and down while Julias watched, was fucking intoxicating. And it was definitely too late to hide that she was enjoying being the center of attention. So, she spread her arms out a little, and pushed her breasts down toward Jen, giving the girl a free feast of her aching nipples.

They stayed that way for a few minutes, Triss leaning over Jen and letting out soft moans as Jen bathed her nipples with her lips and tongue, sending little warm sparks into her chest. Girl was good. God damn Ventrue, both of them, fucking sluts and really fucking good at it.

When the growing heat between Triss's legs was enough she felt her thong was starting to become wet, she pulled away. Blushing a little, panting a little more, she sat back on her butt, and looked down at her saliva-coated nipples. Girl had sucked on them hard enough to engorge them.

“Julias, get in here,” Jen said as she sat up. “I want to see how you two fuck. Something slow pace.”

Triss rolled her eyes; sure to be a common occurrence tonight. “Christ, why not just dictate the position.”

Jen's eyes lit up. “Sure! Based on the toys, seems you really love anal. How about some anal spooning? That way I can have some fun with you.”

Oh good god what the fuck was she thinking, hoping the sarcasm would be noticed by a Ventrue. She offered the control freak control, so naturally, she took control.

Julias seemed perfectly fine with it though, and he walked over to the bedside as he began unbuttoning his shirt.

“I don't ... love anal,” Triss said.

Both Ventrue raised a brow at her. And when Jen noticed Julias's disbelieving expression, she giggled again and clapped her hands. Christ she really was like a kid in a toy store.

“Alright, Julias's turn! I wanna see the—whoa.” She leaned back a bit as Julias slid out of his shirt and set it aside on the chair. “Big man.”

“Come on, don't stroke his ego. It's nearing a bursting point.”

Then, with his usual jackass grin, Superman slid off his pants and socks, then his boxers.

Jen's smile only grew, and she started fanning herself with ludicrous overreaction. “Oh, he is a big man.”

Ego successfully burst. Julias lay on his back, big smile, set his head on a pillow, hooked his arms behind it, and watched. The grin lessened with time, but only so he could keep it more subtle as he watched the two women near his body. Fucker was loving this.

Triss crawled over to him, got between his legs on her knees, and poked him several times in his flat stomach with her claw, each earning a deserved wince. “Stop smiling so much you bastard.”

“Sorry.”

“Ah Triss, come on.” Giggling, almost shaking with excitement, Jen reached into the box for some of the lubricant, and once she crawled over to kneel beside the man, she smiled a more subdued, manipulative smile, just like Julias's. “Take off your thong please?”

“... you two god damn dirty rats.” Grumbling, frowning, she sat down, and slid it off and down to her feet.

“God yes. Please, put this on.” Jen set the final, small chain on Julias's leg, since Triss was still sitting between the man's knees.

“Yeah sure, whatever you want, princess.” Every attempt to glare and sneer at the woman backfired, as Jen’s eyes only grew more and more entranced watching Triss. And being watched like that was setting her body on fire. Worst of all, there was no hiding it as she spread her legs, and exposed her bare, wet pussy for Jen to see while she put on the new piercing, replacing the stud with the couple inches of dangling chain.

Triss shivered. The chain ran against her clitoris as it dangled from the clit hood, and each motion she made caused it to gently nudge against the swollen nub. She was wet, and it was blatant. And it was only getting worse as Jen gazed at her smooth, wet lips.

The evil woman scooted in closer, and licked her lips once for looking at Triss, and then again as she looked down at Julias and his relaxed body.

“I won’t cross any boundaries you don’t want me to cross,” Jen said as she took the lube again, and popped the top. “And no hard feelings either. Just tell me if I overstep.” She turned the bottle over, and dripped the thick liquid onto the man’s cock where it lay upon his hard stomach. With one hand holding the bottle, the other reached out, took Julias’s shaft, and began to massage the fluid along its length.

Yeah, ok, there was something really hot about that. For a moment Triss thought she might be jealous, seeing another vamp with their hands on her lover. But Jen was just so into it, into getting to join her in bed, it was like sharing a little taste of something special with a friend. And Triss stared on, only getting wetter as her friend worked her fingers on the man’s large cock.

“Your turn. Back that ass up over here.”

Oh god. Rolling her eyes again, and soon to be doing it many more times she was sure, she turned over onto her hands and knees, and backed up toward Jen. She had to get her legs over Julias's, so she was on her hands and knees with his leg underneath her, her ass right in front of Jen.

"This little chain is so beautiful." Hard to see what Jen was doing, but Triss craned her neck back enough to look over her shoulder behind her, and watched Jen reach in between Triss's legs. Immediately, jolts of tingling pleasure started to spread out from her clitoris, as the damn Ventrue started to jingle the dangling chain.

"That ... isn't ... preparing ... my ass." Fuck fuck fuck. Her voice was a mess of wavering pants already. Not good.

"Sorry. Here." The girl poured a liberal amount of lube onto Triss's ass crack, and grinned a devil's grin as she put the bottle aside.

And then she began her work. Triss tried to frown at her, but after a few seconds, she had to let her head drop as Jen gently began to massage her ass open. Girl knew what she was doing, naturally. Ugh, total slut. Pot calling kettle. Triss sighed some fake annoyance, and looked over toward Julias to see what he thought.

His eyes were wide, and staring at her and her ass, where Jen had her fingers probing and massaging.

"You're just gonna fucking stare?"

"Hey, I'm only a passenger on this ride." He shrugged, mock innocence all over his face.

"You fucking bas—nnnng." Her body started to shiver, and her back arched down, pushing her ass toward Jen, whether she wanted to or not. Fingers were opening her, working into her, two of them massaging the lube into the skin and tight ring of muscle. It felt good, having that spot massaged, made smooth with lubricant, and filled with fingers. But Jen wasn't content to just prepare her, no.

God damn Ventrue started to slip her fingers in deeper, and pressed them down toward Triss's abdomen as she did.

Pressure. God, that pressure sensation of something filling her, and pushing toward her g-spot through the wall of flesh that separated her insides. Every time, every god damn fucking time it sent sparks of pleasure down her thighs and into her toes. Made her groan. Made her moan. Jen pressed down in beats, like a slow, deep fucking motion, sinking her fingers into their final knuckle and pressing down each time.

Moans turned into pants, and more than a few mewls, as Jen's other hand again reached between her legs, and started to play with the chain. Soon her fingers on the chain rose, and Triss started to quiver as the damnable woman started to caress her clit directly with two fingers. Icing on the cake, sweet delicious icing. It was the two fingers pressing her g-spot toward her abs, deep and far, that had Triss's body trembling though.

She fell down to her elbows, ass in the air, and body trembling as she felt the waves of orgasm start to build. Her thighs flexed, her toes curled, her feet panicked and kicked at the blankets a few times, and her insides gripped on the woman's fingers as hard as they could. Didn't stop Jen, only encouraged her. Triss looked to her lover for help, but Julias was awestruck, eyes wide and a smile on his lips as he watched Jen at work, his gaze devouring Triss's body.

She came. Jen was too fucking good, and Triss was helpless to it. Julias's hungry gaze only made things worse, and Beatrice glanced between him and the starving woman behind her, before the waves of climax started to work through her. She squeezed on the blankets, and on Jen's fingers with her sphincter as she felt her pussy clench like a vise. Sparkling heat worked through her, exploded outward from her pelvis, until her whole body was trembling, and her eyes rolled upward with the bliss of it all.

With nothing filling her slit, there was nothing to stop her from squirting hard. She knew a solid squirt of her cum must have hit Jen, probably splashed all over her wrists, but Triss had a hard time caring right then. She was still cumming, and Jen was still fingering her ass. She'd let up on her clitoris thankfully, the poor nub having gone super sensitive, but the fingers inside her were content to keep pressing down toward her g-spot, over, and over, and over, until Triss mewled openly, and squirted again.

“S ... St...”

“Ah, yeah, sorry.” Jen finally stopped, and removed her hands.

Triss almost fell over. Arg, she didn't want to cum this hard, not like this, so fast, so messily, right at the start. This was embarrassing! It only got worse as she, panting and mewling like a cat in heat, looked over her shoulder again to see Jen sitting there, ass between her ankles, smiling down at how breasts now glistened, soaked in Triss's juices.

“I ... I um...”

“Triss, I think an apology is in order.”

“What?”

“You call me a slut and whore, but here you are, four minutes into some fingering and you cum like a geyser.” Jen reached out, and slapped Triss's ass. The large mound of firmness jiggled lightly with the impact, and Triss glared daggers at the evil woman. It made Jen grin more. “You're the most sensitive woman I've ever had my fingers on!”

“ ... I...”

“You can apologize later. For now, Mire, I want to see some of that spooning.” She snapped one hand's fingers twice, pointed at Mire, then at Triss. God damn bitch was going to dictate everything tonight.

But instead of saving her from this embarrassment, Julias saluted Jen military style. Arg, where was his Ventrue pride when Triss needed it? He sat up, reached out for Triss, scooped her up, and turned her around so she was on her back along his chest. He rolled over to face toward Jen, Triss still with her back pressed to his chest, so now she was on her side as well, and also facing Jen. His cock was between her thighs, poking out from underneath her dripping cunt, and one arm was wrapped around her chest to hug her close.

“Oh this is perfect. Nosferatu, creature of darkness, in the arms of her valiant lover for some tender, heartwarming sex. Except, anal, because kinky girl need kinky sex.” Jen nodded to herself, tapped her chin a few times, and looked up on an angle for a couple seconds. Like a movie director planning out scenes in her head. Christ. “Can you hook your leg back over his, Triss?”

“What? That’s not comfortable.”

“Yeah but it looks better. I can’t see anything if you have both your legs closed.”

Kill her. Yeap, kill her. Later. For now, Triss snorted, and did as she was told, raising her leg and hooking the foot behind Julias’s legs. It put her pussy on display, and Julias’s cock along with it.

Jen licked her lips, crawled in closer, and reached out. Julias shuddered; must have had the girl’s fingers on his cock again. But a moment later, it was Triss shuddering as she felt her man’s girth start to open her ass. Lube, lots and lots of lube, and a thorough fingering had prepared the Nos, and she tried to keep frowning at Jen as the woman helped Julias ease his cock into her tingling body. Didn’t work. Her head collapsed onto the pillow, and she let out a quiet groan as her lover eased inch after inch of his large phallus into her ass.

“You ever see this?” Jen said. “God damn.”

“H ... how would I be able to see this?” Triss tried to force the moans out of her voice, but Julias had already sunk every bit of him into her, and was busy trying to grind his body deeper into her. He liked trying to get balls deep inside her, and the size of her ass made that difficult sometimes.

“Well obviously you have to set up some mirrors. Or film it. Oooh.” Jen clapped once, hopped off the bed, wiped off her hands, and yanked out her smartphone from her purse. “Tada!”

“You can’t be serious.”

Jen climbed back onto the bed, sat on her knees and ass once again by Triss’s legs, and actually started to film her. A panning shot at first, aimed at Triss’s face; vampire face wouldn’t show up well on camera, but that didn’t seem to bother Jen. The Ventrue, smiling like a satisfied cat, continued to move the camera around over Triss’s body, aiming it at her breasts, her stomach, her piercings, her abs, until eventually it was pointed at her pussy.

Jen reached out, and with one hand still holding the phone, began to jingle the clit chain.

“H-Hey! Come on, I’m ... still fucking sensitive.” She’d just cum two minutes ago after all. Make no nevermind that Julias was balls deep inside her ass, filling her, his cock pushing toward her belly and making her body sing.

“I thought Othello’s Madison was a kinky thing. You, are delectable.” Her exploring hand continued to play with the chain, little tugs, gentle bouncing of it along her fingers, before the Ventrue’s digits found the folds of her pussy and began to caress them. “Juices trickling out of you along your smooth lips, while Julias fills up your ass? Bet you can cum just from anal.”

She came from only anal all the time. She knew most women didn't, but for her, it was that sensation of being filled, of having her depths pressed against that lit a fire inside her. And for some reason, combining that with the naughty side of it being from her ass, with the right angle to press things toward her pussy, usually had her cumming in minutes. Yeah, she usually came easily, and hard, and now Jen was going to get to see all of that, and fucking film it. Every moment of this was making Triss blush red.

Julias's hugging arm reached a little higher, and his fingers slowly wrapped around her neck. Oh god.

“I wouldn't mind watching that later,” he said, voice a whisper against her ear. Jen could still hear it, but damn the sound of whispered voice on the ear was sexy.

Neck. Neck. He was holding her neck, squeezing it lightly, that gentle choking that screamed 'you're mine' and 'I love you' at the same time. She melted against him, mewled a little louder than she wanted, and held onto his arm with hers.

“O ... ok.”

Jen almost squealed, and again began to roam the camera over Triss's body as Julias started to fuck the decidedly subdued Nos. Yeah, no escaping this, no hiding how good this felt, and how infuriating and intoxicating it was to be filmed during it. Exhibitionism fetish in full tilt now, god damn it. Triss tried to turn her head, to hide her face in the pillow, but Julias's grip decided different. It turned her head the other way, until she was facing upward, and her lover grinned down at her with that jackass grin of his.

He leaned in closer, and as his grip on her neck tightened, he started to kiss her.

Kissing was romantic. Kissing was lovey-dovey. Kissing was very personal, when done like this, in the middle of sex and in such a deep, passionate way. Triss was worried this would be the sort of thing Julias might be hesitant to do, to get vulnerable like this when a third party was in the bedroom. But, her lover didn't seem to mind at all. He hugged her, squeezed her, buried her in his kiss, and choked her in the way she loved, as he began to slowly, deeply fuck her ass.

Jen swooned, audibly swooned, blatant cliché sound and all, before she crawled over to sit in front of Beatrice's chest. Still filming, still grinning.

"I don't get any of this with Madison and Othello, and my ghouls are just dicks on legs. This is too cute!" She crawled in closer, and aimed the smartphone down at both Triss and Julias from above to get some panning shots. "More kissing please."

Triss reached out to swipe at the camera, but Jen was prepared, and dodged with a chuckle. And, despite Triss's protest, Julias guided her head back to him, and resumed kissing her. Even in the middle of this ridiculousness, her love wanted to love her, and show it on camera too. Christ that was fucking melting her into a puddle and she hated him for it.

Julias started to fuck her faster. Jen giggled, crawled down the bed to kneel in front of Triss's legs, and brought the camera around to focus on all the juicy bits. And Triss still had her leg up and hooked around Julias's, putting everything on display. Seemed to turn Julias on too, cause the man fucked her faster again, ramping up to a proper fucking speed pretty quick compared to his usual, slower pace. In a single minute he was up to a good, deep fucking rhythm, and his grip on Triss's neck only tightened, until she could no longer speak.

Her chains started to jingle, hitting each other as she rocked on the bed up and down, each thrust from her man shaking her body. They were almost like warning bells, getting louder as she felt the heat growing again, felt more of the tingling sparks start to build inside her where she felt his cock press against her depths. God that fucking spot, he hit it again, and again, and again. She tried to say something, but no words could come out, his grip on her neck absolute.

So she did the only thing she could do. She sank into him, one hand holding his wrist, the other squeezing the sheets, and closed her eyes as she felt the sparks build again.

Not fair, so not fair. Helpless, vulnerable, exposed, and it was making her so damn hot. A minute later and the pleasure tremors started to work up and down her legs, forcing her toes to curl as her pussy squeezed hard. Bliss poured through her, flowing out from her pelvis and through her muscles, each accompanied by another clench of her cunt, and her ass around the cock that refused to stop drilling her.

She squirted again. A tiny one at first, splashing along her leg. And then another, harder, hitting the sheets, and probably hitting Jen too. Couldn't tell, not with Julias pinning her head to his chest, grip so tight he'd have choked a human to death; but not a vampire. She wriggled in his grip, tried to pull herself away a little, maybe get in a second to recover. But he just pulled her back in, and resumed fucking her, each thrust shaking both her and the bed, and making her ass jiggle with impact.

Fingers. Jen started touching her, her pussy, her lips. Triss braced for another clit massage, but instead, Jen only spread the lips of her slit with one hand, and continued to film with the other.

“Holy shit,” she said. “You just ... god ... damn that’s hot.”

Triss so very much wanted to get revenge, maybe kick Jen really hard. But she was too busy, too busy cumming over and over and harder than usual. And Jen got to see it all. More than see it, she was filming a documentary, including close ups and a curious hand reaching out to expose more. Jen could see how Triss’s cunt kept squeezing, and she could see how the pink flesh of her insides leaked juices between the harder squirts.

Julias finally let go of her neck, and eased his rhythm. He wasn’t cumming yet, just doing his usual thing where he liked to mix it up, go hard then go slow, keep her on her toes. It was enough for Triss to get some control back, and pull her leg up off of Julias’s so she could get into a more relaxed fetal position, and enjoy her orgasm aftershocks.

“Aw, now your shins are in the way,” Jen said. Triss used one of those shins to give Jen a good kick in the thigh. “Ow! Ok, ok. Sorry. Just ... I mean, at first I was impressed, but now I’m jealous. You two just curl up like this, and fuck hugging each other like this ... and Triss cums her brains out.” Jen set the phone aside, lay down on her side in front of Triss about a foot away from her face, and smiled at her. “I take a good ten minutes to warm up at least, and that’s with two guys rubbing me down.”

Triss listened, and quivered a little as the pleasure tremors worked through her. Julias was still inside her, and he offered the gentlest deep pushes of his body, so her body could continue to sing as the pleasure waves finally started to fade.

“You going to spend the whole damn night admiring how easily I cum?”

“Yes.”

God damn it.

“I know I do.” Julias leaned down over her, kissed her neck, her crocodile teeth where her cheek should have been, and her jaw.

“Ok, more poses! Mire, on your back,” Jen said. Bastard nodded, and did just that, rolled onto his back, and took Triss with him. Now she lay upon his broad chest, and had to turn her head to frown at Jen some more. “No no, no frowning! Come on, you have no idea how hot you are. You have the body of a fucking superhero, and you’re blushing and shivering with those good orgasm vibes! Looks fucking great on film.” Damn Ventrue grabbed her phone again, and started filming once more. “Mire, legs spread out. Triss, can you arch your back a bit, really highlight that lean body you got, show off those breasts and the chain and stuff!”

“ ... I’m currently in the middle of having sex, Jen.”

“Exactly.” Now that she had room, Jen scooted in closer, and while one hand was still holding the phone, the other reached out to land upon Triss’s abs. “Fucking damn I could wash clothes on these.” Her hand went higher, found Triss’s breasts, and began to massage one of them, fingers caressing and circling the frustratingly hard nipple.

Triss sighed, rolled her eyes again, and did as Jen said. She arched her back, pushed out her breasts, and rested her head and shoulders against Julias. And naturally, she bent her legs at the knee, feet on the blankets between Julias’s thighs. Posing like a glamour model, except, with a guy underneath her, and inside her.

“I can’t fuck like this.”

“No, but gimme a sec.” Jen got up on her feet, and started to walk around, blatantly holding the phone with both hands and filming everything in slow, panning shots. Eventually, she got down on her knees between Julias’s legs, and used one of her hands to nudge open Triss’s thighs. All on camera. “K, you can relax now.”

Triss groaned, let her legs collapse around Jen, and let her back flatten to Julias's chest. Her arms relaxed too, her claws finding Julias's arms so she could rest her hands upon them. Queue for Julias to resume fucking her, in slow, deep, wonderful strokes. They didn't normally fuck like this, her lying on him on her back, but it probably did look good on camera.

Triss lifted her head, and raised a brow at Jen. Girl was sitting between her thighs, and staring at Triss's pussy, where Julias was penetrating her ass. Hunger in her eyes, and more than once the Ventrue licked her lips. She leaned in too, got right close to Triss's body, and set the phone aside so she could reach out with both hands, and pull apart Triss's slit.

“God damn you have a tight little cunt.”

“F-Fuck ... you...”

Jen almost purred with the sounds Triss was making; evil woman was loving this way too much. She leaned in closer, until her face was maybe six inches from Triss's pussy, and instead of purring, growled. Before Triss could say something, Jen put her lips onto her clitoris, and began to lick, tongue playing with the chain that dangled over the hyper sensitive nub. Gentle thank god, very gentle, and Triss let out a long moan as she melted against her lover beneath her while Jen kissed her clitoris.

Moan turned into gasp as she felt Jen start to press knuckles against her clenching entrance.

“Hey, what're you doing?”

“You know. You saw me doing it to Madison, remember?” The evil Ventrue woman laughed at the worry on Triss's face, and began to push knuckles forward, against Triss's cunt. “Damn you are tight though. This'll be tough to fit.”

“W-Wait, come on, that’s—” She gasped, and sat up, hands planting against Julia’s chest as she stared down between her legs, at the woman sinking her fist into Triss’s insides.

Jen knew what she was doing. It wasn’t a punching fist, rather, one sort of compressed and with a thinner shape. But it was still a fist, and Triss stared at the sight of her pink flesh slowly spreading around the thickness of four fingers and a thumb.

She thought she might explode. Thickness, so much filling her, fighting for space inside her. She panted like a dog as her jaw dropped, and Jen’s fist began to open her up. No need for lubricant, soaked as she was, and the fist of the Ventrue started to get into her, past the squeezing muscles and taut lips. A fist, inside her, along with her lover’s cock.

Her groans turned into whimpers, as Jen pushed her fist in further, and further, until it completely disappeared inside Triss. Now her pussy was visibly wrapping around the woman’s wrist instead, and a very noticeable bulge was on Triss’s abs beneath the navel.

“... I uh ... christ, I...” She sat up straighter, reached out, and set a hand on Jen’s shoulder, the other still behind her and braced against Julia’s chest. “Fucking ... p-poor ... Madison.”

“She doesn’t cum at the drop of a hat like you do, though.”

“I don’t—nnh!” Attempts to defend herself of ridiculous accusations proved horribly pointless, as Jen started to move her fist. Knuckles, hard, but soaked in her cum and softened, pressed against her everything. Jen pressed upward, hardness against her g-spot, grinding, thrusting. But Jen didn’t stop there, pushing her fist in deeper, slow and gentle, but deep, very deep.

“You know, you really got that ‘like it so deep you can feel it between your tonsils’ vibe to you.”

“You fucking—” Pleasure, deep, overwhelming, hit her as Jen pushed her fist in a little deeper, causing the bulge along her abs to move higher. Triss fell back, and lay upon Julias as she started to cum. She could feel her juices flowing, her clenching muscles forcing her to squirt, for the millionth time, all over Jen’s wrist. Each pulsing wave of pleasure worked from her head to her toes, causing her legs to tremble, and her hands to squeeze onto Julias’s sides as she came.

Jen took the opportunity to keep pushing her fist into her, until Triss knew the woman had long ago reached the depths of her pussy, and was pressing against those deep places Triss really, really, really fucking loved. It hurt getting it that deep, but god, it fucking felt good, and the Nosferatu trembled all the more as she felt another gushing orgasm work through her. Cumming so much it was starting to get painful, muscles forever clenching, squeezing, and toes threatening to cramp from the constant curling, but Jen didn’t care. The damn Ventrue just kept working her fist back and forth in a deep rhythm, lightly rocking Triss on Julias’s body.

Somewhere along the line, Triss could feel Julias start to cum. She was vaguely aware that, as much as she was getting fucked by two rather large insertions, it must have felt great for her lover too, to be inside her while Jen fisted her. Bonus. But, as much as she tried to be happy about that, she could barely hold the thought as pleasure wiped her mind, Jen still fisting her, deep enough Triss was sure she’d skewer her stomach eventually.

Only when Julias stopped with his smaller thrusts, did Jen stop stretching Triss’s insides deeper into her. She kept the fist as deep as it could go, gently rocking it back and forth, but no longer tried to push it into Triss’s torso. Pleasant, delightful, and so damn fucking full, Triss lay there, and let another orgasm work through her, her trembling causing her clit chain to jingle as it bounced around on Jen’s wrist.

It took a little while, but Jen's fist got slower, and slower, and as the tremors faded away, Triss sat up again, and looked down at the mess. Oh god, not only was the woman gently milking Triss of her orgasm shocks like a god damn pro, she was massaging Julias's testicles in her other hand, with his cum. And her cum.

"Like that, Julias?" Jen said.

"Y-Yeah. That is damn tight."

"Ha, isn't it? Must be. How about this?" Jen pushed her fist down, and again started to gently fuck Triss's insides with it, massaging Julias more than anything.

"Ok! Ok, that's enough. God ... damn, I'm going to break here, Jen. You ... fucking bitch, arg." Triss reached down, grabbed the girl's wrist, and pulled her hand out of her. She stared down while she did it too, cause, holy fuck, it was a sight, to see someone's hand sliding out of your trembling, clenching folds.

Julias sat up, slipped his hands underneath Triss's thighs, and lifted her up enough to let her sit between his legs once Jen backed up, his cock falling out of her. "I'll have you know, I was really enjoying that."

"Yes, I'm sure getting your cock massaged through my god damn insides must have felt amazing. Ass." She could feel Julias's cock against the back of her now, and as he scooted forward a bit, his cum and lube-soaked length rubbed against the small of her back as he put his chin on her shoulder, and kissed her ear. His cum was leaking out of her, and he was snuggling her like he loved to do when that happened. And Jen was watching it all.

Much as Triss was bad mouthing the two of them, she couldn't deny she was really enjoying this. And, having Jen there, watching her, getting involved, even smiling her intrigued smiles as she watched Julias get romantic with Triss, was ... oddly enjoyable too.

Triss shivered a few times. Still had tremors working through her, and she turned a bit to hold Julias's arm with one of hers, so she could hold him while the tinglies continued to work through her. Loved the tinglies, the little sparks that worked through her thighs, made her feel vulnerable and a bit clingy. It was a part of her worry, that she wouldn't feel comfortable being like this, holding Julias while she came, getting vulnerable and girly with him, when she usually acted like a badass rocker chick in front of other Kindred. Jen was getting to see her girly side.

But Jen wasn't teasing her about it, like Triss suspected she would. Hell, if anything, Jen's smile, her grins and smirks, they all faded, and as she watched Triss and Julias hug, her eyes filled with wonder. Fucking wonder, like seeing the Grand Canyon for the first time. She even pulled one knee up to her chest to hug as she watched the two of them, gaze stuck on them. Like seeing a young girl watching a romance movie, and adoring the happily-ever-after ending.

Ok, Triss was touched. Jen deserved a reward.

Smirking, the Nos turned her head, and put her lips to Julias's ear. "Fuck the shit out of her."

---

---

~~Julias~~

Everything was going well, and better than he could have hoped for.

Triss was loving it, having Jen in the bed with them. His fellow Ventrue fed right into the sorts of things Triss liked, even if the Nos didn't want to admit it. She would later, he knew; she'd matured a lot since their first date.

The thing he was worried about, and he knew Triss was worried about, was whether having another vampire in the bed would damage the intimacy. Triss liked to play the badass girl, and Julias liked how that melted away when the girl snuggled with him, particularly after some great sex. Kissing, hugging, holding hands, he thought maybe Jen's presence would make doing any of those things awkward, and he knew Triss was doubly worried about it. But, it didn't. Something about Jen's genuine interest and sincerity about the nature of their relationship made it feel safe to be intimate and vulnerable.

Plus, being inside his lover's ass while another woman fisted her, so he got to feel every bit of it? Yeah, could not deny, that felt amazing. He was still hard, hungry for more, and Triss wanted him to fuck Jen, hard. He could do that.

Triss giggled — holy crap an actual giggle — and grabbed Jen's wrists, before pinning them to the bed in front of them both, so Jen was on her knees.

“Um ... what?”

“Oh, nothing,” Triss said, chuckling.

Julias rolled his eyes, but found himself chuckling soon after as he crawled along the bed, and got behind Jen. The Ventrue blinked at the two of them, several times, before she started wriggling to try and free herself. Not happening. Triss was far stronger than Jen physically, even if Triss was still shivering with post-orgasm bliss. It made it all the hotter, watching Jen try and get out of Triss's grip while Triss herself still quivered, her nipple chain dangling and trembling.

Julias got behind Jen, pushed her knees together, and then put his down outside hers, trapping her knees between his.

“What're you doing back there, Mire?” Jen said, looking over her shoulder at him with a raised brow.

“You know Jen,” he said, “you are a very attractive woman. You had almost every Kindred in the city staring at you during the ball, Triss included.”

Jen smiled, pride showing through with the typical subtlety of Ventrue pride: none. “I am fucking gorgeous, I don’t blame her. How about you? Were you staring?”

This woman, ha. Even trapped between two Kindred stronger than her, she acted like she was in charge. He looked to Triss, whose smile only grew, and she nodded back to him with a wink.

“I was,” he said.

“That, is damn hot.” Jen swayed her ass a little, its glorious curves still hugged by her black lace lingerie. “I’d be lying if I said I didn’t think about the two of us having some fun together too, Julias.”

“Pretty sure you feel that way about everyone,” Triss said.

“Not true! I’ll have you know I rarely sleep with Kindred, sometimes Othello. You two though? God damn.”

Well, color him surprised. Triss too, by the way her eyebrows raised. She didn’t let go of the woman’s wrists though, and licked her lips with her long tongue as she looked between the trapped Ventrue, and Julias.

It really was too damn perfect. Julias took Jen’s underwear, and slipped it down to her knees. Several trails of juices connected from it to Jen’s pussy, where the smooth, pink lips were coated with wetness. Her clitoris looked swollen, and her legs trembled lightly. The girl was on the edge, close to cumming; must have been masturbating between bouts of playing with Triss, or him.

He’d planned to finger her to a couple orgasms before taking her, but like this, and with Triss staring at him, hunger in her eyes and excitement making her almost bounce, he couldn't stop himself. He took his cock into one hand, pressed the dripping, hard shaft against the girl's quivering cunt, and started the long, slow journey of sinking himself into her awaiting insides.

