... don’t really see that happening with us. I’m certainly growing, every moment I’m with you, but I don’t know what I’m providing you, how I could be helping you grow.”

She leaned back, and tapped her fingers on the glass table with one hand, while the other pulled her hair over her shoulder to begin combing it. Instead of the confident, powerful woman he almost always found, Antoinette looked nervous. That, was a very strange look to see on her, and he gulped as he watched the woman of his dreams deliberate.

“You wish you were with someone closer to your age, someone who could ... evolve with you, as you aged.”

“I’m not saying that.” Ugh, why did he bring this up? Why why why did he listen to Damien? Bleh, he knew why. Because they were thoughts he’d already had, about this strange, amazing relationship he found himself in. “But, I ... I am saying, that it’s something I’ve thought about. Not in the sense that, I think it’s something I should have, or that what we have is worse or better or...” He rubbed his buzzed hair and sighed. “I love you, Antoinette, and I have no intention of ending this relationship. But I do wonder about this kinda stuff sometimes, about how different we are, about whether I’m able to provide anything in this relationship.”

She met his eyes, her crimson gaze reaching past his face and into his soul. They’d stared longingly into each other’s eyes before, many times, and he was quite comfortable meeting her stare now. Usually. Right now, she looked at him with something more than loving eyes. She was analyzing him. On anyone else, the analytical expression wouldn’t merit notice, but Antoinette didn’t let people read her expression unless she wanted them to, or was comfortable enough to lower her poker face. And her analyzing eyes were like the eyes of some grand, calculating machine. Made him think of the sphinx gates in The Neverending Story.

They made him feel very small. And that was the worry, the one concern he had about their relationship. Most relationships were built on two people being equals, but Jack was her inferior in so many ways, even if she denied it.

“Jack,” she said after a cold eternity, “it is true that I am much older than you. It is true that I have experienced far more than you, and despite how our undead minds resist change, half a millennium of second life has molded me. It will be many hundreds of years, before you will be able to appreciate events and circumstances with the same perspective as I.”

“Yeah.” That made him wince.

“And, it is true that I have a wealth of knowledge above yours, that which surpasses typical metrics. Hundreds of years of experience has taught me much.”

“Yeah...” This conversation was starting to hurt.

“Jack.” She reached out and grabbed his hand. “If I asked you, to consider whether you had a personal bias clouding your judgment, in any matter at all, not just this one, how would you respond?”

He raised a brow. “I would ... agree, undoubtedly. I’d do my best to see past my biases. I’d try and be as objective as possible, and I’d ask for some outside opinions, cause I’m only human — er, vampire — and I know I could never be a hundred percent objective about anything. I try my best to always accept that I could be wrong about anything, I think.”

“You are self aware.”

“I guess. Kind of a hard thing to define, right? I don’t know if—”

She laughed and smiled at him. “Your very admittance of an imperfect understanding is exactly what I am talking about, my love.” As her mischievous smile returned, she pulled on his hand, harder, until he had to stand up. And before he knew it, he sat on her lap, sideways, and blinked at her. “Do you have any idea, my love, any idea, how rare a quality that is? Can you fathom how rare it is for the average kine, or indeed, average Kindred, to think to themselves ‘perhaps I do not know everything’? Do you have the slightest inkling, on how rare a trait it is for someone as young as you, to have the self awareness to understand that what you see is not a perfect recreation of reality, and that your biases color your perspectives to the extreme?”

“I mean, I get that not everyone’s a thinker, but—”

“It goes further than that, my love. I am not speaking of intelligence. I am speaking of wisdom, a wisdom that most only learn through decades upon decades of suffering, and only when they are so lucky as to survive their own stupidity. To look around you and think ‘I do not understand this world, and my journey to do so will be a never ending struggle, a struggle worth pursuing’ is a perspective on the universe that so few ever achieve.” Sighing, she hugged him, and pulled his head to hers until their foreheads touched. With him sitting on her lap, and her being as tall as she was, they were eye to eye. “The greatest philosophers of history started with such a viewpoint.”

That managed to pull a smile out of him. Any stroke to the ego was candy for a Ventrue, or anyone for that matter.

“Greatest philosophers, mmm?”

She laughed again. “Oui. The ability to simply look at yourself, and consider not only that your own understanding is imperfect or limited, but others may provide a superior, more detailed, more nuanced, and more logical perspective, is wise beyond all measure. And the awareness to apply this reasoning to every aspect of your life, is...” Grin growing, she leaned in and kissed him. “I have told you before, you are an old soul. There is much about us where we are equals.”

He’d be blushing horribly if he’d been Blushing Life right then. “Yeah?”

“And, that is not all.”

“Oh?”

“There is something, something important ... where it is I who falls short.”

He tilted his head to the side, and eyed her closely. Her poker face was gone, ripped away by her own words, and he found himself lost as he stared into her eyes again. Now, as if from nowhere, he found sadness. Not the sadness he was familiar with, sadness caused by pain, visceral pain, family pain, loss and mourning. That wasn't what he saw on her face. The sadness he found there was like looking into an abyss of coldness. It was the sort of sadness he figured you might find on a reluctant king or queen, someone forced into their position, someone who lost everything that they used to know.

“What?”

After a long sigh, she closed her eyes, and kept her forehead against his. “For many my age, it is impossible for us to connect, emotionally. We have left that part of us behind. The older Kindred become, the more difficult it is for us to find, or accept, true intimacy with another.”

“Jaded?” He tried to not think of Jacob and Minerva, or even worse, Maria, and the only man who'd probably ever love the corpse woman, Lucas.

“Perhaps. Much of what brings joy to a soul, loses flavor over the centuries. Many Kindred, as they enter their elder years, become obsessed with their work, their covenants, their goals, and the very idea of finding contentment becomes alien. We become slaves to our ambitions and our Beastly instincts. It ... it takes much, to stir genuine emotion within us.” Her arms slipped around him and held him by his waist. “I have told you this before.”

He nodded, forehead still against hers. “Yeah, but ... I ... I guess it’s hard to understand.”

“Of course. And you will not understand it for centuries yet. It is the curse of immortality.”

Wait. He lifted his head, looking up as he scanned memories. “This reminds me of a Conan story.”

“Conan?” The Prince raised a brow, and Jack couldn’t help but laugh.

“Conan the Barbarian. The story had a bunch of these immortal beings in it, and when they grew tired of life, they would kill themselves in a ritual suicide. It...” He chewed on the thought for a moment, before leaning in and setting his head against Antoinette’s shoulder. “They were villains in the story, but it was sad. They lost the will to live, for no other reason than they’d been alive for too long.”

“Then the author displayed startling wisdom. Life is precious because it is short. Our second lives are different, and it is the struggle of all Kindred to find joy in immortality.” Her left arm raised, found the back of his head, and her fingers stroked his hair and scratched his scalp. Ah, heaven. “You fear that you bring little to our relationship, and are perhaps a leech, drawing from my experience and life knowledge. And yet, here I sit, fearing that I am the leech, attached to you and offering nothing in the way of emotional satisfaction, while I siphon empathy and passion from you.”

She was afraid she was leeching from him, and damaging him. Wow.

He melted into her touch, turned his head, and kissed her neck. “It’s a strange relationship.”

“Indeed. I did not ... open myself to you lightly, Jack. At first, I found your open soul and lack of experience to be a delight to tease. It was a fun game for me. I hope it was fun for you, as well.”

“I mean, kinda? It was definitely scary, having the queen take an interest in a random, new squire.”

She laughed. “And, with every encounter, I realized how much more there was to you, little Ventrue. I realized that you were precious, quickly becoming precious to me, and that ... that I had fun with you. Genuine fun, different from the master and servant relationship I have with my ghouls. With you, there is ... an indescribable feeling, more than a simple desire to tease and spoil, or to rear. You are ... a missing piece. I feel complete when you are with me. And I worry that I am using you.” Her laughter vanished, and the somber coldness in her eyes returned.

But before she could say anything else, Jack kissed her. Not one of their quick, fluttery kisses, but a long one, a deep one, one that he'd normally let her trigger, not the other way around. As the conversation went on, it'd become painfully clear that Antoinette was just as insecure about their relationship as he was. Her concerns were vastly different than his, but she still had them.

And that made him feel a lot better, in a strange way. Antoinette always seemed so secure, so confident, like everything she did was a perfectly calculated plan. Considering how many experiences she'd had, every action she did probably was something she'd calculated as a reflex, cause she'd done it dozens of times before. Except, not this, not romance like this, not with someone as young and different as him.

Mutual uncertainty. Something to bond over. Something to overcome together.

“I've never felt like you've taken anything from me,” he said.

Her smile brightened. “And I—”

Knock knock. Before Jack could get off Antoinette’s lap, the door to her office opened, and Elaine walked in.

“Ann, I—oh. Hello Jack.” The blonde woman’s lips cracked into a big grin, and she walked over to them, hips swaying with deliberate, exaggerated motions. She wore a business suit like the Prince, and the skirt highlighted the shape of her wide hips and curvy thighs. Nothing like a woman in a suit and skirt.

“Elaine. You are early.” Antoinette didn’t react to Elaine’s approach; probably heard her coming, while Jack had been a little too distracted. Another one of those age difference things, presence of mind, a skill Jack seriously hoped he’d eventually learn.

“Yes. I thought we should talk again before the meeting, about how much of the Ordo you are willing to share with your Primogen. But, it appears I interrupted something?” Her evil smile continued as she casually walked up to the chair Jack had abandoned, and sat in it. She leaned back in it, set her hands together on her lap as she crossed her legs, and watched him and the Prince with expecting eyes.

“Oui, that you did.” Antoinette chuckled, a playful, husky sound, and held Jack’s hand as he stood beside her while she remained seated.

“You two are utterly adorable.”

“Are we not?”

“I could write romance novels about such a beautiful couple.”

The Prince scoffed, grinning. “You do not have the artistic skill or creative mind to be a fiction author.”

Elaine rolled her eyes and laughed. “Pretentious Daeva.”

“Jack,” Antoinette said, “would you mind if I asked you to leave until the Primogen meeting? I would speak with Elaine.”

“Yeah, of course.” He stood up straight, nodded to Antoinette in a very ‘yes my Prince’ kinda way, and looked at Elaine.

He still didn’t trust her, not completely, and he knew Antoinette didn’t trust her completely either. The difference was, the two of them were such old friends, they could become enemies and it wouldn’t ruin their friendship. The fact they’d remained cooperative for hundreds of years seemed more like the exception, not the rule, as far as elders were concerned.

Antoinette trusted her enough to have sex with her, with Jack, and the ghouls. That may have sounded like a lot of trust for some people, but for someone like Antoinette, it wasn’t. Hell, Antoinette and Elaine probably kept a bit of guard up, ready to strike out and fight each other, even in the middle of orgasm, despite their friendship. Elders were just paranoid like—

“On second thought,” Antoinette said, smiling at Elaine, but speaking to him, “come, and masturbate for me.”

He froze, blinking at the grinning Elaine, before slowly turning and looking down at the Prince. “Now?”

“Oui. I feel horrible for sending you away.” Oh no she didn’t. Her devil smile was in full bloom. “Come, masturbate, here.” With her eyes on him, she undid the button of her black suit jacket, and then several of the top buttons of her white shirt, exposing the black bra underneath.

“Um ... are you sure? The meeting—”

“Is not for some time. Now, come, enjoy yourself.” Smile unending, she curled a finger at him and toward herself.

“What about Elaine?”

“I,” Elaine said as she gestured toward herself with a loose wrist, “will watch, of course.”

And, Antoinette knew Elaine would say that, judging from the wicked grins the two carried. These two women were so in sync, it was scary.

Maybe he should try something different, instead of just mindlessly following along? He certainly loved following along, cause Antoinette spoiled the shit out of him. But, maybe it was time he tried doing something he never did before.

He folded his arms across his chest, put on a surly expression, and looked away. “No.”

“Non?” Antoinette said.

“No?” Elaine said.

“No,” he said again, and he put a hint of whine into his tone. “I don’t want to.” A lie, of course. Just seeing Antoinette expose her bra was enough to have him craving her.

The two elders looked between each other, apparently shocked by his behavior. But, after the shock passed, they chuckled, and Antoinette stood up. Uh oh. She stepped over to him, devil smile growing, and set her hands on his shoulders. Before he could say or do anything, the powerful Daeva slowly turned him to face Elaine, while she slipped behind him, and pressed her breasts and bra into the back of his shoulders as she hugged him.

“I believe you do,” she whispered.

“I don’t.” Resist. Resist, damn it.

“You cannot lie to me, my love.” Her hands drifted down over his body, and she pressed her fingers against his abs through his shirt. “Or, perhaps, you would prefer to cum on Elaine’s breasts?”

“Um, I—” He froze and stared, as Elaine instantly picked up on what Antoinette was saying, and started to undo her suit jacket buttons as well. “You don’t have to—” He gulped as Elaine met his eyes, and started undoing the buttons of her shirt. Within seconds, the shirt was undone save for the bottom button, and she grinned up at him as she set her hands on the arms of her chair.

Like Antoinette, she was wearing a black bra, something obviously meant to be sexy rather than comfortable. Evidently, the two women had become immune to uncomfortable clothes, and wore whatever they felt looked best.

“My love, you would do me a great disservice, if you denied me.” Antoinette hugged him tighter, making sure her huge breasts squashed against the back of his shoulders. “And, it would be in your best interest to listen to the Prince of Dolareido.”

Ooh, a gentle threat. And fuck him, it triggered instant arousal. Something about a powerful woman threatening him was hot, and by this point in his life, he’d accepted it. He definitely had a kink for the intimidating, female villain trope.

Before he could reply, Antoinette guided him around the table, and up to Elaine. The blonde spread her legs, and Antoinette pushed him closer until he was standing between his great grandsire’s knees.

“I know your desires, lover,” the succubus whispered down over him. “Give into me. Do as I say, and I will make every night Elaine is with us a veritable feast of silk skin and wet heat.” As she said it, her right hand began to undo his shirt buttons, eventually undoing them all, before slipping down onto his crotch to rub it through his pants. He wasn't blushing life yet, but that didn't mean she wasn't going to tease him until he did. Her left hand slid up, and he found her fingers wrapping his throat. "Deny me at your own peril."

Welp, he should have known better than to try and play the unwilling participant. Antoinette knew him so damn well, she could press every kink button he had like playing the piano. She'd trapped him between two powerful, deadly women, threatened him like an evil villain might, had her enormous breasts pressed against him, and was offering to pleasure him using another woman's set of huge breasts.

The fact they were all still in their business suits, just made it all the hotter.

He sighed as he gave in, and Blushed Life. Both women audibly purred as his erection immediately pressed against the insides of his boxers and pants. Elaine sat up straight, set her hands on his pants, undid his fly, and pulled down his boxers just enough to free his length from his clothes. But then she stopped. Still sitting up straight, so her propped-up breasts held up by her bra were only inches away from his pelvis, she set her hands down on the arms of her chair, grinned up at him, and waited.

Her grin melted into a happy sigh, as Antoinette inched him closer to Elaine, took his cock into her right hand, squeezed on the base of its length, and guided it down until it pointed straight toward her friend. His glans dragged along Elaine's bare sternum, before Antoinette guided the swollen head of his cock to the right, and into the side of Elaine's left breast.

"Give into me," the succubus whispered again. "I can make every fantasy you have ever dreamed of come true." Apparently, his moment of resistance earlier had sparked something in Antoinette as well. Without him asking, she'd taken up the mantle of villain, and was trying to corrupt him, as if he were the righteous hero.

Welp, if he was the hero, meant to resist the temptations of a succubus, he was fucked.

Her squeezing grip worked back and forth, and Jack shivered as heat began to build up underneath his testicles. Moments later, drops of his precum leaked out from the tip of his length, wetting Elaine's breast and his foreskin. Antoinette peeled the skin back, exposing the swollen, aching, tingling head of his cock, and gently rubbed it up and down along the inside of each of Elaine's breasts where the bra didn't cover them. Her grip tightened, and she worked her hand faster, knowing exactly what to do to bring him closer and closer to orgasm in record time.

“You could paint my old friend in your seed, my love, every inch of her, inside and out. You could fuck her, while my ghouls and I clean her with our lips, and tongues.” Her grip on his cock tightened again, and stroked him faster. “Or perhaps you would rather fuck me, while Elaine massages your body with her breasts, her thighs, her everything. Or perhaps, you would simply prefer to sit down and watch my old friend and I drive each other to climax again, and again, and again, while my ghouls suckle on your length, and—”

The heat in his glans grew electric, and he moaned quietly as each stroke of his cock caused the sensitive skin to rub and sink into the supple skin of Elaine's left breast. Warmth gushed up from between his legs, up his length, and into the spot where Antoinette was burying his cock's head in her friend's body. White fluid squirted from him, splashing up and over the breast, some of the liquid slipping down between Elaine's bosom, some overflowing and running down along the outside of the breast Antoinette was rubbing with his cock. Elaine said nothing, but she moaned openly as she looked down, and watched his cum flood over her chest, and soak her bra.

“Delicious,” Antoinette whispered.

“Indeed,” Elaine also whispered.

“I uh ... um...” He stared down at the sight of Elaine’s bra and chest soaked in his cum. If he’d been human, his teeth would have fallen out from him being spoiled rotten.

Elaine leaned back, and idly ran a finger back and forth through the trails of his cum, as Antoinette pulled him back, and gave him a gentle slap on the ass.

“Now, off with you. Elaine and I have secret matters to discuss before the Primogen join us. Wait for them, and join them.”

“Yes, Prince.” He nodded, turned off the Blush, got dressed, and headed for the door. Of course, he took a peek at Elaine, who still had her shirt and jacket open, and was grinning at him as she continued to run the tip of her middle finger through the white liquid coating her skin.

So spoiled.

---

~~Antoinette~~

Antoinette smiled at her old friend as her lover left, and settled in her chair as Elaine wiped Jack’s cum off her breasts with a napkin. Unnecessary. It would fade into the faintest hint of dust in minutes, but, it was easier to have a conversation without the distraction.

“You overindulge him,” Elaine said, her weak reprimand joined by a smile.

Antoinette buttoned up her shirt and jacket, and chuckled. “I do. For over two years now, I have spoiled him almost nightly, and it never grows old.”

“I hope I will get to join you, frequently.”

“Judging by how my love has reacted so far, I am sure that can be arranged. Perhaps not every night we make love; we do enjoy our private intimacy from time to time.”

“Of course, but...”

“But, since you have only just arrived, I am sure we can convince Jack to invite you to bed with us tonight. And tomorrow night.”

Elaine smiled and nodded. “Wonderful. But onto the business at hand. As I asked before, what am I allowed to share with your Primogen?”

“Nothing, I am afraid.”

“So your quest to bring the city into cooperation continues to fail?”

Antoinette frowned slightly. “Perhaps. The peace I obtained since the Purge has continued, but as we speak, the Carthians and Invictus prepare themselves for inevitable confrontation. This is of course compounded by the chaos of the arrival of the Uratha and the Begotten.”

“Much has happened to your city, these past two years, since Jack was embraced.”

“Indeed. And what’s worse, Maria both pushes to revive the Lancea et Sanctum, but also...”

“Also?” Elaine asked, tilting her head to the side.

“After my love killed Lucas, I found several hints to suggest that someone is ... up to something.”

“Up to something? Awfully vague, Ann.”

“Indeed. But I have spoken with spirits from across the Gauntlet, and they insist that Maria has been in communication with other spirits who are related to Black Blood in some way.”

The name Black Blood drew a shiver from the old Ventrue. Antoinette did not share all her secrets with Elaine, but she did share many. Black Blood had been a thorn in her side for over a century, and she had spoken with her old friend about the blasted spirit before; if it truly was a spirit.

“Why would she do such a thing? And, how does she even know about the creature?”

“I do not know. Perhaps Jacob spoke with her. Perhaps ... perhaps it decided to speak with her on its own. I do not know. But I do know that both Black Blood and Jacob have tested their abilities in pursuit of resurrection. They have failed, but, that does not mean they would not point another onto the path.”

“Why would Jacob help Maria?”

“I do not know. Perhaps she made a deal with him.” Sighing, Antoinette shook her head. “I will find out eventually. For now, pay attention to those two, and listen for potential clues as to their motives.” No easy feat. All Primogen were masters at saying less than they knew, while simultaneously misdirecting; well, except for perhaps Garry, but only a fool would underestimate the young elder.

“Alright, so, assume the two Nosferatu are up to no good.” She laughed, shrugging. “Nothing new.”

“And the two Gangrel bark at each other,” Antoinette added. “A precursor to inevitable confrontation.”

“Gangrels being Gangrels.”

“And, the details of my experiments continue to be secret.”

“To me as well. You have not told me of most of your experiments or intentions there in, Ann.”

The Prince smiled at her old friend. “I have told you more than anyone except my sheriff. Even my new student, and especially my new childe, remain ignorant to the scope of my goals.”

They shared chuckles. It was such an old game, elders sharing only parts of their secret agendas with even their closest friends. They shared perhaps a third of their secrets, implied another third, and left the other third completely unknown to all. And so the game would continue, with only Daniel as a truly trusted confidant.

No doubt, that was part of Elaine’s attraction to Daniel, to learn more about Antoinette’s experiments. She could not blame her friend for it, either. At their age, the hunt for knowledge was as reflexive and enticing as any Beastly instinct.

“And what do they know of Jack?”

“That a Strix curse has awakened in him, and that, while it is dangerous, Jack seems to be in control.” Something the boy had proven, and yet, Antoinette was not convinced.

“And his lineage?”

“Jacob knows, undoubtedly.”

“Oh? Viktor and I never met him while the two of us were a pair, or in a context where he could deduce such a thing.”

Antoinette shook her head. “Jacob is Jacob. If he did not manage to piece together the puzzle on his own, his blood rituals will have.”

With a heavy sigh, Elaine leaned back in her chair and frowned. “You should have killed him by now.”

“I will not kill him, Elaine. Jacob is an old friend, and for all our disagreements, he has value. And besides, I ... made a promise to Minerva. I will not kill the man without just cause.”

Elaine rolled her eyes. Yes, it was a conversation they had had before. But there were reasons to spare Jacob’s life, more than simply her promise to Minerva that she would give the dead woman’s lover the benefit of a doubt. As Elaine said earlier tonight, she agreed with some of Jacob’s views on their second lives. There was wisdom to be found in the old bastard’s brutal, animalistic view of the world, and she refused to ignore or dismiss him simply because she did not agree with, or enjoy those views.

“Very well. Be aware I will not let the old snake try and control me with knowledge of my lineage. And besides, since Jack is aware, I expect the information to spread.”

“It is hardly harmful information.” There was little anyone could do with the secret that Elaine was Jack’s great grandsire. If anything, people would fear her, now that Jack himself had become infamous.

“I suppose not. And the Begotten, and Uratha?”

“Jack has spoken with them, and will relay information. But they know little of my experiments. Avery assumes I am seeking to harness ephemera as means of power, the deluded fool.”

Elaine smiled at her. “I thought that too, once upon a time.”

Antoinette returned the smile. “I know. It was to my advantage to continue such a facade, even with you, old friend.”

“Ah, I see. I cannot be trusted.”

“Naturally.”

They smiled at each other again, each turning a little more devious than before, before Elaine put her hands up in surrender. “If I did not know better, I would think you trusted me less than before.”

Until Antoinette knew more, she could not tell Elaine of the unknown entity, roaming within her city. There were simply too many possibilities, too many ways for such a revelation to backfire. She shared much with her friend, and even trusted her to touch her little Ventrue, but when it came to such a strange, volatile, and potentially dangerous secret, she would not share it without reason. Hopefully Jack knew to do the same.

So, for now, she would let the old Ventrue believe Maria was to be suspected, as many did. Antoinette, however, was not convinced of the Nosferatu’s potential ill intent.

“I trust you, dear friend, with much. But we both know—”

Elaine flicked a hand to the side, dismissing Antoinette’s explanation. “Do not fret. I am just ... annoyed, I suppose. Annoyed with myself, for not having told you of Viktor, or the curse.” Before Antoinette could console her, Elaine laughed and shrugged. “I can still remember being utterly confused, when he agreed to join you on this ridiculous quest to build a new city in a new land, specifically for vampires and such.”

“Yes. I was a touch surprised myself. But, despite what Viktor evolved ... or devolved into over the years, as Tony did, they provided value as I built this city. Do not think that he was a thorn in my side from day one. And if the curse affected him, it did so differently than it did Julias, which I find unlikely. Viktor is to blame for his attitude, his actions, same as my childe Tony.”

A touch of relief crossed Elaine’s face, and she nodded again, before the two of them turned to face the door of her office. The Primogen walked in, followed by Jack and her sheriff.

Time for yet another hour or two of needless barking, and daggers in the dark.

---

~~Damien~~

Damien raised his sword, and did his best to follow the sheriff's movements. Borderline pointless, but not completely. He managed to get in a block as the larger man brought his own sword down toward Damien's head, and then another block as Daniel brought his massive sword around to swing for Damien's side. Like the sheriff, Damien had adopted a longer sword some time ago, but unlike the sheriff, he didn't have the skill to use it. Or the sheer strength. Mekhet didn't take naturally to bursts of pure physical power, but given enough centuries, even they could summon strength enough to punch holes through concrete. They may not be able to throw a bus like an elder Daeva or Nosferatu, but still.

The third strike hit Damien hard. Daniel was just too damn fast, and brought his sword around to hit Damien's exposed side. Crack. Ribs broke, and Damien fell to the marble floor, grunting in pain.

"There is a reason," Daniel said as he stepped back, "that people don't use swords this long." With gloved hand, he gestured to the long sword in his right hand's grip, and the similar sword in Damien's.

Both swords were dull, and not their actual swords. Approximations, meant for training.

"Slower," Damien said.

"Not that much slower. The blades are light, after all. The issue, is control, like a dog trying to carry a very long stick."

Natasha giggled at the simile, despite the worry in her eyes over his injury, and Damien offered the little woman a small frown.

“For example,” the sheriff continued, “do this.” Daniel put his weight back on his right foot, pointed his left palm at Damien, and with his right elbow drawn back, pointed his sword at Damien so it nearly touched his left hand’s palm. “Look.”

Damien forced himself up from the hard marble floor of the Elysium Tower, and bit down the pain. Daniel was as cold as ice to ignore the fact he’d just broken several of Damien’s ribs. But, that was a part of the reason Damien had come to him for training. Cold, efficient, and fast. That’s what Damien wanted to become.

And he wasn’t worried about becoming too cold, not with Fiona there to warm him.

Damien squinted at the sword’s tip, and licked a fang. Still, completely, utterly, still. Daniel’s grip was as still as the dead, and Damien slowly rotated his head around the sword tip, looking for any signs of movement. There were none. Considering the length of a blade amplified any hand trembling, the fact the very long sword’s tip was dead still, was kind of freakish. And impressive.

“You’re saying I need more control.”

“Yes, among other things. You need to learn how to control the length of the blade. Using a smaller sword is like swinging a hammer, and requires little finesse in most situations. But if you want the superior range of a weapon like this, you’ll need to learn to counter balance for the motion.”

Natasha, sitting on a bench nearby, shook her head. “It seems unnecessary. There’s a reason w-we usually wield our weapons like this.” The tiny woman raised her own dull sword in her right hand, a short thing similar to the sword she usually used. She pointed her left hand’s index finger at Damien, like aiming a pistol, and smiled. “A gun has a m-much longer range than a sword.”

“A silver bullet is useful against a werewolf,” the sheriff said. “Against a fellow Kindred, not so much.”

Natasha mimed shooting a much larger gun, with both hands. “Shotgun!” Her smile was vibrant.

Unless Damien was seeing things, Daniel smiled, if only for a moment. Natasha, being happy and even joyful around the cold sheriff, was really cute.

“A shotgun may work quite well against a Kindred, but it will do little to an Uratha. Or a Ventrue or Gangrel that are being defensive with their Disciplines.” Daniel relaxed his stance, and gestured with his left hand to his sword. “The only way a Kindred can survive a sword, is a Gangrel exploiting transformations to become a swarm of bats, or a cloud of smoke, or river of blood.”

“I’ve never seen M-Michael do anything like that,” she said.

“The man prefers his big, loud, boisterous, strong transformations.” Daniel managed a tiny shrug, and adjusted his glasses. “Garry, on the other hand, has been known to become smoke, or Miasma, during the Purge.”

Damien and Natasha both shuddered. It was easy to forget sometimes that Garry, despite only just barely hitting elder vampire years, had earned his position. He was very, very strong, and smarter than your typical thug Carthian. He might not have been able to beat his closest comparison, Michael, in a straight fight, but that didn’t mean he couldn’t beat him in other ways.

“A sword, combined with speed, can handle almost any situation, be it against Kindred, Uratha, or Begotten.” Nodding, Daniel lifted his sword and looked back to Damien. “Defend yourself.”

---

Beaten and hurting, Damien picked himself off the floor, and dragged himself to sit beside Natasha on the bench. Damien had attempted to hit Daniel in three matches, and had failed all three. Natasha had also attempted three, and had actually nearly managed to hit him, but didn't. The little girl was fast.

Of course, it might have had something to do with how Daniel didn't hit her as hard as he hit Damien. Not because she was a girl, but because she was his child. The sheriff had a soft spot for Natasha, even if he rarely showed it.

"Sire," she said, grimacing as she rubbed her shoulder where Daniel had cracked her one. "Um, how d-did your night with Athalia go?"

Daniel opened a wardrobe on the side of the gym, exposing the various training weapons within, and put away his training sword. "Why do you wish to know?"

"T-To ... be nice?"

Her sire looked at her with a raised brow, adjusted his glasses, and grabbed his trench coat from the bench beside them. "It's personal."

"Yeah! B-B-But, that's part of why it's nice to talk about it. You don't talk to anyone ever, Sire. But, Damien and I, we ... we're..."

"Similar," Damien finished. "... sort of."

The sheriff eyed them with as much emotion as a rock, before he finally sighed and folded his arms across his chest. Defensive posture. Talking about something like social interaction was definitely something the three of them sucked at, but Natasha and Damien had both been pulled into a lot of socializing the past couple years, Tash especially. They weren't the same people anymore. They'd evolved; a difficult thing for Kindred to do. In this matter, they'd gotten an upper hand on Daniel, who seemed to be the most antisocial man alive. Or, un-alive.

“What do you want to know?”

Natasha shrugged, and rubbed her arm where Daniel had nearly broken it. “I d-don't know! Did you, um ... kiss her?”

The sheriff frowned and grunted; barely of course, but he did. “Yes.”

Natasha's smile brightened. “D-Did you, um, do more? I mean, I know something horrible j-just happened to her, but, maybe if you, um ... you know...”

“Comforted her,” Damien added, “she might not be such a risk.”

“She is...” Daniel paused, looked down, and stared at the marble floor. “She is sad. But, much of the anger she once felt is gone.”

“I suppose that makes sense,” Damien said. “She must have hated every moment of life, knowing what she'd been doing to her daughter when raising her, and then again, hated life, when Angela became a hunter. And then, how angry she must have felt, and guilty, knowing what Angela had done to Jack.”

The little Mekhet next to him hmmm'd and nodded. “N-Now it's over. It's sad, but ... she's free.”

“I am helping her,” Daniel continued. “How I do that, is private.” With that, Daniel walked out.

Private? Damien raised a brow as he watched the sheriff collect himself and leave. No ceremony, no goodbyes, he simply left, leaving Damien and Natasha alone.

“Your sire is ... efficient.” Damien got up, took a step, and regretted it immediately. The tall bastard had thoroughly cracked Damien’s legs with his dull sword, several times. He fell, on his ass, and groaned as he pushed himself up to his feet again.

“He is that.” Natasha had an easier time getting up, and she limped over to him before looking him up and down. “Think you’ll b-be fine?”

“I will. But a little shocked to learn that Daniel is capable of sex.”

Natasha giggled and shrugged. A groan announced her own pain, and regret. Daniel may have gone easier on her, but that didn’t mean he didn’t beat her bones to their limit as well.

“He didn’t say he was having s-sex with her.”

“But...”

“B-But, I ... suppose he would call that private, if he was having it.” She grinned up at him. “I’m happy for him. It’s nice that Athalia won’t b-be trying to kill Jack, and it’s ... it’s very romantic. Sire is such a c-cold man, and Athalia is...”

“Also cold, but cold like an arctic blizzard.” In comparison, Daniel was far more stable. Perhaps his stability would be the foundation Athalia could use to become stable herself.

More giggles from the little lady. “Y-Yeah. And, if they can make each other happy, that’s wonderful.”

“Don’t forget, Athalia was supposed to help us in that raid, and she didn’t.” Limping as well, Damien dragged himself over to the cabinet of practice weapons, put away the sword, and once she handed it to him, put hers away as well. “The only reason we’re not hunting her down and killing her, is because we feel bad for her.”

“And b-because she’s a Begotten. Hunting her down might not be so easy.”

“You think Daniel would have trouble killing her?”

“Emotionally?”

He shook his head. “Physically.”

“No, of course n-not. Daniel is ... is crazy. He can actually use Auspex to leave his body!”

The two of them left the tower, and started down the street. The weather was turning cold, and less people were outside. Those that were wore trench coats and furry jackets, all with the obvious need to look gorgeous even when the weather didn’t permit exposed skin.

“I’ve heard of Mekhet entering Twilight like that. Out of body experiences, done at will. Lucas told me it was possible, but it was beyond him.” Keeping secrets from Mekhet was tricky business. They had lots of ways to learn things, and some of them weren’t just about being sneaky.

“Sire says, he wants t-to teach us more about reading objects using Auspex.”

The Spirit’s Touch. Reading an object to learn about its past was definitely a useful skill, if a bit disorienting. He could still remember touching the sword Lucas had destroyed to fuel his sorcery against the Prince. The scene it’d showed him, of a man, two thousand years ago, getting his ear cut off, would stick with him for all eternity.

“It is useful. I can only barely do it, but it is useful. I should try it more often, and see what I can learn about the—” The thing he wasn’t supposed to talk about with anyone except Jack and the Begotten.

Natasha stared up at him, looked around worriedly, and started walking again. “Y-Yes, to learn about ... the thing.” Nothing slipped past her. She caught the expression on his face, and from that single glance, deduced he knew about the mysterious presence. Impressive.

“The thing.” Well, that answered that. The little Mekhet knew about it, too. It made sense. The Prince undoubtedly did, considering Daniel’s abilities. “Does ... does Samantha know?”

“N-No! Of course not. Um, do a lot of people know?”

He shook his head. “Jack and myself. And the Begotten.” Maybe the Begotten simply told the Prince, as they had Jack?

“If Jack knows, and my b-boss knows, then...”

Damien shook his head again. “We must keep this a secret, no matter how many important people know.”

“But, why? We d-don’t even know what’s going on. Why is everyone so scared b-by this?”

“Azamel made it clear. Whatever this thing is, it’s risking everyone’s lives. It’s damaging things like the Gauntlet, and other barriers between realms.” He tried to shrug, to pass it off as yet another threat, like the ones they’d faced before, like the spider monster or the hunters, but the shrug died halfway. “It’s making me nervous, like there’s a ticking time bomb underneath our feet.”

That earned a shiver from the small woman.

“Yeah. It’s ... it’s scary. This rumor has b-been going around for a while, but nothing’s come of it.”

“There’s also a rumor going around that Maria might be trying to perform resurrection.” He glanced Natasha’s way to see if she’d heard it. From the way her eyes flicked to him and then down, she had.

“Yeah.”

“Know anything of it? She was your old boss.”

She raised a brow at him. “She’s your current b-boss.”

“Touché. So, I guess neither of us know anything.”

“I think ... think m-maybe I should see if the Uratha can help learn anything. Spirits might be involved.”

He nodded. “Ok. I’ll try and get closer to Maria, see if I can get something out of her. But...”

“But?”

“But, I’ve already been getting closer to Maria as the months have gone on, and have seen no suggestion that she’s reaching into other realms.” He raised his fingers to air quote ‘other realms’. It was such an absurd concept, and yet, it’d become a regular part of his life the past couple years.

What if Heaven and Hell truly existed? If realms of spirits and dreams existed, then maybe Heaven and Hell did. He’d always thought they did, but there was a difference between a realm existing as some sort of unknowable thing, a background idea, a belief based on faith, versus something that existed as an actual thing to be touched. It almost sullied the idea.

The more he learned about the world, the more he believed God must exist, but that his existence couldn’t be accurately defined by the Bible or the Testament of Longinus. Perhaps God was as the new age philosophers and spiritual sorts believed, a being that was the universe, literally, and that everyone was literally a part of God.

Or, maybe, God was some sort of machine, and the physical realm, the spirit realm, the dream realm, and whatever else existed out there, were part of some kind of resource harvester and simulation, like the Matrix.

Scary.

“I ... I know she loved Lucas,” Tash said. “B-But, she accepts that he was horrible. I have a hard time imagining she would just ... try and d-do something like that.”

“Me too.” Cause, as much of a cold hard ass Maria was, she also had a soft side to her, and a wise one. She may have been sad and alone, but he doubted the woman would be so shortsighted as to pursue something as dangerous as communing with deadly, perhaps evil spirits, for something as selfish as resurrection. He hoped.

---

~~Jack~~

It wasn't easy, finding Sándor. It took a whole week, actually. Jack had to visit Azamel twice, and call Damien four times to get him to ask Fiona about it, before anyone managed to provide a hint on where Sándor was. No one knew. The man kept to himself.

But Fiona being Fiona, rambunctious and filled with wanderlust, apparently managed to track Sándor based on his movements, and intercept him to deliver Jack's message.

Jack waited for him outside his mansion, sitting on the stairs in front of the huge front door. Eventually, the Begotten walked up the driveway, alone, an unreadable expression on his face. Stern, cold. It wasn't exactly resting bitch face, so much as the man seemed void of emotion. Someone who didn't know his circumstance would probably assume he was angry, or indeed had resting bitch face. To Jack, it was clear he was a scarred, broken man, doing his best to keep the rage inside where it wouldn't destroy everything around him.

That was the problem with revenge. It might start allowing someone to heal from trauma, but it wouldn't heal damage itself. Only time would do that, and a couple weeks was nothing.

Jack stood up and gave a small wave. "Hey."

"Hey." The taller man stopped in front of the stairs, and looked up at the huge building. "You vampires and your need for ... boastful habitation."

Jack laughed, and pushed open the door. "Yeah, it is pretty ridiculous. Ventrue are the worst for it."

Sándor followed him in, looking left and right at the mansion and its beautiful, royal, over-the-top Victorian decor. "I suppose it's no different than kings and queens living in castles."

"You old enough to have seen that? Like, medieval ages?"

"No. I am ... about two hundred years old, I think. I was born in Romania, and left quite young."

A gargoyle from Romania. Heh.

"Judging from what Azamel told me, you must have started having nightmares at some point, about a gargoyle? Trying to ... eat you?"

With a heavy sigh, Sándor nodded as he followed Jack, eyes up and taking in the sights of the huge, master staircase, and the chandelier. "Yes. It's one of the reasons I fled my home. I thought I was cursed, and that the monster would devour me. But, the nightmares followed me across the ocean."

“Across the ocean? So you did what Antoinette did, came to North America during the colonization period.”

“Not long after that period was done, yes. I believe your Prince came here a hundred years before I did.” Sándor was talking a lot more than Jack figured he would. Either he wasn’t as wholly miserable as he used to be anymore, or Jennifer had started to open him up.

Jack sat at the top of the stairs. Sándor raised a brow at him, slightly of course, and eventually sat down beside him. There were couches and shit, fancy rooms and whatnot Jack could have taken the man to, but, none of them felt natural or right. It was better like this.

“Still, that’s really old. You must be pretty damn strong, in more ways than obvious.”

“I ... suppose.”

Jack shrugged and gestured to the man. “We had a fist fight, but that’s it. Begotten can do more than that, can’t they? I’ve seen Athalia bury an entire area in darkness, and start slicing things at random like a ... well, a nightmare. I’ve seen Fiona spin web. We’ve both seen that Mark asshole sneak around. What can you do?”

Sándor thought about it for a moment, eyes pointed down at the stairs he sat on. “I’d rather not say.”

“Heh, good.” Jack smiled at the man when Sándor looked at him, confused. “I didn’t have Azamel in that list, cause I don’t know what she can do. I’m sure she can do a lot, but her abilities are a mystery. I’m sure that’s intentional. She’s smart.”

“She is.”

“And she’s dying.”

“Yes ... she is.”

“And the three Begotten she’s been taking care of, they’ll be leaderless without her. Or, I should say, without protection.”

“They’re Begotten, capable of defending themselves.” His tone grew dark. “Why?”

Welp, time to make the pitch. “Azamel wants you to meet the others, and become ... well, their new protector, when she’s gone.”

Sándor grunted, eyes still pointed down. But, Jack could see he was thinking about it.

“Azamel overestimates me.”

“Does she? You said yourself you’re super old. And, I’m sure if you’d been in control while I was fighting your Horror, the fight would have gone differently.” Who knew what sort of crazy things the ancient creature could do. Apparently he’d invaded Eric’s dreams before, so it wasn’t like Sándor didn’t have tricks up his sleeve. The Begotten could do more than just physical things.

“I am strong, and capable. But despite that, I still lost my family.”

Ah, right. There was more going on than a broken man struggling to recover from his pain. His confidence had been shot, too. How much did he blame himself for their deaths, for not being strong enough to save them? Probably completely. Probably to the point he would have killed himself, if he’d been given a few moments of peace after killing Jeremiah.

But, he hadn’t gotten it. Jennifer had latched onto him immediately, and started to insert herself and Beatrice into the man’s life. Maybe she’d come to the same conclusion Jack had.

That woman was too damn smart.

“Sándor ... Jeremiah, with that witch Elen, managed to outsmart and dodge some of the oldest vampires in the world. The Prince and the sheriff were both looking for them, and couldn't find them. Isabella lost one of her men to them. I lost my sire to them. I lost my sister. I nearly lost my mother. And the only reason things didn't get worse, is because of this fucking curse inside me they woke up.” Worse, relatively speaking. It still sucked being cursed, but its power allowed him the opportunity to bring the hunters down.

“Silver lining,” the gargoyle said.

“Yeap. Otherwise, more Kindred would be dead, and probably all the Begotten.”

“Your point?”

“My point is, you can't blame yourself for this insanity. And hey, I'm all for self blaming, when it's warranted. If some shmuck walked up to your door and took you out, then killed your family, sure, blame yourself. But this was an extreme circumstance, Sándor. Cut yourself a break. You're a powerful man, and the other Begotten need that. More than that, you've been around, and you've learned a lot more than they have. I have no idea about Mark, but Fiona's just a kid, and Athalia's ... more broken than you are.”

Sándor slowly turned his head, looked at Jack for a long while, completely still, before looking at the stairs between his feet again. “You're asking me to take up a new burden, knowing that I owe you.”

“Yep.”

“I ... suppose I should speak with Azamel again. I have been meaning to ask her, about how to better control hunger.”

Jack smiled. “Sounds like a plan.”

The gargoyle nodded as he stood up, but only got up halfway before he sat down again. "I have spoken with her once already though, about a different topic."

"Yeah?"

"Yes. The strange tears I have seen."

Oh shit. "You've seen them?"

"I have. I don't know who's made them or why they're there. But they're there, around where Dolareido exists."

"And you've never seen them elsewhere?"

Sándor shook his head. "No. Whatever they are, they are unique to Dolareido."

"Can ... can you take me to one of them?"

"Yes, but so could the other Begotten."

Jack nodded. "They could, but sunrise is in a few hours, and it could take time to get Damien and Fiona, or Azamel involved. Besides, we're just gonna take a look, not go through it or anything. Let's go."

Sándor nodded. No arguing, no convincing, he just did. Awesome. The two of them got up, and Jack followed him to the front door.

Except, opening the door revealed someone about to knock.

"Clara?" Oh shit shit.

"Jack." She smiled at him, then at Sándor, then at the mansion as she looked past. "Jesus. This place is right out of a romance novel."

"It's very over the top, isn't it?"

“Yeah. Uh ... can I come in?” She tilted her head to the side as she realized what was happening. “Oh, you were leaving. Figured you just got the door for me.”

“No, uh, I didn’t. Sándor and I were going to check something out.”

“Check something out?”

“Yeah, um, something important.” Jack looked to Sándor, but the Begotten kept his mouth shut, arms folded across his chest. Right, great, now was a great time for him to stop talking, instead of being useful and saying something that might get Clara to leave. The Uratha didn’t know about the weird presence in Dolareido, and he wanted to keep it that way. For all he knew, one of them was the culprit. Uratha could cross the Gauntlet using their natural abilities, so maybe one of them was doing the damage.

“You’re ... going to look into the strangeness happening, aren’t you?”

“Strangeness?” Fuck.

“Don’t even bother trying to pretend you don’t know what I’m talking about. You’re not that good a liar, not yet.”

Fuck fuck.

“It’s nothing personal, Clara. But, you know, vampires and the whole Danse and shit, right? I don’t know what’s going on, and I need more information. At the same time, the less people who know, the better.”

“Well that’s too bad, because I’m calling in my favor.”

“You can’t be serious.”

“Totally,” she said, the language announcing her age. A bit older than she looked. “Something’s going on in this city, and I want to know what. Spirits are talking about resurrection, and more than a few have mentioned the ‘ghost lady’, Maria.” She air quoted ghost lady. “So yeah, the pack’s getting pretty nervous about that, cause we don’t know why the fuck spirits would be involved in that. And more than a few of the pack have seen some strange tears in the Hisil, like, big cuts in the ground and in walls and shit.”

Jack winced with every sentence. Not because he didn’t already know these things, but because Clara was being so honest about it. No effort to twist her words, to say less than she knew, or to imply things rather than say them. No subtext, no manipulation, she just said them.

And he owed her. Anything she wanted.

“You ... you want in,” he said.

“Yeap.”

“Can you promise me you won’t tell anyone?”

She frowned and folded her arms across her chest. “Not even my pack?”

“Yeah.”

“Why the fuck wouldn’t I tell them?”

“Because we don’t know what’s happening, or who’s causing it. This is tricky business, Clara. For all I know, one of your pack is possessed and is up to something.”

She didn’t look convinced, but after a while, she sighed and nodded. “I can’t promise I won’t tell them for forever, but I’ll keep my mouth shut for now.”

“Good enough.” He opened his mouth, but looked left and right first, before shutting it. “Actually, let’s walk and talk. The house could be bugged.”

“Bugged?”

Nodding, he stepped out onto the huge driveway. Scully and Mulder flew overhead, quiet, and blending into the night sky perfectly. With how many crows they had in Dolareido, those two could hide in plain sight, even up in Rich Side.

“Like I said, no one knows what’s going on, except that it’s a big deal. So until I have some kinda clue, I need to be smart about this.” Once the three of them had some distance behind them, he felt comfortable enough to continue. “Something’s been tearing at the realms. Like, not just the spirit realm, but the dream one, too.”

“The dream one too?”

“Yes,” Sándor said.

Jack gestured to the Begotten as he walked. “The Begotten were the first to find out about it. Azamel told me, not long after she arrived in the city. So whatever this thing is, it’s been at it since then, at least.”

“Who else knows?”

“Natasha and Damien. The Prince and the sheriff. And the Begotten.” He was taking a huge risk trusting Clara, but, he couldn’t help himself. She was that sort of person, someone he could trust, and someone he wanted to trust.

She raised a brow. “That’s it? Five vampires and five monsters? If this is so dangerous, then—”

“We don’t know who’s doing it.”

“So?”

“So, if we spread the word about what’s happening, whoever they are might change tactics.” He shrugged. “Don’t let the enemy know you know.”

“Ah, like Churchill and Coventry.”

Jack shook his head. “That’s a myth.”

“Really?”

“Really. But, the idea still applies. If we’re going to catch this thing or person, and take advantage when they make a mistake, we have a better chance if they don’t know we know.” But after a second, he shrugged and sighed. “Of course, they might know we know. The evidence hasn’t exactly been hidden.”

“So, you think ... what? That Maria is—”

“We don’t know it’s Maria.”

Clara took his shoulder and forced him to look at her. “David says the spirits are talking to Maria, the same spirits we’ve seen hanging around some of these strange tears. Red wraiths.”

Jack shivered. Red wraiths. The one encounter he’d had with them had not been fun, with him, Damien, and Fiona running for their lives until Clara and Flowing Sanctuary showed up and saved them.

“Those red spirits,” Jack said. “They were obsessed with flesh.”

“Yes, they are, kinda like how someone attempting to, oh I don’t know, create a flesh body might be? We’re pretty sure they work for Black Blood, and ... and if there’s anyone capable of something as crazy as resurrection, it’s Black Blood.” It was her turn to shiver.

“Black Blood’s nothing like anything the pack has seen before. Avery warned us, but ... fuck.”

“I don’t want to blame Maria just yet. Not enough evidence. And she’s not some psycho crazy woman who’d risk destroying the city and everyone in it, for something as selfish as resurrecting a dead lover.” He hoped. “And besides, if she was working with Black Blood, then Jacob must have tried something like this before, considering how close he is with the spirit. Minerva’s still dead.”

“Maybe Jacob’s using her? Using her for a trial run? Vamps like him play the long game.”

Sighing, Jack stopped walking as the driveway joined the streets of Dolareido. They were still in Rich Side, and no one walked the streets in the middle of the night in Rich Side. Safe to keep talking, mostly.

“Maybe. But—” He blinked, looked down, and rubbed his head. “Mary said she could see tears, too.”

“Mary? Your ... the ghost. She’s seen tears too?”

“Yes. So something’s happening in, uh, whatever place it is that ghosts go to when invisible, I guess.”

Sándor finally spoke up. “It sounds like, whatever it is that’s causing these tears, is doing so across many realms.”

“Sándor and I were going to go check out one of the tears, one he found in the dream world.”

“Just you two? I ... I suppose considering it’s you two, you could probably handle anything thrown at you.”

Jack grinned at her. Much as it was the curse, not Jack, that had so much power to throw around, he couldn’t help but feel good about what she said. Typical Ventrue.

---

Sándor found them a place similar to one of his lairs, and opened a door. It didn't matter how powerful Jack became, he doubted any Kindred would ever feel comfortable leaving the world of flesh and blood. In Dreamland, his powers were far less useful.

For the Begotten, it was the other way around. Sándor's human body faded in the shadows, and the enormous gargoyle emerged, like Pennywise stepping into its lair and exposing its spider-like monstrous form. And damn, Sándor was tall. At the sight of the monster stepping out of the black and into the halls of his strange dream castle, Clara whistled.

Jack eyed her, eyebrow raised.

“What?” She said, shrugging. “Dude's tall, dark, and handsome.”

“He also has four arms, and horns and wings and stuff.”

“Heh, tell that to Jessy. Fur and a snout don't seem to bother her.”

Jack half expected Sándor to jump in and say something, considering they were basically talking about how several women seemed to find his transformed body attractive. But the huge beast said nothing. His human body had a habit of being quiet and still. His enormous gargoyle body frequently went dead silent and completely still, like a statue.

“And,” she continued, “you saw one of the pack at the party last week, right? Practically getting DP'd on the floor? I know one of those vamps has a werewolf kink, and has asked her about transforming for sex.”

“Into the full werewolf form, right? Not, like ... the wolf form?”

Clara choked on a laugh. “No you sick bastard, the full Gauru form. Dangerous as fuck, but some of you vampires are kinky fuckers,” she said, still laughing. Jack laughed too. Clara had a great laugh, and he couldn’t help himself. “Sándor,” she continued, “you uh ... I mean, feel free to not answer, but I’m pretty sure that Fiona girl can have sex while in her spider body, especially with how she drapes herself all over Damien while in it. Is that something your Horror’s body can do? Cause if no, there’s a few women I could probably update.”

Sándor snorted, a loud, heavy sound, but in the following silence, he sighed. “I can.”

Clara laughed harder, and poor Sándor stared at the two of them with his typical cold, stone face. It wasn’t a pure, silly laugh though. Something else came with it, a sort of sad sound, and Jack’s laugh slowly died off as he watched her. She was trying to make Sándor laugh, to spread her laughter to him. Maybe it was a canine thing, a desire to share joy, or uplift others. It wasn’t working very well on Sándor, but it made Jack smile.

“It figures,” she said, after her laughter died down. “Come to Slut City, and everyone gets laid, in every way possible.”

Sándor snorted again, shook out his wings, and started down the path outside. “Follow.”

Jack and Clara watched the enormous creature push open the giant wooden doors, and lead them outside, to the narrow cliff path they’d seen before. But before they stepped out after him, Jack leaned in to Clara.

“I don’t think we should touch that subject with him.”

“What, sex?”

“Sex, romance, anything like that. He’s still really beat up about his family.”

“Ugh, my bad. Figured Jen would have gotten into his pants already, considering, you know, it’s Dolareido.”

“He’s not from Dolareido.” And probably didn’t frame everything in a sexual context, like basically everyone in Dolareido did.

Nodding, Clara stepped out onto the cliff, and sucked in a breath. It was windy, it was night time, and the cliff road wasn’t exactly wide. Ten feet across sounded like plenty of space, until a misstep meant careening off a mountain and into fucking clouds, that likely hid an astronomical drop beneath. Then ten feet was nothing at all, and the each gust of wind felt like an attempt from God to murder them.

“Where is the tear?” Jack called out over the wind.

“Ahead, past the woods.”

“Past?” Jack raised a brow, and stared out past the haunted village, and into the woods he and the gargoyle had torn up a couple weeks ago. “I thought those woods were endless.”

“They are, in this chamber. You can reach another chamber from within.”

Shivering, Jack rubbed his arms as he nodded and followed after. He didn’t like this place. It wasn’t because it was a haunted village; that was kinda awesome, and something any vampire would love to take advantage of, or at least visit. It was his memories of the village that bothered him. The first memories of the village, before he’d recovered from the curse’s possession, were his most prominent ones, and they felt tainted. Dirty.

It only got worse as he followed the titan through the woods. A lot of the damage the two of them had inflicted was repaired, but not all of it.

“Jesus,” he said. “I didn’t really get how much ... destruction we’d caused.”

Destroyed trees, smashed tree trunks, and lots and lots of blood. The corpses were gone, and he could vaguely remember Sándor collecting them to bury them or something, but the blood was still there. Blood, guts, and a lot of dead rats and crows. He was happy he didn’t bring Scully and Mulder into the dream this time. This couldn’t have been an easy sight for them, either. At least the bodies weren’t rotting. Maybe bacteria and such couldn’t survive in the nightmare. If nightmare chambers were created by scarring, powerful incidents in the real world, then it made sense that the nightmare would only handle things that fit whatever defined the nightmare.

If the legion he’d summoned had died in Fiona’s jungle, he bet they’d have started to rot, rotted thoroughly, and be devoured by carrion eaters by now. But in this nightmare, the focus had apparently been a scary, haunted village, with a scary, haunted castle, on a scary cliff edge, with scary, haunted woods between the village, and any hope of escape.

Sándor snorted, but kept walking. Despite his size, he knew where to step to avoid trees, zigzagging and slithering around the thick trunks and sharp branches. Clara and Jack followed in his wake, since it seemed like the best path. Any misstep could mean stepping on sharp branch, or getting one in the face, especially with how dark it was.

They came to a tree. A big, nasty, fat, ugly tree.

“I’ve seen this tree before,” Clara said. Her night vision was much better than his. “Some idiots with an enormous tree harvester were sawing down trees, and they cut it down, and this huge evil black ooze creature came out.”

Jack choked on a snort. “Was it voiced by Tim Curry?”

She grinned at him. “It was. You are way too young to have seen that movie.”

“Ha. Well, Mom liked the old Disney movies, collected them, and insisted Mary and I watch them.”

“Most definitely not a Disney movie.”

He shrugged. “That’s Mom for ya. She couldn’t tell the difference.”

Before they could start laughing, Sándor motioned toward the enormous, black mouth of the tree. On closer inspection, it wasn’t a hollowed trunk, like Jack figured it was. It was an endless cave, black and more black, a tunnel into nowhere. Considering the size of the tree, even the giant gargoyle could fit, and as Clara and Jack stared, the titan folded his wings snug to his back, leaned forward, and walked into the tree on all fours, tail slithering in the air behind him.

“Maybe he’s taking us to a Christmas wonderland,” Clara said. “Or a Halloween one.”

“Yeah, maybe.” Shrugging, he followed after Sándor, happy to get out of the nasty forest and the memories it stirred.

Once they were through the tree, it was obvious where they had come out. A closet. And, upon further inspection, a hospital supply closet. And a very old hospital, at that.

“Ugh, I don’t even want to know how this nightmare got created,” Clara said.

Sándor rumbled as he pushed his way through the large doorway of the closet. Too big. His shoulders and horns tore the door frame apart, and Jack and Clara winced and sucked air between their teeth, as the titanic creature ripped the wall half apart on his way out.

“This doesn’t seem like a very practical entrance for you, Sándor,” Jack said.

“It’s not. I found this chamber recently, hovering in the dream near the Terrence Hospital. I still need to rearrange my lair to fit them together, if I decide to keep it.”

Right, Begotten doing Begotten things, manipulating the very dimension of their existence.

Jack looked around at the hospital hallway, and sighed. Yeah, this was a hospital from probably sixty or eighty years ago, which meant treatments were brutal and inefficient compared to today. People were also a lot more superstitious, and believed in things like ghosts. He rolled his eyes. Ok, maybe not superstitious if they were actually correct, but he was pretty sure almost all those people who said they’d seen ghosts, were lying or had overactive imaginations.

“We’re in the basement, right?” Clara said. She looked up at the old bulbs in some very tacky glass shells, and down at the hard, dirty floor, and white walls.

“Yes,” the gargoyle said. “I sensed a disturbance, when I touched this chamber. It led me here.” He motioned for them to follow, and they did.

The old hospital was creepy as fuck. The shitty old lights flickered, and didn’t provide nearly as much light as they should have. The nearby doors, all closed, showed darkness underneath them, and a lot of the shadows moved, as if someone on the other side of the door was casting a shadow, and walking around. They moved with heavy footsteps, deep, resounding, and alien. Whispers drifted through the air, tiny things Jack barely noticed, but when he did, he could hear words hidden in the rasps.

‘You’re going to die here. There’s no saving you.’

He pushed the voices away. If he’d been human, they’d have been terrifying. As a vampire, they were still terrifying, but not as much. Plus, the knowledge that he was friends with the nightmare’s owner definitely lightened the fear factor.

Following the giant creature through the hallway was kind of funny, once he managed to ignore the obviously haunted hospital’s attempts to scare him. Sándor was so damn huge, he had to walk on all fours, and keep his ludicrously massive wings snug to his back.

He stopped eventually, and sat down not unlike a dog would, and gestured down the hall ahead of him. Jack and Clara looked at each other, shrugged, and stepped around the beast. Both of them gasped at the sight of the tear.

“I’ve seen one other tear,” Sándor said, “but this one is deep.”

“Yeah, I can see that,” Jack whispered, eyes wide and locked onto what he was seeing.

Tear didn’t do the scene justice. It was like someone had taken a claw the size of a car, and dragged it across the air, somehow cutting through it and into the world and reality behind it. It floated in the air a foot above the ground, and reached from one side of the wide hallway to the other. The edges of the tear were frayed, and the gap of the wound was big enough that Jack could have jumped through it if he wanted to.

He could see things, glowing green things on the other side. They were moving.

Chapter 121

~~Jack~~

It was like staring through a window into another universe. Not like, was.

“Um ... what’s on the other side?” he said.

“The Realm of the Dead.”

Jack froze. Clara froze. The two slowly turned to look at each other, before they both stared at the giant creature squashed inside the hallway.

“Uh, what?” Clara said.

Sándor looked at them, and waited, quiet and stoic despite the massive bomb he’d just dropped on them.

“Sándor,” Jack said, “you’re going to have to fill us in, because you just sorta shattered a lot of preconceptions a lot of us probably have about death. Realm of the Dead?”

After a long, quiet moment in the spooky basement of an old, haunted hospital, Sándor gestured to the huge tear in the air in front of them again.

“I don’t know what to tell you. I don’t know anything about it.”

“Then how do you know it’s the Realm of the Dead?”

“I have come across it before, as I’m sure the other Begotten have. But no living creature would want to stay within. It is a cold, heavy place. Ghosts wander within.”

Clara shook her head, obviously not happy about the gargoyle's impulsiveness. "You went in?"

"I have before, and only for a moment now."

"Why?"

"Why not?"

"Because it's dangerous as fuck?" Jack frowned at the gargoyle, but stopped himself from saying something stupid. If the man didn't feel his life was worth being careful with, the reason why was obvious, and drawing attention to it was a bad idea. It sucked that the poor guy was still depressed, but understandable.

Jack still felt depressed sometimes, when memories of Julias or Mary came at him. Hell, sometimes he felt depressed about the hunters he'd killed, or worse, Mrs. Pavala, his first kill. But he had Antoinette to help him get past that. Sándor had no one.

"Ok ok," Jack said, "let's just ... let's just approach this calmly. Sándor, you've been through this tear?"

"Yes. Again, only for a moment."

"And you saw ... ghosts?"

"Yes."

Jack stepped closer to the tear, and stared into it. "... ghost lights."

"What?" Clara said. She stepped closer, and from the gasp, it was obvious she knew exactly what Jack meant.

Through the shadow, through the black and strange fog that filled the tear, there were lights. Green lights. They were subtle things, blurry, but they were there, and they were moving, far in the distance. Each gave off enough light that Jack could see some details in the environment, and he squinted as he tried to make out what he was looking at through the mist.

Rock? A cave? Whatever it was the lights were moving along, it looked like stone. Dark, oddly bending, curving stone. The harder he stared, the more he could see the drifting lights actually had shapes, shapes he recognized, human shapes. He shivered as he stared into another world, a dark, cold place, and he looked to Clara beside him.

“Have you ever seen Galaxy Quest?” he said, eyes still on the tear.

“Yeah. I—oh, the joke about whether there’s air.” Clara was just as shocked as Jack, and he could see her quivering as much as him.

“Yeah.” He looked back through the large tear, and tried to accept the reality of what he was looking at. No doubt about it, those were ghosts. They had that same, semi-transparent look Mary did, and they were missing their feet; not really missing, just, lost to the fog their own bodies seemed to generate. They hovered as they moved, with the same lack of nuanced movement he saw in Mary, corpses drifting around with no care for breathing, or flexing muscles, or anything.

Through the fog, they looked like drifting lights, like seeing distant street light through rain.

“We’re not going in there,” Jack said finally.

Clara sighed. “Why not? The air’s breathable, if Sándor’s been in there before.” But from the tone of her voice, she knew why not.

“Even if the air is breathable, we’re not going because it’s dangerous.” Air didn’t mean anything to him anyway. “Because we don’t know what’s in there.”

“Sándor was fine.”

The gargoyle finally interjected. “I did not stay for long, whenever I entered this realm. Just enough to understand what I was looking at.”

Jack took a deep, useless breath. “Ok, it’s another realm, that much seems obvious. So we got a dream realm, a spirit realm, the physical realm, and now a realm of ... of ghosts.” It was tantalizing beyond belief, the desire to go through the tear and find out more. It wasn’t like Sándor couldn’t be wrong. He found a place filled with ghosts, and had made an assumption. Maybe it was just a place in the physical realm, where ghosts had a habit of collecting? Maybe some kind of deep cave, hidden in the Earth.

From the what he was looking at, and from how it felt, the cold death seeping out of the tear and into his undead body, he knew that wasn’t true. This was another place, a whole other world, and they were peeking into it. It felt wrong, as if the realm wasn’t meant for living, or even undead eyes.

“Is this where my sister will go, when she finally lets go of Mom, and the house?”

“Is this where my brother went?” Clara said. “Hell, is this where everyone goes when they die?”

They both looked at the gargoyle, but he shrugged and shook his head.

“I don’t know. Why would I know?”

“Because you’re centuries old and you’re a dream monster?” Clara said.

The titan sighed and shook his head again. “I have kept to myself ... for obvious reasons. I know little of ghosts, or spirits.” He grumbled and flicked his tail. “You’re the werewolf. You deal with spirits. Why don’t know you?”

“Uh, because I deal with spirits, not ghosts?”

“They are similar.”

“That’s like saying a tiger is similar to a tree, because they’re both carbon-based.”

“And yet, most people know how a tiger and tree function, largely because of their similarities.”

“Similarities?” She snorted, like a wolf would. “The fuck?”

“Relative to things like dreams, and spirits. A tiger and a tree can be touched. A tiger eats matter, so does a tree. They’re both biological.”

Jack smiled. This was progress. Sándor barely ever said more than three words at a time when Jack met him, and now he was borderline bickering with Clara. Well, she was awesome like that, no ridiculous games like Jennifer, or aggressiveness like Jessy.

“Either way,” he said, “I’m not stepping through this. I know Sándor did, but he shouldn’t have. We need to figure out more. Or, you know, ideally stop these tears from happening at all. There’s nothing to be gained from us going in there, and fucking with things. At best, we’d be risking our lives on a bad gamble that we might learn something.”

“Yeah, that makes sense and all,” she said, “except I don’t have a single other lead, and I don’t think you do either, as far as these tears go. This seems to be the only one that’s cut a hole so clearly through ... uh ... the ‘fabric of reality’.” She air quoted, and Jack struggled to suppress a laugh. “If more of these tears are going to be made, and if they cut through to this place, we should probably know how. Bad gamble or not, we need to make it if we don’t want this lead to go cold.”

Sighing, Jack paced back and forth. Clara had a point, except the first tear Jack had ever seen, had been between the physical world and the spirit one, and it'd failed to cut through the Gauntlet. Fiona had had to pry it open.

So, without a better idea, he shared the story with Clara and Sándor about how Fiona showed him and Damien a tear. He explained how Fiona took them to an old factory, found what seemed like nothing on the physical side, opened the pathway, took them through the Gauntlet, and then when they plopped out on the other side, saw a massive amount of damage.

“It was ... a lot sloppier than this,” he said, and he gestured to the tear in front of them.

“Well, that one had hit the Gauntlet,” she said. “Punching a hole through that ain't easy. And ... and...” She stepped closer to the tear, and stuck her head in.

“For fuck's sake!” Jack snapped his hand out for her, but she backed up before he could reach her.

“It's here.”

He blinked at her before staring at the tear. “What's here?”

“The Gauntlet. The barrier between the physical and the spiritual. It's here. I can smell it.” With a heavy sigh, she reached out a hand for the tear, and through it. Jack didn't stop her this time, eyes locked onto her hand. “It's so thin.”

“Thin?”

“Thin.” She stuck her head through the tear again, looked around, and took a deep sniff. “Normally, your eyes can see a kind of gold or yellow air, right? And it's here, but it's so thin that I can barely see it, like a ... morning mist that's pretty much evaporated. I can smell it, though."

He couldn't smell it. Probably a werewolf thing.

"Did the tear make it thin?" he said.

"Maybe. I ... I need to talk to Avery about this. She probably knows something about whatever we're looking at, and—"

"You think Avery knows about this ... underworld?"

"She knows a lot of stuff she doesn't like to share, cause she thinks the knowledge is dangerous." Wincing, Clara looked down and put her hands in her pockets. "You may have noticed, talking with Jacob and all."

Jack winced as well. Yeah, Avery was just one of those types of people.

"So, if the Gauntlet is here, then that means this place is, uh, part of the spirit world?" he said.

She shrugged. "Maybe. I mean, you don't have to go through the Gauntlet to get to the dream world, right?" Sándor shook his head. "So, I mean, I guess? The Gauntlet keeps the Hisil and the Gurihal from merging, or overlapping or whatever. When it's thin, spirits have an easy time jumping over, and even average Joe humans could find themselves walking through a hole and ending up in the spirit world. This is ... this is really fucking dangerous."

"What can do this?" Sándor asked.

"Hmm. Only thing I can think of is the Hosts, beshilu. You've met azlu, Jack, but beshilu are rats, and they gnaw at the Gauntlet. And ... and ... and a spirit told us that the azlu didn't come to Dolareido naturally." She gestured to the tear. "Which makes me think something strange caused this, and the azlu showed up. They're driven by instinct to weave web and strengthen the Gauntlet."

Jack shivered. The azlu, monster spiders, straight out of a horror movie. Ugh.

"Azlu?"

She nodded to Sándor. "Ancient creatures from my side of the tracks. Spirit, but not quite spirit. Look like spiders. They like to break into the physical world, turn a human into a host, and grow into a—"

A giant claw snapped out from the tear, and slammed down into the air in front of Clara. She threw herself back, landing in a prowling crouch. Jack threw himself back too, almost screaming in surprise, and ended rolling along the hospital floor. Sándor jumped back as well, and the effect was far more disastrous, as his giant body smashed into the walls, tore into the drywall, and his claws left slashes through the tile floor. Worse, Jack managed to lift his head up in time to see the gargoyle's tail slam into Clara, and send her rolling onto the floor next to Jack.

No way. No fucking way. Jack forced himself up onto his knees, and stared at the sight of the huge creature as it started to crawl its way through the tear. Before it got half its huge body through the opening, it slammed one of its bone scythe arms down at Clara again. It was massive, and way too fast for something that size. Clara was still recovering from getting a giant tail smashed into her, and couldn't get out of the way in time before the huge scythe claw cut into her leg above the knee. Meat on a hook. She screamed.