"Oh ... g-god..." Jen shook like a leaf, and let her head fall between her arms as she wriggled. "F ... finally..." Soon she was on her elbows, ass in the air, and head turned to peek up at the girl holding her hands hostage.

Julias thought Triss might have taken the opportunity to tease Jen, to rub it in the girl's face that she was breaking so easily, that the woman was so obviously ready to cum from so little done to her, like she had to Triss. But instead, Triss stared on, snake eyes looking up and down the curve of Jen's back, as the girl was down on her elbows now. Jen's attempts to keep her smile on faded away, as did her grinning eyes, replaced with a parted, moaning mouth, and eyes rolling upward.

Her insides felt divine. Soaked, quivering, squeezing. She didn't squeeze as hard as Triss did, or start pushing toward him as eagerly as Triss did. Jen seemed to prefer to wait, to let someone else do the work, like a spoiled Ventrue would. Supposedly the girl was being pampered by two ghouls on the regular, and while she was certainly a pro at sex, she wasn't used to losing control.

Triss wanted to make her lose control, and as Julias felt the woman's drenched pussy squeeze on him in gentle spurts, he could feel the urge hit him. But first he'd take his time, and see how Jen responded as he, slowly but surely, sank every inch of his cock into her shaking body. Lot of girls didn't like it deep. Triss did, and as Julias felt the head of his cock start to gently stretch Jen in deeper, and deeper, her trembling and squeezing told him she did too.

He squeezed her hips tighter, and after drawing his cock out of her until only the head of his length kept her dripping folds open, he slammed himself balls deep into her, hard.

“Oh! Oh, oh f-f-fucking ... fuck! Not so hard! Fucking ... god.”

Triss grinned down at the trapped woman, leaned down, and put a small kiss on her ear before sitting up again and blowing Julias a kiss. “Go nuts.”

“W-Wait, come on, you—” She squealed with the impact of another thrust, and started to tremble, a lot. Julias stayed balls deep inside her, filling her, stretching her, and smiled as he felt the woman clench on him until her juices were dripping down his testicles. Jen fell, elbows giving out, chest and head coming to rest on the blankets between her pinned hands.

“Two strokes and you’re down,” Triss said, crooning. Not a tease from the way she was staring, but rather, admiration.

“Not ... not fair, you—nnng!”

Julias didn’t wait long. He started to thrust into her again, grip on her hips tight and absolute, forcing her balls deep onto him with each stroke. Each earned a wet smack as his testicles slapped into her folds and clitoris, and each pulled more mewls from the woman, growing increasingly high pitched. He wasn’t gentle, he thrust hard, with his grip yanking her hips toward him fast enough for her ass to jiggle with each impact.

It didn’t take long for a second orgasm to hit the woman. She tried to pick herself up again, to push herself onto her hands, maybe get back some control, but Triss put a hand on her back, and pushed her down, pinning her chest to the blankets. Again Julias expected her to chuckle and tease, but instead, Triss stared at him, at Jen, at where her ass was bouncing against him, and she licked her lips and crocodile teeth with increasing fascination.

“P ... lease ... slow ... down...” Cumming, trembling, she squirmed and twisted with all the power of a worm on a hook. Her moans ripped away what little strength she had, and her fingers waggled in the air, pinned by Triss at the wrist, desperate for freedom.

He didn't give her any. He pounded her hard enough to make the bed creak, to make her squeals melt into exhausted pants, and to make her insides squeeze in random spurts as another orgasm tore through her. The only break she got was him deciding to sink himself into her to the hilt, and stay there, stretching her depths inward and enjoying the tight spasms of her pussy around his length as she came.

“Hey Superman ... flip her over.”

God yes. Julias flipped the girl over, and grinned down at her. Exhausted, trembling, and still squirming with attempts to sit up, maybe escape, but Triss didn't let go of her wrists. Even as Triss got down beside her, she still held Jen's hands, and snuggled into the girl's side as she pinned Jen's wrists over her head inside one of Triss's hands. With her other hand now free, she squeezed Jen's nearest breast, cupping it, as she placed her lips upon the girl's nipple, and started to run her long, long tongue along it. Not just licking her breast, but devouring it, like she was ravenous for it.

Julias was a gentleman though. As much as this was very much a loss-of-power scenario for poor, whimpering Jen, he knew how to make the position work for her pleasure. He grabbed a couple of thick pillows, put them under her ass, and spread his knees to get a bit lower. He slipped off her underwear too, and grabbed her legs. With her thighs hooked around his hips, he slipped his cock back into her dripping folds, and slammed his hips forward again.

“W-Wait! Fucking ... god ... christ ... merciful ... fucking ... nng!” Jen twisted left and right, but couldn't get away from Triss, from her claws, from the long tongue bathing her breast. And, as Julias

continued to thrust into her, she let her head collapse back onto the blankets. Triss wanted him to fuck her hard, so he continued to fuck her hard, each slam of his body forward causing Jen to shift back and forth on the sheets, and for her free breast to bounce along her chest.

And, again, Jen came. For all her teasing of Triss's rather sensitive body, she was cumming easily as well. A night of playing with Triss's parts must have set her on fire far more than Julias could have anticipated. And as he forced his cock into her, despite how much her squeezing muscles were trying to get him to stop, her juices renewed, enough so drops of her cum trickled onto his testicles. Forcing his cock into her as she clenched, with the angle of her hips on the pillows forcing his cock upward toward her belly, he knew each thrust was hitting her spots and forcing her to cum. The girl had probably never been fucked like this as a Kindred, forced to cum like this, hard, pinned, unable to escape, unable to stop the two people in the bed who wanted to see her cum her brains out. Triss was loving it, moaning as she licked up Jen's breast like chocolate. It was surprising. Triss really enjoyed it when they invited a kine into the bed, but she never went crazy with lust like this, groaning into Jen's skin like an animal, while her free hand slid out to grab and massage her further breast.

Julias groaned as well, as he felt the warm pleasure build between his legs again, fluids rising as Jen's flooding insides massaged the length of him.

"I know that groan," Triss said, finally pulling her tongue from the girl's breast. "... yeah, cum inside her."

He smirked at his lover, and looked back to Jen; she was almost weeping, little tears in her eyes as she struggled to make any sounds, efforts to speak proving futile as her panting and whimpering left her breathless. She couldn't stop shaking, and between each of his hard thrusts, she managed a wavering mewl.

Her legs were trembling to the point he had to move his hands from her waist to her thighs again, and clutch them from the outside to keep them hooked on his hips. But he couldn't stop, the need to cum rising as he felt the waves of pleasure growing stronger, glans growing more and more sensitive, more swollen, as it pressed against the girl's depths.

As he felt his cum start to gush, he slammed the girl against him. She squealed, and he kept her there, balls deep on him as the cum poured into her. He thrust again as another wave of his cum poured into her. And again, and again, each a hard thrust, each making the woman shake on the bed, each earning a loud squeal from her and another squirt of his cum. But, after the first few thrusts, he kept her against him, his cock buried inside her, and lightly shifted her up and down an inch to milk the orgasm.

As his pace settled down, he managed to focus his eyes again, and he stared on as Triss let go of Jen's hands. She didn't move them, not at first, her body trembling like a leaf, and her breath still a mess of pants breaking her whimpers. And as she recovered, Triss's lips raised from her nipple to her neck, where she began to suckle, and kiss, and lick. Her hand caressed Jen's nipple, growing softer, less squeezing, more gentle massaging, all while the woman snuggled into Jen's side.

To say it was a visual feast to gorge on, while he enjoyed the bliss of orgasm and Jen's quivering, clenching, soaked, hot insides, would be an understatement.

"I ... I ... mmn. You ... big, bad man." Jen threw one hand up like throwing a baseball, only for it to bounce on the sheets beside her, limp. "Tender." The orgasm aftershocks were still working through her, and Julias continued to gently pull her hips up and down an inch against him to spur them on, each causing her insides to milk his length of his few remaining drops of cum. He could feel it, hot, thick, dripping off his testicles, each joined by several of Jennifer's juices.

Triss, without removing her lips from Jen's neck, raised a hand and motioned for Julias to come over. He slipped his cock out of the woman's clenching folds, and shifted around to kneel beside Jen, opposite of Triss. His shaft was covered in cum, coated and dripping of it, a large pool of it thick and resting along the topside of its base. Triss at last raised her head, and moaned openly as she looked at his shaft.

"I ... have to admit Jen, I really loved this, a lot more than I thought I would. Lot ... lot ... more," she said.

"Glad ... you ... liked ... it." Poor girl was still trembling. Had it really been that long since she'd been fucked that hard, if ever? He almost felt bad. Almost.

Triss motioned Julias forward with her claws, and pointed down at Jen's lips. Smiling, he scooted in closer, leaned forward enough that he had to place a hand on the blanket above Jen's head for balance, and guided his cock down to the Ventrue's lips with his other hand. His shaft was still mostly hard, still soaked, and he groaned quietly as he placed his glans upon the shivering vampire's lips.

Jen blinked up at him, surprised, but managed to open her mouth after a few moments, and offered some weak, exhausted kisses.

"You've shown restraint, leading up to this point," Triss said. "Well, a little, anyway. And ... I ... yeah, really want you back in this bed. Frequently."

Oh boy. Julias did his best to contain his smirk.

"Yeah?" Jen said, a cock on her lips and soon coating them in white, and her own juices.

“Yeah, and ... I ... fuck it.” Triss leaned in, and started to kiss her.

Did not see that coming. Julias’s cock hardened fully within seconds as Triss set her lips upon his glans, and began to bathe it in kisses, while pressing it into Jen’s lips at the same time. Triss’s lips were perfectly human from the front, and she used them, suckling on him, offering him little licks, and moaning onto him as her kisses met Jen’s. The woman’s eyes had opened wide for a moment, but seconds later they half-closed like Triss’s, and soon she began to smile as she got control of herself, exhaustion passing.

She returned the kisses, managed a peek up at Julias as she did, and winked at him. Woman loved it when a plan came together, a feeling any Ventrue knew all too well.

After a few more licks, Triss pulled her head up again. “Just to be clear, I’m still Julias’s girlfriend, and I love him. But ... I mean ... you know? I ... kind of ... wouldn’t mind you being a part of this.”

“Friends with benefits,” Jen said, one arm reaching up to comb aside some of Triss’s hair over her ear. “Best friends, with the best benefits.”

This was a strange circumstance to be in. Should he say something? His girlfriend had basically invited another girl to be a part of their relationship. Someone who had, over the months, become her best friend. Someone who liked Triss on every level, monster parts included. Someone who Julias had to admit, he liked. Girl bled confidence, and she was far smarter than she often let on. And, she was utterly, fucking, beautiful.

Triss put her lips to his glans once more, and guided it down to press against Jen’s lips again. Her hand found the base of his cock as well, and she used it to guide thick globs of his cum down onto their awaiting mouths. The kissing resumed, constantly burying, massaging, and caressing the head of his cock, until the stimulation was almost painful. He couldn’t look away, awestruck by the waves of white that coated their lips, that connected the two women, and soon started to run down Jen's jawline. Triss licked it up, and set the cum back onto Jen's lips before she resumed kissing her, and his cock's tip.

They didn't stop. For ten more minutes, they played with each other, tested kissing each other, tested kissing him, tried different ways to suckle and lick on him at the same time, until his cock was completely clean of cum. Jen's juices had long washed away any of the lubricant before getting to this, so they didn't hesitate to take turns wrapping their lips around different places on his length with wandering, caressing licks. And as the tingling of impending orgasm started, he began to gently nudge his hips forward; the girls parted both their mouths just enough so two sets of lips trailed along the sides of his cock's head as he did.

As more of his cum started to flow down his shaft, he forced himself to hold still, and let the persistent, suckling sets of lips begin to milk him. Triss turned to catch the first wave, and she smiled up at him as it landed gently into her mouth. Instead of swallowing it or wiping it away, she let it flow back onto the head of his cock, and down onto Jen's mouth, who returned the favor with parted lips, suckling on his glans at the same time. Cum overflowed once again, too much for Triss to lick up, and she chuckled as it ran down Jen's chin and jaw to flow down the sides of her neck. More thick, warm cum escaped him, coming out in slower waves now, filling Jen's mouth as she let it slip between her lips, and as Triss guided it into them. They kept at it until his orgasm was done, drawing more drops of white out of his cock, and moving it around with their lips before letting much of it slip into Jen's awaiting maw.

Julias sat back, and stared on. No need to say anything, no need to comment on how amazing that had been, how pleasurable, how lascivious. No, he just sat there, shivered a few times, and watched on as the two ladies smiled at him, before looking at each other. They started to kiss, plucking at each other's lips, and letting their tongues graze each other. Jen's mouth was full of his cum, and she pushed small waves of it up to catch Triss's lips, so as she raised her head, strands of his cum connected the two women. Triss kissed her again, slowly, playfully, and took a few peeks at Julias as she caught more of his cum on her lips from Jen's, earning another strand of white.

And just when Julias was sure this couldn't get any kinkier, Jen forced herself up onto her elbows, and opened her mouth completely. His cum flowed out of her, off of her chin, off of Triss as she sat up as well, and it trickled down over the Ventrue's large breasts.

Seeing streaks of white run down Jen's heavy tits was apparently too much for the Nos. Triss climbed up onto Jen's waist, straddled her, and cupped both of the woman's breasts, catching the trickling rivers of white, and massaging it into the woman's nipples. Jen trembled, and fell back again, setting her head on a pillow and shivering as Triss rubbed the white cum into her swollen nipples, and around the underside of each breast.

"Are you trying to kill me?" Julias said, gesturing at the blatant male fantasy playing out before him. "I don't think I can go a fourth time."

"Oh, um ... uh ... shit, yeah." Triss raised an arm to wipe away his cum from her lips. Jen did as well. Though, despite that, Triss put her hands back onto Jen's breasts, and continued to grope them, massage them, and work his fluid into them. "Just ... gimme five minutes."

"This go well, Julias?" Jen said, voice breaking a bit as Triss massaged her. "Wasn't sure if I overstepped during this. I know you're not normally a fan of Kindred in the bed, or ... you know, one of them kissing your girl."

Julias waved a hand, dismissing her worries. “I like you, and Triss really, really likes you.”

“But!” Triss raised both her hands, as if in rebellion. “Julias explained the rules. You cool with those rules?”

“I am, I very much am, cause ... yeah, I’m a bit surprised, and ... and this has been one amazing night. Haven’t had a night like this in forever.” Like a kid given permission to go play outside, Jen sat up straight with Triss still straddling her, nudged her nose into the woman’s breasts, her nipple chain, and set her lips onto Triss’s nipple.

Triss moaned, and looked at Julias. Asking for permission, or at least, agreement, with her offer to Jen. He nodded, and lay down beside them as they touched each other. The night really couldn’t have gone any better than—

“Shit, my phone!” Jen reached out blindly, fingers tugging at the blankets. “Must take pictures!”

Chapter 54

~~Jack~~

Alone, in the old, abandoned tunnels, and soon to enter Azamel's hole in the ground. He didn't want to be here, but it was important, too important.

With the Invictus, meeting the elders was an imposing affair of big leather chairs and long hallways. With the Uratha, meeting Avery was as cozy as sitting down on a couch, next to a bomb. With Azamel, meeting her was like walking through a tunnel into some sort of nightmare realm — probably was — and talking with the monster under the bed. They were monsters, she was a monster, and the feeling in his gut told him he was going to be speaking with something akin to a clown demon, whispering to him from a gutter drain in the street.

Prickly, crawly things, invisible but there, tickled along his skin as he got closer and closer to where Azamel lived. The lights were flickering, but on, some of them at least, and they made a buzzing noise as they struggled to remain lit. Quiet screams echoed along the concrete bricks of the concave walls of the tunnel, so quiet he was sure his imagination was being a giant asshole and making things worse than they actually were. But the fact Azamel was a genuine monster, a thing of legend, a fucking nightmare, casted doubt on whether it was his mind playing tricks on him.

The Invictus knew he was here. He hadn't told them, but they knew, they had to. They'd set up explosives, so no doubt they had cameras watching those to some extent or another. Hell, even without the explosives, Invictus used technology like a weapon; there'd be cameras all over the city they could either tap into, or had set up themselves. And since everyone had seen him talk to Athalia at the party, no doubt his bosses could piece together why he was here, and that it was requested he not talk to them about it, lest the encounter be canceled and all hell break loose.

Why couldn't old demons use e-mail, or texts?

He shivered and rubbed his arms. Dressed in a good suit, the sort he'd wear to an official meeting with the Invictus, hoping to make a good impression. It was probably wasted. Still, he adjusted his tie, rubbed his buzzed hair a few times, and stepped into Azamel's home. A vivid imagination painted for him a merry picture, lots of ways he could die down here, probably while having a private conversation with a monster out of a Stephen King novel.

But she wasn't there.

He stopped at the stage, where the old woman kept her furniture, and raised a brow as he looked around. The lights were on, including a god-awful lamp on the stage, but no one was home.

"... hello?" he said. His voice echoed against the concrete walls. No one. Maybe—

"This way."

He jumped. Oh good fucking god it someone's voice, a whisper, like ice on his neck. He turned around, but no one was there. It could have been a vampire, someone using their cloak of night, someone who was enough of a master to both hide themselves in it, but also let their voice out? No, no fucking way, vampires didn't feel like this, like needles stabbing him up and down his body.

But the voice did come from a direction, and, gulping down on nothing, he headed toward the sound. It was coming from down the other tunnel, where none of the lights worked.

"This way..."

Dead, so dead, so fucking dead. He hadn't even seen anything yet, and he could feel that panic crawling up his legs and down his spine. Like someone with a needle and balloon beside his head, ready to pop it at any moment, he could feel his muscles tense and his teeth clench until they were grinding. Weight shifted onto the balls of his feet, and his fingers clenched at his sides. It hadn't been nearly this bad last time he was here, but last time Triss was with him, and Azamel had simply been on the stage, rocking back and forth in her chair. This time he was alone, and everything felt different.

He stepped into the tunnel, but managed only ten feet before he noticed the floor of the tunnel gave way into a stairway.

A stairway? What the fuck. Where there should have been subway tracks and concrete, instead, a large square hole was the subway floor instead, thin and long, like the sort you found under cellar doors leading into basements. And, with the hole into hell only a few feet in front of him, he could more clearly hear the screams. The tunnel past the stairway wasn't there anymore, blocked off by a giant wall of tattered and cracked concrete instead. That wasn't supposed to be there either.

"Down ... here ... Jack," the voice said, mixed in with the howls and shrieks.

Yeah, if there was one way he was going to die, it was right down this stairway. A clown was going to jump out at any moment, and rip the soul right out of his fucking body. The fuck kind of vampire was scared of the things in the dark? He fucking was.

Again, he gulped on nothing, and took a step down. His shoes clacked on stone, heavy stone, the soft thud ringing down into the stairway. Just like walking into a basement, right? Walking into a basement filled with cries of what must have been torture. And, he couldn't see anything past ten feet, endless black awaiting him with its gaping maw.

“And if you gaze long enough into an abyss, the abyss also gazes into you,” he said, a whisper too quiet for himself to hear. Butchering a quote and dropping half its meaning, but, he was a product of his generation, after all, internet snippets and a short attention span.

He pulled out his smartphone, and shined the light into the stairway. It added a whole six inches onto how far he could see. The darkness wasn't a lack of light, not wholly, but a fog, a black fog that tugged at his fingers as he held the phone light out. Cold. He yanked his phone back, and winced as he took a step into the obsidian shroud, so its icy embrace swallowed him. With one hand still holding the useless phone for its buried light, the other reached out to the stairway beside him for balance, and he began the descent.

“You idiot Invictus think you can control us, control nightmares themselves, with explosives.” The cold voice matched the icy fog and unending obsidian like a creepy laugh fit a clown. God damn it, stop picturing clowns with psycho eyes. There are no clowns!

“... Athalia?” He kept walking. The stairway kept going down, and down, and down, each step echoing the soft clack of his shoes down into the depths. Stone above him, stone beside him, stone below him. The light of his phone was enough for him to see the ones directly near him, but all that got him was a glimpse of old, worn, black and gray rock, blurred by the icy fog of death.

“Keep walking, little leech.”

Yeap, definitely Athalia. That alleviated his fear, a little. He knew Athalia, seen her injured back in the tunnel when he first met her, then later at the ball, surrounded by sex. A person, a woman, who got up and walked around and ate breakfast.

It didn't feel like that, not this time. As that icy voiced floated through the black, it felt more like the time he was lost in a sewer once when he was a child, one of those walk-in water tunnels on the edge of town. Endless black. He was only four at the time, and when he was older, he realized it was a very small tunnel with only a few forks that were all dead ends, none in use. Perfectly safe. At the time, in the nigh pitch black, the chill had scared and scarred him to the bone; thought for sure something was in the dark chasing him. It was years before he could walk past a dark room without hurrying past, hoping to dodge whatever nightmarish arm would reach out from the shadows to yank him into the death onyx.

It felt fucking just like that.

“Athalia, come on, I’m—”

“I. Said. Walk!” The darkness shook around him, vibrations quaking and tearing the air asunder, like glass shattering over his head. The voice lost its whisper, and became an ear-splitting shriek, knocking him onto his ass against the hard stone.

Further down the stairway, he could see movement. Twitchy movement, something jerking to the side, then to the other side of the thin stairway tunnel, something white. Then it was gone. He reached out for the wall, hands shaking, slipping on the stone as if it was slippery. But, it wasn’t slippery, it was his fingers refusing to hold still, unable to stop trembling as he tried to brace his weight against it. He almost fell over again, but, forced his knees to stop wobbling. It was a stairway of stone, steep, and if he started falling down it, he probably wouldn’t stop until he reached the bottom, and broke every bone on the way.

The weird, white thing in the distance flickered again, then faded into the black, gone. He walked after it, like a moth chasing a light in the darkness. What was that Metallica line? The soothing light at the end of your tunnel, was just a freight train coming your way.

“You ... you trying to scare me for a reason? Cause, I mean, it’s working, but I thought we were supposed to be working together,” he said. Silence greeted him. “Athalia?” Nothing.

Yeah, successfully terrified. He pointed the phone down as best he could, enough so he could see his shoes reach each step, and stared on into the darkness that swallowed him. It never ended, just kept going down, and down, and down, dragging him deeper into some ridiculous metaphor for hell. Did he find himself in a David Lynch film? Or maybe he was in 1990’s Jacob’s Ladder, and this was all in his mind, cause he was fucking dying and the afterlife was greeting him with a very, very, very deep grave.

He kept walking. Down. And down. And down. Endless, fucking endless, for thirty minutes he kept walking into the black, the engulfing obsidian, until he felt dampness in the air, on his skin, in his lungs; couldn’t stop himself from panicked breathing, despite the lack of need. Down, and down, until he felt the pressure of depth in his ears threaten to pop his brain. But still, the stairway went on, and because he was an idiot, he kept walking.

Finally, floor, and not stairs. He almost tripped when he found it, foot slamming into the floor of dark stone when he expected to be going down another stair. It was a room, the black fog not as thick, enough for his light to almost reach the walls, exposing what looked like small bumps along their surface. The room was maybe twenty feet long and wide? He stepped forward a little further, and then stepped backward.

Death was waiting for him.

Slowly, turning around with all the urgency of a mountain, black wings drifted across his path and before him. Two glowing white dots hovered in the distance, eyes in the black, but the face that held them was still hidden by the black mist. But it came closer, and closer, and when he kept thinking it’d have reached him, that the two white, glowing eyes were normal human-sized eyes, they kept getting closer. Like seeing something in the distance, but thinking it was closer and smaller, the two white dots came closer and closer again, until he realized how huge the face was. A skull, with dark skin, gaunt skin to the point of skeleton-like features.

He fell back, on his ass, and gasped. It was its eyes that he'd seen when he was on the stairs earlier.

“You deserve a taste,” it said, she said, “of a nightmare.”

“M-Me? The fuck did I do?” Natasha had told him about Athalia, what her form looked like, a form Tash had gotten a peek of when Athalia got in her way, that time Tash and her two werewolf friends were looking for the spider monster. But the description didn't do it justice, this giant skeleton torso with enormous black wings. Worse, she blended into the black fog, so he couldn't really see any of her limbs, any defining features other than the white eyes a few feet in front of him. Any movement she made was a ghost on the still air.

The screams had stopped. At some point, they'd faded away on his journey into Hell. Where the fuck, why and how would a chorus of death cries vanish?

There was more movement in the room than Athalia. He blinked, panicking, trying to see. His eyes had trouble focusing on anything in the dark, but he tried again with his phone, hoping maybe a sliver more of the light would reach the walls.

He wished it hadn't. Subtle reflections caught on eyes, tear-filled eyes. Dozens of them. There were faces on the walls, staring at him, each twisting and turning their heads as much as they could, but their heads were only half emerged from the blackness of the barrier. Thick thread the color of rotted skin cut in criss-crosses along where their faces emerged from the wall, stitching them into it like they'd been grafted there, bleeding skin struggling against the strands. Their faces were all the color of char, their eyes crying clear tears down the black skin, with red irises. Not red like Antoinette's, which were a step closer to amber, beautiful and alluring. No, these faces on the walls had irises like blood. He almost expected them to cry tears of crimson, but the torn skin on their necks, temples, scalp, wherever the thread was, did plenty to keep blood trickling down the walls and onto the faces below them instead.

The faces were trying to speak, but like their heads, their lips were sealed with thread as well. Mouths tried to pull apart, obsidian skin tore, and thick red droplets fell down their chins. They were dead silent, despite the tears, the blood, despite their desperate attempts to cry out to Jack; he could see it in their eyes.

It isn't real, it isn't real, it isn't real.

He looked down. The floor was stone, black, but as he stared at it, he started to notice more lines in the subtle bumps. The stones he'd been walking on, hard and rock, were shaped like body parts. Too damn hard to see in the black on the stairs, with the dark fog blocking much of his light, but now, he could see knuckles, elbows, arms and legs, all piled over each other and compressed down to create a flat surface, small bumps and grooves where hard bone would be. Like he was walking on a stairway and floor paved with corpses.

"You don't respect us," she said, hovering backward a few feet, so all he could see was the two glowing dots in the eye sockets of her huge skull-like head. "You ask me to stop hating you, your kind, when it is your kind that treats us as second-class citizens of the night. And yet, it is you vampires who are fragile things."

This whole conversation felt weird. Talking to a giant floating torso of what looked like black bones, black spikes and claws, black wings, and a dangling spinal cord, was terrifying in and of itself. But, it wasn't that he was talking to some sort of death-monster incarnate that was weird, it was the words Athalia was using. She was trying to manipulate the conversation, lead him into a corner maybe, get him to trip over words.

He'd be fine with that, and fully capable of dancing around that sort of conversation, playing the game and all, but it was hard to talk and not have a quivering lip as he stared at the monster. Felt like that time he was dealing with a giant spider monster thing, something his mind was sure didn't exist, and yet his eyes were telling him it was.

“ ... you're right.”

Athalia turned to him again, and came closer. Her bone hands walked on the floor, acting as her legs, and her spinal cord dragged along the stone, ceiling too high for her to float much.

“Explain.”

“W-Well, I mean, just looking at you, I doubt any neonate or ancilla vamp could handle you in a fight, especially ... in here.” He gestured to what might as well have been Hell's basement.

“ ... yes, that is true.”

“We die if we catch a sunrise. We sleep half the day. We light up like kindling. You're right, we are fragile...” He got up, dusted off his knees and ass, and adjusted his tie again. “You could probably handle ten, or twenty of us in a fight, in here.”

“ ... I could.”

“And yet, you've requested I come here, so we can talk, and find a way to work together.”

“Azamel has requested you. I just delivered the message.”

“Athalia, face it. Kindred may be weaker than your kind, weaker than Uratha too, with only our few elders as a real threat, but we're very, very good at what we do.”

“... and that would be?” If skulls could frown, he was sure Athalia’s gaze would be fury incarnate. But, instead, she could only stare at him; it was enough, and he stepped back a couple times as the two glowing dots in the center of her large eye sockets bore a hole through his sternum.

“Living in cities with the people, controlling them, manipulating them, hiding among them. And by doing that, with decades, we can turn cities into havens for our kind. Not just our kind, but your kind too.” He gestured to her, open palm up, extending the metaphorical olive branch. Or handing her a sandwich, depending on the metaphor. “How often do Begotten manage to turn a food source into a home, with a support structure?”

The monster snarled, and black mist flowed out of her mouth, over her exposed, dark teeth and gaunt lips.

“We—”

A door opened, creaking, heavy, stone grinding on stone.

“Rarely, very rarely do Begotten ever find equilibrium with their food source.” Another voice, another he didn’t recognize, one with some rasp to it, and some depth as well. A lot better than the banshee shrieks and death whispers of Athalia; damn thing’s voice was like ice in his skull.

As the door opened, the black mist faded away, or at least dispersed a bit, some of it flowing into the new exit and vanishing into the new source of air.

“Athalia,” the voice said, “you were supposed to let him through.”

“I wanted to talk to him ... and ask him about Angela.”

Angela, psycho hunter woman with the glass eye?

“She nearly killed me,” he said as he followed Athalia. How she’d fit through the small door in the weird room, he had no—oh, she phased through it, body turning into black mist and moving through the door like a gaseous blob. Yeah, the sort of monster who could sneak her way into a closed off room through the cracks under the door. That’s ok, he didn’t need to sleep later or anything anyway.

He stepped out into Dolareido.

“Wait ... the fuck?” He looked around, down at himself, and froze. Blood was raining on him.

“Hello Jack,” the raspy voice said, with an accent he couldn’t recognize. But he recognized her, sort of, as she stood before him, waiting.

“ ... Fiona?”

“Indeed.”