"Clara!" Jack jumped up to his feet, but he was too slow. The creature pulled back into the tear, and dragged Clara with it, leaving a messy streak of blood as it jerked Clara left and right.

Sándor, not quite knocked over, recovered far faster than Jack did, and the titan threw himself at the azlu monster like a tiger pouncing prey. He roared, and the hospital shook with the bellowing rumble, as the giant nightmare monster fell upon the equally massive spirit monster. Onto it, and then through the tear, dragging Clara with them.

“Jack!” she screamed, before she disappeared through the hole.

“Fuck fuck fuck fuck fuck.” Jack ran over to the tear, and peered through it. The mist flowed up and over his fingers, and he yanked his hand back as the unnatural cold seeped into his bones. After taking a second, he stepped back toward the tear, but he couldn’t see past the fog. Having three people suddenly fall through it must have stirred it.

He couldn’t smell anything through the tear, or taste. But he could hear quiet moans, past the battle screams of Clara and Sándor, and he could feel the strange cold.

“Jack! Do something!” Sándor’s voice. It cut through the strange, deadly silence, but it was quiet and distant.

Ok, ok, do something! Like some kind of bad joke, an azlu monster attacked just when they were talking about it. Well, they were hanging out by a tear through the Gauntlet, and considering what Clara said, it made sense that one of those weird spider monsters would be around. Except, it didn’t look like the Shadow Realm on the other side of the tear. Looked like Hades or something. The fuck was an azlu doing in there?

Go in? Sándor could—no, Sándor couldn’t. Sándor had just leapt through the tear, and into a different realm. Far as Jack knew, he was only merged with his Horror in the Dream Realm; it was a dream monster, after all. Outside of it, he’d probably go back to his human form. Still strong as all hell, but not like he was in the dream. And considering Jack’s previous experience with the azlu, he doubted Clara and Sándor could take it down if the Begotten was in his human form.

He shook his head hard, and jumped in. He still remembered what happened to Stephanie, and he wouldn't let that happen to Clara. No fucking chance in Hell.

Passing through the tear, he caught a glimpse of the yellow and gold, the streaks of white, and endless mist he knew as the Gauntlet. Apparently, the werewolves saw it differently, or maybe they smelled or sensed more. For him, the Gauntlet was a numbing thing, but his eyes still worked, and he stared, eyes wide, as he quickly moved through the strange, golden realm he couldn't even see from outside the tear. And then a second later, he was in a completely new realm, a new place, a new dimension he knew absolutely nothing about.

Except that gravity worked.

He sucked in a hard breath as he fell. The strange mist of the realm surrounded him, dark and gray, and he spun around in the air as he struggled to prepare for a landing. Through the mist, he could see the hints of drifting green, the strange rock pathways the ghosts hovered along, and the walls of the cavern. An enormous cavern. An enormous, colossal, holy fucking shit gigantic cavern.

He put out his hands and oriented himself until he felt the mist and air hitting him in the face and stomach. No longer spinning, he peered down and tried to see where the ground was. Still falling. Oh god, if he hit the ground at this speed, it was going to crumple him like a car careening off a bridge and landing nose first into the ravine below. He might survive it, being a corpse and all. The other two, he doubted.

There was howling, a quiet sound that drifted around him. Wherever it was coming from, it was around him, hitting him from all directions, but almost inaudible. The sound changed pitch, slowly going up and down, almost like a choir. Maybe it was a choir? There were lots of myths and legends about ghosts singing. And in the odd quiet of the endless fall, it did sound almost musical, haunting, and sad. It reminded him of Mary; not the Mary he knew, but Mary the ghost, haunting his old home, and carrying with her enough sadness that she hadn't gone where she was supposed to go when she died.

That's what this place felt like. Sadness, and regret.

The ground finally came up to meet him, and it was not fun. He was light, and he'd summoned vitae into his limbs to prepare for the impact. But it still hurt, and despite his best efforts, he felt something crunch. Bone. He screamed as something snapped in one of his legs, and the opposite arm.

A quick glance up showed the tear maybe a hundred feet over them, and out maybe five feet away from a colossal wall of rock. Dark, smooth rock, like the rock he'd landed on. A moment later, he could hear the screech of the monster, and the impact of its eight sharp feet hitting the rock as it fled.

Heal, now!

Immediately, the curse got to work, and shot vitae through his limbs and into his bones. It hurt, having his flesh force chunks of bone back into place. He could hear the crunching, grinding sounds of his body mending, and of muscle and skin sewing back together. Viktor would have been proud of how quickly he healed, and seconds later, his Beast told him he was repaired enough to at least get up and get moving.

He jumped and spun around. Now that he was on the ground and no longer falling through endless mist, vertigo hit him, and he stumbled as the shift in his weight threw him for a loop. He'd have vomited if he was human.

“Clara!?! Sándor!?” Shit, fucking shit fuck. The fog was thick, but not so thick he couldn’t see for a hundred feet. At the edges of the fog, he could see movement, more ghost lights drifting along. If they noticed him, they didn’t care.

“Jack.” Sándor jogged up to him through the mist, panting quietly. Not injured. How? “That spider thing was half human.”

“Yeah, azlu do that. They possess a person, eat part of their brain like a parasite, literally turn them into a giant spider monster, and then they start eating people.”

The Begotten snorted. “And—”

A few falling pebbles forced the two of them to look up. It was hard to see through the mist, but Jack recognized the shapes of huge spiders crawling along the cave wall near the floating tear. Some dangled from web, and others stuck to the wall, sticking their butts out and shooting web at the tear.

“Us showing up must of scared them off,” Jack said, “until their enforcer came and ... and took Clara.” He didn’t know shit about azlu, or these Host monsters, except that the werewolves were super surprised to find two fully mutated azlu working together. “When I killed one, it split into hundreds of spiders like those.” He pointed up.

“Disgusting.”

“Where’s Clara?”

“I don’t know. When I jumped through and realized I was falling, I tried to fly, but losing my Horror in the air was disorienting.”

Jack raised a brow at the man. “You can fly without your Horror?”

“Yes. We can get back the way we came, but...” Frowning, Sándor looked down at the ground, and some blood that ran along the floor. A streak of it made it clear what happened: it’d dragged Clara off. “I saw the two of them struggling in the air, falling. The spider had meant to crawl down the wall, but my tackle ruined that. She hit her head at some point. She’s probably unconscious, or dead.”

“Shit. Shit shit shit shit.” He knew Uratha could heal from almost anything when transformed into their war form, but he doubted they were nearly as difficult to kill while still human; similar situation to the nightmare monster. Growling, he took off at a near sprint along the blood trail. Stupid, so fucking stupid of him to go with Sándor to check out the tear, without at least getting Damien. Of course it turned out to be dangerous. Shit always got dangerous, randomly, for no damn reason.

The rock floor of the ludicrously massive cavern was smooth, and while it did have rolling hills, they were shallow and short. But the mist was a problem. The smart side of him told him to slow down before he ran off a cliff or into a nest of the spider monsters. The desperate part of him told him he fucked up, and now Clara was going to die, like Stephanie, butchered.

He ran faster. Mekhet and Daeva could use Celerity easily, but that didn’t mean he couldn’t use it, too. Not as well, but he could. He reached into his core, found his vitae, and told it to do one very specific thing: run faster.

The sound of his shoes slapping the rock died in the heavy mist, and he looked down to make sure he was actually moving faster. He was. Each stride took him further and further, until it was more like a fast, hard leap with each step. Sándor couldn’t keep up, until he leaned forward, and his feet started to slam into the rock hard enough to spread vibrations. Jack glanced back enough to see a silhouette of the gargoyle, the enormous Horror, surrounding Sándor and going full Tyrannosaurus rex sprint, like a scene from Jurassic Park. Thud thud thud thud.

Twenty seconds later, they found the spider, not a long chase at all. It was big, heavy, and Jack and Sándor were light. The giant creature ran along the rock, eight hairy black legs covered in patchwork human skin. Clara dangled from its right, giant claw, limp, arms hanging underneath it, and small drops of blood falling as she bounced. A claw still skewered her leg, and each bounce was tearing the wound open more and more.

“Let go of her!” Jack threw himself at the strange spider monster’s body, and landed on the beast’s back. Like a centaur or drider, the human half jutted out from where the spider’s neck would be, connecting at the human’s waist. It twisted easily, and stared at Jack with black spider eyes that dotted the now bald human skull. Fucking. Gross.

Grosser was the mandibles, and how they opened spreading the torn cheeks of the human head the spider had basically grown out of. Grosser again, was the white shit it spat at Jack. His mind screamed acid, but it was probably spider silk. Either way, he was glad he jumped to the side.

Sándor charged in, and slammed himself into the giant spider monster’s ass. To see a man, a normal sized dude, slam into the spider with the weight of what was obviously his Horror, was a strange sight. The spider’s giant, hairy, gross ass bent inward at the point of impact, like one of those slow motion videos of a ball hitting a wall.

The spider went flying. Well, maybe not flying. It weighed thousands of pounds, but the fact it rolled over several times after Sándor’s impact was damn impressive. A glance back at the gargoyle showed the man had fallen to his hands and knees, and was struggling to get back up. Again, the silhouette of the gargoyle surrounded him, and Sándor flapped his four shadow wings hard as he came back up to his feet.

But, he wasn't the gargoyle, not outside of the Dream. Everything he did to summon the Horror's power was demanding on him, and Jack could see the exertion on his face as he ran at the spider while it was down, and sank his fingers through the exoskeleton along the spider's ass, as if they were the claws of the gargoyle instead.

The monster got up quickly, and spun around to face Sándor, except the man was still attached to it. The spider slashed down behind him, and Sándor used the spider's body as a wall, hiding behind and underneath it.

"Where's Clara!?" Sándor shouted.

Jack lifted himself up from the ground and snapped his head around. Clara wasn't on the thing's claw anymore.

"I don't know! I—"

A monstrous howl erupted, and relief washed over Jack as the enormous werewolf dove out of the fog, and leapt at the distracted monster. She flew high, going over twenty feet up before she fell down onto the azlu's shoulder. Roaring with a primal need, she sank her claws into the monster, tearing and shredding, and doing more damage to the monster's flesh in seconds, than Sándor had yet managed.

Jack looked around in a panic. There were no animals for him to summon here, no legion he could unleash on the monster. But just because he'd been stupid enough to check out the tear without his usual back up, didn't mean he was so stupid he didn't bring guns.

He pulled out his pistol, and started sinking bullets into the spider monster's gut. It shrieked in agony, and spun around, trying to dislodge Sándor and Clara at the same time. No luck. They were both thoroughly stuck to the monster's body, and while it could spin super fast with eight gigantic, sharp spider legs stabbing into the strange rock underneath them, it couldn't get them off. Jack had to time his shots, to make sure he didn't hit either of them, as the spider turned into a spin top.

Bleeding everywhere but not slowing down, it came to a sudden stop, and kicked at Sándor using its hind legs. Sándor couldn't get out of the way fast enough, and the spider's back legs were perfectly capable of stabbing underneath its giant ass. The man screamed as one of them pierced his shoulder, and fell away from the spider as he let go.

Without Sándor distracting it, the monster looked to the huge wolf humanoid ripping at its arm and shoulder. Clara had managed to remove a chunk of its right shoulder, causing the arm she once dangled from to hang limp at the spider's front side, but the other arm still worked. It raised its left claw scythe, and—

And it met eyes with Jack, as he stepped toward its front. The gun wasn't doing shit, and with no time to summon the juggernaut within with the curse's power, to turn this into a physical brawl, he had to do something and do it quick. He'd assumed he wouldn't be able to use Dominate or Animalism on the monster, since it wasn't a creature of flesh and blood. Except, it was partly human, in a strange, sick way.

When it met Jack's eyes, and Jack met its strange, spider eyes, he reached out with Dominate, and the world came to a standstill. For a brief moment, the world froze, while Jack and the creature met minds.

The human part of the monster was alive, sort of. The brain was gone except for some minor remnants, and the spider had hijacked those remnants. Instead of being able to enter the creature's mind, like Jack easily could with kine or animal, he stared at the spider creature from across a chasm. Walls surrounded them all, a giant dome of warped walls that oozed black and shifting colors. They were inside the mind of the host body, who should have been dead, but wasn't.

Across the chasm between them in the strange dome, was the azlu, with a dozen of its brethren behind it, no longer in its human mutation shape. It was a spider, and it wasn't a spider. It was something else, something old, something ancient, something covered in the dust and ashes of dead civilizations and dead monstrosities. It stood there on its eight legs, a large spider with large eyes, and it stared at him like he was nothing. Its strange, alien thoughts reached across the chasm like someone hollering with palms cupped around their mouths, except the thoughts were disgusting, vile, strangely loud, and driven by instinct.

To it, he was nothing more than an undead creature, a corpse that didn't have the nerve to become dust and ashes like the things that came before. It would kill him as it and its other parts had done to many undone creatures. Parts?

Jack gulped as he looked past the spider and its kin, and glimpsed on the memories of the ancient creature behind it. Images, warped against the dome's wall, started to form where the bleeding colors had been. An ancient land, with ancient creatures, ancient foliage, and ancient skies. A totally alien landscape, prowled by things his mind could not imagine. Giant wolves, rats, and spiders, but none of them looked right, as if each were some sort of spirit interpretation. Or, godly interpretation.

The spider in his mind hissed. It needed to protect the Gauntlet, to strengthen it. To understand why would be to ask how a normal spider learned to spin web. Instinct, an instinct so old and from a different realm, it defied flesh and blood. He was a corpse, standing in its path, and it'd kill him, the moment it'd killed the Forsaken Uratha and the Primordial Begotten.

The spider shut up real quick, as the Beast within and around Jack rose to bury them all in its shadow. The chasm suddenly seemed quite small, and no longer the insurmountable leap it'd been moments before. The spiders on the other side backed away, and fear overwhelmed their hairy bodies and eight legs, as their many eyes stared up at the swirling mass.

“This ... thing,” the curse whispered in that sleazy, demony voice that sounded eerily like Jack's, “is just an animal. An animal from before even the Strix, but just an animal.”

“And how would you know?” Jack looked up over his shoulder at the Beast, frowning. “You have memories from my previous sires, but not—”

The giant black cloud of fangs, beaks, fur and feathers, pointed out toward the large spiders on the other side of the black chasm. It used a foggy limb to point, and the Beast showed a mix of claws and rat tails in its black mist.

“I can smell it, smell the age on it, and I know you can, too. It's beyond old, and despite all that time, it remains nothing more than a useless bug. Look at it, Jack.” The Beast lowered itself, loomed over him, and set two titanic hands that looked like crow feet on his shoulders. “I wonder how many thousands and thousands of years this strange thing has existed, and despite all the time, it's still just a bug to be squashed.”

“A big bug, back in the real world.” Jack gestured to the chasm. “We can't cross this?”

“No, dumbass. It's a metaphor for the distance between our worlds. The only reason we can speak to it at all, is the human body the Host has taken over; as you guessed.”

“And we're communicating at the speed of thought.”

“Of course, or we’d be dead from standing still and stupid in this thing’s path, otherwise.”

After shrugging off the damn Beasts’ grimy claws, Jack paced left and right in front of the chasm, glaring at the spider.

“But it is an animal. A strange, ancient animal, and according to the wolves, not a normal flesh and blood animal. Not something I can use Animalism on.” The fact Jack could attempt to enter its mind at all was only because of the poor kine it’d taken over. “But, still an animal.”

“Yes, it is,” the Beast said, tone growing more sinister as it laughed, “one of the most stupid animals I’ve ever met minds with. A crow has a hundred times the intelligence of this arachnid.” The giant cloud of black smoke followed after Jack, looking at him with a bunch of different kinds of eyes in the upper half of its body. “What’re you thinking, Jack?”

“As if you have to ask.” It could read his mind, after all, and they were in his mind, and the monster’s.

“Heh. You want to scare it, like waving fire in front of a tiger.”

Jack looked at the absurd monstrosity infecting his soul. “Can you do it?”

The Beast laughed, a dark and twisted sound, inhuman and filled with layers. Crow caws, rat squeaks, coyote howls, owl shrieks, and other things. As it laughed, the noise far more maniacal than Jack would have liked, the big cloud of smoke grew in size. Bigger, and bigger, until the metaphorical chasm would not have been big enough to stop it from crossing simply by stepping over it.

The spiders clicked their mandibles together. Well, that was a fucking gross sound, especially combined with the spiders tilting their heads to look up at the Beast. Did they understand what was happening? Did they understand this whole conversation was a near-instantaneous moment in its host's head? They must have understood it wasn't a normal situation, given that they hadn't done anything but stand on the other side of the shadowy ravine, and stare at him.

But, as the curse displayed its power, expanded and engulfed the strange metaphorical cavern they were in, it was clear that the spiders were scared. They backed away, chittering and stabbing their feet against the rocky ground as they retreated. Spiders didn't have facial expressions, and these odd, ancient creatures were no different, but the body language was obvious. Scared turned into terrified, as the curse exploded in a flurry of dark claws and black feathers. Whatever space was left in the strange dome vanished, and hundreds of glowing red eyes covered the ceiling. The Beast's eyes, a host of all the different creatures the Beast identified with, could become, could control. Carrion eaters and predators all.

The spiders shrieked, a high pitched, shrill sound that grated on Jack's ears like nails on chalkboard. They turned, and fled.

Jack's grasp on the host's mind fell away, ripped free by the azlu's panic. It had never encountered anything like the curse. Other vampires sure, based on how it originally reacted, and maybe other vampires had even tried to Dominate it or use Animalism on it. But from how it fled, Jack had to guess it was the first time the creature had seen something that genuinely scared it.

That was a terrifying thought, and a thrilling, exciting one.

Maybe one or two seconds had gone by, back in the world of the physical, or wherever it was they currently were. It was enough time for Clara to have moved out of the way of the claw arm that'd been meant for her, but the claw arm didn't come down. Now, with the huge werewolf no longer attached to its shoulder, the spider monster let out a horrific scream, and fled. Its huge spider legs scratched against the rock underneath it as it sped away, moving fast enough to cause the strange mist of the new realm to swirl around and behind it in the following vacuum.

Clara bounded after it.

“Wait! Clara, don’t!”

She stopped, panting, growling, her body a silhouette against the gentle, unending mist. After a few moments, she turned around and stomped over to him.

“Why!?! This is a hunt! It is wounded!” Her voice was a harsh bark, and Jack winced as bits of the creature’s blood splattered onto his suit and face.

“Because we don’t know what’s out there, and”—he gestured to Sándor—”our one way out of here is currently bleeding to death!”

“One way out?” The way she stood there, panting, each breath a quiet growl, long arms at her sides with blood still dripping from her claws and fangs, was startling. Hunger filled her eyes, and the weight of her tall, muscular-but-feminine werewolf body remained forward in a hunched position, like she was ready to pounce. Scary. Made him feel like a bomb disposal expert. One wrong decision and boom.

Sure, the curse made him absurdly strong, but unless he had time to summon his defenses, or summon a legion, or summon his will so he could Dominate or use Animalism on her, she’d be on him before he could stop her. Being super strong didn’t mean shit if you weren’t fast enough to use it, and he didn’t want to preemptively prepare his abilities. Might set her off.

“Yes!” He gestured to the ground. “Unless you think you can sink your claws into this strange rock, there’s no way getting up that wall. We need someone who can fly, or create a portal to get us out of here. Sándor can do both, but he's bleeding out!" He didn't like raising his voice at a werewolf, but if he could get through the obvious bloodlust in her eyes, he was confident Clara would calm down.

She did, taking a deep breath before standing up straighter. After looking back over her shoulder for a moment, she stalked over to Sándor and crouched down beside him. Jack joined her, and the two looked the poor guy up and down.

"That's a lot of blood loss," Jack said.

"I'll live." Sándor said, grunting as he forced himself to sit up.

Jack shook his head, got down, took off his suit jacket, then his shirt, and started ripping the white fabric to shreds. "Don't fucking give me that shit. Begotten don't heal nearly as well as vamps or werewolves outside of the Dream Realm."

Clara snorted, and shook her head as she looked around, still wary of the monster. "Hard to smell."

"The mist?" Jack said.

"Yes." She sniffed the air like a hound, and stalked around back and forth, between Jack and where the monster had run off. "The air. Thick. Smells of strange spirits. Dead spirits." Each word was almost a bark. Considering she had a snout, it was a wonder she could talk at all.

Sándor grit his teeth as Jack wrapped a strip of his shirt around the man's shoulder. "I'm an idiot. I should have realized—"

"Realized what?" Jack said. "That an ancient spider creature that follows instincts older than any of us can appreciate, would be on the other side of the tear, in what is apparently very much not the Shadow Realm?" Another question for Azamel.

“Yes.”

Jack rolled his eyes. “You are an idiot, for a very different reason. Hold still.” Bandage press, bandage wrapped around the shoulder, bandage wrapped across and around the opposite shoulder, and some wrapped around the top of his chest. Sándor groaned, but Jack could tell the man wanted to scream, as Jack pressed on the wound while wrapping it. It was a shoulder wound but it went dangerously close to the chest, and covering it wasn’t easy. A human would bleed out without an ambulance. A Begotten would live, hopefully, as long as Jack’s shirt managed to help a little.

Clara let out a heavy sigh, and transformed back into her human shape. Jack watched, a little mesmerized. It was pretty awesome how the wolves could transform in a matter of seconds, and it looked ... painful, honestly. But within moments, Clara stood there, panting and sweating, back in her clothes, covered in blood. Her leg was a horrible mess of red, and her jeans had a giant hole where the creature had stabbed her, but she was healed. The Gauru form and its ability to heal were pretty insane.

“Ok, plan?” Jack said.

Clara stared at him, and when he didn’t say anything, it was her turn to roll her eyes. “Hey, you’re the Ventrue, and the dude everyone apparently looks to for this sorta shit. What do you think we should do?”

“Ugh, you’re foisting the role of leader on me?”

“Yes,” the two of them said together, Sándor more so with a grunt.

Sighing, Jack smiled. God, he’d be terrified of something like that in the past. He’d have still done it, and maybe even done it well, but he would have been scared as fuck. Not so much anymore. Except...

“Uh, as far as I can tell, we’re in some kinda ghost realm, like Sándor thought. So, uh, let’s not touch anything, draw any attention to us, and get the fuck out of here as quietly as we can. I have no idea if the sun can rise here, and it looks like we’re in a cave so I should be safe. But eventually, I’m going to pass out, and you’re going to have one injured monster and one comatose vampire to protect, Clara.”

Nodding, she looked down, found the blood trail she’d originally created, scooped up Sándor from under his good arm, and started walking.

“Then let’s get out of here before that happens.”

---

~~Natasha~~

She left Damien behind, and went to find her boyfriends. She half expected them to take her to Bloodlust, but nope, they suggested no such thing. Instead, they invited her to walk around the Carthian district.

She agreed, reluctantly. It wasn’t like she couldn’t do it, or wasn’t allowed. Even when she’d been in the Invictus, she was technically allowed to walk around with the Carthians. It just wasn’t done. It was tempting fate for no reason. As long as no one else but a Carthian fed in the Carthian district, they were allowed to go into it, except, an Invictus going into it was asking for trouble.

She wasn’t Invictus anymore! She didn’t need to worry, because the Carthians and the Ordo Dracul got along in Dolareido. During the Purge, they’d worked together, which was a pretty huge accomplishment for any two covenants in any city. There was no reason for the Carthians to look at her with suspicion, especially since she was close with the Uratha, who were close with the Carthians.

But she wasn't an idiot. She brought a pistol underneath her suit jacket, a short sword, and a large silver knife that was almost a short sword itself. If things got crazy, she could defend herself. Better yet, she could hide behind her boyfriends; not because she couldn't fight, she could, but the Carthians were less likely to shoot at them. Plus, they were big, and easy to use as cover.

"So it's finally over," Art said. "No more sweeps. No more worrying about getting shot in the back or blown up." He'd said those words before, but it was as good a conversation starter as any.

She nodded. "Mhmm. As long as Garry d-doesn't start a war, everything is peaceful."

"Way he tells it," Matthew said, "he's just taking back territory he used to own, and has no plans to throw the first punch."

"He's already thrown a p-punch!" she said. "He just hasn't taken it further than that. Yet."

The two boys looked at each other, not entirely convinced by what she said. But it wasn't like she was wrong. Garry may have thought what he was doing was justified, and it probably was, but he was fooling himself if he thought starting street fights and pushing Invictus out of areas they'd claimed, by using Terra Den's influence, was anything but throwing a punch.

Taking territory was a big deal. Kindred were paranoid, selfish creatures. They fought for territory because territory equaled more kine. As per the Prince's orders, the Carthians and Invictus were not to feed in each other's territory; the witches and dragons were free to feed anywhere, because they didn't really have territory or anything. After the purge, and then Tony's death, the amount of territory available had grown substantially, and the Invictus and Carthians both got greedy. And still, despite that, they continued to fight over food.

“Either way,” Art said, “things have calmed down for now.” He looked around slowly, scanning the occasional kine that walked by. Not many kine out this late in the Carthian district, except for the rowdier sorts.

Vampires did occasionally walk by, and at least one watched them from the rooftops. Well, watched her.

“I hope Avery c-can help keep it that way,” she said. “She’s friends with Garry, right?”

Matthew shrugged. “Friend is a strong word. But they’re on the same wavelength ... kinda?”

“Kinda?”

“Similar people, different ideas,” Art said. “Garry has an aggressive side, and an aggressive streak ready to launch. He wants to fix this city. Avery, she ... she’s tired, you know? She’s getting old, and was already tired before this shit starting going down. Stephanie died, then the rest of us started getting comfy here in the aftermath. Last thing she wants is to spoil what she’s got here.”

Right, right. Natasha and the others knew Avery was now looking to treat Dolareido as home, and had already been in the city for almost two years.

“I want you t ... t-to stay,” she said, nodding. Of course she wanted them to stay. She’d said it to them before, and they’d said they wanted to, too.

She expected them to say something romantic, based on the looks they gave her. Content smiles and warm eyes. But instead, Matthew reached down for her, and she outright squealed as the man put her on his shoulders. Her struggles were rendered pointless as the big guy pinned her legs to his chest where they dangled.

After an annoyed groan, she adjusted her suit pants a bit, and leaned forward to rest her elbows on the moron's head. Her lovable giant. Art laughed of course, when he saw the expression on her face, and she frowned at him before sticking her tongue out at him.

It was hardly becoming behavior for a vampire as old as her, or for these two men who were werewolves, and older than they appeared. But, it was fun, doing something stupid and silly like this.

"I'm ... n-not against the pack d-doing things, to make Dolareido better, I mean."

"Your boss probably is," Art said.

"Maybe. She ... she has p-plans for Dolareido, and a lot of that involves getting p-people to cooperate. She wants peace."

"Sure, but she sets the rules. If she learns that Eric's been doing shit that might really affect her city, in a pretty drastic way, she'll be pissed. If anyone in the pack does, she'll be more than pissed."

Natasha sighed and slouched over Matt's head. "I guess. B-But, you're a part of the city. And the Prince hasn't said you're not allowed to do things in the Hisil. If you think you can make a b-better city for kine by taking down some nasty spirits, I c-can't say you shouldn't."

Art gave her a suspicious glance from below. "But, you don't feel compelled to do so yourself."

"I ... I uh..." It was such a complicated topic! It was hard to really summarize all the nuances involved, about the natural habits of kine, about controlling the Beast inside every Kindred, about keeping everyone peaceful while allowing for natural instincts to be satisfied. "I d-don't like seeing the kine get hurt either, but—"

"They're people," Art said.

“... they’re food,” she whispered, only loud enough for the two of them to hear. Art winced, and Matt’s dramatic gasp was louder than her own whisper. “We try t-to be fair! But, we’re not kine anymore. And ... and I know for the Uratha, it’s different, but for Kindred, we ... we have to drink their blood to survive. Do that for a d-decade or two, then a century for two, and ... and it’s normal t-to become detached.”

The two men looked at each other for a moment, sighed, and kept walking. A heavy silence settled on them.

She spoke up first. “Um, w-why do you two, do what you do?”

“Whatcha mean?” Matt said. Art looked up at her with similar confusion.

“Why do you guys try and help the kine? I mean, the p-people? For Kindred, we would do things like ... hunt spirits and spider monsters like you do, to protect our food, or maybe to eat them if they were food. B-But, why do you do it?”

“For a lot of us,” Art said, “it’s a matter of our history, the Uratha’s history. Some call us the Forsaken, because of what our ancestors did to Father Wolf. So now we try and fill in the old man’s paws, and Luna gifts us for doing so.”

“Inherited the sins of your parents?” Natasha shook her head. “I can’t believe you’d d-do so much, for something that isn’t your fault.” Adam and Eve passing their sins onto humanity was just as idiotic an idea. Maybe Damien would understand their motivations better.

Matthew tilted his head up to peek at her, and she had to hold on to keep from falling off his shoulders. “It’s not easy to explain. If you had the wolf inside you like us, it’d make a lot more sense.”

She frowned down at him. Pack mentality? Kindred were obsessively individualistic, while the Uratha really treated their family, even their dead family, as very important to them. Even more important than their own lives. It was hard for her to think that way, when every instinct she had was to put herself first. She'd certainly fight to protect her friends, but, if Daniel died, she wouldn't suddenly feel compelled to do what he did and be the Prince's new Right Hand or sheriff or something.

"And," Art added, "we try to help people because, why wouldn't we? How couldn't we? We're a part of this world, this environment. Least we can do is protect it and get rid of the filth."

Matthew nodded. "Filth being assholes and nasty spirits alike."

"I ... I'm not against you guys doing that," Natasha said. "I guess I won't be able to understand. My ... B-Beast isn't ... it doesn't understand." She gestured to a group of kine hanging under a nearby street light. "When I was younger, yes, it felt horrible, being ... you know, a vampire, and having to drink from, and sometimes hurt kine. After a few decades, I kinda grew n-numb to it."

"I suppose if I had to survive on their blood, I might become numb to it too," Art said. "We've eaten animals, and spirits, but eating a human is forbidden. And ... I guess we kinda think of ourselves as their protector. If the Gauntlet came down, it'd wreck everything humans have, you know? I guess it's ... it's a hard difference between vampires and werewolves. Not that all werewolves are as nice as us, but—"

"B-But no vampire ever goes as far t-to help kine, as you do." Natasha rested against Matt's head as she absorbed that. Her boyfriends were the good guys, she was sort of a bad guy, relatively speaking. In Dolareido, the Prince considered it perfectly reasonable for vampires to kill humans, as long as it was handled well, with no media attention. Killing the prey was discouraged, but still allowed, and occasionally a vampire did so.

“Yeah,” Matt said. “But, at the same time, you vamps here in Dolareido are a shit load nicer than the vamps we’ve dealt with before. Like we said, we’ve had a rough time of it in other cities. And Arturo’s had it worst than most.”

Natasha smiled down at Arturo. It was true. The man had come from Tijuana, where the vampires did not play around, killing kine without hesitation, and killing each other in regular turf wars. The werewolves had come and rescued him from that past. Rough stuff. It made sense he’d be looking for someone nicer than the vamps he had to deal with growing up.

She was nice, right? Most of the Kindred in Dolareido were nice, relatively speaking, and she was nicer than them, despite Maria’s attempts to harden her. The boys liked her because she was nice. She liked them because they were nice! And, not nice, in a fun and sexy kinda way. But she was worried the differences between them would become a problem, and this conversation wasn’t doing anything to settle her fears.

Back onto the other topic.

“B-But, Avery doesn’t want you to interfere with the city.”

“Yeah,” Art said, “and it’s irritating as fuck. She’s trying to find a balance, to find a way we can do our thing, without stepping on the Prince’s toes. Garry—”

“Garry d-doesn’t care about the kine anymore than the Invictus,” she said, a little more bite in her words than she planned. “Or if he does, it’s only by a little.”

“Either way, Avery wants to fit in. She’s tired, and she’s apparently found herself a man. But even she wants to help, try and clean up some of the shit in this city. If she does, she might piss off the Prince, and that'd fuck us over. Especially me and Matt.”

“You t-two? Why?”

Matt laughed, and Art smiled up at her. “Come on, why do you think?”

“B ... Because if you make the Prince angry, and she makes you leave, then we ... w-w-we won't be together anymore.”

“Yep,” they said together.

Natasha grumbled, and clutched Matt's head tight as she slouched forward, and rested her chest on him. Her relationship was causing another to make a decision they might not otherwise. She hated that feeling.

“Not just us,” Matthew said, voice bright, obviously trying to lift her spirits. “Mason and that Tilly girl are still an item. Brianna is ... uh...”

“She's throwing herself into the deep end,” Art said, laughing. “I guess she saw what Clara had, and wanted a piece too, except not with ghouls.”

Natasha giggled, and started combing Matt's beautiful, long blonde hair as they walked. “She enjoyed herself at the b-ball,” she said. The two men nodded. “But, um, Clara's still into Jack.”

The boys looked at each other.

“Is she?” they said together.

Ugh, boys. Blind to everything.

“You saw her t-talk to Jack at the ball.”

Matt shrugged, and Natasha bounced on his shoulders with the motion. “Yeah, but—”

“We just figured she was talking to him, friend to friend sorta thing, and were pushing past that unrequited love stage. They did go through hell, attacking the hunters like that.” Art looked behind him, probably checking to see if anyone of note had taken an interest in their conversation. No one had.

“You didn’t see the look in her eyes?” Natasha said.

“No,” the boys said.

“She still likes him. And now, after ... after what I heard, about what Jack d-did with the curse, she ... she still likes him.” If anything, she’d want to help him even more now. “D-Do you know if, um, she’s still getting visits from Jessy’s ghouls?”

Art raised a brow as he looked up at her. “You mean you don’t know?”

“Jessy doesn’t t-talk about Clara as much as she used to. Now it’s always about Eric.” Because the girl was obviously in love. “Eric Eric Eric.”

“Eric is an interesting guy,” Matt said. “There’s something strange about him. Avery thinks Luna might have spoken to him, which is pretty damn amazing. Cahalith get visions from Luna, but to actually be spoken to by her is huge. Plus, his relationship with Jessy is pretty strange, too.”

“Strange? Oh, r-right, the sex.”

Art nodded. “You’ve seen how crazy we can get when we transform into the Gauru form. To be in that form for sex?” Rubbing his neck, he looked left and right again, the anxiety at the idea obvious. “I don’t know. Maybe he’s from a new wave of modern werewolves, who can handle that sort of stuff better.”

“M-Maybe? His first time transforming, he killed, and ate some men.”

“Yeah,” Matt said, “which also makes us nervous. But, he seems to be fine with it. Probably didn’t get addicted. Lucky. Mason had to deal with cravings for months, after his first transformation.”

Uratha could become addicted to human flesh? Well, that was a little scary. Suddenly, a lot of werewolf folklore made a lot more sense. How many werewolves went nuts the first time they transformed, and were from then on addicted to flesh? Hungry, powerful monsters, stalking villages at night and satisfying their hungers on the villagers, even if they hated themselves every moment of it. Not a far cry from what vampires had to deal with all the time.

A strange thought re-emerged in her mind.

“Is ... is there any way for your, um ... lunacy thing, to n-not affect cameras?”

They both looked up at her, and she squeaked as she clutched Matt’s forehead to keep from falling off again.

“Not that we’re aware of,” Art said. “Why? You want us to transform for the next movie?”

“No! No no...” Not that she didn’t like the idea of two giant beasts ravaging her, thanks to Jessy forever planting the idea in her head, but there was a limit! “But, J-Jessy was interested.”

The two men nodded at each other, coming to some sort of conclusion.

But Art shook his head after thinking about it for a moment. “Pretty sure there isn’t a way. It’s not really us doing it.”

“Oh. Jessy will be sad.”

Art laughed. “Oh, I get it. You’ve been watching her and Eric having sex, right?”

“I ... um, n-not on purpose! She called me, and it was happening, and ... yeah,” she said. The two men laughed, and she knew she’d be blushing furiously if she’d been Blushing Life. “You t-two, why don’t you ever get jealous?”

“Because we’re gorgeous,” Art said, laughing some more, and fist bumping Matt. “And we trust you. No harm in looking, right? I mean, sure, it’s a little strange for us, but it is Dolareido.”

She reached down, and punched Art in the shoulder. He didn’t budge.

“Strange? You’re t-two guys, who ... you know...” Have a history of double teaming women. Natasha wasn’t their first. “And you’re not even from D-Dolareido!”

They shrugged again, and Matt spoke up this time.

“Yeah, it’s a bit strange, we know. But Art and I have been through Hell, and...”

“And,” Art continued, “we kinda just get along, you know?”

“I guess ... W-What was your first time like? I mean, uh, when you two both ... you know,” she said. The two guys looked at each other, obviously not sure what to say. “Come on, I won’t be jealous.” Hopefully.

After some careful deliberation, they nodded.

“Sure,” Matt said. “But, let’s go somewhere private?”

“Is it ... emotional?” she said.

Art laughed and shook his head. “No. Embarrassing.”

---

~~Beatrice~~

Jacob came for her, and she went with him. He didn’t want to bring Jennifer, but Triss insisted. Jennifer had stuck her neck out for Triss on several occasions now, and deserved to be a part of this. More than that, Jennifer had been Julias’s friend. She may not have loved him, or maybe she did in her strange sort of way, either way, she deserved to be a part of this.

Jacob took them out into the desert, and the two girls blinked at each other as they wandered the rocks and sand, draped in Jacob’s Cloak of Night.

“Uh, where we going?” Triss said.

“One of my lairs is out here. It’s where I’ve been keeping Elen,” the old Nosferatu said with a grin over his shoulder. “Hard for Daniel to find anything out here.”

Jennifer nodded. “I suppose if the sheriff is working by area instead of leads and clues, then yes. I doubt Daniel is so blind to your movements that—”

“The sheriff cannot find me when I truly do not wish to be found, Jen.” Jacob laughed, a soft and sinister thing, and motioned for them to join him down in a small, rocky ravine. “He knows where my primary lair is because it serves me to let him. Come on, you know that.”

“I do.” Jen frowned at the man and his teasing. “But you underestimate the sheriff.”

Jacob shrugged, and started down the ravine. “He underestimates me, I underestimate him, ‘round and around it goes.”

It was a long walk, and apparently, Jacob was in no hurry. If anything, he had a bounce in his step, and he skipped around a little as he guided them through the desert night. Well, it was kinda nice heading a few miles out from the city, and enjoying the quiet. And nerve racking. This far away from quality shelter was enough to make any vampire nervous.

“So,” Jennifer said, “did you see Samantha again?”

The small misstep Jacob made would have been unnoticeable to anyone who didn’t know the man. Triss did, and so did Jen. They smiled at each other before smiling at their boss.

“You were having fun with her, after the party last week,” Triss said. “And, if I didn’t know better, I’d think you were actually kinda enjoying yourself, talking with her. But we both know you were really just manipulating her to like you, so you’d have a way of manipulating Jack and the Prince, right?” She didn’t need to be that harsh, but she wasn’t down with Jacob being an asshole to Samantha. Jack didn’t deserve that. Plus, Jacob liked it when she was harsh.

The look he gave her when he looked back at her, on the other hand, said something she didn’t expect. Even with the bandage on his eyes, she could see a bit of hesitation in him, a bit of internal struggle. He was thinking about what to say, and Jacob never had to think about what to say. The fucker was so in tune with his thoughts, they flowed out of him in all their psychotic, genius glory, usually.

“Maybe,” he said, with zero conviction. There was more to this than he wanted them to know.

Jen raised a brow, and picked up her pace to catch up to him. “Have you seen her again?” she asked again.

“Maybe.”

Triss laughed, and jogged up to Jacob’s side, opposite of Jen. “Ok, seriously, did you see her again? A lot of people were talking about it, you know. What the fuck was the leader of the Circle of the Crone doing hanging out with the Prince’s new childe, they said.” Not that she hung out with any of the other vampires, but she did creep around, go hunting and stuff. Vamps talk.

“You two whores just want to gossip. Sluts.”

“Yes!” Jennifer said with a little cheer. “Gossip with us, boss. Samantha’s cute, and close to your age.” Triss and Jacob looked at her, eyebrow raised. “You know what I mean. She was in her forties when embraced. I bet you two get along.”

Right, Jen was talking about how vampires generally didn’t change much once they were embraced; except, when caused by long torpors, which Jacob had undoubtedly been through at least several of. But, the fact that Jacob had been embraced in his older years was obvious by the color of his hair: salt and pepper, and a couple inches long, a bit wavy, a bit full. He was certainly a handsome guy, Triss figured, for any woman in her forties, since he had that mature and successful look to him. And the eye bandage made him look mysterious. It made him seem dangerous and psychotic to anyone who knew better, but to a young Kindred like Samantha, he undoubtedly looked mysterious and sexy. A regular phantom of the opera.

“For all you two know, I was twenty when embraced,” the old bastard said with a hint of a smile. “I could pass for twenty, right? Be honest.”

Jen and Triss looked at each other, and laughed again. No chance.

“Seriously,” Triss continued, “what’s up with you and her? She’s ... well, not the sharpest tool in the shed, you know? Figured you’d be interested in someone with a brain.” Too harsh? Too harsh. “Er, well, I’m sure she has a brain, but you know what I mean.”

“Yes,” Jennifer said. “Samantha seems like a lovely woman, and kind. But—”

Jacob shook his head. “But she’ll never be good at the Danse Macabre, at complex plans, at feats of logic, at constructing and acquiring resources. Vampire stuff.”

“Yes,” the two women said.

The boss laughed again, shrugging. “You kids, you think you got the whole world figured out.”

Triss scratched the back of her neck. “Maybe a little more than—”

Jacob swung his left arm out and hit Triss in the shoulder. Not hard, more of a buddy backhand than anything, but it was enough to give her pause.

“There are many types of intelligences, Triss. Sure, some are better at the Danse than others, but that doesn’t mean she isn’t worth talking to. You saw how she treated Athalia at the ball, and the effect it had? She soothed pain and turned a tense situation into a peaceful one, by herself. There’s talent inside her, one she doesn’t even realize she has.”

Triss raised a brow again, eying the man. When the conversation drifted to Samantha, she expected Jacob to do his usual thing where he got quirky, random, strange, and dangerous. But he didn’t. If anything, he was talking like a normal person, and that was strange in and of itself.

“I get that. Just kinda ... surprised you’re talking to her. Seems a bit random, if you’re not doing it for typical Danse reasons.”

He stopped walking, and set his chin between some fingers as he considered. “The first time I met her, I was visiting Jack. She seemed interesting. A bit of Jack in her eyes.”

Triss shivered. It was hard to think of Jack anymore without thinking of the curse, and the crazy look she saw in his eyes when he’d given it the reins. But with a little effort, she could remember Jack before, Jack when he was just a kid struggling to not drown in his new world. There was definitely something to Jack, something in his damn brain that naturally steered him into the shittiest situations possible.

Julias had seen it before anyone else. Jack, just some random, smart kid who worked for an accounting firm or law firm or something, some entry intern position. Julias noticed him, taught him, became friends with him, and saved him from that bitch Rebecca. In retrospect, Rebecca wouldn’t have touched Jack if Julias hadn’t made it obvious he was going to sire him, or maybe turn him into a ghoul.

Rebecca was the reason Julias had to embrace him. She was the reason so much crazy shit happened. Damn, it made Triss happy knowing she’d killed her.

“I have to wonder,” Jennifer said, “if Samantha will have the same impact on Dolareido as Jack did.” Saying what everyone was thinking. “And if Jack is so compelling that he interests the Prince, then I can only imagine there’s something compelling about Samantha as well.”

“Either way,” Jacob said, “it’s my business, not yours. We’re not here to gossip and do each other’s makeup, sluts. We’re here to discuss Elen.” He reached over to a large rock, and after grounding his feet, rolled it aside.

The smell was strange. Flesh, but not rotting flesh. No shit or piss either, so either Jacob was doing a good job taking care of his prisoner, or Elen just didn't do those things. Other smells too, some Triss recognized from the other sacrifice site, a strange, cold smell that reminded her of metal, and of Black Blood.

The entrance was a tiny hole, same as their headquarters, and they had to crouch down and literally crawl through it. The tunnel was long, and Triss quickly found herself becoming claustrophobic as they moved through the darkness. Not even Kindred eyes could see in total blackness, and considering how long the tunnel was, and filled with dirt and other surfaces that didn't bounce any light, it really was utter, pure darkness. If the tunnel collapsed, Jen and Triss wouldn't be getting out without help, not strong enough. No worry about dying, but she'd still eventually starve until she fell into torpor. Not a fun thing to do, she imagined.

After a silent eternity, they crawled out of the tunnel, deep in the Earth, and stood up. A few candles were lit, and after so much time in absolute darkness, a few candles was plenty of light.

She expected the occult witchcraft stuff. The thousands of symbols drawn on the walls, carved into them. The dangling chains and ropes with strange occult objects, like large bones and skulls dangling from them. The big, gross metal bowl in the center, ready to give anyone unlucky enough to touch it a bout of tetanus. But she wasn't prepared for the sight of Elen, an old, emaciated woman, dangling from a chain with a big hook skewering her wrists. She dangled over the bowl, naked, loose skin hanging, and an occasional drop of blood dripping from her feet and into the bowl. A knife stuck out from her leg.

Beatrice stared up at the dangling woman, and swallowed down on her dry throat, before looking around some more. Unlike the bigger cavern Jacob normally used, this one didn't have a back wall that was unnaturally dark, or smell of death and decay. Elen didn't smell good, sure, but she wasn't dead, and apparently hadn't pissed or shit unless Jacob was washing her.

There were a couple bloody daggers in the bowl, and some bloody barbed wire. A few bloody hooks, one bloody hammer, and one bloody scalpel. And yet, despite how gross with age Elen looked, she didn't have a cut on her. No scar or anything.

"The curse of immortality," Jacob said, gesturing to the old woman with a laugh.

"Immortality? Uh ... what?"

Jacob jumped up onto the bowl edge, with Elen between him and Triss, and reached up so he could set a hand on the hook. Surprisingly, the bowl was stable. It sat on what looked like some skulls, and a few dark skeletal hands held its base. Maybe they were actually full bodies, sticking up from the ground where they'd been buried to the neck.

Elen didn't react to Jacob's antics, though Jennifer groaned in disgust and dismay over the whole situation.

"Immortality," the old bastard repeated. "This fellow witch has somehow managed to make herself basically immortal. Her flesh mends itself. I haven't tried ripping her head off or destroying her brain, but so far, she seems quite impervious. A regular Tithonus."

"Who?" Triss asked.

Jacob laughed, and gave the old woman a slap on the back. No response. She drifted back and forth, head hanging slightly, eyes open and looking around. A bit of drool fell from her lip.

"Greek myth. A man who was cursed with immortality, but not eternal youth. He aged, and became a withered, pathetic thing." Jacob turned the dangling woman until they were facing each other, and while his left hand still held onto the dangling hook above for balance, he used his right to clutch the woman's chin and make her look at him. "She's done something to her flesh, using her magic. But whatever it is she did, wasn't perfect. She forgot to ask for eternal youth." Laughing like a maniac, Jacob hopped off the bowl, and without looking, snapped his hand out, grabbed the knife lodged in her thigh, and yanked it out the old woman's leg.

"Nasty," Triss said.

"It took time, to understand what she can do," he continued, and he held out the knife to Beatrice. "She's harmless. Her magic only works on the living, and only if she can spend the time to draw her symbols on them."

Beatrice looked at the knife, and growled as her eyes raised to look at the hanging woman. "Then, the hunters that died when we attacked ... the ones holding the weird objects."

"I'm sure Elen had worked tattoos and other things into all the hunters. But for that particular ritual, she needed to channel something a great deal more powerful than she could manage. Hence, the objects. Without them, all she can do, is manipulate flesh."

"What about the haruspex?" Jennifer said. "She was predicting things, by reading entrails."

Which was one of the most fucked up, kinda cool, but still fucked up things Beatrice had ever imagined.

Jacob shrugged, and gave the woman another push so she swayed a few feet over the bowl. "Haruspex is divination. The magic let her speak to something, nothing more."

"Nothing more?" Jennifer shuddered and rubbed her arms. "There's something out there willing to talk with her, and make predictions about things?”

“Yeah, there is,” Triss said. “I’ve spoken with something like that, remember? In a pretty similar way.” They’d piled the bodies high, that night.

Jennifer bit her lip, and took a step back from Elen. Much as Jen had stood by Triss through a lot of shit, the girl was still too scared to really throw herself into the deep end. Good. If they both got in over their heads, there’d be no one to pull them out.

“What now?” Jennifer said.

Jacob flashed her a big green. “That’s up to Beatrice. I set this up so she could do whatever she wanted.”

Triss laughed, but it had no heart in it. “Don’t act like you weren’t curious about her, and what she can do.”

“True, true.” He rubbed his hands together a few times, indicating he’d already learned a few things, things he wasn’t telling them. Fuck. “But, it’s pretty obvious her mind’s going. She doesn’t feel pain, or hunger or thirst. She’s not some sort of genius who’s survived all this time on her intelligence, wisdom, and wits. She’s a shell. If it wasn’t for Jeremiah, she’d be in a hospital somewhere, wasting away, and never dying.”

“Has she spoken?” Jennifer said. “I know she can speak.”

“She hasn’t said a word.” Jacob gestured to the knife in Triss’s hands. “Maybe you’ll have better results.”

Triss frowned down at the knife. “And the Nightmare discipline didn’t work?”

“I managed to stir some strange noises out of her. But for the most part, she’s less a person, more a tool. Like, she’s running on great grandma software, to the point I don't think there's a thought going on in that pretty head."

Pretty, like a hundred-and-fifty-year-old who smoked and slept on her face and didn't eat nearly as much as she should have pretty.

"Let me," Jen said, stepping back in. "I'll take a stab." Triss held up the knife to her, and Jen grimaced, before chuckling as she realized the pun.

"If you're sure. Who knows what kinda crazy shit is in that mind," Triss said.

"I won't push too hard. I'll be fine." After a heavy sigh, Jen reached out, and stopped the old naked woman's gentle swinging.

Jacob and Triss stepped back, and let Jennifer have her room. Beatrice couldn't use Dominate, and she was pretty sure Jacob couldn't either. Acquiring the unique disciplines of other bloodclans required doing some pretty nasty things, like drinking their blood, risking the Vinculum or vitae addiction, and it just wasn't worth it. Unless of course, a vampire performed diablerie, sucked another vampire dry, and rendered themselves immune to the Vinculum; because they were now a nasty, twisted freak, and they'd just killed the vamp they may have been bound to.

It was the silence. The lack of noise, the lack of distraction, it was letting Triss's mind run away with her, so it could dig up nasty thoughts. Bleh.

Jennifer met eyes with the old woman, frowned, and sighed. "I can ... can ... ugh. Jacob's right. Something's happened to her, and I can't get a good grip on her mind."

"Barrier?" Triss asked.

“No. Most minds put up a defense when I attack them with Dominate. With her, it’s like ... I’m trying to grab fog or rain.”

“Because she’s so old?”

Jennifer shook her head. “Maybe, but I don’t think so. I think parts of her are just ... gone, like she gave up something. Whoever this old woman is dangling in front of us, she’s not much different than a corpse. Like, a zombie, still thinking she’s a great grandma like Jacob said. That, and still very aware of how to be a witch.”

She really was just a tool then. Elen was dead, and this old thing in front of them was the remains.

“She did this to herself, so she could become immortal?” Triss said.

Jacob chuckled and shrugged. “Maybe. I bet a lot of what’s affecting her mind is because of the magic she uses, the places her mind has been, and the things it’s communicated with. Her brain, or her soul, or both, have been eaten away. After my tests, I figured she was basically brain dead, and Jennifer’s confirmed. Just a zombie.”

“Dears,” Elen said, voice quiet, dry, and full of weak rasp. Jen and Triss froze as they looked up to her, and even Jacob stopped drifting around as much as he looked at her too. “Dears, be kind and leave an old woman be. I need a nap.”

Triss stared up at her, and shivered as a harsh chill ran down her spine. Vampires had crazy, magic-like abilities that were given to them by their condition. Witches of the Circle of the Crone managed to tap into some sort of mysterious force in the universe, and guided it using Crúac rituals. If a human being, someone made of normal flesh and blood, who didn’t have the naturally immortal and resilient — and static — bodies of a vampire, tried to use strange magical forces, did they all turn out like this?

Nah. Elen must have done something specific and weird, to get herself this fucked up. Being genuinely immortal was a pretty big deal for any human, even something as fucked up as this. It had to come at a huge cost, and she probably paid that cost more than once, with the insane magics she pulled.

“Elen,” Triss said. No response. “Elen, have you ever resurrected someone?”

The R word managed to make her raise her eyes, but after a moment, Elen lowered them. “Be a dear and let me go. I really would like to get my book back. I like to feed some birds by the park in the morning.”

It was super fucking creepy, how she sounded like a sweet grandma, despite her circumstance. A talking zombie, alive, and even functioning, sort of.

“She wore an oxygen mask before,” Triss said.

Jacob shrugged. “Probably helps her move her body better. Takes oxygen to move muscles. If she had to lift her arms and cut into things, with a body this fucked up, she’d need oxygen to do it.”

Jennifer didn’t look convinced. “But not food or water?”

“She’s withering away without them,” Jacob said, “but she won’t die. Makes you wonder, right? Where’s the line between this immortality curse keeping her alive, and how far her biology will go before she eventually falls apart like ash.”

Like ash, like a Kindred did, when killed, assuming they were old enough.

“I wonder why she did this to herself,” Jennifer said.

“A human witch playing with powers they shouldn’t have.” After another shrug, Jacob paced around the bowl slowly, arms folded across his chest. “Why does anyone do anything? Selfishness. Either she wanted immortality for the hell of it, or she wanted it so she could do something else. Maybe save a loved one. Maybe get revenge.”

Much as the words sounded like they should have been insulting or condescending, Jacob’s tone was not. He was intrigued, amused, and maybe even a little fascinated. Elen was definitely unusual, especially if she could intrigue a fossil like Jacob.

Ok, so, Disciplines wouldn’t work on her mind. She simply didn’t have the mind left to scare or control, or seduce, if they had a Daeva.

“What about ... Auspex?” she said. Jacob raised a brow as he looked at her, but waited. “Mekhet can learn secrets from people hiding them, right? I hear they can get information out of people, using Auspex.”

“It might work, but, know any that’d be willing to help you?”

Triss glared at him. The bastard knew exactly who she knew, and exactly who she was thinking of. Natasha, and Damien. Natasha wouldn’t help, not with something this disturbing. Damien did sort of owe her, for when she’d given him some of her blood to save his ass. And maybe a little residual effect was left, so he’d be easier to convince? Nah. That was too long ago, and Damien wouldn’t help her without telling Jack. Ideally, she’d like to keep outside interference to a minimum.

Ugh, why didn’t the Circle have any Mekhet?

“Maybe ... maybe...” She looked down, her hair falling around her face as she let the sickening thought build before she found the will to say it. “Maybe ... Black Blood could do something?”

Jennifer stared at her, and gulped. Jacob, on the other hand, grinned at her like he'd been waiting for her to say it.

“What a wonderful idea.”

Chapter 122

~~Natasha~~

They went back to her apartment. With the hunters defeated, and the few remaining still in the Prince's custody, there wasn't any reason she couldn't sleep in her apartment anymore. Maybe Samantha would get her own place too? Daniel slept in the Elysium Tower, somewhere secret, but that didn't mean Samantha had to as well.

She sat on the couch between her boyfriends, and looked between them as they obviously prepared a tale.

"It was ten years ago," Art said, smiling down at her, half turned to face her. "Matthew and I had become great friends by this point. We hung out all the time, and we went on patrols together. Eventually, we did our hunting together, when we realized how much we complimented each other."

"We were hunting a spirit," Matthew continued. "It'd possessed someone."

"H-How do you free someone from a possession?" she said.

"You have to learn about the spirit," Art said, "and figure out how to manipulate it with a bane or ban. If a fire spirit, desperate to turn the possessed into an arsonist, got soaked in water for example, some fire spirits would have to vacate the body."

"Oooh. A puzzle." She did oh so enjoy puzzles.

"This one," Matt said, "was a spirit of ... a sort of revenge, I guess. It was kinda hard to pin down. It'd possessed a girl who'd just found out her boyfriend cheated on her."

Art laughed and looked down. “And, well, when we got rid of the spirit, it left an impression on the girl. She somehow got it into her head that she could hurt her ex by sleeping with the two of us.”

Matt shook his head. “She didn’t say that though. Instead, she invited Art and me to a thank you party sorta thing. She got drunk, and got us drunk.”

“No easy feat,” Art said, “but she really wanted a party.”

“And she, uh, kinda jumped us. Situationally speaking, I mean.”

“She was a tall woman, and apparently pretty, uh, comfortable with her sexuality. She went to take a shower, and was in there for a pretty long time. It was especially weird when we heard the shower running, and ten minutes later, still nothing. Matthew and I were thinking maybe we should leave, when she told us to come in.”

“Into the bathroom?” Natasha said.

Matthew nodded, scratching the scruff of his cheeks. “Yeah. Like, the both of us.”

“W-What’d you do?”

Art laughed and shrugged. “Details are a little fuzzy. We were pretty drunk, woozy, and not really thinking straight, or thinking at all. So Matt and I kinda just ... went with it.”

“Yeah, we did. I blame the alcohol.”

Tash scrunched up her nose and looked up at the big guy on her left. “I’m sure there was m-more than alcohol in your veins.”

He scratched the scruff of his neck a little, looking away, embarrassed. “Er, I mean ... well, we are werewolves. We’re kinda always—”

“Ready to fight,” Art said, grinning down at her as he did. Yeah, right. Fight, in this case, being anything strenuous involving biological functions. Should be changed to fight or flight or fuck response.

“W-What happened next?”

“She was naked, grinning at us, and waving a small bottle of lubricant side to side.”

The exact opposite situation Natasha had been in. They’d had to bully her, to get her to accept. A risky move, cause she could have reacted badly, and the situation would have ended horribly. But they’d been tipped off by Jessy. The stranger in their story, on the other hand, was the aggressive one, and guys were, well, guys.

“And you j-just went with it?”

Matthew shrugged, with more hand waving this time. “We were drunk! And a naked girl was beckoning! She wanted to repay us for helping her.”

“So,” Art continued, “we got naked. Apparently she’d done this kinda thing before, cause she took lead, and, yeah, that was Matt and I’s first experience with that sorta thing.”

“N-No, um ... problems?” She held out her hands in front of her, and mimed smooshing orbs together. “Cause, you know, things can touch, and it can get awkward.”

The two men laughed, hearty sounds that made her smile.

“We were pretty drunk,” Matt repeated. “A lot of that sorta stuff didn’t really register. The next time this kinda situation came up, we weren’t drunk, but we’d talked about it already, admitted we’d had a lot of fun being with a girl like that, and wouldn’t mind doing it again.”

Natasha laughed. "I'd say it's strange for t-two guys to agree to something like that. But, it's pretty normal in Dolareido."

They grinned at her. Tinglies went through her belly, and she quivered at the rising tension in the air. If she pushed them just a little more, they'd pounce, pin her down, and do things to her. She kinda wanted to do that.

"You're the first," Art added, "that we've ever dated like this though. Like, really ... committed to a relationship with."

She suppressed the need to gasp, and managed a peek up at the man beside her. "Y-Yeah?"

"Yeah," Matt said, and he set a hand on her legs. Usually that'd be a precursor to much touching, no matter how much she squirmed to get away. The look in his face didn't scream sex though. They were being serious.

Art sighed and shook his head. "Actually, we wanted to talk to you about something else, tonight."

"Oh?"

He nodded. "Yeah. The pack has found more clues pointing to Maria. Red wraiths have been sneaky across the Gauntlet, and we're sure they've been talking to her. Far as we can tell, they work for Black Blood, or it's got a firm grip on them and they have no choice. Either way, Avery's convinced she's up to something."

This again. Frustrating beyond belief, that the werewolves were the only ones capable of acquiring this sort of evidence. Except, that wasn't true. The Prince got glimpses of things on the other side of the Gauntlet, and that necklace the Prince had acquired some time ago had drawn a spirit that also pointed toward Maria. Combined, it was hard to ignore.

“I could t-talk to her about it,” she said.

Art shook his head again. “Before we were sure, I’d say do it. But now we know she’s in deep. No idea if it’s linked to the tears we’ve been finding, but she’s into something dark if she has to go through those wraiths. If you ask her now, she might wise up, change her tactics or something.”

“I suppose it m-makes sense. If Maria suspected anyone the Uratha might send, to ask questions about what she’s doing, it’d be m-me.” Since she was so close to the Uratha, compared to anyone else. “I’ll ask D-Damien. He’s already keeping an eye on her, and says he hasn’t seen anything suspicious. B-But, I can ask him to look harder.” He was Mekhet, after all. It wouldn’t take much prodding to get him interested in searching for more. The curse of all Mekhet, to hunger for secrets to learn.

The problem was, Damien seemed to care for Maria, to some extent. Maybe he felt guilty for Lucas, and was doing his best to help Maria in his absence? Not very Kindred of him, to behave like that.

“I’ll be taking a trip into the Hisil tomorrow,” Art said. “I want you to tag along.”

“M-Me? Why?”

“Because you’re sneaky. And you provide some objectivity; the pack sucks at that. And because I’d like to hang out with my girlfriend for a while.”

She beamed, but washed the expression away quickly. “Ok, b-but, if I see an opportunity to learn something, I’ll take it.”

He grinned. “Avery won’t like that.”

She returned the grin. No way it had that smoldering look Art’s did, but damn it, she could do a smart aleck grin.

“That’s the p-p-price! I mean, if you want my help sneaking around, then I’m going t-to take the opportunity to learn about things. I w-want to see some of the tears.”

Art winced, but nodded. “Sure.”

“W-What about Matt?”

“I can’t sneak for shit.” Laughing, he shrugged. “If you two can cover for me, sure. I—”

The phone started to ring. Natasha’s, and the ring announced it was the Prince calling. She pulled it out, and held up a finger for her boyfriends.

“Yes, my Prince?” she answered.

“Natasha. Have you seen Jack?” First names and no additions meant she was serious.

“Jack? N-No, Prince. Is he missing?”

The quiet growl through the phone was like a knife’s edge against her skin.

“Yes, he is. Again.”

Oh damn it.

“Um, d-dawn is nearly here. And tomorrow I was going t-to see about going into the Hisil with Avery’s pack, to learn about ... possible ... things.” The word ‘things’ was enough to have the Prince thinking about it for a moment.

Another phone rang, and Art pulled it out to check a message. His eyes went wide.

“Then,” the Prince continued, “I have no choice but to ask for that man’s help.”

“D-Damien?”

“Damien.”

---

~~Jack~~

Sándor’s bleeding slowed, and stopped. Jack did his best to ignore the smell of blood, and so did Clara. For her, it must have been pulling at an instinct, some animal anxiety or need to get aggressive. For him, it was just making him hungry. Over two years ago, when he was just a freshly embraced fledgling, being hungry was terrifying. Feeding on people was terrifying, especially after his Beast had flipped out that first night and killed someone.

These days, he fed regularly, both on Antoinette’s ghouls, but also random people he found on the street, in dark alleys, or occasional trips to Bloodlust and other night lounges and clubs. The last thing he wanted was to get hungry, to give his Beast any excuse to run rampant. That meant feeding, often, keeping it sated and quiet.

He’d come into confidence quickly, to be able to feed so readily; except with women, of course. Something about talking to a woman always threw him off, made him hesitate, doubt himself, all those things women generally found unappealing. The Prince found it endearing. He’d gotten a lot better at it, especially when it came to hunting, but still.

He licked his lips as the smell of blood hit his nose again. Sándor’s, and Clara’s, where it soaked her jeans. The smell was different. Each smelled inhuman in their own way, Clara’s like some kind of rich meal, while Sándor’s smelled almost like alcohol. Subtle smells a human nose wouldn’t pick up on, but to a Kindred, blood was life. Given another few hundred years, maybe he’d be able to smell the difference between human blood with different diets. Maybe he'd be one of those elders who insisted on feeding on kine of specific age groups, sexes, blood types, or ethnicities.

"He's healing," Clara said.

Jack nodded as he looked over at the man still hanging off Clara's shoulders. "Yeah, but he's lost a lot of blood. And he pushed himself tackling the azlu." Sándor's head drooped, the man trapped somewhere between falling asleep and groaning in pain. "I ... don't think he's going to be able to help us for a little while."

"Then I'll climb the wall."

"I mean, sure, if you can." He looked up at the huge, smooth rock wall, wincing. "I saw how much the azlu hit the ground with its claws and feet. They didn't leave much impact. No grooves anywhere."

She snorted, set Sándor down against the sloping wall, and let out a quiet growl in her throat. Quiet turned into a heavy, bassy rumble as she transformed, becoming an eight-foot beast of muscle. Leaner than the male werewolves, he couldn't help but notice how her furry form didn't hide her feminine physique. Short fur meant he could still see the shape of hips, waist, legs, and even the hint of bust, and more impressive, the place where legs and back met. Very, uh, shapely, even with a wolf tail stick out over it.

Clara noticed him looking, and she managed the wolf equivalent of a quiet chuckle.

"Brianna has fucked, like this." She gestured to herself. "Says body changes, for sex. Says it was fun, but ... hard, to control herself." Clara's words came out harsh, half bark, but he could hear the playfulness in them.

Jack nodded, gulping. “Uh, very dangerous, I imagine.” He was not a furry. He was not a furry. He was not a furry. He was not a furry.

She grinned, as much as a snout can grin, turned to the wall of rock, and slammed both of her hands against it at the same time, claws out, palms forward. They pierced the rock, a whole quarter inch, and the moment she tried to pull her weight upward, her claws came right back out. She tried again, harder, and for a split second, Jack was sure he could see a small, red glow on her claws.

Avery had done something with her claws, when she’d fought the azlu. She’d set them on fire somehow, but not really on fire. Maybe she could pierce the rock they needed to climb to reach the tear above, or maybe those fire claws were better for killing azlu, but either way, Clara didn’t seem capable of it, or any other trick that might let her climb the rock.

Apparently, the Gauru side of her didn’t like that. She roared, loudly, and Jack flinched back as the unnatural power of it crashed into him. She slammed her claws into the wall again, but got no further, despite the hard crack sound. Movement drew their eyes, and they both looked up to see through the fog, way way way up, several scurrying sets of spider legs run off into the darkness. The azlu spiders were still around, hiding in the mist, and staying out of reach. They hated Clara, but they were also afraid of her. And now, they were afraid of him.

But he couldn’t take advantage of that fear if he couldn’t force an engagement. And besides, better to not, and just escape.

Clara slammed her claws again and again into the rock, but she got nowhere. “Fuck!” she half screamed, half barked.

Sándor coughed a few times, before he looked up at the two of them. “Get me up. I’ll fly us up there.”

“You can’t even stand,” Jack said.

“Then I’ll burrow a tunnel home, and you can follow.”

“I get the impression you’d have done that already if you could.” Sighing, Jack came over to the man and squatted in front of him. “Opening portals, tunneling, opening your lair so it overlaps with other worlds, all of that must take effort. Right now, you’re useless. Which means we got two options. We wait until you’re feeling well enough to get us out of here, or wait until someone figures out what happened, and comes looking for us.” The first option looked rough, cause it could take Sándor days to recover, or more, depending on how well his human body could heal. The second option was rougher. Sándor hadn’t opened his lair to the other Begotten, and hadn’t really been in contact with them. They had no way of knowing where he was.

“So ... what’s the plan?” Clara said. She’d already transformed back into her human form.

“Fuck me, I don’t know.” He sat down against the wall edge beside Sándor, and leaned his head back against the stone. “I can feel sunrise; it’ll be here any minute. I’ll try and stay awake as long as I can, but...”

“But if we all fall asleep, we’ll be killed in our sleep.” Sighing, she sat down next to him, taking a breather while still scanning left and right. “Guess I’ll be pulling an all ... dayer.”

They laughed, and let the sound die away as the dangers of the situation sank in. A glance to the Begotten showed he was already asleep, and not in good shape at all. Sándor had seemed confident he would heal, but guys like him had a habit of lying about that sort of shit, right into a grave. But, him being asleep did give Jack and Clara a moment to talk.

“Clara,” he said at last, “I ... I’m thankful, you know.”

“Thankful?”

“For how you don’t seem to let the curse bother you, after everything you’ve seen.”

She watched him for a while, before she looked down, pulled up her knees, and hooked her elbows on them. “It bothers me.”

He winced. “Oh.”

“It bothers everyone, Jack.”

“Yeah, I ... I know. I meant, you don’t seem to let it bother you enough to keep you away.”

She looked at him, hesitating, a hint of pain in her eyes. “Yeah, well, someone needs to be there for you. Not like any elder ever risks their own neck on missions like this.”

He couldn’t hold her gaze for long. Her eyes were sad. It was the sort of look he’d seen in movies, when someone watched a friend go off to war. Why did she care about him so much?