Gone was the Scottish accent, and gone was the bubbly champagne of her voice and body language. Instead, a woman hovered before him, a woman with no eyes, giant black spikes like horns curling backward over her head like hair, serrated and covered in little spikes, two of them coming from where eyes should have been before curving back over her forehead to join the others. Skin the color of dark steel, and instead of feet, she had long shins that came into knife-like points. At least she had a mouth and nose, lips a darker tint, thin, and her chin sharp. It looked like she was hovering in the air at first, but as he took in the sight of her, he recognized the spider legs coming out of her back, massive, long, each blade-like and similar to her feet; they were holding her a few feet above the pavement. He’d seen those, back when Fiona had helped him in the tunnel with the spider monster.

No wonder the wolves thought she might have been an Azlu or whatever, she was a spider monster. Except unlike that gross abomination, Fiona's monster form was strangely beautiful, wearing a white silk — spider silk? — dress that hugged tight to her curvy, curvy, curvy body. Holy crap she barely had a waist, and her breasts were massive, bigger than Fiona's human breasts. Nearly as big as Antoinette's, and considering the blood rain was soaking the dress, he could see the nipples, and—for the love of god, stop staring at the spider monster's enormous breasts.

Once he managed to tear his eyes away, he looked beside him. Athalia reformed, black mist coalescing into bones, wings, and spikes. And without a ceiling over her head, she spread her black wings and hovered higher into the air, without bothering to use them. The blood rain mixed into the black mist that dripped from her dark bones, same as it did to Fiona and him.

“I ... recognize this city,” he said. The three of them were stepping out of a dark alleyway, an alley he walked past on the way to Elysium usually. Sure enough, once they were out on the street, he recognized the buildings. Except... “What the fuck.” The buildings, their signs, normally a subdued Las Vegas, looked warped, strange, like they were melting. They weren't melting, as far as he could tell, but the blood rain made it look like that, as if they were being destroyed by the flood of crimson that fell upon them.

None of that compared to the fact the moon in the sky was red; and really fucking close. If he'd had a plane, he could fly into it. And to make it all perfectly terrifying, the red moon was dripping blood, oozing it down onto the city, almost as if something had wounded a god in the heavens.

Athalia hovered to his right, drifting over cars and the people inside them. People on the streets. People in the cafes and pizza joints. People in the bars. Not a one of them moved, all holding perfectly still, all ... all ... actual statues, made of stone. He approached the ones on the sidewalk, and touched one in the shoulder, some older man with a belly, in a trench coat. Stone.

“A nightmare,” Athalia said, whispering voice cutting through the rain. “I found this chamber, many years ago, a good example of the horrors your kind have inflicted on someone, someone who felt fear, someone bathed in it. It scarred the Primordial Dream, forever a nightmare. Fiona found it as well.”

“W-Wait, we did this?”

Fiona shook her head, massive array of glorious, horrifying horns of black turning with it. “Not directly. Someone, probably human, must have ... glimpsed, the sort of world Kindred have here, and saw something they probably shouldn’t have. Something that terrified them to their soul.” Fiona raised herself higher, walking on four of the massive, segmented blades that served as spider legs, while the other four reached out to poke against and balance on nearby buildings, street lamps, and cars. “It isn’t only us Begotten that can be monsters.”

Athalia snorted, a strange sound considering her voice was nothing but loud whispers, like a howling wind given the ability to speak.

“I uh ... um ... so, I’m in a nightmare?” He stared up at the blood moon as he walked along with the two monsters. Trying to be prim and proper, all business and such, wasn’t going to work anymore since he was soaked to the bone in blood. And despite himself, he licked his lips to taste it. Tasted ... weird ... and wrong, and provided no filling sensation, no tingling warmth in the core. But at the same time, it did fill him with something else, a colder sensation with stings of pain, like swallowing frozen thumbtacks. Yeah, don’t do that anymore.

“You are,” Fiona said. “The lair, our lair. The Begotten of Dolareido share this chamber.”

In a nightmare, a literal, actual nightmare. A real place, in a dream world, that was apparently a real thing too. Fiona had told him all these things, but words were meaningless compared to the sights he was seeing, to the nightmare fuel before him. A giant, red, bleeding moon, titanic drops of red falling like a waterfall onto some of the larger buildings, while other globs turned into misty red above, becoming rain. The more disturbing part was the people, the cold, dead, stone people, their empty gazes, and how the blood running down their heads looked like tears on their cheeks.

He looked at Fiona, her large ass wrapped tight in the partly see-through, white silk dress, and then looked at Athalia, the bones and black wings and dangling spinal cord, a hovering torso. Couldn't be more different, and yet, he could see how Fiona would be the more deadly monster. Damien said she lured men in to her, abusive men, and she punished them for being lowlifes, before killing them, a regular black widow; or at least she used to kill them. He wasn't sure how she was feeding anymore, but he hadn't seen any reports about strange, butchery murders since then.

Athalia's nightmarish form was far more chilling, far more direct, far more 'the thing in your closet' sort of horror. Or maybe, the thing in the tomb, in the old mausoleum, in the empty grave, the thing that would snap out from the darkness and drag you screaming into the dirt and bones beneath. Both were horrors of darkness, both were terrifying in their own way. And both were escorting him down a street in a literal nightmare.

He shivered.

"I can taste your fear," Athalia said, voice slithering across the blood drops and into his ear.

He swatted away the sound, and frowned at the colossal entity. "Where are we going?"

"To speak with Azamel," Fiona said.

"I got the impression Athalia here wanted to talk about Angela."

The reaper monster drifted head of them, and began to hover backward a few feet above the bloody street, eyes locked onto Jack. “I suppose you must know by now. Jeremiah said it, so Beatrice heard it, and I assume she would tell Julias, and you. I ... wanted to ask ... how is my daughter?”

He stopped, and stared at the skeleton, at her giant skull, at the glowing white dots within. Hard to remember the actual woman’s face, Athalia’s face, when he was looking at the reaper version, but he managed, after a while. The dark skin and black hair, the soft face, and the steel eyes. Just like Angela.

“ ... she’s your daughter?”

Sucking in a breath through her teeth, Fiona stepped to the side, her spider legs drifting her some five or six feet away from him; predicting an argument, no doubt. If Angela was Athalia’s daughter, yeah, an argument was likely.

“She is.”

“That ... psychopath, is your daughter?”

Predictably, the reaper monster snorted again, the harsh whisper cracking the soaked air.

“She isn’t a—”

“I was bound.” He marched up to the giant skeleton, up to the skull nearly half the size of his body, and poked the floating monster in her giant sternum. “Tied to a chair. Your psychopath daughter put a blowtorch up to my fucking lips.” He jammed his finger into the monster hard enough to make her hover back a few inches. “That maniac hit me, and hit me, and hit me.”

“She—”

“Fuck you! Your daughter cut me, shot me, laughed at my misery, taunted me. She treated her fellow hunters like cannon fodder. I’m glad she’s dead, I’m glad she—”

“She’s not dead.”

He stepped back from the reaper, and stared at her as hard as he could. Maybe, just maybe, if he thought about it really hard, wished for it really hard, she’d explode. No such luck.

“She’s not dead?”

“I would know if my daughter was dead, and I know that she is not.”

“She was stabbed! She got hit by a car!”

“ ... injured then, but not dead.”

Fuck. Shitting fucking shit!

“She ... she hated me, Athalia, hated me like ... like you hates vamps but a thousand times worse.” He lowered his gaze to the bloody street, and tried his best to keep calm. Again, no such luck, and his arms started to tremble slightly as the memories of being captured, tied up, stabbed, punched, shot, burned, all slammed into his mind with the grace of a nuke.

The reaper monster sighed, black mist flowing out of her skull mouth, before dispersing on the bloody street around his feet.

“I am surprised your Invictus council did not tell you, if Beatrice did not. I’m sure they know.”

“I haven’t had the opportunity to meet with them yet, none of them, not really. We’re ... they’re ... giving me a vacation.”

Fiona drifted back toward him, and lowered herself down until she was beside him. Much as he barely recognized her, it was Fiona, someone he'd hung out with on several occasions, someone who had helped him look for Natasha. A new friend. He let the monster slip her strange hand, two large claws for fingers, and one large claw for a thumb, around his shoulder. And with her enormous spider legs still holding her sharp feet an inch above the pavement, she started to walk forward, nudging him along with her.

"I only learned a few days ago, myself," the spider monster said, "about Angela, and Athalia."

"Fiona, he's not going to—"

"Athalia, you underestimate vampires, and you underestimate Jack. Even after his escape from those hunters, you underestimate him."

How Fiona knew about Jack's encounter with Angela, or any of the details, he didn't know. But then both she and Athalia were monsters of darkness, according to her, and they lived and breathed shadow as well as any Nosferatu or Mekhet, or better than. They probably got their hands on the information in ways his superiors wouldn't appreciate. But, that was fine, and he sighed as he looked at the woman beside him. Those massive black horns coiling back over her head, from her eyes, from her scalp, looked almost like hair.

"I ... didn't come here to talk about that night," he said.

"It deserves to be talked about." Fiona rubbed his head a few times, not unlike how Antoinette would have, though she was only average height in her spider form, other than the extra legs. And the feel of her black claws on his head was strange, but welcome. "I know you came here to talk with Azamel, but she knows we're talking to you first. She'll understand if we spend a moment talking."

“ ... will she?” he said.

Athalia snorted again, but nodded, and hovered with them, beside him again, as Fiona walked him along. “She will. And she knows I wished to ask of Angela.”

“Angela ... your daughter. I ... did you—”

“I did not know she would come here. I ... abandoned her, years ago, left her with an orphanage in a distant city. She knew about me, what I was, and it had created ... problems.” Seeing and hearing an angel of death give a confession was a strange sight to behold, from how her enormous skull head couldn’t provide any facial ticks, to how her voice was a harsh whisper with very peculiar inflections. Like listening to a graveyard wind confess its sins.

“She knew you were a monster, back then?”

“She did. I left her because it was the only hope I had of keeping her from the life, before you ask.”

He put up his hands in surrender. “No judgments here. Not like a vampire would have any right on judgment in the reproduction front anyway.” Vampires spread like a disease, no other way to think about it.

The winged monster nodded, and sighed as she dragged her claws along some of the still cars. “But she disappeared several years later. I’d heard sightings of her from elsewhere, then once again a couple years later, before she showed up here, with this Jeremiah bastard using her against me. Against us.”

“ ... fuck.” He sighed, and bit his tongue before he said something he’d regret. No use in blaming Azamel now, for Jeremiah following her to Dolareido. “Did ... you want to ask anything about her?”

Athalia stopped, and floated their, enormous spinal cord dangling half a foot above the red and black street, before she resumed again. Hesitation, maybe?

“ ... I ... don't know. I guess I can piece together her life from what you told me, and her new role as Jeremiah's partner. She must have ... got into ... hunting very young, to be who she is now. Lost her eye in a hunt probably. Became ... hateful.”

Jack winced as the reaper's voice died away. No need to say it, no need for him to call attention to it or blame her either, for Angela's attitude. Like mother like daughter, times a thousand.

Wait.

“ ... Athalia,” he said, “Angela's your daughter, but she's here to kill us, me, Azamel, and...”

“And me.” The reaper drifted ahead of them, and fluttered her onyx wings a few times, black mist and black feathers alike falling into the street of consequence and bad decisions that lay ahead of them. “But she's my daughter. I can't kill my daughter, Jack.”

He opened his mouth, and then shut it. To make a comparison between Angela and Tony was a bad idea; childes were not true children of their sires, the relationship was different. It had been painful for Antoinette to orchestrate Tony's death, he was sure, but he was her childe, not child, and she'd had over a century of being the man's enemy to steel her heart. Athalia had ... how long?

“How long have you known Angela's been hunting monsters?”

“As I said, I heard that she'd resurfaced a couple years ago, but I had no details, nothing I could ... I had no idea it had progressed like this.”

He had to admit, there was a bit of sympathy for the devil going on here, between him and Athalia. What a royal bitch Athalia was, but she'd lived a very hard life, gave up her daughter, and now that daughter was a psychopath who probably wanted to kill her monster mother. That sucked. Anyone would think that sucked.

And it was going to suck a thousand times more if, and when, he killed Angela.

Again, he bit his tongue, kept the words down, no need to say them and make things worse when Athalia was probably already thinking them. Angela and Jeremiah were now primary targets, and in a city filled with vampires and werewolves and monsters, being a primary target meant death. The hunters had bitten off more than they could chew, and one way or another, it was going to cost them their lives. He'd make sure of it.

He could still remember the look in Angela's eye as she brought the blowtorch in toward him with a practiced hand. She was excited to see him turn to ash. She'd done it before.

“ ... I couldn't break her.”

“What?” Athalia and Fiona said.

“Angela, I couldn't break her. The hunters got in close, made eye contact, underestimated me, and I broke them, dominated their minds. But Jeremiah, well I didn't try on him, but Angela? I tried, and I really tried. The others hunters I broke like toothpicks, but her, I couldn't get through. There was ... it was like, a wall, in her mind, that blocked me out.”

Both the monsters looked at each other, and shrugged.

“And in the fight,” he said, “she was ruthless, but ... really, really good. I mean, it ... it didn't feel like I was dealing with a regular human, you know?”

Athalia sank, body inching closer to the bloody pavement, until she no longer hovered, but stood there on her bone hands, spinal cord dragging along the bloody street. She looked down at the ground, black mist trickling out of her, and raised her gaze to look at Fiona.

“Jeremiah,” Fiona said to her monster companion, “felt the same way. The four with him, the weird knives they had, they were dangerous. That Jeremiah though, he ... it didn’t feel normal.”

“Azamel wanted to talk about that, about him. Let’s go.” Athalia continued on, and with a sigh, Jack followed after her.

Why didn’t Julias or Antoinette tell him about Angela? They had to know. Jacob too, though, Jack had no expectations of that Joker to tell him anything. The others though, why hadn’t they told him? Surely they would have, sooner or later, but it’d have been nice to know ahead of time. Arg, that was partly his fault, not telling anyone he had a meeting with Azamel, even though they’d have probably guessed it. They couldn’t have guessed the day though. Or, maybe, they just thought he should hear it from the mother herself? Nah, they trusted Athalia less than he did. They were going to tell him, they must have been. Maybe they thought everyone else would do it, so they didn’t have to be the bearer of bad news.

He could worry about that later. For now, he had to worry about himself, about the secret meeting he was having with the old monster partly responsible for the newest threat in Dolareido. Newest, and likely one of the biggest.

When they turned a corner, Jack froze, and looked up. He had to look up a little to look at either Athalia or Fiona, but for this new beast, this new monster, he had to look way, way up.

“Holy ... fucking...” He stumbled to the side, and stuck out a hand to catch a car to keep from falling over. It didn’t help much, and he kept stumbling against it as his muscles refused to work, fingers slipping on the wet car hood, and elbow slamming against the metal. He barely noticed, eyes locked onto the giant elephant creature sitting in the middle of an intersection.

There was no traffic since the cars weren't moving, so the monster was free to sit there, in what Jack had to guess was the center of the weird nightmare city. Nightmare, he was in a fucking nightmare, looking at monsters, and this monster in front of him was the most twisted, weird thing he could have imagined. Ganesha, even he recognized that. He didn't know shit about Hinduism, but he was pretty sure this incarnation of the god was very much not accurate to Ganesha.

There was the body, the two legs and four arms that looked human, and the large belly too, but the head was an elephant head, and the blood rain dripped down from its tusks. Each hand was wrapped with a huge chain, and from each chain was dangling shit he did not expect to find, but probably should have. A giant net, like a fish net, except one big enough that a boat would have had to haul it in, not human hands; and it was filled with human skulls. Another hand's chain held a dangling corpse, a curved spike skewering it through the stomach, like the corpse was fish bait. It was almost as if he was looking at a fisherman of human flesh. The swords in the other hands looked like scimitars, but in the context, he could only imagine them cutting up human bodies on a butcher's table.

He forced himself to stand up straight, and stare up and up at what he could only assume was Azamel. Sitting down on the pavement, the monster was at least fifty feet tall, and as it, she, breathed, he could hear the rumbling of titanic lungs, and hear the beat her heart. Slow, pounding, and colossal.

“Jack Terry, of the Invictus,” she said. Her voice was almost pure bass, and Jack winced as it vibrated through him. The puddles of blood trembled all around Azamel for hundreds of feet in all directions, as if a herd of dinosaurs was marching through. But there were layers to it, human layers, enough that he could understand the words.

“ ... Azamel?”

“Indeed.” She didn’t move much. She was a monster, a nightmare incarnate, sitting in a world where she reigned supreme; he should probably go up to her. Hell, he was surprised she didn’t ask him to bow. “I am surprised you came.”

“I did say I would, didn’t I?”

“ ... then either you are a fool for ignoring the threat these hunters and Jeremiah pose, or you thought me so incapable of logical reasoning, that you risked your life to see me and ensure I am placated.” She laughed, a booming and roaring sound that made her elephant trunk trumpet a little. Fucking weird, and terrifying when combined with the blood flowing down her body, tusks, and the dead in her hands.

“Little of both?” he said.

“Perhaps.” She reached out with a hand holding a scimitar, chain gripped tight in her palm, and used three of her human-but-giant looking fingers to gesture him to come closer.

Sighing under his breath, he forced himself to stand straight, stand tall, and walk toward her. Athalia and Fiona stuck with him as he approached the gargantuan entity. Good, cause he was three seconds away from panicking and bolting. He’d seen vampires do crazy shit, he’d seen fucking magic at work, he’d seen a pack of werewolves unleash their inner titans, he’d seen a spider monster mutation thing, and he’d seen legit nightmare monsters, Athalia and Fiona. But Azamel was a new level of holy fucking shit, and he wasn’t sure how to process what he was looking at as he got closer, and closer, and closer.

Her foot was bigger than him.

“As I’m sure you guessed,” the giant god of death said, “I asked you here, because I need a way to communicate with you Kindred that will not escalate into conflict. Surely you know what your covenant has done to my home in the physical world?”

“ ... the explosives, right?”

“Your superiors are fools to think they can control me with such a small measure. I could make my home elsewhere.”

“ ... could you though?” He tilted his head to the side, and rubbed the back of it a few times as he let his mind piece together the puzzle. “The old tunnels are used by Kindred, and most of them are located in parts of the city where either the Invictus or Carthians consider it to be in their purview. I know Jacob uses some of the tunnels in a different corner of the city, so you’ll be avoiding him too. It seems you need a foothold in the physical world”—oh good god he called it the ‘physical world’ like that was a normal thing—“in order to pursue your agenda, but you also need some degree of privacy, and defensibility. If it was just privacy, there’d be a million places in Dolareido you could hide, but you need walls, some way to guard yourself from ... hunters, and other dangers, while you’re in the physical world. Hard to beat fifty-foot-thick walls of rock lined with concrete in that department. But the Invictus explosives would cave in all entryways into this particular alcove, which could cause the whole tunnel to cave in if it dominoes, spoiling your defensible position. And ... you like this spot, in the tunnel depths. You often came here before, last time you were in Dolareido. Something about it resonates with you, and from what I know about Begotten, that’s important.”

The three monsters stared at him, until all Jack could hear was the heartbeat and breath of the god giant before him. He looked around for the fourth, for Mark, a man he’d never seen but had been described to him. No one knew what the man's horror might look like though, or at least no one had told him. For all he knew, Mark was watching him right now; certainly felt like he was being watched, especially with the three monsters staring at him. He really should have tried to word the breakdown better, maybe in a less offensive way, but like usual, once the thought sparked in his head, it just came out of him.

"Fiona, you tell this little Kindred too much," Azamel said.

"Nothing he and the other Kindred hadn't already learned." The spider monster shrugged, and lowered herself until she was beside him again, stiletto feet grazing against the blood puddles around him. "I told him we can't simply walk in and out of our lairs wherever. Something I know the Kindred have managed to pieced together on their own."

Azamel snorted. Even as a giant elephant god thing, Jack could tell that snort was a 'there's more to this than we're saying' snort. He'd figure it out eventually, but for now, it was one more secret on a pile of hundreds.

"Yes, little Kindred, I value the local in the tunnels. My statement was true though. I could make my home elsewhere. But I would prefer to keep what I have, and you would be better served to keep that a reality."

How the fuck did the giant elephant monster articulate so well? The heavy, booming voice alone should have made that difficult, and yet its echoing, wall-shaking power was enunciated without issue. It, or she, didn't have human lips, and yet he could see her mouth move between the tusks to speak as a human would. Nothing in this nightmare world made sense. Everything in this nightmare world was determined to get under his skin. He would not sleep well today, even in Antoinette's arms.

“If you’re willing to keep the peace,” he said, “willing to keep your appetites under control, and willing to help us deal with Jeremiah, Angela, and the other hunters, then I can’t see any reason the Invictus will ever detonate the explosives.”

“... our hungers are not always easily satisfied,” Azamel said. “Perhaps, one day, a Begotten will make a mistake, their hunger seeping out and infecting the humans with nightmares. On that day, the Invictus may respond with cruel swiftness. I hope that you can help create understanding with them, that that need not be their response.”

“Spreading nightmares ... I’m pretty sure I can get the Invictus to take their itchy fingers off the trigger, with a little show of good faith from you.”

One of Azamel’s scimitar-wielding hands stabbed the sword into the ground, the enormous blade cutting down into a car like stabbing a sausage with a fork. The blade stood up on its own when she let go of it, metal cutting clear through the car and into the soaked pavement beneath it. Hand free, she held it out before Jack, and set it on the street, palm up.

She wanted him to get into her hand.

He looked at Athalia and Fiona, but they said nothing. They waited, Athalia resting her weight onto her large hands — nowhere near as large as Azamel’s — against the street, while Fiona gently drifted in place, with her weight hanging on her eight spider legs. Athalia might let him die to Azamel if her boss decided to kill him, but Fiona would probably protest, and she seemed ok with him getting into Azamel’s hand.

Trembling, shaking in his blood-soaked three-hundred dollar shoes, he stepped into the monster’s grip.

Azamel rumbled contentment, and raised her hand. Enormous things moved slowly, relative to their size; it was physics. Nine point eight meters per second squared was gravity, so a giant trying to walk looked like they were walking slowly. On top of that, square cube law said enormous heavy creatures simply couldn't exist, as the surface area to support their weight increased at a slower curve compared to the weight itself. None of these seemed to apply to Azamel. He squeezed her thumb where it stood upright beside him, and held on tight as she lifted him into the air, like a human would lift a pebble. So fast he felt his guts pull down into his pelvis, like a roller coaster pulling up or down too fast.

He always hated roller coasters.

“There are forces at work, child of the night, that you cannot comprehend. Jacob and Antoinette test their knowledge upon the shores of existence itself. But this realm is but one of many, and your idiot elders flirt with forces beyond their understanding. Beyond my understanding.”

Ok, Antoinette and Jacob fucking with crazy shit, he could understand. The two of them were ancient, and if they were flirting with dangerous shit Lovecraft style, he couldn't really blame them. If he was half a millennium old, and had dealt with shit like vampires, werewolves, and monsters his whole life, he'd be curious to know about what lay beyond the veil too. But if the giant elephant god monster thing in front of him said it was beyond her understanding too, was willing to admit ignorance, and since these monsters were capable of insane shit like entering nightmare realms, then he had to consider that.

“Why are you telling me this?”

“Because, you asked for a sign of good faith, and I have been assured you are unique among your brethren. Fiona and Athalia vouch for you, and events to this point suggest they are correct to do so. I tell you this, in confidence and trust, that you will do what is necessary to keep the peace.”

“I ... I don’t get it. What’s one got to do with the other?”

The god snorted, and Jack clutched her thumb tighter as her hot breath slammed against him. Smelled of rotten blood and a damp cellar.

“I seek my own goals, and Dolareido is the stage for my pursuits. Your kind need not be my enemies in this journey of mine. But, someone is poking holes through the walls of realms, and I believe they are attempting to upturn the city in its entirety. Someone is hiding in the wake of Jacob and Antoinette, hiding their actions, their flirtations with the other realms, and using those two as a smokescreen.”

“Upturn the city? What’s that—”

“Destroy, little blood leech. Dolareido and its humans are at risk, to something ... someone, here in the city.”

“ ... that is the most vague and useless warning ever, Azamel! How am I supposed to keep the peace and—”

Her fingers wrapped his body, and began to squeeze. Oh shit, oh shit oh shit. His arms were free, and they pressed down on the colossal fingers surrounding him; might as well have been trying to move a building. Her grip was absolute, and she squeezed tighter, and tighter, until his ribs were threatening to break.

“Do not test me, vampire. Since I have arrived here, I have attempted to make peace, despite the trials I faced last time I nested within your city’s walls. Your superiors were not innocent, but the two who were most responsible for my suffering, are dead. So now I attempt peace, and it is thrown back in my face. I offer advice, I offer knowledge, and again and again, it is thrown back in my face.”

“You ... b-brought ... Jeremiah ... here...”

With another snort, and a trumpet sound from her alien trunk, she loosened her grip. He was still trapped, but at least he wasn't at risk of being turned into paste.

“ ... what did you tell Jeremiah of me?”

“Nothing! Christ, nothing. They fucking tortured me, tortured me! I fucking bled and killed and nearly died, and it's because Jeremiah and that psychopath Angela are here for you. You ... you knew he would too, didn't you? Chase you to Dolareido.”

“ ... I made a tactical decision, vampire.”

“I almost fucking died! Barry died! They—”

“Hunters were already here, preparing in wait, when Jeremiah arrived pursuing me. Do not mistake his presence for the entirety of the troubles that plague your city.” The giant monster sighed, and brought him in closer, closer, until he was only a few feet from her enormous eyeball. She released him, and kept her hand out, palm up for him to stand on, beside one of her tusks. “You truly told him nothing?”

“Well I mean, I don't have any way to prove that to you, but no, I told him jack shit. Figured it'd bite me in the ass if you ever found out.”

“You are wise,” she said. A compliment from the beast he suddenly so very much wanted to kill. He wasn't sure if he wanted her words to make him feel pride, but they did anyway. “You would do well to avoid Jeremiah and Angela, little vampire. They are hunters that have progressed past the limitations of a human. They are far more dangerous than you understand.”

“Past the limitations?”

“Surely you felt it, when dealing with them.”

Yeah, yeah he did. Angela’s unbreakable mind was what she was talking about. The fuck else did those two have going for them?

“Any other tips for me about them?”

“I am sorry, but the nature of their ... inhuman abilities eludes me. They are tough to kill, and will not be broken easily.”

Well, better than nothing.

“Ok, so, you say something’s happening in the city, something that’s threatening the whole city? And it’s probably not the hunters? Some ... magical sorta stuff?”

“Indeed. And while I have asked you here to agree to be my voice for your infuriating superiors, I have also asked you here to keep an eye open for what troubles may brew in the dark corners of the Earth.”

“Because ... if Dolareido is destroyed, everyone’s fucked. Me, you, the wolves, everyone.”

“Correct.” And, with a long sigh, she reached up with her other arm, the one with the sword, and used it to scrape at her tusk. “I so despise this game.” She lowered him back down to the street, and he hopped out of her palm. Maybe she had wanted to look him in the eye, so she could be sure he was telling the truth or something. “But it is a game we must play.”

“Yeah, no argument from me here.” Sighing, and strangely enough, getting a little more comfortable with the company, he leaned against a nearby car. It was a shitty game, playing for lives. Just like politics, the smarter you were, the more you didn’t want to play it, but the more you knew you had to.

“Fiona, Athalia, and Mark will notify you if they discover anything about this unknown threat, Jack Terry,” Azamel said. “And, if the hunters make a mistake and expose themselves, we will bring it to your attention.”

Jack glanced the two monsters' way. Impossible to read either of their expressions, Fiona with the horns coming out of her eye sockets, and Athalia with the skull face. Fiona would probably be more than happy to help him, and Athalia would no doubt hate every second of it, but do it anyway.

Good god, Angela was her daughter. Angela was her fucking daughter. How the fuck was that going to go?

“I'll let my bosses know and—”

“Do not tell anyone else of this.” The monster ripped her scimitar from the skewered car, and offered him an annoyed, loud trumpet sound again. “Not your lover, nor your sire, or your friends. There is a strong possibility one of them causes the ripples I fear, or that the spreading word will cause the perpetrator to hide their tracks all the better. No, keep this to yourself, tell only the Begotten, and even then, be careful with your words. Whatever stirs the realms has touched their toes into many worlds, Jack Terry. The realm of spirits, the realm of dreams, the realm of the dead. Someone is searching for something, and leaving scars in their wake.”

This very much, super definitely sounded like something he should tell Julias. But, god damn it, she asked him not to, and she was the one telling him the info. And it wasn't like it was info he could action; it wasn't a lead or anything. Best he could do was keep an eye and ear open for strangeness. And fuck, strangeness found him every day these days.

“I will do as you ask,” he said.

Azamel groaned, a strange, satisfied sound, like a giant cat might make. Or a purring whale? It filled the streets around him with vibrations, causing the pools of blood scattered over the asphalt to tremble. Something about the way he said his phrase that appeased her.

She liked to be obeyed.

“Fiona, please escort Jack from the lair.”

“Yes Azamel.” Fiona nodded her giant head of horns, and turned to walk with Jack.

He kept glancing over his shoulder, at the reaper and the elephant god as they began to chat. But soon he was too far to hear them, as if the nightmare buried sound with its rain of blood. Down and along the streets they walked, Jack eventually walking the line of its center, moving between the still cars that looked like they wanted to go, to move and drive, but never would. The statues in their seats looked as zealous as their cars, but they too were only a decor for the stage of these deals with devils.

“Hey Jack,” Fiona said, lowering her human-ish body down to hover beside him while her spider legs continued to walk, height of them arching far over Jack before coming back down to the street. “I had sex! Well, sort of. There was a man and woman present, and fingers, so I think it counts.”

He laughed. Fucking hell this woman. He really needed to hang out with her more, she was awesome.