“It’s not like my friends aren’t concerned too, Clara. Damien, Antoinette, they’re all looking for ways to remove the curse. Elaine might be able to help with that, too.” Assuming whatever devious scheme was she was up to allowed for that.

“And Beatrice?”

“Triss? She ... she...” He shivered as he looked down. “She needed my help, and I was glad to give it.”

“And when Damien needs your help, and only the curse can provide it, what happens? Or the Prince? Or the others?”

“I don’t know. It’s a bridge I’ll cross when I get to it.”

“Come on, you know what’s going to happen, Jack.”

He couldn’t keep a bit of venom out of his voice. “Educate me.”

“Things will happen that the power of the curse can help with, and you’ll help the people who need it. You’ll help because that’s you. But...”

“But?”

“But, you’ve got a self destructive impulse, Jack.”

He kept his eyes down. Easier that way, to have this painful conversation without any eye contact.

“I’m not self destructive.”

“Come on, that’s exactly what you are.”

“I—”

“You wouldn’t hesitate to put yourself in front of a train if it meant you could do something you felt needed doing. Problem is, you jump to that conclusion pretty damn fast, you know?”

He tightened his hands into his fists, but still kept his eyes down. “I make quick decisions because it’s the only way things can happen. He who hesitates is lost.”

“Against the first azlu, you threw yourself down at it, a monster clearly stronger than you.”

“If I didn’t, it would have killed you, and escaped.”

“Maybe. How about when you escaped Jeremiah and Angela, that first night when they captured you? You cut off your own hands.”

“If I didn’t, I would have been trapped.”

“Maybe. What about that rescue attempt you made for me, Jessy, and Eric? You came in guns blazing. And then there was our assault on their home turf. You went in first, on intel you got that very night, and took them all on yourself.”

“I—”

“Jack.” Her voice was heavy and sad, not loud, but the impact was enough to shut him up. “The point I’m trying to make, is ... I’ve dealt with vampires before. They take advantage of other people, without even thinking about it. That’s just what vampires do. It’s who they are. But you’re different. You put yourself in positions where you’ll take the brunt of the pain, and ... and I know vampires are going to take advantage of that.”

He licked his fangs slowly, before he ground his teeth until his jaw threatened to break. The anger hit him like a ton of bricks, and it wasn’t the anger the curse used to slip into him, before he’d freed it. It was the anger of an indignant child, not liking what it was being told. It was an anger he was familiar with from his whole life, from someone saying something he disagreed with, while he internally realized they were right, and he was wrong.

Being wrong sucked.

“But ... you won’t do that,” he said.

“Do what?”

“Take advantage of me, of the curse.”

She smiled at him in the corner of his eye. “I don’t know. I don’t think so?”

“You wouldn’t.” It wasn’t in her, that much was obvious. The werewolves didn’t think like that, think in terms of the self first. They were so far from the Kindred mindset, it seemed alien to him.

“You said the Prince and her friend are looking for ways to remove the curse?”

“Yes. Elaine is, in particular. She’s my great grandsire.”

Clara’s eyes shot open. “Oh...” He gave her a minute to process that.

“She had the curse, but never unleashed it, like I did. At some point, centuries ago, she removed it. Now she’s willing to help me.”

“Does she know how she did it?”

“She has some notes, and some hazy memories.” He shrugged, tension fading from his shoulders. “But, I’m not an idiot. Like you said, Kindred take advantage of anything they can, including each other. She’s up to something, and...”

Clara laughed. “But you slept with her anyway?”

He sat up straight and winced. Awkward. “Uh, yeah. But, it’s not what you think. With Antoinette, the sex isn’t the intimate part. And even mid ... you know, she never truly lets her guard down.”

Laughing, Clara looked up and stared off into nothing. “I suppose I can understand that, considering what I was doing.”

“You mean with Jessy’s ghouls?”

Her turn to wince. “Yeah. You ... you didn’t see the pictures, did you?”

He raised a brow. “Pictures?”

“Oh thank god. Those ghouls took some pictures, probably because that slut Jessy wanted to see. I was drunk, and I ... guess I didn’t really care. When in Rome, right?”

“Ha, yeah, when in Rome.” He gave her a small punch in the knee. “So, I’ve slept with four women at once, and you’ve slept with four dudes at once?”

She blushed, horribly at that, face going bright through her tan skin. “Apparently.”

“Sounds hot.”

She choked on a laugh. “I mean, yeah, it was. Jessy, uh, definitely trained her ghouls.”

“Sex is a sport, in Dolareido. But intimacy, romance, that stuff? It’s so damn rare.”

“And you have that with Antoinette.”

After a long, heavy sigh, he looked at her and forced himself to make eye contact with her. “Yes, I do. It’s a strange relationship, no doubt about that. We’ve talked about it, and ... it’s something we’re both aware of, and we’ll both work on it.”

“The sex?”

He choked on a laugh. “The relationship.”

“I suppose she’s mastered basically every aspect of sex, right?”

“Yeap.” No way around admitting that.

“Lot of women in Dolareido really seem to take the lead, sexually speaking.”

“I guess? I mean, the guys do too.” Julias did, definitely, but he didn’t say it. “It’s just, people kinda notice it more when women do, cause it’s not something that female kine normally do, you know? But, Kindred aren’t kine. For vampires, it’s a pretty even split on most behaviors, sexual aggression included.” Far as he could tell, the Beast did not have gender proclivities. It didn't have a gender. It was a mass of shadow, claws, talons, beaks, fangs, fur, and feathers. How much of the human remained, when one became a vampire? A question for the Ordo, or the Circle, he supposed.

“Yeah, I guess. It was the same thing, in Tijuana. The vamps, girls included, were pretty damn aggressive about what they wanted. The sex was ... everywhere, and it was pretty intense, from the sounds.”

“But, that's not what binds me and Antoinette, if that's what you were thinking. Yeah, we have sex, and we enjoy it, but there's a lot more to us than that.” He didn't want to have this conversation, but maybe it was good to have it. Painful, sure, but Clara was interested in him, and thought his current relationship wasn't a healthy one. Much as it sucked, it was probably a good idea to try and fix her impression.

“Do you joke around with her?” she said.

He shook his head. “Not really, not the way you're thinking, anyway.” She was undoubtedly referencing how the two of them had joked around tonight, as seamlessly as two old friends who knew each other well. Hell, he could joke around with Clara more easily than Damien, or even Julias. Something about her was so damn enjoyable and fun.

She raised a brow at that. “You don't?”

“No, but that's not what makes us happy, you know? I mean sure, I enjoy laughing, and joking around, but to me, it's ... it's not what I crave.”

That confused her, and she tilted her head to the side as she watched him. “Eh?”

He laughed and shrugged. “I'd sound pretty pretentious if I explained. But, uh ... ever seen Frasier?”

She laughed, and before he knew it, his laugh grew to match hers. No need to say it, they were both bringing up funny memories from the sitcom. Clara was old enough to have watched the show when it aired, and Jack found modern television mind numbing, stupid, and written specifically with ADD in mind. Naturally, he deferred to older shows.

“Well,” he continued, “you know how a lot of the humor was poking fun at those two for their elitist mindsets? Fancy wine, fancy decor, nitpicking details about opera, etcetera?”

“Yeah?”

“Well, those are the kinds of conversations Antoinette and I have. Not about wine or decor, but that is how we approach topics, things like science, music, movies. We obsess and nitpick over specifics and minutiae, and ... it’s fun for us. We can talk for hours about it, argue, debate, or indulge each other. It’s really satisfying, and fulfilling. I ... I know it’s not what most people think of, when they think of a relationship, but it makes me happy.”

“So, you’re Niles?”

“Aha, I mean, I guess?” Niles’s greatest weakness was women. Jack could relate.

“You know Niles ended up with Daphne, right?”

Oh, right. Well, that example backfired pretty quick, and the look in her eyes said it all. Niles had been with a wretched, elitist woman before he fell for Daphne, and once he’d finally started a relationship with Daphne, he’d found his happiness.

It was painful, holding Clara’s gaze, and they both looked down at the same time. Reality wasn’t like a sitcom, and he was stupid for bringing it up.

“Jack,” she said at last. “I—”

“Hello.”

Jack and Clara jumped up, and Jack wasted no time drawing a dagger from within his suit. But, the new figure did not attack them. It just stood there, looking at them, occasionally tilting its head from side to side.

A woman, and a ghost. Like Mary, she had hollow eyes, with a see-through body, and mist trickling out of her legs to mix into the gray fog that surrounded them. Her face was soft and her hair was long, going past her shoulders. Gray. From her clothing, Jack guessed she wasn't some crazy ancient ghost or anything; probably someone from the 90s, considering the t-shirt and jeans. But the jeans and t-shirt were faded, gray things, just like her hazy skin.

Only the strange, green light in her chest stuck out from the oppressively dreary grayness of it all. How the fuck had a glowing green light managed to sneak up on them? The ghost must have been able to turn that off or something.

“Hello,” Jack said eventually. “Um, I'm Jack. This is Clara, and Sándor.” Might as well be nice to the ghost, and do his best to not make enemies. He put his dagger away, and brushed his thumb against the silver knife hidden underneath his jacket. He doubted silver would work against a ghost, but he could be wrong.

“I'm Sabrina.” The ghost hovered closer, and Jack and Clara both took a step back, only for the huge rock wall to greet them. If the ghost noticed their retreat, she didn't care. “Why are you in the Great Below?”

“Great Below?” Clara said. “Is that where we are?”

“Yes, the Great Below.” The ghost nodded, and gestured to the fog behind her, and distant, drifting green lights. “You're alive. You shouldn't be here. You could get hurt."

Jack frowned. "Hurt, by who?"

"Us," Sabrina said, and again gestured behind her. No other ghosts were nearby, and the gray mist was thick, but that didn't stop Jack from seeing the hundreds, maybe even thousands of distant, drifting green lights move about. The green glow pierced the fog somehow, almost like a lighthouse, or maybe an angler fish "Why are you here? Are ... are you here because of the spiders?"

Clara nodded. "Yeah. They're called azlu. I—" She stopped herself, and leaned over to Jack. "How much should we tell her?" she said, hand up to cover her mouth and his ear.

Jack turned, repeating the gesture. "We're up shit creek without a paddle, and can't afford to piss anyone off. Tell her ... most things."

Clara nodded again before looking back to the ghost. "Sabrina, have you seen a giant spider ... monster thing, running around?"

The ghost woman shivered and hugged her chest. "Yes! Very scary." Hints of a perfectly normal, human voice were underneath the raspy, harsh ghost voice, the remains of whoever this girl had been, someone named Sabrina. "And it hurts us. We left it alone after that."

"We'll try and kill it if we can," Jack said. "But ... but..." He blinked down at the ground, and then at the ghost Sabrina, then Clara, and then fell onto his ass. "Oh shit. Shit shit. Not now. Not now..."

"Jack! What the—"

"It's alright! It's alright, just ... it may not be sunrise here, but it is back on the ... surface, I guess." It certainly felt like they were underground, in the three dimensional sense, and the alternate dimensions sense. Great Below sounded right. Normally, dawn knocked vampires out within seconds, but Jack tapped into his vitae, and forced it up through his body and into extremities. Keep him moving, keep him talking, just for a few moments. “Clara, you —”

“I’ll play guard dog until you’re awake, Jack. Don’t worry, no one’s getting close.” She wriggled her fingers, like a cat unfurling their claws experimentally. “Ghosts are made of ephemera. If I have to, I can defend you and Sándor.”

“Try ... try and play nice, ok? Better to make friends than enemies, you know?”

She laughed as she squatted down beside him. “Jesus. Even after everything that’s happened, you’re still trying to play diplomat?”

“Call it a habit, by this point.” He looked at the Begotten beside him, then to Clara, then to the ghost. “Sorry, suppose this is a strange way to learn I’m a vampire.”

He watched the ghost, scanning for any unusual behavior as torpor dragged him down. No hostility, no movement, only a confused expression on her face. Well, hopefully she wouldn’t kill him while he slept.

---

~~Antoinette~~

The first thing she did once the sun disappeared beneath the horizon, and she awoke to a new night, was inform her sheriff of the situation. The second thing, was ask for an update from her student. Natasha confirmed Jack was not answering his phone. Apparently, neither was Clara, according to her lovers Matthew and Arturo.

Clara, missing. Jack, missing. A hint of worry ran through Antoinette’s spine. Considering the conversation she had with Jack not long ago, about the nature of her relationship, the idea that her love and that woman were both together somewhere was a painful notion. But the fear passed quickly. Jack was an honest soul, and even if he struggled with some internal conflict, it would not drive him to commit a dishonest or treacherous act. He was simply incapable of crossing that line.

Her phone rang, the sound announcing it was her sheriff. She answered.

“Jack?”

“Not at his mansion. Auspex found a few hints that Clara was here, along with Sándor.”

Jack, with the werewolf and the monster. It was the boy’s job to work with the Begotten and the Uratha, but such things were done through Avery and Azamel, not Clara and Sándor.

“Can you follow their trail?”

“No.”

Groaning, she got up from her chair and looked down at her city from her tower. A message came through on her phone. She checked it, and sighed. “Michael has not seen him either. He does not need to report every day to the Invictus leader, but nevertheless.”

“Talked to Damien yet?”

Despite her best attempts, she scowled. “I suppose if it must be done, it must be done. How do you feel about the man, now that you have been training him?” Yet another favor she did not entirely agree with. But, in the future, if she demanded a favor of Damien Burksen, he would hardly be in a position to say no. Silver lining.

“He’s a lot more mentally stable than he has any right to be, considering what happened to him and Lucas. I see a lot of Jack in him. The calm, calculating part of Jack. The boy has probably helped Damien overcome a lot of his past.”

“Yes, I imagine Jack has. He cannot help himself.”

“And the nightmare monster seems to have sparked something else in Damien.”

Antoinette chuckled. Yes, Fiona’s unending optimism and joviality would likely melt any heart, and Antoinette knew Damien’s heart well, from when he had cut off one of her arms, and legs. There was much to be melted.

“If Sándor and Clara are with him, then I am sure Jack is alive. But he is indisposed, and that is startling.” The hunters were dead, after all. What could have captured or harmed Jack, the monster, and the werewolf? There were many possibilities, but they were all unlikely. And without an idea as to where the boy could be, what she needed to find him, was a hound. “Return to your previous task, Daniel. I will speak with Lucas’s childe.”

---

~~Damien~~

Within several minutes of waking, Maria and Damien got to work. The joys of being Kindred, waking and sleeping came instantly, and this night, he’d stayed at Maria’s. She’d wanted to get started early, and he didn’t mind. Fiona had said she was busy with Athalia anyway.

“Good, good,” Maria said. “You are learning to relax your hands.”

He nodded, and let his fingers drift along the keys, moving rapidly but never flexing his wrists or tightening his hands. It was important to allow the hands to move with the keys, to dance along them, or they'd trip and stumble.

Months of constant practice had allowed him to move onto some fairly interesting classical pieces, and he impressed himself with both his ability to learn them, but also his joy in playing such music. Classical music held a depth in both technical and emotional dimensions he had never considered in the past, but now, it was water he was happy to swim. This piece, Petite Suite by Claude Debussy, was charming and soothing, with a bounce in its step. A simple song, compared to the stuff Maria played, but a good stepping stone for Damien.

It was also played by two people. The ghost lady sat beside him in one of her typical, old fashioned white dresses, and she watched his fingers while playing on her half of the piano. Deep under the Grand Cathedral of Dolareido, the music filled her large den, as her deformed-but-pleasant ghoul drifted about, cleaning, lighting candles, and humming expertly to the melody.

Damien smiled at her. The sight of her broken skin, and the hints of mist that dripped from her, didn't bother him anymore. And his presence didn't seem to bother her anymore, either. It was obvious that the introduction of him into her personal life as a student and bishop of Longinus had interfered with her routines; he spent a lot of time in her underground den. But after a time, she'd adapted, as had he.

He didn't try and teach her about the things that interested him; not that he had many, considering how limited his life had been. But the greater reason, was he knew better. Maria was ancient, and set in her ways. Their relationship worked far better if he simply let her teach him what she was willing to teach, and maybe occasionally ask her to teach him a bit more, but never the other way around. Maybe some day in the future, he'd have something to teach her, but for now, their relationship was of teacher and student. And, because they were the only two in their covenant in Dolareido, leader and follower.

A phone ring interrupted their song.

“Go, answer it,” she said.

He nodded, fetched the phone, and froze. “Uh ... it’s, the Prince.” Everyone knew the Prince’s number, the one she used when making an official call. The fact this was coming to him, and not to Maria, was very, very weird.

Maria turned on the piano bench, and raised a brow as she watched him. “You best answer it then.”

He gulped, and did. “Hello, my Prince.”

“Damien. Have you heard from Jack?”

Damien? She called him Damien?

“Jack? No, I haven’t. Last I knew, he was going to talk with Sándor, about the situation with Azamel. That was yesterday.”

“I see. Well, the boy is missing, as is Clara, and likely Sándor.”

He was very tempted to say ‘Jack’s missing, again?’ in an annoyed drawl. He did not.

“Clara as well?”

“Yes. You are to make contact with Avery, and request her assistance.”

He froze. “The Uratha?”

“Yes. Normally, Jack would go, as you can imagine. But tonight, it would appear I am requesting that you go in his stead.” From the tone of her voice, the request was very much an order. “Natasha is otherwise preoccupied.”

“I see.” He put his hand over the receiver. “Jack’s missing. The Prince wants me to look for him, and to ask Avery to help.” The ghost lady frowned at his explanation, but after half a second’s consideration, nodded. “I will leave at once.”

“No need. Jack informs me the Uratha have finally, thank the stars, acquired smartphones. I have her number, for emergency purposes only mind you, such as now.” She gave him the number.

He was going to smack Jack once he found him. The city had seen enough damn excitement, since the last time Jack had randomly disappeared.

---

~~Eric~~

Multiple layers of blackout curtains and closed windows prevented any light from getting into his apartment, including the red of a setting sun, but he could still sense dusk approaching. Despite that, the jolt of Jessy’s body, sitting up with a startle, had Eric sitting up with a jolt as well.

“Ah, fuck, sorry,” she said. “Still happens sometimes.”

Shrugging, he leaned in toward her and set a kiss on her bare shoulder. “You never wake up gently anymore?”

“Nah. Kindred wake up like someone nearby has shot a gun. Sometimes we handle the jolt well, sometimes we don’t, but it’s never slow or gentle.” Nodding with her explanation, she turned to face him, grinned, and threw herself at him. “Gimme!”

He let her flatten him to his big, hilariously nice bed, and Kat let out a meow in greeting. Apparently Kat’s meow was more inviting than Eric, because Jessy reached out, scooped up the cat, and cuddled her over her shoulder. The purring was audible.

“Your cat is totally brain damaged.”

“Yeap.”

“I love her.”

“Everyone does.”

“Ha, she’s such a cuddle slut.” Jessy laughed and rolled onto her back. She held Kat up and out at arm’s length, smiled up at the adorable dumbass, and lowered the cat back down onto her bare chest. Kat didn’t care about boobs. Kat just wanted cuddles.

Eric rolled over to her, pressed his chest into her right shoulder, and pet Kat the cat, gently scratching under her chin. With Jessy’s right arm holding the cat, they both had free access to pet the hell out of the pampered queen. She purred like a lawn mower.

“I feel bad, about Azamel,” he said.

“What? Why?”

“She wanted my help, remember? Before things went crazy, she was hoping to hire me. Said I couldn’t trust the vamps—”

“Which you can’t.”

“Which, I can’t. Said I could trust her, sorta, because I was an odd one out, not a part of the werewolf pack, and not a vampire.”

“All very true things.” Jessy flashed him a hint of a grin before she buried her head into Kat’s neck, hiding half her face in the dumb cat’s fur.

“And now she’s fucked, dying.”

“Yeah well, from what Jack told us, it was her past catching up with her. She’s a nightmare monster, you know? Literally survives on scaring people.”

He shrugged. “Not like she asked to be that.”

“No, but, it’s still reality. I can’t blame a predator for being a predator, but that doesn’t mean me, or anyone else, is just going to lie down and let them eat me. And they shouldn’t feel bad if a predator gets fucked by the prey, either. Circle of life.”

That was an oddly wise view of it, and he raised a brow as he watched her snuggle and spoil his already spoiled and slightly fat cat. “And vampire hunters?”

“Same thing. There are vampires, so there are going to be vampire hunters. It sucks, but no way should someone feel guilty for not helping me deal with that problem. It’s my problem.” After hugging Kat with both her arms for a few moments, she lifted the cat again up over her head, and set her on the head corner of the bed, before turning to look at Eric. “So we try to not kill anyone, to minimize that problem. Azamel’s done the same. Considering how old she is, she’s done a good job. Nothing to feel guilty about.”

“Yeah, you’re right. But still, I can’t help but think about what-ifs.” Athalia and Fiona did come and join the rescue effort, when Eric had been attacked by Sándor. He owed them, in a strange way.

“Add it to your list of good guy things to do.”

“Good guy?”

“Good guy.” Nodding, she leaned in to him, kissed him, and pushed his shoulder until he was on his back again. “I’m hungry. Gimme.” Like a cat, a far more aggressive and prowly cat than Kat would ever be, Jessy slid the blankets down to their knees, then climbed up onto his pelvis, and sat down in all her naked glory.

He tilted his head up at her, one eyebrow raised. “You ‘ate’ yesterday.” He airquoted ate; seemed to be the ‘in thing’ to do these days.

“Yeah but, I’m feeling peckish. And having you around all the time is like, any woman hanging around chocolate. Can’t help ourselves.”

He nodded. Even Sheryl had been unable to resist chocolate if they had any in the place.

“I am pretty delicious.”

Laughing, she nodded, and slid down his legs. Soon she was on her belly, elbows between his thighs, and she grinned up at him as she placed a kiss against the underside of his soft shaft. Not soft for long. The mischievous glee in her eyes was enough to have him hard in seconds as the wolf inside reacted.

“I’ll trade. Blowjob for blood.”

“Sounds an awful lot like I’m your sugar daddy, if I’m paying you for sexual services with blood.” He forced himself up onto his elbows, and watched the blonde woman set another kiss on his length, and another, lips working up toward the engorging tip.

“But, I give you real money for your services. I’m your sugar momma.”

“Sounds like a paradox.”

She laughed, shrugged, grabbed his cock with one of her hands, and started to stroke its base as she set its body along her cheek and up to her forehead, measuring her face against its length and girth. “Almost like we’re a couple, who just like giving each other stuff.”

“Crazy.”

Nodding, she wrapped her lips around the head of his cock, and started to bathe it in suckling kisses and massaging licks. She'd started Blushing Life, so the sensitive skin of his glans was treated to the wet warmth of her mouth. And it was clear she was in one of her moods, her playful moods, her almost cat-like moods. For the moment, he was her toy. He was perfectly okay with that.

She wasted no time, and god damn, she was skilled. Within minutes, he reached down, and ran his fingers through her hair as he felt the warm gush of his cum flood his length. Jessy's playful gaze melted into something soft and beautiful, as his fingers slid along her scalp and through her hair. She smiled at him and hummed happily, as his cum poured into her mouth, each wave sending sparks of bliss down his cock and down between his legs.

"Three minutes, bitch," she said, doing her best to not spill the mouthful she had. She jumped off the bed, disappeared into the bathroom, spat, and returned with a hop in her step. Still Blushing Life meant the fit woman's nipples stood out on her large breasts, and he stared, hypnotized by how her tits bounced with her skipping. And, of course, by how her large ass rippled. God damn. "I've known college students that last longer than you."

Rolling his eyes, he sat up, and motioned for her to come closer. She did. They hugged. She sank her fangs into his neck, and he shivered as the unnatural power of the Kiss sent jolts of relaxing pleasure through his body. It was almost like an orgasm, just the reverse, with flowing waves of exhaustion happening before the pleasure did. But the wolf spirit in him was strong, and it didn't let the Kiss knock him out. And Jessy only took a little blood, this time.

"Ah fuck, now I'm horny too."

"Wh—hey!"

She pushed him back onto the bed again, straddled him, and before he knew it, they were having sex.

“Come on, you’re good for it, right?” She pointed down at where he was still hard, and was indeed penetrating her. She was wet, hot, and so very damn tight.

“Just, a little shocked by the drive-by fucking.”

“Well, I—” The phone on the nearby nightstand rang. Kat, half asleep and still on the head corner of the bed, hadn’t reacted to their movements at all. The ringing, however, managed to pull her head up enough to look at the smartphone nearby, and earn an annoyed meow from her, before the spoiled queen went back to her slumber.

Jessy grabbed the phone and handed it to him. “Answer it.”

“Uh, we’re—”

“How often are your phone calls social calls?”

“ ... basically never.”

“Exactly. It’s probably important, so answer it.” Nodding, she leaned down into him, spread her knees, and ground her pelvis down toward his to swallow his length to the base. With her knees spread out and on the blankets, she had the leverage to really grind her body left and right, and she did. Her hands slid around his back, and she pressed her breasts into his chest as she hugged him. Her lips found his neck again, but she didn’t Kiss, only kissed.

He gulped, and answered the phone. “Hello?”

“Eric, it’s Damien.”

“Damien? I—” He forced down the rising need to groan, as Jessy clenched on him tight. “Um, hey, what’re you—”

Jessy snatched the phone out of his hand. “Damien? Dude, what’s up?” She leaned back from him, hooked the back of his neck with her free hand, and ground back and forth at higher speeds. He stared, awestruck by the way her body rolled like a wave, how her abs flexed and unflexed, and how her huge breasts jiggled with each motion.

Something was in her hand. Phone? Phone! Right, she was on the phone. Damn easy to forget, looking at what he was looking at.

“He’s missing again, are you fucking serious? Clara too? Ugh, fucking typical. City’s finally not trying to kill us, and those two somehow go missing.” Despite being in the middle of sex, and fast, almost rough sex at that, her voice didn’t change. Vamps didn’t need to breathe, so it wasn’t like physical exertion would affect her air. But that didn’t mean she could just ignore pleasure easily. And she was feeling pleasure, considering the warm wetness soaking him.

“Not sure what that has to do with Eric ... Oh, I getcha. Like, they’ll be here soon? ... because I am literally fucking him right now, and we’re not stopping until I get off at least once.”

Eric suppressed a groan of pleasure, only for a groan of awkwardness to seep out. Jessy did not give the slightest shit if someone knew she was having sex, and that brazenness was very attractive, usually. Right now, it made Eric freeze as he realized the man on the phone could now turn every noise into a likely accurate image of what was happening.

But after realizing what he was doing, Jessy gave his face a gentle pat with her free hand, tightened her grip on his shoulder with it, and ground her body faster while squeezing her insides harder, reaching rough sex territory. The pleasure started to build again, and Eric set his hands on her hips to hold on.

“Right, I getcha. Why not Natasha and her boys? I—oh, busy. Fine, I—” She started to cum. Her voice broke for a moment, and she let out a long, pleased sigh as her rocking motion slowed. Warm insides clenched hard, and she quivered, her breasts jiggling as the random spasms of her muscles earned a few shudders of her chest. It was more than enough to tip him over the edge.

Jessy laughed as she got control of herself, and she ground herself back and forth again on his cock. Her insides dripped wet heat down his length, and soon dripped with his cum, as the vise grip of her depths milked him to almost painful levels of pleasure.

“Sorry,” she said into the phone. “Just had to work that one out. Ca—no you can’t talk to Eric! Talk to me, asshole. Jeeze, don’t act all awkward and shit. You’re worse than Eric. It’s not like we didn’t see you fucking Fiona on the roof in front of, you know, all the Kindred in the city.” She laughed again. Teasing her workmate. But damn that laugh was warm, and she pat Eric’s chest as she worked her hips back and forth a few more times, squeezing hard and wringing his cock until she squeezed every drop out of him, all while laughing on the phone.

“So, they’ll be here any minute? Yeah yeah, sure, we’ll go. But if the Prince thinks Sándor was involved, they could be in the Dream. We’ll need a Begotten ... You can’t be fucking serious. Um, alright ... Yeah yeah, I’m sure he’ll agree.”

He sat up, took his phone back, and put it to his ear. Nothing, conversation over.

“How rude,” he said to her, though he couldn’t keep the smile off his face.

“Yeah, I’m rude. But you love that about me.” Winking at him, she slid off him, walked down the hall, huge ass swaying left and right, and returned with a couple wet rags. She tossed him one, while wiping herself down with the other.

“Yeah, I do.” He said it slowly, with a little more weight than he consciously intended. Subconsciously, he wasn’t so sure.

They froze and looked at each other for a while. Yeap, that was the L word, except, not really said in the way that'd carry the emotional weight to earn the freezing. But they froze anyway, and stared at each other, eyes locked.

A dilemma worthy of a romantic comedy, he supposed. He'd been burned by the L word before, while she didn't have the wiring to recognize the emotion or embrace it. Easily worth a few seasons of romantic tension, with the two of them circling each other, trying to find ways to say it, or hoping for it to be said to them by the other. It'd all come together in the end in a big confession, made by one of them screaming out from the street, in the rain; no one would hear that shit in Dolareido, but still.

“Eric,” she whispered, eyes falling. “I—”

Knock knock. Right on time, comedic timing and all.

“Rain check?” he said, and he gave her a smile to let her know it would, hopefully, be a good conversation.

Apparently he had a good smile, because once she saw it, she beamed. “Yeah.”

They put on their underwear and suit pants, and Jessy grabbed her bra as she walked down the hall of the massive apartment, and opened the door, without bothering to put the bra on.

“Caleb, Noah,” she said, frowning at them, hand on a hip and holding the black bra. “Hope you realize you nearly ruined a quickie. But we're both pretty damn quick, so, all's well.”

“I, uh ... what?” Caleb said.

She shrugged and motioned for them to come in as Eric walked down the hall, buttoning up his shirt. She walked past him, slipping on her bra and fetching her suit shirt, too. So brazen.

Caleb and Noah came in, and stayed by the door on the mat. Good. Their shoes were filthy, and honestly, Eric was starting to become attached to a clean apartment. It was easy to get attached to neat and orderly, when he had the money to keep everything streamlined and professionally cleaned.

Noah was an interesting looking man, and it was hard to guess his age. Average height, or maybe a bit taller, but it was hard to tell considering he was bald, with scalp and other pale skin covered in tattoos. Clean shaven made him look younger than he probably was, and his dark blue eyes matched his cold personality.

Caleb had a similar build, same as Noah, same as Eric, about average height with some definite muscle on their lean frames. But unlike Noah, it was easy to tell he was probably in his mid twenties, short red hair, also clean shaven, and a smattering of freckles. He smiled more than his partner, and he was smiling a lot more, eyes snapping between Eric and the hallway Jessy had just disappeared down.

Eric smiled too, a small but pleasant one. “Yeah, she’s shameless as fuck.”

“All vamps like that?” Caleb said. “I mean, whenever Tilly’s around, everyone in the building gets to hear it. Whole damn block knows what her moans sound like now.”

“You were at the ball,” Eric said, “you tell me.”

Caleb laughed. Noah nodded. Yeah, the vamps in Dolareido really let loose, sexually speaking, and it was rubbing off on everyone else. Case in point, the two guys in front of him had just seen his girlfriend’s tits, and everyone brushed off the encounter within seconds.

“We were supposed to speak with you,” Noah said, “about your progress as Uratha, your visions of Luna, and ... how it is you’re capable of having sex while transformed, something others in the pack have expressed ... interest in.”

Eric raised a brow, but Noah’s expression was solid. The man definitely had a cold, calculating personality. Sorta reminded Eric of the sheriff, except Noah seemed like he could be suave and smooth if he wanted to be.

“But?”

“But,” Caleb said, “Avery called us on the way here with an update from Damien. Clara’s missing, she figured that out last night. But apparently so is Jack. We know they were at the mansion, so we’re going there now to pick up the trail.”

Pick up the trail, like hunting dogs. Or any predator, he supposed.

Jessy returned, fully clothed in her suit, opened his closet, pulled out his suit jacket, and tossed it to him. “Let’s go. I want this situation solved ASAP. Kid is probably just ... fuck, I dunno, stuck in a hole somewhere.”

---

“I don’t know what to tell you guys. Yeah, sure, when I’m transformed, it’s a pretty overwhelming rush. There’s definitely an urge to hunt and destroy. But, it gets kinda buried by the need to ... fuck.” God, this conversation was awkward. Jessy may have been slowly — or not so slowly — corrupting him, to the point he’d be able to fuck her in the middle of the street without a second’s hesitation, but he wasn’t there yet. And talking with two guys about how they fucked was especially weird. He’d never been into locker talk, and locker talk never got super personal anyway.

The four of them hopped along the rooftops of Dolareido, making their way through the thicker entertainment districts quickly as they headed for Rich Side. The three werewolves adopted their Dalu forms, the hybrid between human form and the titan Gauru form.

They each grew a few inches, got surprisingly hairy, and put on a good fifty pounds of muscle out of nowhere. It put the wolf spirit right under the skin where it was easy to tap into, particularly its strength, and allowed them to jump from rooftop to rooftop without effort. Despite the massive increase in bodyweight, they landed smoothly; not as smooth as Jessy, but smooth enough to keep up without hurting their ankles.

“It might have something to do with why you transform,” Noah said between jumps. “I suspect the wolf in us all is capable of more than just hunting and destruction. If it’s summoned to express itself sexually, then the result would be different.”

“Kinda makes sense, sure,” Caleb said. “I suppose it’d take a werewolf born and raised in a place like Dolareido to even consider trying it. Didn’t you kill a bunch of people the first time you changed, Eric?”

Eric frowned over at the young guy. “I was literally being murdered at the time. Christ, I still have a bone to pick with Terra Den over that shit.” He’d mostly let it go because the fucker with the knife was dead, but Montoya and his boss Jeremy Long were still alive.

“We’ll get them eventually,” Jessy said from up ahead. “Just gotta figure out a way to do it without Garry being able to pin it on us.”

Caleb and Noah looked at each other, before Noah called out. “Being kinda open with that information, don’t you think?”

“Ha. Garry knows we’ll try and find a way to bring his new buddies down. Nothing surprising there.”

The two wolves looked at Eric, and he shrugged. Jessy was right, but it was a little weird how openly she talked about it. She didn’t say anything that could backfire, but she still said more than the other vampires did.

“You two boys looking to fuck some people while transformed?” she continued. “Definitely make sure your girl — or boy — toy knows what she or he’s in for. Eric don’t stop until he’s satisfied, and he’s big enough it’s like fucking a record-setting cucumber, home grown in some old lady’s garden, attached to a piston on a car motor.”

All three men coughed, but it wasn’t long before Caleb was laughing, then Eric, and eventually even Noah managed a chuckle.

“When we were fighting,” Caleb said, “I wanted to test you, Eric. A lot of Uratha go psycho when they transform. You didn’t. You lost control faster than I would have liked, but at least you didn’t go crazy and start attacking everything that moved. Hell, you even seemed protective of the vampire.” He gestured to Jessy ahead of them. “Some Uratha go into Gauru form more easily than others. Some have trouble with it, and some have trouble controlling themselves when in it.”

“Rahu like Matthew, in particular,” Noah said.

Jessy shrugged, mid leap over a large gap. “I think Natasha’s safe,” she said once she landed. “She’s too scared to fuck a couple of giant werewolves. Maybe I can change her mind, but I’d need someway to show her what it’s like. Her boys say it can’t really be filmed?”

Caleb nodded. “Luna, or her proxy or something, affects people and technology alike. Otherwise, people would have us on film, or people would be telling some pretty detailed stories about a giant wolf on two legs, you know?”

“I think,” Eric said, “maybe we should let the tiny woman and her two huge boyfriends be? Who knows what those two would be like with her if they transformed.” Last thing Eric wanted was to trigger some sort of sexual social movement with the Uratha, and then learn that they'd killed someone mid sex. Jesus, that'd be scarring to hear.

“Matthew can be hard to control,” Noah agreed. “But, as long as Arturo is there to calm him, he's never lost control. Those two are as thick as thieves.”

Thick as thieves. That partly explained their ability to both be in a romantic relationship with one woman.

Jessy slowed her running until she was between Eric and Caleb. “You just let me handle Natasha. I've known her for decades. All she needs is a push, and before she knows it, she's blissfully swimming in the new experiences I've thrown her into.”

Eric shook his head. “Something tells me you haven't had a hundred percent success rate with this.”

She rolled her eyes. “Nobody's perfect.”

---

Once they got past the main district of South Side, the jog to Rich Side didn't take very long. They were all damn fast. More importantly, once they were out of sight of all the lights, and could start skirting the edge of the city where it met the desert, they were free to use their wolf forms, Urhan. Urshal, the near-wolf form, was a massive beast of power and strength, but the smaller, full wolf form was ideal for stealth. Eric didn't spend much time in it, but that was out of habit. According to the Uratha, some of them spent just as much time, if not more time in their wolf form. They weren't human after all, they were werewolves, half human, half wolf, with freedom to be in either form as much as they wanted. Which meant, as much as he felt more normal in his human form, being in wolf form felt perfectly natural, too.

Jessy said it was different for her. Her wolf form was an extension of her Beast, a malleable creature, filled with blood lust no matter its form. Different instincts, then.

Wolves were fast. Wolves were very, very fast. They'd jumped along the rooftops in human shapes because, if anyone spotted them, they would have looked like parkour-obsessed risk takers. Unusual, but not call-the-cops unusual, and definitely not supernaturally unusual. Wolves, on the other hand, were definitely worthy of media attention. So they saved the wolf forms until they were out of the city. And once they did that, it was only a matter of minutes to cover miles.

They shifted into human form, and walked up the last few feet of the mansion's driveway. A glance Jessy's way showed a hint of something she rarely showed on her face: sadness. Right, this used to be Julias's mansion, after his sire Viktor died, in a cotton mill explosion or something. Eric could still remember hearing about it on the radio in his taxi. It hadn't been very long since Julias died, and she was still sad about it, and probably would be for years. Considering the lifespan vampires operated on, and how they were naturally territorial and didn't make friends easily, losing a close friend must have affected them in a way he would never really be able to understand.

Damien, Fiona, and oh good god, Athalia waited for them on the stairs.

"Athalia." Jessy said, bite in her voice. "Still not sure why you're coming along."

"I am here to help find Sándor. Azamel desires to speak with him."

Eric frowned slightly as he looked between the two women. Athalia had apparently not done what she was supposed to do, when Jack attacked the hunters, and that put her on a maybe-enemy list for the vampires. But, considering how well the ball had gone, maybe it wouldn't be so bad.

“Dinnae worry yer pretty head, lass! Ye can trust her.” Fiona folded her arms across her chest and leather jacket, nodding sagely.

Everyone looked to Damien, who stood beside Fiona, his girlfriend between him and Athalia, and he shrugged, offering little more than a cold and calculating gaze. Just like Noah, and just like the sheriff, he didn’t let his expression show much, except that he was prepared to handle things with a cool, albeit sneaky approach, if it came to it. They were scary fellas.

“None of you can follow the trail without us?” Noah said.

Damien shook his head. “Vampires have a good sense of smell, but not that good.”

The bald man gestured to the two women beside the vampire. “And them?”

“Different, for each Begotten,” Athalia said. “Fiona and I can see in total darkness, but our sense of smell is nothing special. And Mark isn’t leaving Azamel’s side.”

That made sense. If Begotten were each a nightmare monster, and each unique, then each would come with different abilities or handicaps.

“Alright, let’s go,” Caleb said. Everyone except Noah raised a brow as they looked at the man, but he shrugged and waved it off. “I’ve been hunting with Clara for years. Easy to pick up her scent. Come on.”

---

~~Beatrice~~

Once dusk arrived, she and Jennifer left, and went out into the desert where Jacob had set up the ... interrogation room. Beatrice wrapped them in her best Cloak, and both did their best to spot any followers. If the sheriff wanted to find them, he could, unless Jacob was there to help. But Jacob was off, doing his own thing, apparently uninterested in helping them anymore.

Resurrection was not feasible, according to him. He'd captured Elen for no other purpose than to let Beatrice attempt it, and inevitably come to the same conclusion. Jacob, like all the elders, played the long game, and seemed intent on teaching Beatrice quite a bit about being a witch. And, in classic evil witch or warlock fashion, enjoyed teaching lessons the hard way, for maximum impact. Sick bastard.

She smiled to herself as she thought about her boss. The man was an enigma, even to her, and despite the Prince's request that she try and help Jacob out of his pit of depression, the closer she got to Jacob, the more she found herself thinking like him. He'd lost the love of his life, and so had she. He was neck deep in occult shit, seemed to enjoy it, and she found herself kinda liking it too. Using pain to empty the mind so she could speak with her Beast wasn't fun, but the rewards for tapping into the creature, and then using it to learn rituals from the great beyond, was a rush.

Jacob was preparing her. She knew that, she wasn't stupid. Like a moth to flame, she was getting sucked into his world of butchery, sacrifice, and darkness, spurred by the train wreck that was her second life, and the misery that her friends suffered. Misery, and death. She wasn't stupid. She saw all that and saw how Jacob was using it to shape and mold her.

Jennifer saw it too, and was invested in making sure Beatrice didn't drown. God, it felt great to have a friend like her. It was the only damn thing keeping Triss from going full psycho and tearing Elen's guts open in some pointless attempt to torture answers out of her. She didn't want to do that, to go so far she'd lose all connection to the human half of her.

“I think,” Jennifer said, walking alongside her on the sand and rocks, “that the sheriff knows exactly what’s going on out here.”

“Then he’d have stolen Elen away already. We know they have her book and tools. If they had her, they’d have the whole set. Pretty sure the dragons would want her, just to experiment on her and shit.” If the Circle was filled with witches and warlocks, the Ordo was filled with Doctor Franksteins. They’d cut off Elen’s head and stick her on a younger body or something.

“Maybe. He might think the cave is booby trapped.”

“True,” Triss said. Surprising that Jen didn’t jump at her own mention of booby, but she didn’t. Probably picking up the vibe that now was not the time. It wasn’t. “I know Mekhet like the sheriff can do some pretty insane feats with Auspex. But, I suppose if that’s true, Jacob may have accomplished equally insane feats using Crúac rituals. Maybe he’s put a spell on the cave, to hide it from Daniel, or to strike at the man if he gets too close?”

“Yeah, I wouldn’t put it past him. Or maybe the sheriff just stays away because he respects Jacob.”

“That respect didn’t stop him that one time.” Daniel had walked into the main sacrificial chamber Jacob maintained, and had basically interrogated them, on Jacob’s home turf. Gently, but still, terrifying, to have the fucking sheriff asking questions. “He was looking for something. I don’t think it had to do with Jacob.”

Jennifer nodded, and they continued along in silence for another minute before she spoke up. “So, that Sándor, he—”

Okay, time to call this out into the light before it drove Triss nuts.

“Jen, I see what you’re trying to do with Sándor.”

“Well, yes, he’s a valuable ally, and—”

“No, I mean, you’re trying to use him to fill the Julias-shaped hole in my life. And I get it. He fits the bill, sorta, I guess. He’s handsome as fuck, and he used to have a family, like Julias. And he’s probably a nice guy, when he finally removes the stick from his ass. Not nice like Julias was,” suave and smooth and charming, “but nice. Plus, he’s a literal monster, and probably doesn’t give a shit about my fucked up mouth.” She kept walking. If she stopped, it would have given the conversation more gravitas than she wanted. Instead, she wanted to casually let Jen know that she knew what her friend was up to, in greater detail than Jen realized.

Jen grinned at her. “You forgot a big reason.”

“Ha, yeah? What’s that?”

“That he can be a great source of blood, and orgasms.”

Laughing, Beatrice finally stopped. Had to. She buried her face in a hand and laughed and laughed, until she was sure her Cloak wouldn’t be able to suppress the noise. Jennifer was relentless.

“I guess that’s true. You know it hasn’t really been that long since Julias died, right?”

“Yeah, I know.” Jen’s smile faded, and she stepped in a little closer. “But, it wasn’t last week either. It’s been long enough that you should at least start looking at other people. Not fuck them, but look. That’s all I’m hoping for, honestly, that you start looking.”

After a heavy sigh, Triss nodded, stepped in close to Jen, and set her hands on her shoulders. Jen set her hands on Triss’s hips, and she stepped in close as well, eyes a little wider than usual, surprised. Surprised even more, when Triss triggered a kiss, a proper one, deep, long, and slow. Kissing didn’t have the same impact without the Blush of Life, not as warm, or moist, but it was still pleasant and inviting enough.

More pleasing and inviting, was Triss's hands gripping Jen's ass through the snug skirt of her business suit. Jen purred, and pressed her chest into Triss's, squashing her large rack into Triss's, dwarfing them, burying them, and within seconds, Jen's lips found Triss's neck. Always on a hair trigger, Jennifer. Triss knew the moment she actively engaged Jen sexually, the girl would give in instantly; lo and behold.

"You've been patient," Beatrice said into Jen's neck. "I appreciate that, a lot. A ... a lot lot lot. We can have some fun later, ok?"

Jennifer tightened her hug, gave her another kiss on the neck, and stepped back. "You sure?"

"Yeah, I'm sure. Julias is gone, and it has been a while. Not nearly long enough for a stranger, you know? But ... I have missed you."

Her friend nodded, squeezed Triss's hand, and started walking again. "I've missed you, too. And, you have no idea how hard it is to see that ass every night, and not do something about it."

Triss laughed again. It felt damn good to laugh. Maybe she was feeling better because she had something she could do now, a project to work toward, to put her energy into. Whether or not dealing with Elen would succeed, and it probably wouldn't, it felt nice to be able to think about something other than Julias. For now, her focus was on finding a way to make Elen do what she wanted. The fact that that meant resurrecting Julias was such a distant dream that she dared not consider it possible. First step was making Elen obey commands. Resurrecting Julias would probably be step six six six.

And, as the weeks went by, she did find it easier to stop thinking about him. The waves of depression weren't gut wrenching anymore. Painful, yes, but they didn't make her want to puke up all the blood she'd managed to force feed herself, not anymore. More than once, she'd managed to fall asleep come dawn, with Jen in her arms, and not dream of him. It was sad, knowing that she was slowly getting over him, and a colossal relief, too. Part of her had worried she'd end up like Jacob, and probably forever trapped in a loop of depression over Minerva. The guy had an amazing poker face, but Triss and Jen, and Aaron for that matter, were pretty sure the man still thought about her, all the time.

“Think Jacob will connect with Samantha at all?” Triss asked. If there was hope for him, then, by comparison, it'd be easy for Triss to find happiness again. Maybe.

“Maybe. He did say there was something special about her. And if she's Jack's mom, I can only imagine that's true.”

“Except, if it's the curse that makes Jack special, then there'd be nothing special about his mom. Except, you know, being the Prince's child.”

“Good point. But I doubt the curse is the reason Jack continuously throws himself in front of oncoming problems with such ... enthusiasm.”

Triss nodded. “Yeah. The way Samantha dealt with Athalia? Fuck, I should thank Samantha for that. I was kinda worried Athalia would find me and kill me when I had my guard down. Or, find a way to get into my dreams.” She shivered. That crazy skeleton monster, in her dreams, stalking her in the dark? Good god. “Samantha's got spirit. I hope she can get through to Jacob. Maybe, you know, settle him a little? Make him happy, if only a little?”

Jen nodded, eyes down, chin in her fingers. “I expect Jacob is using her, but at the same time, is genuinely intrigued by her.”

“So, he'll try and use her, but she'll melt his heart in the process?” After a few chuckles, Triss made the classic swooning sigh. “So romantic, and unrealistic.”

“One can dream.”

They laughed, and kept laughing as they found the giant rock blocking the entrance to the cave. Then, they stopped laughing, and the horrible reality of the situation they were both ignoring set in.

Time to see if Beatrice could summon Black Blood, without Jacob’s help.

---

~~Jack~~

He woke up. That was a plus. He wasn’t entirely sure he would wake up, and the worry infected the dreams of his torpor. Scary nightmares, about things jumping out of an endless mist.

And, of course, he sat up in an endless mist. He expected to see a cave, but instead, found the tunnels of Dolareido. What the fuck?

He got up and turned around, trying to figure out what he was looking at. Yeah, these were Dolareido tunnels. He recognized the concrete work of the tunnels, and the way the old tracks were set up, tracks he’d walked along many times in the deeper tunnels when going to visit Azamel. They were beneath him, maybe three feet down, since he was on the edge of a landing platform.

“Jack,” Clara said.

“Clara?” He smiled as relief hit him, and walked over to join her. She was leaning against a subway gate, one of the older ones that used to be manned, with someone who’d check your ticket and everything. Beside her, Sándor sat on the floor, back to the wall. He’d woken up, and he wasn’t sweating excessively or panting heavily, so that was a good sign.

“Jack,” the Begotten said, a hint of smile showing, but only for a moment.

Jack hopped over to them, but slowed when he remembered he had no idea where the fuck they were. “Glad to see everyone’s alive, but, uh, where—”

“Still in the Underworld, or Realm of Ghosts, or Great Below or whatever.” Clara shrugged. “Sabrina took us here. Said not many ghosts drift this way, and we should be safe. She also said we should do our best to just avoid any ghosts we run into.”

“Right, right. Wandering, angry ghosts? Yeah, after meeting my sister, I’m happy to avoid ghosts.” Sure, he could probably survive any beating they threw at him, but he had no way to strike back. He had to imagine a ghost couldn’t go on the offensive forever, and would run out of juice long before they could kill him. Clara and Sándor, on the other hand, were not so impervious.

But, Clara said she could probably hurt ghosts, since they were spirits. Hopefully that was true, if it came to it.

“So, this is pretty neat, eh?” Clara said, gesturing around them. “Looks like we’re in Dolareido.”

“Yeah, my thoughts exactly.”

“Sabrina says it’s the first level of the Great Below.”

He quivered at that, and slowly spun around as he took in the sight, and scanned for potential threats. In the physical world, ghosts could hide anywhere, in anything, even air, but he had no idea if it worked any differently in the Great Below.

“The first level of the Great Below looks like Dolareido?”

She shook her head. “Sabrina said the first level is sorta like, a place where the environment reflects the underground stuff you’d find in the physical world.”

“First level? What’s—”

She put up her hands. “She doesn’t know. And judging from the conversation, the fact she knows as much as she does is a little unusual. We passed a few ghosts on the way here, and they were ... kinda spaced out. I don’t think they realized they were dead.”

He quivered again, and stepped in a little closer. “Ok yeah, that’s creepy.”

“Yeah, it is.” She said. “I didn’t want to leave, but she insisted it wasn’t safe. Lot of ghosts wandering around.”

Nodding, Jack paced back and forth, rubbing his chin. “Sabrina. Sabrina Sabrina. That name is familiar.”

“She says she died here in Dolareido. I’m guessing mosts of the ghosts we’re seeing died here.”

He rubbed his head and paced faster. “So, this Great Below place, or at least this top part of it, reflects the underground of the physical world. If we go deeper, we...” He shuddered again. The cold, sterile, unendingly bleak atmosphere of the mist-filled fake Dolareido tunnels, was sending spiders up his spine. It was just like back at home, with Mary, how her ghost altered and affected his old home, burying it in an oppressive blanket of death. “Well, the fact that there’s a deeper is enough to tell me: don’t go deeper.”

“Agreed,” Sándor said.

Clara nodded. “You’re awake now, and Sándor’s feeling a little better compared to yesterday. Let’s go back to the hole, and see if Sándor can get us out of here.”

The two men nodded, and Clara and Jack helped Sándor to his feet.

“I don’t think you should go,” another voice said.

Everyone froze, and looked around for the origin of the voice. It came up from the mist, a subtle green glow growing until it bathed the area in its gentle hue for a good twenty feet.

“Sabrina,” Jack said. “Um, hello.” Time for diplomat mode, and to put all his experience to use. “Thank you, for helping my friends out, while I was asleep. Greatly appreciate it, you have no idea. But, we don’t belong here, and we really need to—”

“There are others, in the tunnels,” the ghost said. Christ, those empty eyes were disturbing. “If you go now, they’ll notice.”

Jack eyed her, then looked to his friends with a wary expression on his face. Either the ghost was telling the truth, and it’d be dangerous to go, or the ghost was lying, and it’d be dangerous to turn their backs to her.

Sándor coughed, a harsh sound, and looked down. Yeah, he wasn’t in the best shape, even if he was willing to go. Clara looked at the man hanging over her shoulder, then over at Jack, a wince on her face. Thinking the same thing he was about Sabrina.

“We can ... stay for a little while,” Jack said, slowly turning his eyes from Clara to the ghost.

Sabrina smiled and clapped her hands twice. “Great! You can tell me about how Dolareido’s changed since I died. Right, Jack?”

“R ... Right.”

Chapter 123

~~Natasha~~

When dawn came, she knew everyone else was getting involved in the search for Jack. For the first time, she wasn't concerned to learn he was missing, though. Jack, new Jack, cursed Jack, was as strong as the elders if he let loose, from what Damien told her. He might throw the Masquerade to the wind, but no one was killing that kid without napalm or a nuke.

The concern, when it came to Jack, was what would happen if he went rogue and decided to do whatever the fuck he wanted. He'd be another Viktor or Tony, except worse.

But, for tonight, she had a different concern.

"Noah and Caleb are with J-Jessy?" she said. The three of them, her and her boyfriends, were on a rooftop between the North Side and South Side, standing around and looking up at the light-washed sky.

"Yeah. They wanted to talk with Eric, according to Avery. But then Damien called about Jack, asking for some help running his trail." Art checked a message on his new phone, clearly had trouble pressing buttons on a touch screen, and put the phone away. Poor guy still wasn't used to technology, but it was high time he, and all the other Uratha learned what a touchscreen was.

Natasha nodded. The Prince was going to ask her to do it, no doubt, but she already had a mission. Investigate the tears. Antoinette knew how important that was, and she knew that Jack was strong enough to take care of himself in any circumstance now.

Tash dared not think about how Antoinette might react if she turned out to be wrong.

“You trust those t-two?” she asked.

Matthew, eyes locked on the sky, didn’t respond. Not ignoring her, and not choosing to remain silent, either. He just liked looking at the sky. It wasn’t exactly a pretty sky, not with Dolareido’s unending nightlife washing it out with a million lights, but he watched the blackness above anyway, as if looking for stars bright enough to poke through Dolareido’s light curtain.

“Course, yeah,” Art said. “Caleb can be a bit of a hothead, or a hotshot, depending on how successful his impulsiveness is. But Noah is a bedrock.”

She smiled at that. “Caleb. Jessy says he and Eric, umm ... really tore up a chunk of North Side.”

“Ha. Like I said, hothead. Caleb’s a smart guy, but a bit overconfident. He told us about that fight too, by the way, and how Eric lost control.”

“Uh oh...”

“Lost control, but somehow managed to not go on a rampage and start ripping everyone apart.” Shrugging, Art walked over to her and set a kiss on her forehead. “He’s a weird breed, Eric. Must be Dolareido.”

Dolareido, changing people to the point they could have sex in any circumstance. Yeah, that sounded right.

---

“You know the drill Natasha,” Avery said from the couch. “But we’re splitting up this time. No hunts. Avoid talking to anyone.”

“Yes ma’am,” everyone said together. Natasha didn’t, but she nodded to Avery, enough to let her know she was listening and planned to follow her lead.

With a snort, Avery got up and started hand talking, using her hands to make sweeping gestures to emphasize her commands. It was cute. The Kindred elders in Dolareido preferred to stand like monolith statues.

“Me, Flow, and Carter are going to North Side, and we’ll check out some previous activity. The rest of you, check out South Side, and scout out trails that lead to the Cathedral. Natasha, take the boys and check out near the Grand Cathedral directly.”

“There? D-Directly? Why?”

“Because you know Maria. If she’s up to something, something involving spirits, there’s a good chance you can find evidence there. Plus, you’re sneaky. You and Art can stealth around, and Matthew will be your enforcer. So keep an eye open for those tears, and if you see something that points a finger at Maria, you know the drill. Recon only.”

The three of them nodded, and Natasha looked down as she started planning. She also looked down because she didn’t want Avery to see the expression on her face. From the way Avery had worded the command, it sounded like she figured Natasha would agree to spy on her old boss without issue. Maybe the boys gave Avery the impression Tash didn’t like Maria?

Well, she didn’t like Maria, that was true. But she didn’t hate her, not anymore. The woman had shown a softer side too, since Lucas’s death, and if anything, Natasha found herself wanting Maria to find a little happiness. Maybe in the future, she might even learn to like her, if they hung out more. If Avery turned out to be right, and Maria was up to something sinister, she wasn’t sure how she’d respond. Ideally, she'd talk to her old boss, but that might be difficult with Matt and Art with her.

“And Clara?” Matt said.

“She'll be fine,” Avery said. “And if she's not, Noah and Caleb can find her. Having ten noses on that trail wouldn't help much more than two. And they've got Eric, and they've got that Damien fellow, who's going to bring his monster girlfriend. You know, the one that can open portals into the Hisil, Gurihal, the Dream Realm, and whothefuck knows where else?” She stomped over to the huge man, glared up at him, and poked him a couple times in the chest. “So unless you can think of some other way we might find her, other than by doing exactly what we're doing, feel free to suggest something.”

“Got nothing, boss,” he said, small smile turning the tense situation into a happy one. They were friends and family, not military. Arguments rolled off them like they were in a sitcom.

“Alright then, let's go.”

---

There wasn't much ceremony this time. It wasn't Tash's first trip into the Hisil, and everyone had orders. Without Eric to be an X factor that needed guidance and monitoring, Avery didn't feel the need to be extra careful. To her, Natasha was harmless. Natasha wasn't harmless, but she didn't want to make any waves either.

But, if Maria came into the picture, she didn't know. Maybe waves would happen. After having been chased by the werewolves through the tunnels, the first time Natasha met them, and seeing first hand how strong, fast, and destructive they could be, she was confident she could adapt. She'd been working on it. She had her silver knife, and tonight, she brought a second pistol, a small one, with silver bullets. Not because she thought she'd have to fight the werewolves; they might even be right about Maria. But, she didn't live as long as she had without preparing, when considering possibilities. If the werewolves and Maria got into a fight, better to have options ready.

Flow was waiting for them, and while the rest of the pack acknowledged her, er, it, with nods, waves, a few hellos, and otherwise perfectly casual greetings, Natasha stared up at the beautiful goddess of water. So gorgeous and angelic. So awesome, in the original sense of the word. And also clearly female, or at least feminine.

“Flowing Sanctuary,” Natasha said, voice wavering. “Um, d-do you know, if, uh, a spirit named Safe of Grey Street is ... okay?”

The swirling goddess looked down at her, crystal glowing eyes staring down with the strange impassion of an alien entity who thought of her with as much interest as humans did ants.

“Safe of Grey Street and its choir do well, in the ... rural areas, of Dolareido, where they stay.”

“Sh—it does?” So damn hard to remember spirits didn’t have genders. They embodied things, and sometimes embodied things often identified with a gender, but they themselves didn’t have them. The exception being Black Blood, that insisted it did. Strange.

“Yes. It avoids South Side, and the turmoils caused by Black Blood, Street-Tail King, and Red Tide. Do not worry.” Flow nodded from atop its spinning vortex of water, and without preamble, followed after Avery.

Natasha smiled, managed a tiny finger wave at the colossal creature, and followed after the boys.

The night was young, and it was important they didn’t overstep themselves, so they walked. Without traffic, pedestrian or otherwise, it wouldn’t take long, walking at a brisk pace, and it let them keep their eyes and ears open for nearby disturbances. It was a recon mission, after all. Once they were within a mile of the Cathedral, they could get stealthy.

Crows with glowing eyes flew overhead. More rat-like blobs disappeared around the corners of twisted, leaning buildings, through the holes in strangely dark manhole covers, and some disappeared through minuscule cracks in building foundations. A few flying eels came around, spotted them, and flew away. Some creatures the size of dogs, made of concrete and wheels, drove by. All in all, it was a lot quieter than the entertainment district of South Side would be, if the route they were going there. But, from the Carthian half of South Side to the Grand Cathedral was a quiet route, both in and out of the spirit world apparently.

“I ... I hope it’s not M-Maria,” she said. “If it’s another Minerva situation, it’d be p-pretty horrible, right?”

“Yeah, it would be,” Matt said. “Avery would insist on stopping her, and something tells me Maria wouldn’t listen.”

“D-Do you think you could take her?” she said.

Art shrugged. “Maybe. You saw what happened when Matt and I tried to take on Jacob.”

She shivered. That had been a horrible night. Jacob, like all Nosferatu, had ludicrous amounts of strength, but she’d never expected him to be able to thrash two werewolves like they were children. The only reason Matt and Art survived the encounter and didn’t have permanent injuries to show for it, was their Gauru forms’ ridiculous healing ability, and Jacob’s mercy.

And Maria was Nosferatu, supposedly with the strongest Nightmare Discipline in the city. Seeing Matt succumb to Jacob’s Nightmare had been scary enough. Seeing either of them succumb to hers, would be worse.

“Why?” she said.

“Why what?” they said together.

“Why w-would Avery insist on stopping Maria?”

Art shrugged. “The tears—”

“What if the tears aren’t a result of whatever M-Maria is d-d-doing?” Assumptions were bad. It was important they dot the Is and cross the Ts, before someone died who didn’t need to die. The devil was in the details.

The two men looked at each other, as if never having considered the suggestion before.

“The red wraiths are hanging out around the tears,” Matt said. “And we know the red wraiths are talking to Maria somehow. We know the red wraiths have some kind of deal with Black Blood. That’s—”

“N-Not enough evidence.” She frowned, stomped her foot once, and folded her arms across her chest. “We need to learn more.”

Art smiled down at her. For a moment, she thought it might be a condescending smile, but it wasn’t.

“That’s why we brought you, to be the smart one. Matt and I? Hell, the whole pack? Dumb, dumber, and dumbest.”

She beamed, for a second, but quickly suppressed the smile. He may have been right about his pack, though she suspected Noah and Art were both a lot smarter than they let on.

“Alright, so, follow m-my lead tonight, ok?”

Both men simultaneously saluted with strict military posture. “Yes ma’am.”

Oh good grief.

---

~~Beatrice~~

There were two ways to communicate with Black Blood. Perform a communication ritual, which seemed to be a pretty loose ritual involving burning some candles, and having a shit load of occult symbols drawn on the walls and floor and shit. The cave already had that, so, all she had to do, was put some vitae into the effort, like beckoning a bird with a bird call. Except, big dangerous bird.

The other way was with a sacrifice. That was required if Black Blood was to directly act on physical matter in a casual way, according to Jacob. Also required, if someone didn't know all the symbols and shit that Black Blood liked. If Antoinette or Maria or whoever else wanted to speak with the big bastard attempted to summon him, they'd have to sacrifice someone. Jacob could talk to him without that step.

And, Beatrice wanted to see if she could talk to him without that step as well, using the tools Jacob had given her. Deep as this pit she'd dug herself was, slaughtering kine was not fun.

She and Jennifer lit the candles. So fucking creepy how Elen hung in the center of the small occult cave, with much less room for the two vampires to back off and not be too close. In the other cave, they had plenty of room to walk around, without having to be within touching distance of the bowl in the center. It added weight to their actions, being so close to Elen. If she'd been a normal person, groaning or crying, Triss doubted she'd have been able to enact what was doubtlessly going to be act of torture.

She held up her hands, out to her sides like a big Y, looked up, and forced vitae through her limbs. Vitae was empowering. It was life energy, stolen from prey and used to fuel physical and magical abilities. Kindred could manipulate it to do any number of things.

Tonight, the goal was simple: use the environment around her, a giant summoning room, to beckon a god of death to her. Fucking. Metal.

It was sort of like a Crúac ritual. With Crúac, she had to infuse her vitae into the act, usually by sacrificing some of her blood, but not always. It was a strange feeling, but like riding a bike or playing an instrument, it was something attached to her, something she could use, like flexing a muscle, a strange muscle inside her. And like learning to ride a bike or playing an instrument, it was a skill that could be learned, to use vitae to reach out for the strange forces that permeated the fucking universe.

She'd learned. Now, all she could do was hope the thing she was trying to contact, was listening, and willing to come.

First, the cold came, the unnatural, piercing cold that wasn't a temperature, but an aura. It hit the skin and the bones at the same time, and Beatrice couldn't suppress the shiver that worked up her spine, inviting hard muscle clenches, as if she'd jumped into a pool of ice water. Black ooze began to trickle from the walls, thick, as if the Earth could bleed onyx. The symbols that covered the walls, floor, and fucking ceiling, oozed bits of blood as well, always black. The skulls underneath the iron bowl in the center cried tears of obsidian, and some of those tears went up, against gravity, and splashed into the ceiling.

She was used to Black Blood's presence now; as used to the presence of absolute death someone could get, anyway. But this time, Jacob wasn't around. It was just her, Jennifer, and Black Blood, a spirit creature entity thing that everyone was terrified of. If she said something wrong or did something to piss it—him off, she could easily end up a stain on the floor, along with Jennifer.

"I spy, with my little eye," the darkness said in a Southern drawl, "a young witch and her companion, looking to beckon the likes of me.”

Well, that was easy. Too easy.

“Yes, Black Blood,” Beatrice said. “I ... I uh...”

“Y’all don’t need to be so stiff. I ain’t gonna hurt you, unless you do something to rightly deserve it.”

A god of death telling her to not be stiff, would have been hilariously weird in most situations. But she’d met the creature several times, and his personality remained consistent. He seemed like a happy guy from the South, except, with a strange obsession with flesh and death. Similar to Jacob, in his own strange way.

“Uh, thanks. Let me know if I’m approaching that line, k? Cause, yeah.” Cause Jacob wasn’t there, and she really didn’t want to fuck up and die.

“Reckon I will.”

Triss nodded, and glanced over to see how her friend was doing. Jen was beside her, a step to the side and a step back, away from the bowl. But Black Blood wasn’t summoned to the bowl. The spirit filled the room around them, having no body to possess, and not bothering to ‘manifest’ itself; apparently that took a lot of effort. Without a direct body to avoid, Jen slowly turned in circles, eyes scanning, hints of fear in her gaze. She stayed close to Triss. Triss stayed close to her.

“Black Blood, I summoned you to request your—”

“Aren’t you precious? I said don’t be such a stick in the mud, little witch. Speak freely.”

Don’t be stiff, he said, right. Ok, talk to the closest thing to the god of death she imagined she’d ever see, like she’d talk to Jacob.

Except, hopefully without the insults.

“Know why I called you?” she said.

“Malachi informed me. Said you were fixin’ to break this woman? Get her to use her flesh magics, in ways I can’t.”

That made her pause. “In ways you can’t? You can manipulate flesh?”

“Of the dead.”

Black Blood, weird spirit that grew with Dolareido, that seemed to embody death, or at least an artistic side of it, was capable of manipulating the flesh of the dead. It would explain why he needed, or wanted, a body if he was going to interact directly with the physical world. Somehow, she got the impression that was mostly just to make things easier for him. Or maybe, he just really got off on it.

“And ... how did you come to possess an ability like that?”

The oozing darkness laughed, and hints of the deep, alien bass underneath the voice rumbled the walls. “I am what I am. Has Malachi not educated you?”

“He’s told me some things about you, yeah. But I still don’t know what you are, Black Blood, where you came from, how you came to be, all that shit.”

More laughter, but quieter, as if the thing was thinking. Could a spirit think? It didn’t have a brain. Questions for a dragon, she supposed, not a witch.

“Powerful secrets, vampire. Ain’t no reason for me to share them with you. Maybe in a few hundred years, when you got the strength to be useful to me, we can trade for ‘em.”

Spirits had banes and bans, according to Jacob. Things that could hurt them, and ways to control them, rules they had to follow. What she knew about Black Blood told her he was some sort of spirit of death, and apparently dead flesh. The name Black Blood started to have a lot more meaning than just something creepy, and a good indicator of what the spirit looked like. Maybe the spirit thing was a literal incarnation of death in the sense of flesh. Surprising he didn't smell like rot, like Mark did.

“So, you won't give me anything for free? Gonna have to trade for everything?”

“Slicker than a fox, ain't ya? Yes, that's how things work, little witch. You do me a favor, and I do you one.”

“Alright.” She took a deep breath, and glanced over at Jennifer. Jen didn't like what she was hearing, but she stayed quiet. “What favor would you want from me, if I asked you to poke around inside Elen? I need her to—”

“To create and twist flesh, yes? To craft a vessel?”

“Yes. Jacob's filled you in on what I want to do, right? I want to ... to ... resurrect Julias.” She was tempted to say ‘resurrect someone’ but there was no point in lying, not to this thing. It knew everything, either because Jacob told it everything, or the damn thing eavesdropped with a thousand ears.

“And you know chances of success are low? Damn low. Even if this shell of a woman could do what you wanted, finding your man's soul in the great beyond is probably a lost cause?”

“Fuck, if you're convinced that—”

“Now now, hold your horses. I said chances are low, not impossible. Malachi took a stab at it, after Minerva was killed, but we ran into a couple problems.”

“Getting a body, and getting the soul.”

“Exactly. Now, I can craft me a fine body with the flesh of the dead, but it will be dead, and not like a vampire. The curse—”

“Curse?”

“Not that thing inside the kid, Jack. The normal curse that infects every single last one of you varmints. It latches onto your soul, and turns your body into a dead thing, half alive on the blood of victims. It’s special, and not something I can just create.”

She nodded, and slowly paced the bowl with Elen. The old woman’s eyes were closed. Sleeping maybe? Or comatose? She looked like hell, but she would not die, no matter how long they left her up there.

“So, what about creating a zombie corpse version of Minerva, and jamming her soul in there?”

The darkness chuckled. “A walking corpse is not a vampire. Many would consider it a fate worse than death.”

That, was a point worth considering. What would someone think, or feel, if they suddenly woke up a zombie corpse? Vampires were undead, true, but like the spirit said, they weren’t anything like zombies. Hell, all it took was a fresh meal to have a vampire’s body basically running like it weren’t dead at all. In reality, vampires were half-dead. If Black Blood somehow managed to give a corpse the ability to walk around under a soul’s influence, how the fuck would that work? They might rot standing, for all Triss knew.

“And, of course, getting the soul,” she said.

“The bigger problem, without a doubt. We killed dozens of people at the height of the experiment, and only managed the tiniest glimpse to the other side.”

“That ... that problem can wait. Let’s just see if we can get Elen to craft us a living body.”

“I’m fixing to, as long as you agree to my terms.”

Time to dance with the devil.

“Alright. What’s the deal?”

---

~~Jack~~

It didn’t take long to update Sabrina on Dolareido. She’d learned from more recent ghosts, and hadn’t died all that long ago. His smartphone really impressed her though, but predictably, he had no signal, of any kind.

“The Harlington building was re-purposed into a casino.”

“Aw, that’s a shame,” the ghost said. “I liked the food there. Very fancy.”

“And ... and that’s everything, really. That’s all I know about Dolareido. Sorry, I never did watch the news much.”

Sabrina laughed, a harsh and shrill sound, but it faded before any of them started to cringe. “I guess. But ... you still haven’t explained about you.”

He sighed, looked around at the subway platform, at Clara and Sándor, and then back to the ghost. “I was kinda hoping I wouldn’t have to.”

Sabrina frowned, and he flinched. Careful, Jack.

“You’re not human. Neither is she. Neither is he.” She hovered up and around, slowly drifting over them, mist leaking out of her and falling on them and the subway alike. More of that death cold crept into his system. If he'd been alive like his two companions, it would have bothered him more; he could feel the cold leaching at his bones. But, he was already dead, and being cold meant nothing to him. Clara would be uncomfortable, but fine, for now. Sándor he wasn't sure about. The guy was healing, and quickly, but he hadn't eaten or drank anything, and while Clara could probably go a couple more days before dehydration became a problem, he doubted Sándor had that long. They both had something inhuman in them to fight that sorta stuff off, but he had no idea how long they could subsist on it. The trouble with a living body.

"Vampires ... exist," he said with a shrug. "I don't know if that should be really surprising though? You're a ghost."

She laughed at that, a sharp, short-lived laugh. "True."

"Right, so vampires exist, and so do most paranormal creatures you might think of. The usual stuff anyway. Vampires, werewolves, nightmare monsters, ghosts, uh ... probably other things."

"Ooh, scary." The ghost nodded, taking it all in stride. "I can see that you're not human, and that you're all different, but not much more. Like you're all half human."

"Vampire," Jack said with raised hand. "Clara's a werewolf. My injured friend there Sándor is a nightmare monster. And, we really need to find a way out of here and back to the rea—physical world, to get him treatment." Or at least some water.

"Wait here. I'll see if the coast is clear. Could take a bit to give the area a once-over though. Gimme a bit." With that, Sabrina flew away, body going horizontal like a bird as she disappeared down the tunnel.

"Clara," Jack whispered, "keep your senses open, for her specifically."

“Why? She’s helping us out.”

“She’s Sabrina Douville.”

Clara raised a brow. “How do you know her last name?”

“High school project, to look into some of the history of Dolareido. We had to present stuff, with pictures. I did some stuff about the colonials, nothing specific. But one girl in the class, one of those types that really likes crime dramas, you know? She did her project on Sabrina Douville.”

“Why ... don’t I like where this story is going?” She looked past him to the tunnel where Sabrina had disappeared, squinting, and scanning. Now she was scared.

“Sabrina Douville was a serial killer.”

“Of course she was, because why wouldn’t she be?” She threw her hands up, voice a whisper despite the anger in it. “Cause things would be too god damn easy if she was a saint.”

“Tell me about it.” They both chuckled. Dismay chuckles were a classic defense mechanism. “She killed half a dozen people.”

“How?”

“Stabbed them to death. No rhyme or reason to the kills. Four men, two women, spread out over a few years.” Unlike paranormal creatures, humans had to be pretty damn careful about killing. Their trails were too easy to trace back to them. Sabrina had been very careful to kill that many people in only a few years, and not get caught until the end. “Cops found her.”

“Suicide?”

“Nope. She tried to stab them. They shot her.”

Clara shivered and rubbed her arms. “No wonder she’s interested in Dolareido. It was her killing ground.”

“Will she harm us?” Sándor said. No waver in his voice, that was good.

“How would I know? I barely know how to deal with my sister.” And it was very much a problem he was avoiding. Saying goodbye to her had been heart wrenching, and saying goodbye to her a second time was going to be even worse, cause his mom was going to be there to see it, once he figured out how to send her on her way. “You’re better off asking Clara.”

“Ha, the fuck do I know about ghosts? Werewolves deal with spirits.”

“Ghosts are—”

“Not spirits. Made of the same stuff, but very different. If anyone knows how to deal with ghosts, it’s hunters.”

Oh, that was not a bad idea actually. He nodded as he put his fingers on his chin, and started pacing again.

“I’ll talk to Harcourt when we get back.”

“If he’s still got a brain left. Isabella looked like she wanted to do some serious shit to him.”

He shook his head. “She knows that’d be crossing a line. Those three are the Prince’s prisoners. They’re in a gilded cage, but they are prisoners, and if someone else fucks with them, Antoinette will deal with them.”

Nodding, Clara reached down for Sándor, and helped him to his feet again. “Alright, well, a killer ghost has tricked us into come into her lair. I vote we leave.”

“Yeah, agreed. But, I’m not sure she’s a threat. She probably is, but she is a ghost now. That’s changed her. Not to mention thirty years of hanging around a bunch of ghosts. I mean, she didn’t attack you while I was asleep, right?”

Clara looked at him, deadpan. “Jack, come on. You really think that a serial killer who’s become a ghost, will become less dangerous over the years?”

Yeah, no. Sighing, he stopped pacing, got under Sándor’s arm, and helped Clara walk the man to the edge so they could get down onto the tracks.

“Whatcha thinking Sándor?” Clara said. “Try and get back to the tear? Or get you somewhere where you think you can tunnel us out of here?”

After a few seconds of silence, Sándor spoke up. “Let’s check the tear first. Those spiders may have sealed it, but maybe not.”

“That reminds me,” Jack said, “what sort of ways are Begotten able to travel between realms? I hear talk of tunneling and pathways, but then, what Fiona did with a tear we found was very different, I think?”

“Begotten can create pathways between any realm and our lair. They overlap at the point of contact.”

“Right, I’ve seen that.”

“Begotten can also open any pathway we find created by other ... things.”

“What the fuck? Something else out there is creating interdimensional pathways?” Clara asked.

Sándor managed a small shrug with his good shoulder. “There’s a lot of things out there. Some of them would terrify you, or make you doubt your religion ... or your atheism. Some of these things can create pathways between realms, and many are permanent, and ancient. Begotten can only create temporary pathways to our lairs, or from our lairs.”

Things to doubt religion, or atheism. Well, that was a weird statement. Then again, cosmic horrors probably had that effect.

“And,” he continued, “if necessary, we can use a human’s mind, bestow a nightmare on them, and slip into our lairs.”

“How’s that work?” Jack asked.

“I’d need access to a sleeping human.”

“Sleeping human? How does—right, right, dream monster.” He was so used to dealing with flesh and blood, even when dealing with things very much not made of flesh and blood, that it was easy to forget that Begotten very much weren’t. Ghosts and spirits were made of ephemera, and could possess people and shit. Begottens’ Horrors were made of dream, or nightmare, or whatever the fuck that was, and they could quite literally go into people’s dreams, and do supernatural shit with them. Sándor had done that to Eric, before kidnapping him.

“You fuckers really are like Pennywise, aren’t ya?” Clara said. Sándor grunted, not happy with the comparison, but he didn’t deny it either. “Sorry, that was mean.”

They fell into silence as they went. Spotting hiding ghosts wouldn’t be easy. Apparently they had a habit of glowing green when in the Underworld, but they didn’t have to. Sabrina had snuck up on them once already without it, and being that she was a ghost, who the fuck knew what sort of tricks she had besides going invisible. You didn’t need much better than going invisible.

“If the tear is closed, then I will attempt to create a pathway to my lair.”

“And how’s that work exactly?” Jack asked. He’d heard some things, but better to be thorough. “Sorry. Know we’re asking a lot of questions, but Azamel hasn’t exactly been forthcoming with answers. Athalia and Mark don’t answer questions at all, and Fiona’s pretty new to her new life.”

After a small stumble, Sándor nodded. “To connect two different points, they must resonate with each other, be similar to each other. I can travel to my castle easily if we’re in a dark hallway filled with rooms.”

“Right, because of the hallways in the castle.”

“The more similar the two places, both in physical but also in atmosphere, the easier they are to connect. If they are not similar, it is ... extremely difficult and draining. No Begotten alive could connect the haunted village and forest of my lair, to a sunny daycare center.”

“I suppose that’s why so many monsters hide in closets and under beds?” Clara said. “I mean, assuming they do.”

“Yes,” Sándor said, nodding. “The Eshmaki, like Fiona and Athalia, will always have an easier time moving to their lair from darkness, or into darkness from their lair.”

Jack nodded. So many questions he wanted to ask about the details about how all that worked, but he refrained. It was obvious Sándor didn’t like talking this much, and was either doing it to keep his mind off the pain, or because he felt he owed Jack and Clara. Jack would ask him some more questions later, but for now, better to stop abusing the man’s kindness.

The tunnels raised into a slope, eventually brought them up onto a surface, and Jack stared at the surrounding insanity.

“I ... I’ve seen this before,” he said. In an old video game specifically, but he kept that part to himself. And just like in the video game, it struck a chord with him, one that got under his skin. Metal, wheels, tracks, rust, dead or dying lampposts, falling radio towers, and half destroyed warehouses. Oh fuck.

He was staring at one very large train graveyard, and given the fog everywhere and endless silence, it could have been a new chamber for a Begotten’s lair if it wasn’t already in the fucking Underworld. He very much did not want to go through the train graveyard, but Clara and Sándor walked toward it, so, they must have come through it with his body when he was sleeping. Safe to sneak through, then? Fuck no.

But they went anyway. They were going to check out the tear first, and apparently, they had to cut through a scene from his childhood nightmares to do it. And, true to form, there’d probably be ghosts hiding inside the chilling environment that awaited him.

“You, uh, know the way through here?” he said.

“Yea. Why, scared?” Clara said, grinning at him.

He nodded. “Yeap.”

“Jack, you’re now one of the strongest vampires, probably in the whole damn world. How the fuck can you be scared of some dirty old trains and cargo crates?”

A quiet, wavering chuckle crept out through the air, and it took Jack a second to realize it was him. Nervous, fearful chuckles.

“It’s, uh, just a thing, I guess. We all have our quirks, right?”

“Well, don’t worry. I carried both your asses through here, and nothing attacked us.”

Sándor, bless his nightmare soul, said nothing, and gave no expression. With neutral eyes, he looked over the overturned train carts, the dozens of train tracks, many on giant turntables, and many of them with a cart or two. None of the trains had the oldschool steam engine look or anything like that. Instead, each train was obviously meant for a subway, with lots of windows, a back door, a front door for a driver, and colorful paint jobs.

The paint was timeworn and tattered. The metal rusted, bent, and glass windows shattered or stained near black with soot and dirt. Instead of graffiti, he could see aged splatters of red; given his luck, they were probably old blood splatters. They weren’t in a tunnel anymore, and if there was a ceiling to the Underworld cave they were in, he couldn’t see it. Old lampposts stood, a few of them flickering with light from old, dying light bulbs. Plenty of power cables connected various tall, wooden posts, some swaying slightly with the gentle, cold breeze. Creeaak. Creeeak.

They walked forward, and every nerve in Jack’s body lit up to eleven as they stepped past various wooden gates, covered with chain-link fence, lined with tattered metal bars, and crowned with barbed wire. Several cargo crates, some of them on their side, sat in their path, and they had to weave around them. All of it was rusted to brown, and the brown was half faded to gray in the relentless fog of the ghost realm. The concrete floor of the tunnel was gone, and now they were walking on dirt and rock.

Subtle flickers of green light moved along one of the windows of a distant cart, before disappearing, and once again the train graveyard drowned in the ugly darkness of the Underworld, with only the weak, flickering lights of the lamp posts to fight against it. The lights were failing, doing very little against the endless dark gray fog. How the fuck were the lamps working at all? Ghost electricity?

He looked back at the tunnel they'd come from. From this angle, it looked like a descent into a maw of death, a hole in the ground at the bottom of the Earth. It looked inviting, compared going through a big train graveyard, with its sad history, obvious ghost presence, and oh, ten gazillion vantage points.

“Ok, uh ... pretty sure if I wasn't a vampire, I'd be dead from a stopped heart,” he said, rubbing his arms.

Rolling her eyes, Clara gestured ahead with her free arm, the other still holding Sándor. “Seriously, Jack, you have a ghost for a sister, and you're super strong because of the curse. You—”

“Fine! Fine.”

“Really, a phobia of trains?”

“It's not a phobia! And, it's not the trains themselves. Just, a creepy scene from something I once saw, when I was really young, left an impression, you know?” He gestured around him, sighed, and stepped ahead. “Fine, just tell me where to go.”

“Past that greenish train, take a left.”

After a few more shudders, he followed her directions, and withdrew his silver knife. Clara stopped when she spotted it, and waited for a few seconds before following again, now ten feet behind him. He didn't blame her. If she'd been ahead, waving a torch, he'd have steered clear.

The train graveyard was deadly quiet, and as the three of them moved, his ears adjusted to the sounds of his companions; he could hear their hearts beat. He snapped his head to the side as another subtle green glow drifted by in a distant window, but sighed shaky relief as it moved on. There was a warehouse, another old school thing, huge, with thin walls of wavy metal. It was all rusted, with some holes torn into the corners of the metal sheets, showing darkness inside.

“Not that way,” Clara whispered.

“Thank god.” He looked away from the warehouse and continued along the path Clara pointed out.

He really didn't need to be so afraid. It was just trains. Sure, he was a vampire now, an undead creature. Sure, they were in some sort of underworld, or maybe the Underworld itself, with ghosts and shit, but that was just another realm to check off his bucket list. Sure, he was now imbued with the power of some sort of ancient Strix curse, which amplified his Kindred abilities to ancient elder level. Sure, he'd been through some pretty insane shit the past few years, shit that would give many people PTSD.

But there was something about a childhood fear coming to life in front of his eyes that managed to bypass all that growth, and remind him there was a very human chunk of him in his guts, young and scared.

He shook his head, hard, scratched his scalp several dozen times, and looked for the switch in his brain. It was there, buried under the rising tingles of fear, and sparks of panic, he just had to find it. Taking a deep breath was useless, but he did it anyway. Emotions, fear included, were useful tools to inform you about a situation. But the moment they started to control you, they were a liability. Useful in a pinch, when reflexes were needed. Useless when it came to planning, and higher thinking.

He found the switch, lost in a sea of strange childhood memories, flipped it, and pressed on. Ignore the memories. They were childhood nightmares, exaggerated and meaningless. Focus on what's ahead.

Clara chuckled as she watched him, and after a while, spoke up. “You looked like you were meditating.”

“Just calming myself down.”

“You do look calmer.”

“Thanks.”

“Uratha, we never do that,” she whispered. “If we’re angry, we ride the anger. If we’re afraid, we ride it, use it, turn the adrenaline into heightened reflexes, you know?”

Nodding, he peeked around the corner of a cargo crate, found nothing but more dirt, metal, and a path littered by broken metal bars. At Clara’s word, he went down it, scanning left and right with each step.

“Gangrels do that, just, with the Beast instead of adrenaline.”

“Ah,” she said. “That makes sense. Every Gangrel we’ve ever dealt with has acted like that, like they had adrenaline pumping through them.”

“You two talk too much,” Sándor whispered, then groaned and rubbed his wound with his good hand.

Clara chuckled, but she did pipe down. They’d been whispering, but even that wasn’t a good idea. None of them were stealth experts, and while Jack didn’t think being stealthy would help very much — any ghost within half a mile probably knew exactly where they were — it did make sense to minimize their chances of an encounter.

He looked back at Clara, and mouthed very slowly: how much further?

She mouthed: five minutes. Ok, five minutes to get out of the train graveyard. No problem. He nodded, and—

And threw himself back as the cargo crate they'd passed swung open. In the dead silence, the sound of screeching metal, and then the bang of the metal door colliding with its own body, was deafening, an explosion of sound that had Jack's ears ringing. He turned around to face it, but as he did, a glowing green light flooded the fog now behind him. He turned again, only to hear the grunt of Sándor as the man fell. Clara yelled a battle cry, and before Jack could say anything, she began to transform.

But he didn't have time to watch. In front of him was a ghost, and it wasn't Sabrina. A man looking like he walked out of a Great Depression movie came at him, wearing trousers, a tattered and worn shirt underneath with patches on it, and half of his face looked collapsed. Mist poured out from around his knees, but Jack could barely see the bent and dirty work boots. Easy to tell how this guy died: something fell on him and crushed his head. Safety regulations weren't exactly a big deal back then.

The man had a sledgehammer in his hand. Like the ghost, it was partly see-through, gray, and lit by the green that glowed from within the ghost. That confirmed it then, the ghosts didn't have to glow green if they didn't want to. Must have been a thing they chose to do, because they were underground? Or Underworld, or whatever.

Without thinking, Jack raised his arm, and infused vitae into it. The sledgehammer hit him, and it actually hit him. No thunk from metal hitting bone, but something closer to a splat or squashing sound. But it still hurt like hell, stronger than any kine could have done, and Jack fell back onto his ass as he glanced to his arm. Still in one piece, but from the sensation, he knew that it would have broken his arm a year ago.

The ghost, gargling and mumbling, swung at him again, and Jack rolled in, using his small size to get under the swing, and then behind the tall, heavy ghost. He swung his knife as he went past, and smiled as he felt the blade hit something. He smiled more when he heard the ghost roar in fury and pain. Ok, he could fight back!

He turned around and grinned at the man, but his grin faded quickly. There was a chunk of ghost missing where the blade had hit, but the chunk filled in with an ooze-like fog that rippled as the gap healed.

That, was not dissimilar to how Black Blood's ooze behaved.

Now that he was standing on the other side of the ghost, he caught a glimpse of Clara. Already transformed, the werewolf threw herself at another ghost, a man similar to the one Jack was dealing with. She wasn't as fast as she'd been before, and he winced as she had a hard time dodging the oncoming hammer. Unlike him, she'd been up for at least twenty-four hours, and unlike him, she needed food and water.

At least they were ignoring Sándor. Probably cause the man held still where he sat against a cargo crate.

"Back off!" Jack said. "We're just passing through."

The ghost grumbled some more, and did exactly that. He backed off, and faded away, becoming the mist and fog, disappearing into it the same way Mary did.

Before Jack could run to join Clara, the ghost reappeared, underneath his feet. A hand snapped up from the dirt and mist, wrapped his ankle, and Jack fell onto his hands. But, lesson learned from his previous fights, he kept his grip on the knife, and slashed behind him with a half spin. Knife met ghostly flesh on the asshole's shoulder, and again the ghost roared in frustration before he melted away into the mist.

Another scream of pain. Jack looked behind him in time to see Clara get her claws on her attacker, and split the man in half. Literally, in half. Her claws had a lot more grip on ghostly flesh than his knife did, and he stared in awe at the strange sight. Ghost ... goo, went everywhere. It split apart, showed the literal innards of the ghost, the intestines and other organs, before they turned into goop as they splashed around, spreading the mist aside. A moment later, they faded into more of the gray fog that surrounded them.

“The fuck are they attacking us for?” he said.

Clara shrugged, backed up, and crouched down by Sándor, one clawed hand to the floor, one hand ready to slash out at whatever came next. In the fog, it was easy to think she was just a big, walking wolf. Next to Sándor though, the proximity made it obvious just how big she was compared to him. It was nothing compared to the size difference of Sándor when he was transformed, but still.

“Sabrina said ghosts angry,” Clara barked. “Angry at the living.” Jack struggled to keep from chuckling at her broken English.

“They can’t make an exception for me? Hello, vampire!” A smile forced its way onto his lips. The human part of him may have been oddly scared of creepy old train yards, but that part was shut away, mostly. Now, he was running on a combat high, and the Beast was getting to play. These ghosts couldn’t do shit to him.

“That ghost,” Sándor said, gesturing to the place where Clara had ripped one in half. “Is it destroyed?”

The werewolf shrugged. “Maybe.”

Jack threw up his arms. “Maybe? Are you shitting me?”

“Ghost. Not spirit. Different rules.”

“Fuck me, wish I had some holy water, or a fucking cross.”

Clara chuckled, but stopped short as more glowing green lights stepped out from around cargo crates. A lot of them.

An image of the past formed in Jack's mind. There were nasty injuries on these guys, all men, and all with huge dents in their flesh. Something had happened to these guys, and considering the clothing they were wearing, it happened to them all in the same vocation. Maybe they were miners, or chemical workers for the train company or something, Jack didn't know, but as a seventh, and eighth, and ninth man emerged from the fog, each turning on their green glows as they grew closer, Jack couldn't help but think of how many men died in industrial accidents back then. A hundred years ago, those kinds of accidents were common; so was screwing over the worker so they had to work all day, six days a week, just to put bread on the table.

Those were the kinds of environments and circumstances that led to mass deaths, revolts, violent strikes, and murder. A hundred years ago or more, did Dolareido have a place like that? Well, Dolareido had a lot of tunnels underneath it, most abandoned, and miles and miles of railway. Something happened in the city's past, something that got a bunch of these workers killed, a death that left them royally pissed, so angry that they didn't pass on to the afterlife.

One of the closer ghosts ran at them, a man without a jaw and a chunk of his shoulder missing, or maybe it was crunched into his chest like a beer can. A stampede followed, and the ghost men roared as they fell upon them.

Or they tried. Maybe they didn't get it. Maybe they didn't care. How often did these ghosts come across anyone alive, to be able to consider that maybe Jack, Sándor, and the big wolf walking on two legs, weren't entirely human? Did they even have the mental capacity to understand anything more than three people had trespassed on their train yard? What sick, tragic tale led these men to become the mindless husks of ephemera and anger that they were?

“And it’s go, boys, go,” he mumbled, “they’ll time your every breath. And every day you’re in this place, you’re two days nearer death. But you go...”

Six of the ghosts ran at the werewolf, but instead of sitting around and waiting for them to come to her, Clara pounced at them, catching them off guard. She put a lot of strength into the pounce, and the mist swirled around in her wake as she bowled over the men. Some dropped their hammers, and the heavy things fell with a thud before dispersing. Others recovered quick and ran at her, full body, each intending to swing into her with all their weight and the full length of their hammers.

Jack didn’t get to see if they were successful. He heard roars, and he heard the strange sound of claws on ghost flesh, but the three other ghosts were on him a second later. As hammers swung for him, he managed a quick glance at Sándor. The man was down and out of the way, and the ghosts’ attention was firmly on him and Clara. Good, sorta.

Jack reached out with his mind as he scanned the ghosts’ eyes, but their empty eye sockets gave him nothing, nothing for his Dominate to latch onto. And with no animal of flesh for a hundred miles in any direction, he couldn’t use Animalism either. But, Ventrue were resilient, and could summon vitae to protect themselves easily. It took a moment, but when it was done, they were damn well impervious to shit like sledgehammers.

He stood his ground, knife in hand, and infused the vitae into his limbs. The curse easily turned a moderate amount of vitae into something grand, something powerful and overwhelming, and he shivered as he felt the mythical energy infuse his skin. Some of it, he channeled into speed, and some he channeled into strength, but neither were his natural talent. Resilience, on the other hand, came naturally, and with the curse to increase everything he did to absurd levels, the dark blood coursing through his limbs felt like steel.

He raised his arm, and blocked the oncoming hammer of the leading ghost. Thunk. The ghost material, manifested so the ghost could get physical, collided and bounced off his arm. The impact forced Jack's arm down, but pain was minimal, and his flesh didn't dent. The other two ghosts came up around the leader, and each took a swing at him, horizontal and aimed for his chest. They cracked against his ribs, and he slammed back against the cargo crate behind him. No more pain than a mild slap, and no damage, no wounds, nothing. Bit disorienting getting tossed like that, though.

"Well, a process man am I, and I'm telling you no lie." Quiet words slipped out of his mouth without him telling them to, all a whisper. "I work and breathe among the fumes that trail across the sky." He liked the song, the covers of the song, and had memorized the lyrics long ago. And as a vampire, he didn't need to breathe. He could sing all he fucking wanted. He kept it quiet, mumbles and nothing more, but, sing he did. "There's thunder all around me"—he swung his knife for the man on his right, and got him in the throat—"and there's poison in the air." As he stepped forward, he drew his pistol, and shot the ghost on the left in the forehead. They went down, heavy and limp, but from the reaction, he could tell they weren't hurt bad. "There's a lousy smell that smacks of hell, and dust all in me hair." Before the leader could react, clearly confused by Jack surviving three direct blows from big sledgehammers, Jack pointed his pistol at him, shot him twice in the gut, and stabbed the ghost in the head when he leaned forward.

The three ghosts melted away, groaning in pain, when two of them should have died nearly instantly. Ok, ghosts didn't die normally. If anything, they weren't dying at all. Much as he could see them spilling their guts and blood, it was all the same gray that surrounded them already, and it reformed on their wounds like ooze. It was good money that the ghosts could heal damage, probably completely disconnected from where the wound actually was. Head shot? Same as a foot shot, if they were all made of ephemera or whatnot.

And, he could see it on the ghosts when he shot them and stabbed them, that his weapons weren't hitting as hard as they should have been. Knife to the head, or even the foot, should have got a bigger reaction, but the ghost just hollered in half pain, half anger, and melted away. And—

And came back. Hands reached up from the mist, three pairs, and they clutched at his ankles, and holy fuck, that was solid grip.

“White-livered wrinkler.”

“Greedy guts.”

“Scamp!”

“Yellow belly bastard!”

Jack stared down at the rising faces, and froze. They weren't strong enough to hurt him, not with the curse imbuing him with absurd resilience, but that didn't mean the sight of their agonized faces, seeping up from the dirt and rock around his feet, wasn't terrifying; the switch he'd flipped flipped back with a vengeance. Tears of black lined their faces. Their voices were raspy, dry, cracking like snapping wood, and all he could hear as he listened, was Mary.

Rattling drew his eyes, and he ducked as an enormous piece of sheet metal soared past. More rattling, violent shaking from some metal beams, and he leaned to the side as it flew it at him. It crashed into the cargo crate behind him, fell back down onto him, and knocked him to one knee.

As he got up, a fourth set of hands reached out from the cargo crate through its wall, grabbed Jack around his head, and yanked it against the crate. It was the ghost Jack had beat earlier, and in the last seconds before some fingers covered his eyes, Jack saw the man's knife wound had healed completely, before he disappeared behind the crate with only his hands and wrists sticking through the metal. And then the four men tightened their grip on him, pulling at him, their hands solid but the rest of them incorporeal, so their bodies were hidden inside the ground and crate.

Yeap, this was a problem. The ghosts were manifesting themselves, otherwise he doubted they'd be able to interact with him physically. It allowed them to hit him, and for him to hit them, but they weren't able to do much damage to him, or vice versa. Clara though, maybe she could do something, if she fought spirits on a regular basis.

He managed a peek between some of the ghostly fingers trying — and failing — to crush his skull into the metal. One of them almost got his eye, and he yelled in frustration as he twisted his head to keep it from getting finger stabbed. Clara was fighting off ghosts, but there were more than six now, and while she was easily destroying one, several more were on her. Three of them had ghostly knives, and they jammed them down against her hide, sinking through the thick fur and skin, and earning blood and roars from the beast.

“Clara!” Again, Jack twisted as much as he could. More, he needed more vitae, more strength, pump it through his undead veins until he was a juggernaut. But before he could do anything, Sándor got up, clutching his shoulder, and started to walk toward the werewolf. “Sándor, don't fuck—” The ghost behind Jack got some of his fingers around his mouth, and Jack did the only reasonable thing he could do: opened his mouth, and bit down. Ghost flesh tore apart, and the disgusting ooze flooded Jack's mouth, unnaturally cold. For a second, he was terrified digesting it might do something to him, but the strange stuff faded into mist inside him. It was enough to get him a few more seconds of vocal freedom. “Sándor, sit the fuck down, and stay out of the way!”

Sándor continued to walk toward Clara, ignored by the ghosts. A glance back from the man to Jack showed a look of pain in his eyes Jack didn't understand. Hunched forward, swaying with exhaustion, clearly still fucked up, the man was going to get himself killed.

The ghost behind Jack, the one hidden inside the cargo crate, and pinning his head to it with his arms reaching through the metal, screamed. Not the weak groans of pain Jack managed to stir in the ghosts with his earlier attacks. The sound of someone dying, really dying, a painful and horrible death, erupted from the cargo crate, and filled the whole train yard. The sound had power, a horrific sound that everyone knew instinctively, and it was enough to bring the battle to a halt.

“W-What the...”

The ghosts holding down Jack's feet and legs flew up and away from him, their bodies becoming more translucent as they did. Once they had twenty feet between them and him, they turned, each glaring down at him with their empty eye sockets, fear and rage on their faces.

Jack managed half a step forward, and then froze. Slowly, a knife came out through the cargo metal behind him and into view on his right. So damn slow, it didn't trigger a defensive reflex, but he did turn to look at it. No, not a knife, a letter opener. A sharpened letter opener.

He froze over again as ice filled his guts, like when that ghost's fingers had fallen apart in his mouth, except a million times worse. His eyes went wide, and he struggled to turn his neck enough to look ahead again to Clara and Sándor. Both of them stared at him, and at the ghost coming through the cargo crate behind him. The serial killer flowed forward, through him, and as her mouth passed through his head, he heard her chuckle, literally chuckle inside his skull, before it erupted into an outrageous laugh when her lips passed his face.

“Hahaha! Old geezers, you just refuse to move on. Either disperse or go deeper, but there’s nothing left for fossils like you.” Sabrina licked her letter opener, and slowly hovered toward the fleeing ghosts that’d been holding Jack down. But, once she had a few feet on her, her laughter redoubled, and she launched herself up, then arced down toward Clara.

She was fast. The mist swirled, and Sándor only barely managed to duck as Sabrina divebombed past his head, and into Clara. Into, and through her. But as she passed through the werewolf, earning a howling yelp of surprise from the giant beast, she held out her ghostly knife, and got to cutting. One of the men screamed, and the horrific sound of agony and death gushed out over the train yard until it deafened Jack.

The ghost died. It wasn’t like when Jack had shot and stabbed the other ghosts. And it wasn’t even like when Clara had torn ghosts apart, using her weird magic claws to do serious damage. Whatever it was Sabrina was doing, was a thousand times worse than Jack or Clara could do to these ghosts, and all she had was a letter opener. A sharp, ghostly letter opener.

One of the men on Clara’s back stopped stabbing, and threw himself at Sabrina, but she swam forward and got him in the guts, shoulder against his chest, both hands around her weapon so the blade went directly into the man’s stomach. Collision between the ghosts was far meatier than it had been with Jack. Whatever it was that made the ghosts fluctuate between corporeal and incorporeal, it didn’t mean shit to other ghosts.

The one stabbed in the gut fell, clutched at their stomach, and writhed, screaming and shrieking like someone had poured molten lead into their belly. After a few seconds, their screams died away, and they melted, collapsing into goo, and dispersing into the mist. And it didn't fade. It didn't take a ghost expert to tell what Jack and Clara had been doing was only hurting the ghosts. What Sabrina was doing was killing them.

The mist was made up of dead ghosts.

Seeing another of their buddies die was apparently enough to break the resolve of the ghosts. They turned, and fled. Some of them disappeared into the ground, and some others darted away, hovering into some of the train carts. One flew up and into the warehouse, and another disappeared into a crate, slamming the heavy metal doors behind him without so much as glancing back. The metal ringed with impact, but as the sound faded, it left only silence.

Chuckling, Sabrina lifted the knife to her mouth, and licked the blade again. "You should have stayed where I put you! It was safe there."

Jack gulped down on his dry throat as he watched the crazy woman hover there. She made no attempt to attack them, and if anything, she looked like she was ready to dance to some rave music; no feet to do that, but still. Her green glow, hidden before when she'd sneak attacked, was in full bloom again, and she chuckled a few times as she tossed the letter opener up and down in her hand. It half rotated with each flip.

"S-Sorry," Jack said. "We couldn't wait. We need to leave before my friends start to suffer."

"Suffer?"

"Food, water, that sorta stuff." He gestured to Clara, who stepped back and stood beside him, still in her werewolf form. She didn't trust Sabrina. Blood oozed from the wounds in her back, and Jack glanced back at them, sighing. They were closing, but he'd seen werewolves take harsher punishment and heal faster. He doubted a wound inflicted by a ghost was as easy to heal from as a normal blade. Plus, she was getting weak, and transforming all the time was probably doing a number on her stamina.

“But vampires don't need to eat,” Sabrina said, nodding. “So you're fine, until your vitae runs out, right?”

“Right, my...” He blinked at the ghost, glanced between the werewolf on his left, and the hunched man on his right. They hadn't noticed it, but, they were both standing and ready to fight, sort of. Now was as good a time as any to risk a confrontation.

“What?” the ghost asked, confused.

“Sabrina ... I never said anything about vitae. Never even said the word.”

Clara stood up straighter, and let out a low rumble, deep in her chest, before lowering herself into a semi crouch, ready to pounce. Sándor took a step back, almost falling as he did, but he caught his balance, and took a couple more, away from Sabrina.

“Oh, damn. I screwed up.” Sabrina shrugged, and hovered around in a small circle. “I was a pretty good actor though, right? You didn't know I knew, right?”

“You're right. We didn't.” He eyed her, blade still in hand. He'd dropped his pistol when the ghosts had caught him, but still, holding onto one weapon during a scuffle was a personal best. “Who are you?” He felt around in the mist behind him with his foot until it found metal, and he slid the pistol over to him, without ever taking his eyes off the woman.

“I was hoping for some more details about Dolareido! But, you dodged any questions I had about vampires. Crafty boy.” Shrugging, she hovered closer to them, and as she did, she waved her right hand at her side, like tossing away a ball. Her weapon disappeared into a puff of mist that got sucked into her gray skin and clothes. It was never really a weapon, but an extension of her, same as those sledgehammers had been for those men.

“I uh, guess I am pretty crafty.” He kept his eyes on the ghost, but doing so kept the memory of her passing through his body, cold and so very not alive, fresh in his mind. It’d felt like being buried alive. “Wanna tell me who you are?” Sabrina, Mrs. Serial Killer, but he didn’t say it. Better to let her say it, and be happier for the reveal.

“Sabrina, like I said. But I suppose if the cat’s out of the bag, I can say more.” She hovered over head, and circled around, looking left and right. “Quid pro quo?”

He couldn’t help but smile. She was smarter than he’d originally thought.

“Alright. You ask first.”

“How is Antoinette? Still the Prince?”

Jack rubbed his buzzed head. “Yes, alive and well.”

She frowned at that. “Your turn.”

“Were you a vampire?”

“No.” Well, strike on that connection. “How do you know the Prince?”

“I was Julias’s childe, and—”

“Julias’s childe?” She tilted her head, and swam toward him, eyes wide. If she’d had a brain in there, he’d have been able to see it.

He took a step back, surprised, but she didn’t tackle him or anything. He grinned subtly once he calmed down. That’d been a hint. “How do you know Julias?”

She frowned more, realizing he copied her question. “I met him at one of the Invictus balls.” Getting somewhere. “If you’re Julias’s childe, then, how is Viktor?”

He winced as he looked down. The picture was becoming more and more clear as they spoke. A woman this ruthless and crazy, both in life and death, have been to an Invictus ball, not be a vampire, and be concerned with Viktor? Only one possibility.

“Viktor’s dead. I ... I’m sorry.”

The sad, ruined expression on her face said it all. She’d been one of his ghouls, someone bound by the Vinculum, and also infused with their master’s vitae.

“He’s ... dead?” She grabbed her head and looked down, spinning in place. “Master’s dead?”

He winced again. “Yes. You were his ghoul?”

“Yes!” She threw her hands at him, and he stepped back, half expecting them to either detach from her body and come at him, or for her to pounce him and start shredding. They didn’t, and she didn’t. “Died in a stupid turf war with the Carthians.”

“The news said you died when some cops shot you.”

She slowly let go of her head, and stared at him, eyes wide, empty sockets cutting straight through his soul. “So you knew about that?”

He forced himself to keep eye contact, and nodded. “Yes ... Sabrina Douville.”

Saying her full name managed to make her smile, but it vanished quick in her despair.

“Viktor set it up so I could fake my death. It’d take more than a few gunshots to the guts to kill a ghoul. I survived, and worked with my master for five glorious years.” She sobbed, a raspy, ghostly sound that almost chilled his insides as much as touching her did. “Who killed the master?”

The quid quo pro game had fallen apart, but he didn’t mind.

“Tony did,” he said. She hissed, and Jack put up his hands. “He died killing Viktor, him and Rebecca. He got them.”

After a heavy, long sigh, she nodded, and hovered a little closer. “So, you’re the master’s grandchilde?”

“Yes, I am.”

“And Julias?”

“Dead, hunters. Now they’re dead, too.”

The ghost nodded, satisfied, but the expression on her face kept changing rapidly, as did the noises she made. One moment she smiled, happy with his words, the next she wailed, and the whole Underworld echoed with the shrieking sound.

“Sabrina,” he said. “I don’t know if you were waiting for Viktor, but he died well over two years ago. If he’s not here, then he didn’t do the ghost thing.”

She sniffled, twitched her head around several times, before settling and looking at the ground, defeated. “You’re right.”

“I don’t suppose you could help us get back to the tear we came through in?”

After a few seconds of quiet whines and whimpers, she raised her head, and her gaze softened. Still fucking gross as all hell, a couple of empty eye sockets looking at him, but the expression did a lot to ease his worries.

“I ... I was going to keep you around, for a little while. I wanted to learn more about Dolareido, and about my master. But, I forgot about the ... the need for people to eat.” Laughing, a little maniacally and randomly, she shrugged. “And, if you’re Viktor’s grandchilde, then I should ... I should help you.” And back to morose and mourning, wails included.

“Ok, uh ... thank you, Sabrina. Did you want anything in return?”

Her eyes opened like a kid on Christmas. “Maybe if someone could visit, once in a while? It gets lonely down here, and getting back to the surface is hard.”

He almost asked why she couldn’t just come with them. Stupid reflex he hadn’t quite suppressed yet, the desire to ask questions honestly. If the serial killer ghost was trapped in the Great Below, or under the impression that she was, all the better. If ghosts needed something, like time or energy or emotions, to punch through to the surface, he was damn happy that he couldn’t manually escort her out of the Underworld.

“I’ll see what I can do.”

“Yay!” Back to happy in an instant, she hovered past him and started down a path.

After a low growl, Clara returned to her human form. Jack watched her, and despite her attempts to hide it, he noticed her stagger and sway. She was exhausted, but still, she grabbed Sándor's good arm, hooked it over her shoulder, and started walking.

Rolling his eyes, he came over to them, pushed Clara out from under Sándor's arm, and got under it instead. He was shorter than either of them, but still tall enough to at least give the man support.

Clara grunted, but gave in when she almost fell over. "Alright, fine." Jack smirked at her, and the three of them started walking. "Jack, were you ... singing?"

"Ah, shit, yeah. Seeing those worker dudes really got me remembering a song I've always liked."

Sándor coughed, shaking his head. "An old song."

"Yeah. And, uh, singing can help me stay calm."

"Still scared of trains?" Clara said, laughing quietly, smiling.

"Not scared of trains! Scared of train graveyards, ok? Huge difference. Like, I'm sure there are plenty of adults nowadays, that would shit their pants if they were suddenly in an elephant graveyard, and you can thank Disney for that."

Sándor laughed, a sound Jack bet the man rarely made, but he regretted it a second later, wincing and groaning in pain. "Keep an eye open for anything that would look similar to my castle, the haunted village, or the haunted hospital. The more similar they are, the easier it will be for me to create a pathway home."

"Don't suppose you can cut across the Gauntlet from here and just walk us out of here, Clara?"

She shook her head. "I thought about that, but I don't have a loci. So unless we find an item of spiritual power, I can't Reach across the Gauntlet. An Irakka could go, but—"

The three of them froze as the sound of metal bashing against metal resonated. Sabrina rejoined them quickly, ghost knife in her hand in an instant, and they all looked up as one of the cargo crates went sailing overhead, and then another. When they landed, the sound shook the whole fucking Underworld. A moment later, one of the train carts, many tons of metal, went sliding on its side past them, sparks showering the area. It crashed into another, derailing it, and the sheer mass caused the first one to continue sliding, the friction of metal and ground not enough to bring it to a stop yet.

Weird click and rasp sounds announced who it was. It was the fucking azlu monster, the Host.

“Run, run! I can’t fight that,” Sabrina said. As she did, the green glow of her body vanished, and she lowered herself closer to the ground. “It’s weird, and it hurts.”

Weird, and hurts. Yeah, not horrific and gigantic and insanely strong and capable of flipping cars and shoving train carriages or anything. Nope, just weird, and hurts.

Clara took a step toward the noise, but Jack reached out, grabbed her shirt with his free hand, and pulled her back. Literally. Her weight collapsed, ass hit the ground, and he dragged her away from the sound.

“It’s going to find us,” Clara said, groaning, and glaring up at him over her shoulder. “We have to go on the offensive. We—”

Jack yanked up on her shirt hard enough to get her up on her feet, nudged himself under her closer arm, and started running. Sure, he was a short guy, and had a small frame. In a biological sense, even the great shape he’d gotten himself into wouldn’t have been enough to carry two people. But a young vampire, even a Ventrue, could carry a person without trouble. And for him, after a moment to pump vitae through his system, carrying the two of them was easy.

Except, two problems. The more he fought and did things, the more he drained his vitae, and the hungrier he got. And, running with two people, two taller people, draped over his shoulders, just wasn't working. Legs, arms, it all got in the way, and the best he could manage was jogging leaps.

Sabrina stayed beside him, hovering, and when he weaved around some metal fences and a couple train carts, she didn't dodge around them, she went through them. The only reason she stayed with him was because she felt like she had to help him, since he was her master's grandchilde, and he wasn't about to do anything to throw that help away. Maybe she could serve as a distraction?

"Sabrina, slow it down! Don't get hurt, but distract it for a second while we try and hide."

The ghost woman nodded, and faded through layers of metal as she darted off in the direction of the sound. Might as well have been a dinosaur rampaging through a theme park with its power down.

"Jack, just—"

"Shut up." After everything that happened last month, he was not going to put up with some stupid self-sacrificing shit now.

He weaved through the dense maze of metal, until he found a train cart. Surrounded on all sides by cargo crates, some apparently full of bricks, and with some huge train carts sitting on their sides around it, it wouldn't be easy for anyone bigger than a person to get to it. It wouldn't stop a giant spider monster, but it would slow it down.

He dragged his companions through the narrow pathways, forced open the door of the train, and pushed Sándor in, and then Clara. They got the hint quick, and both started to crawl. Without electricity, its insides were dark as fuck, and train carriages weren't small, even if the azlu was strong enough to push them. They were massive, meant to hold fuckloads of cargo, or in this case, people. Rows and rows of chairs meant the two of them had plenty of places to hide, and despite how massive the spider monster was, it wouldn't have an easy time getting at anyone hiding inside.

“Stay here,” he said.

“Jack, you can't—”

“Clara, seriously, now's not the time, ok? Just shut up, hide, and take the opportunity to get out of here when you can.”

“Sacrificing yourself?”

“What? Fuck no. I'm no werewolf, I'm a fucking vampire. I want you and Sándor to find help, then come rescue my ass.”

She fought off a smile until she managed to force a frown at him over her shoulder. “Assuming you're still alive.”

“I won't let it kill me. The curse won't let it kill me. But I might end up stuck here, and that'll kill you and Sándor. Worst that happens to me, I find a hole in the ground, and go into a deep torpor. Ok? See, no self-destructive reflex here, just a smart plan.” He nodded, and before she could protest, he forced the folding door closed.

And he ran. A shriek from Sabrina, and an alien, beastly shriek from the spider, both came from the direction they'd come from. His plan was to pull the spider away from Clara and Sándor by running perpendicular to its path to them, get its attention, and then somehow lose the spider using his small size.

Or let me out to play. I could take it in a fight.

Can you? This thing is as big as Sándor's Horror, is just as strong, and unlike the gargoyle, it has scythes for arms and eight very long, sharp legs.

We spoke with it. It's afraid of us.

Except we can't mind meld with it. So you're stuck using this body, and—

Stop thinking in terms of terms of flesh, Jack. You think of vitae like it's energy, like gasoline or electricity, running through an undead body of bone and sinew. Vitae is the essence of life, you stupid asswipe. And our body is just a conduit for it. The stronger your Beast grows, the less vitae it needs to unleash its true abilities of blood and soul. It—

I get it, I get it, jackass. And you think you can handle this thing in a fight?

Yeap. You could too, if you could handle yourself better. But me? Easily.

This thing fought off half a pack of werewolves on its own.

Pussies.

Jack rolled his eyes as he ran through the train yard. Ugh, fucking train yards, dead train yards, with rust and empty carriages and steel beams and cargo crate doors half open and knocked over fences and even the god damn warehouse. At least the curse didn't care to ask about the strange childhood fear.

We're not on a kill mission, curse. We just need to scare this thing off, and then we get Sabrina to take us in the direction of the tear.

Fine.

---

He smiled, looked down at his hands, and smiled some more. It felt good to be in control. It felt really good.

Stop wasting time. Summon your power, and scare the creature off.

Yeah, sure. And after that, we get back to Dolareido, and what, Elaine kills me?

What?

You heard me. I'm always listening, you know that. You think I'm just going to let you kill me?

You're not even alive. The fuck do you care if I remove you.

I care. I damn well fucking care. I'm a part of this vessel, and I refuse to be removed like a cancerous limb.

You can't seriously expect me to feel sorry for you, or hell, even believe you.

Fuck you. You'd be dead without me. You're weak. I'm not.

And then he stopped listening. The old Jack didn't know control his mind and focus his thoughts. New Jack did. New Jack had the focus of a predator. New Jack was so much better than Old Jack.

But Old Jack was still pretty damn smart. Even with the curse, Jack was still a Ventrue, without the insane strength of the Daeva and Nosferatu, without the stealth of the Mekhet and Nosferatu, and without the speed of Daeva or Mekhet. But Ventrue, and those stupid Gangrels, could become fucking invincible, and still have enough strength and speed to get the job done. And he could do more; it's how he kicked Sándor's Horror's ass, after all. Old Jack didn't know how to juggle his abilities, to stack and manage his Disciplines, to invoke the powers of the ancient blood with but a drop of essence. New Jack did.

A cargo crate went flying overhead, and another train cart slammed into a metal fence. It was chaos, sparks and loud booms and absurd levels of destruction. It was the sort of scene that made Jack wish he was a Gangrel sometimes, so he could transform his shell and unleash destruction with a form as crazy as the azlu spider monster had. A monster-on-monster fight would be wicked fun. Ah well, he could get things done with his fists and feet just fine; blade too, if it came to that.

He jumped up onto a train carriage, easily a twelve-foot jump he managed without issue, and he landed with a grin on his face as he spotted the spider monster in the distance. Sabrina hovered overhead, circling, knife in hand and an angry expression on her face. Whatever the spider had done to her had hurt, because the right side of her body was torn up and oozing. The azlu wasn't a biological entity, not completely, and its claws probably hurt things of ephemera just like Clara's did. And if those scythe arms nailed him, well, Old Jack would have been split in half like a bitch.

New Jack would laugh, and walk it off.

Chapter 124

~~Eric~~

Jack, Clara, and Sándor, had taken a very strange route. First, they'd left the mansion, and headed into North Side. Then their trail ended inside an old, abandoned hotel. Not a hotel, but some sort of motel? Hard to tell. According to Jessy, the city went through some gold rushes and job rushes during development at the beginning of the twentieth century, and a lot of people moved to the city for seasonal work, building the subway and whatnot. So some companies set up temporary housing.

Inside the building, it was obviously very old, and Eric recognized the look of its hallways and floor. It wasn't far removed from the hallways in Sándor's castle, especially with the lights off. Plus, it was abandoned, unkempt, dirty, and a bit damp, again, all like the hallways of his castle. If Begotten needed to enter their lairs from places that looked like their lairs, this would probably do.

Fiona and Athalia looked at each other, and then to the rest of them.

"Sándor opened a pathway here, like you've probably put together already," Athalia said. "I can see where this path opened up, and can follow it. But, we'll be breaking into his lair."

"That's bad?" Jessy said.

Athalia nodded. "Imagine someone breaking into your sleeping den, vampire. Whether you were asleep in it or not, it would piss you off, wouldn't it? And I—"

"We don't have a choice," Damien said. "If Jack and Clara have not contacted their respective groups, then something's wrong. And after everything that's happened, I'm not taking chances."

"So, you vampires take full responsibility?"

"Yeap," Jessy said with a small hand wave. "Now pop her open."

From there, the group of them entered Sándor's lair. Damien, Fiona, Noah, and Athalia had seen it, and Eric and Jessy too, but for Caleb, it was brand new. Stepping out of darkness and into a castle's hallway, lit only by strange gargoyle braziers, was enough to shock anyone, even veteran Uratha who'd done some insane shit in their lives.

Fiona followed them into the hall, and Caleb whistled as he looked her up and down. She was scary, sure, with giant black horns growing out of her bald head, along with horns growing out and curling back where her eyes should have been. But the horns on her head looked kinda beautiful, in a fancy crown kinda way, and the horns coming out of her eyes almost looked like a black veil. Her spider legs that stuck out from her back were smooth, enormous, and sharp. And, the spidersilk dress she wore was partly see-through, and showed off a huge rack and inhumanly tiny waist.

She was some dude's ultimate monster girl kink. But, he was hardly one to judge. He was dating a girl with a monster guy kink.

If Fiona and him had actually tried a relationship, would monster guy have fucked monster girl? Strange thought. Stranger, because even thinking about him and Fiona didn't make sense in his brain. He was with Jessy now, and she fit him like a glove. Fiona did not.

Before Damien had a chance to say anything to the staring werewolf, Caleb jumped back at the sight of Athalia. Athalia was fucking freaky as shit, and Eric stepped back as well. He knew what she looked like when transformed, but nothing could prepare him for the sight of her obsidian skeleton body, its skeleton wings, its size, or the fact it was missing everything below the spine.

“Holy shit,” Caleb whispered.

Fiona, or Vrall or whatever, chuckled, and Athalia hissed, and moved on.

They picked up the trail, and were soon standing on a narrow cliff path, a thousand miles up, castle behind them perched precariously on the cliff, and a village down the path onto the mountain. He didn't need to ask, it was obvious. Haunted. The village was haunted.

As they walked past the old and decrepit houses, obviously built hundreds of years ago, eyes watched them from the windows. There wasn't any light in the houses, and it was nighttime, but the eyes were still visible. Glowing, but not really glowing, they were simply visible, and disturbing.

“If Sándor had wanted to,” Athalia said, “he could have his Horror attack us, or his lair.”

“He's in control of his Horror, while not here?” Jessy said.

“Not true control,” Vrall said, Scott accent completely gone, and replaced with something Eric guessed came from South America. “But, guide, yes.”

Athalia hissed at the spider woman. “Enough sharing of secrets. They only need to know that the Sándor has told his lair to leave us be, preemptively at that.”

“Sounds like an olive branch, sorta,” Caleb said.

From there, they entered the haunted forest, found a giant creepy tree, went into it, and entered another chamber of Sándor's lair. A haunted hospital. He was surprised, but he shouldn't have been. They were going through the chambers of a nightmare monster's lair. They were going through nightmares so strong they left a permanent imprint on ... wherever it was dream monsters lived. Of course they'd run into a lot of haunted shit. Fake haunted, since it was nightmare stuff, not real ghosts, but since nightmares were apparently real, they didn't seem so fake.

Thankfully there was a scent trail to follow, and they followed it along the hospital hall, until it stopped. Not the hall, the trail, it just stopped. They didn't go through any door, but the hallway continued on, with no scent trail.

"Here," Fiona said. "It's ... it's another one of the tears."

Tears? Jessy and Eric looked at each other, shrugged, and looked to everyone else. Besides the two of them, everyone else looked very anxious about the mention of tears.

The skeleton creature gestured to the empty space. "If the trail ends here, then they went through the tear and into whatever realm it cut into."

"Can you tell?" Damien asked.

"Not until I open it and see where it goes. It's ... covered, in some kind of ... webbing?" She hissed louder, alien rasp grating on Eric's brain.

Noah and Caleb both took a step back, and rumbled in their throats. For the life of him, Eric could not resist the reflex to do the same, and not because of Athalia. Something instinctual told him to be fucking wary of webbing in this context.

"Do it," Noah said.

The monster nodded her giant skull, set her weight onto one huge hand of claws, pointed the other at the hallway, and ripped it to the side. Ripped, because despite it being nothing but open air, something gave her claws resistance. Snap, snap, a vibration struck Eric's insides, inaudible, without touch, but it was there, echoing in his mind. It was like someone snapping guitar strings; stronger, like steel strings used on big bridges.

She swiped again, and again, and all three werewolves cringed as they felt whatever was happening. Fiona noticed, but didn't seem disturbed. The vampires seemed completely unaware. It did look like Athalia was slashing at the air and nothing but, and the snapping web must have not existed in a way the vampires could sense it. They were creatures of blood, he supposed. This webbing shit was not.

The vampires stepped back when the air split apart, and a pathway revealed itself, lined in gold and marked with dots of white. Along its edges, white lightning streaked across, some of it moving like a snake through an endless ether of oblivion.

"The Gauntlet," Noah said. "But I ... I don't recognize the smell from the other side."

After a moment's silence, Caleb let out a quiet snarl and stepped closer to the hole floating in the air. "I hear something. Clicking sounds..."

While Noah and Caleb used their werewolf senses, spirit or otherwise, Eric came in closer, stood between them, and stared through the hole into the distance. It was dark in there, with some sort of gray fog blocking their vision, but through it, a green glow moved. Tiny, almost invisible, but something green drifted along, far in the distance. And another, and another. Almost like green fireflies, the strange green lights moved with uniform motion. If they'd been red, he'd have imagined an army of history, holding torches and marching through a swampland or something, with the fog to hide their approach.

"We going in?" Jessy said.

Noah nodded. “If the azlu is in there, wherever there is, we need to know. And we need to get Clara.”

“We need to find Jack,” Damien said.

“We need to find Sándor,” Athalia said.

Vrall nodded, crown of horns nodding with her. “Then I’ll go first.” She raised a hand — too few fingers on that hand of claws — before Damien could say anything. She gave him the hand, he took it, and then she walked toward toward the tear, her spider legs carrying her while her human-ish legs dangled an inch above the floor. A thick white rope connected her hand to Damien’s.

The man looked down at his hand, surprised, but he caught on quick, and reached out with his other hand for a door frame.

Everyone froze when Athalia took his hand in her grasp. Her hand was big enough to circle his whole damn body, making the sight of clutching his hand, er, arm, almost comical. Damien stared at her, eyes wide for a moment, obviously ready to defend himself if Athalia attacked; not that he could do much with each hand being pulled in opposite directions by a couple of dream monsters, but still.

Athalia snorted, angry, and with rough claws that had Damien’s eyes wide, the huge monster took the thread from Damien’s hand, and ripped it free. After wrapping it around her enormous right hand, she slammed her free hand into the hallway behind them. Her claws sank into the floor. Everyone nodded as they came to understand. Of course she’d make the better anchor than Damien. And, if shit went to hell, Athalia could yank them out with some serious brute strength.

Fiona chuckled, shrugged an apology to Damien, and crawled through the hole with her spider legs. The sharp points pressed against the air where the gold of the Gauntlet showed itself, and Fiona stepped along them. Noah and Caleb both let out tiny grumbles, and Eric forced a rising smirk off his face. They didn't like the Begotten, and how they had the freedom to go wherever the fuck they wanted, be that Gurihal or the Hisil or whatever the old word was for the Dream world. But in a time like this, they needed them. Forced cooperation.

Honestly, Eric didn't care if they didn't like each other. He just wanted to chill in Dolareido, hang with his girlfriend, and defend his territory. If he had to piss a circle around the damn city so people could calm down, he'd do it.

Fiona disappeared through the circle for only a moment, and then appeared again a moment later. "The Gauntlet is very thin here. Those spiders have been repairing it. Come, it is a long way down."

"Spiders?" Caleb said, coming over to the strange hole in the air. "Multiple?"

"Yes. Is that strange?"

"Very. Hosts devour each other, become strong, take over a human mind, and mutate into giant killing machines. Working together is pretty damn strange. Could be just a first step, before a strong one starts to eat the others?" he asked, looking over his shoulder to Noah.

"Science later, ya fucking nerds. Let's go find our people now." Jessy pushed past the wolves, grabbed onto the thick rope, and climbed through the tear.

Noah and Caleb glanced back at him, and he smiled and shrugged. No point in trying to change Jessy. Better to roll with her.

"Can your thread handle the weight?" Noah said.

“This many people? Only if Athalia does not need to suddenly pull us to safety.”

“She might,” Damien said. “Let’s do two groups. Fiona, Jessy and Noah go first. Then Eric, Caleb, and me.”

“And Athalia?” Noah said.

“Athalia can fly.”

After a few minutes, the thread wiggled like a whip a few times, and Athalia gestured for the rest of them. The thread didn’t inspire confidence, but silk was a damn strong material for its weight. Eric took it, looked up at the black skeleton monster holding the end, and sighed. If it took a few minutes for the others to reach the bottom, then a fall would kill them, or at least kill Eric and Caleb. All Athalia had to do was let go, and two werewolves would probably die. Scary thought.

Crawling through the hole felt strange. They weren’t actually going through Gauntlet the way Uratha typically did, by literally passing through it. This was more like one of those glass underwater tunnels in large aquarium parks; they were bypassing the water, not swimming through it. He was surrounded by air, not the strange material of the Gauntlet, and when he reached out to his sides, he touched the strange, undefinable essence of the barrier that separated humans from spirits.

How the fuck did something actually tear up the fucking Gauntlet? And why wasn’t anyone surprised? Anyone except him and Jessy.

The silk thread took him out into a grand abyss, and he sucked in a hard breath as he realized he couldn’t see the ground. Fog, so much fog. He lowered himself along the sticky thread as fast as he reasonably could, but there was no getting around that he was a pile of meat high enough in the air that a fall would break a lot of limbs, and potentially kill him; that was assuming Fiona was correct about the distance to the bottom, too.

As he went down, he stared out into the fog, and shivered as the thousands of green glowing dots moved along, slow, and creepy as all fuck. Something about them really screamed eerie horror vibes, and he found himself looking down and around for more of the green lights. If there were any underneath him, he would not like that. Very much not like that. But there weren't. It was nothing but a smooth descent through fog, and eventually, onto rock.

Damien, last off the wire, gave it a few hard jerks, and looked around at the strange fog, the smooth, flowing rock base underneath them, the equally smooth, dark rock of the wall beside them, and the distant green, drifting lights. It was a gigantic cavern, the size of a fucking city.

“Spirits?” Damien said, pointing to the drifting green.

The three werewolves all shook their head.

“I don't sense spirits,” Noah said. “I do smell ephemera, but ... not spirits.”

“What else smells like ephemera?” Fiona asked. It was Fiona again, the redhead, the girl he'd dated for like a day, jeans and brown leather jacket, no spider legs or horns anywhere. Which scared him shitless for a second. How the fuck were they going to get back out? But if the dream monsters didn't seem worried, they could probably do something, even when not in their dream world.

Noah shrugged. “Not sure. But we're not in the Hisil.”

He was right. Being in the Hisil was like the difference between being in the air or in water. Every nerve in the body would be telling you and warning you of the familiar, dangerous environment.

Everyone but Fiona jumped away when Athalia landed. Enormous skeleton wings, silhouettes of black shadow, jutted from her very human back, and disappeared seconds later as the woman got up from a foot and knee.

“Can you smell our companions?” she said. Her first steps into a new dimension and all she was concerned with was the mission. In any other circumstance he’d want to take things slow, but the atmosphere around them was oppressive, and cold. He wanted out.

“Yeah,” Caleb said, “and ... lots of blood. This way.”

---

~~Damien~~

It took them several hours to piece together what happened. There’d been a chase and fight with the azlu, and judging from the blood they found, it’d been a fully formed azlu host. Damien could still remember the feel of it stabbing him through his guts, and leaving behind a rather massive hole.

Jack and company had apparently chased the azlu off, and the three of them had come back to the tear. Then, they’d left again, probably after realizing they couldn’t get out. Fiona and Athalia insisted that was strange, since Sándor was with them; he could fly, tear open a hole through the tear if it was repaired, or make a new pathway. But the Uratha insisted he’d lost a lot of blood, from the smell of it.

Damien and the crew followed the trail, through the gloom and fog of their new environment, and as the uncomfortable silence of the strange place settled upon them, they all grew quiet to match. The werewolves became wolves, as did Jessy, and the sounds of their feet disappeared. Fiona and Athalia, both monsters of darkness, found it easy enough to be quiet, and Damien risked a peek at them with Auspex to see what they were doing. The two monsters were pulling something from within, something his eyes didn't recognize, that coated them in invisible blackness. A Horror's version of the vampire's Cloak of Night, he supposed.

Damien did his best to wrap them in his Cloak, but the environment did not seem to accept his efforts well. It took more vitae than usual to encompass them, as if the fog around them was a heavy blanket they had to drag with them. But, with some concentration, he was confident his efforts to mask at least their most obvious sounds worked, along with helping them blend into the fog a bit better.

After a couple hours of careful but expedient prowling through the fog, with the three werewolves in front leading them, noses to the ground, they stopped. Four wolves sat up, pointed their ears forward, and listened. Message understood: noises up ahead. They resumed their prowling, slower, quieter, and as they pushed ahead, the sound of banging metal became clear.

Damien squinted as the fog thinned. Lampposts? They came closer, and everyone looked confused as it became clear that yes, those weak, flickering lights overhead were old lampposts. Then, train tracks, and dirt. Closer, they found actual train carriages and cargo crates. Closer, they found knocked over towers of metal, some large hammers and metal spikes scattered around, and a distant warehouse, rusted and broken. And with every minute they grew closer, the sound of metal banging against metal grew louder, as did the alien clicks and shrieks of an azlu, and the roars of a man.

"Fuck you!" a voice yelled out in the dark. Banging metal followed, loud, heavy, and with more than enough impact for Damien to feel it. Closer, it only got worse, with more metal crashing against other metal, and vibrations so powerful they had Damien's brain rattling in his skull. It was like an intermittent earthquake that came in pulses spurred by the violence of monsters.

He knew that voice.

“Hide!” another voice whispered. They all whipped their heads toward the sound, and everyone froze as they met the empty eyes of a ghost. For a moment, Damien thought it was Mary, but a second to look at her showed it was another woman, another translucent creature that leaked mist. She was underneath a train, hiding where its wheels sat on the tracks.

While everyone stared at her, Damien crouched low and crept over to her.

The hunt for Jack and the others had taken them through two nightmare chambers, through a tear, and into a world of darkness and mist. Of course there'd be ghosts. He'd seen caverns like this in many paintings, those that tried to capture the misery and sadness of an Underworld roaming with the dead. There weren't any train yards in those paintings, but still, it didn't take a genius to put it together when they found an eyeless, see-through woman.

“Who are you?”

“Sabrina!”

The name poked at a memory, but he lost it pass.

“Have you seen our friends? They—”

“Yes, yes I have! They're around here somewhere. Couldn't have gotten far.”

A little voice in his head warned him this could be a trap. Who knew what sort of horrible things a ghost lurking under a train, in some sort of Underworld, might say or do to them?

“Do you know their names? I—”

“Clara, and Sándor.” She nodded, empty eyes wide as if in a panic. “Jack's fighting the spider monster. The other two are hiding and sneaking away.”

Clara and Sándor sneaking away? It was true then, they were injured, as the Uratha said they were. Damien pointed at the four wolves, pointed to his nose, and gestured out to the rest of the train yard. Then he pointed at himself, and to the noise. Noah and Caleb nodded without so much as a moment’s hesitation, and the two wolves headed off together. Eric and Jessy took a moment to figure it out, but once they did, they took off in their own direction together.

Look for Clara and Sándor, look for an opportunity to engage, and fight. And Damien was going in first. They all knew who was fighting the azlu, and they weren’t going to leave him to do it alone.

Maybe they should have. Damien had seen first hand what the curse could do, twice. He wasn’t anxious for a third time.

Damien withdrew his sword, and reached into his coat for his pistol. And put it back. A pistol wasn’t going to do anything against an azlu, and the sheriff had made it clear how much better a sword was to a Kindred in most circumstances. Time for a little payback for the gut stab?

He gripped the hilt with both hands, and looked behind him at Fiona and Athalia.

“Fiona, can you be ready to ensnare the monster?”

“Aye!” she whispered, and even the whisper sounded enthusiastic. He loved her joviality, and he prayed to God it didn’t get her killed.

“And, if this one breaks apart into small spiders when it dies—”

“Ah will catch them, too!”

“Athalia, can you provide support?”

She frowned at him, a mix of hate and surprise in her eyes. “You trust me to help you?”

“I trust you to help because Sándor is out here somewhere, and if he dies, your mission is lost.”

She grit her teeth loud enough he heard it, but after a few seconds consideration, nodded. “I will attack from the shadows when you create an opening.”

Nodding, he turned toward the ghost still hiding under the train. “You, uh...”

“It hurt me already! I’m not fighting it again.”

Well, he could understand that. Not like most people would survive being hurt by this monster. Then again, she was a ghost. The monster could hurt ghosts? It was something from the Uratha side of the paranormal, so that sorta made sense. Spirits, ghosts, different but the same?

“Alright, we’ll take care of it. Thank you for the information.”

The ghost raised an eyebrow at him like he was crazy, but he paid her no mind. Behind the train she hid under, beyond a pile of metal, rust, bent steel, and thousands of scattered bricks, Jack was fighting the azlu. Even now, the boy screamed and roared; his young voice didn’t match the psychotic rage in it, or the violence he was capable of. But, when Damien jumped onto the train cart, and looked out over the train graveyard, he knew it was Jack.

Not Jack. It was the curse.

Jack and the enormous spider creature circled each other, and where Damien was sure there’d once been cargo crates, train carriages, towers, fences, steel beams, and lampposts, was only destruction. Piles of debris circled the two monsters, much of it broken and dented, with shredded remains under their feet. As if a bomb of chaos had exploded, the two fought in a crater of mayhem, and Damien gulped as he scanned the battleground.

Jack's suit was mostly gone, except for some tattered pants and his shoes. No jacket, no shirt, no vest holster. A couple glints buried in the insanity lying about suggested where the boy's weapons might be, probably used and either empty or damaged, or useless. The azlu that nearly killed Damien had been extremely resilient to anything but the most extreme damage, and fire. No one had fire, which all the vampires were surely thankful for, but it was the tool the werewolves had used last time to make sure the other azlu died and died completely. Jack had killed the second one with a giant metal rebar, straight down through the skull and into its body, only for it to supposedly break into a bunch of small spiders and escape.

This time, they'd be ready for it.

Blood coated Jack's skin, dark blood, darker than human. It swirled, coursing up and down his body, and tiny whips of the heavy liquid cracked the air as it did. The boy's eyes were gone, or maybe hidden, but all Damien could see in his eye sockets was more vampire blood, swirling, leaking but never leaving his body. Gashes and holes decorated his skin and muscles, some small, some large, and blood flowed from them, as if veins had become external. The monster must have punctured him with its scythe arms, breaking through the barrier Jack's curse protected him with. What damage the spider managed to accomplish wasn't enough to stop him though. The curse could probably be left with nothing more than a skeleton, and still survive. Immortal, as long as the curse protected him with its unending tides of damned blood.

Immortal, but thoroughly damaged. The spider must have hit him thirty or forty times, and the only thing keeping Jack from literally collapsing into a pile of shredded limbs, was the blood surging through him. The azlu wasn't doing much better. Several of its spider legs were missing, and it struggled to get its huge body off the dirt and rock beneath it. More obvious, was that it was missing one of its arms. Those arms were massive, each ending in a giant bone scythe, and more than capable of splitting a car in half. Jack had managed to rip one off?