---

Jack stood before the triumvirate, and waited. The room felt different than it did in the past, where he'd feel trapped, weak, and at the mercy of his superiors. Tonight, he was the young blood coming into his own, rising up from the pool of tadpoles and making people notice him, making people respect him. Michael noticed him, Maria noticed him, and Julias was happy with him, impressed, and grinning a sly, cocky grin as he watched the boy from his seat.

They were in the Xnomina headquarters building, where the Invictus usually had their meetings. He waited, standing before the council in the main meeting room, the three of them sitting and looking at him while he stood at the head of the table. But, it wasn't just the council he was dealing with, as Jessy was behind him, wearing a business suit with legs like she often did when doing business. And even scarier, was Damien was there too, standing beside Jessy, wearing a similar dark business suit, some shade of very dark navy, and a midnight blue tie to go with, with some jagged black lines down its length. Very slick, and it matched the half-buzzed head look Damien carried, dark hair running down the side to his shoulder.

The only remaining original right hand of the Invictus council behind him on his right, and the assassin and newest member behind him on his left. Hard to read their mood, and for Jessy's mood to be hard to read was a damn strange thing.

“Master Terry,” Maria said, a small smile on her cracked lips. “You have been through much in your scant time as Kindred. You have suffered under the quarreling of Tony and Alder Honors, and survived. You and your lover suffered under the assault of Lucas, and survived. And in the most absurd fashion, a monster from another realm sneaked into Dolareido, assaulted the Uratha, and you, and yet you survived.”

“But in all those situations, you were a spectator,” Michael said. Thank god he still thought that. “Even in defeating the spider abomination, you were taking advantage of an opportunity created by the Uratha. It wasn't until these hunters decided to make their move that you were given a real challenge, a direct challenge.” The Gangrel leaned forward, set his elbows on the table, fingers netted together on it, and smirked at him. “You performed beyond our expectations, Master Terry. Vengeance for Barry Tellern, served.”

Holy crap. He could feel his Ventrue ego grow until it was threatening to burst.

Julias turned his chair to face him more directly, and tapped a finger on the table. “And on top of all that, you have managed to smooth relations with two ... three groups, from the past.” Three? Ah, right, Damien. If that qualified. “The Uratha owe you, and we have reports of the werewolves integrating with the Kindred in both the Invictus and Carthians, a far better situation than last time, where only Garry managed to find common ground with them. With the Begotten, situations are more tense, specifically with Azamel, but I assume your meeting with her went well?”

Ah shit. It wasn't like they weren't going to figure it out, or wouldn't have predicted it since Athalia talked to him. But still, it'd be nice if he could do something without everyone in the city knowing he was doing it, or knowing he'd do it before he did.

“ ... it did, sire. To a degree, at least.”

“Consider this your first report to the Invictus as our intermediary with the Begotten,” Maria said with a small hand wave.

“Yes Madam Turio.” He almost said ‘um’ to begin his report. But, that wouldn't do for an Invictus report. No um, ers, likes, no filler words. “Azamel is upset with the Invictus, as you know. But she is willing to cooperate with us, as defeating Jeremiah has become her new goal. To prove her ... harmonious intentions, she has asked me to be her voice, as you expected, but has also stated she will provide me information if the hunters expose themselves. In the nightmare, she—”

“You were in the nightmare?” Maria raised a hand, and gestured to Damien. “Then you two are to consolidate your knowledge. We need to know more about these monsters.”

“Agreed,” Michael and Julias said together.

Jack looked over his shoulder at Damien, and waited for the man’s reaction. A shrug, a small nod, and a smaller smile. Well, that was pretty good for Damien.

“This only lends more weight to our decision,” Julias said. “Congratulations Master Terry, you are now the third member of the right hands of the Invictus.”

He froze. Oh shit. Shit shit shit.

“ ... I’m sorry, sire?” If one more god damn thing was put onto his shoulders tonight, he was going to crack like a toothpick.

The man smirked at him, one of those manipulative smirks the man used on him frequently, from well before Jack was Kindred. “The combination of your surprising strength, tenacity, your relationship with the creatures of Dolareido, and your ability to foster such relationships, is a powerful tool. We would be fools to ignore that power, simply because you are young.”

“But we’re not jumping the gun here,” Michael said. “Madam Herrington is running the show. Both Mister Burksen and you, Master Terry, report to her. Understood?”

“Yes Mister McDonald, understood.” Shit shit shit.

“This is an important decision,” Maria said. “And not just for you, Master Terry, but for the Invictus. Younger Kindred will see that advancement occurs through accomplishments, and with great accomplishments, you receive great advancement.”

That was an interesting spin. Were other Kindred getting lazy? Dolareido was a nice, easy place for Kindred, relative to other cities supposedly, and he got the impression from the other Kindred, like Amanda, that they were a little unprepared for all the shit being dumped on them lately. Lucas's return, Azamel's return, Avery's return, spider abominations, and the newcomer Jeremiah, it seemed like the Kindred of Dolareido, or at least the younger ones, had no training on how to deal with these major threats.

But that didn't mean Jack should suddenly find himself on the frontlines, dealing with those threats!

He almost asked why him, why not one of the other Kindred, older Kindred, like Bruce Vanna, or Hella Vendram. Or hell, Isabella Leauvion, older than Jessy or Natasha, why not her? His eyes danced between the three councilmen before him, and they met his gaze with steel faces and subtle smiles.

"I can see that you are concerned with the choice," Julias said.

"... a little, sire."

The ghost lady shrugged, leaning back in her chair and licking a fang. "To be one of the right hands of the Invictus council in Dolareido, is not as simple a matter as who is the strongest, Master Terry. Madam Vola served me well, and not for her might. Your ability to impact a situation, and to steer the result toward our expectations, or simply in our favor, is what is expected of a right hand. You have proven capable of doing this in many situations where far stronger Kindred would fail."

Well, that was true, he supposed. Not necessarily true like they thought it was, since they didn't know about Lucas, or Viktor and Tony. Julias did though. Maybe he was the swaying voice in this decision.

"Thank you for the honor," he said. "I'll make the Invictus proud."

“See that you do,” Maria said.

At least Julias wasn't being so serious about it. “It's not all about extra responsibilities, my childe,” he said. “You have more freedom to enact your judgments, and your allowance has been tripled.”

Tripled? He raised both brows, and did his best to stop himself from smiling. Couldn't be done, and a little crack of a grin sneaked onto one side of his lips, and then the other. Course it was an allowance, not a salary; Invictus basically owned you, they weren't paying you wages. Still, that put him into pretty deep into the six figure salary range, and that meant nicer suits, a nicer apartment — and he already had a great apartment — and maybe some extravagant expenditures for Antoinette. Eh, probably not, she had more money than the Devil, and expensive purchases probably didn't mean much to her.

Shit, stop thinking about money, pay attention.

Michael got up, and leaned his ass against the table by his chair, signaling that the conversation would soon end. “We'll be hosting a ball in six weeks, in honor of both Mister Burksen's and Master Terry's joining of the council as our right hands. And of course, other Kindred in the Invictus will discuss their own advancements, agendas, and such. The ball will be for you two though.”

A ball for him in six weeks, just as Antoinette predicted.

“Thank you, sir,” he said, and offered Michael a small bow. It was a chance to glance behind, head down, to see what Damien was doing too.

The man noticed Jack's action, caught the queue, and gave a small bow as well. “Thank you, sir.”

“Mister Burksen.” Maria got up and walked around the table, soon standing beside Jack. She wasn't looking at him, but Damien

instead. Still, being this close to her, her ghostly clothes and more ghostly mist, always chilled him, made him feel like he was standing next to that girl from The Ring. “You are to use that ball as an opportunity to communicate with other Kindred. You may not be a member of the Invictus, but we are the First Estate, and as you know, the Lancea et Sanctum are the Second Estate. We have been partners since long before your embrace, or mine, Mister Burksen, and you are to foster that partnership by getting to know your fellow Kindred. Do I make myself clear?”

Poor guy. Jack knew an introvert when he saw one, hell he was one, but Damien was both introverted, and a troubled man. He probably wanted to do nothing more than hide away from everyone else, feel guilty about shit, and read the Bible a bunch. Being forced to go to a party and socialize with a bunch of strangers? Jack wouldn't wish that on his worst enemy.

“Yes, Madam Turio.”

“Good.”

Julias got up to stand beside her, arms folded across his chest, and that pleasant-but-cocky smirk on his face as he set his butt to the table behind him. “And we have a mission for you three.”

Jessy stepped in, as did Damien. “Yes sir,” they said in unison.

“Yes sir,” Jack added, a little late, a little surprised. Come on, a giant responsibility had just been dumped on little him, young him, inexperienced him. His sire already had a task for him?

Michael came up to join them, so that the triumvirate all stood with the table behind them, and their respective right hands in front of them.

“Yes. The Invictus have decided that we could be on even better terms with the werewolves. Garry is, and that would suggest Avery is at least capable of some degree of compromise. Go, speak with her, and offer her incentive.”

Incentive? Jack raised a brow, and glanced between the three, as each of them offered him a small, knowing smile.

“Indeed,” Julias said. “We want you to explain to Avery that we’re opening the doors to her, inviting her into the territory. If she wants help with tracking down one of her targets, we can give it. If she wants a better place to live than a junk heap in the Carthian district, we can give it.”

Oh, that was actually a pretty good idea. Kind of like an open borders treaty between two countries, a step before trade agreements, two steps before a defensive alliance, three steps before a full alliance. He doubted it’d ever reach full alliance, but if they agreed on open borders, and if that worked out nicely, there was a good chance that could grow into a defensive alliance, where the Uratha and the Invictus could agree to help each other if one was attacked by a third party.

And perhaps most importantly, it stopped Garry from having a potentially disastrous advantage, since he and Avery were somehow on decent terms.

“Naturally,” his sire continued, “we’re hoping she’ll keep a nose out for the hunters, and help us if an opportunity presents itself. And Master Terry will be in charge of this meeting with Avery. So, the next time you and Avery plan to meet, please bring Mister Burksen and Madam Herrington with you. They don’t need to be in the meeting with you, if Avery demands, but they should at least be outside the door.”

Made sense, especially if he was going to be acting as a right hand now, something with a much bigger ‘official capacity’ stamp on it.

Michael nodded in Jessy's direction again. "But, again, outside of matters as intermediary with the Begotten and Uratha, Jessy is your superior."

The right hands nodded.

"Dismissed," Maria said, and moved back to her seat.

The right hands bowed, turned, and left.

"Oh, Master Terry," Julias said as they opened the door, "take another week off. You've earned it."

---

The three of them sat inside Jack's apartment on the couches. Slick, sleek, it was a nice place that he was pretty proud of. He could move to a better place now though, if he wanted, a penthouse suite maybe, and indulge in a personal hot tub, a bed twice as big as king size, maybe even as big as Antoinette's, and maybe a sound system for some serious music listening.

"So, you two are my two new slaves, mm?" Jessy said, cocky grin on her face. She couldn't pull it off like Julias, hers being far more hyena-ish. "Just kidding."

"We are your subordinates," Damien said. "Close enough."

"Ugh, no it's not, church man. I was just joking, for christ's sake. You do what I tell you in the context of the job and only the job. Besides, it's a fluid position, considering it doesn't apply in ambassadorial matters."

Jack smiled at her. Didn't say he was surprised she knew the word ambassadorial though; didn't need a kick in the face from a new boss.

"So, I'm a right hand of the Invictus now," he said. "That's, um ... terrifying."

“Tell me about it. Kid, you just got in on a whole whack of shit.” Jessy got up, got a bottle of blood out of his fridge, and poured herself a glass. Not one of his preferred wine glasses, but a normal glass, and she chugged the blood down with all the grace of an ox. Probably best she didn’t get a wine glass. “I mean, I’m sure the triumvirate have secrets they don’t share with us, nasty shit like betrayals, ancient agreements, murders and stuff, bones in the closet. But they do share a lot with us, a lot of stuff that allows us three to run this city.”

“Sensitive information about political figures,” Damien said.

“Every. Damn. One of them.” She poured herself another, decided to sip this one, and came back to sit with them in his living room. “All the big wigs. Anyone with their name in drugs, money, or politics — listed from least to worst evil for your convenience — and we know stuff about them, shit that can either ruin them, or be used to hit them where it hurts.”

The Mekhet raised a brow, following Jessy with his eyes, though he didn’t move his head much. Seemed to like holding still while the world moved around him. “Do we right hands spend a lot of our time exploiting kine?”

“Kine number in the millions, Damien. Control them, you control the city ... for the most part.”

Jack nodded. Yeah, most part. Once you were as strong as an elder vamp, or these werewolves or monsters, that stopped being so clear cut. But for the majority of paranormals in the city, they were at the mercy of whoever controlled the teeming masses. Hence much of the tension between Carthians and Invictus.

Jessy finished her drink, and folded a leg over the other, elbows on the back of his couch. “Jack, Damien’s been at this for a little while, unofficially at least, so don’t feel feel like you need to worry about two freshmen dragging me down. Besides, Damien’s got a lot of notches in his belt, knows his shit. Fucker was hiding from us for fifty fucking years, right?” The two men nodded. “Exactly. Damien knows the Devil’s Corner damn well, and that’s a feather in our cap we didn’t really have before. And you, you adorable little nitwit, can’t seem to stop making friends. And as you heard from the triumvirate, that’s becoming more and more important.”

He grinned at his boss, and settled a little in the couch. If he got along with Triss, he could get along with Jessy. “I’m not even a year embraced though. Barely a neonate, nowhere near ancilla. When push comes to shove—”

“You’ll do fine.” Damien nudged him in the side with an elbow. A grand gesture, considering who it was coming from. Jessy wouldn’t get the full meaning of the gesture thankfully, about what Jack did to Damien during Lucas’s raid. And hopefully, she’d never learn.

“Yeah, we saw the cleanup at the old prison,” she said. “You really fucked those hunters up. So, maybe it’s only when your backs to a wall, but you have a habit of pulling through, and that’s what matters.” Jessy winked at him, with all the subtlety of an action movie hero.

He nodded as he let that sink in. These vamps fifty years older than him in Kindred years, were trusting him with the rough stuff. Now if he could trust himself to be able to tap into that part of him again when he needed to, everything would be perfect. He didn’t, but, practice makes perfect.

“What about Amanda?” he said.

Jessy shrugged. “She’ll get a new partner. Not like you can’t visit her or something.”

Yeah, that was true. Amanda was the only one who knew he was visiting his mother and sister, hopefully, and hopefully she wouldn’t tell that to anyone. And hopefully she’d help him do it again.

“ ... I really pissed off that hunter, Angela,” he said. Better tell his new partners what was up before it bit him in the ass. “Athalia thinks she’s still alive, and she probably is. And ... and she’s Athalia’s daughter.”

Damien and Jessy both raised their eyebrows at that, and the Mekhet leaned forward to rest his elbows on his knees, hands together between them.

“ ... that does complicate things,” he said.

Jessy threw up a hand. “Fucking right it does. Can’t be much of an ambassador for monsters if you go killing their children. And as a right hand, if you do kill her, you won’t just be putting yourself into deep shit, you’ll be taking the Invictus in with you.”

Yeah, what wonderful world. “I’m sure my sire knew, they all must have known, when they gave me the position. So I mean, I guess ... they’re trusting me to figure out a way to kill Angela, or at least deal with her, without bringing down Athalia on our heads?” And he did not, not not not not want that reaper creature slipping under the crack of his door while he slept. Antoinette’s vault was air tight, but still.

“Quite the responsibility,” Damien said. “Or maybe, they don’t expect you to be able to kill her, not now that she’s prepared. Could be they’re putting off dealing with it.”

“And she could be dead,” Jessy said. “Everyone’s convinced she’s still alive, but you said it yourself, she was stabbed and then hit by Beatrice with a car. Besides, I’m betting that the Invictus don’t give two shits what Athalia thinks, aren’t afraid of her, and fully expect you to kill her daughter if the situation presents itself.”

Lot of ifs, lot of unknowns. This was the difference between reality, and the cute little plans he used to make for himself, his safe plans about where his old life was going to take him. Now every night was an unknown, every night was an adventure! Except, unlike most people, Jack was familiar with many logical fallacies, including the survivorship bias fallacy. Adventure sounded great because you heard about it from the survivors. Adventure would be known as a minefield of death and trauma, if the overwhelmingly larger number of victims were ever given chance to voice their experiences. But the dead can't speak.

The Gangrel shrugged, switched which leg was folded over which, and snapped her fingers. "Either way, we keep each other covered now. Buddy system for all movement, except small trips in the center of Invictus territory of course; we're not joined at the hip."

The Mekhet, predictably, groaned. "That's dropped our freedom to go solo from ... the entire city, to a quarter square mile."

"Yeah," she said. "But that's enough room we can still live private lives, right? I mean I know the Cathedral is a ways out, but you shouldn't go there without Maria anymore anyway, not till these hunters are done. And that quarter square mile is in the dead center of the city. Elysium's there, Xnomina's there, hell Bloodlust is there. Oh, speaking of, you boys wanna go? We don't have to do that Avery trip thing till Jack's vacation is over. Could be a nice chance for us to bond."

Were she human, Jack would have found her suggestion a blatant attempt at getting drunk.

"How can you like it there?" he said. "The music alone—"

"Fuck me, man, you don't go to a nightclub for the music. You go to a nightclub for the people. Slip into a booth with a cute guy or girl, be flirtatious, aggressive, but not overbearing or—"

"Yeah, I know. Antoinette's been showing me how to ... bag chicks, I guess?" To speak in a language she would understand. "Not that I'd sleep with them. She'd kill me."

“Right right, you two are all lovey dovey with each other. Ugh, bleh.” She stuck out her tongue, as if romance were swiss chard, before she looked at Damien. “How about you? Rumor has it the priest has never known the touch of a woman.” The animal got up, and slid onto the couch between the two men as she raised an arm up to rest it around Damien’s neck. Poor guy was now trapped in her hug. “You have no idea how much playing hard to get can turn on a girl on. We should get you a ... a uh, that white collar thing priests wear.”

“ ... a clergy collar,” he said.

“Yeah! Girls will be lining up to bag you at just the sight of you.”

“Didn’t you just tell Jack that I should be flirtatious and aggressive if I want too—”

“Dude, no, you’re not getting it. With the priest setup, they come to you, like flies to honey.”

And just like that, it sounded like Jessy had a new goal. Get Damien laid.

---

He still had two hours before sunrise. He’d prefer to spend at least one of that with Antoinette, but his fingers dialed a driver, and he set off toward Julias’s mansion. Damien came with. Vampires were on the buddy system now when leaving the safer areas of the city; which made taking Damien a funny irony that had Jack smirking. Damien smirked too, on more than one occasion. Maybe his new life as a right hand of the Invictus was agreeing with the assassin? Or at least, a score better than hiding in the city bowels for half a century.

“Visiting one of the council, after he’s given us orders? Highly unusual,” Damien said.

“Thought you could use a moment away from Jessie.”

“ ... thank you. But, honestly, I know she’s only trying to help me, and that’s a welcome change.”

The two of them were looking out their respective windows, elbows on the door armrest, chins in their palms. An occasional glance at each other to let the other know they were listening, complete with a small smile or nod. Two introverts communicating. All they needed now was Natasha nodding along and they’d be the smoothest trio of little nods ever.

“She is trying, I guess,” Jack said. “You ever been to Bloodlust? I don’t like it much there either, but it really is a prime place for getting an easy meal.”

“It is frustrating, being a Kindred of the Lancea et Sanctum, taught to steer kine away from sin, and then throwing myself into the center of it for my own needs.”

“I thought the deal with your religion was it’s the kine who needs to not be sinful, and that Kindred were under no such rules?”

“ ... yes, that is true. But, certain dogma is difficult to toss aside. And I would prefer to not encourage sinful ways in kine anyway.”

Jack shrugged, and tapped the armrest with his fingertip a few times. “Dolareido is Slut City, right? Adultery is rampant. But we have a low homicide rate, low assault rate, low ... most of the rates I’d be worried about, legally or religiously.”

“Agreed.”

“Then I suggest you stop sweating the minor stuff, and focus on the big stuff. There are still murderers, rapists, drug dealers peddling to minors, that sort of shit in Dolareido. I’m sure they could use a little fear of God in their lives, right?”

“A valid point. And I have been a bit ... directionless, without Lucas’s shadow haunting me.”

What a horrific way to think of the man who sired you. Julias had been nothing but supportive, instructive, and open-minded with Jack, while Lucas had royally fucked this guy’s head up, to the point he was now paranoid every action he performed was tainted.

“I suggest going to Bloodlust, and giving Jessy’s idea a try,” Jack said. The poor guy groaned, and Jack laughed as he reached across the car backseat to poke the man in the shoulder. “Jessy wasn’t lying, about the hard to get thing. Just sit there, look interesting, maybe look slightly out of place or unique, or even churchy, and some girl’s bound to take an interest.”

“ ... I could do that, I suppose.”

“Or hell, you can try and get Clara interested in you instead of me.”

“Yes, I noticed at the ball that she seems attracted to you. And as an Uratha, she is one of the few who could stand up to Antoinette. Or at least, not die instantly.”

Yeah, Antoinette was crazy strong and deadly when she wanted to be. Part of her charm, when instead of being the all powerful dragon of Dolareido, she was gentle, tender, and loving with him. But he doubted that she’d be so gentle in their next meeting. And that was exciting too; he couldn’t wait.

“Has she actively tried to sabotage your relationship?” Damien said.

“No. Just, made it very clear she likes me.”

“You have a habit of making people like you.”

“Somehow I don’t think I managed to do that with Angela. And I get the impression Garry doesn’t like me either.”

Damien nodded, and opened the car door as it stopped before Julias’s mansion. “He likes very few. But he’s also on your list, isn’t he? To be friends with.”

“Like trying to become friends with a very angry bulldog.”

The Mekhet laughed, or rather, chuckled louder than Damien normally ever did, and joined his side as the two of them walked up the grand walkway to Julias Mire’s massive abode. “Then you need to find bacon.”

Jack rolled his eyes, and knocked. Bacon was a halfway decent metaphor for getting some sort of treat for Garry, to get through that man’s aggressive exterior, his utter hate for the Invictus, and what Jack had noticed was a general dislike for any sort of social posturing. Jack could appreciate that, but trying to sway him would require a lot more than an agreement on how annoying social machinations could be.

“Master Terry?” the doorman said.

“Yes, here to see my sire.”

“Um, yes sir. He was not expecting you.”

Jack shrugged, nodded, and followed the servant in, Damien behind him. “I felt this conversation was best done face-to-face, and with a little touch of surprise.” Not that he could ever get Julias to be surprised, given the man’s penchant for prediction, especially of Jack’s actions. But he could try.

“Ha, yes, very good sir.”

The three walked along one of the rustic hallways, until the servant opened the door to usher them into one of the mansion's many meeting rooms. Which was kind of weird, actually, considering Julias didn't usually—

Julias, Jennifer, and Beatrice all raised their heads as he stepped in. The three of them were sitting at a table, and playing poker, but for some reason Triss wasn't wearing her shoes, or her socks, or pants. A double take showed the Nosferatu was wearing nothing but a thong and a tank top. At least Julias and Jennifer were still clothed, other than suit jackets tossed aside, and Jennifer missing her shoes as well. She looked good in the skirt and white shirt though, especially with only the one button done so he could see her sternum, lack of bra, and inside contours of her large breasts. Damn she was sexy.

Damien stepped in, looked at three of them, and facepalmed. "Slut city," he whispered to Jack.

"I wasn't expecting you," Julias said, eyebrow raised. "Actually, I figured you'd be at the Prince's, enjoying your vacation." The man looked past Jack to the servant who let them in, frowned at him, and the kine hid a grin as he speed-walked away. Good relations with the boss, maybe?

"I wasn't expecting you to have company. Um, hello Jen, Triss."

"Hello little Ventrue." Jen grinned at him as she leaned onto her elbows, and set her chin onto the back of her hands. Flirtatious did not begin to describe the look she had in her eye. "And hello to you too Damien."

The Mekhet offered a slow nod. He wasn't as shy as Jack used to be, but the man was clearly uncomfortable with looking at Jen, and how her breasts were nearly hanging out. Beatrice's warrior ass in a thong didn't help either.

“God damn it Jack,” Triss said, turned in her chair and elbow on its back. “Are you fucking Ventrue all experts at poker? This is fucking ridiculous. I can’t get anywhere with these bastards.”

He smirked at his sire, who returned the smirk. “I’m horrible at it. But, Julias is trying to teach me. I don’t envy you, playing against him.”

“Then maybe you and the Prince should play with us and take some of the heat off of me.”

“Strip poker,” he said, chuckling. They were playing strip poker. His sire, a hundred-year-old vampire, his lover, and his lover’s friend, were playing strip poker. Hunters at the door, monsters and werewolves ready to turn the city upside down if it got in the way of their goals, the city nearly in a state of martial law for paranormals, and they were playing strip poker.

Part of him thought he should have been angry they weren’t taking the threat more seriously. The threat had nearly killed him, killed Barry, and everything was going to cascade into a city version of a brushfire if they didn’t keep it under control. And they were relaxing.

It was a good life lesson. Learn to relax every now and then, or the weight of everything was bound to crush you. At least he hoped that was the lesson.

“I wanted to talk about Angela,” he said.

“Athalia’s daughter.” Triss got up, walked over to the couch in the very fancy, austere living room, grabbed her dark jeans, and slipped them on. Everyone in the room watched her force her toned, curvy, hard legs and ass into the jeans, but Jack noticed Jen staring a bit harder than the rest of them. Something happened there.

“Athalia mentioned you knew,” he said.

“Yeah, Eric and I overheard when we were in that fucking nightmare world. How did you hear? I assume Julias told you.”

“I had not, actually.” Julias sighed, leaned back in his chair, and put the cards down. “I knew Athalia would tell him though.”

Ah, yeah, that made sense. Man was good at predicting everything, damn it.

“Why didn’t you mention something during the meeting, sire? Or, you know, before I went to visit Azamel?” Maybe calling him sire was a bit too formal, considering the company. And maybe it was a bad question to ask, considering the company.

“Should we go?” Jennifer said, reading his mind.

Julias shook his head. “No, we’re all in this together, dealing with these hunters.”

Jen nodded, but when Triss sat down on the couch, she came over to join her, making room for Damien and Jack to sit down in their places at the table with the man of the mansion. It also got Jen closer to Triss, a lot closer, legs touching. Something had definitely happened; he could ask about it later. For now, he took a seat at the table, and Damien followed.

“She’s Athalia’s daughter,” Jack said again, “and everyone’s convinced she’s still alive, so I guess I should follow suit. And you guys ... you didn’t see how that conversation with Athalia went tonight. She doesn’t want her daughter to die.”

“She doesn’t get a say in the matter.” His sire steeled his face, a subtle frown not unlike Viktor’s, and he leaned back in his chair as he netted his fingers together on his stomach. “Angela’s not only a hunter, she’s an adult. Spare her no mercy. Catch her unawares? Kill her. I didn’t give you a heads up because Athalia’s relation to or thoughts on the situation are irrelevant.”

He winced, and shivered. “You haven’t seen her, Julias. You haven’t seen what Athalia is ... like, a fucking...” How could he get across that monster? “Like an angel of fucking death, Julias. And she ... she can get anywhere she wants to go. If we kill her daughter, and she can’t handle it, she’s going to take it out on us.”

Triss clicked a claw against one of her crocodile teeth a couple times, loud enough for everyone to look her way. “Kid’s right. I’ve seen all four of the Begotten, seen what those monsters look like, and Athalia? She’s ... like an angry dead god climbing out of a grave.”

Jack nodded. That was as good a description as any. He could see it too, the enormous bones pulling the colossal skeleton torso out of the ground, leaving its legs behind. It didn’t need them.

“Jeremiah stood his ground against them, and he’s human.” Julias did not look convinced.

“ ... Angela didn’t feel entirely human.” Sighing, Jack looked down at the table, and scratched his fingers along his scalp a few times. “I’m guessing Jeremiah is similar. Azamel thinks so too. Angela ... she felt like something more than human.”

“I’m less worried about Athalia though,” Triss said, “than I am Azamel. Did you see her Jack?”

He twitched, and looked at Triss. She looked spooked. He must have looked terrified then, in comparison.

“Yeah ... she was there ... The meeting we had was in the nightmare.”

“Then I don’t envy you. I only got a glimpse of her monster, or horror or whatever, and ... fucking hell.”

“Then the question,” Damien said, “if Azamel is our biggest concern, is if she’ll go on the rampage for Athalia, if and when we kill Angela.”

Jennifer raised a hand. “Um, correct me if I’m missing something, but aren’t a bunch of you friends with Fiona? Why not convince her to help you?”

Jack, Triss, and Damien all winced.

“I ... I’ll ... talk to her,” Jack said. “Just ... we—”

“Fiona is probably the nicest person in the city,” Damien said. “We don’t want to throw her under the bus.”

“I remember when you brought her before the Primogen, Jack,” Julius said. “And she did seem like a nice girl, a very nice girl. But, Jennifer’s right. We need a way to deal with these Begotten that doesn’t result in a repeat of last time, but we can’t let Angela live if we get the chance to kill her.” The strongest Ventrue in Dolareido leaned forward, set his elbows on the table, and looked at Jack and Damien with harder eyes than Jack was used to. “I trust you two and Jessy to handle the situation as you see fit, but you Jack, are to do everything you can to keep the peace between Begotten, Kindred, and Uratha. Understood?”

“Understood.” If there was one way he was going to die ... well, this dilemma had a million ways to get him killed. One was bound to get him.

Part 5

Chapter 55

~~Welcome to the world of Vampire: the Requiem~~

~~One week later~~

~~Jack~~

Avery could wait a little while. Everything could wait a little while. He needed a vacation, and god damn it, he deserved it.