No, not rip. Not even he was that strong, to de-arm a creature of such insane strength. However, beside the spider's removed arm, coils of barbed wire sat, ripped free of one of the metal and wood fences nearby. It was coated in flesh and blood, and broken into two long pieces.

Jack must have sawed through its arm with the barbed wire.

The curse was pushing his Ventrue blood far further than it should have been able to reach, when it came to strength. When Damien had described Jack's assault on Sándor's Horror, Maria had been quiet and contemplative, but he'd managed to detect a hint of fear on her. According to Maria, only ancient elders with many centuries to their name could push their bodies so deep into Disciplines that did not come naturally to them. For a Ventrue to be fighting a giant gargoyle in a melee brawl was an extremely impressive feat, something Maria doubted Viktor would be capable of.

"Come on, bring it!" Jack yelled, and he kicked a rock at the spider. It bounced off harmlessly. "Fucking animal, weak, pathetic, mindless. Come on!" The boy circled the huge creature, but his feet were heavy, and he nearly tripped several times as he failed to lift his shoes higher than the debris. He didn't fall, but it wouldn't be long before he did.

Damien managed to get a peek at his friend's palms. They were shredded.

The alien creature charged. Like Jack, it stumbled, five spider legs struggling to manage its weight, but only thirty feet separated the two combatants, not far enough to be a serious hindrance to the enormous monster.

“Fuck you! Fucking die!” Jack couldn’t get out of the way in time, but the spider’s charge was a mess. Its attempts to hit him with its scythe arm failed, and it fell forward. It bowled over Jack, crashed into him, and fell onto its stomach at the same time, with Jack literally underneath it.

Jack screamed and roared fury, spat venom, and swung his fists into where the human and spider melded at the chest and waist. The spider shrieked in pain and pushed off the ground in an attempt to try again, but Jack dove at one of the spider’s legs. Like some sort of crazed, hungry animal, Jack got his bloody hands on one of the legs, and bit into it. The monster’s shrieks rose an octave, and Damien winced as its inhuman cry deafened him, and as the monster’s blood gushed out onto the ground. Jack’s bite had been vicious, and had ripped a giant chunk of the relatively thin spider leg out. A moment later, Jack ripped the leg in half, and the monster screamed its agony.

Behind him, Fiona and Athalia got into position, Fiona close, Athalia between his train cart and a nearby cargo crate. He couldn’t see Athalia’s face, but Fiona stared at the mayhem like watching a horror movie. It was not a pretty sight. Damien forced himself to look back to his friend, at his torn and ravaged body, at the dark blood flowing up and down his flesh and through it like it was alive, and he grit his teeth.

First, the azlu, then they could deal with Jack.

He looked around for signs of the others. One wolf sat upon a leaning tower of metal bars, and from his posture, Damien knew the other wolves were hidden in the darkness and mist. Hopefully they were waiting for a signal.

“Fiona, be ready to catch any spiders that escape.”

“Aye.”

He nodded, tightened his grip on his sword, and poured every ounce of vitae he had into his Cloak, and speed. It was like that time he'd landed his sword on the Prince, and had cut off one of her legs, and one of her arms. Even a mighty beast could be felled by a single swing of the sword, if it could be done undetected. And the spider was very distracted. He just had to be careful to not get hit by that scythe arm on the entry.

The monster raised his arm, ready to strike at Jack again. At this point, Damien doubted the strike would kill Jack. Hell, Jack was likely to win this fight if it continued, but the more the kid drained his blood, the more problematic dealing with him might be. It was as good an opening as any.

Damien leapt from the train, landed maybe a couple hundred feet away from the monster, and closed the distance in a single moment. The spider noticed him somehow, despite the crazed Jack biting and ripping one of his long spider legs apart. But it noticed too late, and Damien jumped up at it from Jack's side, sword up and out.

The spider monster's human, mutated head went flying.

Not waiting to find out if the creature could live through beheading, Damien landed on the monster's fat, hairy arachnid back, turned, and sliced his sword down straight onto its neck with both hands. There was clear, obvious resistance from the monster's flesh, far more than a human's body would give, but Damien put every bit of power he could into the strike. The sword would have broken, but swords for Kindred were built to withstand brutal amounts of punishment.

His blade pushed down through the flesh, down between its shoulders, shoulder blades, down beside its spine, and into its guts. Cutting off its head hadn't stopped it from attempting to swipe its scythe arm at Jack, but it had missed. And, despite losing its head, it tried to swing again. But once Damien pushed his sword down further, and further, cutting through the human half's guts and then into where it joined the spider, the creature finally stopped. It fell over onto its side, and Damien jumped free to land beside Jack.

"The fuck?" Jack said, releasing his bite. He turned to face Damien, anger in his blood-filled eyes, and Damien took a step back as he lowered his sword. Lowered, not sheathed.

The flesh of the monster beside them churned, tore, and broke apart. The human, ultimately a small piece of the creature's body, fell off and away, while the spider half shimmered and dissolved before their eyes. Jack didn't seem to care, eyes still locked on him, but Damien raised a hand. It was enough of a signal to draw everyone.

The wolves arrived first, and Damien took a step back from them as well to give them room. They weren't in their normal wolf forms anymore, they were in much larger wolf bodies, so large Damien and Jack both had to step aside to not get knocked over, as the titanic creatures jumped upon the scattering spiders.

"Jack, we must—"

"I had it! You fucking took my—"

"Jack! Focus! We have to kill the azlu before this situation happens again!"

"Aye!" Fiona said. She ran over to them, excited smile on her face as she made her way through the mist, the silhouette of her spider legs visible like shadows against fog. She pointed them and her hands out at the spreading swarm of large spiders, and began to unleash her webbing.

More than Fiona joined in. Jessy emerged from the mist in her wolf body, and transformed. Gangrel transformations were a lot more disgusting than Uratha transformations, with twisting flesh and bubbling muscle contorting like rubber stretched over bone. She became partly human, partly something else, something grotesque that ran on all fours, and was covered in spikes. She fell upon the spiders, and started tearing.

Athalia did as well, though she stayed well clear of Jack as she approached. The scattered spiders needed to be slain, and she knew it, but that didn't mean she had to be near Jack as she got to work. The titanic silhouette of her Horror reached out, and slashed out with its bone claws, tearing spiders to bits.

Sabrina must have realized what was happening, because the crazy ghost let out a maniacal cackle, and dove upon the spiders, slashing away with a small blade. Ok, mental note, be careful with Sabrina.

Jack continued to glare at him, and Damien took another step back. The boy wasn't stupid. He knew how important it was they take care of these vermin before they evolved into another one of the giant, deadly monsters. Jack knew, but the curse seemed more interested in a satisfying fight, or rather, how Damien had taken its conclusion from him.

“I fucking had it, Damien.”

“Maybe. But ... look at you.”

“The fuck are you talking about?” Jack took another step toward him, and again, Damien took a step back.

Damien looked around for something reflective. No such luck. The train graveyard was enormous, but everything in it was broken, rusted, stained and worn. So with heavy sigh and heavier concern, he lifted his sword slowly, and pointed the flat side at the kid standing in front of him.

Kid. It was hard to think of Jack as a kid anymore, not after everything that'd happened to him, and everything he'd done. But more so, thinking of him as a kid just wasn't possible with the curse in control. The boy looked like a monstrosity, a mythic entity, a phantasm of blood, with dozens of enormous cuts along his near naked body flowing with tendrils of tainted crimson. The blood pulsed, resisted gravity, and flowed up and down his body like slithering snakes; maybe more like slithering millipedes, burrowing into and out of the wounds of a corpse.

Jack looked at his reflection, and froze. The blood pools for eyes melted away, exposing the honest green Damien was used to, and the kid reached out for the sword. He was tempted to hold onto it, but helping Jack was worth the risk. He let the sword go, and Jack held the blade with both hands, finger and thumb pinching it, grip perfectly still.

And then he threw the sword down. It bounced several times before half spinning, and coming to a halt at Damien's feet.

“Jack doesn't deserve me. He'd be dead if it wasn't for me!”

Damien blinked at the man, and looked beside him to the slaughter. The wolves, and Jessy, Fiona, and Athalia did a great job assaulting the spreading spiders, with Fiona's webbing helping in particular. The spiders seemed impervious to its stickiness, they were spiders, but she crafted the web into nets, and hauled on the dozens of enormous spiders like fish being hauled from the ocean. The giant wolf abominations were particularly effective, and they shredded through the spiders with familiarity.

None of them could spare a moment to deal with Jack. If Damien yelled, called for help, they'd come, but it was better they deal with the scattering swarm of arachnids while they could. And besides, Jack hadn't attacked him, yet.

“Jack, this isn't you. This is—”

“What? The curse? You act like I’m some sort of thing, and not a person.”

Damien raised a brow, and forced himself to hold still as Jack took a step closer. His eyes weren’t pools of blood anymore, likely regenerated from whatever the azlu had done to them, but he could still see madness in them.

“So then ... what are you?”

“I’m Jack, you fucking asshole.”

“You’re not Jack.”

That was not the best thing to say. The boy in front of him stared at him with rediscovered anger, and clenched his hands into fists as he came closer again.

Luckily for Damien, New Jack had spent who knew how long throwing trains, giant metal fences, steel beams, and had handled barbed wire with his bare hands, to dismember a giant spider monster. He was covered in dozens of enormous gashes, along with several holes that likely went through and through. For all his rage, New Jack wasn’t God, and he stumbled as he approached him. The coursing snake veins of exposed blood dissipated and fell apart. The rippling of his skin where the blood poured underneath calmed and smoothed. The rage in his eyes began to fade.

So Damien did the only reasonable thing he could, and gambled. He poured every bit of vitae he could into his speed again, snapped up a piece of broken wood nearby, and jammed it into Jack’s chest, straight into his heart.

“The fu—” Jack managed to look down and stare at the piece of jagged wood sticking out of his bare chest, before torpor took him. His eyes closed, and he fell into the mist and rubble. Maybe gambling wasn’t such a sin.

Damien grabbed his sword, and squatted beside his friend. He'd been worried maybe putting Jack into torpor would prevent the curse from keeping the boy alive through all his injuries, but Jack remained intact. Currents of dark blood continued to run through his body, deep in his wounds, but otherwise the boy looked normal again, save for the holes and gashes, many of them a couple inches deep.

“Damien!” Clara’s voice. Oh bless the Lord, she was alive. If she was dead, Jack would never forgive himself.

Damien raised his head and looked around. It was hard to hear much, considering a slaughter was currently going on, spiders screeching and clicking and dying everywhere, but Clara’s voice managed to punch through the mess.

She walked through the fog, body heavy, each step dragging along the rock and metal underneath her. Her clothes were soaked in her blood, but she didn’t look injured; probably healed from her earlier wounds. But she was exhausted, to the point she could barely move.

Sándor walked beside her, limping, and moving with a similar level of exhaustion. Unlike Clara, there was a blatant wound in his shoulder, and a grimace on his face as he looked down at the boy at Damien’s feet.

“Jack!” Sabrina’s voice. Uh oh. The ghost swam down for Jack, and scooped the boy up. For a second Damien thought she’d fly away, but she whimpered as she tried to lift him, settled on the ground, and released him. The injury the azlu dealt her must have been powerful. “Why did you stab him!”

“Sabrina,” he said, “it’s ... complicated. He’ll be fine, ok?” Reasoning with a ghost. How does one reason with a ghost? His first introduction to ghosts was Mary, and she’d been very unstable, even with her two closest relatives there to calm her. “He’s a vampire, and—”

“I know he’s a vampire! He’s the master’s grandchilde. And you stabbed him!”

He blinked, several times. Master’s grandchilde? Who was—“You’re Sabrina Douville. One of Viktor Honor’s ghoul.” A rather menacing person Damien had spied on once or twice. She’d died in a pointless turf skirmish between the Carthians and Invictus.

The ghost hissed at him, and floated circles around the unconscious vampire. “You hurt the grandchilde!”

Damien stood there, dumbfounded. Looking around showed the spiders had been thoroughly destroyed, and while Noah and Caleb ran around, looking for potential leftovers, the rest of the group rejoined him. Slowly, they all circled the ghost and the boy she protected, both Eric and Jessy returned to human form, and each raised brows in confusion. Athalia kept a healthy distance back, but she too stood close enough to look down at the unconscious vampire, surprised and confused; whether by the ghost or the destruction one vampire had managed to unleash, Damien didn’t know.

“Sabrina,” Clara said, tone of her voice suggesting she knew this ghost, “don’t worry. Jack is just ... uh ... a little troubled. Something’s wrong with him. Damien’s his friend and staked him for his own good, but he’ll be fine. Ok?” She spoke like speaking to a child. It sounded terribly condescending to Damien, but to Sabrina, it was apparently the exact right thing to say, and way to say it.

“Ok. Ok.” She let go of Jack, floated higher, stopped at ten feet up, and hovered around in a circle. Mist flowed from where her feet and shins should have been, and one of her legs still looked blurrier than the other. “Take good care of him! He said Mister Mire is dead, so he must be the last of the master’s bloodline.”

Everyone looked around at each other as confusion turned into comprehension, and took a step back from the boy. Damien sheathed his sword, scooped Jack up onto his shoulder, and smiled up at the ghost.

“We’ll take good care of him,” he said.

“He will,” Clara added. “So, Fiona ... and Athalia. That tear—”

“Open!” Fiona said with a big bright smile, totally at odds with the gloomy train graveyard atmosphere. “We can go back whenever ye want.”

“I think now would be as good a time as any. I am fucking thirsty.”

---

~~Natasha~~

They found something. She’d hoped they wouldn’t find something, but they did find something, and that meant things. Bad things.

She and the boys crept along, and she wrapped them well in her Cloak. Damien had been practicing with her sire regularly, but so had she. He focused on speed, but to her, the ability to stealth and sneak was the better skill to focus on. So she wrapped herself and the boys up in her Cloak of Night, and the three of them crept toward the Grand Cathedral.

It. Was. Terrifying. The cathedral didn’t look like it did in the city; like everything in the Hisil, it was a warped version of its physical sibling. Colossal gargoyles perched atop towering pillars, and the ornate facing circling the roof rose into gigantic points, each topped with curling spears. A cross sat upon the highest point in the center of the cathedral’s roof, gigantic, and the sky around it glowed red. It hadn’t glowed nearly as red from a distance, but now that they were close to it, it blanketed the sky. From whichever angle she looked at the giant cross, the red sky highlighted it, so it looked like it was bleeding.

The fence around the cathedral was much bigger in the Hisil, topped with giant spikes, and each spike was topped with a statue of an angel. Maybe it was some sort of reference to how angels could dance on the head of a pin, but more likely, it was a statement of how angels, warriors of God, were not to be trifled with, evidently immune to the tips of the spears they stood on. Some of them were smiling, some of them were frowning, all of them were naked and beautiful, perfect examples of peak physical condition, and all armed with a sword and two angel wings.

Damien probably would have found the Shadow Realm version of the Grand Cathedral to be a powerful and majestic sight. Powerful, yes, but to her, it was creepy.

The parking lot was gone. Instead, the main gate opened up to a long, narrow path of dark asphalt, while all around it sat bushes with sharp branches, each covered in thorns. Another metaphor, something about the road to Heaven or God. The path stopped at the stairs of the cathedral, and the stairs were really, really big. Climbing up them would be tough for any human.

She was surprised there wasn't a big needle head people, or spirits, would have to jump through to get into the building.

Natasha, Matthew, and Arturo sat outside the gate, and looked on from a distance, as two red, hovering creatures with long claws flowed down the path toward them. A small growl drew Natasha's attention, and she looked down at Arturo; he was transformed into his wolf form, and Matthew too. Red wraiths. Taking a cue from his noise, she took them back further and further, and the three of them went completely silent as the two spirits started to talk.

And she didn't understand a single word. It almost sounded Egyptian, but it definitely wasn't. It sounded older, less refined, and harsher.

She looked down at the boys, and the two of them stared at the two wraiths with ears up and pointed. Whatever the spirits were saying, the boys understood it, and from how they were raising their lips in silent snarls, they didn't like what they heard.

Natasha reached into her coat, withdrew her sword, and crouched even lower, until she was head level with the two wolves. They backed up and up, keeping their bodies to the huge fence that circled the cathedral, until they eventually worked their way past the fence corner. There were no nearby structures, leaving only grass between the cathedral and other buildings. A long, winding path led to Three Kings Cemetery, but a look back into that darkness, with her special Auspex to pierce the blackness, showed nothing. They were in the clear to keep eavesdropping.

The two spirits didn't say much. It wasn't like people went around announcing their plans, though she doubted these spirits thought and acted with the same individualism and awareness of people. But they were talking, more strange words she didn't get, but one word stabbed her through the chest. Maria. There was no translation for Maria, it was a name, and they said it.

The three of them merged into the darkness the fence cast onto the grass, nothing but shadows, and the two wraiths drifted by. As they moved on, Matthew, the larger wolf, took a step forward, but Arturo nudged the wolf with his snout and stopped him. The wraiths continued on, and on, until they disappeared into the city heading toward the entertainment district of South Side.

Arturo transformed back into human shape, and remained crouched beside her. Matthew did the same, though he didn't transform as smoothly as Arturo did.

“They were talking about some sort of plan,” Art said. “Something about a ritual that will make blood flow.”

She shivered. “Make b-blood flow?”

“Yeah. They said a few more tears, and the ritual will work.”

She frowned, sheathed her sword, and took a deep breath. “Did they mention Maria?”

“They ... did,” Matthew said, tone sad. He knew she knew they did. “Said something about Maria will soon be ready to trigger the ritual.”

“They said rituals will make blood flow. They said the tears will m-make rituals work. They said ... M-Maria will trigger the ritual. In three different sentences?”

Art nodded with a weak shrug. “The First Tongue isn’t very good at describing linked logic or events in single sentences. Things get broken up.”

“And ... and you’re sure they said—”

“They said Maria,” Matthew said. “Come on, you heard it, I know you did. I saw you flinch.”

She frowned at the big man, but it didn’t last long. “C-Come on, let’s investigate the cathedral.”

“You sure?” Art asked. “We know what we wanted to know.”

“It’s strange for these spirits to be hanging out here, r-right?”

“Not if they work for Maria. Right?”

She shook her head. “Maria’s smart, very smart. She w-wouldn’t leave a trail. Spirits hanging around her d-den is a trail.”

Arturo squatted down in front of her as he looked around. “Maybe she started this deal with spirits before we showed up? So she assumed no one would track her movement in the Hisil. Figured her den was a safe place to do her work?”

“Maybe ... maybe.” If Maria had to do something extreme, like create a ritual site or something like Jacob might do, to give her the tools required to communicate with spirits, then it made sense for her to do it somewhere she felt secure.

Except, Damien often slept in her den now, and said he found nothing to suggest she had a ritual site or anything like that. And Natasha still couldn't help but feel Maria would create such a ritual site — or whatever she'd need — in a place that wasn't her den. Too many unknowns. Not enough evidence. There was only one option: investigate further.

“Let's go in,” she said.

The two boys looked at her like she'd lost her marbles.

“Uh, my nose is picking up something,” Matt said. “There's something in there.”

“I will keep us hidden.” To her surprise, her voice was solid. This was important. She wasn't going to allow another Minerva situation over a misunderstanding.

Art frowned at her, frowned at Matt, frowned at the cathedral, and sighed. “Alright.”

She nodded, and continued around the corner, toward the back of the cathedral. If it was anything like the cathedral in Dolareido, there'd be a lot going on behind it, a garden, trees, and another gate that took a very, very long path through trees near the street, then a winding path between old mausoleums, before eventually arriving at the Three Kings Cemetery a mile away. Buildings in the area generally had a political or religious tilt, with things like christian and catholic schools, a couple of city buildings like a courtroom, and one food shelter.

In the Hisil, those buildings looked weird, very weird. The schools had colorful bars for doors, like a prison for children. The court building looked like it was upside down. Spirits drifted in and out of them every now and then, but for the most part, this part of the city was void of movement. Still, she did not relax her Cloak of Night, and kept the three of them shrouded as they crept along the huge fence that surrounded the cathedral. Further and further back, behind the building, there was indeed a garden, and she winced at the sight of it. Huge plants full of vines, covered in thorns, like some sort of overgrown evil greenhouse from a comic book.

The gate was open. They could have jumped over, but it would have landed them directly onto the nasty plants. Besides, she didn't see any spirits, and Art and Matt didn't see any either, so they went through the gate.

The backyard of the church wasn't really the back. It was the backyard, but it connected to a door on the building's side, and the three of them had to navigate the path of deadly plants to get to it. She assumed they were deadly anyway, and from how the boys avoided the thorns, they assumed it as well.

The side-back door, a far less impressive thing than the grand double doorway at the top of the front stairs, was little more than a slab of wood with a couple metal bars attached to it. But when Art gave it a tug, it didn't move.

"Locked," he whispered.

Nodding, she looked up, and pointed.

The Hisil did not detract from the Gothic majesty of the building, only enhanced. That meant there were a lot of beautiful stained glass windows, with lots of ridges of stone under sharp facings. Above them were pillars, many with ornate gargoyles, and others with sharp protrusions. For anyone with good grip and body strength, it'd be an easy building to climb.

Up they went. For Natasha, this was beyond easy. She didn't even weigh a hundred pounds, short as she was, and Kindred strength made it easy for her to latch onto stones and metal, and jump to the next ledge no matter how high it was. Eight feet up? No problem. Twelve feet up? A minor problem, but not much once she put a little vitae into the leap.

The boys had a harder time. Art was very tall, muscular, and heavy. Matthew was taller, more muscular, and heavier. On more than one occasion, Art had to find a good spot to stop, reach down, and help Matthew; he was simply too big. But once they got past the purely vertical, most outward wall of the cathedral, it was easy climbing for all of them. Up sloped roofs, up tilted pillars that connected higher, up tall windows, and eventually up to one of the towers. Up, and into.

From there, it was a slow, quiet descent down into the cathedral. Such an enormous building, meant to be both a majestic display, but also a function as headquarters for Lucas. Lots of rooms, lots of hallways, and several floors.

The goal was simple. Red wraiths were hanging around the cathedral, so, figure out why they kept coming back to the cathedral. The Uratha were convinced the red wraiths were connected to the tears, or maybe even worked for Black Blood. The Uratha — or anyone but Jacob — didn't know what Black Blood actually did, what its goals were, what it was up to, or anything. Knowledge about it was priceless.

Whatever was happening inside the cathedral, it was likely dangerous, and it likely contained knowledge. The Uratha may have wanted knowledge so they could know how to prevent another Minerva situation, or force the same conclusion. Natasha wanted knowledge so she could help the Prince find out about whatever it was threatening her city, be it Black Blood, or the tears, or Maria, or all of them. She wanted to protect the city. They wanted to protect the Gauntlet and the balance. Hopefully those two goals coincided.

The descent between floors continued without incident. No movement in the darkness within the cathedral, down the winding stairs of the tower, and onto the balcony that overlooked the church pews. The center hall of the gathering was the nave. The left and right wings were the transepts, and the presentation stage was the chancel. The balcony circled the nave and transepts, not the chancel, leaving the enormous, glorious pipe organ free to impose its majesty up to the high ceiling.

Candles lined the walls beneath them. The actual cathedral in Dolareido didn't normally do the candle thing, using electric lighting modeled to look like old school lighting when it could. It was made by a vampire after all, and when a vampire had the option to use electricity, they used electricity. But in the Hisil, electricity didn't power the lights of the cathedral, fire did. The candles were large, and arranged to look like crosses in a sloped pattern. Each pew had a candle cross between it and the wall, and beyond them, behind the pulpit and beside the organ on each side, was a much larger arrangement of candles, again forming the cross.

Without any electric light, or sunlight, the candle lighting was very moody, and she did not like the mood it was going for.

But, despite her and the boys walking from end to end of the balcony, all they found below them, was pews and candles. The pulpit, a much larger version than the one in normal Dolareido, didn't have anything creepy going on, or anything that would suggest spirit summoning. The pipe organ, also emphasized and exaggerated by the Hisil's warping effect, actually looked like an instrument, not some deadly tool of musical summoning.

"What d-do you think?" she whispered.

Matthew and Arturo both sniffed the air deep, and looked down over the wooden railing.

"There's a loci down there," Art said. "But I don't see it."

"Then ... we should go d-down there." Sword in hand, she moved toward the stairs that led down into the right transept.

Matt stopped her, hand on her shoulder. "Tash, why are you pushing so hard to dig up more evidence? We know the wraiths are working with Maria. That's enough for us to—"

"We d-don't know that! And ... and ... and Maria's not the person she used to be. We ... we aren't being fair, by assuming she's doing something bad."

"You're defending her?" Art said. "You told us about how she treated you in the Invictus. And you told us what kind of person Lucas used to be, a man she loved, desperately. Come on, Natasha. You have to admit our suspicion is warranted. Let's go back and tell Avery what we learned. It's not like we're going to kick down Maria's door and kill her."

Natasha sighed and shook her head. They didn't know, they weren't there. That time when Maria had visited, and had actually talked to Natasha one on one, that'd been a very important night for her, and for the elder. Maria still owed Natasha for a lot of pain, but more than anything, for betraying her and handing her over to Damien and Lucas. But, elders took a long time to change, and Maria had tried. That was something, wasn't it?

“She deserves the benefit of a doubt.” She shrugged herself free of Matthew’s grip, and headed toward the stairs down. The sounds of their footsteps told her they were following, and she relaxed a little. She was being brave, but she still wanted backup when exploring a potentially dangerous area. Normally it’d be Jessie, but since she started working for the Prince, she had to get used to dealing with things on her own.

Except, of course, now she had a couple of werewolves willing to frontline for her, so, she’d be stupid to not take them up on it.

Once they were down among the pews, she took a step back and let Arturo and Matthew go first. They had the noses, and the extra senses to find something invisible like a loci. The two of them walked toward the organ, sniffed a few times, turned around, and walked toward the pulpit.

“It’s a small one,” Art said. “Not exactly sure what it’s drawing. Seems like ... a pretty vague influence. A command?” He shrugged. “It’s very weak. Nearby spirits were just little motes of essence, barely aware, and they took off the moment we got near the building.”

She approached the huge pulpit of beautiful, rich wood, and eyed it closely as she circled it. “Tony had something similar, I think. No wonder Lucas w-went to his old lair, to establish his new one on his return.” It was a pulpit after all, a symbol of authority, if indirectly instead of directly. “Would this b-be enough? For Maria to communicate with spirits?”

Arturo nodded. “Yes, but, barely. There are lots of ways to communicate across the Gauntlet, rituals and stuff, and taking advantage of a loci makes them work a thousand times better. Except this loci is weak. I ... I don’t think it’s what I’m smelling.”

“It’s not,” Matt said. “I think what we’re looking for is ... beneath us?”

“Maria’s lair?” Shivering, Natasha gestured to the organ, and a pathway cut perpendicular of the curving chancel back wall. Except, it wasn’t there. She walked over to the wall where the giant cross of candles sat on the organ’s right, avoided the candles, and pressed her hands against the smooth wall. “Um, the stairs are usually here.”

Matthew came up beside her, and knocked on the wall with a knuckle. “Solid. The Hisil’s probably recreated it somewhere else. This building have a history? Avery only knows a little.”

“A long and t-terrible history,” she said, her voice shifting into storyteller tonality without her meaning to. “Lucas came to D-Dolareido, established the Lancea et Sanctum, and often overstepped himself. The Grand Cathedral was b-built without the Prince’s permission. He attacked Carthians, had some killed. He ... killed the P-Prince’s ghouls, when she began to push back against him.”

The long and terrible history of Lucas, his growing relationship with the Invictus, his attacks on the Carthians, and his eventual war with the Prince, were stories told in whispers. Many of the Kindred in Dolareido didn’t know the specifics. Daniel knew them all, and now that Natasha was a young dragon, he shared with her sensitive details. And she felt comfortable sharing them with Matt and Art, to a point.

“This was his headquarters,” she continued. “He called himself Archbishop, and had b-bishops here, along with his congregation, and new recruits.” Like his new childe, Damien. “I ... I’m sure he did ... powerful things here. Some bad. Some good. Some ... horrible.”

“He sounds like a colossal asshole,” Art said. “Glad I never met him.”

If only she could say the same thing. She’d never met Lucas at first, since she’d been sired around the time he’d been supposedly killed, over half a century ago. Her first meeting with him, fifty years later, had been a painful experience.

She nodded as she crouched by the wall, and looked for a secret switch. Nothing. “I—”

The cathedral began to shake, and the pews, the candles, and the ground. Several of the enormous candles fell over, some coming toward her, but she jumped away instantly, putting twenty feet between her and the deadly fire. Art had reached out for her to try and save her, but she’d been faster, earning a small smile from the man.

Earthquake? Felt like an earthquake, except not. Felt more like a volcano erupting under their feet.

“Let’s get out of here,” Matt said. “Avery said if Red Tide came around, we were to avoid it. It’s hard to predict, and it’s always angry.”

“Red Tide?” She put her weapons away, and pointed to the side door. “Uh, do we have to run quick? We can break down the door, and—”

The front doors of the church swung open, and true to name, a red tide poured into the church. A lot of red, a lot lot. Crimson. And it was blood. Natasha almost squealed, but managed to keep her voice under control as she snapped her gaze to the boys, but found neither of them panicking. In fact, they were standing their ground, each watching the oncoming wave of thick, red liquid as it crashed over the pews. Wood cracked and smashed, and many of the candles died to the splashing fluid as the entity filled the nave of the cathedral, and the transepts.

The Grand Cathedral was a massive building. Hundreds of people, maybe thousands could have filled the pews on the bottom floor. Red Tide filled the church until Natasha looked down, and found the liquid churning and splashing up against the three-step stairs that led onto the stage with the pulpit. It was almost overflowing. Where, where had she seen this before? As the spirit thrashed and smashed weight against the walls of the church, tossed pews around, and roared with the anger of the ocean, she stared at the blood red liquid and where it splashed back and forth against the stairs of the stage. Where had she seen this before?

A movie, one she'd seen when she was still human, before her embrace. A man with a staff told the pharaoh to let his people go. The pharaoh said no. The man called upon God, and God turned the rivers to blood. In the movie, that had included a temple that doubled as a fountain and river. That scene had terrified her as a child.

Red Tide made that scene look tame.

She didn't really know what to expect from the spirit called Red Tide. According to the boys, the pack avoided it. It was in a turf war with Black Blood and Street-Tail King, and as far as the pack could tell, it was a spirit of blood, likely birthed hundreds of years ago by early vampire activity. When Dolareido's vampire population began to boom, back when the elders had grown comfortable with their work on the city, about two hundred years ago, blood became a commodity. According to the boys, that sort of event triggered all sorts of spirit development in cities; it was always cities with the greatest spiritual upheavals, because of the human population.

Well, if the boys weren't going to run, it was either because they knew it was pointless, or they weren't worried. They did just say they were supposed to avoid it, but now they stood their ground. Not long ago, they'd all run into Black Blood in the middle of the street, and the spirit hadn't touched them, so maybe Red Tide wouldn't be a concern either? Or, running was pointless?

She fidgeted, fought the desire to pull out her weapons, and watched the giant pool of red settle. As it did, something surfaced from the red. It didn't come up onto the stage with them, but rather emerged from the center of the red liquid itself, in the center of the pool. With only the two big sets of candles behind the trio still lit, the lighting drowned Red Tide in high contrast, emphasizing the shadows of its squirming body, and Natasha trembled as she stared. It was like watching some sort of god of blood who deigned it necessary to form itself, for communication purposes.

If it'd taken the form of a burning bush, she'd have turned around and bolted. Damien would have probably imploded.

Unlike Black Blood, who seemed to be made of black ooze, and a giant black skeleton that put Athalia to shame, Red Tide didn't show any bones. At first, the form it took was far closer to Flowing sanctuary, a torso atop a slowly spinning vortex. But as the blood dripped away from its body, she realized it looked nothing like Flow. The mass of its body, if that's what it actually was, looked a lot more like a tentacle monster with leathery red skin. Much as she tried to think of it more like an octopus or a squid, those weren't accurate. Tentacle monster was the best her brain could come with, considering the borderline panic surging through her, sending vitae into her fingers and toes.

It had a mouth, something huge and carved out of the red, with enormous white teeth within. It had eyes, dozens of them, all black and all over the upper half of its fat body. And, of course, it had tentacles, red tentacles made of leathery red that crashed down against the crimson liquid around it. Each forty-foot tendril cracked at the air, and Natasha braced herself to get splattered. She didn't. Somehow the entity's pool of red and dripping crimson droplets remained attached to it, like how Flow's water body followed her perfectly.

“Uratha. K ... Kindred,” it said, struggling with the second word. Uratha was a word in the First Tongue. Kindred was not. It had trouble with other languages then. “Why here?” Oh god that voice. If a kraken sea monster could have a voice, it’d be this.

She raised a brow as she looked up at the boys. Black Blood was verbose and even artful with its English. Flowing Sanctuary spoke well, too. Even Safe of Grey Street spoke decently. Red Tide struggled. Either it didn’t know English, was too stupid to talk in any language, or it just didn’t care. Then again, it was talking English, and since the Uratha spoke the First Tongue, it was doing it for her sake. How ... nice of it?

“Red Tide,” Art said, and he nodded to the spirit. “We’re here investigating the wraiths that abandoned you.” For some reason, he started grinning. Hitting the spirit in its ego was a surefire way to make it angrier. Damn it, Art.

The red kraken creature snorted, and slapped a tentacle against the pool around it. “You. Here. Hunting tears.”

Natasha opened her mouth, and shut it quick. Don’t speak unless spoken to was probably a healthy approach right now.

“Maybe.” Art stepped out from around the pulpit, and slowly walked the edge of the stage, feet inches away from the red liquid. “What’s it to you?” Wow. He was being very ballsy with the colossal, and likely very deadly spirit. Maybe it wasn’t allow to attack them? It had bans, like any spirit, but she didn’t know what they were. Far as she knew, the Uratha didn’t know them either.

“They grow. Black Blood near. Azlu.”

“Azlu?” Matthew, never leaving Natasha’s side, ground his teeth until Natasha heard a click. “Street-Tail King said the azlu showed up unnaturally.”

“Tears,” Red Tide continued, “and more.”

“More?” Art said.

“Azlu came for tears. Came for different ... reasons.”

Art, on the other side of the stage, looked at Matthew with raised brow. Something about Red Tide’s information shocked them, which was weird, because it mirrored what Street-Tail King told them about the azlu.

“Know what those reasons are?” Art asked.

The spirit snorted, a loud, booming sound that made the pews floating around in its body tremble. “No. I am ... controlling ... tears, until resolution.”

“Makes sense. If you can control them, you can prevent problems. But, I don’t understand why you’re here, in the Grand Cathedral.”

“Tear ... below.” It slapped the red water once. “Get out.”

Everyone stood up rigid, glanced at each other, looked at the floor beneath them, and then back to Red Tide.

“Are you sure?” Matt asked. “We can—”

“Yes. Get out.”

Natasha took a small step forward, and slightly raised a hand. “B-B-But, we’re trying to find out if—”

“GET. OUT.” The pool of red churned and boiled, and the kraken grew higher and higher, adding a dozen feet, and then another onto its colossal height, until a monster capable of swallowing a house stared down at them with its many eyes. “GET. OUT.” The cathedral shook, pews cracked against each other, and crimson liquid splashed up against the walls.

Natasha backed off. So did the werewolves. She didn't need to know much about spirits to recognizing when something far stronger than reasonable, was no longer willing to be reasonable. They turned, and fled; upstairs, because the titanic, angry blood monster didn't bother to move out of the way despite its orders. It wasn't a very nice monster. She found herself wishing it was Black Blood.

---

They rejoined the rest of the pack in the apartment building Avery stayed in, and Natasha could see the pack leader was angry. But judging from the expression on her face, she wasn't angry with them specifically. Woo.

“Ran into Red Tide too?” Avery asked. That explained her mood, then.

Art matched her mood as he explained what happened. It wasn't usually what Art did when talking, but Natasha could see he was matching Avery's mood because it made Avery easier to deal with. It was a family thing, something family did when they were around each other for years and years. They figured out each other's personalities and learned to work with — or fight — each other's idiosyncrasies. If Avery was grumpy, it seemed she was happier if she felt everyone else was grumpy.

And Arturo played into that with expert control. The man really was smarter than he let on.

“A tear, in the Grand Cathedral?” she said.

He nodded. “But we didn't have time to find a way down there. Or, hell, maybe there isn't a way down there? Could be an underground passage or something that comes from somewhere else, or—”

Avery shook her head, “Red Tide ran into us, and told us ... mostly that we're useless and can't find the azlu. It'll kill them itself. Then it moved onto the cathedral, and booted you three out because it doesn't trust us. It thinks the cathedral is a way to that tear."

"Red Tide's an idiot. It could be wrong."

"Red Tide isn't an idiot, idiot." Growling, Avery poked the big man in the chest a couple times. "It just doesn't think the same way we do. If it went to the Grand Cathedral because it doesn't want you three around a tear, then it's a safe bet there's a tear you can get to from the fucking Grand Cathedral."

Matt and Art sighed but nodded, growing quiet.

"Now," Avery continued, "you said you found red wraiths talking about Maria?"

"Yes," they said, in unison.

"And they were talking about the tears? And a ritual? Blood flowing?"

"Yes," they said.

Ugh, it was happening. People were making assumptions, and that was not acceptable. She stepped up, and Avery eyed her as she sat down on her couch.

"What, Tash?"

"D-Damien sleeps in Maria's den. He's with her all the time. He hasn't seen a thing t-t-to make him think Maria is doing anything strange, anything involve tears, or anything involving sp-pirits."

Every werewolf in the room, which was all of them save three, watched her with sad eyes. They all knew where Avery was going, and none of them looked ready to disagree with her. If anything, they all looked convinced, even Matthew and Arturo, and that was not acceptable.

Avery shook her head. “Tash, come on. If it quacks like a duck, it’s —”

“There are plenty of birds that quack and look similar to ducks from a d-distance!” She glared at the woman as she stood in front of her. Avery was short, not as short as Tash, but short, and was sitting on the couch. Easy eye contact. “It’s ... it’s not smart, to assume anything.”

Avery watched her for a while, her hard expression softening to something closer to reasonable. After a minute of silence, Avery sighed and nodded as she sank back into her dingy old couch.

“The only reason I brought you in on this is because Matt and Art can vouch for you. But the evidence is piling up, Natasha. I trust that you’re not telling Maria about any of this?”

“I’m n-not. I made that promise, remember?”

Avery leaned forward, and held out her pinkie finger. “Swear? Even with this new info?”

Natasha blinked at the finger, at the woman, the finger, and eventually took it in her own. “N-No spit? Or cut open the palm?”

“You can’t spit or bleed without faking it.”

“True.” Tash looked down at where their two fingers were hooked, and then gave Avery her best serious face. “I swear.”

She meant it, too. But, just because she promised to not tell Maria about the pack looking at her like she was a target, that didn’t mean Natasha wouldn’t do something else to prevent a catastrophe.

“Alright,” she said with finality, then let go. “You really think Maria isn’t the cause of these tears?”

“T-Too many things don’t add up.”

“Yeah, I get that. If they did add up, I’m sure a lot more people than us would be looking at her. But, if you think Maria’s innocent, I’ll try and be more thorough with our recon.”

“Thank you. How long d-do you think you’ll be?”

“I don’t know. I’m not rushing into anything, Tash, but I’m not going to sit around and wait for shit to get worse.”

Which meant Natasha had an unknown deadline to race against, if she wanted to help Maria.

Mekhets hunted out the truth behind secrets like moths to flame; the curse of their bloodline. But she had a hard time believing her desire to find the root of this mystery was the only reason. A part of her wanted to help Maria, the part of her that was too damn nice.

Hopefully that niceness wouldn’t get her killed.

---

~~Jack~~

Waking up from a stake in the heart was never fun. It probably wasn’t a good thing he recognized the feeling, but also probably something a lot of vampires did as they got older. Still, it really sucked. Pain flooded him, and only began to recess when his vampire blood filled the hole a piece of wood had put there.

He lifted his head. Apparently he was against a wall, and when he looked up at his hands, they were bound by some seriously hefty chains. Like, extremely serious chains. He gulped. Those were the sorts of chains someone would use to tie up a ludicrously powerful person.

There was light, some LEDs built into the ceiling, and he sighed relief as a few more glances around showed the familiar black marble under the familiar light. This was the Elysium Tower.

Movement drew his eye. There were people in the room with him, two of them standing very close, and a few standing further back.

After a harder sigh, and a few experimental jingles of his chains, he smiled at the two women in front of him, wearing business suits, with arms folded under their chests like they were in an important meeting. They kinda were, he supposed.

“Prince. Great grandsire.”

“Jack,” they said together. He chuckled a little at that.

“My little Ventrue,” Antoinette continued, “what have you gotten yourself into?”

Elaine came closer, and took his chin in her grip. She was gentle. “It is him. It’s in his eyes.” Eye contact. A dangerous thing, considering what the curse could do. But then, she was an ancient Ventrue, and one who’d survived the curse. If anyone could handle a mind meld with the Strix curse, it was her.

She had really pretty eyes, brown, with a hint of harshness to them he didn’t see in Antoinette. Maybe it was a Ventrue versus Daeva thing. He knew Antoinette could become an ice queen, and slaughter dozens with her bare hands if she needed to. He was sure Elaine could do the same. But Antoinette could hide her brutal side, pretend to be the innocent doe or the playful vixen. He doubted Elaine could ever disguise the edge in her gaze.

“It is him,” a quiet voice whispered in the dark. “Auspex sees only Jack.”

That was probably the sheriff, but Jack couldn't see him anywhere. Creepy. Impressive.

“He won't take over unless I let him. That seems to be the pattern,” Jack said. “He's never taken over without my permission.”

“He?” Antoinette said.

“He, it. It's a part of me. It...” He winced and looked away, only to get a glimpse of the people standing further back. Damien and Jessy, his friends and fellow Right Hands. They looked at him like he was dangerous.

He looked down at himself. Suit gone, weapons gone, pants half gone, shoes still mostly intact. His wounds were mostly healed, but some remained, and he winced. It wasn't like he didn't remember what happened in the fight, what he'd done to beat that monster in a legit fist brawl, but seeing the result of it must have painted a pretty horrible image for his friends. Seeing it actually happen wouldn't have painted a much better one, honestly.

“Where're the others?” he asked.

Antoinette sighed, came closer, and gave his cheek a soft pat. “Athalia and Fiona took Sándor back into the Dream, and likely off to speak with Azamel. Now that he owes them, he will be more apt to listen to their request.

Jack nodded. “That's ... good. He'll be fine.”

Elaine chuckled and gestured to Damien. Damien, a little hesitant at first, eventually walked up to join them. The door out of the prison cell was wide open, letting in more light from the hallway, and telling him where he was: one of those hallways he normally avoided. Antoinette kept prisoners in these cells, and she still had some.

“Sándor will be fine,” Damien said. “Once he got back into his lair through the tear, his recovery was quick. Clara will be fine, too. Sabrina—”

“Sabrina?” Antoinette asked, eyebrow raised.

“A ghost,” Jack said. “We ran into her when the azlu attacked us. She, uh, was Viktor’s ghoul.” Elaine, who’d been looking down in contemplation, raised her head at that, and they met eyes again for a few seconds. Jack continued. “She found out who I was, and pledged to help me, because I am ... Viktor’s grandchilde.” The words tasted bitter.

“That is strangely fortuitous, my love.” Antoinette stepped back to stand beside Elaine, and also held his gaze. “And from Damien’s recounting, as much as it pains me to say, you owe your life to the curse. It defeated the azlu, alone. Damien and his companions merely dealt with what remained.”

He choked on a small chuckle, looked at his palms, squeezed them a few times with the disgusting memory of what the curse did, and then looked back at the two elders. “Think ... think you can leave me here for tonight? I’m starving, but I need some time to ... to do a little soul searching, I guess. The curse is weak without blood.”

Damien nodded and stepped back with Jessy out of the cell. Elaine stayed with Antoinette for a moment as the two looked at him with worried expressions, before they too, eventually left.

“I will be here come dusk, with food, my love,” Antoinette said.

Daniel stepped out of the shadows, making Jack jump a little, before the man stepped past the Prince and into the hall.

Jack gave Antoinette a small smile, nodded, and closed his eyes. Antoinette closed the door.

Ok, curse. We need to talk.

Chapter 125

~~Jack~~

Not much longer until sunrise. God, he was starving. Strong as the curse was, it wasn't invincible, and it'd used a lot of his available vitae to fight that creature.

Fought, and won. Don't forget that.

Jack silenced his thoughts as best he could, and waited, but the curse said nothing. Just as Jack had noticed throughout the battle with the azlu, and Sándor's Horror before that, and the attack on the hospital before that, the curse had trouble maintaining control after expending a lot of vitae. It, or he, was connected to the Beast in a way not dissimilar to Jack.

That meant, while Jack starved, became weak, and felt his Beast instincts kick into overdrive, the curse itself went quiet, growing weak as well. A flaw in the curse? A weakness. Despite how the Beast grew louder and louder inside Jack's head and chest as his blood lust increased, the curse said nothing. If the curse was simply the Beast given voice, it'd have an easier time taking over him when he was hungry, not a harder time.

The Strix curse wasn't the Beast then, but something that infected it, imbued it with power, indirectly imbued Jack with power, and ... what, created another personality in his head? Without a power source, of the 'essence of life' as it put it, the curse was weak. Jack became weak too. The Beast did not.

Feed. Feed. Feed. Find something with a heartbeat and drain it. Get blood. Get the essence of life. Devour. Fill. Blood. Blood. His Beast sounded like that, and now his Beast was insanely powerful, but that wasn't the voice of the curse. Or maybe, instead of thinking of the curse as the power given to his Beast and the voice of the curse, he needed to start thinking of them as separate things? His Beast was now absurdly powerful, so was he, and so was ... this other entity, now inside him?

He chuckled, and let his head sag. It'd been a long time since he'd been starving like this, truly hungry, to the point he could feel a frenzy under his skin, ready to break free and take over. But the Prince had him locked up tight. An elder Daeva or Nosferatu might be able to break the chains with pure strength. A Gangrel could probably transform into something that let them slip free. A Mekhet would probably be screwed, and so was he. But that was good. If he frenzied, no one would get hurt, and someone would feed him some blood come the morning.

The last time he was this hungry, it'd been his first night as a vampire. He'd frenzied, appetite surprising even his sire, and he'd killed someone. Mrs. Pavala.

Mrs. Pavala. God, he was happy he didn't run into her ghost. The guilt would have ripped him in half.

It made him wonder, though. What were the requirements for becoming a ghost? It must have had something to do with the emotional and mental state of the person. Sabrina was so devoted to her sire, that dying in a skirmish with Carthians left her utterly unable to accept the reality. Mary apparently unlocked the memories Jack had suppressed inside her; suppressed, not wiped, evidently. And that had driven her into such a rage that she didn't move on either.

Clara had said to ask the hunters. Good idea.

Jack.

A tiny whisper pushed through Jack's thoughts.

Still with me?

I'm here. You'll never be rid of me.

Yeah, we'll see about that.

Why do you hate me so much?

Why? Why? Are you fucking serious? You snuck into my thoughts for months, years! You planted your claws in my brain and my personality, my instincts and desires, and twisted them. It wasn't until I freed you that I could even think clearly anymore.

I gave you strength.

You gave me a guilt complex. Christ, I've been through fucking hell, and it could have been so much better, and smoother, if you hadn't—

Hadn't what? Gave you the strength to Dominate the hunters when they first kidnapped you? Or gave you the strength to Dominate Damien's mind, and save your lover? So many times, you tapped into my strength, and so many times, I pushed it on you so you could save yourself. You dragged yourself out of that fire you created to kill your grandsire, cut in half face to crotch, and you lived because of me. You got revenge because of me! Angela is dead because of me! You have a mansion. You have power and money. You have the Prince—

Nothing. Nothing about what you have done, is why Antoinette and I are an item. If anything, it's in spite of your presence that I found such an amazing woman, a woman who likes who and what I am, and vice versa.

And if it wasn't for me, she'd be in her basement, crying her silly, ancient tears, over her dead lover.

You were just saving yourself.

Exactly. Saving me. Saving you.

Don't talk about us like we're the same person.

I am you!

No! You can't have me!

Ha ha ha.

Jack sighed and let his head droop. The lights were still on in the room, since it didn't matter to a Kindred how many lights were on, when dawn came. He looked up at his wrists, and how the wounds on his hands were healed. The memory of barbed wire cutting through his palms was vivid, and he gazed at them.

God, he was starving.

Jack. Don't trust her.

Who?

Elaine.

Fuck you. She's Antoinette's friend. She trusts her, and I trust the Prince's judgment more than my own.

Elders are blind to the past, Jack. Think. Would Elaine really help her, just to help her, and you? What Kindred is so thoughtful of others?

Julias was. You know, my sire? Her grandchilde?

Don't be a fool. The Strix curse was created with a sacrifice.

Yeah, and? That was centuries ago. What does—

Think about it. Just ... think.

The curse went silent, and Jack sighed relief. The curse needed blood to run, and now that Jack was starving, it couldn't keep it up. If the Beast inside Kindred grew louder and louder the hungrier the vampire became, why did the curse grow quieter? The more details he could put together, the more he had to work with with Elaine.

The curse, it, he, was Jack, in a way. He hadn't been lying. Somehow the curse had latched onto him and created an entirely new personality, something that existed parallel inside Jack, and shared his body with the Beast. It wasn't Jack fighting against his Beast. It was Jack and the curse, fighting for control of his mind, while the curse had also inflated his Beast's power to the extreme.

It was such a disgusting problem. If he could get rid of the curse, he'd be free of his influence, but so much weaker. Given the chance, he'd happily become weak, if it meant having this thing in his head gone. The curse was sick, and horrible.

And he had a point. Not about helping Jack out a lot, fuck that. Power wasn't worth having this abomination fighting for his god damn body. He had a point about Elaine.

Jack laughed, and smiled at the floor as he pieced together some memories. Not once had Antoinette left him alone with Elaine. Either she was around, or the sheriff was around. They didn't trust her either, not completely.

Then again, Jack had spent almost every night for a while now with some part of his body on her breasts. Head, back, chest, usually his dick. Antoinette really, really, really really got off on getting him off, and was more than happy to use Elaine to indulge her kink. And, of course, he was happy to go along with whatever Antoinette wanted. Thankfully, that was usually something he wanted, too.

Each time he met Elaine's eyes, he definitely saw an edge in them, something violent, something deadly, and some awareness lurking within. She was as old as Antoinette, and it'd be stupid to think that she couldn't fight the Prince if it came to it. And still, despite all that, Antoinette felt comfortable having sex with her, and smooshing Jack between their boobs like he was sliced meat in desperate need of being sandwiched.

Maybe it was because she was a Ventrue? Daeva were fast and strong, and very, very good at melee confrontations. Ventrue were not. Ventrue were generals, meant to give orders. Maybe Antoinette figured she'd be able to handle anything Elaine could throw at her in such close proximity?

No, that wasn't it. Antoinette trusted her. Antoinette legitimately trusted her. What sort of friendship did they have, for a secret as absurd as the curse, something Elaine used to have, to not break Antoinette's faith?

---

~~Eric~~

The moment they were inside his apartment, Jessy started to strip.

"Uh, again?" he said. "We went just a little while ago."

"Yeah, but I'm always horny after a successful mission."

He paused and thought about that. It was true, mission successful. They'd showed up, saved their friends, and killed the azlu. Not all of them, since a few spiders were apparently wandering around, not a part of the greater hybrid monster thing, but Caleb and Noah insisted the few that remained would not be a threat for a long time.

“What if I don’t want to have sex?” he said, and folded his arms across his chest.

Shirtless but still in her bra, she turned around and looked at him, hands behind her back and ready to unclasp the infamous barrier. But she didn’t.

“I’d call you a liar.”

He laughed, and leaned against the closet wall near his front door. “Oh?”

“Yeah! I am a mighty gorgeous piece of ass, and you are a werewolf with an endless libido.” Grinning, she came up to him, and pressed her hands against his chest lightly, before getting in closer and pressing her bra and breasts into his chest.

He took a deep breath, and told his libido to shut up for a moment. “Come on, you know what I want to talk about.”

She frowned, stepped back, jumped onto the couch, and bounced a few times before settling. “Do ... do we have to?”

“You don’t want to?”

“I don’t like doing the talking thing. I like doing the action stuff, the kissing and fucking, even the cuddling, I like that stuff. Talking about our ... feelings, and stuff, it’s not fun.” That was telling, especially how she looked away when she said it.

He sat down on the couch beside her, eyes down as he struggled to find a way to word this. He was not eloquent. He was a dumb motherfucker.

Kat hopped up onto his lap, and sniffed him several times. Considering the shit he’d gone through, and all the weird blood he’d gotten on him, she was probably smelling some of that. The spider blood disappeared when he transformed, and he was thankful for that; suit remained intact too. But he could still smell it, and Kat frowned up at him, smelling it too and not happy about it.

“Sorry girl.”

Sighing, Jessy reached over, scooped up Kat the cat, and smooshed her into her bra as she hugged her. Eric doubted Kat cared about boobs, but she did care about soft things, and she rubbed her cheek into Jessy’s chest with the hug. Jessy smelled strange too, but Kat didn’t seem to care when it came to her.

“As you may have already guessed,” Jessy said, “I was, in fact, involved in a relationship once.”

That wasn’t what she’d told him before, but he nodded and rolled with it.

“With your cat?”

She laughed and nodded. “The cat, too. But, I mean with a person. A human, when I was just a teenager.”

“Oh? Want to ... talk about it?” He slid in a little closer to her, hooked his arm over her shoulders, and leaned back on the couch. Without comment, she snuggled into the nook of his arm, let Kat settle on her lap, and kept her eyes down as well.

“It was dumb. Just kid love, you know? It end badly.”

“How’d it end?”

“Told him I loved him.”

“How old were you?”

“Sixteen.”

“Ouch.”

She laughed, and scratched Kat around the ears until the dumbass was purring like a motor. “No shit. He dumped me on the spot, practically running away.”

“Did this guy ... have tattoos, and piercings, and smoked, and whatnot?” This would have been the sixties, after all. “Maybe drove a motorcycle he really wasn’t old enough to handle?”

She laughed again. “Yeap, exactly. I fell for a bad boy, like every teenager girl does. When I told him how I felt, he bolted in the other direction.”

“Rough way to learn that lesson.”

“Yeap. And ever since then, it left an impression.”

He leaned in, kissed the top of her head, and rubbed her further shoulder as he gently hugged her. “I don’t think you can blame your view of romance on that single event. Don’t give the guy so much credit.”

“I know I know. But, I’d be lying if I said it didn’t affect me at all. After that, I found it easier to keep people at a distance, you know? And by then I was completely addicted to sex, so it wasn’t like I was going to stop fucking any time soon.”

He nodded, as if it was perfectly normal. Most people didn’t give into their desires with such passion, but Jessy did, and had the rough-and-tough personality to stay afloat in her world despite it. It was strangely charming. Her life could be written as some sort of coming-of-age story for aggressive women.

“Well,” he said, “I’m no psychologist, but my last marriage taught me one very important lesson.”

“Don’t marry money?”

He choked on a snorting laugh; her jab had been a mix of hilarious and painful. “I was the money in that relationship, remember?”

She shrugged and beamed up at him.

“The lesson,” he continued, “was just ... talk to each other. It can be strange, awkward, and even painful. It might feel cheesy or stupid, to try and put life shit into words. But, you have to do it, because it’s a thousand times worse when you don’t.”

Sighing, she turned her head up to him, and nudged her forehead into his neck. “How wise you are, old one.”

He turned his head to rest his cheek on her hair, and squeezed her further shoulder toward him. “I love you.” Off like a band-aid, and his heart rate skyrocketed the moment the words were out of his mouth.

She shivered when he said it, like she’d just heard a balloon pop near her head, or a gunshot.

“Say ... say more things.”

He breathed a sigh of relief. That was a lot better an answer than ‘I don’t.’

“You’re a lot more honest than I figured any woman could be. You’re passionate, and you know what you like. You’re smarter than you realize. You’re genuinely fun to talk to and be with. You’re the reason I’m happy to wake up every day.”

“Plus the money.”

“Yeap, I do appreciate the money, too.”

“And I’m fucking gorgeous.” She managed to put some of her usual attitude into the comment, but her voice wavered with nervousness as she said it.

He laughed. “You’re gorgeous and you cum more easily than a single mother testing her new high powered vibrator.” Well, if she was going to go there, he could too.

That earned some laughs from her, and she resumed petting Kat, while at the same time nudging her head into his neck some more.

“I ... I love you too, ok?” She shivered again when she said it. “Ugh, I sound like a trashy dime store romance novel.”

He shook his head, and hugged her closer. “No, you don’t. Really. I ... I don’t want that sorta shit to ever make you think you shouldn’t say something, ok? Presentation and shit, I know vampires are into that, Invictus especially apparently. But that ruined my last relationship, like it was fucking poison. And since we’re both in do-or-die vocations, last thing I want is for us to ruin shit because we don’t communicate.”

“But, miscommunication and stupid decisions are the cornerstone of romance plots!” They both gagged at the same time. And then they laughed. “Ok, now we’re definitely having sex.”

“Say what?”

“First ‘I love you’? Definitely need sex. Slow, tender, romantic, lovey dovey sex.” She set Kat on the back of the couch, and crawled onto his lap. Wearing only her suit pants and a black bra, she looked damn good. Smelled a bit weird, though. “Because you love me. Looove me? Looooove me.”

He blinked, and looked left and right as if trying to escape. Which earned a punch from the woman, right in the shoulder.

“Sorry,” he said between wince and groan. “Just, didn’t expect you to be so...”

“You awakened the little girl inside me! My heart is bursting!” She laughed again, shrugged, and leaned in close so she could hug him. “But seriously, I ... I’m fucking glad, ok? Really fucking glad. It’s damn hard for me to say shit like this.” She kissed his neck, sank her knees into the couch around him, and pushed her hips forward. “I love you. And ... it’s ... exciting to say.”

“It is pretty exciting. And ... soothing.”

“Fucking right. I ... god, it feels like I can finally...”

“Breathe?” he said.

“Vampire.”

“Oh, right.”

She shrugged again, and hugged him tighter, burying her face in his neck. “So you ... really love me?”

When she lifted her head, they met eyes, and Eric found himself staring; gazing, really. Something about her was so much easier to sync with, to be comfortable around, to not feel like she was looking for a way to stab him in the back, compared to the other women he’d been with. Funny, considering she was a vampire, and Sheryl was just your everyday human. Sheryl and him had had trouble looking each other in the eyes, unless it was sexual. With Jessy, he could meet her eyes, and they could look at each other without issue. They did it now, watched each other, gazed at each other, and it felt soothing.

Of course, soothing slowly turned into heat, as Jessy inched in closer, and nudged her lips into his. After a moment, he turned it into a kiss, set his hands on her hips, and pulled her as close as her body could go.

“So, uh,” she said between kisses, “how do, um, couples normally fuck, after their ‘I love yous’?”

“You had it right, I think. Slow, tender, lovey dovey sex. Maybe some candles. Maybe in the tub?” Half for quality romantic sex, half to get clean.

Laughing, she slipped off his lap, stood up, and put her hands on her hips as she looked around in contemplation. “Do they really?”

“Probably not. Sheryl and I fucked in the back of the limousine.” Drunk.

“Ha. Sounds to me like you need proper I-love-yous sex. Candles — you handle the candles — and hot tub sound great. And I’ll get the lube.”

“Lube?”

Nodding, she tossed off her bra as she marched toward his bathroom. “Gonna have some nice, long, drawn out sex. Water sex requires lube.”

“Right, right.”

“And anal.”

“Right, right.”

---

~~Beatrice~~

Triss and Jen returned from their outing. Both fed, leaving a couple hours before sunrise, and that was usually a good time to head back home. It didn’t take a vampire very long to cross the city, but more than one vampire had died to sunlight because shit happened on the way home. It paid to be cautious.

The two vamps crawled through the tiny entrance of the Circle's cave, and were greeted by the usual sounds of Othello fucking someone. The dumbass Daeva was a master of Majesty, and often had one or two or seven women gobbling his cock, though he didn't usually bring meals back to the cave, except for his ghoul Madison. She only knew about the seven-on-one orgy because she found him at Bloodlust one time, with seven girls fighting for room to get on him. But then again, he probably didn't need Majesty to make that happen, not in Dolareido, and not with a body like his.

And, as per usual, Othello didn't bother to close the hanging fur over his alcove, which meant Jen and Triss both got to see him and Madison having a good time. Tonight, Othello sat against the curved wall of the entrance to his alcove, so half of him wasn't even inside it. Soon he'd be fucking the middle of the cave, if someone didn't tell him to back the fuck up.

Triss marched over to him, black combat boots making a hilarious amount of noise against the stone.

“Othello, dude, what the fuck?”

“Beatrice. Been looking to talk.” The gorgeous man looked up at her with his usual half-glazed look, and smiled in pleasure. He always looked like he'd just taken a drag of something, despite how that didn't work for Kindred, but at least this time he had reason for his glazed look: Madison sat on her butt beside him, her ass pointed toward his alcove, while she leaned over his lap, and had his dick in her mouth.

Triss did her best to ignore the sight, but it was hard. Madison was a beautiful woman, black with very dark skin, super short curly hair, and very, very curvy. She wasn't chubby, but she had some meat on her bones, with a huge ass and big, heavy tits that rested against Othello's leg while she sucked on his cock. Othello, with right hand down against the cave floor, had his left hand in her hair, and combed it encouragingly as she worked to get his huge dick down her throat. She succeeded, and Triss had to force her eyes up.

But, god damn, Othello was a beautiful fucker. The huge bodybuilder build would have looked too extreme on most people, but on Othello, it looked like a perfect counterpart to his laid-back personality. His brown eyes, long dark hair, and dark tan skin, highlighted his muscles just right, and Triss found her eyes drifting back down his chest, his abs, and down onto where Madison eased her head back up off his dick. She smiled up at Triss as she set a few kisses on the swollen head of her man's length, earning a thick drop of precum she licked up.

Fuck, what did he say? Right, talk, he wanted to talk.

“About what?”

“You've been going out every night with Jen, and from the looks on your faces, it isn't to fuck. What's up?”

Jen slid up beside Triss, close enough to touch shoulder to shoulder. “It's private.”

“Private? We're all witches and warlocks here.”

Triss snorted, and bumped her hip with Jen as she gestured down at the man currently getting fellatio. “Yeah, we are, but some things should be private. Catch my drift?”

He just smiled in that dumbass, ‘I'm too high to care' way, leaned his head back against the wall of stone behind him, and smiled at her. “What, don't like Madison?”

“It's not Madison I'm annoyed with. It's you.”

“Well, if you’ve got a problem, come down here and do something about it.” The threat was not a threat, from the playfulness in his voice, and the glint in his eyes. It was an invitation to have sex. “Come on, it’s been months since—”

Jen stepped in and sliced the air with her hand. “Don’t even, Othello.”

Realizing his mistake, he quickly put up his hands in surrender. “Sorry, sorry. My bad.” He was going to say it’d been months since Julias died, the dumbass.

Jen snorted and walked off to her alcove. Triss watched her for a moment before looking back down at Othello, and his proceeding blowjob. She doubted she’d ever have sex with him; way too dumb a man. But honestly, after everything she’d been through, it felt kinda nice to have someone not tiptoe around her about Julias anymore. The only person who normally didn’t give two shits about her dead lover was Jacob, and as infuriating conversations with her boss were, they were also liberating.

If Othello felt comfortable enough with her to invite her into his bed, again, she could feel comfortable enough to laugh at him, and appreciate the compliment.

“Can you just ... I mean, don’t actually start fucking in the middle of the cave, ok?”

“No worries, not gonna happen.” He gave her a lazy salute, and slipped his left hand back into Madison’s hair, earning a happy purr from her. A guiding grip eased the woman’s head back down, and she had to lean in while lifting her back to create the straight angle needed to get him to the base. But she managed it, mouth opened wide and lips spread around his girth, with a few licks sneaking in there. Othello had evidently trained her into a deepthroating pro.

“But, I guess I am being a stick in the mud,” Triss said. “Can you blame me?”

“Nope,” he said. “But, we are witches of the Circle, you know. We’re not Invictus, or Carthians, or Sanctified, and we’re definitely not dragons. We’re a small, seriously fucked up family.”

That, was damn nice of him to say, and she smiled at him for saying it.

“You just want a piece of my ass.”

“Ha, me? Madison here wants that ass just as much.” The hand in his ghoul’s hair slipped down her neck, down her naked back, and down to her ass. He gave it a slap, and used his right hand to keep Madison from lifting her head when she tried. Her ass rippled, and Triss licked a fang as she watched. Softer than Triss’s ass, but that didn’t change that it had the perfect shape and—“Triss?” Jen said, head poking out from her alcove. Their shared alcove, really, since Triss and Jen slept together every dawn, these days.

“Wha? Ah, sorry, just ... distracted.”

Chuckling like she’d caught a kid with the cookie jar, Jen stepped out of the alcove and walked over to them. Except now she was naked, and everyone turned to watch the drop-dead gorgeous woman come join them. A woman of average height and tiny waist should not be allowed to have as many curves as Jen did. Her big tits and ass might not have been as big as Madison’s, but Jen was quite thin, giving her an almost Barbie doll look. Everyone had to watch when she decided to flaunt it. Though, when Madison tried to lift her head so she could gawk at Jen too, Othello forced her head back down onto him, balls deep. And from the shiver that went through Madison’s body, Triss could see the woman really got off on being dominated by her master.

Jen stopped beside Triss again, a bit closer to Othello, and gave him a gentle kick in the side. “Come on, leave Triss alone. She’s not like us.”

Othello grinned as he looked the naked Jen up and down several times. “Us? Been a while since you’ve been with your ghouls, Jen. Longer, since you’ve been with mine.”

Jen shrugged, squatted down beside the man, and smirked at Othello from only a foot away. Being naked in front of him meant nothing to her, except for maybe a fun game. The two of them were fucking bombshells, and they knew it.

“No, I haven’t, because I was...” Jen looked down, a bit of confusion on her face as she dug through some thoughts. But it faded after a while, hidden behind her poker face. She reached out, and flicked Othello in his big hard chest, causing him to wince and let go of Madison’s head, who took the opportunity to lift it and get a breath in. Which gave Jen the opportunity to reach out, and flick the man in his big hard dick.

“Hey, ow.” Othello frowned, but it only lasted for a moment before he laughed. They all laughed, a warm and oddly gentle sound. Even Madison laughed, and she leaned in, gave his dick a kiss like she was tending a booboo, before she took his length into her mouth again.

“Such a slut,” Jen said between chuckles. “Typical Daeva. Just wants to be the center of attention.”

Jen stood up, and the two women watched as Othello, still chuckling, leaned his head back against the alcove entrance wall, closed his eyes, and came in his ghouls’ mouth. The few shudders of his body were subtle, but the way the underside of his cock flexed with each gush of his cum pouring into his ghouls’ throat wasn’t. And, despite herself, Triss watched, eyes locked onto the man’s cock, or at least, the tiny sliver of it she could see under Madison's lips.

He really did like being the center of attention. Hell, the man looked perfectly relaxed, content, and downright happy to be watched as Madison drank him. He really jived on the whole 'family with benefits' vibe the Circle liked to put out. And, maybe in another life, Triss would have thrown herself into the same orgy mindset. She loved being watched, and loved being the center of attention, too. Just, maybe not by a crowd of strangers.

Jen and Triss both gave Madison tiny finger waves, and went back to their alcove. Jen slipped under the furs, and Triss joined her, though she only took off her pants and boots. Not because she felt uncomfortable being naked with Jen or anything, just a habit. If her merger with the witches continued, maybe she'd end up like Othello, fucking her ghouls out in the open, and then falling asleep out in the open.

Or maybe she'd end up like Jacob, lost in an obsession with the occult. If she had to pick from the two, she'd probably go with the orgy mindset.

"So, what're you gonna do?" Jen asked. Without looking for permission, or needing to be asked, Jen pushed her butt into Triss's body, looking to spoon. And Triss spooned with her, because it was how they'd slept for weeks now, since Julias died.

"About Othello? I mean, I don't really care—"

"Not about him." Laughing, she turned to face Triss, and nudged their noses together. "I mean about, you know, what Black Blood asked."

"I ... don't know. It sounds like a good deal."

"It sounds like you'll become another Jacob."

She snorted, half between chuckle and groan. “Yeah, it does, doesn’t it? Think BB’s told him about the proposal?”

“Did ... did you just call him BB?”

“He’s not around. Besides, you heard him.” She shrugged. “He likes it when I’m frank with him.”

“Still, I don’t have the courage to insult a thing like ... Black Blood.”

“Not an insult. Nick name.” She shrugged again, rolled Jen back over, and cuddled up against her naked back. “Will you run off if I ... become another Jacob?”