He spent the next week doing one thing: spending more time with the Prince of Dolareido. Every night had included sex, but since he was sleeping at her place now, and on vacation, every night now also included time to chat. Sit around and talk about music and movies and stories and whatnot, was a luxury he realized she probably rarely had with other Kindred. The only vampire she'd get to talk to so easily and frequently was Daniel or Natasha, especially now that Natasha was also staying at the Elysium tower. But he doubted talking to those two was terribly satisfying. With him though, he could see, she wanted to talk more, and more.

Now, spending day after day in bed together, Antoinette had time to chat with him before dusk and after dawn, those twenty or thirty minutes she spent getting dressed and doing her make-up, time they could talk. They could get a lot of talking in when they were around each other for the minutiae of everyday stuff. And when she was upstairs, either higher in the basement, in her research alcoves doing god knows what, or higher again up in the tower, doing Princely things, he spent his time relaxing, reading, listening to music, swimming, and other recreation activities her surprisingly robust underground fortress provided. She still had a dozen enormous rooms down here he hadn't even seen yet. But they could wait. Right now, his mind was on the woman on top of him.

Antoinette sighed, a long, satisfied sigh, and lowered herself back onto him. Softness. Weight. The best place in the world, underneath Antoinette's breasts. She was riding him, milking him, his cum pouring into her insides as she squeezed his length. Her juices coated him, bathed him in the heavenly heat, until his white, thick fluids were flowing back down his length. And as his orgasm turned him into a shivering, relaxed, defeated noodle of a man, Antoinette rested her breasts on his lips, bending over so her nipples grazed along his chin and nose. At least until he opened his mouth, and began to suckle on one of them.

She shivered, smiled down at him, and set one hand on his head to lightly tease and stroke his buzzed hair while he kissed her swollen, puffy, pink areola.

“My sweet little Ventrue, and now one of the right hands of the Invictus. I admit, I did not expect this, but I should have. Julius knows of your true accomplishments, and I am sure he would have found a way to reward you for them.” Slowly, with a teasing twist of her hips, she slid herself up and off of his shaft, and sat upon his pelvis. His softening member dripped of their fluids, warm, inviting him to melt beneath her breasts and into the blankets of her bed.

His boss knowing about Lucas, Viktor, and Tony was a feather in his cap, that was for sure. Not necessarily a good feather though, more like an albatross feather, since all these fucking insanities kept falling into his lap, and he kept having to claw his way out from under them.

“I can see that look in your eye, a look of worry.” She tapped a finger on his forehead, drew lines he couldn't see, and started to caress his head once more. God yes, fingers pushing against the grain of his eternally buzzed hair was euphoric, forcing him to melt and succumb to her touch.

His lips drifted away from her nipple, and planted kisses along her breast's underside, causing its size to spill over his nose and upper half of his face, hiding his forehead. But, she could still caress his hair, and she did as she offered him quiet little, husky mewls and chuckles, while he planted another kiss, and another along the heavy, soft skin of where her breasts met her ribs.

“It’s a big responsibility,” he said. “And I ... I’m never comfortable with new things. I like to research things to death before I put my feet in.”

“Admirable, but paralyzing. You will forever be more intelligent than others, and yet forever denying yourself the joys others find by trying new things at the whim of the moment. You must learn to be comfortable with being uncomfortable, my love.” She adjusted her torso angle so his face slipped between her breasts, and she slid back her knees so she could lay on him and bury him with her body. A kiss. Another kiss. She grinned a devil’s grin as she pecked him on the nose a few times, all while one of her hands continued to massage his scalp and play with his hair, elbows to the sheets.

“I think I’ve heard that expression before.”

“No doubt.”

“I think the dude was trying to explain the psychological benefits of cold showers.”

Antoinette shivered and shook her head. “Non merci. Without the subtle, blissful sting of a hot water, I fear I would never touch a shower again.”

The Prince of Dolareido did not like cold showers? Too cute. He laughed, and she caught his lips between a finger and thumb with her free hand.

“I uh, well we are vampires,” he said, voice mumbling through her grip on his lips. “We don’t really need to shower.” No body odor issues, and any grime and build up of crap sort of just fell off as a Kindred slept. Unless they were blushing life, they had no skin oil or anything. Maybe they shed a layer of their skin off as ash at night?

Antoinette slipped her hands down to his, netted her fingers with his, and raised his hands until they were pinned against the sheets by his head, over it. With a warm laugh, she set her lips to his neck, and continued to kiss him, slow, tender, her long white hair tickling over his chin and lips as she gently slid her roaming mouth from one end of the collar bone to the other. Lying on him like this, her breasts squished to his chest and out to the sides, like big pillows. And her feet reached far past his own, her knees along the outside of his shins and pressing his legs together.

“All Kindred are to now keep a partner with them, whenever moving through areas not directly next to their headquarters,” she said, nudging her nose into his chin. “I trust you will move with your fellow right hands mostly?”

“Yeah. Maybe Amanda too.” Take another sneak peek at his mom and sister again, maybe? Last he checked, they were doing a lot better. His mom was exercising a lot, getting back into shape, maybe trying to reboot her life. Good for her, and good for him. A little less guilt on his shoulders.

“And, it may be to your interest, that I have reports showing the witch Jennifer joining Beatrice and your sire Julias more often.”

“Are you spying on everyone?” he said, smirking up at the ceiling as she brought her lips to his jugular.

“Of course.”

“Understandable.”

“And, perhaps more interestingly, I have reports that the three have been seen at Bloodlust on a couple of occasions. To my surprise, the video footage showed your sire having sex with both women, and they each other.”

Well, damn. He knew there was something going on, considering how much Jen seemed to be on Triss, when he stumbled in on them playing strip poker. He hadn't really thought much of it beyond vamps being vamps though. He chuckled a little as he thought about Julias, caught between Triss and her twin. Same facial shape, same hair, same height, but Triss had the ass, Jen had the breasts.

Ugh, breaking women down into their body parts. He was hanging around Jessy too much; cause the job demanded it, not because he wanted to. Damn woman sexually objectified everyone, guys and girls alike, and sometimes Jack found himself getting drawn into her very 'bro' conversations. It was innocent good fun, and Jessy never let it actually affect how she treated people, but still.

Wait.

“Antoinette, you wouldn't be trying to gossip with me about what other people are doing, would you?”

She raised her head up and looked down at him, one eye slightly squinted, and a devious little grin on her lips. “Of course not, darling. I am the Prince of a city of millions. I am above gossip.”

“Uh huh.”

“I am merely sharing information I think would be of import to my lover, and now an influential member of Kindred society.” She kissed his forehead again, before she sat up, slid off of him, sat beside him, and caressed his abs with her fingernails. “And besides, if those three feel comfortable engaging in intercourse in public, then I am afraid they have forfeited their right to my silence.”

“Ah, true, very true.” Her argument was too precious, eloquent, but really a smokescreen for the excuse to gossip. “Then by all means, my Prince, what else have those three been up to?”

She chuckled as she smiled at him, her one hand continuing to trace his muscles, while her other tickled between her breasts before drifting underneath one to caress its underside; purely for his visual benefit, surely. “On two separate occasions this week, those three have enjoyed relations at Bloodlust. The video footage showed a rather ... interesting equilibrium between them. Kissing, each of the three, with each other.”

He raised a brow. That was a little weird, actually. He never kissed Antoinette’s ghouls, and since Antoinette and he had become lovers, she hadn’t kissed them either. It’d be too powerful a gesture for who were ultimately guests in the bed.

“Can’t see myself kissing anyone but you,” he said, one hand setting on her leg and stroking her quad.

“And I you, my little Ventrue. But I am glad you are comfortable with sharing a taste of our love with my pets.” She slid off the bed, walked toward her wardrobe, and of course he watched every second of it. That nice, big round ass swaying as she walked, her long white hair nudging against its curves, and the sides of her breasts visible from behind when she raised her elbows as she combed back her hair with her fingers. So beautiful.

She was such a unique person. Slim but curvy, buxom and tall, all traits he thought were beautiful and alluring, but they weren’t what made these conversations so intriguing, or what made her so unique and interesting. He wanted to know more, dig into her, find out why she thought the way she did, acted the way she did, why he was the sort of man she wanted to be with. It was hard, and made the relationship strangely one-sided in certain ways. All his memories were very much intact, while hers were wisps on wind.

But, even if they were wisps, subjected to years of fading and alteration, he still wanted to know them.

“You have any more memories of when you were younger, and ... I don’t know, discovering all the sexual freedom you had? That majesty discipline is a recipe for orgies.” They’d just had sex, so of course, he had to ask about sex.

His words yanked a surprised laugh out of her, and she brought a hand up to her lips to try and disguise it as she opened the wardrobe against the black marble wall, and retrieved a white robe, fluffy and furry.

“You truly wish to hear such tales? You are a man; I thought perhaps you would find such stories to make you jealous, other men and women with their hands upon me.”

The woman had been alone for so long, thanks to her crash-and-burn relationship with her childe Tony. To know that he managed to rekindle her desire for love, and better yet, find himself in the best relationship ever? How could he be jealous of a memory? He shrugged at her, rolled onto his side, and watched her as she sat down, and started to brush her hair.

“Hit me.”

“Then, I will need a moment to ponder. Digging through the haze is difficult, even for a dragon such as I.” She brushed the long waves of white over her shoulders, again and again, flowing strands reaching down and down the stool she sat on, in front of a rather grandiose mirror with a black, curving frame. It was hard for elders to piece together their older memories, and for one as old as her, it must have been like playing archaeologist in the dark. “Once ... I could not have reached my elders year by then, but I was strong for my age, as you are, and gifted in the ways of majesty. I owned a castle, I believe, something that overlooked a cliff’s edge and faced the ocean. I remember ... a young woman, perhaps eighteen years of age. A sickly creature, and one that had scaled my walls, to hunt for food to steal from me.

“She found my inner sanctum, where I drank, where I laid with my many servants and meals. Upon realizing she was surrounded by a dozen men, and that I was a vampire, the queen of the castle, and lord of the estate, she ran. But my servants captured her, and brought her before me.” She stopped combing her hair, and stared into the mirror, as if entranced by a campfire. “She was short, with red hair and a splatter of freckles across the nose. And her eyes, green like yours, pierced my soul. She was afraid, and yet, determined. She fought and fought, despite the frailty of her body and need for food.

“I brought her food. Water, bread, meat, fruit and vegetables, that which I fed my finest servants. I, naked and sitting in my throne, told her to sit next to me, and eat of the dish held before her by one of my thralls. And as she did, devouring the food with terrible fervor, I asked for her name.” She lifted the brush in front of her, but invisible strings trapped it, forcing it back down to the mirror’s desk as she stared into it. “For the life of me, I cannot remember it. But, I can remember her voice, a charming, squeaky little voice. I remember the sight of her, her fear of me, her panic, but also her euphoria when given a meal. And as she ate enough food for three, I motioned for my harem to continue their love making. Soft fabrics, black silk upon furs, mountains of blankets, and wine, endless wine. Over a dozen men, and over a dozen women, with their hands and lips upon each other’s bodies. In the center of the room, three men indulged themselves with one woman, filling her in every way, and drawing endless moans from her white-coated body.

“The young intruder asked if she could stay. If it was the food, a roof over her head, or the sexuality on display that seduced her, I was not sure. I looked at her, her meal gone, her eyes locked onto the bliss before her, and I smiled. She was the first kine I had ever enthralled, without breaking her mind with majesty or forcing a taste of my blood upon her. Over the next two weeks, she never left my castle, and followed me everywhere. Questions, she had so many questions ... I cannot recall them. But I can remember the pitch of her mouse-like voice, and the smell of her as she bathed. The first few times I had joined my harem, and let them shower me in pleasure, she had watched on, terrified to say anything or join in. And yet, she was hypnotized by the sight of flesh. The small woman could not look away as, while one woman kissed and filled my sex with fingers, another woman massaged my breasts, and each male thrall in my employ ... at least twenty, each two at a time, coated my breasts in their seed.

“Perhaps I broke her with the delights I showed. Perhaps her old life was too great a burden to bear, or pain to experience. But, with her eyes gazing upon my naked body, she asked me if she could stay with me, for forever. I let her taste of my blood, my will and strength infused into it, and invited her into my bed before the dawn. I taught her young body of pleasure she had never known, the same night she became my ghoul. I had had ghouls before, I believe ... but, never had I ... such a relationship with one. Ghouls before her were tools. This ghoul, was both my pet, and my friend.

“The next night, she was the center of attention. Lean, fit, strong, and now nourished, she sat before me, and lay upon the black silk of my inner sanctum as each thrall spent time pleasuring her, helped her drink wine, the women filling her with fingers, suckling her sex with their lips, and massaging her small breasts, as each man covered her in white. I knew she had fantasized about the experience after watching me, and I let her drown in the fantasy, in sex and sin. And when I thought she was spent, she held up her hands for me. I came to her, straddled her, pressed my breasts upon her cum-soaked chest, and kissed her. I can remember the taste of semen on her lips, from when some of the men had slipped their cocks into her mouth at various points, men she had happily pleased to orgasm. I can remember the feel of her small body clenching in another orgasm, as I fingered her insides, while the women at my service massaged and caressed her limbs.

“ ... I ... cannot remember what happened to her, Jack. Of her own choice, she had become my ghoul, joined me in many years of decadence and lust, but also, served as a willing ear and joyful voice. A companion.”

Jack gulped, and blinked a few times as he stared at the woman in front of the mirror. The image she painted was a pretty awesome one, erotically, but also, moving. Girl stumbles into a vampire's home, and instead of being turned into a meal, finds a friend and a new life. On top of that, finds a new taste in extreme eroticism.

And Antoinette couldn't remember her name, or what happened to her. God that must have sucked.

“It sounds like a fairytale.” He got up, walked over to her, stood behind her, and started brushing her hair as he smiled at her in the mirror.

She returned the grin, and got comfy in her stool as she watched him brush her hair for her. “I was young. Indulging in fairy tales, both grim and enchanting, is a guilty pleasure for many Kindred in their ancilla years. The power to make your desires become reality enters your grasp, and suddenly, what were once silly fantasies become solid, obtainable.”

“I have to admit, if I could do it, I'd be pretty tempted to be having orgies every night too.”

She rolled her eyes, and leaned in closer to the mirror as she started adjusting her makeup, reapplying foundation or washing it off first with a small washcloth depending on where she deemed it necessary. Or at least, that's what he figured she was doing. The art of makeup was well beyond him. Mascara, eyeliner, lipstick, blush, concealer, it was like watching a crazy genius chemist juggling two hundred chemicals at once; and she had two hundred things on the desk, little bottles and brushes and such.

At least as a vampire, the skin was easier to work with and manage, according to her. Without it, he could see the subtle lines of a thirty-year-old woman, beautiful and real, but Antoinette liked covering them. Putting on her mask, she said. Julias said everyone had a mask, and with women, it just happened to include an actual one.

“As a Ventrue, your abilities capable of manipulating minds are a little more direct, my love. Bending the will of an individual, or a small group, is where your talents are best served. Daeva are the masters of majesty, to enthrall entire concerts of people, have them eating out of our hands and begging for our attention.”

“I’ve seen Julias dominate some people, and have them enthralled like they were under majesty.”

“Your sire is quite skilled, and has found ways to manipulate the minds of kine in subtle ways, to mimic majesty.”

Maybe he could learn to do that some day, handle the discipline dominate with more finesse and accuracy, instead of the brutal, overpowering hammer he felt it as.

“You ever wish you could see her again?” he said. “Your ghoul.”

“I am not sure. Much has changed. And I am sure Ashley and Julee would be jealous, when ... when ... she, would inevitably recount the tales of our youth, of the swaths of men and women we’d share our bed with. They would fear her taking me away from them.”

“I don’t think they’d be that jealous. And, I have to admit, imagining you and a young woman, in the center of a giant orgy, is a pretty hot image. I prefer what we have now, but just, in my mind, the mental image? Scandalous.” He came in closer, leaned in, and set his lips against the back of her head to kiss her hair as he put the brush down. Arms free, they drifted down over her shoulders, and down the open chest of her robe. She only had it done loosely with its belt, so pulling the chest open and down to expose her breasts was easy. She didn’t stop him either, chuckling as she continued to put on her makeup, while he started to caress her breasts again.

Sometimes he wondered if Antoinette had as large a sex drive as him. He spent at least half the night thinking about being between her thighs or breasts, and as he grew more comfortable with his vampire body, he was finding himself able to cum two or three times every session easily. Sometimes four. And now that he was sleeping in her tower, it was him often initiating sex. Bed time? He started kissing her breasts, and a minute later, had his cock inside her. Wake up time? He hugged her from behind, and started fingering her. A moment between her meetings in the middle of the night? Perfect time to get his head between her legs.

A tiny little voice in his head told him he might have been starting to annoy her with the constant sex, like a needy, hungry kitten. But then she told him this story, a long tale, detailing the sexual nature of Antoinette’s ancilla years. She made his constant seeking of sex seem tame in comparison.

“You do not understand the realities of such things, little Ventrue. Forty bodies in the same room? Legs, arms, heat, the body odor and other natural bodily functions of the living, they all provide frustrating nuance to organizing an orgy.”

“Yeah, but, imagining you, and these,” he squeezed her breasts softly, so they spilled over his fingers, “rubbing on your friend’s body, after a dozen guys came on her?” He shivered with the image, and shivered again as he started to gently slide his hands down Antoinette’s breasts to cup their undersides near her ribs, before drawing them up again, so her nipples slid back along his fingers.

And then back and forth again, all while Antoinette continued to prepare herself for the night. Maybe he could cum on Ashley or Julee's breasts a couple times, and see if Antoinette would remake the image in the story? He smiled at the thought.

To fondle and massage his girlfriend's breasts while she did her makeup, was a strange fantasy he didn't know he had. Something about the way she was perfectly comfortable with his touch, and perfectly comfortable to let him watch her in the mirror as she did her makeup, was both comforting and arousing. Intimacy made manifest, maybe? Whatever it was, it made him almost giddy as he leaned in closer, set his chin on her shoulder, and watched her touch up her mascara as he fondled her tits.

"Perhaps I should buy some pillows made to feel like breasts? There are materials that simulate the feeling decently well," she said.

"No no, that's not the same! These are attached to the most amazing woman ever."

"Yes, I suppose they are." With a long, playful sigh, she got up, and walked him back to the bed. "Very well, you may indulge yourself upon them again, little rascal. Quickly now, I must leave in ten minutes."

Ten-minute quick tit fuck? God yes.

---

---

~~Natasha~~

Everything changed, now that the hunters had exposed themselves.

Antoinette warned her that, now that Natasha would be sleeping in her tower, she would also be running into Jack far more often, since he too would be sleeping in her tower. Nothing wrong with that, being friends with Jack and all. The Prince had also warned her that, to celebrate Jack's new sleeping arrangements, and Jack's safe return, Antoinette would be making love to her 'little Ventrue' on a frequent basis. Natasha was invited to watch, whenever she wanted, if she found the two of them having sex outside the Prince's master bedroom. Maybe a bit too awkward for Natasha.

But for all the sex, Antoinette wasn't relaxing. If anything, the Prince was upset with herself for letting the city get as dangerous as it had become. In a single year, the balance had been upset in such massive, weird ways, that no one could have possibly expected her to be able to manage it all. The Prince expected it of herself though, a perfectionist to her core. Natasha was glad to be working for her again, especially now that Tash was an older, more mature Kindred, than when she was the freshly embraced child of the sheriff. Back then the Prince scared her, and her Ordo Dracul experiments had terrified her.

The Prince had now increased Tash's goals. Natasha was still to seek knowledge about the Begotten and their weaknesses, and also join Antoinette in her experiments involving reaching to the 'other side'. She was, as of now, also to help Daniel with investigating both the hunters, and the disturbance Clara warned Antoinette about, that someone was fucking with 'the other side'. Lot of things, a lot lot lot of things. She had her work cut out for her.

Some days would be spent dealing with her collection of occult objects, testing them against the Prince's strange tools, and seeing which items triggered effects. Nightmare fuel, seeing ghostly after images. But, also, they were damn fascinating, and Natasha could completely understand the Prince's infatuation with them. And Safe, a creature from another realm, summoned? Fascinating didn't begin to describe that.

She walked down the stairs of Antoinette's tower, its inner depths, and made for her new bedroom. Tomorrow night would be a night for dealing with those occult things, and she both shivered and smiled in anticipation. Would they see a memory, a horrible memory, a murder from the past, echoed before them? Or would they try and see if they could summon a new spirit from the other side? They—

Moans. Natasha froze, and looked over at the hallway in the black marble beside her. Her bedroom was down there, but just past the hallway, only ten feet in front of her, was another opening in the walls of shiny black. One of Antoinette's many, many living rooms, filled with couches, fancy tables, some with chandeliers, others with actual working fountains, and others with musical instruments and acoustic panels, for Antoinette to play in. The room she was hearing the moans from was one with a dragon fountain in the back, and several backless couches and short tables. A great place for sitting around and chatting.

From the sounds, Antoinette was having sex. Julee and Ashley were still out of commission, far as Natasha knew, from a recent feeding for Jack, which meant it was only the two vampires in the room. Natasha smiled to herself, and moved down the hallway toward her bedroom.

And then walked backward a few steps, and put her back to the wall that led toward the guilty entryway, the one making noises. A little peek? Just a little one? Antoinette said it'd be fine, and there was a good chance Antoinette knew she was just around the corner anyway; moans were still going though, so even if she knew, she wasn't stopping.

Caught between a grin and shivering parted lips, she sneaked her way toward the entryway, and inched her head out just enough to get one eye a view of the room.

The lighting was low, all the LEDs set to gently pulse on a soft amber, as if a setting sun was gently rolling past the clouds. The dragon fountain in the back of the large room had its eyes turned on as well, LED eyes, and they glowed red. She also had the LEDs in the actual fountain pool around the dragon set to red, so their red light shined up against the black marble cracked with white lightning. So beautiful, so utterly beautiful.

Jack was on one of the center, backless couches, lying down, legs dangling off the couch at the knee. His head was to Natasha, legs away from her, so unless he leaned his head back really far, he wouldn't be able to see her. Antoinette, on the other hand, was sitting on the boy's waist—no, wait, sitting on his pelvis, and she was facing him, and Natasha. She was having sex with Jack, had Jack inside her, and she was looking down at him from her perch on top of him.

The Prince took a quick glance at Natasha, and offered her a small, welcoming smile. She didn't have to say it, she didn't mind if Natasha wanted to watch. And Natasha didn't have a choice in the matter anymore, as her body froze, unable to move, eyes locked onto the sight of the Prince, nude, and her gentle, rocking motion on Jack's body.

It was one thing to see Antoinette wearing skimpy outfits that showed off her body to the point nothing was left to the imagination, and another to actually see her naked. How did a woman with a slim waist have such wide hips and such enormous breasts? It defied logic! And, it was hypnotizing, bewitching Natasha, paralyzing her.

It took Natasha a moment to realize there was something on Antoinette's breasts. Some liquid, thick, and—cum, her breasts were covered in it. Natasha raised a hand to her lip, and nibbled on her finger as she watched the curvy woman gently ride Jack, her hands pressing down against the boy's chest, and using the sides of her arms to press her cum-soaked breasts together.

Antoinette wasn't just fucking Jack, she was showing off! Just like Jessy would, Antoinette sat up straight, lifted her hands, and raised them up to her hair. Still rocking her hips back and forth, the tall vixen combed her hair back with her fingers, elbows up, chest jutting out and breasts lightly jiggling with her motions. So huge, so utterly huge, they turned into heavy teardrops that squished and spread against her chest and ribs, but pulled up slightly by her raised arms. Fashion model pose, and she held it with a smile as she fucked her love.

When Jessy did it, it seemed silly and obnoxious. When Antoinette did it, it seemed glorious and awe inspiring.

Jack raised his hands from her legs where her knees were snug against his sides, caressed her hips, caressed her waist, and brought his hands up to her breasts. But, instead of grabbing them, squeezing, all the things Natasha expected of young men who had no sense of delicacy, Jack's touch was tender, loving, and his fingertips found her large, swollen nipples. They traced lines through his cum, spreading it along the outside and underside of each breast, which had Natasha's whole body singing with excitement. A boy, young man, running his fingers through his own cum, on the woman's skin? Hot. Hot hot.

When Jack's fingers found Antoinette's nipples again, and began to caress them, Antoinette moaned. Antoinette, moaning, with a hint of a whimper and mewl. The other moans before had been quiet, little things, and only now did Natasha realize they were all Jack's. Antoinette's moans were also subtle, but god damn they were enticing, majestic, royal. Showing off in so many ways, just like Jessy did, but she was so much better at it.

Maybe ... maybe she should try that too? A little? Natasha struggled to picture herself performing such an erotic display with her boyfriends, but the more she watched, the more she wanted to try.

Jack's cum faded away, like all Kindred fluids did, and once it was gone, Antoinette lowered her hands, took his, netted their fingers together, and pinned them down above his head into the couch. So much taller than Jack, pinning his hands down like that caused her heavy breasts to pull down and sway over his face. She lowered herself a little further, until one of them was set on the boy's chin and lips, its size spilling over onto his neck and shoulder. And, once the boy opened his mouth and began to suckle on her, her moans returned, a little louder than before. She really loved having her nipples kissed and licked.

Antoinette offered Natasha occasional glances, tiny things, only enough to let Natasha know Antoinette knew she was still watching. The Prince wasn't showing off for her though, she was showing off for Jack; and showing off agreed with her. She was rocking her body back and forth on Jack's body, smiling down at her little lover like he was the most precious thing in the world to her, and she was loving it.

She came. Her moans came to a stop, and her rocking motion slowed down as well. Eyes half-closed, she still managed to glance Natasha's way, and smiled as she milked her own orgasm. Jack's suckling seemed to grow gentler, but it was hard to tell from where Natasha was watching. They must have, as his lips drifted away from her nipple, and started to plant kisses along the inner contours of Antoinette's other breast. Hands pinned, he only had so much access to move, but he worked with what he had, and kissed a little in one spot, then another, and then another, all avoiding the Prince's nipples as she came. Too sensitive, maybe?

Ok, you just watched your boss, and the Prince of Dolareido, enjoy an orgasm from having her nipple suckled during some rather romantic, slow cowgirl action. That's enough barrier breaking for tonight. Natasha turned to slip away, but, for some reason, raised a hand and offered Antoinette a tiny finger wave as well.

Antoinette pouted. Oh good god she pouted, an actual pout. Antoinette did not pout. The Prince of Dolareido did not pout! But, she offered Tash a small pout, before she slipped in a sly, quick wink, and looked back down at her lover. She started rocking again, faster this time. Queue for Tash to leave before she got hypnotized again.

The little Mekhet forced herself away from the beautiful display, and went to her room.

---

The next night, Natasha was already in the primary research room when Antoinette came to join her. They were going to spend the next eight-ish hours researching the occult, and seeing what sort of things Antoinette's machine could summon. That was the plan anyway, but as Antoinette stepped in, all Natasha could think about was the beautiful woman, naked and having marvelous sex with her love Jack. If Tash could paint, she'd be painting that scene right now.

"I um ... I... , " she said. Stuttered. It was hard to look Antoinette in the eye anymore, and it wasn't easy to begin with. "I saw you."

"Of course, my dear. You may have noticed I saw you as well." She chuckled, hand raised to touch her grin with her fingertip. "Did you enjoy watching Jack and I make love?"

Make love, oh! It was so romantic, it made her tiny dead heart want to flutter. And then slap herself for being so silly.

"Y-You're really comfortable, being watched ... aren't you?"

"Of course. Dear, when I was your age, to indulge in feasts of a dozen bodies at once, sex and blood and semen, with more kine besides to watch, was a normal activity. I am afraid such memories are blurred, most but a haze, a fog I cannot grasp no matter how hard I try. But I know they are there.” She slid into a chair at the large table covered in occult goods, and pulled over her laptop.

“Um, is ... is it a D-Daeva thing?” Mekhet were secretive by nature. Daeva were passionate by nature. It generally meant that Mekhet were anti-social and that Daeva were very social, but not always.

“Perhaps. It is certainly easier for Daeva to indulge in erotic play with kine. But to say that to find joy in being watched, as others admire you, your movement, your sounds, your beauty, as you milk another of his bliss?” The woman leaned forward with a slow, almost seductive motion, set her elbows on the table, and winked at her. “Do you not enjoy the eyes of your wolves?”

“I uh, I can’t really tell? They’re normally all over me, and p-pinning down, and before I know it, I have things ... inside me. I try to see, but they ... they’re ... they’re really good, and my eyes close and I can’t stop...” Can’t stop cumming.

“I am sure they would let you have a little more control, Natasha, a little more time to indulge in their gaze, if you ask them.”

“I know, I-I just ... not sure I could ... handle being the center of attention like that.”

The tall Daeva chuckled, a warm and lustrous sound, before she leaned back, opened her laptop, and starting clicking and type. They’d just imported a new piece that looked like it was from ancient Mesopotamia, some sort of necklace. The string on it should have decomposed by now, but it hadn’t, and some weird, small, smooth black rocks were dangling from it, looped in string. Metallurgical analysis came up with nothing.

“ ... H ... How, um, would ... would you go about ... b-being the center of attention, like that?”

“My dear Natasha, are you interested to know the ways in which I seduce my little Ventrue?”

“ ... y-yes.” Natasha pushed her laptop aside, and nodded as matter-of-factly as she could, considering the topic. But the topic was far too silly for her to stop grinning, like they were exchanging naughty secrets. Which they kind of were, except the only one who still thought of these things as secrets was Natasha.

“As much as I could offer suggestions for clothes, or ways to flirt, ways to drive the men wild and turn them into helpless pups in the palm of your hand, it truly only takes a word. I ask my love to sit for me ... which, I suppose, would be an apt request for your two canine bed fellows.” The Daeva smiled, bordered on a chuckle, and continued to type on the laptop. But her attention was mostly on Natasha now, with only the occasional glance at the screen. Natasha couldn't see what she was working on, sitting on the opposite side of the table, but it was probably the same information dumps about the Mesopotamia era that Natasha was looking at.

But sex was more interesting!

“You think if I t-t-tell them to sit, they'll ... sit?”

“Of course.”

“B-But there's two of them! And they're ... so much stronger than me.”

“Far be it from me to encourage abuse of the genders, sweet Natasha, but you are a woman, and there are ... perks, to being a woman in a sexual relationship with men.”

“P-Perks?”

“Ben oui. A little word, a petite smile, a quiet hush, and a devious grin, is all it takes to turn most men into love slaves, Miss Vola.

Even older men, familiar with the back and forth of sexual energies, the game of flirtation, will find themselves drawn toward a woman with hungry eyes and a knowing smile. Simply letting the two boys know that you wish to have sex with them will have them mad with desire, but doing it in a more controlled, tempered, playful fashion, will have them eating out of your hand.”

Natasha wasn't sure if Antoinette kept slipping in references that could be used for men or dogs on purpose, but it was making her giggle anyway.

“H-How would I—”

“Just say the word, to sit, and then ask — or perhaps tell — them to hold still. Smile as you instruct them, bat your eyelashes, show them bits of your body, expose your breasts, your sex, hypnotize them, and then order them.”

“ ... th-that's all?”

“Mmhm. The more you practice, the better you will become at seduction. Though with you, I get the impression this is purely an experiment, and that more often than not, you would enjoy the usual way in which you copulate.”

Natasha squirmed as she smiled, and tried to look like she was reading more about Mesopotamia. But, she wasn't.

“I d-do ... really like when they ... they grab my wrists, and hold me down. They ... they squish me, between them. Unt-t-til I just ... vanish between their bodies. And they're both ... b-both inside me, trying to get d-deeper, even though they're already in as d ... d-deep they can get.”

Antoinette raised a brow, interest on her face. Good, because it was taking every bit of courage Natasha had to talk about this sort of stuff, especially with a woman she'd just seen naked fucking her own lover.

“That sounds deliciously primal, little Vola.”

“Y-Yeah! That's a good word for it. Primal. They're ... it's almost like they're desperate, you know? They start ... grunting, growling sometimes, and they're both pressed against me, and ... and they kiss me, and bite me a little sometimes, and...” She lowered her eyes as she let her mind drift to the thoughts of the two beasts, and how overpowering their sex could get sometimes. “I, I um ... not sure if I can ... control that.”

“Do not feel as if you must, Vola. It is purely for fun, after all. If you enjoy what you do, continue to do it. It sounds terribly delicious.” She sighed as she too let her mind wander, eyes looking up giving her away. Envisioning herself with two werewolves, or envisioning Natasha with them? “I must admit, now that you have seen myself make love to my little Jack, I would not mind seeing yourself between the two beasts.”

“Y-You would!?”

“But of course. You are a very beautiful, tiny creature, Natasha. It must be a deeply exciting bout of sex, to have both of those beasts penetrating you. One for your front, the other for your delicious little derriere? And, from the way you have described it, it sounds like you experience orgasm many times. Non?”

“I ... I um ... y-yeah. B-But I don't think they'd agree! To being watched, I mean.”

“Alas, you are probably correct. A shame.”

They both nodded, and resumed their work. Or at least, Antoinette did. Natasha tried, but after seeing Antoinette naked and having some beautiful, romantic sex with Jack, she got thinking about Arturo and Matthew in a different light. She liked hanging out with them. They made her laugh, they made her smile, they made her try new things, made her feel exciting. But, romance? How would that work with two boyfriends?

And she did want romance. She wanted those little tinglies, the heart flutters, the excitement of being near the person she loved. Intimacy. She wanted someone she could confess her secrets to, and someone who would confess theirs. She wanted someone she could trust with her back, and her heart.

“ ... hey, P-Prince?”

“Yes Vola?”

“You love Jack, r-right?”

“Oui, beaucoup.”

“And ... Ashley and Julee?”

The Prince looked at her, eyes steady, fingers no longer typing, and took a long, gentle sigh. She knew where the conversation was going, she must have.

“They are my friends and my pets, and I love them dearly, but I do not love them romantically.”

“ ... I ... I wonder sometimes, about Art and Matt-t. I ... w-we get along great, but I ... d-d-don't know about ... romance.”

“I am afraid you walk in strange waters, Vola. Many cultures have embraced polygamy in varying fashions. Naturally most of these were in the form of polygyny, but there have been some to embrace polyandry. Were Arturo and Matthew brothers, I would call your relationship not so unusual, considering history.”

Natasha giggled and shook her head. “N-No, they’re not brothers, but they might as well be. They know each other v-v-very well, and, um, share everything.”

“Dolareido is nothing if not open minded about sexuality, my dear Vola, but I am afraid it would be difficult to find an example of such a relationship leading to romance.” The ancient Daeva tapped a finger on her chin, and slowly built a grin with each tap as she looked up, and then at Natasha. “I do suggest you not worry about it, my dear. If you enjoy being with these men, then enjoy it. I can understand the desire for romance, but if you seek it, it will never come. Love is terribly afraid of being in the spotlight, and if you shine a light on it, it will flee, or die.”

“ ... d-don’t look for it?”

“Non.”

“B-But, how do you find it then?”

“Love is found through the self first, creating a garden for your soul, an inviting place that you care for and enjoy, with gates open. As you go out into the world, interact with the world, and share with others the garden of your soul, you may find another who will do more than pass by to admire its contents. They may stay. They may offer to combine gardens ... perhaps I should have chosen a better metaphor.” Chuckling, she looked back down at her laptop, and got back to work, as if the topic was one she was all too practiced with, and could talk about it while she looked at Mesopotamian history. “First the self must be a place that you enjoy, and a place you nurture. Only then will you enjoy sharing it with others, and only then will love find you, when someone else decides, of their own desire and to your joy, to stay.”

It wasn’t a bad metaphor. Hell it was a good metaphor. Natasha smiled as she watched Antoinette working, and put her eyes back on the screen too. It wasn’t new advice, she’d heard it before; but she didn't trust the internet at even the best of times. To hear Antoinette say it though, put some weight into the philosophy. You need to love yourself, take care of yourself, and be happy with yourself first. Then, go out into the world, interact with it, and with time, you'll meet someone. The key little bit there Antoinette had glossed over, that Natasha was terrified about, was the open gates part. You had to open your gates.

No Mekhet opened their gates easily. Arturo and Matthew had forced their way through hers, and that was just the front gate. There were many gates! She had her cute little garden she liked, but it was guarded by a fortress.

Step one then, was to try and be a little more open with Arturo and Matthew. If they liked her garden, all the better. If they didn't, well, she was thankful for the enjoyable, meaningful time they'd shared. Or at least, that's what she hoped she'd feel. She'd probably feel heartbroken. And being afraid of that, made her close her gates. Arg, vicious cycle!

Deal with it later, later. Antoinette was an amazing boss for these sorts of topics, but unlike Natasha, she had the ability to control her mind and switch gears quickly. Focus Tash, focus.

"I still haven't b-been able to ... to think of anything, or f-f-find anything, about Ganesha, that could be useful."

"Summarize, s'il vous plait."

"Um, Ganesha is the ... a deity in the Hindu p ... p-pantheon. M-Many groups worship him. He is usually revered as ... as a deity of wisdom, science, and art. And, um, also worshiped as a remover of obstacles."

"Yes, but that is Ganesha, a deity in the Hindu pantheon, as you said. Azamel is not Ganesha. She is a Begotten, a monster, a literal nightmare incarnate."

“I’m not sure how t-t-to use that information though.” It’s not like she could pop open a Wiki article about nightmare versions of ancient deities.

“Such is the mystery of the Begotten. Where do they come from, these horrors of the dream?”

“Fiona says it’s ... that it’s not the spirit world.” She looked over her shoulder to the large symbol on the floor. It was still an unnerving concept, that spirits existed. Safe had been the most adorable thing ever, but they hadn’t managed to summon anything like that since. A few wisps had come through, colorful things, glowing like big fireflies, and some other entities with slightly more defined shapes, but nothing as profound as Safe. “Begotten, and their ... h-horrors, come from the dream world.”

“It is both fascinating and unnerving, that there have been humans throughout the ages that have both spoken of a higher existence that can be touched upon by the dreaming, but also, that there are dangers, lurking outside the walls of our realm. Entities beyond imagining, beyond simple definitions, beyond the limitations of matter or dimensions.”

Fascinating was most definitely not the word Natasha would use to describe such entities. But, that did give her some clues.

“Kine, and ... and Kindred too, I suppose, since we all dream, they t-touch the dream realm?”

“So it would appear. Or perhaps, only some do. Mystery upon mysteries.” With a long sigh, Antoinette got up, took her interface tablet from the table, and tapped on it a few times. Soon the room was buried in the blue light of the strange chandelier, and Antoinette set the Mesopotamian necklace upon the room’s center, in the giant symbol marked on the floor. “Any predictions?”

“About the necklace? Um ... n-no, sorry.”

“And about nightmares?”

“I ... I ... I should ask Fiona.”

“Be careful with her, Vola. She may be a sweet, innocent creature on the outside, but you and I both know a monster rests within.”

She nodded, got up, and walked over to stand beside Antoinette. On queue, the Prince lowered the device so Natasha could see through it, and the two of them could watch through the amber screen to observe madness unfurl. But it would take time.

“H-Have you asked Jack?” Natasha said.

“I do my best to not speak of city matters when with my love.”

“I understand ... b-but, you’re both Kindred, and you’re the P-P-Prince, and ... and with these hunters...”

Antoinette lowered the device, and looked down at her, frown on her lips. “Speaking of this Angela and Jeremiah with my love is not how I wish to spend our time.”

Pissing off her boss was a bad idea. Pissing off the Prince of Dolareido was a bad idea. But it needed to be said.

“You ... you c-can’t completely separate them, your roles and ... your love life, your romance.”

“So you say. I have tried to mingle love with work before, Miss Vola. Tony was the result.”

“B-But ... but that’s not the same. You’re not ... trying t-to outwit each other, or ... I d-don’t know, I think ... even though you’re not in the same covenant, these problems threaten us all. And m-maybe, Jack will know something about B-Begotten, more than me.”

“ ... I will consider your words, Vola. You speak true, and I fight against inevitability, but I would fight against it for as long as I can. You though, perhaps you could ask Jack of the Begotten? Do not feel you should coddle my love because of his connection to me. As you said, these threats are for us all. In fact...” Antoinette lowered the device completely, turned to face her, and put her free hand on her shoulder. So tall. “My dear Vola, I am ordering you to not tell me which questions you will ask of Jack. Please provide me with all information pertinent, information that you may glean and learn from Jack, but I do not want you to let me prevent you from doing your job. Understood?”

“ ... understood,” Natasha said.

Asking her subordinate to pull some information out of her lover, and not let her know about the specifics, to avoid her interference, was an interesting approach. Very indirect, very complicated. Very elder.

She needed to learn about Begotten, to learn about ways to defeat them. Fiona had information, and Jack may know something from Fiona. Or Tash could ask her herself. Everyone liked Fiona, her included, but they needed information. Tash also needed to find information about the hunters, but they refused to expose themselves; almost two weeks since their attack on Jack and no one had found any evidence of them anywhere. Tash also needed to look into the warning Clara gave Antoinette, about someone doing ... something ... to something. And that was going swimmingly! Ugh.

But for the moment, they were going to spend some time pursuing the secrets of the universe. Natasha had laughed when Antoinette had said those words, but the Prince had raised a brow at her, as if the laughter were unwarranted. And it was, the more they touched the edge of what any sane person would consider to be normal. Antoinette said it was both important to her personally, and to her role as a dragon. The Ordo Dracul was a world Natasha had not yet touched, except with limited conversations with the Prince or Daniel. What sort of figures, leaders, subordinates, and fellow practitioners existed out in the world? What sort of secret sciences and arts did they pursue? Maybe she'd met some someday.

The two looked back at the device, but still nothing came, nothing showed itself, no blue ghostly images danced or died in the amber screen.

“... surprising,” the Prince said.

Tash nodded, and peeked around the screen at the symbol itself. Not that she could ever see ephemera with her naked eyes, but she knew it was there, the Prince had proven it a dozen times over with the ghostly images she'd shown her. Still, no such after-images of death or love or trauma or whatnot appeared before them.

Antoinette switched the program to something else, something called Essence Resonance. And, nodding to herself, she set it to level: light.

“You think, um, the sp-p-pirits will be attracted to it?”

“The resonance will use the properties of this Wyrmn's Nest to ... create, in a way, essence that mirrors the resonance of the necklace.” Another hint of its power. Natasha appreciated it, considering how few she shared.

“Sounds like l-light, how surfaces reflect back light as a color.”

“Similar, yes. Now, let us watch.” The Prince nodded, and then handed her the device. “You may watch this time, and see if anything crosses the barrier.”

Oh yes! Natasha took it with a smile, and raised it up as she switched the device back to the previous program, the amber lens. The first time they had used this, Antoinette had wanted to keep the summoning of something from across the Gauntlet a surprise. A success, considering the creatures Tash's necklace had summoned, and the eventual spirit Safe. To have the emotion of the necklace distilled into something so artful, beautiful, meaningful, had been astounding. What else could they summon? She stared on at the device, its amber screen, and watched the glowing white dot that sat upon the symbol on the floor, only visible through the screen's alien science.

Something! They could summon something! Natasha squeaked, and pointed at the device as blue swirls started to appear in the screen. If the glowing white was a hole, a cut, something that penetrated the wall between their worlds, the blue mist and rolling waves of dense fog that leaked from it, was something on the other side coming their way. The process wasn't instantaneous; whatever was crossing the Gauntlet, it took a bit for them to find their way here, and for them to cross the mysterious barrier.

She really had to ask Arturo and Matthew about it, the barrier, about the spirit world. It seemed so beautiful from this side. How bad could it be? Well, she wasn't so stupid or naive to think it had to be pretty and nice, just because those were the sorts of things she and the Prince managed to summon, but—

A black tendril slipped out of the hole. Natasha gulped, and stepped back as she lowered the device. Without it, she couldn't see the blue swirling energies, or the strange, white, glowing cut in reality that allowed things to come through. But she could see the thing, the black, squirming, wriggling thing, force its way into their realm. Like seeing a worm push up through dirt, something ebony, inky, like slime but solid, continued to crawl from the floating space, until it fell to the floor and sat upon the center of the symbol.

Natasha took another step back. This was most definitely not Safe, or safe for that matter. Antoinette took a step forward on the other hand, and knelt down to look at the strange thing. A squid? It kind of looked like one, but as Natasha stared on, it started to float upward, its many tendrils leading its direction instead of following behind it. When it turned to face her with its tendrils, she squeaked, and almost dropped the heavy tablet.

It had an eye, on its main body, between all the tendrils. Ew.

“What manner of spirit are you?” Antoinette said.

It didn't respond. It did blink though, dark eyelid coming down over the large eye that sat between the dozen tentacles. The eye itself was perfectly circular, and the eyelid opened far too wide, so the whole of its shape was exposed. White eye, with a gray iris and black pupil. It had no mouth, even when Natasha stepped around to check behind it, on its main body. The main body was very bulbous too, and the skin bumpy, a bit shiny, and it looked kind of slimy. Far too much in common with a squid for her to want to touch it.

“M-Maybe it can't speak?” she said. “I, um, I've heard the Uratha —” “Uratha.” A wriggling voice of quiet slurps came out of the squid thing. It shivered, and floated away from Natasha. It didn't get far. The necklace beneath it was both bait and a tether, so the spirit thing managed only a few feet from it before it drifted back toward its lifeline.

The Prince smirked, tapping a finger to her chin as she analyzed. “I know the werewolves are capable of communicating with creatures from the other side. But I had assumed that the spirits themselves were incapable of speech, except for the more developed ones. Safe, was perhaps, an anomaly. I wonder, if the Uratha speak a language unique to spirits?”

“... you want secrets?” The floating eye came closer to Antoinette, hovering higher. No mouth, but the weird, slurps and shlorps and blops of its voice came from somewhere, quiet but there. “Trade for secrets.”

“I guess it d-does speak English.”

“Trade for secrets.” The tentacles swirled, causing the eye to slowly rotate. “Trade?”

“Spirits are awfully one-track minded, are they not?” Antoinette said, looking down to Natasha as the smaller vampire approached.

“It d-does seem like, that, that they’re ... um ... specific.” They knew that already, but it never ceased to be an interesting sight, these spirits and their inability to think beyond their purview. “And maybe more can sp-p-peak than we thought?”

“I will trade you for secrets,” Antoinette said to the creature.

“What trade? I know many secrets from Hisil. Know few from Gurihal.”

“Gurihal?” Natasha said.

“Here! Here! Tasty treat summoned.” The creature lowered itself down to the necklace, and hovered around it a few times before looking back to the two Kindred. “Trade secrets?”

The Prince set her chin in her fingers, and lightly stroked it as she contemplated. “I will trade you ... knowledge about a human politician’s love affair, if you tell me about the language spirits and the Uratha speak.”

The squid thing copied Antoinette’s motion, running one of its tentacles under its eye as if it were a chin. “Agreed.” Apparently, it knew what a human politician was too. Or at least, knew that it wanted to know more about them.

“Darla Copperman has been sleeping with her hairdresser.”

Natasha raised a brow and blinked at Antoinette. “ ... r-really?”

“Mmhmm. From what I can tell, it is purely physical, and perhaps a touch romantic. No ill intent; except, of course, that both are married and doing this behind the backs of their partners.”

A politician risking her career for something as simple as good sex was a surprise. Or, maybe not. Good sex was pretty great.

The tentacle rippled, as if someone had poked a puddle. “Secret! My turn. The Uratha speak Uremehir. Spirits too.”

“Uremehir?” the Prince said. “Is there an English word for that language?”

“The First Tongue.”

The two Kindred blinked at the squid, then each other. “First Tongue?”

“Yes, First Tongue. Old, very old. Uratha say maybe first language for humans.” The tentacle creature floated around some more, looking around at the room with the eye between its tentacles, before looking back to the two Kindred.

“I ... remember, Art and Matt t-telling me they learned something, called the First T-Tongue, when they were changed.” She nodded a little as she dug through the memory. “I d-didn’t really ... think about it, at the t-time.”

“Another trade?” it said.

The Prince nodded. “Very well. Perhaps for something of greater weighter?”

“Oh, dangerous trade. Yes, dangerous. Offer?”

“I will tell you of a secret of the vampire leader here, of the Carthians, Garry Tones. Something personal. In return, tell me what the Uratha leader Avery has been doing in the Hisil.”

The eye made a giggle sound, like a bunch of swamp bubbles popping. “Uratha hunting, always hunting, not secret.”

“Surely she has pursued something specific and worthy of note?”

The tentacle creature started to turn in place, one of its limbs occasionally rubbing its fat body. It didn't seem to care too much if it was oriented with the floor, and with time it started to adopt positions that were upside down from how it was before; which looked normal after a while, and Natasha's brain eventually identified the old orientation as upside down. Did this creature not care where gravity was? Creature was perhaps the wrong word for a spirit.

“Avery has secret, about hunts in Hisil. Trade!”

“Alright spirit, you speak first.”

“Can't.”

Antoinette frowned at the floating orb, and exposed her fangs as she grit her teeth. “I shared with you first on the first trade. Would it not make sense to share with me first on the second?”

“Can't.” And, as if the world were summarized in that single word, the spirit started hovering in random directions. Never far from the necklace of course, a few feet to the side, maybe six feet up, but always back to the necklace.

“It ... these spirits aren't truly ... c-capable of internal reasoning, I think,” Natasha said. “They seem bound to their ... to what they are.”

“... merde.” Sighing, Antoinette folded her arms under her bosom. “I know these spirits are defined by what they are, to an all-encompassing degree. But that does not mean they are incapable of lying.”

“Can’t lie! Must trade. Secret with lie, is not secret, just lie. Trade?”

The Prince was not used to being denied. Natasha had to fight to hide her smirk, at how this simple little spirit was defying her, especially over something like secrets. Secrets were Antoinette’s favorite dessert, Natasha was sure, and having it denied her was too cute. And scary. This strange magical machinery of the Prince’s made the spirits physical, in a way, and that meant Antoinette could rip the strangely adorable-but-gross floating eyeball in half if she wanted to.

“Alright, I will tell you my secret first.” With a groan, Antoinette gestured with her hand, as if the secret itself deserved an open palm. “Garry Tones once slept with a young man, Kindred, who was a member of the Lancea et Sanctum, during the years of Lucas’s rise. They were romantic together. Lucas found out, and killed the boy.”

Oh, eesh. Natasha squirmed a little and looked down, not wanting to make eye contact with anything as she visualized how horrible that must have been. The secret would not damage Garry’s life to be known, except perhaps that it would infuriate him to know others knew about such a horrible trauma. Antoinette could be ruthless in her pursuits of knowledge.

“Secret! Secret! Avery, Uratha, thinks someone named Maria is looking for a way to summon Black Blood. She—”

Antoinette’s hand snapped out, grabbed the creature, and sank her nails into it as she brought it up to her face. “Black Blood!?”

Maria would never attempt to summon that monster! She knows nothing of it!”

Natasha almost jumped away, but managed to stay put, and shiver a little as Antoinette’s eyes lit ablaze.

“But ... secret! I give, trade!”

“Um, I-I think ... this little guy really doesn’t know how t-to do anything else. Just, trade secrets. Maybe spy too, t-t-to learn secrets, but ... don’t think it can lie.” Black Blood? Who was Black Blood?

The Prince brought the creature in closer still, until it was only a few inches from her face. Fangs bared, eyes wide, she snarled deep under her breath, and glared into the pitiful thing hard enough to cut steel.

“Why does she think Maria is trying to summon that monstrosity? Consider the information a part of the secret we traded.”

“Avery found whispers! Whispers from Black Blood’s wraiths in Hisil! Someone named Maria was trying to talk to them. That’s all I know!”

Letting go of the black squid, Antoinette sighed, and began to circle the creature. The poor spirit was spooked, jittering, skin vibrating like a puddle, its eye tracking Antoinette. Poor thing. Except, Natasha knew she should know better, to pity it. It was a spirit, it didn’t ‘feel’ things like living creatures did. Its existence was devoted to fueling its purpose, feeding it, and anything else was not a part of its being. Being jittery and quick to panic was probably just a valuable trait to incorporate into its behavior, if it was a purveyor of secrets.

Still, it was oddly adorable in its simplicity, and Natasha pouted as she watched it grow nervous.

“ ... I will make you another trade, spirit of secrets,” the Prince said. “Tell me of Black Blood’s latest goals, its current agenda, and I —”

The creature made a pathetic, squealing shriek sound, and went poof.

The two Kindred stared on, looked at each other, then at the empty air where the creature used to be. They waited, for thirty seconds, but nothing happened. No more noise, no more spirit, no nothing. It’d gone home.

“Shall I ... t-turn it off?” Natasha said.

“Yes, you may as well.” Sighing, Antoinette scooped up the necklace, and walked back over to the table where they kept their laptops and the objects they were studying for the day. The only one they hadn’t already tested in the device was the new necklace, and now with test one complete, they both had some notes to take.

Natasha set the resonance level back to zero, and turned off the ephemera-exposing blue light. Back in normal lighting conditions, Natasha came over to sit with the Prince again. She thought to find the Prince typing away and filling in her observations, but instead, Antoinette was leaning back in her chair, her chin between some fingers while her other hand combed her hair over her shoulder, down her chest. Thinking mode. Natasha usually chewed on a pen or something, Antoinette seemed to comb her hair.

“ ... it ... ran away?” Tash said.

“Indeed. It is afraid of Black Blood, no doubt; if such a simple creature is capable of fear. I doubted it would answer my question, as that entity’s shadow has haunted Dolareido for centuries now.”

“Centuries!?”

“Indeed. My experiments with the Gauntlet, and testing what entities I could draw from the other side, started not long after I arrived here with Jacob. Before we Kindred had managed to manipulate the small village into our foundation for a future utopia, whispers of that name were on the words of the people, the kine. Jacob, deep into his own experiments, his dark magics and blood rituals, also discovered mention of the creature’s name. I know his relationship with it, if it could be called a relationship, has grown as well. They know each other.”

“J-Jacob ... knows ... this thing?”

“Oui. To my chagrin, I have not been able to discern the exact nature of that relationship. It ... Black Blood was involved, somehow, with the incident with Simon and Avery.” She frowned, hard, and grit her teeth until her fangs were bared again. So weird, so very weird, for Antoinette to carry anger on her face when she got frustrated. “But that is not what bothers me.”

“ ... is ... is it b-because ... this?” Natasha reached out, and picked up the necklace on the table.

“Yes. I imported this piece through my connections with the company Border Explorations, as I have done many times in the past. And yet, this time, not only does the object have no memory imprinted upon it, it resonates with the spirit world in such a way as to attract a spirit of secrets.” She reached out for the necklace, and Natasha set into her hand. “It does not surprise me such a spirit would exist in Dolareido, as both Kindred and kine grow secrets here like a garden of weeds. What surprises me, is the delightful timing of this necklace.”

“It ... it d-does seem awfully perfect, doesn’t it? We want to know more about Avery, and w-what she’s up to, and ... this necklace is perfect for that.”

Antoinette stared into the black orbs the necklace wrapped in its strings, and rubbed one with a thumb. Fiery eyes stared into it, and Antoinette's frown faded away as she slowly set the necklace back down.

"Someone has conspired to insure I would receive this necklace. They wished for me to know more about what is happening on the other side of the veil."

"Are we sure it c-can't be coincidence?"

"We coincidentally learn that Maria has been communicating, or attempting to communicate, with this creature beyond our realm?"

"... no, I suppose it ... it couldn't b-b-be coincidence." A lot of randomness involved though. Would Antoinette buy the necklace was a big roll of the die, and if the device would summon a creature that resonated with it was another roll of the die. Whoever had set this up knew the necklace was a necklace of secrets though, and had a clue as to what sort of experiments Antoinette did. That lowered the possible people down to a manageable amount, at least.

"I ... am also concerned ... about Maria." Antoinette set the necklace back onto the table, closer to Natasha. "Assuming that that spirit was incapable of lying, as you believe, then Maria is pursuing a course of action I fear has no happy ending."

"I d-don't understand. What is Black Blood?"

"A spirit, a very old and powerful spirit, my dear Vola. Unlike the innocent creatures we have summoned, this dark entity has haunted Dolareido for so long, it has ... it is beyond simple descriptions. It pursues death, murder, but it also pursues life, in a strange way, in a way only Jacob and his crúac rituals could understand."

This, was exactly why Natasha left the Ordo Dracul in the first place. She didn't want to deal with crazy alien creatures from the beyond! She wanted to sit down, deal with data, deal with money, deal with secrets. Those were things she could understand, and catalog, and control. Now she was dealing with sewer monsters, nightmare monsters, spirit monsters, and everything in between.

“So, um, m-my ... t-t-task now is to: discover the weakness of the Begotten, or at least Azamel; track down the hunters, p-particularly Jeremiah or Angela; find out more about M-Maria's motives; find out what Clara ... w-w-warned us ab—ooh ... m-maybe she warned us about Maria? And, um, I'm also t-to continue this research here.” She gestured to the room behind her. Conveniently, she left out how much work that was, how much life threatening work that was, and how much she would not be able to handle that all on her own. The Prince noticed it without her saying it, and smirked at her.

“Alas, you make a point, my dear Vola. I will continue my research alone; you need no longer attend these research meetings of ours. Daniel is already investigating Clara's mysterious warning, though I suspect the man will be able to find little. Perhaps, with this new information, he may find something by investigating Maria Turio's activities though. You, my sweet, shall consider dealing with the hunters your primary task, and discovering the weakness of Azamel your secondary task.”

“W-What about Maria?”

“Your sire will handle it, Miss Vola. Please leave Maria be. We do not know the extent of her pursuits, or her goals.”

“B-But ... I...” I feel like I should be involved. I know Maria better than most. I owe her a lot, too, like a punch to the face. “Yes Prince.”

Primary task meant put your life on the line for it if need be, like the time she was investigating the tunnels. Secondary task meant looking it up on the laptop when at home, or just keeping an open ear for it when the opportunity presented itself. So she was being told to risk her life to deal with the hunters, but don't risk it for dealing with the Begotten. Reasonable, but scary, considering what the hunters had done already, killing Barry and nearly killing Jack.

Natasha nodded. "I'll see it d-done." And she would too. Hunting down humans, in a city, by being sneaky and smart and cross-referencing data in an increasingly intricate mountain of evidence? She was damn good at that, she just had to be careful to not end up like Barry. "... I rarely see my sire these days, Prince."

"Neither do I, my dear. I miss his company, as quiet as it was. But, he must disappear for days at a time, to find his prey."

"That worries ... m-m-me. He ... he d-didn't find Jeremiah or Angela."

"That worries me, as well, my dear. These humans hide themselves using the size of my city, and its teeming masses that they can blend in with as easily as they breathe. And worse still, they use strange tools to pursue their goals. Relics, artifacts perhaps, or rituals that tap into forces that defy my knowledge." The Prince lowered her gaze, eyes becoming red steel. If there was one person who hated not knowing something, it was her.

"I will m-make sure, to learn about how they're hiding so well t-t-too."

"See that you do. These pests are proving incessant, and that cannot stand. I will see this Jeremiah and Angela dead, and I will purge this city clean of their like, even if it floods Dolareido's streets in red."

~~Eric~~

What now?

Eric stared on over the deadly white sheets of the hospital bed. The distensions in the blanket marked the legs of the round man underneath the pale sheet. Some hospitals used green, some use mauve, some sky blue. This hospital liked white. Felt professional, and sterile.