Jen reached behind her and set a hand on Triss’s hip. “No. You know that.”

“Yeah. I do.” Sighing, Triss propped up her head with her right arm and elbow, and her left arm drifted down Jen’s body. She had promised her that she’d engage in sex again, and honestly, seeing Othello and Madison casually enjoying themselves sparked something in Beatrice. More than that, it was how casually Othello had decided to sit down in the open, and enjoy a blowjob. It was freedom, total freedom, and a strange sense of camaraderie that allowed Othello to feel comfortable enough to do that.

She didn’t know why that sounded so great, total freedom, a complete lack of borders. Maybe it was a Carthian thing; she used to be one. Maybe it was just her running from her pain, or maybe it was because she loved her friend in a strange way only witches of the Circle would understand. Maybe she was permanently scarred from losing a man she loved, and would never be able to have that sort of relationship again. Or, maybe, she was just sad, and hurting, and these witches were happy to use sex to help her with that.

An orgy with the witches, heh. Legs locked, with ghouls and thralls piled on or under them, fangs locked onto necks and wrists, dicks and pussies everywhere. She snorted as she thought of herself fucking Othello. Sure, it'd be really hot physically, but the man was too dumb. Aaron was a lot sexier, but so vanilla it was painful. Jacob? That, was a strange thought.

Then, of course, there was Jennifer.

A mewl from Madison, the telltale sign that sex had commenced, broke Beatrice. She could only listen to the mewls and whimpers of Othello's ghoul for so long, before she had to give in.

With an annoyed sigh, Triss sat up, and pulled off her tank top. Jen sat up with her, eyebrow raised, but when Triss also started removing her underwear, Jen's confused expression slowly replaced with an evil smile.

"We just fed, and listening to this is driving me nuts, ok?" Othello was a gorgeous hunk, and his ghoul was a beauty with a great ass, an ass Othello was undoubtedly taking advantage of right now.

Jennifer smiled at her, a touch of knowing in her eyes. Yeah, she understood, she got that Triss was finally feeling good enough that she could fuck again, or at least, fuck her again. She also understood that if she talked about it, she was liable to ruin the first time Triss actually felt good enough to want to fuck, in a god damn while.

Already naked, Jennifer let out a happy sigh, counter to Triss's annoyed one, as she Blushed Life. She moved the furs aside, sat back against the curve of the wall with a fur behind her, spread her legs, and got comfortable. Comfortable for Jennifer meant with right hand between her legs, teasing her clitoris with soft caresses, while her left hand teased along her left breast, caressing her nipple with the same light touch.

Rolling her eyes, Triss crawled over to Jennifer. She knew that's what her friend wanted, to have her be the one to engage, and to watch her body as she did so. Damn woman was obsessed with her ass, and crawling like a cat definitely showed off the ass.

Triss crawled onto her, and melted onto her. Jennifer caught her in a hug, and smiled into the following kiss, her eyes closing as their lips met. The Blush told their fake heartbeats to kick up, and with how squashed their chests were, breasts between each other's, they could both feel it.

"I've been dying to feel that tongue inside me again," Jennifer said between kisses.

"Ah, right, that's what this was about all along. My tongue."

"Not just that." Her friend's hands drifted down Triss's back, clutched her ass, and kneaded the meat of her buttocks.

Laughing, Triss inched her knees back along the furs. She stopped only a foot back though, and gazed down at Jennifer's tits. Big, perfect tits that the whole damn city had seen. Well, that didn't mean much anymore, considering Triss had been half naked at the last ball, just like her.

She set both hands around Jen's breasts, and squeezed. Not hard or anything, not the time for rough sex, but hard enough to feel the softness of them overflow her fingers. And her hard nipples demanded to be touched. Triss leaned in, and while still holding one of the supple tits, ran her long tongue up, down, and around it, using its extra length to coat and tease it.

Jennifer groaned, though judging from the look in her eyes, it was mostly in anticipation of having the tongue somewhere else.

Triss kept her mouth open, including the extra teeth on her cheek. She must have looked like a strange monster, half perfectly human, half scary and freaky, with the crocodile cheeks opened up so her long tongue could hang and move freely. It had a slightly pointed tip, thickened out to normal human tongue shape after the first few inches, and then continued for nearly a fucking foot. She'd used it on Jen before, to great effect, and she had a lot of lost time to make up for.

Letting her tongue hang and drag down Jen's shivering body, Triss slowly inched herself back further and further along the blankets, leaving a wet trail down Jen's flat stomach, down her smooth mons, and then onto her swollen clitoris. Instant shivers from Jen, and she moved her hand out of the way to set it on Triss's shoulders. But Triss didn't give it to her yet. She hovered over her friend's pussy, and gently rubbed her tongue up and down her clit. They still had plenty of time before sunrise, no need to rush things.

Once it was obvious Jen was dripping with anticipation, Triss got down onto her elbows and stomach between Jen's legs, leaned in, and pressed her lips against her friend's cunt. As she did, she slowly pushed her tongue into Jennifer's body, fighting against the boiling hot, soaked insides, and pressing up toward Jen's belly with each inch she managed to push in.

"Oh! God, finally." Jennifer slid a hand through Triss's hair before she set her left hand onto the furs beside her, and right onto her own right breast, content to tease and play with her body, and watch Triss do all the work.

Triss managed a chuckle. Bitch wouldn't be relaxing once Triss got her prepped.

She set her lip snug to Jen's clitoris, and bathed it in massaging kisses, as she eased another inch of her tongue into Jen's clenching snatch, and then another. And then another. Jen wouldn't be able to see anything more than a perfectly normal looking upper lip beneath a set of snake eyes, kissing her pussy, but she could doubtlessly feel a huge appendage fill her more and more. And Triss made sure to press up against the front wall of Jen's pussy again and again with a curling wave of her powerful tongue.

Jen closed her eyes, and came. Her hands reached out and grabbed Triss's shoulders, and held as the pleasure tremors worked through her. Her cunt squeezed, and fresh drops of juices trickled down onto Triss's tongue as her friend quivered. Husky moans filled the alcove, mixing with Madison's, even matching pitch; probably something Jennifer did on purpose.

When Jennifer's body calmed down, Triss lowered her jaw, snake style, keeping her upper lip on Jen's clit, but sliding her jaw down and down along her ass, so she could push in more of her tongue. A lot, lot, lot more.

"Oh fuck!" Jen pushed herself up onto her elbows, and stared down at Triss, as enough muscle forced its way into her clenching slit and into her quivering depths, to start stretching her inward. With the thickest, heaviest part of her tongue jammed into her friend's pussy, Triss had the leverage to start rolling her tongue really, really hard, forcing the tip against Jen's deepspot hard enough to push it into her by several deep, stretching inches, before the length of the tongue pressed upward in a wave.

Her friend stared down at the small distension that moved along her flat, smooth stomach, showing where Triss's tongue pressed up against it. When she got in close like this, and opened her mouth wide, Triss had the leverage and angle to jam the whole damn thing into Jen's tight little pussy, and Triss was a vampire after all. No reason she couldn't put in a little extra strength into it, to make sure it could bend and twist inside Jen's snatch, no matter how hard she clamped down.

The Ventrue set one of her hands on her stomach, just below her navel, and groaned as Triss's tongue pushed a shallow bulge of flesh up against it. Her mouth opened, and her groans doubled in volume and pitch. Now, she sounded like an animal in heat, and she squirmed and wriggled as Triss's rolling tongue fought against her cunt's spasms. More wet heat dripped from Triss's tongue, and Jennifer's hands gripped the furs around her, desperate to hold on, as Triss forced her to cum again. And again. Wow, she really was pent up.

Triss spent a few more minutes on Jen, working out those saved up orgasms like popping bubble wrap. It was a pretty awesome sight, too, Jen sitting back relaxing on the furs, legs spread, body trembling, big tits jiggling, and a bulge moving back and forth along her belly where Triss tongue-fucked her. Hypnotic. And when Jen reached out and pushed against Triss's forehead, Triss grabbed her wrists and pinned them against the furs. No way girl, get your comeuppance.

Jen stared at the rolling distension working along her belly and reaching her navel, before her eyes finally rolled back and closed as she went limp against the furs and cave wall. More of her juices came out of her, not with the squirting force Triss had a habit of doing, but still, plenty. Beatrice stopped licking, and slowly removed her tongue, letting Jen enjoy her orgasm aftershocks as Triss's tongue lightly rubbed and pressed upward against her g-spot on the retreat.

"There, that oughta satisfy you for a few minutes, you slut." Laughing, Triss lay on the fur beside Jen, and watched her as she recovered.

Despite obviously still being in the throes of post-orgasm tingles, Jen sat up, trembly and wobbly, and crawled out of the alcove. "Be right back."

Triss raised a brow, and scooted across the furs enough so she could peek out from the hanging fur of the alcove. It kept her body hidden, allowing her to watch Jen without Othello seeing her. But Othello was way too busy fucking poor Madison into a coma to notice Triss, or notice when Jen grabbed his lube. She walked past, swaying with each step, and stepped past Triss's fur barrier with an evil grin, before sitting down at Triss's legs.

Triss rolled her eyes, but spread her legs enough for Jen to kneel between them.

"I really meant to just have a quickie, you know?" she said.

Jen shrugged, leaned down, and planted a slow, gentle kiss on Triss's pierced clit hood. Instant electricity shot out from the sensitive nub beneath it, and Triss shivered as her body screamed its need. She'd denied it for so long, and a belly full of blood made it so fucking easy to light up every arousal signal she had.

"We can do quick." Nodding, Jen continued to kiss her clitoris, trapping it between her lips and burying it in full heavy licks of her tongue. Triss sucked in a breath at the sudden explosion of pleasure, and managed to smile down at her friend as Jen got comfortable on her knees. A moment later, Triss shuddered as Jen pressed wet, lubricated fingers against her ass.

Maybe Jen wanted revenge for what Triss had just done to her. Maybe she wanted to make Triss cum her brains for the pure sexual enjoyment of it. Triss was tempted to tell her to ease off, and keep this little bout of purely physical, meaningless sex to just a quick clit orgasm. But she didn't. She shut up, and let her friend slowly massage her asshole open, working lube into it as she did. She didn't mean for things to get this crazy tonight, but, god damn, she couldn't deny that she wanted it.

Jen sank two fingers into her ass to the last knuckle, and pressed them up toward her belly, all the while kissing, licking, and suckling on her clit. The familiar sparks of pleasure spread out from Triss's insides, from where her rings of muscle clenched around Jen's fingers, from where Jen's lips played with her clit, and from where the two fingers kept driving up into her g-spot through her ass. Not even a minute later, Triss's head fell back as she felt the explosion of climax rip through her.

As her muscles clamped down, Triss reached out to the fur beside her, and pulled it aside just enough to peek out. Yeap, Othello was still fucking Madison. He was sitting, legs spread, back against the curved entrance of his alcove, body facing Beatrice's alcove. Madison sat in his lap, also facing Beatrice, and she had her legs spread even wider, hooking the outside of Othello's. Her body was limp, leaning back onto Othello's chest, and her head rested back against his shoulder, also limp. Her arms dangled at her sides, completely useless.

Othello had Kissed her, and was now fucking her near-comatose body. She was still awake, but barely, and in that hyper sensitive state that left her defenseless against any kind of stimulation. Othello lifted her by the hips, and lowered her in a delicious rhythm, and poor Madison mewled as her body shook, and a tiny squirt of her juices splashed onto the cave's stone floor.

Triss looked back to Jen, and choked on a laugh. Jen was grinning at her, and juices dripped from her chin, and neck.

“Enjoying their show?” she said.

“I ... I kinda am, yeah. That dumbass is just so ... laid back, and happy, and...” Triss groaned, and looked down at Jen's hand as it disappeared into Triss's body. “Fuuuuck ... you didn't—” Jen pushed her fist in, and Triss groaned again as she felt her rings of muscle squeeze around Jen's wrist.

And then Jen really did start getting payback. She pushed her fist up toward Triss's belly, and with her other hand, squashed Triss's lower abdomen down against the small distension her fist created along Triss's abs.

“Go on, keep watching them.”

Triss managed a weak smile. Damn it, even now, her friend was just trying to help her get over Julias in the only way she knew how: total overwhelming sexual stimulation. Sighing, Triss nudged the furs aside again, just enough to see Othello, and she licked her lips as she watched the man fuck his poor, defenseless ghoul in the ass. Madison had thoroughly soaked the stone between his thighs in her juices, but had stopped cumming for the moment as Othello gave her a break, hugging her with one arm, and fondling her huge tits with the other.

But after Madison started breathing normally again, Othello grabbed her hips, turned her around, and laid her on her back on the floor. He sat up on his knees, hands still around her hips so her ass followed him up a foot in the air, legs dangling around his hips, and her tits collapsed toward her shoulders with gravity. He fucked her hard then, and Triss watched, hypnotized by the sight. Othello was facing Triss, but his eyes were totally locked onto his ghoul. And from this angle, Triss could see Madison’s breasts bouncing around, her thighs rippling with the impact, and splashes of juices as the ghoul soaked Othello. Poor girl was cumming hard, and Othello showed no signs of slowing down, causing her cum to splash more and soak both their pelvises, until it was trickling down her stomach and onto her jigging tits.

Triss watched, and kept her own moan quiet, as she came again. Jen’s deep fisting hit her insides in that super deep way, that ‘oh god how’s it getting so deep’ kinda way that pressed up toward the belly, and made her insides feel like they were going to burst. It was wonderful. It was powerful. It was enough that Triss had to turn and watch as Jen’s tits bounced around with how much she was moving her fist inside Triss’s body. And a moment later, those tits were drowned in a squirt of Triss’s cum, as a crashing wave of pleasure spread up from Triss’s insides, and started to roll up and down through her, head to toes.

“You squirt even harder than Madison,” Jen said.

Before Triss could respond, Jen began fisting her again, fist pushing up toward her depths and abs, the other hand spreading flat along her stomach and pressing down against the fist. She pumped her arm back and forth, and Triss looked down to watch as her best friend drove her to another anal orgasm, hard, earning another hard squirt from her that shot out and splashed over Jen’s hanging, heavy breasts. And then another, and another. The waves of pleasure were overwhelming, and Triss struggled to keep her eyes open so she could see what Jen was doing to her. It was insanely hot to see her squirts hit Jen in her chest and soak her jiggling tits, no lie. No wonder men were obsessed with it.

When Jen was done, Triss let her head fall back as the tingly waves of climax danced up and down her body. She pulled the fur closed completely again, and collapsed, exhausted. The Ventrue had a perfect opportunity to tease her then, but didn’t. She slid her hand out of Triss’s insides, climbed onto her, and hugged her. Of course the bitch knew her body was literally dripping in Triss’s cum, and that Triss was currently way too tingly to push her off, so she squished her fat tits right on top of her. So wet. The girl was supposed to get back into spooning position, not this.

Sighing and rolling her eyes, Triss hugged her, nice and tight, and melted into the sensation. Post orgasm always got her feeling clingy, and Jen knew it.

“Thanks,” Jen said, her face hidden in Triss’s neck. “Feel better, too?”

“Yeah. Yeah, I ... I think I do.”

“No pressure for more. But, I do think you’d be happier if you let us in.”

“Us?”

Jen laughed and shrugged, and set a kiss on Triss's nose. "The Circle. And I don't mean Jacob's occult stuff, I mean the family. Julias ... Julias is gone, but we're not." She sighed, hit by something painful, sympathy pain maybe, and sank her head back onto Triss's neck and shoulder. "It hurts me when you're sad."

Triss hugged her, nice and tight. Jen was covering up how sad she was about Julias, and that was fine. Besides, Jen might have had a point about the Circle.

"I'm not going to become Jacob," Triss said. "Gimme a century and I'm sure I'll be banging everyone in the circle, and every ghoul too. Full orgies and everything, k?"

Jen chuckled, but it had a somber sound to it. She knew Triss was just making jokes to put the pain at bay, and because she knew what Triss was doing with Black Blood and Elen. But, that was fine. This was progress.

"What about Sándor?"

"What about him?" Triss asked. "Dude is totally not interested."

"He does seem resistant. Maybe..." Jen slid her body up and down Triss's a few inches, just enough for her wet breasts and stomach to rub into her. She spread her legs too, and nudged her pussy along Triss's leg. Good god this woman, worse than that Invictus bitch Jessy. "Maybe someone else?"

"Ha, who else would want to date a couple witches? One with a crocodile mouth and snake eyes?"

She planted her elbows on the furs around her and looked up, thinking. "Maybe—"

"Maybe we should stop trying to replace Julias, yeah? He's dead, and it fucking sucks, and it still kills me. But ... but he's gone, and the more you try and replace him, the more it hurts.”

Maybe that was too harsh. Jen had loved Julias too, in her own strange way, and she was obviously trying to rebuild the trio dynamic she'd helped create. Jen frowned down at her, but it faded as she collapsed onto her side, and rolled to face away from her.

Triss didn't let her get far. She reached out and pulled Jen snug, turning her into the little spoon once again.

“Then what do I do?” the Ventrue said.

“What you're doing is fine. Really. Keep trying to convince me to have sex in more circumstances, I don't mind. And I'm sure sometimes I'll give in.” Cause, if the amount she'd soaked Jen was any indicator, her buried sex drive had just waiting for an opportunity to let loose.

“And if I think Sándor would help with some sexual healing?” Jen turned her head enough to look over her shoulder and grin at her.

Triss laughed. “Well, I mean, I'm pretty sure he's impervious to seduction, but uh, maybe? For a fling, maybe in the future? Just, don't try and force it, you know? Don't try and force someone into that...” That Julias-shaped hole in her heart and guts.

Jen nodded, and pushed her body closer. “Maybe some day in the future, we could have fun with one of our meals? Those hunters looked pretty tasty, and I know they're still in the city.”

“Heh, maybe. But Isabella looked like she was laying claim.”

“Isabella is nothing, and I doubt the hunters can be swayed by such pretty, shallow eyes.”

Isabella was a babe, that was for sure. But like many Daeva, she was only concerned with a hopeless pursuit of artistic expression, to the point it consumed her. Her dedication to her play, her actors and actresses, it was definitely a passionate endeavor, but she and it were slaves to her blood's Daeva obsession curse.

“Well,” Triss continued, “just ... don't worry about it for now, ok? I'm happy with the way things went tonight. This was good. I want to do it again.”

Jen reached over her hip, took Triss's hand, and set it on her stomach. “Even watching Othello fuck Madison?”

“Ha, even that. It's good porn. That moron is fucking pretty.”

They laughed. It felt good to laugh. It felt good to be happy. It felt good to maybe even be a little excited. Cause maybe, just fucking maybe, if Black Blood and her could work together and find something that worked, she could bring Julias back.

Some more laughter filled the cave, laughter she didn't recognize, and Triss and Jen both looked at each other, confused. They both turned over, turning Jen into the big spoon, and Triss pulled the fur curtain aside enough so they could peek into the cave.

Maybe it was Aaron, finally showing the Circle his girlfriend? That'd be interesting. Maybe—

Maybe it'd be fucking Jacob, and holy shit, that was Samantha. Jacob wore a suit, a regal sort of thing, rich purple that no one else would have been able to pull off, but combined with a black bandage tied nicely around his eyes, he looked like god damn royalty. Even the god damn shoes looked amazing, and utterly fucking dapper.

Samantha wore something a lot sluttier than Triss imagined the young vampire would wear. Well, she was Daeva. Just a matter of time. It was a pretty dress though, white, and while the skirt was long, it had a couple splits that went way way up, showing the hip of the white thong she had underneath. Open back, with nothing but a flimsy strap around the neck to keep the form-fitting chest snug to her tits.

Samantha was a milf. The short-ish wavy brown hair was cute, and her gentle face and expression were fucking adorable. Combined with the slutty dress and tight waist, she definitely gave off milf vibes. Plus, she had the dopey, content gaze of a vampire who'd just gorged themselves. A vampire with a full belly was a horny vampire, if they Blushed Life.

Jacob and Samantha stopped by Othello, who'd taken to fucking Madison in a gentle way now. He sat on his ass, back to the cave wall, legs spread, and Madison lay between his thighs on her back, her arms over her head and limp on the cave floor. Her legs were spread around his hips, but they weren't hooked on; they were too limp. Poor girl was still conscious, from the whimpers she made, but Othello had just fed on her, filled his belly up, and could probably fuck her for another hour.

"Othello, can't you control yourself?" Jacob said, Samantha's arm hooked in his own. He tried to walk past the dumbass, but Samantha took a second to respond.

Triss grinned as she saw it. Yeap, that was the look. Triss didn't get a good angle on it, being a good hundred feet from her and looking at her from her side, but it was hard to miss when a woman looked at something with 'I want to be fucked like that' eyes.

"Sorry boss," Othello said, but even as he said it, he kept his hands on Madison's hips, and gently pulled her back and forth along the stone, onto his dick. Nice and slow, just enough for the ghoul's big tits to ripple back and forth along her chest. "Hey, Samantha right? Jack's mom, Prince's childe?" He looked her up and down, and winked at her. "Looking good."

Triss and Jen both choked on their laughter. It was so bad, cheesy, and dumb, but on a beautiful dumbass like Othello, idiocy and directness worked together to be strangely charming.

It worked on Samantha, that was for sure, but she managed to recompose herself a bit when Jacob gave Othello a kick in the foot.

“Don’t flirt with my date, you moron.”

“Sorry boss.”

Jacob laughed, a hearty, warm thing, and he slowly walked toward the alcove that led to his room. Slowly, because he knew Samantha still had her eyes on Othello. Judging from where her eyes lingered, she was more interested in looking at the man than the woman, but that didn’t stop her from licking her lips when Madison shuddered. Despite the ghoul’s near comatose state, she mewled, quivered, and though Triss couldn’t see from her angle, she probably squirted right onto Othello’s pelvis and cock, with how she was still lying on the floor tits up, legs spread wide and pussy pointed right at the man.

Samantha squeaked, and Triss and Jen both struggled to keep from laughing. Well, Othello was gorgeous, and was obviously giving Madison a good time. Considering the fucker only ever fucked the ghoul in the ass, it was a good thing he was at least fucking her gently now. Either way, it was clearly doing something for Samantha.

Maybe she had an anal kink too? Pretty common among vampires, gay and bi dudes included, considering it was clean twenty-four-seven. But from the look in the woman’s eye, it wasn’t the anal doing it for her, it was the sight of a strong man fucking a woman into toe-curling heaven, over and over, that had caught her attention.

Jacob was a bit taller than Othello, and a lot leaner, but Triss had a sneaking suspicion the man was built like a fucking Olympic acrobat under his suit. Not as big or brawny as Othello, but drop dead gorgeous nonetheless, with defined muscle and abs and the works. Combined with his older look, and the salt and pepper hair, he definitely had that unusually sexy older man thing going on. Combined with the suit, he nailed the sexy older very very rich guy look.

Samantha looked Triss's way, and she gasped as she realized Triss and Jen were watching her from behind their dangling fur, only their heads visible. They both laughed, raised a hand, and finger waved at her. Once the shock of being spied on, and having been caught leering at a naked man passed, she managed to return the wave with a very awkward smile.

Jacob threw them a grin, and gave Samantha a small tug. "Ignore those sluts too. That's all anyone ever does here, have sex."

"Sounds, uh, relaxing?" Samantha said.

"The world could be collapsing around us, and these kids would celebrate with an orgy." Tilting his head back with a small roll as if rolling his hidden eyes, he guided Samantha into his alcove. But before she disappeared down its tunnel entrance, she managed a glance over her shoulder at Triss and Jen again, and a little Daeva grin showed itself.

"Well, uh, I think he's going to get lucky tonight," Jen whispered into her ear.

"Him? She's the one getting lucky."

"Heh, you think?"

"Totally. Samantha has Fifty Shades lover written all over her. If we snuck in there, guaranteed we'd find her naked with her arms tied up while Jacob does a bunch of dirty things to her."

Jen giggled, kissed her ear, kissed her neck, kissed her lips, and snuggled into her as she got comfortable on the fur. Still a while before sunrise, but it was nice to just hang. No dire emergencies hanging over their head, they could rest, and think. And Triss had to think. Black Blood's proposal was scary, scary as fuck, but he was looking for a witch to teach, and she needed his power.

Thirty minutes later, some feminine, labored moans drifted out of Jacob's alcove. Twenty minutes after that, they got loud.

---

~~Antoinette~~

The next night, come sunset, she prepared a glass of blood, and opened the door to her love's cell. Both Elaine and Daniel were with her, and Antoinette carried the crimson liquid in a wine glass. Jack raised his eyes, and managed a petite smile for her, an expression that told her that it was indeed Jack, and not the curse lurking beneath his skin.

“Good evening my love,” she said, and she helped him drink. He guzzled it down, obviously starving, and the glass of blood would suppress his large appetite for an hour or two at most.

“Good evening,” he said, voice soft, calm, though his eyes glanced to Elaine twice. Once would have been natural Kindred instinct for analyzing their surroundings. Twice likely meant the boy had a thought on his mind, something that earned a tinge of concern or interest; in this case, it seemed concern.

Antoinette undid his chains. “How do you feel?”

“Healed, but, tired, and ... still starving.”

“Oui, I can imagine. The wounds you sustained were extreme, and would have rendered any Kindred on the brink of frenzy for healing them through the day.”

“I think I’m clear of frenzy, for now. But ... yeah, I need a meal.”

“Then you shall have it. Ashely and Julee are still recovering from our last tryst, but perhaps one of my prisoners?”

The boy shook his head, and rubbed his wrists where the shackles once held him. “Uh, actually, can we go on a hunt?”

“Oh? It has been some time since we have hunted.” She tapped her chin, entertaining the idea. Jack did not enjoy the reality that she kept prisoners, and her precious pets were already drained. “Will you discuss your predicament with us, young one? Your ... dilemma?”

Without hesitation, the boy nodded. “Yeah. We should talk. You, me ... and Elaine.”

---

Elaine and Antoinette dressed up for the outing. It had been ages since she and her friend had legitimately gone hunting in the wild together; Antoinette, as all Daeva, grew far too attached to their ghouls to feed on strange, random kine. But such an idiosyncrasy did not control Ventrue, and Antoinette was delighted to join her friend, and her lover, on the prowl.

They could have hunted the shadows as Kindred often did, but such methods were simply too blasé for elders. For young Kindred learning to navigate their nightly trials, actual hunts were often required. For elders, prey came to them, and asked to be devoured. Sometimes she wondered if it would be better to let Jack perform his hunts alone, instead of being spoiled by her, but now with the power of the curse at his disposal, she was more worried he would cause a ruckus; as he once told her, his new strength lacked control.

Antoinette and Elaine both wore sleeveless, plunging dresses, with all the typical flair of a nightclub dress meant to accent sexuality to the extreme. Antoinette wore black. Elaine wore red.

Both went with loose chest straps, to insure that any who looked their way would be hypnotized by the possibility of their skin becoming exposed by roving fabric. Such a simple trick for distracting wandering eyes, timeless, and useful.

And, despite the years she and Jack had been together, she still delighted in dressing up for him, and stirring lust and awe in his honest gaze.

They went to Bloodlust.

Elaine smiled with predatory eyes as she looked at the kine that drifted within. Bloodlust did not have half what the usual nightclub of its size would have in activity, though that did not stop dozens of people congregating on the dance floor to grind their half naked bodies together. The smell of sex, of hunger, of drugs and alcohol, it mixed with the pulsing light and beating bass of the music, creating a concoction of stimulus that would drive the most saintly nun to wanton acts of rebellion and sin.

“This place has not changed,” Elaine said with a smile as she looked over Jack’s head to her. “Well, the music and fashion has, a bit.”

“Ben non. It changes as the kine change, and they have not changed much in the past fifty years.”

“True.”

They chuckled. Jack looked up at the two of them, perhaps a touch confused from how he raised a brow, and the two women laughed again. The boy likely felt humanity had changed drastically in half a century. It had, but only on the surface.

As Elaine and Antoinette walked, they made sure to keep Jack between them. It was an interesting game, to see how the kine reacted to the short, handsome man in his expensive suit, with two tall, curvaceous goddesses at his sides. Men looked at him as if he must have hired two very expensive prostitutes that were clearly out of his league, though the more observant ones realized the flaw in that reasoning, and found themselves staring in confusion, and desire. Women realized far more swiftly that Elaine and Antoinette were not prostitutes, and they also stared in confusion, though after a moment, they looked down at Jack with intrigue.

Antoinette would make sure every kine knew that Jack was here with them as her date, and that they were quite sexually compatible. And, that both she and Jack indulged their beautiful friend in their sexual adventures. To show off for her love was an endless delight. To show off for the admiring crowd was a Daeva compulsion she had long ceased trying to suppress.

But, perhaps such tomfoolery could wait. Jack had looked dreadfully serious in her cell, and the fact she had locked him in a cell for the day had been plenty cause for concern. The matter was serious, and as much as enjoying a date with her lover with Elaine in tow naturally had her seeking outlets for a growing need to play and tease, she had to focus. Such a task was never easy with Elaine, who brought out such joyful memories from the haze of her past.

Focus. The curse. It affected her lover in ways she had not considered, and Jack wished to speak of it after eating, to her and to Elaine. She had been tempted to invite her sheriff, but she was confident she could handle whatever situation arose. Perhaps she was a fool.

The three started up the stairs, Jack first, and Antoinette noticed the lingering gaze of a young man, a kine who looked at them with envy instead of confusion. Elaine noticed her noticing, noticed the young man, and promptly slipped one of her red straps aside to show the stranger one of her heavy breasts in its entirety. She waited for his jaw to drop before she grinned, redressed, and followed after Jack. Perhaps a meal for later, or a meal in the immediate, if the kine was brave enough to follow them.

He was not. Understandable. Antoinette and Elaine radiated an aura of power and control even kine could sense. And now, so did Jack.

The three of them sat in the largest booth, furthest back upon the second floor, and Jack sat between them. Elaine and Antoinette made sure to sit close enough for their thighs to touch the boy's, naturally, and such proximity drew the eye of a few kine that sat upstairs as well. But as Antoinette and her company settled into the darkness of the booth, observing kine returned to their own social groups.

One young couple were obviously celebrating their marriage, giggling themselves silly with alcohol pouring through their veins. One man entertained two women, and it was obvious at a glance that they were, indeed, prostitutes. They looked well paid, and happy to be there. In another booth, one woman entertained two men, who were obviously fighting for her affection. And in another booth, two women and two men were engaged in a game of truth or dare. It had turned sexual, as such games always did with such players, and one woman was kissing the exposed breasts of the other. From how the men were watching, it seemed they were enjoying the show their girlfriends were putting on for them. And from how the girls' hands were roaming, they were enjoying it as well.

Not her eyes, nor her Kindred senses, found any other presence in Bloodlust. No other Kindred, no Uratha or Begotten, and her network told her the three hunters, still under orders to not leave the city, were currently in one of the apartment buildings.

“I believe you are free to speak,” she said.

He nodded in agreement. “Yeah. I guess.” Sighing, he looked between them, and then down at the table, as if an anchor were latched around his head. “I ... I think I need something to drink, before I get into this.”

Elaine nodded, slipped out of the booth, and walked down the stairs. A moment later, she returned with the man she had teased before, and from the neutral, empty look in his eyes, the man had been Dominated. Antoinette would have found a woman for Jack to feast upon, knowing his preference, but it was not a sexual situation, and a male would do fine.

After a shuffle, a rather quick feeding from Jack, and then a moment from Elaine to set the unconscious man at the end of the booth, they returned to their original positions. Jack looked considerably better, and he relaxed back into the seat as he looked up.

“Thank you, Elaine.”

“You are most welcome, great grandchilde.”

“I almost didn’t want a meal. With a full belly, I ... I can tell the curse is stronger, too.”

Antoinette leaned forward and set her elbows upon the table as she looked to her lover. “You spoke of it as if it were conscious.”

“It is conscious.”

Elaine raised a brow, and looked over Jack’s head to her again, before she too leaned forward, elbows on the table. “Explain.”

“When ... when things get rough and difficult, it talks in my head. You’ve talked to it before, when it was in control.”

Antoinette sighed and nodded with the painful memory. “I had assumed it was something that intoxicated your mind.”

“It’s not. It’s got its own mind. Its own desires.” He shivered as he leaned forward as well, placing the three of them close, heads within inches of each other over the booth. “And last night, it almost attacked Damien, just because Damien finished off that azlu monster. It wanted a fight, wanted to win the fight, and Damien got the kill.”

That was an absurd reason to become irate. This curse, this voice that plagued her little Ventrue, was not mature or wise. The wise and intelligent were dangerous, but so were the stupid if they had too much power, not unlike an unstable explosive. And Jack was now carrying such an explosive.

“I do not remember the curse ever speaking to me,” Elaine said.

“You wouldn’t unless you freed it. Before, it was trying to change me, get its claws into me and alter me. But now that it’s free, it’s just ... in there, in my head, aware.”

Antoinette shook her head. “But you have never shown any sign of its presence.”

“It’s normally sleeping, or shut away or something. Sometimes it ... he ... says some things, but mostly he’s dormant. Normal stuff doesn’t awaken him. It’s when things get interesting that he comes up.”

Calling it ‘he’ did not sit well with Antoinette, but Jack knew the situation better than she.

“Interesting?” she said.

“Just what I said before, when things get tough. He’s never said a thing when you and I are together, romantically, or anything like that. But, when I had to beat the hunters, or when fighting that azlu, or when ... when Julias died, he awakens.”

“It ... he takes control?” Elaine asked.

“No, he asks for it. Taking control back is ... difficult. I guess taking it from me would be difficult for him.”

Antoinette sighed, slid in closer, and slipped her arm around Jack’s shoulders. The first time Jack had broken free of its grasp, it was the sight of his mother, unconscious and dying, that had given him the strength to break free. The second time, Antoinette had had to remind the boy that Athalia was a mother, undoubtedly calling up memories of his own. The third time, Damien had simply staked the boy, and had likely only managed such a feat due to the boy’s solo battle with an absurdly strong, arachnid monstrosity.

“He has a survival instinct,” he said. “I ... that’s not all of it. He has a desire to live.” And with that, the boy looked at Elaine.

“He ... is aware, of what we are trying to do?”

He nodded. “Yeah. We need to get to work, and now. No more waiting. I want this thing gone. The hunters are dead, so’s Angela, so’s Jeremiah, so I don’t need him anymore. Him or his power.”

Elaine grimaced, a subtle expression that guided her eyes down onto the desk. “Alright. When would you like to begin?”

“Tomorrow night, if you can?”

Elaine nodded, and looked to Antoinette. She nodded as well. The sooner they dealt with this infection, the better for everyone. She did not want this explosive in her city for any longer than it had to be.

“Did you have plans tonight, my love?”

Jack smiled up at Antoinette, and leaned his head against her shoulder. “Need to check up on the Begotten. They wanted to talk to Sándor, and I want to see how that went.”

“Your mother would like to speak with you, little Ventrue. Perhaps tomorrow? I distract her with tasks of study, and of learning to control her Kindred abilities, but she aches to know what trials her son suffers.”

That earned several different pitches of moan from the boy, and he lowered his head onto the table. “I don’t know what to tell her about this ... this whole fucking problem.”

Antoinette pat the boy on his back, and kissed his cheek. “Neither do I.”

---

The curse spoke to Jack. An unnerving bit of knowledge, and she was not sure she wished she knew it. She was quite thankful that it remained silent during her romantic time with the boy; if it did not, it would have tainted past, and future encounters. But he insisted that it did, and she believed him.

Jack had departed to speak with Azamel and the other Begotten, while Elaine dug through her old, digitally record and photographed records, in search of information that could help the boy. Antoinette would check on their progress later, but for now, she wished to speak with her childe.

Samantha came back from her outing, and Antoinette met her in the lobby of her great tower. The woman was still dressed to kill, and considering she had not come home to the tower before dawn as she was meant to, she had spent the day elsewhere. And, considering who Antoinette had seen her childe speak with on multiple occasions, it was obvious with whom she had spent the night.

The guilty expression on the soft woman's face sealed it.

"I trust you enjoyed your night with Jacob?" she said, with an obvious smile that announced to Samantha the subtext.

"I ... I ... how did you know?"

Antoinette laughed, and motioned for her childe to follow her. She did, eyes downcast once the shock dispersed, replaced with more guilt and shame.

"You and your son are similar in many ways, my childe. Honest to a fault, betrayed by your green eyes." She gestured to the woman's dress, while Antoinette wore a suit. "And, of course, you walk with shame as if this were Halloween, and you had indulged the advances of a stranger interested in your seductive nurse façade."

"Oh god, the walk of shame." She buried her face in her hands, earning more laughter from Antoinette, who slipped an arm around the woman's shoulders as she guided her.

"Do not concern yourself with shame, my childe. You are Kindred. Such concerns are for kine."

"I ... I guess."

"Though, I was serious with my question, if you would be willing to share."

"Girl talk?"

Antoinette rolled her eyes, but nodded. "Oui, though such a demeaning term does not fully describe what I thought we could engage in. I speak to a very few of romantic topics, Samantha Terry, and I thought to include you in that petite circle. You are my childe, after all, not my daughter."

Their shoes clacked along the marble floor as they descended, and Samantha considered her words. Reframing their relationship as sire and childe was important. Much could be shared between Kindred family, that could not be shared between blood family.

“Perhaps,” Antoinette continued, “I was too blunt. My apologies. Elaine’s attitude can be contagious. I should have asked, how did your night out with Jacob fair, dear Samantha? It has been ages since I have talked of him with another in your circumstance.” Not since Minerva.

“Um, well, we went to see one of Isabella’s plays. That was ... spicy. Then we went back to his cave, cause I was curious about the Circle of the Crone, and occult stuff.” Judging from the rising energy in her voice, Samantha likely enjoyed suspense motion pictures that indulged occult fiction. “And, um ... one of his warlocks, uh, Othello, was...”

“Having sex with Madison in the open, I assume?”

Samantha gasped and looked up at her. “You don’t think Jacob asked him to—”

“Non, I am sure it was coincidence. Othello routinely engages with his ghouls in public, often with a host of enthralled kine to pleasure them. Visit Bloodlust with enough frequency, and you will doubtlessly find the lovely man and Madison, having anal — always anal with that man — sex, while several kine ... well, fill her completely.”

Samantha stared at her, eyes wide, and Antoinette had to nudge her to continue their walk.

“Um, well ... he was having sex with Madison, in the open, like you said. She was really ... really enjoying it.” Samantha shook her head and covered her cheeks with her hands. If she Blushed Life, doubtless she would have exploded. “So, uh, I’d eaten, at the play, so when Jacob took me back to his room to show me all his cool artifacts, I kinda...”

“Threw yourself at him?”

“Yes!” She squeaked and hid her face again. “And before I knew it, we were naked, and ... and ... that man looks really, really good naked. I knew he was fit, but ... wow.”

Ah, there it was, the sexual fascination in Samantha’s eyes that would allow her to grow past her timidity.

“Kindred usually groom potential childer, and for good reason. Several years of misery and hard work from a kine, for an eternity of perfect physique? A worthy endeavor.”

Samantha licked her lips, and looked left and right, checking for any who might be listening, before she leaned in closer to Antoinette and whispered. “And, he ... he uh ... he knew what kind of things I’d like. I didn’t even have to ask. He just ... did them to me.”

Antoinette smiled warmly down at her childe. So naive, the young woman. Jacob had centuries of experience, and could easily read a young vampire’s desires, especially one with as open a soul as Samantha. No doubt Samantha would want the man to start gentle, to tease and caress with soft touches, to settle her. But once arousal pumped through her undead veins, Samantha would want a man to take her, grab her, hold her down, and make her do things. The sort of woman who, when in the throes of lust, wanted to be treated like a harlot. She wanted to be bound with hands behind her, and to be forced to give her lover pleasure. She wanted to be spanked, and penetrated with enough force to make her tender. She wanted a man to whisper into her ear that she was a dirty whore, and then have his hand tighten around her throat, as she soaked him in her arousal.

So terribly sweet and naive. She likely thought her desires taboo and uncommon. Little did she know how common her tastes were.

“And after we were done,” she continued, “we started talking. I talked about ... Mary. And ... he talked about his life, too.”

This, Antoinette had hoped for. Her gambit had succeeded. Now, to see if Jacob was manipulating Samantha, or being honest with her.

“Please, dear childe, continue.”

Chapter 126

~~Jack~~

His trip to speak with Azamel had been successful, more or less. Azamel looked worse than ever, but he found her speaking with Sándor, and it seemed like they were coming to some sort of agreement. Not that Jack got to stick around long enough to find out more. Azamel promptly booted him out, saying her arrangements with Sándor were none of his business.

It was his business, kinda. It was his job to keep the different species getting along. But he left anyway, a bit thankful for her asshole attitude. He had his own problems to deal with, and they were stacking up.

First, get the curse under control, or gone. Second, find out what the fuck the tears were about. Third, find a way to help Mary. Fourth, rebuild his life in the Invictus.

“You really remember nothing?” he said.

Elaine, sitting at a heavy, dark table, tapped on her laptop a few times before looking at him. “I remember some things, young Ventrue. But you must understand. Torpor wears at our memories, and when Elders feel their blood lust grow too strong, we sleep for decades to calm the hunger. Decades of strange, vivid dreams.”

He sat down across from her, maybe four feet between them, and nodded. “I get that. But, this curse thing, it must have been a pretty big deal, right? It must have left an impression no amount of torpor could wipe.”

His great grandsire leaned back in her fancy office chair, and looked to the sheriff. Ever since Damien had returned Jack to the tower with a stake in his heart, everyone was put on red alert or something. Jack was never alone. No matter who he was with, someone had their eye on him, and that was usually Daniel. It sucked. It really sucked. Antoinette assured him that if she was with him and Elaine, in any capacity, Daniel would not need to be there; the two of them could handle the curse together.

Two elders keeping tabs on him at all times? Bleh.

“Digging up those memories is difficult, Jack. I have been hesitating to do so.”

“I noticed.”

She raised a brow at that. “You did?”

He shrugged and offered a small smile. “I’m your great grandchilde, what do you think?”

Sometimes, just sometimes, he could be a real cocky brat. He knew it, and now, so did Elaine. It made her laugh, and it proved a point: just because he had a habit of wearing his emotions and thoughts on his face, didn’t mean he was an idiot.

“If Julias sired you, then I must consider that you are smarter and more resilient than you appear.”

He grinned, victorious, and leaned back in his chair as well. Ventrue to Ventrue. Of course there’d be a little bit of combative tension between them, like between political figures, or anyone who liked to talk a big game.

“Yes, I have been avoiding this,” she continued, “because it is a terribly painful past, Jack.”

“More painful than having him speak inside you, tempting you? More painful than ... yeah, shit Antoinette’s probably told you about already.”

She winced and looked down at her laptop, but didn't type anything. “Even now, it listens?”

“Yeap.”

“But it says nothing?”

“Yeap. I think he'd prefer—”

“You call it he. Why?”

His turn to wince. “Because it is, he. I didn't think so at first, but after the last conversation I had with him, it became pretty clear. This isn't like I've been possessed by some alien, or spirit. This is like ... something that's grown out of me. The curse created him in me, or from me, or something.”

“Doctor Jekyll, Mister Hyde?”

He shrugged. “I guess.”

She nodded, opened her mouth, but closed it after meeting his gaze. No need to say it. If that was the situation, then the curse had created this second personality out of the darkest, most fucked up desires he had. Not exactly a nice thing to learn, that he could have those kinda thoughts inside him. But, then again, becoming a vampire probably had something to do with those thoughts, too.

“I will tell you what I can remember,” she said, and glanced over her shoulder at Daniel. She didn't want him to hear this, but considering the situation, it was unavoidable. “I remember hunger, and rage. I remember running through forests, with wolves at my side.”

“Hunting you?”

“Serving me.”

Ah. That made sense, and it was a pretty powerful image. Gangrels and Ventrue had an easy time controlling animals, and while Elaine was no Gangrel, that didn't mean she couldn't run through the woods with a pack of four-legged death machines at her beck and call.

“How long ago?”

“Hundreds of years, well before I sired Viktor. Before I met Antoinette.”

Before she met Antoinette. Well, she had met Antoinette a super long time ago, so of course her memories of pre-Antoinette would be hazy. Maybe she remembered some stuff about Antoinette when she was younger. Not exactly the right topic for the moment, but his curiosity jumped up and waved its arms at him.

“Do you remember much about meeting her?”

Elaine knew what he was getting at before he finished the sentence, and she chuckled as she leaned forward a little. “Hazy memories, without context, without words. But I remember some scents, some tastes, some emotions, and some images. Would you like to know what they were?”

“Yes, please.” And he damn well knew the look on his face said ‘tell me something sexy’.

“I remember the smell of skin, of kine, of wine. I remember the smell of stone; her castle, no doubt. I remember the sight of kine piled atop each other, bathing each other in bliss and sin. I remember the taste of one of her ghouls, a well fed and healthy male; rare for the time. I remember seeing your lover naked for the first time, and the shock of witnessing someone as tall and as well endowed as her. I remember thinking her unusual eyes and white hair were surely a sign she was one of Dracula's brides."

"Ever find any proof of that?"

"No. And she denies it, though I know her memories of such a time are dust." She waited until he nodded, and continued. "I remember bits and pieces of the first time she and I touched each other. Even then, our relationship was purely one of friendship. She indulged in sexuality in such extreme ... abandon, that I was intrigued. I can remember my curiosity being piqued."

And Jack's, definitely. "I don't understand how two friends can just ... well, I suppose I can." Vampires being vampires. And, people being people. Not everyone attached romance with sex.

She grinned at him, and looked up as she dug through more memories. "I taught her much about being a commanding presence that will not yield to others. She taught me much about embracing pleasure."

"Sounds like a good trade."

Elaine leaned in, and grinned at him even more, a bit of that Ventrue edge in her eyes mixed with something playful, and very sexual. "Indeed. I remember the feel of thralls, bodies intermingled with our own. I remember the pleasure of having two men inside me, while your lover sat on the face of the man I sat upon. I drank the blood of our meals off her breasts. I held her in my arms, and massaged her body as a dozen kine took turns filling her sex with seed, one after another."

"A dozen men? Sharing?"

"Indeed." She giggled, a higher pitched sound than Antoinette would make, but still a mature sort of laugh that sent a happy jolt up Jack's body. "A shame such memories are a blur. They mingle, and context is lost. But I remember once literally lying upon the bodies of her thralls and ghouls, as they carpeted the floor. Fingers, dozens, hundreds of wet, warm, hungry fingers entered me until I was taut. The shafts of men stood upright, being kissed by the lips of others, or by me, and their cum gushed up and onto my body, only to be kissed away by her entourage. Soon I sank into the skin and flesh of her thralls. They climbed over me, penetrated me, and I can remember the feel of the girths of half a dozen men trying to penetrate me as they covered me. They succeeded.”

He gulped. “Uh...”

Her grin widened. “Yes, at the same time. A night of such reckless abandon led to being stretched wide, to the point of absurdity. I climaxed again and again, soaking the flesh of Ann’s dozens of thralls, and as I did, she climbed onto me, and kissed my breasts and stomach. Soon, what her kine did to me, was done to her, and I kissed her breasts and stomach as the shafts of men and fingers of women filled her to bursting.”

He put up his hands and sat back. “Jesus. Ok, uh, I think I’m saturated on the kinky stories.”

“Oh? So soon?” She licked her lips as she watched him. “I have more.”

“Yeah. Starting to feel a little inadequate, hearing stories like that.”

More laughter. She shook her head and waved a hand aside, dismissing his words. “If physical stimulus was the only concern, young Ventrue, women everywhere would simply acquire several oversized vibrators, sit in a tub of lubricant, and spend every night filled to the brim with buzzing plastic.”

“Some do.”

“Yes, but do you deny that most women would rather the touch of another soul to give such pleasure?”

After a few seconds to consider it, he sighed and nodded. “Yeah. Antoinette’s told me about her past, the crazy orgies, and how she’s grown up, moved on, and is happier with the sexual dynamic we have. But to a young guy like me, I guess it’s hard to believe sometimes.”

“Believe it. In a few hundred more years, orgies may tire you as well. But the touch of a lover? Someone you genuinely care for? Ambrosia, and an aphrodisiac for all eternity.”

He grinned at that, and then frowned. “Kinda makes me feel guilty for, you know, all the orgies she’s been burying me in.”

“Do not feel guilty. Antoinette knows you are young, and it brings her endless joy to, as you said, bury you in novel pleasures.” Again, she grinned a devil’s grin. “And you are a man. I would be remiss if I did not admit men have a ... larger appetite for such lopsided indulgences.”

“Tell that to Natasha.”

Elaine laughed again, heartier than before, a laugh from the belly. “That small woman is such a delight, terribly cute, and cunning and intelligent. And to know the timid little creature has a grand hunger for large, animalistic men, multiple, is both hilariously cliché, and yet wondrously perfect. Have you seen the pornographic videos she has filmed?”

“Um, no?” Oh god what the fuck.

“Ah, perhaps I should not have said anything. But the little Mekhet has apparently been indulging in something of an erotic project? With her two deliciously ... massive boyfriends.” She leaned forward, really close, and spoke in a whisper. “Such a tiny thing.

Have you ever seen a woman's body struggle to hold the girths of men so much larger than her? You can actually see the shape of—

“I'm not deaf,” the sheriff said.

Jack almost jumped out of his seat. Of course his great grandsire didn't react at all, except to look to the corner where Daniel stood, and offer the man an inviting smile. Right, she was interested in him. A bunch of what she'd just said was probably embellished to make Daniel squirm; Mekhet generally did, when bombarded with TMI.

“Your childe,” Elaine said, voice louder and emphasized, “is growing up, Daniel. A part of that is learning how to enjoy our second lives.” As she looked at him, her smile faded, and an annoyed scowl replaced it. “A lesson you should learn.”

The man shrugged and looked to the side. He probably didn't want to have the conversation, especially considering he was in some sort of relationship with Athalia.

“This talk reminds me,” she said, looking back to Jack, “about something Ann told me. Apparently Clara is interested in you?”

He winced. “I guess. I mean, I've made it pretty clear I'm with Antoinette, but she's still ... yeah, interested.”

“And she has no desire to join you and Ann?” More grins. “I am sure you could satisfy five women.”

He didn't even smile or chuckle at that. Not that it wasn't kinda funny, just beyond absurd. “I'm one guy. And Clara isn't really into the whole ... sharing thing.”

“Oh? I have heard she has spent the night with four rather scrumptious ghouls, at the same time, more than twice.”

He winced again, and then, because his imagination was a dumbass, he couldn't help but picture what Elaine had described earlier, too many dicks trying to fit into too few holes, except with Clara and Jessy's ghouls. And Clara was beautiful, gorgeous, and fit as fuck. God damn it.

"She was drunk. And I'm guessing Jessy teased her about shit before that, and, yeah. If I was her, drunk and feeling ... neglected, and four gorgeous women showed up at my door, I'd probably let them in, too."

"And the times after that?"

"Yeah, probably then, too."

Elaine pat the table a couple times, as if patting his head. "Your honesty is a delight."

"Bites me in the ass a lot."

"No doubt. But, let us move on. I can regale you with more tales of your lover's overabundant sexual history later."

He leaned back in his chair, nodded, and took a deep, useless breath. "Alright. I've been hoping we could start working on this earlier, but you've been kinda—"

"As I said, the memories are painful. But also, digging up what I could of my records has been difficult. I have contacted my thralls, and they have searched tirelessly through my old records. Ancient tombs and old journals of parchment must be handled with care."

"I'm surprised you didn't, I don't know, keep meticulous detail of all that stuff."

She raised a brow at him, and shook her head. "You do not understand. Hundreds of years ago, superstition ran wild. Humans, usually women, were frequently burned alive for suspicion of witchcraft. In an age where intelligence was either sought after, or actively destroyed, any vampire had to be wary of keeping records.”

That made sense. In the modern age, or hell, any time in the past two hundred years, record keeping was just a normal part of life. Before that, not so much. The further back you went, the stranger and rougher people were with information, and a woman keeping records about ‘curse’ and ‘blood’ and whatnot, was probably doing so at risk of her own life. No matter how strong a vampire was, they couldn’t stop a thousand humans armed with torches and flaming arrows.

“Yeah, you’re right. My bad. I just keep thinking you should have all this organized in digital journals.”

“I dare not record everything digitally. Some of my deepest, darkest thoughts lay within those books, written in English half a millennium old.”

“Even now?”

“Even now. My thralls will be taking digital pictures, and sending them to us across a secure network. But then we are to ... what is the word, ‘scrub’ the drives that see these images, as my thralls will with theirs.”

“Sheesh. Are all dragons that paranoid about their secrets?”

“Yes. The Invictus and Cathians are too stupid to manage such knowledge, and would destroy themselves with it. The Sanctified are not to be trusted, for they are sinister, and seek to rule all.”

Well, that was blunt. It made him smile. She really was a Ventrue, and his great grandsire.

“And the Circle?”

“The Circle are ... difficult to predict or understand. I would rather they did not have such knowledge, but they are the least troublesome of the four. They would at least understand the value in such ancient words, and many witches would either seal them away, or not use them for ill.”

“Many witches, but not all.”

After a heavy sigh, she closed the lid on the laptop, and looked at him with heavier eyes. “Yes. As you can imagine, I do not want Jacob to have such knowledge. He is ... far more deadly than your average warlock, and I do not trust his motives.”

“Neither do I, but the Prince seems to trust him.”

“That she does, to an extent. I have warned her against the man, but your lover is as old as I, and is a fount of wisdom and intelligence. If she trusts him, she has reason to.”

Considering Jacob seemed to have some sort of interest in his mom, he was happy to know Antoinette trusted him, sorta. Knowing Elaine didn't, on the other hand, sent concern up through him like he jammed a fork in an outlet. If Jacob hurt his mother, the fucker was going to learn what the curse was really like.

“What can you tell me,” Elaine continued, “about when you freed the curse? Leave no detail unspoken.”

Time to dig up his painful memories then. Ugh. But it was only fair. “I remember ... flashes of history, things the curse had seen. I told you this before.”

“Tell me more.”

He frowned. Of course she realized that he could dig up the memories if he really tried, and she had no qualms about asking him to suffer for it.

“When Julias died, the world went white. It was the first time I actually got to see ... the Beast, I guess.”

“Few Kindred have ever managed such a feat. The Circle speak of it, but no other.”

“Ch’yeah, well, people are better off. It’s a big, ugly thing, all smoke and fangs and teeth, and beaks, and fur and shit. And mine was wrapped in chains. It took me on a trip down memory lane, showed me you, and Susanna, and Viktor and Julias, each time they did something ... vampire-y.”

“You saw me, with Susanna?”

“And some other woman.” He winced as he tried to dig up the memories. It was hard. Old, hazy things, buried under alien instincts, weren’t like trying to remember yesterday. He had to find them, and re-watch them in his own mind, over and over, and do his fucking hardest to not let his own imagination pollute them. Each time, it felt like he was rubbing himself against the Beast inside, tearing away the skin of humanity, like a big chunk of pork rubbing against a huge cheese grater.

“There was someone else there,” he said, “a Sanctified I guess. I had no idea who he was, and the curse was showing me the memories in reverse. But after some more jumps, he showed me that same man, casting some sort of ... spell, I guess, on Susanna. Full on ritual stuff.”

“The Lancea et Sanctum is known to use Theban Sorcery, from time to time,” she said, scowling as she did. “Tell me, what can you remember of the ritual?”

“Susanna was on her knees in a drawn circle, and the priest dude had some things on the floor around her. Uh ... crucifix with Jesus on it ... a spear ... necklace with a cross ... and some things I didn’t recognize. I think I saw a stone? Something black. And I think I saw a skull, maybe, of an animal.”

Elaine opened her laptop and typed away. “And the man?”

“A blur. Plus, hood. And ... and he was carrying a book. I thought it was a bible at first, then maybe that Testament of Longinus I know Damien reads.”

“Unlikely. Neither contain words of power.”

“You’ve read the Testament of Longinus?”

She grinned at him. “I’ve read the bible in various points throughout history, various versions. I have done the same with the Testament of Longinus, the Quran, the Torah, and others.”

“Damn.”

“Dragons hunger for knowledge, as you can imagine.”

He nodded, and laughed. “What about my mom?”

“What about her?”

“She’s a Daeva now, right? I can’t, for the life of me, imagine her being anything like Antoinette, all sexual and teasing. And now she’s a dragon, and I can’t imagine her getting hardcore into cataloging data or researching things either.”

“She is Daeva, but to call her a dragon is perhaps a bit premature. While she is a fledgling, she is Ann’s responsibility, and will be exposed to the most basic tenants of our covenant. But in Dolareido, she is not bound to her sire’s covenant, and may join another once she is no longer considered a fledgling.”

“Guess I never really considered joining another covenant. I get the Invictus. I understand them. It clicks.” Money. Territory. Power.

Much as he didn't approve of Michael's methods, he couldn't image dealing with another covenant's approach.

She nodded. "I—oh, one of my thralls has found something of interest." She clicked on her laptop a few times, eyes focused. "Jack, have you ever meditated before?"

"Meditation? Uh, no. Quieting the mind? Doubt I could ever do that."

"Then, little Ventrue, you are in for a painful learning process."

---

They ran into the obvious roadblock the moment he tried meditating: Jack never stopped thinking. Always thinking, always analyzing, like a typical Mekhet. If a Mekhet had sired him, it would have fit, though Jack didn't really have a desire to learn every secret or anything. He just had one of those minds that liked to analyze, to practice hypothetical conversations, or to just voice his own hypotheses to see if they made sense. Most things made sense in the mind, but once you put them to words, it was a lot easier to spot flaws.

Or, he played music in his head. Usually it was metal music, but even when he was just getting up to cross a room, a random diddy might play. No matter what he did, his mind loathed inner silence, and refused to ever let it happen.

The key aspect of meditation, was silencing the mind. Apparently most learned by focusing on their breathing, using the focus as sort of a shield against intruding thoughts. And if you did have an intruding thought, you had to learn to let it go. Don't latch onto it, don't process it, just, release it.

Yeap, he sucked at meditation. It wasn't his focusing that was a problem. He'd always had better focus than most. The problem was he was good at focusing on something like a manic psycho, obsessing over it, and pouring energy into it. Focusing on his breathing felt like focusing on watching paint dry, and his mind screamed to be let loose.

He sat on his butt, on a pillow, in one of the cells in Elysium. The door was locked, with Daniel and Elaine outside. Despite their utter silence, he could sense Elaine's presence, and Daniel's. They were distractions. On top of that, breathing was pointless, and doing it was a very manual process for a vampire.

They spent a few days trying different approaches. Jack put his life on hold, his duties, his Invictus job as a Right Hand, to try new things with Elaine. Michael understood. It needed to be done, and if they didn't get this working, Jack would forever be a liability.

But Elaine had an idea, a scary idea, but an idea. And it fucking worked.

Jack stared into the flame of the candle, and focused on its shape. The curl of the flame; he dismissed the thought that tried to analyze why it was shaped that way. The difference in colors; he dismissed the thought that analyzed why there were a few different colors. The way it danced in the stale air; he dismissed analyzing the still air, and how a candle flame could dance in it. He kept his eyes on the burning aura, and let his mind grow quiet.

There was nothing else, just the flame. Only the fire existed. Vampire bane.

Jack.

And there he was. The curse, a voice in his mind, but nothing more. A thought, to be dismissed.

Jack. You can't ignore me.

Jack sighed slowly, and stared at the fire. A drum solo ran through his head, something from Lamb of God. He dismissed it.

Jack, I'm not just a thought in your head you can suppress. I'm a person, stronger than you, and I will not be silenced.

The flame danced, and Jack watched the orange and amber, until they drowned his thoughts in their eternal canvas. Fire. Simple, alive, and it reduced anything Kindred to ash and dust in seconds.

You can't silence me. I can silence you, because I know control, but you ... Jack ... Jack! If you silence me, the fuck are you going to do when shit hits the fan, and you need me?

He cast his thoughts into the flame, and let it devour them. All that was left was silence.

Shit's going to get rough eventually, and you're going to come crawling back to me. You can't control the power of the curse. I can. You're nothing without me. When someone's on death's door, and the only person who can do shit about it is you, you'll come running back to me. You're nothing without me! Nothing!

Words on the air, that drifted into the flame. Meaningless.

He smiled as he closed his eyes, and let his mind relax. The silence continued, like a small stream, and he could tell it separated himself from the curse. With time and effort, Jack could make that small stream into a raging river, and the curse would never be able to cross it.

He got up, and knocked on the door. Elaine stepped in.

“How did it go, great grandchilde?”

“I think we're making progress. He tried to talk to me, but I managed to ignore him. Like, completely.” Just like the curse had ignored Jack in the Great Below, straight up ignored Jack to the point Jack might as well have not existed until the curse expended their vitae. How the tables had turned.

She sighed relief and touched his shoulder. “That is a step, then. It had helped me, but my circumstance was different than yours.”

“It’s a great first step. But, next time, let’s get rid of it completely.”

“That ... will be difficult. My thralls have found little in my archives, but there are some mentions of the Lancea et Sanctum.”

“Sounds like a place to start. I’ll see about talking to Damien and Maria.” He’d been avoiding Damien, but he had good reason. “And I need to talk with the hunters. Harcourt, ideally.”

“How about your mother?” a third voice said.

Elaine and Jack looked down the hallway, and Jack winced as he realized it was his mother talking. Shit, another person he’d been avoiding, and probably shouldn’t have been.

---

The two of them entered her bedroom, and he spent a little time looking around at the walls where she’d hung up curtains, and the hilariously grand and massive vanity table. The mirror, wide and tall, showed off the various things she had scattered on the desk, and he stood in front of it as he looked down at them.

A picture of his dad, James, with his mother when they were young, back in the nineties. A picture of Mary and Jack when they were kids. A picture of Jack, not long before he died. A picture of his mom with Mary, something they took after Jack died, when she was finally moving on with her life.

“You’ve been avoiding me.”

He winced. “Yeah.” Christ, the guilt hit him double hard, and he picked up Mary’s picture. His mom had finally managed to put her life together, then lost her daughter and her life in a single night, and now the only thing she had left, him, was avoiding her. Fuck. Fuuuuck. “I’m ... sorry, about that.” She really shouldn’t have gotten these pictures, but she did. Antoinette probably didn’t approve.

“I thought you were just being a boy, a man, doing what all young men do, and growing up.”

“I mean, yeah, but no. We’re vampires now. That old family approach to things doesn’t really apply anymore.” He set Mary’s picture down, and joined his mom on the edge of the bed. She was in a suit, just like him, though Antoinette liked her suits with a little more artistic flair than Invictus.

“Then why’re you avoiding me?”

“Because it wouldn’t be fair.”

She blinked at him. “What? Fair to you? I don’t—”

“Fair to you.”

“I’m ... not sure what you mean.”

Sighing, he gestured to himself as he turned on the bed, one leg pulled up onto the blankets so he could face her. “Mom, you’re a fledgling. Your job right now is to learn how to manage being a vampire. The only things on your mind should be”—he counted off on his fingers—“learning how to hunt, how to avoid the sun, how to keep your head low, and how to maintain the Masquerade.”

“Well they’re not. I’m concerned about my son.” She turned to face him as well, and she glared at him. It was her Mom glare. A powerful glare, but Jack had gotten used to facing it down, after his dad died.

“You know about the curse.”

“That doesn’t mean you’re not my son anymore.”

“Mom, come on, I need you to stop jumping on that reflex, and listen to me.”

“I don’t—”

He swiped his arm across the air, hard enough to make the bed shake slightly. “Listen. To. Me!”

She recoiled a little, eyes wide, and he ground his teeth as he looked down. Hard to tell if that burst of anger was the curse, or just him, frustrated that his mom fell into old habits so easily.

“Jack...”

“That old family life is gone. You’re my mom, but you’re a vampire first. Hell, you’re the Prince’s childe before you’re my mom. No one, and I mean no one, not one single vampire in this whole city, is going to think of you as my mom first. You’re Antoinette’s childe first, and they’ll interact with you based on that. And me, I’m Jack, the guy who survived Lucas, the guy who survived the azlu, twice, the guy who beat the hunters. The cursed guy, who’s dangerous.”

She looked down, obviously wanting to say something, but knowing full well he’d interrupt her if she did. It wasn’t the listening he wanted her to do, but it was better than a meaningless argument.

“This week, I went to another realm, Mom. Like, literally, another realm of existence, full of ghosts.”

“Ghosts? Like...”

“Yeah, like Mary. My friends nearly died there. I took on a fucking azlu there”—his swearing earned a wince from her—”and beat it on my own. My other friends showed up to rescue us, and the curse nearly attacked one of them, just because I was annoyed they spoiled my fight.” He got up and started pacing, eyes looking around randomly as he tried to summarize his crazy life in a way she could understand. “And that’s just the curse, the latest and biggest problem, being a thorn in my ass. Before that, I was getting pulled into important roles in the Invictus, from organizing insider trading, to literally showing up in dark alleys and exchanging briefcases full of money. In the chaos of a bunch of elders dying and Natasha leaving, I became a Right Hand. The werewolves and monsters showed up, and I found myself playing liaison between them and vampires; Avery and Azamel have some rough histories in Dolareido, and the Prince and the Invictus thought it’d be a good idea to use me as a communication buffer.”

His mom stared at him, eyes wide. Some of this she knew, some she didn’t, but this was the first time he’d dumped it on her like this. He had to. If he gave her the information slowly, to try and parse like Damien or Natasha or Antoinette might, she’d rationalize each individual point away. Better to bury her in the truth until it broke her stubbornness.

“But,” he continued, “despite all that, I spent the first chunk of my vampire life not dealing with that. At first, I was just a dumb vampire, learning the ropes. Julias ... Julias, he held my hand, and taught me the basics. Taught me how to hunt, how to feed, how to avoid the sun, how to use my Disciplines in a bunch of different circumstances. And when he wasn’t doing that, Antoinette was helping me. And the two of them gave me time to get over my personal shit.”

“Personal ... shit.” She struggled with swearing, and he almost laughed. “How did that go?”

“It was hell, Mom. I killed someone my very first night, Mrs. Pavala. Drank her dead in a frenzy, and when I came back to my senses, I ripped her fucking head off to disfigure the corpse, so no one would point out the fang marks.” His mom knew about Pavala. She didn’t know about him decapitating her corpse. “I spied on you and Mary a bunch of times. I visited my own grave. Just ... just getting used to being a new person was brutal. A lot of vampires kill themselves in the first few months after their embrace.”

“Antoinette told me that. I...” She shivered and rubbed her arms. “When I first woke up, and she told me Mary was dead, I ... I thought things like that. But but, that’s when she showed me you!”

He sighed, sat down beside her again, and grabbed her hand. In the past, that’d be something she did to him. Seemed only fitting he do it for her.

“I’m here, alive, much as a vampire can be, and I don’t plan to go anywhere. But my life is one giant pile of crazy, with a lot of high stakes gambles. You know how many years I should have been a vampire before dealing with the shit I deal with now?”

“No.”

“Fifty, for the political shit, for being a Right hand, for dealing with Azamel and Avery. A hundred or more for the fucking monster fights and realm hopping. The shit I’m dealing with is not normal, but I’ve managed. It’s not a normal situation though, and you shouldn’t get involved in it.” He pointed a finger at her, and jammed it into her shoulder hard enough to make her wince and smack his finger away. “You, for the next few years at least, should be focused on nothing more than just learning to be a vampire, and enjoying the good parts of being a vampire. Find the things that are good about it, and embrace them. Being a vampire can really suck, but it can be really awesome too.”

She smiled at that, and met his eyes again. “Awesome?”

“Yes, awesome.” Ok, time for the sex talk. Why he was giving the sex talk to his mom, he didn’t know, but it was important she realized how different things were now. Thank god he wasn’t alive anymore, or he’d be vomiting everywhere from sheer awkwardness. “Go get laid, Mom.”

“What!?”

“Go get laid. Find a mark, drink them and fuck them.” More cursing too, because he needed their mother son relationship to evolve, or Samantha was going to get herself killed trying to protect him from something. “Hell, with Antoinette teaching you, I’m sure you’ll be a master of Majesty in no time, so, have yourself an orgy.”

“Jack!”

“I’m serious! Go, have an orgy. Enthrall a few kine and go nuts. Maybe go find Isabella and enjoy some time with her ghouls ... and her and Hella, if you’re into that.” He didn’t think his mom was bi, but the fuck did he know? “Go spend some of Antoinette’s money on some male prostitutes from the entertainment district. Hell, go to Devil’s Corner and rent out a whole troupe of hookers, if you want. Or just ask Jessy if you can borrow her ghouls. I know she’ll lend them to you. If you want, go talk to the witches, and see if they’ll hook you up. I know they’re basically in an orgy twenty-four seven.”

The mention of witches made her squirm. She’d have looked away too, but her eyes were already locked on her legs, the whole conversation obviously overwhelming her awkwardness limit.

“Jack...” She squirmed a little more, wriggling in embarrassment until she found the words. “Jack, I’m sleeping with Jacob.”

“Say what?”

---

~~Beatrice~~

Three weeks after her first meeting with Elen.

It was getting easier. She didn't think about him as much anymore, and didn't feel guilty when fucking Jen anymore, either. The guilt hadn't ever really been a problem; Julias would have wanted her to find some solace in Jen's arms. It was more the ache and misery that'd been a problem, and as the months went by, it faded.

She'd been worried that maybe her sessions with Black Blood and the immortal Elen would have her swimming in memories about Superman, but they didn't. It was a project for her to pour her passion and energy into, and that made it easier. Maybe she'd get to have Julias back, maybe she wouldn't, but holy fuck she was going to try. And that made it easier, took the edge off not having him in her life.

"Samantha's moans were really cute last night," Jen said.
"Sounded like they were being gentle."

Triss nodded, and twisted her body to get a better angle. She and Jen sat in their shared alcove, naked, and were in middle of having their legs wrapped around each other, to celebrate dusk. And they had the fur curtain pulled open, cause, why the fuck not. She didn't care anymore if people watched. The only people in the cave were members of the Circle, and honestly, it was kinda fun, letting them see sometimes.

In a little bit, Jen and Triss would go outside, and take a trip to speak with Black Blood again. But, a little sex first, to start off the night proper.

"That a good thing?" Triss asked.

“I think so. With a woman like Samantha, she’ll have her strongest climaxes from rough sex. But a night of soft, tender sex? Emotions were involved.”

That made sense. Samantha reeked of the sort of woman who read trashy romance stories with the same shirtless guy on the cover, a guy who would treat her softly outside of bed, but treat her like a dirty dirty girl once in bed. It was a cute thought, for sure.

Triss frowned at where her legs were locked with Jen, and where their slits were squashed together. Scissoring sucked.

“This is like slamming two clams together, Jennifer.”

“Because your technique is atrocious. Come on, get in closer and grind, not thrust.”

Triss rolled her eyes. This whole thing was Jen’s idea, and the girl was a master of sex, but this attempt at expanding Triss’s boundaries was a failure. After a few more minutes of grinding and not finding a position Triss enjoyed, she collapsed back on her fur, and stared up at the ceiling. Her head drifted to the side, and she looked out at the empty cave.

Othello lay in his alcove, fur also pulled wide open. He was getting his good morning, er, evening blowjob from Madison, like usual, and like usual, he did it halfway in the opening of his alcove so everyone could watch. After having seen it hundreds of times, Triss should have grown bored of it, but she didn’t. They were both gorgeous, and it was arousing as fuck to watch them together.

So, with some porn to watch, Triss gave her hips a few extra swaying grinds. It barely registered on the pleasure scale.

“I give up.”

“You, are hopeless.” Jen reached down and slapped the one butt-cheek Triss had not pinned under a leg to the floor.

They both raised their heads and looked out to the cave as the shuffling of feet announced someone walking. Shy, soft steps. Samantha’s steps.

And Samatha came out, into the cave, alone. She wasn’t dressed, instead wearing one of Jacob’s furs wrapped around her, and she walked on tip toes as she came out into the cave, eyes cast in the direction of Othello’s hole in the wall.

Well well well, the Daeva’s sex drive had been awoken. It certainly wasn’t like she wasn’t getting her fill from Jacob, based on the moans, but if she was sneaking out here for a peek at what Othello was up to, maybe Jacob had left? The fucker’s Cloak was strong enough he could do that without any of them noticing.

Samantha froze when she spotted Jen and Triss. But before she could turn and flee, Jen waved, and waved her over. Chuckling, she prodded Triss, who rolled her eyes, and also motioned Samantha over. Yeah, sure, invite her over for a chat while Triss and Jen failed at tribbing. Perfect time for a conversation.

Samantha blinked, several times, before she came over to them. She averted her eyes quite a bit, staring at the floor as she got closer, and hell, Triss couldn’t help but chuckle at that. The woman was so much like Jack when he was younger.

“Samantha,” Jen said, voice soft, calm, and smooth like silk. “How are you? Where’s Jacob?”

“Jacob, uh, he had to do something ... witchy, I guess. And, um, I realized this morning — evening — that my clothes were all torn up, so I thought I’d ask Othello. Cause...” She looked over her shoulder, and her gaze lingered on the man, still mid blowjob. Yeah,

Samantha definitely wore her kinks on her sleeves. “Cause he’s always here, and I figured Madison might have something?”

So Jacob was gone then. He had some pretty important shit in his alcove. Leaving Samantha in there was a potential disaster scenario. Then again, Samantha was too nice to steal anything, and it wasn’t like she could read any of the ancient texts. Hell, Black Blood was trying to teach Triss how to, and progress was slow as fuck.

“Well, they’re a bit occupied, as you can see,” Jen said, “but we have clothes.” Still with her legs wrapped around Triss’s, Jen smiled at Samantha, got comfortable on the furs on her side, and locked her legs tight so Triss was trapped on her back. Ok, apparently Jennifer, Queen of the cave, had decreed she and Triss were to remain leg locked until this awkward conversation was over. “But first, you have to give us some good gossip.”

“Gossip?” Samantha forced herself to look at Jen, her squirming lessening with each passing second.

“Gossip! It’s been decades since Jacob’s had anyone in his bed. You have to tell us at least a little.”

“Bed. You ... you hear it, don’t you?”

Triss chuckled hard; sounded like a pig snort. “Uh, yeah. You sound like Madison does when she’s in the middle of a Kiss climax. Maybe a little higher pitched.”

“Oh god!” She threw her hands up to cover her face. Which meant she dropped the fur covering her, and she squealed as she scooped it back up. But Jen and Triss both got to see the woman naked. Damn. Lean, fit, handful breasts, and hints of softness to her that you could only get after having a couple kids. It only added to her hotness. Really, total milf.

“Jacob is a lucky man,” Jen said, because the slut knew exactly what to say.

It worked like a charm, and had Samantha smiling sheepishly as she held the fur snug around her.

“I’m being silly, aren’t I? Covering myself up, when everyone’s just ... you know.”

“It’s not silly,” Triss said. “You’re new to this. But it won’t take long before you’re walking around naked and fucking your meals.” She tried to unlock legs with Jen, but Jen fought back, reached down, and grabbed one of Triss’s ankles to keep her from getting away. At this point, the tiny amount of pleasure the position had before was completely long, and now Jennifer was just wrestling.

Wrestling was fun, but Triss was a Nosferatu. She could throw Jen over a building if she tried. Jen knew it too. She also knew Triss would never do that to her. Crafty bitch.

“If you’re still dating Jacob by then,” Jen added, “you could use your Daeva powers to treat him? Nosferatu have no way to entice kine into servitude with the Vinculum, but you do. Imagine the possibilities.”

Samantha forced her eyes up from the cave floor, and looked at the two naked women, eyes lingering on their bare pussies, and then up Jen’s body to her face. There was a hint of intrigue in those eyes.

“Possibilities?”

“Yeah,” Triss said. “You’ve seen Othello with a few kine. Not that hard to seduce people with Daeva’s Majesty. Treat your man to an orgy.”

“An orgy?” She laughed and squirmed inside her fur blanket. “I ... I suppose I could, couldn't I?”

Jen nodded, sat up, and Triss thought she'd relent with the silly position. But she didn't, just started grinding her hips into her from a sitting position, one arm behind her on the fur-covered floor for balance, the other clutching Triss's hips. Ok, that did feel a bit better, soft and swollen pussies squishing against each other.

Of course at this point, the damn slut was doing it to see how Samantha would react, not to get off.

“Imagine it,” Jen said, voice turning husky. “Half a dozen women, naked bodies entwined like Beatrice and I, each just waiting for a turn in your man's arms, all at your guidance.” Jen let go of her hip for a second, clutched one of her own breasts, and gently fondled the large tit until it conformed into her palm and fingers. “Or perhaps you'd prefer to be the center of attention? You could sit on Jacob's body, lean back, close your eyes, and relax as six women's hands caress, massage, and guide every inch of you.” She grinned as a thought came to her. “Or perhaps, you'd prefer it be six men?”

That got a tiny squeak out of her, and she shook her head like a child denying they'd stolen a cookie. Totally caught. The woman definitely wanted to be the center of attention, while a mountain of men did things to her. Well, Triss didn't know what sort of kinks Jacob had, but considering all the noise Samantha had been making the past few weeks, he'd been doing something right to satisfy the mom.

“It's funny,” Triss said, “you're not all that similar to Natasha.”

“Natasha Vola? Why do you ... oh...”

Jen and Triss laughed. Everyone knew what sort of kinks the little Mekhet had unlocked since meeting Matthew and Arturo. Word got around. That little woman was totally into being squashed between two giant hunks of man meat, and apparently, the idea appealed to Samantha. Or maybe it was the idea of being tied up and forced that appealed to her so much?

With Jen distracted by her own stories, Triss lifted her foot, planted it on Jen's chest, and gently kicked her away.

“Get up and help the woman find some clothes, ya damn tramp.”

Jen pouted for a moment, sighed, turned off the Blush of Life, and stood. “Fine, fine.” She got up, stepped out, and motioned for Samantha to follow. Unlike Samantha, she made no attempts to hide her nudity. Bitch loved to show off like a Daeva, but unlike a Daeva, had no sense of subtly.

And Triss loved her for that. Love was a strange way of framing it, considering they were close friends with benefits, a lot of benefits, but not actually romantically interested in each other. Such a strange relationship, but one she was damn glad she had.

She sat up and dug around in the furs for her tank top and boyshorts, slipped on the black clothes, and got up as she watched Jen take Samantha to her old alcove, which sat higher up on the wall and required some jumping to get to. Jen used to keep her two ghouls up there with her, but now those two were usually out of the cave, doing recon shit. And sometimes they came back, either to report in, or to get in on fucking Madison or some kine Othello brought back with them.

Triss rolled her eyes. Of course going Jen's path took them near Othello's alcove for a minute, and Samantha's gaze lingered on Othello, and how the man was lying on his back, and gently forcing Madison to deepthroat his dick.

“We're not all a bunch of perverts,” Triss said, loud enough everyone in the cave could hear her. “Aaron's not around, but he's super vanilla. Only fucks in private, and has a girlfriend.”

“I d-don’t think I’ve ever talked to him,” Samantha said, stuttering as she forced herself to look away from Othello.

Rolling her eyes, Triss crawled out of the alcove, now officially the only person in the cave wearing any clothes, and walked over to Othello as Jen and Samantha disappeared into Jen’s alcove.

“Dude, ever consider you’re going to make Jacob jealous?” She pressed her back to the alcove entrance opposite of Othello, and watched. At this point, she kinda liked watching. It helped rekindle her sex drive, and Othello didn’t think of it as anything other than a crowd admiring his amazing sex skills.

True, honestly. Madison was never unsatisfied, and was usually fucked into a coma, Kiss or not. Triss had no idea how she kept her ass clean all night every night, considering it was all Othello ever wanted to fuck, but she did, and Othello repaid her with a dozen orgasms whenever they got to fucking. There wouldn’t be any fucking this early in the evening, minutes after dusk, but Othello did love to kick his night off with a blowjob.

“Jealous?”

“You’re kinda drawing Samantha’s eye.”

He shrugged, and slipped his fingers into Madison’s curly hair. Mmmm, fingers in hair. “If Jacob wants me and Madison to join them, all he has to do is ask.”

“Ha, you think he’d agree to that?”

The man shook his head with a small shrug. “Probably not. But she’s not looking because she wants a piece, Triss.”

“Oh?”

He nodded, suddenly looking quite sagely, despite being mid blowjob. “She’s just looking because it’s appealing. Gets her insides revved. Same as you.”

Triss almost denied it, but relaxed back against the stone wall again, and sighed. It was totally true.

“You’re providing free porn to everyone who enters the cave?”

That earned a chuckle from him. “Yeap.”

She rolled her eyes, extra hard, but after a moment she settled and watched the man. Something about the way he had his fingers in Madison’s hair, stroking and massaging her head, while at the same time being firm with his hand, was really hot. The girl had to take him to the base if he wanted, and couldn’t lift her head until he let her. Yeap, that kinda gentle domination was super hot. Not really Triss’s thing, but that didn’t change that it was sizzling. She’d definitely watch a shitty movie with sex scenes like this in it.

“Dildos,” he said.

“Uh, what?”

“Dildos. If you’re going to scissor, use some double-sided dildos. Or better yet, double-sided vibrators.”

She laughed. Good god, this man.

“You ever think about something other than sex, Othello?”

He shrugged. “I think about you.”

“That’s sex.”

“No, not sex. I think about ... how nice it’s been, having you around.” The usual, dopey smile he had faded, and he straightened his head up as he smiled at her. “Jacob’s never been the same since Minerva died. He was always kinda crazy, and, you know...” Right, Othello was alive when Minerva was. Aaron and Jen were not.

“Witchy?”

“Heh, yeah, witchy.” The man sighed, and closed his eyes for a moment as he pushed Madison’s head down. Having a meaningful conversation wouldn’t detract him from building up a good orgasm, evidently, but they’d only been at it five minutes and Othello took a lot longer than that to cum. “Jen, Aaron, me, none of us really get it, the way Jacob does. We don’t really understand him. But now...”

But now, she did, in multiple ways. It hurt hearing that, but it felt good too. Just because Julias was dead didn’t mean her life came to an end, it kept going, and she kept growing.

But, god, if she could get him back.

“Is me being a buffer to Jacob’s crazyness the only reason it’s nice having me around?”

“Ha, no. You’re the most interesting addition in a long time. You make Jen happy. Even Aaron likes to talk to you, and that’s saying something.”

She grinned, and sat down. Since her early evening sex with Jen was a bust, at least she could watch Othello enjoy himself. The thought made her chuckle quietly. In the past, the last thing she’d want to see is this dumbass enjoying a blowjob. Now? It honestly made her happy, to see the man happy. She owed him a lot, since he came on that crazy mission to stop the hunters. Plus, free porn.

“And?”

“And you’re gorgeous; sharkmouth aside.”

She kicked him in the foot, causing him to lift his hand from Madison's head. The ghoul sat up, and looked at Triss with a warm, happy, almost smile.

"I don't mind the extra teeth," Madison said. "And I saw what you did to Jen yesterday. That was ... wow."

Triss grinned at the ghoul, a little more playfully than she meant to. Since she'd started fucking Jen a few weeks ago, it'd been a nightly thing, and it didn't take long before they stopped giving a shit if someone could see them. Not like it was a big deal for her fellow witches and warlocks to see her naked, considering she'd showered with Jen and them months ago. Plus, it was kinda nice, knowing she was hot enough to earn a small audience. Having spent decades as a Nosferatu, convinced she was hideous, and then joining a bunch of witches who thought shark teeth were cool? Yeah, she was happy.

Triss opened her mouth and let her very, very long tongue hang for a moment, before she pulled it back up quick, earning a surprised, excited squeal from Madison.

"Guess I'm the one who's jealous. Get back down there." Othello guided the woman back onto his big dick, and while she struggled a bit, Triss could see she relished every moment Othello forced her. Part of that was probably because she was a ghoul, bound by the Vinculum, and utterly, totally infatuated with her master. A much bigger part was probably because she just had that kink, like a lot of women did.

"I guess I fit in with you witches better than I ever thought I would," Triss said. "Jacob guessed it right."

Othello nodded. "He's pretty damn smart. He doesn't invite people into the Circle randomly."

“Indeed,” Jennifer said. She walked over to them, still naked, but without Samantha. Without a care in the world, she slipped past Othello, and sat down where Madison lay, shoulder to shoulder with the Daeva. She slid her legs under the ghoul, and rested her hands on the small of Madison’s back while her legs became a lap for Madison to lie on.

Triss rolled her eyes again, but laughed. It was strangely cute how Jen got her legs under Madison, and Madison just continued working away at her boss’s dick. Everyone in the damn Circle was so hilariously comfortable with each other. Hell, Aaron may have been vanilla, but he’d come into that shower with Othello when Jen and Triss were showering, completely unfazed. He may not have been interested in an orgy, but she doubted they’d even make him blink.

“And it’s more than that,” Othello said, eyes on her, even as he gently worked Madison’s head up and down. “We’ve all ... suffered, I guess you could say. Jacob you know. Aaron’s had major issues with his family, leading to some murder.” Murder? Holy shit. “I’ve lost people, but it’s in the past. Now we’re a family, witches and warlocks, no walls, no barriers. We can trust each other with everything, right?”

With everything. She smiled, a smile she knew must have looked kinda sad, but she nodded as she looked down. Part of her knew she was turning to her witches as a distraction to keep her from thinking of Julias. But, Othello made a good point, and she looked back up as she let the thought worm its way into her brain. She was a sad woman, sinking into a pit of occult rituals and orgies because of the pain she’d suffered, and that descriptor fit the other witches and warlocks too.

They were one big, twisted, strange family. And that did feel nice.

“Find something for Samantha?” she said.

Jennifer nodded, and gave Madison a gentle slap on the ass. It rippled.

“We’re of similar height and build. I lent her one of my suits.”

Othello shook his head. “Gonna be loose in the chest.”

Jen smirked at the man, and gave him a gentle backhand in the chest. Yeah, Othello had a broad torso, defined pectorals and whatnot. He needed a bigger chest in his clothes too, just like Jen.

They chuckled. Such a weird atmosphere, the three vampires and a ghoul sitting around, chatting, while Madison ignored them, busy with her task. This was probably how witches and warlocks did their meetings back in the day, back when people thought witches and shit were real. A group of vampires comfortable with each other, comfortable enough to chat while their ghouls got them off. In the future, if Triss got a ghoul, would that ghoul have their mouth on her pussy, fingers in her, while Triss described her night, or maybe their goals for the week, to her fellow Circle members?

Did Jacob come from that sort of environment? Likely. Fucker had probably spent every full moon in an orgy, with a blood sacrifice in the center of it all. She could definitely see him getting sucked off while reading from some strange book, in some ancient language only Black Blood knew.

And honestly, now that Julias was gone, she could kinda see herself doing that, too.

Was that the game? If she could bring Julias back, she could save herself from becoming Jacob? But in the process of pursuing that unobtainable goal, she might become something worse? Ugh, it was fucking poetic. She hated poetic shit.

Quiet clops announced Samantha’s approach. She’d gotten her shoes from Jacob’s alcove, but was now dressed in one of Jennifer’s suits. She did look good in it, and she smiled sheepishly as she approached.

“Thanks, I—oh!” She almost squeaked again when she got closer, enough so she could face the front of Othello and see that he was still being sucked off. And, with Jen now sitting beside him under Madison’s body, Samantha blinked at her several times, before blinking at Beatrice, the only other person in the cave with any clothes on.

“Don’t mind us,” Jennifer said, “we’re simply socializing. Sit with us, get comfortable. But, I believe you already have been getting comfortable with the Circle, now that I think about it.” hilariously obvious conversation segue.

“I, uh ... b-better...” Like a fly to honey, she stared at Othello, doing a horrible job of hiding it. She was so much like Jack in a way, obviously too easy to read for her own good, and obviously a total hornball. Being easy to read wouldn’t serve her very well, especially not amongst a bunch of witches and warlocks, but the hornball thing could be an asset.

Triss rolled her eyes and laughed. “She might be fucking our boss, but she’s still the Prince’s childe. Maybe we shouldn’t try and get her into all ... this.” She gestured to Madison, who’d been doing a damn good job of gobbling up Othello’s cock right to the base.

Othello shrugged, and lifted Madison’s head. The ghoul eased up off him, but didn’t stop, setting calming kisses on his length below his swollen glans. Giving the man time to settle down from impending orgasm, so they could work out a bigger one, probably. And, of course, he wanted to show off his big dick for the new girl.

“I’ve met the Prince on a few occasions,” Othello said, fingers stroking down from Madison’s hair onto her back. “I guarantee you she’d be quite happy to learn her childe’s getting comfortable with sex.”

“It’s true,” Samantha whispered. “She ... she’s pretty sexually open.” She made a tiny gesture to Othello. “Are all Daeva like this?”

Jennifer laughed, and gave Madison’s ass another slap. Wiggle wiggle. “Daeva are the worst for it, but all Kindred eventually grow comfortable with our bodies. Then, the bodies of our ghouls, then other servants, and then, prey.”

“I suppose that kinda makes you uncomfortable,” Triss said. “Not because of yourself, but because of Jack.”

“Jack?”

“Yeah. We’re his friends, and this whole vampire thing was his life, before you showed up. Er, shit, that wasn’t supposed to sound mean. Jack’s super happy you’re back in his life. But you’re probably a little self-conscious about that, right? Like, everything you do, you can’t help but think ‘oh god what would Jack think if he saw me now’.”

She smiled, nodding. “I guess I do. Though, he’s tried to tell me I shouldn’t think that way.”

“Well, he’s right, you shouldn’t,” Triss said, shrugging. “Jack has been getting drowned in sex for, what, over two years? That kid has been fucking the most powerful vampire in the city, and probably one of the most powerful vampires in the damn country, almost every night. And you know what your sire is like. She’s buried him in boobs and pussy, hers and her ghouls’, and now Elaine’s undoubtedly. And she’s probably done it in very public locations.” Before Samantha could die from information overload, Triss continued. “He’s seen my tits, and Jen’s; everyone’s seen hers, but you know what I mean. He might have seen Clara’s too, considering she has a torch for him. He’s ... well, you see where I’m going with this. This is one of the few great things about being a blood sucker, and Jack certainly won’t judge you for sitting down and enjoying watching a beautiful — if dumb — man get a great blowjob.”

Jen and Othello smiled at Triss, that sort of ‘she’s one of us’ kinda smiles, before they looked up at Samantha.

She closed her eyes, took a deep useless breath, nodded, and sat down beside Beatrice. It was a clean cave floor, no problem for the suit.

“Ok, you’re right. Jacob’s said as much, and so has my sire.”

With a warm chuckle, Othello nodded toward Samantha. “You are a Daeva, like me. I’m sure the Prince has told you about the quirks you’ll run into, like becoming rather attached to your ghouls.”

“Y-Yes.”

“And she’s told you how much you’ll love showing off?”

“ ... yes.”

Laughing louder, the man gestured to Samantha, and wiggled his brows subtly for a tiny, powerful moment.

She blinked at him, at Jen, then at Beatrice. Shrugging, Triss reached down, and slipped her tank top up and off, making Samantha squeak and look down. The nipple piercings gave Samantha pause, but it was the snake tattoo running from Triss’s nipple, and down her body to disappear under her boy shorts, that made Samantha’s jaw drop. That got them all chuckling.

Never in a million years did Triss see herself just goofing around with the Circle like this, stripping like they were drunk morons playing strip poker. But something about what Jen and Othello said struck a chord, and for some fucking reason, she found herself smiling.

“I uh ... umm...”

Everyone watched Samantha with curious eyes. A bit of peer pressure could be just the right tool to help her come out of her shell.

“You’re very beautiful,” Jennifer said, “and, honestly, from the noises we’ve heard, we all know you’re a sexually aware woman. You don’t need to be shy with us.”

After another long, heavy sigh, Samantha looked down, and undid a few buttons of her shirt. The jacket was already open, and now that the shirt was a bit open too, Triss could see the woman had no bra. The clothes she’d worn last night on her date hadn’t really allowed for one, and Jen’s wouldn’t fit.

Othello smiled at her, smiled at the cleavage she now showed, and guided Madison’s head back onto his dick. He helped his ghoul with the motion, faster than before, up and down, and the talented ghoul worked her head with the rhythm.

Apparently that sparked something in Samantha. Well, she was Daeva, and now another Daeva was looking at her, specifically and only her, while getting sucked off. Like fire on kindling. The only thing that stopped Samantha from blushing hard red, and from her nipples pushing out through the white suit shirt, was she wasn’t Blushing Life.

After an audible gulp, Samantha undid another button, and then another, shivering blatantly with each one. Now her breasts were visible, pleasant handfuls with small, pink nipples. She set her arms down, and looked at Othello, and then at what Madison was doing.

Watching a shy milf slowly expose her tits so everyone else could admire? Fucking. Hot.

Jennifer almost said something, but decided to not. Instead, she leaned back against the wall beside Othello, shoulder touching his, and she too watched Samantha and her exposed breasts, as Othello worked Madison's head faster. A growing twinkle shone in Samantha's eye, and she looked down for a moment before looking to Triss. Triss was happier watching the blowjob, but she smiled at Samantha too before looking back to the big idiot and his ghoul doing work.

Just a bunch of vampires, doing vampire things. That's what Jacob would have said.

Othello started to cum, and Samantha raised a hand to her mouth, covering it. Despite the obvious pleasure on the man's face, he kept his eyes open, and on Samantha, her face and her breasts. Once the shock of seeing the man cum from only six feet away passed, Samantha lowered her hand, and tried to sneakily shift her shirt open further, where it disappeared under her pants. She succeeded in opening the shirt more, but not in being sneaky about it. She even grazed her nipple, and traced the underside of one of her tits, completely hypnotized and not even aware she was doing it. Everyone pretended to not notice though, and instead enjoyed the sounds and sights of a beautiful dumbass cumming into his happy ghoul's throat.

Daeva loved sex, generally more than the other blood clans, but damn. Samantha radiated an 'I want to fuck' aura that Triss hadn't expected. She'd seen it on Jack, but only when he was in the company of the Prince. Like mother, like son? Heh.

"And don't worry about Othello, or us," Triss said. "Unless Jacob initiates it, no one's going to touch you. We're all a bunch of exhibitionists, voyeurs, and perverts, but we're not assholes."

Samantha managed a tiny, thankful nod, but her eyes were locked on Othello's cock, and where she and Triss could see the man's flesh literally pumping, until it overflowed Madison's mouth. Well, they had been at it a while. Giant orgasm was inevitable. White leaked out of Madison's lips, and down the man's cock, heavy trickles that were damn near supernatural. Kinda like the fucker was a living example of those burger advertisements, the ones super dolled up and fake, except, not fake.

“You all really ... really feel ok with this sort of stuff, don’t you?” Samantha said. She buttoned up a button, but when Jen waved a small hand, she stopped at one, leaving three undone, and much of her breasts exposed. Nipples covered, but only barely. A damn sexy way to wear a white-button shirt.

“We do,” Jen said. She leaned forward a bit, squashing her bare tits on Madison’s back, and looked down at what Madison was doing. Satisfied, she leaned back again and gave the ghoul an encouraging couple pats on the ass. “Things do change sometimes, but, yes, we’re often here enjoying such freedom. And when we’re not, we’re ... well, your boyfriend can tell you.”

Samantha smiled. “Witchy stuff?”

“Witchy stuff,” Jen, Othello, and Triss all said together. More laughter followed.

Madison, after making sure Othello’s dick was clean, sat up and slipped between Jen and her master. He hooked an arm over her shoulders, hugging her to him, and she beamed with pride. Job well done. She’d probably noticed what her fellatio had done to Samantha, and had delighted in making a show of it. Well, Othello did take her as his ghoul for a reason.

“Is it always, uh, you?” Samantha said, gesturing to Othello. “Um ... having sex, in the open.”

“Jennifer used to fuck her ghouls,” Triss said. “She has a couple boys at her beck and call, and they were DP’ing her regularly. I’ve talked to her same as you’ve talked to Othello, mid sex.”

Samantha blinked at them, especially when she noticed Jennifer's eyes go down, saddened. "But ... not anymore?"

Triss shook her head. "Not anymore. She got in with me and Julias, and for a good while there it was the three of us. And ... now it's the two of us." Ugh, she really didn't mean to drag the mood down, but once the words were out of her mouth, everyone looked down with the fucking worst case of spontaneous depression. "Guys, guys, don't be like that, ok?"

Jennifer lifted her head and grinned at her, a knowing grin. She was there for every meeting Beatrice had with Black Blood and Jacob about their secret plan. She was there every time Triss took another step toward that goal. Hopefully she didn't think Triss was feeling better because she thought maybe Triss was thinking it might be possible to resurrect Julias. She was, but she was also feeling better because of Jennifer herself, and even the handsome moron sitting beside her.

Othello stopped Blushing Life, and the sexual tension in the air melted away. Mostly. Just cause his dick got soft didn't mean there weren't a bunch of people sitting around naked.

"You said your clothes were torn?" Jennifer asked. "How did that happen?"

"I ... uh..." Samantha squirmed, and considering her shirt was almost wide open, it made the motion so much more attractive. "We were playing hide and seek. He found me."

Triss laughed. "You definitely sounded quieter last night. I thought maybe you guys were doing something super vanilla, but now I'm guessing you were gagged?"

Samantha squeaked and covered her cheeks with her palms. "Oh god."

---

~~Natasha~~

Natasha groaned as her phone began to ring, and she reached out for it. She'd have ignored it, but it was Jessy's ring, and it was important the two of them exchange a couple quick words every couple days, at the minimum. Even though she was a dragon now, she still kept up her safety check-in system with her friend.

“M-Matt, stop for a second! I need to check in with Jessy.”

Matt sighed, nodded, and let go of her legs. They'd been pinned to her shoulders, and now they flopped on the mattress, spread around the huge man. But, as she reached for her phone again, Matt sat on his knees, and continued fucking her in a very slow, deep rhythm. And of course since he sat back on his knees, ass on his heels, he pulled her up toward his pelvis so her legs hooked around his hips, her ass a few inches in the air. She mewled, and her hand pushed the phone aside an inch by accident. Thunk thunk. It bounced on the floor.

She rolled her eyes, pushed herself up onto her elbows, and glared up at the big man. “I meant stop fucking me! N-Not, stop holding me down.”

“Oh. Well, I'm gonna have to decline.”

She growled, reached up, and punched the giant in his chest. All she got for her efforts was a grin from the man as he used his big hands to ease her off most of his length, and then pull her toward him until she'd swallowed him to the base again. She looked at her spread lips, and how they soaked the man with each slow stroke, all while Jessy's ring tone continued in the background.

It stopped ringing, and she frowned up at her big dumb boyfriend again. But before she could find a good argument, her laptop, sitting on the nightstand nearby, began to ring as well. It was the vid program she and Jessy, and all the Invictus used to talk with each other when they wanted video.

Arturo, naked and already satisfied, walked in from outside her bedroom, pointed the laptop at her, and pressed the answer button.

“Art!”

The program blinked on, and Natasha froze.

“Hey Tash, I—oh fuck yes!” Jessy leaned in toward the camera until her face devoured the whole screen, and her eyes filled with wonder and hunger as she stared.

“Art y-y-you asshole!” She grabbed the nearby blanket, pulled it over herself, grabbed one of her pillows, and threw it at Art. The evil man cackled as he ran out of the bedroom, dodging the pillow like it was a bomb.

“Something going on?” Eric’s voice said over the laptop’s speakers.

“Natasha’s getting it on!”

“Oh god. Jessy, come on, let her—”

Jessy’s head shifted left and right as Eric fought to get access to the laptop, but she fought him off. “Thanks Art!” she yelled.

Art stuck his head back into the room, but before he could say anything, Natasha threw another pillow at him. It hit him in the head, and the man yelped and retreated.

Natasha glared up at Matt, but he only smiled down at her. Her torso and pelvis were covered in the blanket now, but her legs stuck out with how her pelvis and ass were snug to the man’s body. It was obvious to anyone watching, with where Matt’s hands disappeared under the blanket, that he had his grip around her hips, and was penetrating her.

“Check in completed. G-Go away now!” She’d end the conversation herself if she could reach.

“Can’t! Got some questions.”

“W-What do you want?” Natasha said, voice wavering.

“Couple things. First, how’s the hunt for evidence going?”

“Nothing new.” Natasha relented to the situation. The faster she could get this conversation over with, the better.

Several more trips into the Hisil had found nothing to exonerate her old boss. She, Matthew, and Arturo had explored much of the Shadow realm, and found several more circumstances of red wraiths drifting around, doing suspicious things. They’d found a tear, but hadn’t been able to get near it, with red wraiths surrounding it. And the wraiths had mentioned Maria a couple more times.

“Bummer. I hope that bitch isn’t sticking her fingers where she shouldn’t be,” Jessy said. “Second thing, tomorrow night, Fiona wants to get a bunch of us together at Bloodlust. Party kinda deal.”

“Oh. Um ... I guess we could g-g-oh!”

Matthew, apparently feeling even more playful than usual, started to fuck her again. Big, long, heavy strokes, each removing almost his entire length, before he swiftly pulled her back to him until he sank himself to the hilt. They’d been having sex for a while, and she’d had a drink of Arturo to finish him off only ten minutes ago. Her body was delighted to keep going, and with how horny she was, Matt sinking his length in until she felt her insides stretch inward to accommodate him, was heaven.

She managed a peek over at the laptop again. Jessy had moved aside a bit to make room for Eric, but the man was obviously trying to not watch. They were in Eric's kitchen, and Eric was preparing a meal; probably raw meat, considering he was Uratha. They were also naked, which made the whole situation even more embarrassing.

"I'm thinking Fiona's trying to get Damien and Jack to talk to each other. Jack's been avoiding him since that whole thing, and Fiona's definitely that bubbly 'everyone should always get along!' kinda girl."

"She's ... nice..." Natasha, unable to keep from moaning a little between words, glared up at Matthew, but the big man only grinned at her. This was payback, for that time Natasha got to watch Jessy and Eric have sex on vid call. Definitely regretted telling the boys about that.

"She is nice, and totally stacked. Some of the best tits you've ever seen. I'm gonna try and get her to strip at the party."

"D-Don't do that. That's mean."

"Bah, that's not mean! Besides, I'm just helping Damien come out of his shell." Jessy leaned in closer to the camera again, and grinned like the devil. "Like a certain someone else I know."

She glared at Jessy and scrunched up her nose, but the expression broke the moment Matthew picked up his pace. And the bastard must have been listening to Jessy, because he took her words as queue to fuck her hard, and fast.

Natasha squeaked as Matthew knelt up straight, taking her ass up into her air with him, and he began to pound into her. Her body, arched so her shoulders were on the bed with neck and head flat on the mattress, slid back and forth faster and faster, until the blanket slid right off her. She tried to grab it, but each time Matthew pulled her toward him, he also thrust forward, and the impact had her whole body shaking; the bed shook, too. And each time he sank his cock into her, she let out small whimpers as the man stretched her until she thought she'd split apart.

“Oh my god, I can actually see how deep he's getting in you! Christ you are tiny. Eric, look at this!”

Between the hard thrusts from her boyfriend, Natasha managed a small peek at the camera again. Jessy was still leaning forward over her kitchen table, but now she had her elbow on it, her face in her palm, and she looked like she was drooling. Couldn't drool without Blushing Life, but from the glazed, hypnotized look in her eyes, she would have been. And, god damn it, Natasha knew she liked it when Jessy looked at her that way. She was starting to like it when anyone looked at her that way.

Dolareido, and Jessy, were corrupting her, bit by bit.

“You definitely need to wear something sexy,” Jessy said. “I will be.”

“You ... just want ... an orgy.” It was hard to get out the words, but she managed, despite the moans fighting for her air. “B-But, I won't —” She mewled and squirmed, and came. But Matthew was quickly approaching his own, and didn't slow down. She squeaked with each thrust, and reached up to try and fight against the hand's holding her hips. Apparently fighting to escape over-stimulation turned Jessy on, because she groaned openly when Natasha grabbed Matt's wrists, only to utterly fail at removing them.

The werewolf let out a growl, a hungry, possessive sound, reached down, and picked her up. He buried her in a big hug, sank her down hard on his cock, and thrust into her a few more times, each earning more whimpers from her as the tingles of pleasure refused to cease. And with how her laptop was pointed, now Jessy could see her back, and maybe Matthew's testicles, undoubtedly dripping with her juices. She'd already soaked Matt before, but now, with Jessy and Eric watching her, she couldn't help but drench the man, and she hid her face in his chest as she locked her legs around his waist.

Jessy groaned, and moaned, until Natasha peeked over her shoulder to see what the damn woman was doing. Nothing, absolutely nothing. She just stared at Natasha, eyes locked onto her, her ass in particular; probably staring at the big mess Tash and Matt were making. Natasha's orgasms had only grown messier and messier, the more comfortable she'd grown with Matt and Art, and their increasingly rougher sex. And of course, the boys were werewolves, and made a big mess every time they came.

"Tash, I have the sexiest little dress you have to wear. Guaranteed Art and Matt will be all over you the moment you're in it."

She rolled her eyes, and sank her forehead onto Matt's chest as she hugged the man tight. She was still cumming, aftershocks rippling through her legs where they were snug around the giant's hips, and Jessy knew it too. But to Jessy, mid orgasm was a perfect time to propose dress options.

Why Jessy was her best friend, Tash didn't know. But she was. And she couldn't have asked for a better one.

Chapter 127

~~Author's Note~~

This is a fun, silly chapter, a break in the story before things get serious. Feel free to skim.

~~Damien~~

After being pestered by Fiona until the Lord himself would have broken, Damien agreed to go to Bloodlust. He loved hanging out with Fiona, but going to a nightclub was the last thing he wanted to do, and she knew it. So she dialed up her pestering and playful prodding until he relented. It was probably healthy for him to socialize, even if he'd prefer to be home alone, or home with Fiona.

He picked up Fiona at her apartment. She wore a dress obviously meant to kill him, because he froze when she opened the door. A living man would have died instantly. A vampire was thankfully only struck dumb for several long minutes of staring and gawking.

A deadly green dress, open back, two tiny straps over the shoulders, holding up the tight, plunging bust snug to her huge breasts. The green glittered, and the extremely short skirt had a split that went up past her hip, with little green straps connecting the split. No underwear.

“What do ye think?” she said, grinning up at him before spinning around once.

“It's ... shiny.”

“It's sequin!” Giggling, she reached out for his chest, and undid a couple buttons of his suit shirt. “Come on ye dobber, show some skin!”

He frowned down at her fingers, but didn't stop her. "I probably should, I suppose. I'll never, uh, have cleavage like yours though."

Her giggles turned into squeaks, and she stepped onto her toes to reach up and kiss him.

"Aye, but I'm a pretty lass. Yer the lad, the man, and should be ... strong!" She raised her arms and flexed her biceps. Vrall may have been a very strong creature, but Fiona was soft. Thin, but soft, and didn't have much muscle to show off. It was adorable.

He laughed, nodding. She was too damn cute to not. "Unbuttoning my shirt makes me strong?"

She touched his chest, traced his pectorals, and ran her fingers down to his abs. "Aye."

The fire in her eyes blazed, and he gulped down on a dry throat. If he'd been Blushing Life, he would have pushed her back into her room, closed the door, and thrown her onto her bed. But with it off, he could ignore the biological half of him, mostly, and smile down at his girlfriend.

He did not look forward to going to some sort of impromptu gathering at Bloodlust, but if he was going with Fiona, he knew he'd have fun; not sexual fun, but fun. It was a public place, after all. But, Fiona made him laugh, made him smile, made him feel warm, and made him feel like he wasn't hiding out in a sewer rat hole anymore. Hanging out with her was always fun.

---

Ok, maybe it might not be so fun.

Damien groaned, but Fiona pushed him up the stairs. All the kine had vacated the second floor, leaving only vampires and werewolves above the dancing kine beneath. And to Damien's surprise, there were a lot of vampires and werewolves.

There was no denying that Fiona had called it right. Tonight, the theme was sexual attraction. That made sense for a nightclub, but vampires and werewolves had some massive advantages. Vampires were groomed before their embrace, and turned usually when at peak physique and attractiveness. Werewolves overflowed with energy and life, probably because their wolf spirit wanted them to be the strongest vessel possible. So, everyone on the top floor was gorgeous, and considering what they were wearing, basically half naked.

The largest booth, further back on the floor, contained the group of people he'd expected, his friends and whatnot. But the contents of a nearby booth caused Damien to raise a brow. That was Caleb, Brianna, and the two vampires he'd seen sandwiching her at the ball. A couple other vampires were with them, women, members of Isabella's acting troupe. Both had their hands on Caleb. Another werewolf, Erica, sat closer to Brianna, and one of Brianna's male companions had his hands on Erica, evidently at Brianna's request. Fiona had somehow invited a lot of paranormals, paranormals he doubted she'd ever spoken to before. It wouldn't have surprised him if Fiona could easily get herself invited to a stranger's wedding, through her sheer sociability.

The smell of alcohol was blatant, and Damien noticed many bottles and glasses of alcohol at both tables. The werewolves were getting drunk — were drunk — and considering what he'd heard from Jessy, their blood was extremely potent. Any vampire who got a nibble was bound to be borderline high on the bliss.

He sighed, and forced his eyes to the group waiting for him. Jack sat in the middle of the group, with Elaine, then Eric, then Jessy on his right. On his left was Antoinette, then Matthew, then Natasha, then Arturo. Matthew was the only person there taller than the Prince, though Arturo seemed to match it.

Jack was dressed in an Invictus suit, shirt undone, same as Damien. The werewolves, on the other hand, were dressed for a club. Eric wore a casual shirt that was open to the navel, while Matt wore a tight tank top, and Art wore some kind of fishnet shirt, nothing underneath.

The women were dressed as he expected women to dress in a nightclub, except of course, taking advantage of their immortal beauty and endless money. Elaine wore white, Antoinette wore black, both dresses nothing but a few loose straps that barely covered their enormous breasts, and probably less of their legs. Jessy wore a see-through, tight dress made of some sort of thin, black material, and underneath he could see she had X-shaped nipple pasties on. Most surprising was Natasha, who wore a tube top, except, tube top was too generous a word. More accurately, it was a three-inch thick strap of black that circled her chest at the perfect position to hide her nipples; you had to have small breasts to wear something like that, and it looked amazing on her tiny frame. He couldn't see anyone's legs, booth table in the way where he stood, but he imagined she wore a tiny black skirt to go with.

She noticed his staring, and looked down, embarrassed. Which earned a laugh and elbow from Art in her side. Which earned a hard punch from her, a punch that landed in Art's side and didn't faze him in the slightest.

Damien smiled, took Fiona's shoulders, and forced her to sit down before he did. No way he was going to join this giant group and not be on the outside edge of the booth. Just getting Fiona to sit down was already enough to have people shoulder to shoulder. Once he sat down, everyone was thoroughly squished.

"How nice of you to join us, Damien," Antoinette said, with a little more edge to her voice than he felt strictly necessary. "I had been wondering, considering this was Fiona's event."

Fiona giggled and shrugged. “Fashionably late, aye?”

Damien twitched, but the Prince laughed and nodded.

“Ben oui.”

“Gonna be straight with ya,” Jessy said, “didn’t expect the elders.”

Everyone looked at her like she’d just lost her damn mind, but Elaine and Antoinette laughed more, eventually shrugging.

“I had heard,” Elaine said, “that the tiny redhead had invited Jack to a gathering at Bloodlust. Antoinette has spoken to me of the unusually friendly nature between certain members of her city, and I wanted to see it firsthand.” She leaned forward, placed her elbows together on the table, squashing her hanging breasts together, and grinned at Jessy. “Invictus are not known for playing well with others.”

Jessy grinned, but Damien recognized the itch of fear nagging at her. Talking buddy buddy with an elder wasn’t exactly smart, but somehow Jessy had managed to survive over fifty years talking like that. Maybe she knew something he didn’t, but regardless, she wasn’t so stupid as to not be a little afraid of Elaine.

“Invictus play well with others!” Jessy elbowed Eric’s side, and gestured toward Elaine. “Tell her!”

Eric put up his hands in total, abject surrender. Smart man. Jessy elbowed him again, earning a groan from him, but he only lowered his arms to drink more, and everyone laughed. Damn it, even Damien laughed a little.

“As Jessy and Elaine have made somewhat obvious,” Antoinette said, “she and I are not here to play ruler or bully, Prince or elder. Things in my city have been ... quiet, for the most part as of late, and I am taking the opportunity to show my friend that relations have improved.” She nodded toward Jessy and Fiona, and then to Natasha beside her. “Three Uratha and a Begotten sit at this table. Surely a cause for celebration. My lover has done well.”

Everyone at the table smiled at Jack. Jack winced, like a kid being called out at a high school assembly, for doing a good job at something.

Damien caught his glance, and the two of them looked at each other for a moment, before looking away again. Something dangled around the boy’s neck, but Damien looked away before he could figure out what it was.

“Yeah, Jack’s gotten pretty good at keeping things smooth,” Jessy said. “If we had a Carthian and witch at the table, it’d be complete.”

“I’m not a miracle worker,” the boy said. “But, Garry and Michael have been playing nice with each other lately, mostly. Nothing to do with me though. They’re just biding their time and waiting for an opportunity to fuck each other over. But, hey, better than them fighting and—”

Antoinette shook her head. “Come now, let us not speak of covenant matters. We are here to relax. Speak of more enjoyable affairs.”

The group of them looked at each other, each taking turns making eye contact with others, before everyone turned and looked at Jessy and Fiona. Which sent Fiona into a fit of maniacal giggles. She grabbed a bottle from the table, poured herself a drink, and drank it down without bothering to check what it was. Apparently, she wanted to catch up to the intoxication level of the werewolves.

“What, only Fiona and me know how to have fun?” Jessy said.

Arturo shrugged. “More like, you two kinda vibe on this atmosphere.”

Jessy pffft'd, loudly, and gestured to the two elders. "Don't give me that. These two have probably held parties that make Bloodlust look tame."

"I didn't say it had to be extreme."

"Your eyes said it!" Jessy slapped a palm on the table, but the aggression was playful, and she grinned at the werewolf across from her. "But for real, it's a little hard to just let loose with a couple elders here. If Michael were here, or even Maria, I'd be ... uh, kinda questioning what shit I could get away with."

"Tonight, you may get away with anything," Antoinette said, offering Jessy a small flick of her wrist. "As you said, we have thrown gatherings that would make Bloodlust seem tame." And of course, the elder said that last bit with a touch of emphasis and sultry flair, putting some obvious images in everyone's head. Yeah, people knew what things Antoinette was into, and it didn't take much to piece together what sort of parties a Daeva elder probably held in the advent of her power. The orgy could probably have been heard a village away.

"Alright." Jessy leaned forward across the table, and grinned at Natasha. "Shown anyone else your movies yet?"

Natasha almost squeaked, but after taking a moment to regain her confidence, frowned at her friend. "Antoinette's seen them."

Damien smiled. Natasha was reliable in a fight, extremely fast, and her unusual bloodline allowed her to see in darkness most Kindred could not; whether or not Daniel could, no one knew. When bullets and swords started flying, she was confident, just, not confident in socially awkward situations. He had no idea how she'd managed to find the confidence to wear a tube top barely bigger than a belt.

She'd changed.

“I have,” Antoinette said, grinning, “and Natasha is quite beautiful in them. As are you two, you delicious pair.” The Daeva smiled at the two werewolves surrounding Natasha, and winked, earning some big dopey grins from them.

Movie? Well, if it was a movie containing Natasha, Matthew, and Arturo, it was probably spicy, especially considering the embarrassed look on Natasha’s face.

“I wanna see, I wanna see!” Fiona said, and she leaned forward over the table, squashed her chest down on it, and held out both hands toward Natasha with gimme grabbing motions.

“Um, uh ... m-maybe later.”

After a laughing snort, Jessy leaned in and whispered into Fiona’s ear. Squealing with delight, Fiona burst into more giggles, and bounced in her seat several times. “I wanna see I wanna see!”

Damien elbowed her in her side. Far softer than Eric elbowed Jessy in the side, though. Fiona’s giggles stopped, but her smile never faded, and she quickly gulped down more drink, as did the werewolves.

“I am delighted,” Elaine said, “that everyone here is so comfortable with each other.”

Natasha groaned, a tiny sound, while Arturo and Matthew laughed.

“I have to admit,” Art said, “every time I look around in Dolareido, I’m surprised. And happy. Tijuana was nothing like this.”

“How was it?” Fiona asked.

“Rough. Very rough. The covenants didn’t get along at all, and were happy to use regular joes and janets as fodder. No one treated any of them with respect, and vampires killed them regularly.”

“What? Why!?”

He shrugged. “Don’t ask me, they just did.”

“If I may,” Elaine said. “There are many cities in the world where vampires are taught to accept their predatory instincts. We are predators. Humans are prey. Such views are ... antiquated, and narrow minded. But imagine being thrust into an environment where every other creature you shared your territory with displayed such behavior? A self-propagating issue, especially when your enemies behave the same way. And in cities where covenants turn streets into battlefields, the darkest instincts in any Kindred emerge.”

“You,” Jessy said, “must have an interesting history.”

“I do.”

“Tell us about yourself.”

Elaine raised a brow, leaned back, and hooked one arm under her bust, while the other reached up to tap on her lips thoughtfully. “Some of you know I am Jack’s great grandsire, some of you perhaps do not.” The group looked at each other. Yeah, they all knew by now, and Elaine laughed. “Gossipers. You know I am a dragon, and have belonged to the Ordo Dracul for centuries.”

“Yeah, but, I mean, if you’re Antoinette’s friend, and you definitely are from what we all saw at the ball, you must have some spicy stories.”

“You, young Gangrel, are a sex addict.”

Jessy laughed, hard, with a couple hard snorts sneaking into her hysterics. Apparently being called out on her sexual addiction was hilarious? Damien didn't understand Jessy's sense of humor. But either way, her laughter was contagious, and several people also laughed; Fiona outright giggled herself into asphyxia.

"Yeah, I am. But can you blame me? Grew up in Dolareido, embraced half a century ago, and stayed in Dolareido that whole time. I blame the city." With a sly, knowing grin, Jessy nodded toward the Prince. "I am what she made me."

People laughed again. Damien rolled his eyes. Why, why did it always come to sex? It wasn't like Dolareido didn't have other venues of expression and pleasure, ranging from its plays and orchestras, to gambling extravagances. Not everything had to be about sex.

Of course, a glance at Fiona beside him sort of wiped away that thought. The tiny, tight green dress sent his imagination spiraling into pits of sexuality, until all he could think of was tearing it off her and throwing her onto the table. Ugh, these sexaholic friends were slowly but surely changing him, for better or worse.

"I am happy to have done you a service," Antoinette said to the Gangrel.

Elaine leaned forward and grinned at Jessy. "A little bird told me you have been enjoying your nights with a werewolf, transformed. That sounds interesting."

The Gangrel grinned the most evil grin Damien had ever seen, to the point everyone at the table except for the two elders looked a little worried.

"Truth or dare?"

Jack immediately threw up his hands. "No no, no. Bad Jessy, bad. We're here to hang, and show Elaine what it's like in Dolareido, with how we all get along. We don't need to—"

“Very well Gangrel,” Elaine said, evil grin a mirror to Jessy’s.

Oh Lord, help him survive this night. Help Jessy survive the night. Or not. You can take her, if you want.

“Awesome. Truth it is. The sex is great. It can get a bit rough, you know, having a giant foot-long shlong jammed into a hole and stretching me until I’m borderline bursting, but holy fuck, I just cum my brains out, every time. He’s so huge when he’s transformed, fucking strong as hell, and the danger just makes everything so much better.”

Everyone looked at Eric, and the poor man squirmed in his seat. Considering Jessy sat on his right, and Elaine on his left, he was surrounded by two sexually aggressive women who apparently didn’t have a single qualm about talking about sex openly. Well, considering how long he’d been dating Jessy now, he must have accepted his fate.

“It sounds delightful.”

“My turn. Truth or dare?”

Elaine tapped her lips a couple more times. “Truth.”

“How many times has Jack cum on your tits?” Jessy, was ruthless. No hesitation whatsoever. Jack threw a bottle at her, but she caught it without issue. “What? Come on. If I had a dick, I know I’d be doing everything I could to—”

Eric elbowed her again. She elbowed him back. The antics continued until Matthew had to grab the table to keep it steady as the two pushed at each other.

“Dozens,” Antoinette said, bringing the lovers’ spat to a quick end, and the whole table froze for a moment as they realized the Prince said it, not Elaine. Jack groaned and sank into his seat.

“Fucking awesome.” Jessy held out her hand for Jack to high five, and when he didn’t, she simply held it there. After fifteen seconds of awkward silence, Jack groaned again and high fived her.

“Truth or dare?” Elaine asked.

“Fuck it, dare.”

Of course. Damien looked past Fiona and Jessy, and offered Eric a sad, knowing shrug once the man met his eyes. Eric returned it, and took a sip of his drink. This night was going to be weird.

Somehow, Elaine’s devious grin managed to grow more devious. “Remove the pasties.”

Oh no. If Elaine was willing to go that far, this night was doomed.

Jessy shrugged, pulled down the apparently quite stretchy and springy collar of her see-through dress, reached down, and peeled the X pasty off each nipple.

“Hold these,” she said, and she passed them to Eric, who rolled his eyes and slipped them into his pants’ pocket.

Damien did his best to avoid looking, but wandering eyes caught a glimpse of her naked breasts, and he frowned as he looked away. He’d seen the damn woman naked plenty of times through his telescope, fucking her ghouls, but this was a proximity he hadn’t expected.

Fiona, on the other hand, made no efforts to avoid looking, and she giggled as she stared down at Jessy’s chest. Damien’s girlfriend had larger breasts, but that didn’t change that Jessy was a very fit woman with visible feminine musculature, and her breasts were unusually large considering how low her body fat percentage was. They drew Fiona’s eyes, and hand, and she reached out to lift and fondle one of those breasts through the see-through, skin-tight black dress.

“Ha. Fiona, you’ve seen these before. If you wanted to touch, you just had to—”

Damien stood up, pulled Fiona out of the booth, sat down, and sat Fiona on the outside edge. She whined and pouted, but three seconds later she forgot about why she’d been moved, and proceeded to nuzzle into Damien’s side. Her further arm reached across, slipped into his open shirt, and caressed his abs with her fingertips, while her eyes drifted between Jessy and Elaine. Well, better him than Jessy.

Jessy laughed. “Jealous I’m going to steal your girl?”

He rolled his eyes, again. “No, but I’m noticing it’s the women in Dolareido who are a little near-sighted with their sexual aggression.”

“Hey!” Natasha said. “I’ll have you know I’m v-very ... careful, about what I do.”

Jessy shook her head. “Then why did—”

“Because Art and Matt are assholes!” She folded her arms across her barely covered chest, and frowned up at the big guy on her left, and then the big guy on her right.

Damien raised a brow, and looked to Jack for explanation. The boy shrugged, confused as well.

“What can I say?” Art said. “You look great naked.”

“So do I,” Matt said. “But not as good as Natasha.”

“What happened? Tell me!” Fiona yelled. Thankfully her voice didn’t have enough impact to punch through the bassy music and reach beyond the top floor.

Matt glanced down at Natasha, who sighed and gave a very embarrassed nod. “Art turned on the laptop camera while I was having sex with her. Jessy watched.”

Fiona groaned and bounced in her seat. Considering the environment he was trapped in, Damien figured it was only reasonable he noticed his girlfriend’s large breasts jiggling in her tight dress as she expressed her frustration over not being included.

“Do ye vampires just, trade sexy things like that all the time? How come I dinnae get to see anything?”

“Probably cause you’re dating a priest,” Art said with a smirk.

“I’m not a priest. I’m a bishop. And the Testament of Longinus makes it clear that the word of God and His commandments are for kine, not Kindred.”

Art raised a brow at that, before he leaned forward and set a single elbow on the table. A slightly aggressive posture, one Damien recognized from Jessy’s playful side, and one he recognized from drunk men.

“So it’s cool if Fiona sees what we show Jessy?”

Damien sighed, shrugged, and slipped an arm around Fiona’s shoulders. “When in Rome, I suppose. I have no issue with Fiona wanting a peek.” And it wasn’t like he hadn’t taken plenty of peeks in his second life with his telescope.

“Yay!” Fiona leaned up, kissed his cheek, and then climbed onto his lap. Not much room for her, between him and the booth table but she made it work, sitting on his lap and leaning forward over the table. She looked like she was about to say something, but took another drink instead.

Matthew put up his hands though. “Natasha’s in charge of distribution. I don’t mind being naked on camera, neither does Art, but Natasha—”

“It’s fine. It’s fine.” Sighing, Natasha shrugged and gestured to the table. “We’ve all seen each other n-naked to some d-degree or another.”

Art raised an eyebrow. “Damien—”

“Has spied on the city for fifty years,” Antoinette said, a touch of cold edge in her voice that made Damien freeze. “I know he uses telescopes from vantage points, as well. No doubt he has seen many of you naked.”

Jessy laughed and elbowed him, thankfully with less force than she did Eric earlier. “Bet you saw me doing all sorts of shit with my dudes.”

“Yes, I did.” Hopefully the disgust in his voice would get across that he did not enjoy doing that. Though, now that he was free of Lucas’s suggestion, he had to admit, some of those nights had been intriguing. “If you do not wish to be seen, close your curtains.”

Everyone laughed again, the elders especially.

“But,” Jessy added, “the only person who’s been seeing Elaine naked, is Jack and the Prince. How about you Tash? Boys? I bet you’ve seen the Prince with Jack, but seen Elaine?”

The three of them shook their heads.

Elaine laughed, a sultry sound, and met eyes with the Gangrel. “It is your turn to question, after all.”

“Ha! Alright, truth or dare? Dare you to dare.”

“Dare it is, child.”

“Pfft. Take out your tits.”

Jack winced. Antoinette chuckled. Damien and Natasha shared a glance that spoke volumes: this was not an environment for Mekhet. And yet, here he was, with a bubbly, fun, drunk woman who every much thrived in this environment, on his lap. Being here with her made it fun, despite the pains. Natasha was likely in a similar boat with her boyfriends.

Everyone’s jaw dropped as Elaine, without hesitation, reached behind her, lifted up on the white strap hooked behind her neck, pulled it up and past her blonde hair, and let it fall to her waist underneath the booth table. Eric gulped and tried to inch away from her, but Jessy did the opposite, and leaned in closer to the topless woman, pushing Eric toward her. Those were some very large breasts.

“Jesus. Why can’t Michael be as fuck-around free as you?” Jessy said.

“Because he is Invictus.” Elaine shrugged, and Damien forced his eyes down from the sight of her enormous, pale breasts rippling with the motion. Fiona did no such thing. “I am sure the man sits on a throne with a dozen thralls kneeling at his feet, stroking his ego as much as his cock. But he likely does so in private.”

Jessy utterly erupted, laughing until everyone was, even Jack and Damien. Though, poor Jack, was doing his best to avoid looking at Elaine’s breasts. Difficult to do, considering how massive they were, and how they hung as heavy teardrops and half nudged into his shoulder and chest.

“Come now Elaine, do not insult my Primogen,” Antoinette said once the laughter was done.

“If your Primogen had joined us, I would play nice. But they are not here.” Elaine grinned, lifted herself up a couple inches, and sat back down with impact. The jiggling effect was massive, and everyone, Jack included, watched the rippling of her bust. “And they are missing out. This is a fun game. It has been ages since a young Kindred has had the gall to be so forward with me.”

“My girlfriend,” Eric said, voice a half groan of something between annoyance and delight, “is definitely forward.”

Chuckling, Jessy pushed herself into Eric’s side. They were all already squished, but she squished him even harder, making sure her breasts pressed into his side, and that Elaine’s closer breast pressed to his shoulder.

“Do not be so uptight, silly children,” Elaine said. “They are breasts, nothing more. We all have them, men included. There is little to be embarrassed by.” Well, she certainly had the elder outlook Antoinette had.

Art and Matt looked at each other, and without saying a word, both took off their shirts, set them on the table, and then downed more of whatever they were drinking. Jessy and Fiona both moaned openly, and Damien coughed before flicking his girlfriend in the leg. She giggled, reached back, pat his cheek, and pointed.

“Come on, they’re so big! I have to look.”

“You are utterly adorable,” Elaine said, and she leaned forward enough for her huge breasts to press down on the table with their weight, as she grinned at Fiona. “How strange it is, for a monster of nightmares such as yourself, to be the most jovial of us all.”

Fiona beamed, a big, bright smile, and Damien's annoyance with the whole situation vanished. Of course, Fiona being Fiona, and very drunk at that, didn't hesitate to slip her shoulder straps down and pull her dress's chest down to her hips, exposing her breasts for all. More giggles. She brought her hands up to her chin in tiny fists, pushed her breasts together with her forearms, and bounced a few times on Damien's lap, obviously trying to mirror Elaine's playful bounce earlier. And it worked. Everyone stared at Fiona's equally huge, jiggling breasts for a moment, Damien included. He probably should have been putting the drunk woman's dress back on, but, for some reason, he didn't.

"Is this the plan?" Jack said. "We strip? I—"

Groaning, Eric slipped out of his shirt, and set it on the table. When Jack looked at him, eyebrow raised and obviously disappointed, the man shrugged.

"When in Rome, right? Vamps pay my paycheck."

Jessy cheered and gave her man a hard slap in the chest. "Totally hot."

"Aye!" Fiona said, blushing when she glanced Eric's way. But before Damien could feel jealousy over that — the two had dated, after all — she grabbed Damien's hands, set them under her breasts, and leaned back onto his chest. "Hold these for me."

He rolled his eyes, but when Fiona turned and set a kiss on his cheek, he turned and returned it, without thinking. And, without thinking, he looked down over the small woman's shoulders, at her large, pale breasts, at how her freckles lessened the further down he looked, and he shivered over how their bottom-heavy teardrop shape spilled over his palms.

"This," Jessy said, "is the best night ever."

“You’re all a bunch of horny kids,” Jack said, folding his arms across his chest.

“Agreed,” Damien said, and he leaned his head over Fiona’s shoulder a bit to offer his friend a smile. Jack returned it.

“Come now Jack,” Antoinette said, and she leaned down over him to kiss his ear. “The freedom to express the body casually is something I have fought for in my city. It delights me to see these silly individuals be comfortable enough to disrobe.” Her hands roamed over his chest, and undid a few buttons as seamlessly as a magician. “Besides, you have made great strides in controlling your curse. There is nothing to stop us from simply enjoying tonight, silliness included.”

Jack frowned up at the woman, but didn’t stop her. Soon the boy was left topless, and Fiona whistled appreciatively. Of course she’d seen the boy topless before, in battle circumstances, but there was no denying that Jack, despite his small stature, had the physique of an acrobat, or lithe warrior. A physique similar to Damien’s, lean and defined, though Damien had half a foot of height on him.

Jack had apparently acquired a necklace. Damien didn’t recognize it, and while the others probably thought it was a fashion choice, he knew his friend better. No, if Jack wore a necklace, it was either because Antoinette wanted him to, or it served a purpose. It looked to be made of string, thin, black, and quite subtle. Damien glanced down at it and caught Jack’s eyes, and the boy mouthed ‘later’.

“Your turn your turn!” Fiona turned around and got to work on Damien’s clothes. Of course, unlike Antoinette, she fumbled with every button, and Damien eventually relented and helped her. Out of the suit jacket, out of the shirt, he set the clothes on the table, and frowned at his equally topless girlfriend. “Mmm. Can ye drink me? Right now?” She turned as much as she could on his lap, bringing her knee in until they were touching Jessy, and she pressed her breasts into his chest as she suckled on his neck. Her nipples were hard, and swollen, and everyone at the table knew it.

“In a little while,” he said. But, he didn’t stop the very horny woman from kissing his chin and neck more. He hugged her, held her close, and as he looked over her red hair at the rest of the table, he couldn’t help but smile. The moment he found the situation too annoying, the damn woman in his lap had him smiling.

After everyone had gotten a good look at Fiona’s soft, heavy breasts, all eyes slowly turned to look at Natasha.

She frowned, especially at Matt, Art, and Jessy, but after her frowns failed, she sighed, and pulled down the tiny tube top to her waist. The three she’d been frowning at all groaned together, and each stared longingly at the tiny woman’s small breasts and tight frame. She may have been extremely short, below five feet, but that didn’t change that her petite shape was feminine and alluring.

“Oh my god! So pretty!” Fiona bounced on Damien’s lap again, and gestured to Natasha. “She’s tinier than me! ‘N ye make movies! With these jimmys? Ah have tae see that!” Her accent grew thicker proportional to how drunk she was, evidently.

Damien had to admit, as he watched the tiny woman squirm between her two massive boyfriends, that it would be interesting to see her squashed between them. He’d seen Natasha naked through his telescope before, but a proper video was—

Oh good God, it was happening. It was just a matter of time, he supposed, but he didn’t expect it to come this way. Dolareido got him. He was now so comfortable with sexuality, that being topless and holding his topless girlfriend, among a bunch of other topless friends, merely registered as strange, instead of insane and utterly unreal.

Before he could say anything, Fiona snuggled her back into his chest, grabbed his hands again, and set them under her breasts again. Her swollen nipples pressed out from between his fingers, and he struggled to not caress them. Lord give him strength.

Everyone turned to Antoinette.

“I suppose you all expect to see the Prince of Dolareido strut about naked, like some common pleb?” she said. They all raised eyebrows as they looked at each other, but she laughed and nodded. “I am sure many of you wonder why I do the things I do, or why I have built Dolareido the way I have. Many of the decisions I have made are seeds, planted and prepared with centuries of care, knowing full well centuries more are required to bear fruit. I have a vision I wish to see into reality, and I do not expect others to understand the road I have paved.

“But, one piece of that vision, is to simply remove absurd barriers of shame and taboo over physical bodies.” Slowly, she slipped one of her straps off her shoulder, and then the other, but she used her hands to keep the loose chest against her bosom. And, earning a shiver from the whole table, she very gently, very slowly massaged each breast as she held her dress to them. “Our bodies are beautiful things, temples, to be cared for, shared, and flaunted.” Slowly, in a far more sexual way than anyone else had stripped, Antoinette slid the fabric down her breasts; it was a long journey. Bit by bit, she exposed her large, pink nipples, and the pale skin they sat upon. Slower again, she brought the fabric underneath her breasts, causing their mountainous weight to press down on her hands as she gently brought the fabric down further and further until it sat on her lap.

She let go of the dress, slipped one arm behind the very stunned Jack’s head, while the other teased up her stomach until the hand cupped her further breast. With a wicked devil smile, she gently bounced her breast in her palm, and the whole table shivered again as the enormous pillow rippled.

It wasn't like people didn't know what Antoinette looked like naked. Considering the clothes she usually wore to balls, nothing had been left to the imagination. But there was something a whole lot different between wearing flimsy ball gowns, and actually being topless, and bouncing one of her breasts in her hand. Everyone at the table knew it. Matthew did his best to not accidentally press his body into hers, probably to avoid Natasha's wrath, or the Prince's, but also to not block anyone else from seeing what he was seeing.

"Fiona," Jessy whispered, but loud enough everyone could hear, with her eyes still locked on Antoinette, "this party, was the best idea ever."

"Aye!"

Elaine was the first to laugh, and she leaned in toward Jack as she too hooked an arm behind the boy. The two busty women leaned in toward him, and considering their height compared to the boy's, their huge breasts squashed to his shoulders, spilled over them, and pressed to his ears and cheeks as well as his chest and sternum. It was a very succinct way of summarizing the sort of sexual treats the boy was treated to, likely near every night.

Everyone looked at Jack when they realized, and the boy managed a tiny shrug — jiggle jiggle — and small grin. He was getting into the spirit of things, too.

"I really didn't expect things to go this far," Jessy said.

"It is just skin," Elaine said. "Though I admit, with the amount of skin on display, this night seems to have some sprung from some young man's mind. Yours, perhaps, Jack?" Elaine tugged on the boy's body, causing his head to bounce gently against her closer breast.

“Uh, I was perfectly content for us all to just sit down, catch up, maybe talk a bit about work? Last I checked, Avery was getting kinda uppity about Maria, right? So—”

“Avery’s ... giving m-me a little more time to look into things,” Natasha said. Her eyes had wandered from Antoinette’s bust, onto Jack’s defined body, and then to the boys beside her. Arousal. If she’d been Blushing Life, she would have been ready.

Natasha and Damien were similar, in many ways. As much as the horribly awkward situation left them feeling terribly out of place, their arousal was undeniable. And, unlike the vampires, the monster and three werewolves could do nothing about their growing arousal. Everyone could smell sex slowly saturating the air.

“There, you see mon petit? Let us relax and socialize for a night.”

“With our boobs out?”

“Indeed,” Elaine said. “Antoinette wanted to prove to me how successful her Dolareido petri dish has been. I am convinced. Though I had hoped to see perhaps one more covenant join us tonight.”

“Wait,” Jessy said, “we’re all just ... fungi in your petri dish?”

The Prince smiled. “Oui.” She said it without hesitation or stutter or waver.

“I’m not sure how I feel about being treated like a lab experiment.”

“Feel free to challenge me for reign of my city then, young Gangrel.” Antoinette made a small shrug, before she half turned, and pressed her body into Jack even more, half hiding his upper body behind her bare breasts. “But it is my city, a city you have indulged in, have you not?”

As much as Antoinette — and Elaine — were making it clear that they were here to goof around, and not be powerful, important elders for the night, they weren't exactly being entirely truthful. No matter what happened tonight, it'd be impossible for the two women to spontaneously forget how powerful and important they were. They were doing a pretty good job, up until now, but Antoinette's question struck a chord that made Jessy hesitate. And Jessy never hesitated.

"You know," Eric said, "when I was fighting professionally, I went to a lot of crazy parties. I've done the topless thing in a booth, with a bunch of topless ladies. I've done the topless thing in a hot tub, with a bunch of topless ladies. Drugs, alcohol, the whole nine yards. And, uh, I don't think any of those nights ever really hit the ... dangerously hot factor tonight has."