“You see this?” The old man in the bed gestured to the TV on the wall, thrice as large and far newer than the one in the other hospital.

“Can’t not see it.” Groaning, Eric leaned forward, ass starting to hurt a bit as the cushions of the seat did not agree with him. Whatever, just a bit of pain to accent the futility of why he was here. Wonderful. He put his elbows to his knees, and looked to the TV. The Amazon forest was burning to the ground.

“I swear the world’s burning down around us,” his father said.

“Metaphor?”

“Of course it’s a fucking metaphor.”

Eric shrugged. “Thought maybe you really cared about the rainforest.”

The old man snorted, and put the TV remote back onto the sheets after muting the TV. “Makes me sick.”

“Then stop watching it.”

“I’m not going to ignore the world’s problems.”

Yeah, right. Old man couldn’t ignore a problem, no matter how small it was, no matter how much he couldn’t affect it.

“Could join the relief effort, help block the fire from spreading,” Eric said. “I’m sure you’ll be of great help.”

His old man glared at him, sneered, and looked back to the TV.
“Fuck you.”

“Fuck you too.”

They both sighed, and let the silence of the muted TV fill the room. The captions were on. His dad could hear fine, but he found the quick talking of the reporters and civilians annoying. Poor fool wouldn't be able to stomach a single conversation with a Gen Z, let alone a Millennial.

“Nurses here treating you alright?” Eric said.

“Well enough. Shorter skirts and bigger breasts seem to be the only upgrade.”

“I told you don't harass the nurses.”

“I'm not harassing them.”

“Dad, saying to a woman that she had a nice rack is harassment.”

“Pretty sure that's a compliment.”

“It is, it's also sexual harassment.”

His old man sighed, and shrugged. “Can I at least say nice ass?”

“... better, but I still wouldn't advise it. These women — and men — are the only things between you and a shit-filled bed.”

“If they didn't want the compliment, why wear the short skirt?”

Explaining to his idiot old man the delicacies of flirting versus harassing was not how he wanted to spend his Sunday afternoon.

“They want you to notice, but they don't want you leer. Direct, tactless compliments are the verbal equivalent of leering. And besides, it's not you they're trying to get to notice anyway."

"I can still bag the ladies when I want to."

Eric raised a brow at the old man, and smirked. His dad was normal height, like him, but he didn't shave his head like Eric, instead preferring some short hair; now white short hair. He had a bit of a beard too, trim at least, but otherwise a full beard. He wasn't extremely fat, but he had more flub on him than a health-conscious guy like Eric would prefer he had, and the soft roundness it gave his dad's face betrayed the darkness of the man's soul.

"You're a regular Bill Cosby, dad."

"I watch the news son, or did you not notice?" Old man gestured to the TV again. "So fuck you too."

And around, and around, and around they went.

Maybe you should try putting your good foot forward first for once, Eric? He thought he did that by getting his dad into a better hospital. Nah, best that managed was a single 'thanks' from the old man, before things went right back to normal. Well, old man take a look at my life, I could use a fucking olive branch, just like you.

Pointless attempts to mend burned bridges was only half the reason he was here though.

"Dad, serious question."

"Shoot."

"You ever felt ... like ... an animal?"

"Eric, I'll stop harassing the nurses if you—"

"No, not about that. I mean, literally, you ever felt like ... I don't know, someone eying you in the street, thinking you're an easy target to mug, and you feel ... ready to tear into them?”

His dad raised a brow as he stared at him, before adjusting his hospital gown, and scratching at the tubes coming out of his forearm and nostrils. If Eric’s words had triggered some sort of memory, hidden reflex, anything like that, the heart monitor didn’t show it.

“We grew up in a rough neighborhood son, you know that. Did some things in my life I ain’t proud of, hurt people when I had to protect me, you, or your mother.”

“This isn’t about that either.” Thankfully, the two of them were past that part of the father and son relationship, talking about their shit life and the struggles they had growing up together. Now, it was figuring out how to not hate each other as adults. It wasn’t going well.

“The fuck is it then?”

“Ever want to ... not just kill someone, but...” Hunt them down, tear them open, eat their flesh. “Forget it. Guess I’m just still angry about shit.”

“If I was a dumbass like you, I’d be angry about shit too. How’s Sheryl by the way?”

“Haven’t spoken to her since last time I told you.” Not like his dad liked Sheryl. Old man had called her out for what sort of person she was long before Eric realized it. He’d called Eric out for what sort of person Eric had become before he realized it too. In both circumstances, his old man had had the tact of a fucking gun. Maybe if the fucker hadn’t been such a monumental asshole about it, Eric would have listened to him.

Too fucking late now. A delightful life lesson that he could never swallow. Just cause you don’t like how the truth tastes doesn’t mean it isn't the fucking truth.

As he sat there with his dad, and the two of them watched the muted news, reading the captions, he tried to feel, to sense, look for any of the weird signals his new mind had been sending him. Was his dad dangerous? Was his dad an animal, like him? Was his dad something more than just his dad? No, it all seemed perfectly normal, perfectly dad-ish, perfectly human. For the best, probably. Unless, his dad might live if he became the sort of person Eric was becoming.

Eric looked down at his knee, and groaned as he flexed it. Still hurt. If he was becoming a werewolf, or whatever, why did that still fucking hurt? Wouldn't it heal? Is that something werewolves did? Christ, he needed to talk to Fiona, get some answers about who he was.

"Seeing anyone?" his dad said. "Must see a lot of nice girls at a nightclub." The sarcasm was palpable, and with just a hint of bitter for a delightful cocktail of fuck you.

"Bloodlust is closer to a lounge than club."

"Yeah, how so?"

"Less people, and you don't have to scream at the top of your lungs to speak to the person beside you." And it was a front for vampires to get themselves easy meals, using sexuality, booze, and drugs to turn humans into defenseless prey. Didn't seem like the vamps killed their victims, at least not at Bloodlust, so he had to admit, it was a pretty cozy setup for them, one he didn't mind.

And they were paying his salary, a pretty sweet salary, so he shouldn't complain. Hell, that Jessy girl did him a huge favor, and the only thing she wanted in return was to fuck him. Talk about a reversal of expectations.

Except, now, she knew he knew she was a vampire. Suddenly he was neck deep in a strange world, with vampires and werewolves and monsters, and they had a leash on him. He didn't like being on a leash, but as far as he could tell, the leash wasn't forcing him to do anything he wouldn't already do. New job with great money and great benefits? Yeah, he'd do that. Sexy woman with a hard body — the fitness nut in him creamed its pants at the sight of her — who wanted to fuck him? Yeah, he'd do her. And now, the sexy vampire and a beautiful monster were looking to make his nights more interesting on a regular basis. Yeah, he'd probably appreciate that too.

He looked at his dad. The man wasn't going to live much longer; at least, not at a health conscious guy's definition. Type 2 diabetes, a bad Trig/HDL ratio, obese enough to hurt his joints, and only enough muscle to get his ass out of bed in the morning. All in all, a very unhealthy man. That was the way of it since Eric's mom died some ten years ago, despite Eric's constant badgering for him to take better care of himself. Put down the bread and eat some real food for once in your life. At a certain point, he just had to let the man be, let him do his thing.

Then the man got sick. Queue painful conversations, lots of yelling, lots of object throwing, and an eventual new thing Eric had to pay for. A spiral, leading to one shitty thing after another. But now he was on the up, and at least he could get his dad some premium care.

Or maybe he should just let the old bastard die. Why the fuck was he helping him? Cat's Cradle situation? No, his dad was around for him plenty growing up. Hell, he'd been a great dad, just an asshole too. Eric didn't feel any son guilt either, he put in his dues with his dad, at various ages, now included. Why didn't he just let the god damn idiot die?

“ ... hey dad.”

“Mm?”

“You ever wonder what it’d be like to be a vampire?”

The old man raised a brow at him like he was crazy, before looking back to the TV and changing the channel to some sports channel. Baseball. His dad couldn’t be bothered to watch a real sport, of course.

“Whatchu talking about?”

“If I told you I could make you immortal, never age, but you’d be a vampire, could never see the sun again, had to drink people’s blood, what would you say?”

“I’d say keep your fucking shit the hell away from me, blood sucker.” He laughed as he said it, before breaking into a coughing fit. Eric got up, but the man motioned him back into his seat, and forced down the coughing with time. “I’ve had enough of this life, thank you very much.”

If you took care of yourself, got up off your fat, lazy, idiot ass, life would be kinder to you. Maybe you’d have found love again, or at least you might not spend your days in pain. Fuck you old man, fuck you.

“So vampires are off the table?”

“Good lord, Eric, the fuck is the matter with you? Just let me do what I want to do.”

Yeah, if I did that, you’d be dead.

---

Back in Bloodlust, he stood on the second floor again, elbows on the railing, and watched on from above. The smells and sounds were more distinct, each categorized, each apparent. People stopped being people, are started being persons, individuals, lots of them.

Colognes, perfumes, deodorants, different types of fabrics, and different degrees of sweat or sex on their skin. It would have been two, maybe three odors to his nose in the past, but now it was dozens.

He looked down at one of the corner booths below him. The dance floor had twenty people on it, and many of the booths around it only had two or three people in them. People were feeling more wild tonight than usual, and many of the booths had a lot of physical contact happening. One of the booths had a vampire in it, a man, and he had two women in his booth with him. One of the women was snug against his side, her tube top pulled down to her belly, exposing her fake breasts, and her hand reaching out to hold onto the back of the other woman who was riding the man.

The vampire looked up, met Eric's gaze, and winked.

Weird, so fucking weird. Eric's new instincts told him to be careful with this fucker, to worry about him, to keep note and be prepared to rip him in half, literally. He was a vampire, not one of these humans, and if he was going to kill him, he had to be prepared to do more damage than that Jack kid had suffered. So, rip him in half or tear off his head, or don't bother.

He looked in another booth. A man was getting a blowjob from another man from under the table. In the same booth, a woman was getting some cunnilingus from a woman under the table. Interesting setup. In another table, two people were stroking each other off, a man and woman. And up on the second floor it wasn't much better, people fucking and touching each other and filling the pulsing music with their quiet moans.

"It's fuck night."

He raised his head, and watched Jessy approach him. She was wearing a high cut shirt, high enough to expose the underside of each breast, and the top had a boob window before it reached out into long, black sleeves that reached her wrist. Very slick, and it matched the short skirt she wore, with its crisscross thread sides exposing a lot of her thigh and ass. A lot, lot of her thigh and ass, all the way past her hip. No underwear.

“Fuck night?”

“This your first Saturday night here? First Saturday of a month, I mean.”

“Yeah.”

“Fuck night.”

He rolled his eyes, and looked back down at the dance floor. The men and women were grinding up against each other with the beat of the music, and people were happy to get their hands involved, touching and rubbing. At least they weren't having sex on the dance floor, even the Bloodlust crew would object to that. Keep it to the booths, and keep the moans below the music.

“I see you've met Josh.” Jessy came up beside him, leaned her elbows onto the railing as well, and made a small wave at Josh. The man returned the favor. “He's next in the rotation to keep an eye on the place for the next few days.”

“Looks like he's having fun.”

“Daeva are so fucking spoiled. He snaps his fingers and he'll have bitches in droves ready to fuck him.”

“Daeva?”

“Type of vampire, really pathetic, poetic types. No grit to them at all. Fucker could put stripper sparkles on his skin and it'd fit perfectly.”

Well, that was one way to summarize a type of vampire, he supposed.

“And you?”

“Gangrel. Pretty animalistic, I guess is the easiest way to describe it.”

He most definitely got an animal vibe from her, so that fit.

“You look good tonight.”

“I know, right? Just got this thing yesterday.” She gestured down to the skirt, and how the threaded side exposed her skin. And, waving a blatant ‘stare at my ass’ sign, she turned around for him, exposing the rather small black front and back that covered her sex and ass crack, barely.

“Be careful where you sit down, wearing that.”

“Ha, was hoping to be sitting on a rather attractive bouncer’s dick, actually.” She slid in closer, and nudged her elbow into his as she stared over the railing with him. “Or, we can stare down at people, that’s cool too.”

“It’s my job.”

“Eh, not really. Your job is to be attractive and attract the sort of kine we like having here at Bloodlust.”

“... and they would be?”

“People who are attracted to dark, brooding types. Those sorts are such easy prey, flies to honey.”

“... I’ll have to pass on the sex, sorry. Not in the mood.” And he wasn’t. Visiting his dad in the hospital left a rather bitter taste in his mouth. A wonderful way to remind him how meaningless his words could be, visiting his dad. Shouldn't have done it. But he was a glutton for punishment.

"I'll bet you twenty bucks I can change your mood." She smirked, playful and flirtatious, aggressive and confident, all the things he liked in a woman. Usually.

"I guess I can't stop you from trying." Even if she broke the rules, her vampire world paid his bills.

"Right, so, get over here." She gestured to one of the empty booths, and slid into it. Empty booths in a nightclub, ha, place really had no business calling itself a nightclub. Sighing, he came over and sat down as requested. She was the boss. Do what she said. "You do look pretty fucked up. Something on your mind?"

"Typical family drama."

"Want to talk about it?" she said. He raised a brow at her, and she laughed as she ran a fingernail along the booth table. "I like you."

"How's that?"

"You really are the only kine I know of that's not a ghoul or a thrall, and that gives you an edge I really like. Thralls and ghouls, they break the moment a vamp makes eye contact with them. They got the addiction to vamp blood, and they got respect for us. Blood gets into their minds, makes them feel special about the vamp they're addicted to." She slid in closer along the booth seat, until her thigh was against his. "You're not a thrall or ghoul, but you know what I am, what I can do. And yet, you're still a stubborn dick, knowing I could full well do anything I wanted to you."

He didn't know exactly what she could do, no, but he could feel his muscles tighten and his eyes snap to her every time he felt he was exposing his back to her. Whatever she was, he was more afraid of her than that Beatrice girl.

“I guess.”

“Plus you’re really hot. Black dude with a shaved head, buff, in a nice suit? Arg, any Invictus girl would be wet just looking at you.”

“ ... I think you overestimate how easily women get aroused at the sight of me.”

“I think you underestimate.”

Persistent as fuck, this woman.

He shrugged, sighed, and leaned back. No use in trying to slide further away from her, she’d just slide after him.

“You ever think about asking?” she said.

“ ... about what?”

“Becoming a vampire.”

Chapter 56

~~Eric~~

“No thanks.”

“Not interested in becoming immortal?” She ran her finger down his leg, before bringing it up to her lip to give it a small bite. “I think it’d really agree with you.”

“ ... are you offering?”

“No. Well, maybe? Siring’s been opened up, so I could get you in, if so inclined.”

“Just like that?” He snapped his fingers.

“Yes and no. Normally, the vamp should really get to know the human they’re going to sire, spend time with them, form a bond.” The finger she bit soon found itself on his neck again, and she slid it around his jugular. Took a lot of willpower to not swipe it away, not because he didn’t like it, but because he was very literally exposing his neck to a deadly creature. The glint in her eye told him to hold still though, and that, he wouldn’t mind what she had in store for him.

“You don’t know me very well.”

“Well that’s half the reason I’m here. Want to get to know the sexy, brooding bouncer.”

“ ... you said earlier I’m the only human who knows about you, who isn’t a thrall or ghoul.”

“Yep.”

“Why don’t you fuck some of them?”

“Ha!” She gave his chest a pat, turned to the table, and gestured to one of the nearby booths. Two men were in there, each with a woman sitting in their lap. The two guys were talking to each other, despite the fact the women on their laps, facing toward the table, were grinding on them. He couldn’t see from the angle, but they were probably having sex. “Two of my four ghouls right there. I fuck the four of them on a regular basis.”

“ ... at the same time?”

“At the same time.”

Well, damn. He’d clearly underestimated how sexual this woman could be, and he’d already guessed her as extremely sexual.

“Surprised you bothered with me then.”

“You men always think more is better. Sometimes, less is more.” Laughing, she leaned back in the booth again, snug up against his side, shoulder to shoulder. “Fiona being there really got me in the mood, too. Damn that little girl is like, half boob.”

“Is sex all you think about?”

She raised a brow at him. Flirting with her angry side, he could see, but he was starting to get a little annoyed with her constant sex talk. Didn’t the woman ever think about anything else? Ugh, his mouth was going to get him into trouble.

“I think about a lot of things, Eric. But I can’t talk with you about any of those things.”

“Secret night life of vampires?”

“Exactly. But, hell, you’ve seen Antoinette, you’ve seen Beatrice and Natasha and Fiona, and apparently you’ve even been in nightmare land. You got one up on me. Maybe I can talk to you about some things private?” Grinning, she held out her palms in front of her, as if cupping her own bosom, except far larger. “The Prince’s tits were something else, weren’t they?”

Oh for fuck’s sake.

“For one second, I actually thought I might have offended you, and you were going to prove me wrong by talking about something other than sex.”

“Fooled you.” She winked, laughing. “I know what I like. When I’m not dealing with the Invictus or worrying about the Masquerade or trying to play in the fucking Danse Macabre, I’m fucking. If I was still human, I’d be exercising all the time, putting my ass on the internet, and fucking in my free time. But now I’m Kindred, and my body is like this permanently.” Sighing, groaning a little too, she slouched and let her back sink into the booth. “So now I’m either fucking, or trying to be a vampire. And let me tell you, it’s no picnic.”

“I imagine not, with those hunters after you.” Maybe directing her mind onto more pressing circumstances would clear her head. Those four who’d nearly killed him, who’d burned him, were still a problem.

“And they’re new. They weren’t even a problem before, not really. Christ, it’s one thing after another.” She elbowed him in the side. “Got me talking about shit. Sneaky fucker.”

Despite himself, he laughed. “Sorry.”

“So where’s Fiona? Seen her lately? She take you out on that date yet?”

“I have not seen her lately, no.” And he needed to. He frowned as his memories drifted back to her, her knowing stuff about him, her refusing to show up and talk to him, and how much he needed to ask her questions.

“She’ll show up eventually. That girl can be pretty hard to find, when she doesn’t want to be found.”

“Yeah, I noticed she’s ... an unusual ... thing.”

Laughing, Jessy took his closer arm, and set it on her leg. No hesitation, not even a blink. Why would she be hesitant though, considering a bit over a week ago she was riding him, naked, and fingering another girl at the same time. And, as much as he wanted to be surly and be left alone, god damn her leg felt good. Smooth, completely smooth, and he could feel the muscle within, giving her shapely, curvy legs. Whoever she’d been when she was alive, she’d been a fitness nut like him, to get this sort of body.

He could feel his arousal stir. God damn he broke easily.

“Well, until Fiona actually takes you out on a date, I’m considering you fair game.” She helped guide his hand up her leg until it reached the bottom of the short skirt. And predictably, she guided it between her thighs. She had nice thighs.

“Do you know where she is?” Much as Fiona was very attractive, she was also very young, and he wasn’t sure going on a date with her was a good idea. That wasn’t the reason he needed to talk to her, but it might be a good plan to slip that info in.

“Either doing her nightmare thing, or hanging out with the others. Wouldn’t be surprised if she’s hanging out with Damien.” She pulled his hand higher, and higher, until his wrist was forced to push up against her skirt. Shifting from side to side, she helped him get his hand higher up her thigh, skirt inching higher with him.

“Damien?”

“My partner. Bit of an asshole, and loves to sit in dark corners and brood. She seems attracted to those types. Can’t say I really blame her.”

“Can I have her number? I need to talk to her.”

“Ha, you’re an asshole too. Got your hand on my thigh and you’re asking for another girl’s number.”

“I…” He tried to frown, but all he could do was laugh. This woman, calling him an asshole, when she wasn’t letting him move his hand away from her thigh. And, he really didn’t want to.

“If she didn’t give you her number or tell you where she lives on her own, then I’m afraid I can’t help you. Wouldn’t be very lady-like of me to give a guy another girl’s info without her consent,” she said, grinning at him. Which earned a sigh but nod from him. He had no choice but to wait for Fiona to come to him at some point then.

Her voice wavered, and she let out a long sigh, as his finger grazed along her clitoris. Soft, tender, the opposite of the hard body she sported. Her pubic area was smooth as silk, her skin’s delicateness highlighted by the softness of the perfect, inviting mound of her mons. Not a hair to be found, so the gentle pressure of his hand against it caused the soft skin to mold to his palm lightly.

She guided his finger down lower, to her clenching entrance. Wet. Jesus, this woman. He wasn’t much better, shaft hard against his pants already, in blatant betrayal of his earlier statement about his mood. And of course she noticed immediately, and chuckled as she reached out, and set her hand on his crotch to begin rubbing it.

“This qualifies as sexual harassment,” he said.

“Then it’s a good thing it’s a corrupt business. You have no HR to complain to. Besides, you enjoyed it last time.” She pushed his finger in deeper, and clenched. Fucking hell, her insides were so hot, and wet, squeezing in a pulse that had him remembering what it felt like the night they had sex.

“ ... I ... actually wouldn’t mind some information.”

“About?”

“Things, like ... the debt you wiped, with Montoya. Or maybe some things about vampires.” Might as well see if he could make some sense of his new, insane life.

“Alright, I’ll answer some questions. Some. But only while we’re having sex.”

Yeah, he saw that coming. Well, sort of. He figured she’d say after sex, not during.

“ ... alright.” What the heck, might as well. She was gorgeous, she was fun, and he’d be lying if he said he hadn’t been thinking about that night.

“Awesome.” And, like she’d done it a million times before, she undid his pants button and zipper, undid the button of his boxers, and slid out his member. Far too comfortable with herself, and him apparently, as she didn’t hesitate to slip onto his lap facing him, grab his cock, aim it up at her slit, and lower herself. From beside him to on him in two seconds flat.

He had to admit, he really did, that this was a perk of this new job he did not expect, and he was enjoying it no matter what he might say to Jessy or himself. A quiet groan escaped him, and he set his hands on the hips of the woman as she eased herself down onto his length until he was stretching her insides, until she too made a quiet groan as she forced in the last inch.

“Nice and deep. Love, fucking love that. Wait, hold on.” She adjusted her knees, her skirt a little higher so it stopped biting her thighs, and she adjusted him too so he was slid forward a little, now leaning back. Like moving a feather. He must have weighed nothing compared to what she could move.

“Comfortable?” he said, smirking up at her.

“Enough. You?” Without missing a beat, she put her hands on his shoulders near his neck, elbows hanging and nudging against his chest.

“I—oh...” He should have expected it. The moment he said something, she squeezed, hard, hard enough he groaned again, and he tightened his grip where he held her waist. “I ... wanted to know, what you said to Montoya.”

“Montoya Montel, as you know, is a business man who gives out loans to stupid people who think they’re rich. Because stupid people who think they’re rich, like yourself at the time I’m sure, spend money they don’t have. They get in deep, and he rakes in the interest.” She leaned in closer, got her lips near his ear, and breathed softly as she gently started to grind her hips. Every motion, she matched with a clench of her insides, rhythmic, milking. He was completely outclassed. “I imagine he was sending some fucker to harass you?”

“Yeah, Mr. Pitt.”

“Ugh, slimy fucker. Well in any case, Montoya works for Terra Den Industries.”

“ ... does he now?”

“Mmhmm. Terra Den does a lot of illegal shit. Course, you can’t prove any of it.” She growled into his ear, and ran her fangs along his neck. Fangs. Shit, he forgot about the fangs, and the way sex had ended last time. Thinking with your dick, stop thinking with your dick.

Breathe, just breathe. Nothing wrong with this. If she does bite you, it won't kill you, won't hurt, and you'll feel great. Better than great. The thrill of it, of a predator, a hunter, riding his cock as she teased his neck with the potential bite, sent shivers up his spine, until he groaned again. Her nipples were swollen, and pressed through her shirt and into his suit's jacket hard enough for him to feel them. She really enjoyed playing the horny, aggressive animal. And, he seemed to like it too.

"I paid a visit to the CEO, Jeremy Long. We had other business to discuss, and I made a point of note that he was to insure Montoya knew your debt was cleared."

"Why would you be paying a visit to someone as important as Jeremy Long?"

"Because I'm Kindred and we own this fucking city." Chuckling, she moved her head around to plant her kiss near his other ear, lips and fangs both grazing the lobe. "You work for us too, remember? We own you."

"I ... guess you do." His hands drifted higher. It wasn't him, he wasn't telling them what to do anymore. Entirely on their own, they slipped up and slid under the shirt, its cut so high it was already exposing half her back. As his fingers slid in under the shirt, he caressed her spine, and breathed faster, deeper, as touching her earned some quivers and some more clenches from her. He'd barely touched her and she was so damn wet, it was amazing.

Look at you Eric, getting seduced again because a woman's willing to jump on your dick. Don't you ever learn? How many times do you have to go through this shit before you realize you should stop sticking your dick in crazy?

Not the same thing, asshole. Sheryl was using you for money. This woman is ordering around multimillionaires, and has the power and position to make any thing she wants a fucking reality, far as you can tell. It isn't the same thing. She doesn't need your money, and she isn't faking her arousal. Get out of your fucking head, and enjoy it.

“You don't mind if I have a little nip, do you?” she said into his ear. “You taste really fucking good.”

“Do I?”

“Mmhm. Different than most kine—humans.”

Ok, maybe there was something he had that she wanted, that she was using sex to manipulate out of him. His blood, since apparently she really liked it. But last time, she didn't know that, and she slept with him anyway. The woman just really enjoyed doing what she did. Hell, maybe she actually liked fucking him specifically; she did say she came here to get to know him.

So relax and enjoy it, for fuck's sake.

“As ... as long as I can still function when you're done. I have a few hours left tonight.”

“Sure. And, hey, this is kind of fun. I don't normally get to just talk like this.” Instead of biting him, she leaned back, put her elbows on the table, and grinned at him, the angle putting her rolling abs on display. Just like last time. “My ghouls aren't exactly great conversationalists.”

“And I am?”

“Course you are, it just needs to be squeezed out of you.” On queue, she squeezed, hard, almost hard enough to hurt him, and he winced as her insides wrenched on his length. But she eased up, and chuckled at him as her tight, heavenly, wet, surprisingly deadly insides began to milk him with more rhythmic squeezing again.

“So,” she said, eyes on him as she gently eased herself back and forth, “you noticed those hunters that day?”

“I ... noticed four people, and Fiona’s description jogged my memory.”

“Next time you see them, run. They know you work here, and after that shit show, they know ... well, they’ll either kidnap you like they did Jack, or they’ll shoot you on sight.”

“Will the hunters come this deep into the city? Where I guess a lot of you vamps hang out.”

“I’m sure they’ll sneak their way in.”

Shit, that was a problem. “The Prince, she said she’d have someone watch me.”

“And I’m sure she will, and probably does right now, but you still need to protect yourself.” Her hands found his jacket, and undid the button below the breast to open it. And with the same casualness, she began undoing the buttons of his white shirt, top to bottom. “If you’re not already, you should find a place near here to live. The closer to Xnomina HQ, the better.”

“Xnomina?”

“Yeah, most Invictus vamps live close to it, so it’s our home beacon.” With his shirt undone, she reached down, and began to run her fingers up and down his chest, fingertips tracing his abs. “Course, you could go live in the Carthian half of South Side.” Laughing, like she said something funny, she brought her hands down to where the two of them were connected. She put her elbows on the booth table behind her again, and with one hand, started to caress her clit while her other slipped under the bottom of the shirt, and pulled it up over her breasts.

“Carthians?” He tried to not stutter, to keep the wavering out of his voice, but it was hard when watching a beautiful woman playing with herself while riding him. Her breasts, large despite her leanness, jiggled ever so slightly with her consistent, smooth rocking motion. And he stared at them, because, boobs.

“Another group of vamps. You though, I think you’ll be happier here, with us. And you should definitely move into a place nearby if you haven’t.” She paused her self touching, and reached out for his hands. No point in resisting, he couldn’t even if he wanted to at this point, and he let her guide his palms up to her breasts. Soft, so damn soft, unlike the thighs currently squeezing on his sides.

“You really love your body, don’t you?”

“Fucking right I do. I remember, over fifty years ago before I was embra—turned, I was big into fitness. MMA for women wasn’t around at the time, but I was involved in a lot of fighting. And unlike girls like Beatrice, I got to keep my rack when cut my weight down.” Laughing again, she winked at him, and pressed her hands against his, to cause his fingers and palms to squish against her large tits. “Nice, right?”

“Very.” And they were. Though, much as the natural size of them was pleasant, it was how hard her nipples were that was more pleasing. She was enjoying herself immensely, sexually. No ulterior motive, no faking it, just a woman who enjoyed the fuck out of fucking.

There was something about that genuine, honest simplicity, that was calming on his soul.

“So, you should move somewhere nearby. I’ll set you up with one of the apartments in the Carlava Villa if you want.” She put her hands on his shoulders again, and started grinding on him, harder. Juices dripped down his length, and he could feel them running down his testicles. He'd never had sex with a woman who got this wet, and he found himself staring at her, shocked, by how much she was enjoying herself.

“That’s ... an expensive ... place to live, even with me working here.”

“I can—ah, hold on.” Fingers tightened on his shoulders, and muscles clamped down on his cock, as she started to ride faster. Never up and down, never bouncing, but instead always grinding herself back and forth. She started to squeeze, and didn’t stop, making each inch she managed to work of his length around inside her drag along her insides.

She started to cum, and she grinned at him as she did. Holding his shoulders still, she ground her body on him, and clenched in rhythm with it again, mixing with the random spasms of her insides as she shivered in bliss. More juices leaked out of her smooth lips, and when he looked down, he groaned as he watched some of the slow juices trickle out of her onto the base of his cock. His hands continued to massage her breasts, thumbs tracing circles around her nipples, as he stared between his arms down at her taut slit. Her abs crunched with each tremble, highlighting the strong but feminine curves of her waist, and where it met her hips and pelvis in the glorious S shapes a woman’s body had in droves.