Elaine and Antoinette laughed again. The rest of them laughed too, but the two elders evidently found the man's strange compliment the perfect balance of words, because they beamed big smiles at him.

"I have heard Uratha taste wonderful," Elaine said, and she half turned to face Eric. Which of course, squashed one of her breasts into his arm, and he froze; likely more because of the elder and the power she radiated, not because of contact with her chest. "May I?"

Jessy snarled, a half serious, half playful sound, and she cuddled into Eric's other side. "Hell no. He's mine. And he's not really into the orgy thing, despite my best efforts."

"Eric is a gentleman," Fiona said, sounding off with a strange bit of triumph in her tone.

Eric looked over at the redhead, smiled, shrugged, and leaned his body into Jessy. "I don't know about gentleman, but I guess I just never really got the appeal of having three or four or ten people in the bed."

“The appeal,” Elaine said with an authoritative voice, and she turned back to Jack, “can be found in many places. For those such as Miss Vola, perhaps it is simply that new forms of romantic intimacy can be found with three, where it cannot be found with two. And for those like my good friend Antoinette, it is a way to introduce avenues of pleasure that can only be found with more limbs, more fingers, and more mouths, than two people can have.” She squashed her breast into Jack’s side again, overflowing his naked shoulder and chest, and nudged the closer breast against his shoulder. As she did, Antoinette did the same yet again, and the poor kid gulped as the two women buried him in softness.

Elaine and Antoinette were an interesting pair. Damien hadn’t expected the two of them to ride the same wavelength so obviously; not with the same synergy as Matthew and Arturo, but still, it was blatant that the two got along better than just friends. Best friends. The two women grinned at each other, then down at the small man half covered in supple flesh, and they chuckled more sultry, succubus sounds.

“There are d-different things we could do,” Natasha said, “then obsess about sex all the time, right?”

“Agreed,” Damien said. Finally, a voice of reason.

“I dunno,” Jessy said, “we’re a group of insanely hot people, in a club. Like Eric said, he’s been in these kinda situations before, because hey, it’s what people do.”

Natasha shook her head. “Not true! We could ... I d-don’t know ... play ... poker?”

“Strip poker?” Fiona said.

“Not strip poker! Ugh, n-not poker then. Maybe we could ... t-talk about our lives? Kine do that. They talk about who’s seeing who, and sometimes they t-talk about who's getting married, or having kids."

"Former, sure," Eric said, "but the latter? Who's married and having kids? Not exactly a common topic in a club. And the music is usually too loud for anyone to do anything that needs details. Half the reason it's so loud, is to force people to talk with their bodies instead of their voices." He shrugged, and took a deep drink of his poison of choice. "And everyone's drunk. No one goes to a club for interesting conversation. They go to a club to shut their brain off, and jive either on the music, the dancing, or the sexual atmosphere; usually all the above. On the off chance you manage to find a place quiet enough where you can talk to someone, you'll get the most inane topics like fashion, misunderstanding tax brackets, or maybe where to score your fix for the week."

Damien listened and absorbed. Eric didn't talk much when others were present, likely because while the rest of them were quite familiar with the paranormal nightlife and the Danse Macabre, Eric's life had been far more normal, by Dolareido standards. If Fiona had been born in Dolareido, she'd likely have spent every night she could in clubs once she hit eighteen. Jack wasn't interested in that world before his embrace, and still wasn't. Only Eric had both lived as a human recently, but also spent time in the club scene as that human.

"Sounds pretty dull," Art said. "But who's seeing whom is always interesting." Natasha and Damien both looked at Art, eyebrows raised, surprised by his proper grammar. "What? I can speak good."

Natasha laughed. Damien laughed. The man was charming.

"My mom is seeing Jacob," Jack said, a scowl growing on his face. "So there's that."

Antoinette and Elaine both chuckled, motherly sounds, like they were used to the boy being silly. He'd probably spent a bit of time complaining to them about his mother and Jacob, then.

“Jacob is not a bad match,” Damien said. Everyone stared at him, especially Jack, and Damien put up his hands in surrender. “Jacob is chaos incarnate, but he’s no fool, and he’s not all horrible. I’m sure he’ll treat your mother with respect, and introduce her to many aspects of her second life. And, just like you and Antoinette, the differences between them, personality and age, might compliment each other.” His voice quietened, and everyone leaned in a little closer as Damien found himself speaking barely above a whisper. “And Beatrice is a witch now. Surely you trust her. She’ll keep an eye on Samantha.”

The mention of Beatrice softened Jack’s eyes, and he leaned back in his booth seat as his gaze dropped.

“Yeah ... yeah, she will.”

“Do not worry for your mother, my love,” Antoinette said, and she leaned in to place a kiss on his head. “I have a close eye on the situation, as well.” Everyone did their best to ignore how the Prince’s nearest breast squashed against the boy’s shoulder and chest when she leaned in, but it was obvious every was staring. And, naturally, the Prince also noticed, decided to indulge her audience, and guided Jack’s chin up to her. They kissed, and everyone could see the tension in the boy melt away as Antoinette pressed her bust into him.

Elaine leaned in as well, getting cozy, and turned enough in her seat to fully face Jack, press both of her naked breasts into him, and reach out to touch his abs with her further hand. Good Lord, if this continued, they’d be seeing a lot more of those three in the next few minutes.

“Maybe,” Jessy said toward Eric, “it’s the tits? I could find us a girl with giant tits?”

“I’m an ass man,” the man said, voice completely flat and smooth. It was enough to cut through the mounting sexual tension, and have them all laughing, including the elders. They stopped groping the boy, and grinned at Eric.

More drifting eyes eventually settled on Fiona, and Damien raised a brow before he looked down over his girlfriend’s shoulder to see what people were staring at. It was obvious the three werewolves were aroused; he could smell it, and they squirmed in attempts to hide their erections. Fiona’s arousal was even more blatant, with her quiet panting and engorged nipples pressing against his fingers. She leaned back against Damien, intertwined her fingers with his against her breasts, and stroked her areola with a circling finger as she half closed her eyes.

“I think, maybe we should end this gathering now?” Damien said.

“I vote against that,” Jessy said, head turned and staring at Fiona beside her. “I want to see—” A balled up napkin hit her in the face, incoming fire from across the table.

Natasha frowned at her friend, though the frown melted away as Arturo leaned down over his girlfriend, and set a kiss on her head. And like Elaine had moments earlier, his hand reached across to find Natasha’s tiny waist, only to drift upward and tease along one of her small breasts. Matthew, evidently sharing a psychic connection with Arturo, did the same thing, at the same time. Poor Natasha mewled, and tightened up her lips in an effort to silence herself, her frown never leaving despite the obvious joy her boyfriends sent through her.

She managed a quick, desperate glance to Damien, and he nodded. Yeah, this was a bit too much for any Mekhet to handle, way too much open, social atmosphere, and way too many people for them.

Damien sighed and pulled down Fiona's hands from her breasts. "Come on, I think maybe we've all explored our sexual boundaries enough for one evening?"

"Speak for yourself," Jessy said.

"I agree with the Gangrel," Elaine said. "And besides, this is nothing." With a returned evil grin, she leaned back in her seat, and cupped both of her breasts in her hands. And with a voice like she was telling ghost stories around a fire, she did the same thing Fiona was trying to do, and caressed her nipples. "You have not experienced indulgence, until you have felt a hundred hungry eyes on you, while a dozen kine massage and fill every inch of you."

Fiona whimpered and tried to lift her hands back to her bust, but Damien held them at her sides, despite the two of them staring at Elaine, hypnotized. Everyone did. But after a moment, Antoinette reached out, and gently pushed her friend's hands down from her breasts.

"Come now old friend, not everyone here is as comfortable with this as you or I." Antoinette didn't have to say it. She was talking about Natasha.

Nodding, Damien slid Fiona's dress back up over her shoulders, despite her struggling, and slid out of the booth along with her. Back on his feet, he waited for the others to follow.

"I admit," he said, "the Prince has created a city with a sense of joy and freedom I hadn't let myself see, when I served Lucas. I ... think maybe some people will take a lot longer to embrace as sexual atmosphere as this"—he gestured to the booth filled with topless men and women—"but I cannot deny, it is very appealing."

"Aye!" Fiona squeaked, and she immediately tried to slip out of her dress again. He stopped the drunk by hugging her from behind and pinning her arms to her sides.

More laughter from the group, and they filed out of the booth. Natasha smiled at Damien, her eyes screaming ‘thank you’, and she slipped her tube top back on before she and her boyfriends, now wearing their shirts again, left Bloodlust. Eric and Jessy did the same, though Jessy didn’t bother reapplying her nipple covers; the see-through dress was better than being naked at least, Damien supposed.

Antoinette and Elaine both smiled at Damien, slipped their dresses back up and on, and slid out of the booth.

“There is hope for you yet,” Antoinette said, and she looked behind her to Jack who was putting on his shirt. “Coming, my dear?”

“Uh, yeah, I’ll be right there. Need to talk to Damien first though.”

The two elders nodded, and departed. Damien could almost hear the crowd below grow silent in admiration of the two inhumanly gorgeous women. Little did the bottom floor of Bloodlust realize how close it’d come to both those women stripping naked and fucking Jack in front of anyone who had the courage to come upstairs.

Eventually, it was only Jack, and Damien. And Fiona, but the poor girl was hopelessly drunk, and he had to sit her back in the booth to keep her from falling.

“Quite the night,” Damien said.

“Yeah, it was. I thought this might happen, when I realized who was coming. Jessy, and Fiona together? Recipe for a sex bomb.”

“I think it was Antoinette and Elaine that pushed things over the edge.”

He laughed and shrugged. “Only because Jessy didn’t, because they were here. But, once everyone got comfortable, I’m pretty sure we were ten minutes away from things getting ... uh ... voyeuristic.”

“Indeed,” Damien said.

“Natasha seems like the kind of girl who’d prefer to keep a distance between herself and others, when sex is concerned. Good call stopping the party when you did.”

“Physical proximity, maybe. Apparently she enjoys making—”

Jack put up his hands. “Let’s just, uh, ignore that fact.” Sighing, Jack grabbed his jacket and slipped it on. “I’m kinda surprised the night went so well, with me here.”

“You thought the curse would break free?”

Jack shook his head and leaned back until his butt rested against the table edge. “No. Elaine and I have been working on that. Meditation helps. We’ve got some other tricks too.”

“The necklace?”

He nodded. “Yeah. Helps keep the curse quiet. But that’s not why I thought people would be weird about this party. I figured ... well...”

Damien sighed, and leaned back against the table beside Jack. “That night in the Great Below, that was ... brutal.”

“You staked me.”

“I had no choice.”

“I know, I know. I’m happy you did.” The boy looked down, struggling to find the words. “Guess I’m just feeling ashamed of myself, for giving in like I did, and nearly attacking you.”

“I spent fifty years, the first fifty years of my second life, hiding in sewers, only to raise a madman from torpor. I launched an assault on the Elysium Tower, and tried to kill your lover. I spend every night feeling ashamed.”

Jack winced and shook his head. “Come on, you—”

Damien put up a hand. “It’s behind me. My second life is infinitely better now Jack, and you’re a big reason for that. And her.” He nodded to Fiona, who beamed up at him. “So, this curse, it’s a problem, and I want to help. Still want to help.”

The Ventrue sighed relief. “I know I know. I guess ... guess I just had to hear it.”

Damien pat the man on his shoulder. “I’ve been looking into Maria’s records like you asked, what she managed to salvage anyway. But I’ve yet to find anything.”

“Yeah, didn’t think you would. How many other vampires in history have managed to trigger this curse? How many vampires would be smart enough, or stupid enough, to write down details about it?”

“Only the dragons and the Sanctified would keep such journals, which is why I thought maybe you were onto something with your request. The issue is, most of the books Lucas had are in no way organized. Information, random, written as journals, without any sort of eye for detail or due process.”

“Heh, yeah, similar situation with Elaine. But she’s helped me a lot.”

Damien frowned. “I don’t trust her.”

Instead of getting upset with him, Jack laughed, and Damien raised a brow at him.

“Yeah, I don’t think anyone really trusts her. Even the Prince keeps an eye on her, though with her I suspect she’d probably think of any betrayal from her friend as an ‘oh you silly goose’ sorta situation.”

“Those two are ... an interesting pair.”

“Do ye swim?” Fiona asked after a hiccup.

“Uh, swim?”

“In the tits!” She gestured to where Jack had sat minutes ago. “Aw squished together like that, ye could swim in them.”

Jack raised a brow, and looked at Damien. “Don’t let her drink anymore.”

“I won’t.”

Nodding, Jack pushed away from the table, turned, and stepped away backward. “Once the curse is gone, things will be back to normal ... ish. I can get back to regular Right Hand stuff. We can deal with Terra Den and Jeremy long, and the Carthians. Hell, we can see about getting you some more freedom for your Longinus stuff.”

Damien laughed. “And your sister?”

“I ... Mom and I will figure out something. It sucks just leaving her there, but no one lives there, so she isn’t hurting anyone.” Jack looked down for a moment, searching for the words, though he’d already shared them with Damien several times. It hurt him, badly, to have Mary back in his life as a ghost. It hurt his mother, too. The only reason the situation was manageable, and not driving them to the brink of insanity, was because they were vampires and already buried in a strange, supernatural world.

“It’ll be nice to have things normal again,” Damien said. He couldn’t keep a little sadness out of his voice, like the idea was some lofty goal beyond them. It kinda was.

Jack managed a weak smile, but nodded, waved, and walked away. “I’ll talk to you later.”

“Later then.” Damien nodded to his friend, and watched him disappear down the stairs.

Rolling his eyes, Damien stood up, turned around, and looked down at Fiona in the booth seat. She was busy reaching across the large, circular booth table, in an effort to reach some alcohol Natasha’s boys had left. It didn’t occur to her that she was too short to reach, or to scoot across the booth to reach from the other side, and she whined before looking up at Damien, as if he’d rescue her from her horrible predicament.

“You knew,” he said. “You knew Jack and I were avoiding each other.”

“Aye.”

“And ... and you knew, if you got us all here, we’d talk.” Because, much as Damien and Jack were very different people, they shared many things in common. A dislike of social situations like the gathering they’d just had, for one.

“Aye!” She pushed up onto her hands on the table, and almost got onto it on her knees before Damien gently pushed her back down into the seat.

“You, are smart.”

“I know!” Giggling, she wrapped her arms around him, and grinned up at him as she did. “Tits make everyone easier tae talk to.”

“I’m pretty sure tits make it harder for people to talk to each other”

She shook her head. “Yer wrong!” Giggling again, she reached up, pulled down on his neck, and kissed him. She smelled of life, joy, and alcohol. “Now, come ‘ere.”

“I am here. I—” His mouth froze, and he stared at her, jaw hanging, as she again slid the straps off her shoulders. Before he could say anything, she giggled, climbed back onto the table, kicked off her shoes, and slid the dress off her legs, leaving her completely naked. No underwear. “Uh, Fiona, you...” Damien gulped, and looked over to the other booth. In the darkness, he could see the werewolves and vampires grinding, touching, fondling, drinking. In another booth, two vampires were lip locked, bodies barely able to fit between booth and table.

Fiona grinned at him, and reached out for him. He approached, and once he reached the edge of the table, she sat up, inched forward toward him, and set her hands on his pants.

“Here?”

“‘Ere.” She slid her hands into his pants, found his length, and teased it. He wasn’t Blushing Life yet, but that didn’t seem to bother her.

“There’s ... people around.”

“Doin’ the same thing I want tae be doin’. Blush for me.”

He sighed, and smiled down at the very drunk, very beautiful, very naked busty little redhead. “Fiona, you’re drunk.”

“Ah am.”

Lord, give him strength. “And, we just spent a few hours with some—”

“Giant tits!”

“I was going to say beautiful people.”

“Aye, very beautiful. Natasha is so tiny, but the Prince and her friend are so tall! Tall, and busty, and ... and wow. The Prince’s tits are just ... mmmm!”

Why was it so extremely hot when a woman showed obvious sexual interest in other women? He rolled his eyes again, more at himself than anything, and smiled at the naked woman trying to break him.

“They’re breasts, Fiona. We—”

“But they were huge!”

He laughed. This woman, his polar opposite, swimming in sin and alcohol without a single hint of shame or concern, was changing him. She continued to massage and fondle his soft length, eyes gazing up at him, and he drowned in her golden gaze. She squeezed her breasts together with her biceps, licked her lips, and placed a kiss on his stomach.

Lord, forgive him. He gave in, and Blushed. The smell of her, the taste of her, he had to have more. Even in this place, this very public place, he had to have more.

She moaned with a squeak as his length hardened in her hands, and she stroked it while she beamed up at him.

“In case you didn’t notice, Fiona, you also have really huge breasts.”

From the little Damien knew about women, telling a girl she had huge breasts wouldn't normally be met with overflowing giggles of pure joy. In Dolareido, the women — and men — were a bit more vain, sure, and a compliment like that might fly better. But Fiona took it like he'd struck some sort of magical chord that resonated with her whole being, something that made her feel beyond happy.

“Nae as big as the Prince's.”

“No, but I don't think anyone thinks her body is natural.”

“Fake tits?”

Damien laughed. “More like, she probably did something to herself a long time ago. The white hair, red eyes, extreme height, and breasts?”

Fiona tapped her chin at that, before nodding. “Yer likely right. But, there wasnae any plastic in there! A lass always knows.” Nodding sagely, as if admitting to some sort of ancient, secret wisdom, she let go of his length, and cupped each of her breasts. With enthusiasm, and absolutely no subtly, she bounced each breast in her hands, one then the other. “Big as Elaine's?”

He rolled his eyes for the hundredth time that night, leaned down, and kissed her. “Yes. And because you're little, your breasts look utterly massive on you. Jessy says you're half boob.” The compliment was ridiculous, but he knew it'd work. Fiona was like Jessy in a strange way, with similar social sensibilities. No wonder they got along.

Giggling like a maniac, she kissed him back, and slid further back along the booth table, until she was far back and between the curve of the booth seats. Shadows covered her, but Kindred eyes could see through the minor red lighting and the pulsing white to see the naked, curvy, beautiful redhead as she laid her body out on her back. One hand slid between her legs, and she masturbated casually, as if she was in the privacy of her apartment. His Kindred nose knew she was dripping wet; she'd been aroused five minutes into the party, like the werewolves. Finally able to release her pent up arousal, she wasted no time touching herself.

“Come ‘ere, ‘n treat me like one of those kine at the ball!”

He chuckled, a sound he was starting to re-familiarize with the more he spent time with her, and he slid into the booth seat. Concern for people who might see them, gone. Concern for watching his back, gone. Concern for his appearance, and not looking like a proper bishop, gone. There was a meal on his table, and he was hungry.

“You know you’re a nightmare monster, right? Scary spider monster, so I’ve heard.”

She blew out her breath, lips bubbling together, and shook her head. “Lies. I’m a sweet, innocent young lassie, captured off the streets, tae be fed tae hungry, horny vampires!” As much as Fiona loved to indulge in naughty roleplay fantasies — like Natasha did, according to Jessy — she couldn’t act. Fiona smiled, giggled, grabbed a nearby drink and downed it before he could stop her, then laughed more heartily before lying down on her back in front of him, side toward him.

He leaned over her, and looked her body up and down, like he was admiring a meal. Half acting, half not.

She may not have been a good actor, being the silly, extreme extrovert that she was, but it didn’t take much for him to get into a mindset. If she wanted him to play the role of master vampire feeding on prey or slave, he could do that. They’d played this game before, dozens of times, just, never in public. The sheer audacity of doing this in a public place was a strange spice he wasn’t familiar with, but the time they spent on the roof of the Black Hall during Antoinette's ball came back up in his mind, and he smiled darkly down at his girlfriend.

He took both her hands in his, and pinned them against the table above her head.

"Ah! Oh no!" she said, again, acting so utterly atrocious it was criminal. Maybe this was what people meant by 'so bad it's good' movies?

The bad acting didn't matter. Fiona's endless giggles and relentless smile filled him with joy, and he growled down at her like the dark, scary vampire she wanted him to pretend to be. He kept her hands pinned, a little of his vampire strength to ensure she was trapped, while his free hand reached across her body. He cupped her further breast, pulled it up onto the center of her torso, and let it go, just to watch it ripple as it pulled to the side with its heavy mass. Her pink nipples stood up, swollen and puffy, and he leaned in to kiss the closer one.

She shivered, mewled, and squirmed. "Nae, please stop!"

Chuckling, he sank his face into the enormous softness of her breast, while his right hand drifted further down her supple body. Soft, beautiful, and warm. His prey let out some pleased squeaks as he placed tender kisses on her breast, and she jutted her chest out, seeking more stimulation.

Instead, he lifted his head, and smiled down at his meal, as he sank his fingers into her slit.

"Nn!" Her jaw dropped, and she gasped openly as he pressed his fingers up against her g-spot. So much for foreplay. Fiona was already dripping.

"Watching everyone get half naked really turned you on, didn't it?" His mind clouded over with arousal every moment he was with his nude girlfriend, until dark, dirty thoughts he always kept suppressed snuck up onto the surface. “You’re a bad girl.”

The dialog would have sounded hilariously awful in any other context. But with her body pinned under his grip, his teeth grazing along her swollen nipple, and his fingers inside her boiling, soaked depths, the words took on a life of their own. They had impact. They had heat.

Fiona mewled, and pushed her hips toward his hand. “I’m sorry! Please, dinnae be mean!”

He leaned up over her, higher, and brought his lips down onto her neck. “Naughty. Dirty. You need to be punished.”

She squealed again. He could feel her facial muscles smile, but her squirms continued, while her panting and mewls only grew louder. She was expecting a Kiss, the satisfaction of his fangs puncturing her neck, and flooding her with exhausting bliss. She wanted to cum on his fingers while he drained her.

He didn’t. He leaned back, and slid his fingers out of her.

“W-What? No, Damien! Come on, ye bawbag! I’m—ack!” She squeaked again when he pulled her off the table, and set her on his lap on her stomach. “What’re ye—eeh!” Another squeak, and she looked up at him over her shoulder, as he gave her large, soft ass, a resounding smack.

Poor Fiona was terribly drunk and aroused, and it only took her moments to sink into the new position he’d forced on her. She squirmed on his lap, but made no attempts to leave. He slapped her ass again, hard enough to hear the smack through the music, and she whimpered openly. He traced his fingers up and down the soft, pale skin, and smiled at how it turned pink where he’d slapped it. Growling quietly under his breath, he kneaded the meat of her buttocks, squeezed and massaged its softness until it molded to his fingers, before he slapped it again.

He raised his eyes in shock as Caleb, Brianna, and the others walked past his booth. They were giggling and laughing, the werewolves obviously drunk, and the vampires obviously fed; maybe had a kine come visit them to be devoured. No doubt the group of them were off to enjoy sex, possibly together. They blinked at Damien, and Damien blinked at them, taking a moment to realize they could see he was still shirtless, could see Fiona's dress on the table, could see her frizzy red hair, and could see a bit of her ass where it stuck up on his lap.

He looked down at his girlfriend, his meal, and as if possessed, he gave her ass another hard spank, earning a squeak, and then a wavering mewl. The people watching chuckled between themselves, gave him a few finger waves, and walked off.

Fiona looked up at him again, and Damien grinned at her. She was stuck between a smile, and a shameful, shy gaze. The smile vanished when he spanked her again, and she bit down on her bottom lip.

“Ye’re being mean today ... Master.”

The words sent a shiver through his body, and he slapped her ass again. This bright, unashamedly merry little woman, was going to drown him in sin. Her mewl turned into an outright moan, and he spanked her one more time, nice and hard, enough to make her shift on his lap. Her body trembled, and her feet kicked at the booth a few times as she writhed in her need and want.

He often Kissed her early on, when they had sex. The Kiss filled him with sexual hunger, and left her a sensitive, exhausted, drenched thing who came at the slightest touch. But it also meant she was too exhausted to do anything, or make anymore noise than soft whimpers. This time, he decided to wait. He wanted to Kiss her, and she wanted him to. The anticipation had them boiling.

He eased out from under her across the booth seat. “Get on your knees.”

Pouting and biting her bottom lip some more, she did as ordered. Soon she was on her knees and palms on the booth seat, and Damien licked his lips as he admired the sight of her swollen slit, and the wetness awaiting him.

He slid his pants down, got onto his knees on the booth beside her, aligned the head of his cock with her entrance, grabbed her hips, and thrust into her, hard.

“Nnn! Damien, ye’re ... being ... rough.” Again she looked over her shoulder at him with her face caught somewhere between her relentless, perfect smiles, and dropping her jaw in an ‘O’ of pleasure. The smile vanished when he pulled back, and slammed into her again, replaced with groans and her eyes half closing as they rolled up.

He wasn’t gentle, and didn’t use a more normal pace. He pounded into her hard enough to see her ass ripple when it slapped against his pelvis, and Fiona squeaked as she struggled to stay on her hands and knees. Her huge breasts swayed underneath her, and his Beastly hunger sent a growl through him as he watched the backside of her teardrop breasts jiggle with his thrusts.

He jackhammered into her fast, eyes locked onto the hourglass shape of her soft body, her large ass shaking as it slapped into him, and her huge breasts flopping around underneath her. It didn’t take long for her to cum, her tiny insides clamping tight around him and leaking juices as he slammed into her. It didn’t take long for him to cum either; she’d been boiling for a lot longer than he’d been, but no man could survive long when pounding fast into a woman’s hot, squeezing, soaked insides.

He slowed his pace, but not the roughness of his thrusts, and each time he slammed into Fiona, she let out a squeak. Growling again, he slapped her ass, earning another hard clench of her pussy around his cock. Muscle spasms massaged his length, and the poor woman struggled to stay on her hands as he filled her with his cum.

And then he started thrusting again.

“Damien! I—”

He slapped her ass again, causing her to clench as hard as she could, almost like she was trying to get him to hold still, but he set his hands on her hips and pulled her toward him, even as he pounded into her, again like a jackhammer.

“M-Master!” She managed to peek at him over her shoulder, and her smile was gone, replaced with only pleasure, before she collapsed onto her chest on the booth seat. “Slow doooown.” Again, she clamped down on his length, her juices dripping out of her along with his cum. He didn’t slow down. She tried to push herself back up onto her hands, but another orgasm ripped through her, and she collapsed. He didn’t slow down.

As he felt his second orgasm approach, he slammed into her hard, earning a weak squeak, before he again slapped her ass. Every time he did, her body clenched down on his cock, and he shivered as the heavenly friction along his glans sent sparks of bliss down into his pelvis and under his testicles. He took a moment to let his pleasure fade, before he again slammed into her, and again gave her ass a hard spank. Again she clamped down, and as the tiny redhead mewled on the booth, more of her juices coated him. If not for the music, he could have heard the drip drip of it against the seat.

He looked down at her ass, and smiled softly. Even in the red lighting and pulsing white light, he could see the skin was thoroughly pink. Ok, maybe enough spanking.

He slipped out of her, sat down, and pulled the tired girl onto his lap. He turned her to face him, set her legs so she sat on her knees around him, took her by the hips, and eased her down onto his cock. Instant tremors from her, and she hugged him tight as she buried her face in his neck and chest.

“Master,” she purred.

He growled, slid his hands down her naked back, and set them on her ass. He pressed down, making sure she was balls deep on his length, before he gave both her cheeks a couple of soft smacks. More purrs.

He leaned forward, scooped his arms up her back so she tilted backward, and he sank his teeth into her neck. Her purrs quickly turned into loud groans, and she clutched him tight as the sensation of the Kiss hit them both. She came again, wriggling and squirming in his grip like prey trying to escape, each twist and grinding sway of her body squeezing and massaging his length in wet, gripping flesh. It was more than enough to have him cumming inside her for the second time.

And then her blood hit him. The Kiss always filled a vampire with bliss, but also with life. His body responded with overflowing, overwhelming biological joy, and he flooded her insides until he felt his cum flowing out of her. While one arm held her waist, the other slid up to net his fingers into her frizzy hair, and he pulled, forcing her head back. With her face pointed upward and his fangs sunk deep into her neck, the redhead wriggled against him, hard nipples pressed into his chest, as her orgasm was forced to continue. Her thighs trembled, legs squeezed, and her insides clamped down in random spasms as the Kiss drove her into pleasure again, and again.

He squeezed her harder. The taste of her inhuman blood, the overpowering, intoxicating flavor of it, sent heat up through his undead body. All thoughts of Bloodlust, of the fact he was sitting in a public booth, all gone, replaced with nothing but bliss and aching desire for the tiny redhead sitting on his cock. Human blood would have had him ready to fuck again. Her blood, her powerful, monstrous, delicious blood, did more than that. It clouded his mind, made it difficult to think straight, and demanded he take what was his: her. He was consciously aware of what her blood was doing to him, but it felt too damn good to give into its dark allure. It filled his stomach, and he took more, and more, as Fiona whimpered into his ear, her legs trembling and her depths clenching.

At last, he released his bite on her neck, his fingers from her hair, and raised his eyes.

Beatrice, Jennifer, Othello and his ghoul, and Aaron stood by the table, each dressed for a night out, and each looking at him with curious eyes. Jennifer and Beatrice in particular, looked very interested.

And beside them, was Jacob. He wore black suit pants, but all he had on his chest was an open white shirt, and Damien found himself surprised at how fit and lean the man looked. Actually, he looked similar to Damien, physically speaking, a thin frame with plenty of well defined musculature.

The other witches marched ahead of Jacob, but the man wasn't alone. He had Samantha beside him, and she was dressed the same as the witches, scantily, a black dress that complimented Jacob, particularly the exposed chest and stomach. It was the same sort of dress Elaine had worn tonight, something that hooked behind the neck, with plunging cleavage that dipped all the way below the navel. Another inch and he'd know if she was shaved or not.

Jacob and Samantha looked at him. At least, he thought Jacob looked at him. Hard to tell considering he was wearing some fancy glasses that stuck to his face, hid his eyes, and were very thin and streamlined. The man may as well have walked off The Matrix set.

Jacob chuckled and moved on, though Samantha lingered, and looked at him for a few seconds with hungry eyes, before she followed the elder.

“Now this,” Jennifer said, “is a surprise.” Chuckling, she slid into the booth, and didn’t hesitate to scoot in closer, until she was only a foot away from him. “My oh my. I saw the look in your eyes when you Kissed her, bishop of the church. That was pure ... fire.”

He grit his teeth and glared at her, but a shift in weight from Fiona broke his gaze as it sent bliss through him. Instead, he hugged the naked woman close to his body. A protective gesture, he knew it, and a useless one. But still.

Beatrice rolled her eyes and slid into the booth as well, opposite of Jennifer, while Othello, his ghoul, and Aaron moved on with Jacob. Thankfully, Beatrice didn’t slide in as close as Jennifer, keeping a few feet between him and her.

Fiona turned her head enough to glimpse at the Ventrue, though it was clear the tiny redhead was still very drunk, and now quivering in the relaxing waves of the Kiss, and orgasm. She was likely barely aware of what was happening. And, because Damien was obviously cursed to forever be caught in awkward situations, Fiona started to squirm on his lap again. He’d drained her enough to put a kine into a bliss coma, but she was a Begotten. Maybe it was Vrral pushing her, he didn’t know, but she pushed her hips back and forth as she hugged him, weak and tired, but not so tired she couldn’t wriggle on his lap, or squeeze his hard length.

“You just fed,” Jennifer said, smile wide, and almost manic. “The one thing that sucks about the Kiss: you can’t stop Blushing Life.”

He frowned at her. It was true. The sensation of Fiona’s exotic blood trickling down his throat, filling him with warmth and her Horror’s strange, alien power, had his body lit up with life and arousal. He wouldn’t be able to dismiss the Blush for another ten, maybe fifteen minutes. A perfect opportunity for a witch to put him in a very awkward position.

“Don’t be an asshole, Jen,” Beatrice said.

“I’m not! I’m just surprised, that’s all. I never expected to find this. Jack and the Prince? Yes. Jessy and Eric? Obviously. Natasha and her boys?” Jennifer fanned herself several times with a hand. “I wish. But the bishop? Never.”

Beatrice shrugged, and gestured to Fiona. “Probably her doing.”

“I don’t suppose you two ladies could go?” Damien said, doing everything in his power to keep his voice flat and cold. He managed, but only barely, as Fiona continued to gently grind on him, her drenched insides boiling and squeezing.

Jennifer and Beatrice looked at each other, had some sort of psychic conversation, before Jennifer shrugged and shook her head. “If you didn’t want to be spotted, or maybe have company, you should have fucked your girlfriend in private.”

He growled at her, and Jen pulled her head back a couple inches. Unfortunately, the growl also earned a pleased mewl from Fiona, and she ground her body into him harder, flattening her breasts against his chest as she squeezed on his length. That, earned a happy groan from Jennifer, and she sighed wistfully as she watched.

“Come on, relax,” Beatrice said. “Your girlfriend is onto something.”

Fiona giggled, and leaned back until her back pressed against the table edge. He may have found the whole situation extremely awkward and unnerving, but she didn’t. Combined with the rush of her blood pouring through him, it was taking every bit of mental control he had to not grab Fiona’s hips and start bouncing her up and down.

Jennifer groaned again, and slid in a little closer. “That is a very happy woman. And a beautiful woman.” Her eyes slid down Fiona’s frizzy red hair, half-closed amber gaze, her freckled skin and pale, huge breasts, down her flat but soft stomach, and down to where the tiny woman’s slit was spread wide around Damien’s girth. It was thoroughly soaked, in her juices and his cum. Jen licked her lips.

When Fiona started to bounce, exhausted and panting, but determined to pursue more pleasure, Beatrice slid in closer as well. Both women stared, hypnotized by Fiona’s movements, and how the woman’s soft, heavy breasts jiggled against her torso as she did. And once Beatrice was a little closer, both women looked down, and stared at how Fiona’s tiny slit, smooth and soaked, blatantly leaked more juices as the woman came again.

Damien growled again, the rush of Fiona’s blood sending need and aggression through his limbs. The witches didn’t matter. All that mattered was his girlfriend, his prey, his meal. He reached out for her, grabbed her hips, and bounced her. He was not gentle. Fiona squeaked openly with each bounce, and leaning back as she was, her breasts bounced wildly, creating a mesmerizing sight that had Damien, and the two spectators staring.

As the tingling waves of warm pleasure started up his cock, he slammed girlfriend down onto his cock a couple more times, each hard enough to make her squeal, before he pulled her back onto him, hugged her close, and filled her with his cum for the third time that night. Both witches groaned in obvious envy, and Damien couldn’t help but smile, hopefully hidden behind Fiona’s hair where they couldn’t see it.

Ok, maybe a public place was a fun idea. His girlfriend knew him better than he did.

Chapter 128

~~Beatrice~~

Damien was a sexy fucker. Yeah, she knew he was built all lean and lithe, and he had the face and hair of a young girl's emo vampire crush. But seeing him give into his hunger — caused by Fiona's blood she figured — was fucking hypnotizing. The dude bounced his exhausted girlfriend on his dick until her giant tits were almost hitting her in the face, and she was mewling and whimpering, until Triss and Jen were both squirming as they watched.

Fiona collapsed on Damien's chest, and he hugged her tight as they came. Which earned a longing sigh from Jen.

“What's it like?” Jen said.

Damien, clutching his girlfriend as he slowly came down from his pleasure high, looked at Jen, something between pleasure and annoyance on his face. Probably the sorta face Triss often had, when Jen teased her during sex with Julias. It was a cute face, she had to admit. And Damien was kinda asking for some teasing, being caught mid-fuck in a nightclub.

“What's what like?”

“Being the man, and draining a woman as you fuck her. Triss and I can't really speak to the experience. I mean, I've fucked plenty of kine while draining them, but it's not the same.”

Damien rolled his eyes, and held Fiona close to him, as if to protect her from them, and hide her body from their eyes. Heh, didn't matter now, not after seeing the curvy short stack bouncing on that dick like her life depended on it.

“It’s ... satisfying,” he said.

Triss laughed. “Satisfying? That’s it? Looked like you were enjoying the best thing in the world, dude. Maybe the better question is, what does it feel like to be inside a girl when she’s getting Kissed?”

Damien glared at her, but she saw more of that half pleased look in his eyes. “It’s wonderful, ok?”

Jen rolled her eyes, mirroring and mocking Damien. “No details? No talk of ... clenching, boiling heat, dripping juices, muscle spasms? Please, regale me.”

“No.”

“Ugh, you are such a bore.”

Triss shook her head. “He was a bore. Now, he’s sitting naked in a booth with his naked girlfriend, in public, fucking her and Kissing her, and...” She leaned back and underneath the booth a bit to double check something. Confirmed. “And, giving his naughty girl a spanking.”

Jen moaned, and sighed. “If you were Othello, you’d happily share every dirty detail with us.”

“I’m not Othello.” The Mekhet raised a hand, and stroked Fiona’s back. She mewled into his neck, coming down from her orgasm high, and delighting in his touch like a lovesick puppy. Hard to tell if that meant anything, considering Fiona’s personality, but maybe it did.

“True,” Jen said, “but now you’re part of the ... more active members of Dolareido’s nightlife, and its Kindred. I give it another year, then you’ll be inviting others for an audience to your lovemaking.”

“He’s not a warlock, Jen.”

“He doesn’t need to be a member of the Circle to enjoy putting on a spectacle.” She grinned at the man, and licked her lips enticingly. “And it was a spectacle. You’re a gorgeous man, Damien. Young girls everywhere would swoon over you, if your face ever found its way into media.”

Fiona nodded, though she kept her face hidden in his neck. It was pretty damn cute, especially cause her frizzy red hair rubbed into his chin.

“If you two insist on pestering me, can I ask a question?”

“Shoot,” Triss said.

“Did you two run into Jack and the others? They left not long ago.”

Jennifer grinned. “We did. Jack didn’t look happy to see his mother with Jacob.”

“Understandable.”

Triss frowned. “How’s that? Jacob is—”

“It’s not about Jacob. It’s about Jack.” The man sighed, leaned back in his seat, and stroked Fiona’s back as she hugged him. Silly girl would fall asleep if he gave her the chance, even with the pulsing bass-heavy music in their ears. “You know Jack suspects him of ... everything, I suppose. And since you’re here, making my life Hell, I should also ask: does he treat Samantha well?”

Oh, that. Laughing, Triss and Jen shared glances before grinning at the man.

“She’s here with him, isn’t she?” Triss said.

Jennifer nodded. “Indeed. Samantha has been enjoying her time with the Circle. And, she’s been enjoying her time with Jacob immensely. Intensely. Sort of like how Fiona seems to be enjoying yours.” Grinning, she reached out and touched Fiona’s hair, only for Damien to swat her hand away.

Damien eyed Jen, but when he looked at Beatrice, it was different. The look said it all. He expected Triss to keep an eye on Samantha, to protect her, to do the right thing.

She smiled at him, pat the naked man on his shoulder, nodded, and got out of the booth. “Come on Jen.”

Jennifer gave Damien her sexy look, her ‘if you and Fiona joined me I’d make Heaven look like a two-star hotel’ look. But she was just playing, teasing and whatnot, the damn slut, and she slid out of the booth to join Triss. Of course, the two of them took a moment to look back at the pretty boy and the naked short stack still sitting on his dick, and grinned.

They moved on, and slid into the booth Jacob had found.

“They’re a cute couple,” Triss said as she and Jen got comfortable, taking the other side of Samantha and Jacob, who had Othello, Madison, and Aaron on the other.

“Yeah,” Samantha said, “I think so.”

“Oh? Do you know about Damien’s past?” Jennifer asked.

“Only a little. My sire told me about Lucas, and what Damien did, attacking the tower and all that.” She nodded to herself as she thought about something. “I’ve seen Fiona a few times, and she seems full of life. Damien seems like the sort of man who needs that, like ... like his life has been taken from him, right?”

“You don’t think he’s a bit mature for her?” Othello said. “And not about the age difference. Age difference doesn’t really affect Kindred, as I’m sure you’ve noticed.” He gestured to the far, far older man beside Samantha. “But, Damien’s a pretty somber guy.”

Samantha shook her head. “Sometimes opposites attract. Sometimes, the best relationships are when two people fill in the gaps for each other.”

That was a nice sentiment, but Beatrice wasn’t buying it. “Eh, maybe. People need to have some kind of foundation to connect on. I have no idea how you and the boss are connecting, but I’m sure you have something.” That was a lie. She had a clue. The two were adults; like, embraced at an adult age, and that affected how their brains worked. And they’d both lost, a lot.

When the two were done fucking like animals, it was easy to imagine the two of them talking about their lives, and finding comfort in each other. Samantha would probably talk first, because her wounds were relatively new, and she was softer than Jacob. And once the woman’s sweet heart penetrated Jacob’s many, many, many masks, he might confide in her a grain of truth about him.

Jacob grinned subtly, hooked his arm around Samantha, and gently hugged her against him for a second. But he said nothing. He just smiled, and set a kiss on Samantha’s ear.

There was something there, in his expression. So fucking damn hard to read without eyes, but something in his grin caught Triss’s eye, and she raised a brow for a moment as she looked at the man. Maybe Damien wasn’t too far off the mark, asking her to look after Samantha.

---

Beatrice and Jen took to the streets in Devil’s Corner. Triss made sure to wrap herself in the Discipline Face in the Crowd, so passing eyes glanced over her. Jen on the other hand, walked the street like she was looking for a client for the night. Still wearing her nightclub dress, she definitely looked the part. A few times, someone stopped their car and asked her how much. She politely declined.

“Getting harder to find people,” Jen whispered to her.

“Yeah.” Triss slid her jaw to the side, causing some of her crocodile teeth to click together. “Makes things difficult.”

“If the Prince finds out—”

“I’m a lot more worried about that asshole Daniel. The sheriff is a cold fucker.” She shrugged, and nodded toward an alley. “There?”

“We did that spot two weeks ago.”

“Shit, you’re right.” She sighed heavy, but shrugged it off. No point in getting her hopes down yet. “And besides, I’m sure the Prince and the sheriff know something is up. As long as we’re careful, they won’t mind.”

“And if they told us we had to stop?”

Triss stopped and looked at her friend. Jen met her gaze, eyebrows furrowed. Sadness, mixed with determination maybe? At this point, Jen would follow Triss into whatever hell found them, but Triss knew Jen would have preferred she stop this insanity. And she knew Triss wasn’t going to.

“Then I ask Black Blood for help dealing with them.”

“You know he might actually do something, and it probably wouldn’t be good.”

“Maybe. He’s got some weird rules he has to follow. Can’t fuck with the city directly, I guess.”

Jen rubbed her bare arms, pretending to be a weak fawn any hunting predator would love to rob, or rape. Serial killers weren't exactly common, but if Triss and Jen got lucky, they might find a kine royally fucked up like that. But so far, just rapists and muggers, kine that probably didn't exactly merit what Triss was going to do to them, but she couldn't afford to be picky.

"Either way," Triss continued, "don't worry about them. People go missing from Dolareido all the time, the fuckers we don't care about."

"We don't, but someone else might."

That was always a possibility. Kine were dumb, but not so dumb that you could lower your guard; that's how hunters were made. If Kindred made a mistake, they could have a hundred, or even a thousand kine suddenly keeping an eye out for them, and who the fuck knew what might happen after that. Jacob, and even Garry warned her that kine were dangerous because they had this nasty habit of multiplying, and not in the procreative sense. More like, if you pissed off one kine, you could suddenly find yourself looking at the angry end of a mob.

So, vampires did things in shadows and darkness and shit, and now was no exception. Classic vampire shit, a combination of displays of power, but also trying to be secretive, so a thousand angry people with torches didn't show up at their door.

But in Dolareido, it wasn't a big concern anyhow. The Invictus and the Prince controlled the city, and that included the media. If some random human managed to get some footage of Beatrice abducting someone, and posted it to media, it would probably mysteriously disappear from the internet, while the person who posted it would find a Ventrue at their door, ready to do some memory wiping.

Of course, that was just the concern over whether the Masquerade would be shattered. It wouldn't change that she'd be caught violating it, and someone would come have a strong chat with her. If she violated it too many times, Jacob himself would rip her damn head right off her shoulders, or the sheriff would tie her up and leave her for sunrise as a warning to everyone else. Probably not a fun way to die.

Jen and Triss weren't flying blind in their hunt. Aaron knew a lot more about Devil's Corner than Triss figured, and when she'd talked about sacrifices, he'd pointed her in some directions, like this one. He knew she was up to some dark shit, but after what happened, he and Othello were perfectly willing to help her without asking questions

Jen and Triss drifted into another part of town, and ended up behind some whore house. Say one thing for Dolareido, it was gender progressive, criminals included. Women were treated the same as men, and women did nasty, horrible shit, just as much as the men. Didn't matter if you had tits or a dick, anyone could be a giant fuckwad, and if you knew where to look, you could find them.

So when they found a woman with a gun, holding up a couple hookers at gunpoint, Triss and Jen smiled at each other.

---

Back in the cave with Elen, Triss and Jen sat their new sacrifice down in front of the bowl. A weak-willed mugger was an easy target for Dominate, and Jen had no trouble turning her into a mindless sheep; for a little while, anyway. If it'd been Jack, he could have permanently fucked up her mind, and a few other minds besides, at the same time. But Jack's role with the Circle was done. She didn't want him even more buried in the shit she was getting into, and the kid had a big enough problem to deal with already.

First step: summon Black Blood, and not with the sacrifice. Instead, she and Jen lit some candles, ensured the symbols drawn on the walls and floor were still good, and began the ritual. Beatrice sent vitae through her, and tapped into the part of her, the hidden muscle that could reach across the air and into the ether. And as the energy of life coursed out through her undead limbs, she held them up, and spoke:

“Black Blood. I summon you.”

Black Blood came, in his usual style. First, the almost inaudible wails and cries of the dying, as if painful death was something that'd been cut into the spirit until he was literally scarred with the noise. Second, the presence of death, the odd, cold chill it sent through the spine. Third, the black ooze, or blood or whatever it was, thick and gross. It flowed from the cracks in the walls, the eyes of the carved skulls underneath the sacrifice bowl, and from holes in the ceiling and earth.

Black Blood surrounded them, his presence everywhere, and no matter how many times he and Triss had a talk, the insane overwhelming pressure of his aura was undeniable. It was fucking scary.

“Fresh blood tonight?” the deep, almost soothing, mostly scary voice said in a southern drawl.

“Yeah.” Triss grabbed the sacrifice, and pushed her toward Elen. They didn't know her name; made it easier. “Can we try and keep the mess to a minimum this time?”

The evil god of death and doom chuckled, and more of the black ooze seeped up into the bowl Elen hung over.

“Sure sweetheart. I'll try.”

“Dears,” Elen said, voice cracked, withered and dry. “Do an old woman a favor and get her a glass of water, would you?”

Jen winced, but didn't move. Of the three people—er, entities in the room, excluding Elen, Jen felt the most empathy for the old woman, but even she wasn't willing to entertain the delusional hag her strange requests. She didn't need water. Hell, the woman was so fucked in the head she never registered Black Blood's presence. The ooze flowed up off the floor, and pooled into the bowl under Elen's feet. Anyone else would have panicked to all fuck, screaming and kicking. Not Elen. She just hung there, like everyone was a-ok. Creepy, and weird.

More weird, was how it looked when Black Blood, or a piece of him or whatever, began to climb up the old woman's leg. Elen looked down at the creeping veins of black that inched up her loose skirt, and didn't frown or struggle or anything. She just looked at it, like noticing a rock on the road, before looking to the sacrifice standing in front of her.

“Are we carving up another one tonight, dears?” she said.

Triss forced down the wince. “Yes, we are.”

Even as Black Blood crawled up her neck, and the black ooze began to press into her right ear and left nostril, Elen didn't react. If anything, she smiled, a tiny smile, like an old woman going through her typical daily routine she was comfortable with.

“Without my tools and my book, there's only so much I can do, dear.” A bit of black slipped in between her lips. She didn't respond to it. Was she even aware of it? She had to be. Much as Elen's brain was permanently fucked, she had some awareness of her surroundings. A big hook skewering her wrists and holding her up? No big deal. But an alien death god thing oozing up into her mouth, nostrils, and brain? Fucking hell.

“Your tools are out of our reach,” Jennifer said.

“Yeah. Locked up in the Prince’s tower.” Triss jumped up onto the edge of the bowl, unhooked the woman’s thin wrists from the meat hook, and helped her down. A small chair waited for her, and Triss sat her in it. Then, she grabbed the brainwashed sacrifice, and put her on her knees in front of the old woman.

The veins in Elen’s body swelled, like a dehydrated bodybuilder, and Triss shuddered as they bulged and squirmed. Black Blood was in her fucking veins.

“Still not sure how you’re doing that,” Triss said.

A resonating voice, bassy, alien, mixed with Elen’s voice, came from the old woman’s mouth. “This vessel is almost empty.” Southern accent gone, Black Blood now adopted Elen’s decrepit old woman accent. The creepy factor soared to eleven. “She provides little more trouble than possessing a corpse.”

“Don’t be rough, deary,” Elen said, once Black Blood was done. “I’m just skin and bones, you know.”

“Silence,” Black Blood said. Christ it was like watching Gollum argue with himself.

Shaking, trembling, Black Blood guided the old woman’s hands onto the face of their sacrifice, and began to touch her flesh. The sacrifice pulled back, but Jennifer came around, and met the woman’s eyes hard. Another fresh dose of brainwashing from the skilled Ventrue was enough to get the sacrifice to hold still again.

The plan was simple. Elen refused to help them, but after some experimentation, Triss and Black Blood learned the woman’s mind was so empty, that Black Blood could possess her. Normally possession was a different process that took time, according to the spirit, and normally required the person to resonate with the spirit trying to possess them; again, according to Black Blood. A fire spirit could possess someone with arsonist tendencies, given time. But since Elen was half dead and unable to die, Black Blood could sort of half possess her. And half force her to do things.

So Black Blood learned how to use Elen and her ability to manipulate flesh. An ancient creature learning to use a tool, a tiny, fragile, weak tool, meant only for subtle, precise work. One mistake and Black Blood might tear the woman apart from the inside out.

Elen frowned at the sacrifice, and gently slid fingers up and down her face. As she did, Jen pulled out a scalpel, and handed it to the woman. Triss pulled out her smart phone, brought up a picture of Julias he'd posed for, and pointed it at Black Blood. It took every bit of effort Triss had to not look at the picture this time, but she managed. No need for those painful memories, not now.

Elen got to cutting, guided by Black Blood, but Triss could tell it was Elen doing the more delicate stuff. Lifting her arms and pushing her hands forward? Black Blood. The tiny cuts, the quiet humming, the weird smile? Elen. Like a granny given a knitting needle and wool, she couldn't help but get to work when the tools were in her hands.

“Be a dear and get my book for me?” the old woman said.

Triss groaned. This woman, this damn woman, was so fucking senile, it hurt.

“I already told you Elen, a hundred times, I can't. It's locked up. The book, the knife, the other artifacts, all of them.”

Elen sighed and lowered one of her hands. The scalpel sliced into the sacrifice's face, hard, deep, down across her cheek, and blood flowed. The sacrifice screamed, pain breaking through Jen's Dominate. But before the scream could get too bad, Triss cracked the doomed woman upside the head, and picked her back up by her neck. Unconscious was still alive, and alive was all Elen needed.

“If you could get my book for me, and my knife, I’d do this for you, you know.” Sighing, Elen and Black Blood brought her cutting hand back up to the sacrifice’s face, and got digging. Her right hand sliced, and her left hand plied and plucked at the skin “It’s been a long time since I’ve had a fun project. Rebuilding sonny there”—she half nodded toward the phone—“sounds like a fun project for old Elen.”

Triss frowned down at the old woman, and looked at the face of the sacrifice. Unconscious, the woman they were cutting on couldn’t feel what they were doing to her, and if she woke up and saw, she’d kill herself the moment she got her hands on a sharp object. She wouldn’t be waking up. This was just an experiment, another lamb for the slaughter, or a better comparison, this was fucking Unit 731. She scrunched up her nose at the awful comparison, but it was partly true. Every asshole and douchebag Jen and Triss pulled off the streets and into this hole in the ground on the edge of Dolareido, were fodder to be fucked with as Black Blood and Elen worked to see if they could accomplish the first part of Beatrice’s plan.

The second part was going to be worse, but for now, she was focusing on the first part. Creating a body for her dead love.

“Is she lying?” Triss said.

“I don’t know, deary,” Black Blood said, and again Triss shivered. The fact his voice changed to match his host’s was god damn weird. “But this would be easier if I had her tools.”

The fact Black Blood could, on the fly, possess Elen, and actually use some of her magical flesh manipulating abilities, was damn fucking amazing considering he wasn’t supposed to be able to do much to anything that still had a soul. But still, Triss ground her teeth in frustration and almost started yelling. Every fucking barrier they ran into was infuriating. No matter how many times she told herself this whole attempt to resurrect Julias was bound to failure, no matter how many times she reminded herself of what the Crone told her, she couldn't help but get her hopes up a little, which of course meant she got super fucking pissed the moment she ran into a problem.

“There are three elders in that tower, Black Blood, not to mention Jack. That's four people that could kick my ass instantly.”

“Jack,” Black Blood said as he worked on the woman's face, flesh sliding far more than it should have. Literally rearranging the woman's face. “That boy, a lot has happened since I last saw him.”

“I suppose Jacob's kept you up to date. And you kinda saved the day, when you gave Sándor an opening back there, to stop the ritual. You saw what Jack's become.”

The old woman smiled, but continued to cut into the sacrifice's face. “The curse inside him is ... interesting. It's been ages since I've seen something like it.”

Black Blood had run into something like it before? That was useful information. She almost asked, but shut up before she could. Better to bring it up to Jack, without Black Blood knowing.

Triss rolled her eyes, doing her best to pass off how scary what he'd just said was. “Focus BB. You have no way to manipulate Jack into working for you, no leverage.”

Black Elen Blood chuckled, a weak and sad little sound, but he-she nodded as he-she continued his-her work. “Don't I?”

“No. And if you fuck with Jack, consider our deal terminated.”

Again, the old woman chuckled, voice half mixed with the bassy vibration of the demon possessing her. “Alright dear.”

“As for the book and shit, I have no idea how to get them. No way in hell. I can’t sneak in there. Jacob couldn’t sneak in there, not with the fucking sheriff around. Plus, you know, dozens of thralls with guns and probably flamethrowers and shit.”

Jen made a thinking noise. “Breaking into the Elysium Tower is a lost cause. But, we do have another way in. Rather, another person.”

---

~~Jack~~

He grumbled and groaned, and Jessy laughed.

“Come on, your mom looked happy.”

“I don’t trust him.”

She shrugged, hooked an arm over his shoulders, and gestured to the city around them as they walked the street. “No one trusts anyone, dude.”

“You don’t trust me?”

“Ha, you know what I mean.” She rubbed his buzzed head before letting him go.

“I don’t trust Jacob, and as much as Antoinette trusts him, a little, I don’t think she has a good perspective on it.”

“You don’t? She’s gotta be pretty damn smart to be as old and successful as she is, ya know.”

He shook his head. “Ever had a friend you watched degrade into a ... a bad person, despite your efforts to help them? And you were convinced if you just gave ‘em a chance, they’d come through for you?”

That struck home, and she lowered her eyes as they walked.
“Yeah, I have.”

“And did they pull through for you?”

“No, they didn’t. But the Prince is old, Jack. She’s gotta be smart enough, or at least wise enough, to not make that mistake.”

His turn to shake his head again. “You’d think, but Antoinette is ... a bit of a softy, honestly. Yeah sure, a lot of people in the city think she’s some kinda ice queen, and she can be when its time to get professional, but her friendship with that old fucker is ancient.” Daniel saw it. The sheriff had no delusions about Jacob, and would happily cut the man’s head off if he saw an opportunity and reason. Jack was happy for that, at least. “So yeah, the Prince thinks Jacob can be trusted, and I’d be an idiot to ignore that, cause you’re right, she is smart and wise. But at the same time, she’s not a robot. She and Jacob have a history.”

“Like she and Elaine do.”

“Y ... Yeah.” He winced and looked up at her. “What do you think of her?”

“Elaine? Smoking hot. Got that tall, busty model looking going for her.”

Jack groaned, earning a laugh from the Gangrel.

“No, I mean—”

“I know what you mean. Can she be trusted? Or at least, trusted more than any self-respecting vampire would trust someone in this kinda circumstance. Honestly? I don’t fucking know, man. I met her eyes, and she ... well, she kinda reminded me of Viktor.”

A chill ran up Jack's spine. "Yeah. That secret has slipped out, and I guess now she doesn't really mind people knowing she's my great grandsire."

"And Viktor was a fucking sociopath."

"Maybe he wasn't always? I have a hard time imagining Elaine willingly siring someone like the Viktor I met."

"Or, maybe Elaine was different back then compared to now?"

He nodded at that. It was possible. Elaine told him as much, that she was a completely different person back then, ran through the woods with pet wolves at her side and stuff.

Speaking of pets. He looked up, and smiled as he noticed Mulder and Scully perched on a powerline. They'd come down for some cuddles and snacks later, but for now, it'd be damn weird to walk around all these people with a couple crows perched on his shoulders. And he didn't want them with him when he was underground in Isabella's lair.

"Maybe," he said, "maybe Viktor wasn't always the asshole we knew. He sired Julias, and he had to know Julias was ... was—"

"Better than the fucking rest of us." Jessy sighed, shook her head, and slipped an arm over his shoulders again. Half hug, while walking. Not comfortable, but a glance up told him he should let her do it. "Christ, still can't believe he's gone sometimes."

"Me neither. But, you knew him a lot longer than I did."

"I did yeah. I never got as close to him as you did, Jack, but yeah, knew him most of my second life. I—" She stopped hugging him, made an awkward cough, and fixed the shoulders of her suit. "No sissy shit. We're supposed to be enforcers here, and get Isabella back in line. Let's go." She didn't hesitate a moment last night to show everyone her nipples, and get pretty damn ballsy with an elder vampire, but to let it show that she was genuinely sad over Julias's death? That was a line she couldn't cross, not yet at least.

That was fine. Eric had that covered, Jack was sure. They were a great couple, and he was happy they got together, and not Fiona. Eric was good for Jessy, and honestly, Fiona was good for Damien.

The two walked the street in silence for a while, on a slow path to the Lamanar Theatre. Michael and Jack had talked after his few weeks of meditation practice with Elaine, and concluded that if he felt the curse was under control, the man should get back to work. Work, in this case, meant having a talk with Isabella Leauvion and Hella Vendram. The two lovers were neglecting their duties — they were supposed to be a thorn in the Carthians' sides — and Michael wanted to remind them that just because the hunters were defeated, they didn't get to sit around doing nothing.

So Jessy and Jack, two Right Hands, were going to pay an unannounced visit, and remind them. Jack was down with the idea. Supposedly the hunters that remained in the city were still in Isabella's care, and Jack wanted to see just how caring that care was.

“So, last night,” Jessy said. “Wow.” Of course, with time to recover from talk of Julias, Jessy's more normal personality reemerged. Give it to the Gangrel, she bounced back fast.

“Yeah, wow.”

“Like what you saw?” She gestured to herself. At the moment the both of them were in suits, full on secret agent suits that practically screamed hidden pistol.

He rolled his eyes. “You're hot Jessy, and you know it.”

She grinned. “Yeah, but it's still great to hear.”

“What, Eric doesn’t tell you?”

“Oh he does, but you can never have too many compliments.” She grasped the air and put her hand in her pocket, as if saving the compliment for later consumption. “But, damn, lot of tits at that table. Elaine and Fiona have huuuge boobs. And of course, your freaky lover’s got tits the size of Georgia.”

“They’re not that big.”

Jessy set her hand on his shoulder, leaned in, and gently hit her forehead against the top of his head. “Dude, yes they are.”

He pushed her away and did his best to hide his smile. Fail. “Don’t suppose you could act like a proper lady for the rest of the night?”

“Fuck that. Last night’s put me into perma horny mode. Natasha and her boys are fucking perfect, aren’t they?”

“From the conversation, it sounded like you’ve seen them having sex already, multiple times.”

“Yeap. Surprised you haven’t seen the tape. Natasha’s become a full-on porn director. Your lover’s seen it.”

He shuddered. “Antoinette’s just respecting Tash’s privacy, probably.”

“I bet if you asked Tash, she’d trade.”

Oh god, he knew where this was going. “You just want to see me having sex with the Prince.”

“Bingo!”

“You know if we were kine, working for some normal business organization, I’d report you to HR?”

“But we’re not kine. We’re vampires, and you know as well as I, the best god damn fucking thing about our seconds lives, is”—she leaned in close again—“how good we are at fucking.”

Again, he pushed her away, and again he failed to keep the smile off his face. Yeah, it was true. With a little will and vitae, a Kindred’s body Blushed Life, and as long as the Kindred had the vitae to fuel it, they could push their body to pretty massive biological extremes. He’d gotten a lot better at it in the past near three years, and now, if he wanted, he could orgasm and stay erect as much as he wanted.

But Antoinette insisted they don’t let things go too far. She had a few stories for him about powerful vampires who literally held meetings while their ghouls gave them fellatio and whatnot. Elaine admitted to having a meeting with Antoinette about dragon business while the two of them were fucked by some ghouls, too, back in their heyday. Not exactly an objectively bad thing, but too much of anything meant the impact of it lessened.

“Besides,” Jessy continued, “I don’t pester everyone like this. But you? Fair game. Natasha? Ha, took years to get her to come out of her shell, and the result has been fucking glorious. Damien and Fiona? Well, Fiona didn’t take much to nudge her out of her shell. Basically had no shell when I found her.”

“Found her?”

“Mhmm. Fucked Eric while she was sitting right next to him. He fingered her. Great times.”

“I’m guessing this was before Damien started dating her.”

“Ha, of course. And I bet Fiona’s constantly using her big doe eyes to drive Damien crazy.”

Jack groaned, annoyed with Jessy for putting images of his friend fucking Fiona in his head. “Like at the ball.”

“Exactly. Whoda thought church boy would fuck his girlfriend hardcore like that, on the roof of the Black Hall, where everyone could see her tits bouncing around?” She brought her fingers up to her mouth and kissed them, like a chef celebrating a masterpiece of a meal. “And after last night, I am fucking dying to see what it’s like when you fuck the Prince.”

“Of course you are.” Maybe he could use this as leverage? If Jessy was so desperate to see him and Antoinette, there had to be a way he could turn that to his advantage. Maybe get her to do him a favor or something. “Aren’t you into bigger dudes?”

“Eh, sure, I guess. I mean yeah, big tall and handsome is a preference, but it’s not like it’s required. Like, you obviously like the big tits, but I know the Prince’s ghouls don’t have em.”

“True.” No point in denying that. He’d fucked Ashley and Julee plenty of times, and found their thin bodies and small breasts intensely attractive. Just because he preferred large breasts didn’t suddenly change that small breasts were hot as fuck, too.

“So, like, is it kinda like a mommy kink?”

“What the fuck? No. No there is no mommy kink involved in my lovemaking with Antoinette.”

“Aw, come on, not even a little? Never called her mommy even once?”

“Not once.”

She pouted. “But, you do do the shit I’m thinking of, right? Like, hug and hold her while you have slow, gentle sex, and suck on her tits?”

He growled up at the Gangrel, but he couldn’t find any real anger to put into it. Jessy was just being Jessy, and after last night, he couldn't blame her for being fixated.

She went on. "Or maybe you lie down on her lap, and suck on her tits while she gives you a handjob? Or maybe you sit on her chest, and fuck her tits? Or maybe—"

He held up his hands. "Yes, okay? Yes, we do a lot of that kind of stuff." And some other stuff, but no need to fuel the damn woman's growing obsession. "Figured you wouldn't be into that sort of stuff."

"Not really interested in it happening to me. But to see a little pipsqueak like you, deceptively sexy and ripped you little fucker, getting buried in tits and just covering them in cum over and over?" She groaned, and unlike his groan, hers sounded like an animal mid sex. "That's hot shit, man."

Okay, if he was going to use this leverage, he needed to plant an image in her head she couldn't resist.

"Last night, Antoinette and Elaine buried my dick in their breasts, and Ashley and Julee ate them out." He grinned as he said it, noticing how Jessy's jaw dropped in the corner of his eye. "It took a long time, but after like, half an hour, Elaine and Antoinette had cum so many times and had been grinding on me the whole time, I came all over them." Some pedestrians raised a brow as they walked past, but he didn't care.

"Fuuuuuuck."

"And then Ashley sat on my dick. Antoinette sat on my legs, Elaine on my stomach, and they squashed her between their soaked tits, as they grabbed her hips and ground her back and forth."

"Fuuuuuuuuuuuuuuck."

"So of course they Kissed her, and basically humped her while she came, and I came, and—"

“No! No no no!” She grabbed him by the suit jacket and shook him. “You’re lying.”

Bullseye. “Nope. Ashley absolutely drenched me, being doubled Kissed like that. Then they replaced her with Julee, and we went through the whole process again. I—”

Jessy pushed him off the large sidewalk, and into an alley. Her eyes were wide with manic hunger, and she pinned him against a wall as she glared at him.

“You’ve never talked about your sex life like this before. You have to be lying.”

“Nope.” He grinned, one of those evil, playful grins he learned from his sire.

Jessy burst into whining groans and threw up her hands. “You asshole! Show me!”

“Nope.” He felt a little bad about abusing this. Much as he loved sex, like everyone in Dolareido, Jessy was clearly a sex addict. She’d happily have meetings in the middle of an orgy if others would let her.

“God damn you Jack. You just won’t show me because—”

“You know Antoinette would happily let you watch us have sex, Jessy. Old and powerful as she is, and a Daeva, she loves to be the center of attention. You probably noticed it at the club, if not before. She’d fuck in the center of Bloodlust, complete with an audience, if she thought she could control the media freakout.” Porn and other sex-oriented material had a habit of going viral instantly, and beyond the control of any governing body.

She grit her teeth and glared harder. “Ok, so ... Wait, you’re trying to manipulate me. You want me to do something, or get you something, for a peek of the action?”

“Yeap.”

“You sneaky fucker,” she said, and he smiled. “You sneaky god damn fucker. Fuck you, fine. What do you want me to do?”

“Handle the talking when we meet Isabella. She ... she uh...”

Jessy burst into laughter, and nearby people looked into the alley as they passed.

“Dude, you fucking serious?”

“She’s scary!”

“She’s just a pretty girl who knows it and uses it, paired with some serious ice queen vibes.”

He shuddered and shook his head. “I can feel my balls freeze and pull back up into my body when I’m around her.”

That earned a laughing snort from the Gangrel. “Yeah, she’s like Antoinette without the nurturing half. No idea what Hella sees in her.”

Jack shrugged. “Her plays are a big success.”

“Her plays have nudity and even fake sex scenes. Fake.” She air quoted ‘fake’. Yeah, Isabella probably would have her troupe having actual sex on stage, and call it fake later. “Sex sells.”

“Heh, yeah. But I read her plays are also genuinely good. Erotica kinda stuff, like the actual genre, exploring sexuality and whatnot.”

“With singing?”

He laughed. “No singing.”

“Damn. I like the songs.”

---

They stood outside the Lamanar Theatre, and whistled. It was such an old, beautiful building, and when they stepped into the lobby, the royal theater look was blatant. Giant white pillars carved from stone, gold braziers, gold chandelier, and red carpet and drapes around. Old, all very old, but beautiful.

“I used to think this was Hella’s home, not Isabella’s,” Jack said.

“It used to be like that, but Isabella kinda moved in when her old directing efforts took off.”

Jack rubbed his chin as his eyes tracked the floor. “Hope she didn’t force herself onto Hella’s living situation.”

“Ha! Nah. Those two are in love.”

He nodded as the two approached an usherette, the same usherette that tried to stop Jack last time. That time, he’d brainwashed her to leave him alone, and he explored the upper floor until Isabella found him. She’d taken him along the catwalk, then to a wall where there’d been a hidden passage. But it seemed like it could only be opened with a password or something, so, no point in going exploring. Vendram or Leauvion would just have to come get them; no way in hell they didn’t know two vampires had just arrived.

If they didn’t come get them, well, then Jack and Jessy would just have to kick a wall down.

Jack looked into the usherette’s eyes, and before she could say anything, Jack shook his head. “You’re going to ignore us.”

“I ... am going to ignore you.” The woman nodded, and walked away.

“Jesus Jack. That took you, what, half a second to do?” Jessy gave him a small nudge in the shoulder. “Getting good.”

“It’s not like that. The curse is like a raging river, and all I’m doing is trying to let out just a little bit of it.”

She grimaced as the two of them pushed past the heavy, hanging curtains that led into the auditorium. “Like a mad dog on a leash?”

“Kinda, yeah.”

“That sucks.”

He laughed. “Yes, it does. Usually. I mean, it’s not all bad. The power’s there, but I have trouble controlling it.” Sighing, he reached up and gently stroked his shirt where the necklace sat underneath. Elaine said it was some ancient occult object that helped suppress Beastly urges; not something she had during her struggles, but something the Ordo Dracul had that she could now borrow.