“Nothing quite like a guy staring at me like when I cum.” Still shivering a little, she resumed her previous rhythm. Orgasm was nothing more than a speed bump for her. “I was going to say, I can handle the cost of getting you a nice suite in the Carlava Villa, if you prove your worth.”

“Prove my worth?” Uh oh.

“Don’t worry, nothing you probably haven’t already assumed. Those hunters are going to cause problems for us, and we need eyes and ears open. Report to me information, anything unusual, peculiar, and I’ll treat you right.”

“ ... and what does treating me right include?” More deals with devils. Well, fuck it, in for a penny.

“Money, a better place to live, in a place where Kindred keep shit safe and peaceful.” She started to pick up her pace again, animal eyes devouring him, his body, and his eyes too. “I don’t think you’d make a good thrall or ghoul, too much spine, but a vampire? Mmm, you got a certain quality to you I like.”

This vampire could not tell what was different about him, just that he was different. He was pretty sure he was a werewolf, whatever the fuck that actually meant, but how was he supposed to know that for sure? He had to talk to Fiona, alone, but until she came back, he was fucked. And the fuck was going to happen if this Jessy woman tried to turn him?

“I uh ... think I’ll pass, on the being-turned-into-a-vampire thing.”

“I wasn’t offering. It takes time to build up to something like that. I’m just saying, I like what I see, Eric Tanverson.” She took his hands, and guided them down to her ass cheeks, exposed now that she had the skirt pulled up. Large, firm, they hugged his body tight, molding to the muscles of his legs near his pelvis as she ground on his cock. “I wouldn’t want to change you anytime soon anyway, or want any vamp to change you anytime soon. You taste way too good.”

“ ... thanks.”

“So, you’ll do it? Be another ear for Invictus vamps like me, and I’ll make sure you get some good living to go with your new salary.” She continued to grind herself on him, getting faster again, and faster, until she went rigid, and started to shiver. Without breaking eye contact, she slid her hands down from his shoulders to his chest, and caressed his muscles as she came, as she soaked him, as she clenched down on his cock until he felt the warmth of his cum building up underneath his length. “And lots of sex, of course, as a bonus.” And of course she didn’t miss a beat, talking easily despite how he could still feel her shivers on his cock.

In for a pound.

“Sure.”

“Excellent. I’ll probably drop by every week for a quick check up. In the mean time, try and get laid some more? I can tell I’m the only pussy you’ve been getting.”

“I ... I was waiting for Fiona. The date, remember? And besides, you’re one to talk. You’ve cum twice and I haven’t cum once yet.” I’m rubber, you’re glue.

Laughing, she came in closer, pressed her breasts to his chest, and put her lips on his neck. “I’ll fix that,” she said. He took a breath, braced himself, and waited. But she didn’t bite him, instead, ground on him more, and pushed her breasts into his bare chest in small circles. “Relax, it’s not going to hurt, except that tiny pinch at the start. You remember, right? Just pumping cum into me as I drank you?” Her voice was heavy, hungry, and her hands slipped around his waist underneath his shirt to hold him tighter.

Relax, right, relax. Easier said than done. He had a million new instincts telling him this woman was deadly and he should be careful with her, not to mention relaxing was not a word in his vocabulary. Never was.

But, as she continued to press herself into him, grind into him, gently clench on his cock, and moan softly into his ear, he took another breath, and let himself relax. A little. It was enough to make

Jessy chuckle again, and after putting a kiss on his neck near the shoulder, she bit into him.

Breathe. Just breathe, like the dreams told him to.

He held onto the woman's waist and hips, and let himself melt into the booth as the waves of bliss washed over him. Whatever her bite was, whatever gave it such power, he stopped caring. All that mattered in the moment, was how it rendered him so relaxed, he felt every muscle unclench as his cum started to flood her insides.

~~Beatrice~~

What a weird situation to be in.

She sat up, and looked across the room. Julias's biggest bedroom again, the fanciest bed, and the nicest room. Being in it made her feel like a queen, or a princess, or something super ridiculous. Maybe some day she should ask Julias to get some thralls to custom fit her a really big dress, the ones with the huge ass, fancy Victorian dresses.

Julias and Jen were in bed with her. Sex over, the blankets all screwed up, and everyone naked. This was the fifth time they'd fucked, the three of them. Each time, Beatrice found herself enjoying it, a lot, and she could tell Julias and Jen were enjoying it a lot too. Julias, well, he got another set of boobs and legs in the bed, so, duh. Jen was enjoying worming her way into their lives. Hell, she was snuggling into Julias right now. Triss's damn fault for leaving Jen in the middle when they were done.

Jen caught her glance, sat up, crawled over, and put Julias between them. "Come on, there's plenty to snuggle." Naked body pressed up to Julias's chest and side, she set her chin on his chest, and smiled at her.

Triss rolled her eyes, and slid into the nook of Julias's arm as well. Part of her wanted to be jealous that maybe Jen was taking her man, but the emotion never came. Why wasn't she annoyed that Jen had her naked body snug against Julias's leg and side like that, rubbing her big breasts into him, and teasing a finger along his chest and stomach? Somehow, the sneaky Ventrue bitch had successfully become her friend, wormed her way into their bed, and gotten comfortable. And Triss liked it, liked the strange, cozy, relaxed smiles Jen had on her. The girl had one right now as she watched Triss, chin still on Julias's chest.

Triss caught Julias looking at the Nos, and her Superman hugged her in closer. His arm behind her reached up to slip his fingers into her hair, and she melted as she settled her cheek on his chest, body lifted a little so she could rest on it, face only inches from Jen's.

"Your man is great a poker," Jen said.

"You're both sneaky bastards. What the fuck is my tell? Tell me!"

Both Ventrue bastards shook their heads, in sync.

Grumbling, she lowered her forehead down to Julias's chest, and hit it against him a few times. "Dicks."

Julias laughed. Jen laughed. The two had a lot in common, and every time she was with them, she noticed more and more of it. If Jen had another ninety years of vampire life under her belt, she'd probably have gone through the same emotional life phases Julias had, now that Triss thought about it. Maybe that's why she liked the two of them so much, because they were kind of similar? Or, she was a glutton for punishment, cause the two sneaky fuckers loved to tease her.

"What're your plans today, ladies?" Julias said. "I have to get back to HQ in a moment."

“Do you?” Jen climbed up onto the man’s waist, straddled him, and put her hands to his shoulders.

With Triss already snug in the nook of Julias’s arm and chest, she got a front row seat to Jen’s blatant attempt to seduce her boyfriend. It was strangely adorable. Julias was impervious to direct seduction, and Jen knew it too, but she tried anyway. She traced one hand down the man’s body, his broad chest, his flat stomach, and her other reached up to caress one of her breasts, before cupping it and lightly bouncing it in her palm. It was more than big enough to fill her hand, and jiggle as she bounced it.

“Not going to work,” Julias said, grinning his typical jackass grin.

“You’ll make a lady sad, ignoring her advances,” Jen said. But, as if a light bulb clicked on over her head, she slid off of him, and onto Triss. The Nos squeaked as she suddenly found herself underneath Jen. The girl wasted no time, got Triss onto her back, and set herself down onto her, chest to chest. “How about Triss and I give you a treat? Should only take a few minutes.” The evil woman leaned in, and put a kiss on Triss’s lips, all while looking toward the other Ventrue in the bed.

Triss let her. Hell, her claws found their way onto Jen’s waist, and half-hugged her as she returned the kiss. She managed a glance Julias’s way as she kissed Jen too, and grinned as the man’s expression broke. Yeah, that’s right you cocky dick, even you can’t resist this.

Jen sat up, and straddled Triss’s waist, like she was on Julias a moment before. And like a kid drawn into a silly game, Triss raised her hands up along the woman’s waist, belly, her sides, and up to her breasts. The game was to try and seduce Julias, make him late for his job, and Triss knew they couldn’t; man was too good at being Ventrue, and loved the Invictus too much. But it was fun to try anyway. Triss cupped Jen’s breasts, holding them with thumbs along their inside contours, fingers along the outside. Soft, inviting, Triss squeezed them a little harder than she should have, to see them conform to her fingers. And of course, so Julias could too.

“Not going to work ladies.” The bastard winked at the two of them, climbed out of bed, and started getting dressed.

Jen sighed, and rolled over to lie beside Triss again, before the two of them rolled over to watch the man get dressed, Jen behind her. And also just like a kid, Jen started playing with the various piercings in Triss’s ear, and the chain that connected ear to nostril, while the two of them watched Julias.

Triss let her. Facing away like this, it was easier to smile where Jen couldn’t see how much she was enjoying it, especially when Julias smirked at the two of them.

“Something about a man putting on a suit,” Jen said.

“I know right? Arg, makes me want to ... put on his tie, kiss him goodbye as he goes to work, while I stay home and clean the house.”

The Ventrue pressed to her back laughed. “Can I move in next door, and be your friend? We can have book night every Saturday, and secretly get drunk.”

“You know ladies,” Julias said as he came around to the foot of the bed, straightening his tie, “you’re painting an awfully lovely picture.”

The two girls sat up, facing the man. Must have been quite a sight, two girls naked, sitting in a man’s bed, and try as she might to stop smiling, Triss couldn’t help herself. Julias was smiling at her because she was smiling, and she was smiling because he was smiling. And damn it all if the two of them weren’t smiling because Jen was smiling like a satisfied house cat.

Kindred were weird.

“White picket fence?” he said. Turning, he offered them a small wave, and looked over his shoulder to wait for Triss’s response.

Triss winked at him, and waved back. “Of course.”

Jen waved too, grinning at the two of them. She really ate up their romance. Every time Julias and Triss got tender with each other, kissed romantically, hugged and cuddled and stuff, Jen squealed or mewled liked she was watching kittens. Made sense, considering the house cat comparison.

Julias closed the door. Now, it was just the two of them.

“Ah well, I tried. Damn man is too resistant to my seduction skills. Frustrating.” Jen slipped out of bed, and started getting dressed.

“Figured you’d try and continue on me,” Triss said, “once he was gone.”

“Course not. You two are lovers, I’m the friend.” She scoffed, an actual scoff, as if already wearing the queenly dress Triss was imagining earlier. “I won’t violate that.”

“ ... thanks.”

“That said, I reserve the right to admire a naked Beatrice as she gets dressed. And maybe feel her up every once in a while.”

“Perfectly reasonable.” In fact, Triss got up off the bed, and started helping her. The pencil skirt, the shoes, those Jen put on, but the shirt and suit jacket, Triss slipped onto her arms. And of course, no jacket buttons done, and only the bottom shirt button done. “Jesus, wear a bra.”

“Why would I wear a bra?”

“Etiquette.”

“Ha.” Jen laughed, and followed Triss as the Nos started getting dressed. Putting on a thong, a g-string at that, was always an exercise of pure decadence, underwear meant for nothing more than to let a viewer know what the body would look like naked, without being naked. She liked it. And Jen liked it too, cause the woman groaned as she watched on, staring at Triss’s back while the Nos slipped on the underwear, and then her black jeans.

But before Triss could slip on her black tank top, Jen came up to her, and put her hands on her hips from behind. Evil, devilishly evil hands sneaked up her stomach, and caressed her abs, fingers tracing through the subtle indentations, before rising higher to find her nipples. “You should wear a bra.”

“I have half the rack you do.” Two girls, talking about and fondling each other’s tits. Were they inside Julias’s head? Or Jack’s?

“Yeah but everyone can see your nipple piercings through your top.” And, to prove her point, she continued to play with her nipples, tugging on the piercings and caressing them between finger and thumb. If Triss was still blushing life, it’d have been enough to have some delightful sparks starting to warm her.

But she wasn’t blushing life, thank god. Rolling her eyes, she put the tank top on, pushing Jen’s hands out of the way at the same time.

“Come on, let’s go. Jacob said he wanted to continue my lesson,” Triss said. She really, really, very much did not want to continue that lesson, but she was committed. Treasures macabre were promised to her at the end of this hellish journey, and fuck it all, she really wanted a taste of that madness.

And out they went. The servants nodded to them, they nodded back, and everyone was perfectly at home with the two witches inside the Invictus mansion. It was weird, so very weird, and she prayed it'd stay weird, and not turn to suspicious.

“I was thinking, about what you said in the den, before you took out your eye. It's true. The rest of us don't really pull our weight for the Circle.”

“I wasn't asking you to pull your eye out too, you know. Just—”

“Yeah, just that, shit in this city used to be great, and now it's not, and we're not really stepping up to do anything about it. So I was talking to Aaron and Othello about it, and we all agreed, we need to start doing more shit.” Jen followed her out the back door, the two of them nodding to the informed thralls.

Outside, Dolareido, the night sky, way up on Rich Side. It was a few miles to the edge of the city where their den was, a secure den now that Jacob had updated it. But most nights, Jen and Triss were both at Julias's mansion. It'd only taken a couple nights of some rather awesome sex before Triss felt comfortable asking Julias about Jen sleeping in the basement bunker at night with them. Going out at night, alone, anywhere that wasn't within throwing distance of your fellow Kindred, was no longer allowed. So Jen leaving the mansion every night before dawn was problematic anyway.

Plus, Triss kinda wanted her around. She ... really liked having her around. Not as much as she liked being with Julias, but there wasn't anything wrong with having your cake and eating it too, right? It'd been so damn long since Triss had a friend, an actual friend friend. The sex was bonus, a very tasty bonus.

Triss buried them both in her cloak of night, and they started walking toward the den. Grass, random trees, rocks, some small smooth sloping hills, and decent open sky. The city's edge. No chance they'd get ambushed out here, unless the hunters felt confident enough to hang out in trees with rifles or some shit, instead of hiding in the comfort of walls and locked doors. Not like they'd be able to see cloaked vamps from a distance anyway, hopefully.

“What're you going to do?” Triss said.

“Aaron and Othello are partnering up. Jacob's pointed them in the direction of the hunters' last known location, but he expects they'll find nothing. Still, they're going to try and dig up some evidence, some clue or trail they can use. Whatever, right?”

“Sounds good. And you?”

“I'm going to be helping you with whatever you're doing.” Jen winked at her as they walked, the long grass reaching up to their knees. “ ... and ... that includes the lessons you've been taking with Jacob.”

“You want to get involved in crúac?”

“ ... yes.”

“Jen, think twice about this. You don't know what you're getting yourself into.”

“How terribly cliché.”

“I'm serious! I told you what happened, what he did. I told you about ... the knives. I wasn't exaggerating, Jen.” She stopped to touch her stomach under her tank top. Pain was becoming normal, considering Jacob had already done a couple sessions of stabbing her a dozen times, and then the night with the hunter pumping her full of lead happened. Ugh, she didn't want it to become normal, to become something she could handle, cause then Jacob would find new ways to make sure it still had some spice to it.

“I don’t expect to be part of the ritual on the first night ... unless, Jacob is feeling particularly mean.”

“Which you know could happen.”

“But even if that happens, I want to be a part of this. You’re my friend, and ... and I didn’t join the Circle just to be a freeloader off that psycho.”

Triss stopped, and looked at the girl. The business suit with the pencil skirt and open shirt was becoming Jen’s favorite clothes to seduce Julias with, and Triss by proxy. She looked good in it, great in it even, but she didn’t look like a member of the Circle. Hell, now that Triss thought about it, the only people in the circle she felt actually fit the role, was her, and Jacob.

“Why did you join the Circle?” she said.

Jen sighed, shrugged, and stopped as well, turning to face Triss. “My sire left not long after he embraced me. He was a member of the Carthians; you might remember him, Marcus.” Triss did remember him, but barely. Not a guy she’d ever engaged with. “I got a little taste of the Carthians, their borderline anarchist ways, and ... ugh, hated it. I’m not interested in fighting for a cause.” The wince on her face made her look guilty for the admission, like it pained her to say it.

Triss put up her hands. “No judgment from me, Jen.”

“You certainly sounded like you were judging, when you yelled at us.”

“Er, well, yeah, kinda. But I mean, not wanting to fight for a cause, just want to do your own thing? I get that. But you don’t need to be a part of a covenant for that.”

“Unfortunately, if I left the Carthians and went covenantless at the time, Tony would have considered me a part of his group, whether I wanted to be or not.”

Ah, right, Tony. “God I’m glad I ripped that Rebecca bitch in half.”

Jen raised a brow. “ ... you killed Rebecca?”

“Shit, did you not know? Crap. I probably shouldn’t have said that. People think Julias did it, and it’s better it stays that way.” People wouldn’t question why Julias killed her, considering the nature of the incident. But, why Beatrice was there, would have garnered questions, and questions could have led to talk of what actually happened. If people found out about Jack... “I followed Julias, and ... yeah, big fight of a situation. I took advantage of it, and killed that fucking bitch.”

“Why?”

“ ... why not?”

“Because as much as you’re a loose cannon, you’re not that much of a loose cannon, to go killing Kindred. Garry asked you to kill her, didn’t he?”

“Yeah. Can you blame him?”

“No, I can’t, I suppose. I heard about what she did to Jack too, the night of his embrace.”

“Back on topic. Why are you in the Circle now, if Tony’s dead? You don’t have to stay anymore if you would prefer to be by yourself.”

“ ... because I like it.” She started walking toward the den again, a bit faster, and Triss had to jog a moment to catch up to her. “I like the philosophy, the views, the beliefs. I like how open we all are, sexually. But it's not just that. I like Aaron and Othello. I like the skulls with candles in them. I like the painting of bones on the walls. I get a tingle up my spine each time I see Jacob use that blood bowl, and do some crazy shit ... Fuck, it turns me on, you know? We're vampires, we're beasts of blood, and ... gives me shivers."

Yeah, Triss knew that feeling, and knew it well. The same night Jacob had exposed her to Black Blood, and spent a little time introducing her guts to knives, she fucked Julias. Not long after either. Went to him, a little startled, a little scared, sore and hungry, and a little afraid to admit the whole ordeal had sent a tingle up her spine. A creature of the night, practicing dark rituals with entities colossal and terrifying? Yeah, it had sent a thrill through her she doubted she'd find anywhere else.

"I get that," she said. "I get it ... more than you know. But, I'm not kidding Jen. It's scary shit."

"... bring it."

---

"I suppose it was only a matter of time," Jacob said. The man was in his black robe again, hints of stained red around the thread. He stood with a very Sith style, hands slipped into the sleeves of each other arm in front of him so his hands were hidden, head hidden in the robe's hood, body beneath the gate of the cemetery. His cloak of night was impenetrable, and no one would be able to see him until he wanted them to.

"... I suppose it was," Jen said.

Triss frowned at Jacob, but didn't say anything. She could warn him to be nice to Jen, but that was pointless, and would have invited the bastard to be more of a bastard. Better to let things unfurl naturally, and for it to scare the fuck out of Jennifer at a normal level.

“You coming because you’re genuinely interested, Jennifer?” The psycho started to walk along, slowly, making sure to take his time and let the mood sink in, let the inevitability of pain and screams soak the two younger Kindred. Like marinating god damn steaks. “Testing these waters because you want to get closer to your girlfriend won’t end well.”

“She’s my friend, Jacob.” Jen fell in step beside him, and offered him as hard a glare as she could muster. It wasn’t normal for the girl to carry a frown, let alone a harsh glare; anything but a seductive smile looked strange on her. But, it was better than nothing, and Jacob laughed as he continued along. “And, I am interested for my own sake too.” The cemetery was silent, and yet, Triss thought for sure it was laughing at Jen too.

“As long as you’re here to taste of the blood, to give it a chance peek because you’re interested in what the blood has to offer, then you are welcome to come.” The Joker shrugged, chuckle coming and going. “Three Kings Cemetery will be a place you come to know well then, Jennifer. I hope you agree with it.” Not ‘hope it agrees with you’ of course.

As they walked, he hopped onto one of the graves, one with a very large, fancy tombstone with an angel on it. A warrior angel, with sword drawn and pointed upward. Truly amazing craftsmanship, and Jacob leaned out to catch his weight on its raised sword like someone swinging on a stripper pole.

“Did I ever tell you the story of Captain Darmer?” he said.

The two women raised a brow at each other, then at him. “Um, no?”

“Well, in the 1500s, pirates started to become a thing. Colonization was common, and not long after, trade by boat. Countries had to police their own waters, but it was proving impossible to actually police the open sea. It was an interesting time for vampires, as while a major focus of crime — always a tool for Kindred — was turning to the sea, vampires found themselves grounded. What vampire would dare sail open waters, when a sunrise could kill them?

“There were a few, actually. Most died, horribly, a victim of their circumstance. One died when his ship was blown apart by cannon fire during the day. Another starved, and probably sits at the bottom of the ocean as we speak, deep in torpor and likely dead from barnacles eating his poor ass. But, Captain Darmer was smarter than that. A woman, she used her feminine wiles to lure men and women into her employ. Soon she had a small army of thralls as her crew. They raided at night, sailed at night, and during the day they docked inside a hidden base, within a sea cave.

“Now old Captain Darmer, she was smart in many ways. The crew served her faithfully, as thralls tend to do, but they were also afraid of her and her powers. Darmer kept the skull of one victim of each city she raided in a chest, usually a politician or someone of importance. She spoke to those skulls, listened to their whispers. The crew thought she was crazy at first, until she started asking the skulls for secrets, about things, random things, weird things, the things you could only know if you were a politician, or a rich bastard.

“She spoke to her crew about the whispers of the skulls. When they doubted her, she guided them to raid a city, or find a sailing ship carrying expensive cargo. Time after time, she was correct in her predictions about the bounty. The whispers of the dead guided her, as they were bound to her, unable to escape to whatever afterlife awaited them.”

Both girls squeaked, paralyzed, as Jacob turned and grabbed both of them by the shoulders. He had the bandage covering his empty eyes, but the smirk said it all.

“She bound these skulls with crúac, forced them to speak to her, took away their freedom and rendered them helpless voices.” He leaned in closer to Jen, and licked a fang as he got in her face. “Are you prepared to walk such waters, Jen? To feel the souls of the damned tug at your bed sheets every night?”

Both Kindred tried to shake themselves loose, but the old man’s grip was absolute. They weren’t moving unless he wanted them to move. Bastard was obviously exaggerating the nefariousness of his tale ... at least, a little.

“ ... what happened to Captain Darmer?” she said.

The old fucker started to laugh. “Alas, poor Darmer, dragged into the depths of the sea by those she had cursed to serve as her tools.” Jen gulped, and so did Beatrice, but Jacob let them go, and dismissed them with a small hand wave. “I kid. She tried to raid a ship she wasn’t sure about and found herself in battle with a navy ship. She burned.”

Laughing all the more, Jacob started the long walk through the cemetery, and toward the mausoleum deep within the gathering of the dead. Pillars on the sides of the stone building’s entrance, and a cross on the entry’s archway, greeted the three of them with its intimidating, awe-inspiring magnificence. Jacob started up the small stairway, and stopped as he came to the statue of the virgin Mary. With a small chuckle and smile, he reached out and touched the worn statue’s face, before he opened the gate into the building.

In the darkness of the mausoleum, Jacob withdrew an LED lantern, and took a second to examine the various coffin shelves within, before he pressed on a nook in one of them. The floor began to slide to the side, exposing the old, stone stairway beneath. Triss glanced Jen’s way to see how she reacted to exposed stairway, and blinked as she noticed Jen stare at it with eyes wider than normal. She was afraid.

Triss took the woman's hand. Jen squeezed hers in return, offered a smile too, before she let go. Much as Triss wanted to be supportive for her, this was serious, neck-deep Circle of the Crone shit, and they had to be able to handle that on their own; to a degree, at least.

Jacob started down the stairs, and the two of them followed. Tiny stairway, short entrance, and they both ducked to get their heads under the old stones. Jacob pulled a crank ahead, and it closed behind them. Jen began to shiver, and set a hand on Triss's shoulder as they walked down the narrow stairway into the blackness of the depths. The smell of dead flesh, old and new, filled their nostrils, and Jen raised her wrist to her nose. She'd have to get used to it, if she was going to be joining Triss down here.

"How many times ... have you done this?" she said.

Jacob turned around, and walked backward, lantern held up so the two girls could see the bloody designs drawn on the walls as it turned from stone bricks, to a cave. "Oh, hundreds."

"I meant Triss." Fucker knew Jen meant her too.

"This is my third time coming down here." Third time she was going to attempt to learn a crúac ritual. It was going to hurt.

They continued, into the depths of the Earth, passing pillars of wood that held the cave up, and various rocks and small cuts in the dirt beneath them. It felt like walking into a catacomb, an old-fashioned catacomb not unlike the one Triss used to hang out in. They were beneath a cemetery, so it certainly fit, but it just felt so god damn macabre each time Triss came down here. She liked macabre, and hell, she even liked this, but it could be a bit much. And Jen kept her hand on Triss's shoulder, her fingers clutching and shaking a little as they went deeper and deeper. Kindred their age wouldn't be able to escape a cave-in, and that sucked.

The sign ‘Continue Forth, and Deaths Awaits Thee’ came up, and Jen stared at the skulls dangling from it. If any human found this place, they’d find that, report it, and the Invictus would immediately suppress the story. But there was no chance anyone would find this place. Even if they did, all they’d find would be bones and corpses, nothing that could risk the Masquerade. Hopefully. But Masquerade risk or not, it was fucking spooky as shit to see that sign, in a pitch-dark tunnel, with the two of them being led by a creepy man in a dark robe holding a lantern. She couldn’t blame Jen for squeezing her shoulder tighter.

Eventually the room opened up. There wasn’t any howling this time, thank god, but the blood bowl was still there, held up by the dark skeletons underneath it. Jen let go of Triss’s shoulder, and drifted closer, eyes drawing across the terrible sight of the large blood bowl that put the one she was familiar with to shame. She froze when she looked up, and noticed the enormous hook hanging there.

Jacob reached out, and pulled her back.

“W-What? I haven’t touched—”

The man shook his head, and pulled her back further, until she was beside Triss. Triss almost said something, almost asked what the fuck he was doing or getting at, but the man offered them only a small frown before he turned toward the bowl, and stood before it.

“Come out.” Jacob pulled back his hood, exposed the white bandage that circled his head to cover his eyes, and he scanned the darkness with his lantern raised.

The two girls looked at each other, then at him. Black Blood? No, couldn’t have been. Jacob looked spooked, or annoyed, and he and that Black Blood entity were on good terms far as Triss could tell. Try as she might, she couldn’t sense anyone else except for Jacob though, and judging from Jennifer’s eyes, she couldn’t either.

But there was someone. The soft clack of boots against the stone floor echoed in the silence, and shadows twisted and turned as someone exposed themselves from their cloak of night.

Face as deadpan as ever, the sheriff came out of the black, wearing his usual trench coat and his usual glasses. He had both hands in his pockets, until one raised to adjust his glasses. He looked so dull, he looked so boring. The presence of him had the same cold steel Triss imagined the empty gaze of a jaded executioner would.

Jen and Triss backed away, and stared on, shivering, as the sheriff approached Jacob.

“Hello Jacob.”

“Why hello there Daniel. The fuck are you doing in my home away from home?”

Daniel sighed, and looked over to the blood bowl. Triss couldn't see into it from where she was, but the sheriff reached in, and pulled out flesh. A human head, a man's, and he dangled it by his hair. Poor dude's eyes were open wide, and horror was etched into his face, frozen in death.

“I'm investigating possible leads into disturbances. More than one finger has been pointed at this.” The sheriff motioned to the blood bowl, and then to Jacob, as if the two were the same.

“I doubt my decor is the cause of these disturbances,” Jacob said, hands raised to quote ‘disturbances’. “And I never gave you permission to be in here, Daniel.”

“I don't need your permission.” The sheriff walked up to Jacob, looked at him, face as still as a tombstone, and past him toward the two women.

And the two women were struck still. They stared up at the man, both not moving, but trembling a little, both waiting. Being near the sheriff at a ball or Kindred gathering was one thing. Being alone with him was another.

“I, um ... w-what sort of disturbances?” Triss said. Probably shouldn’t have said anything, but the silence was killing her.

“That is part of the mystery.” The man sighed, and continued to walk around the room, hands in his pockets, as casual and calm as ever. Far as Triss knew, Daniel was younger than Jacob; not that it was easy for elders of that age to remember their exact ages, but everyone was under the impression Jacob had a century on him. Did it even matter at that age? Or, was Daniel just that good, he didn’t give a shit about Jacob as a threat?

Triss winced as she noticed the hard, long flat bit along a portion of the back of his trench coat. His sword. She was tempted to make a joke, something along the lines of ‘is that a sword in your coat, or are you just looking to fuck?’ but it was probably a bad idea.

“What have you and Black Blood been up to, Jacob?” Daniel’s wandering took him around the room, and he paused every so often to look at the various patterns etched into the walls with rock. Other patterns were drawn with blood, and they stained the dirty stone like a timeline of torture.

Jen mouthed ‘Black Blood’, and looked Triss’s way. She mouthed ‘later’. Best not to throw gasoline onto this fire.

“Ask him yourself.”

“It, ask it.” Daniel shook his head, and reached out to touch the edge of the blood bowl in the center. “Remember what it is, Jacob.”

Jacob, groaning, tossed the lantern backward, and Triss had to scamper to catch it. Not like she was going to let their only source of light go out, this far underground. Jacob approached the sheriff, rolled up a sleeve, and ... held his own chin, like he was thinking about something. She thought for sure he was going to throw a punch.

“Black Blood and I have a mutual and beneficial relationship, Mr. Sheriff, and it’s none of your concern. You and your pretty lit—tall lady can continue your experiments, continue poking through to the other side in your own way, and I’ll continue with mine.”

“Not good enough.” Daniel continued around the bowl, beyond it, so it was between him and the girls. Past the bowl into the black was where Black Blood had appeared last time, where it had snatched the corpse Jacob had prepared for it.

And then they were gone. Blackness. A side of the room Triss had never seen. It was just a room, a wall, a cave or something, but she never went over there, because that’s where that thing had come from. Good a reason as any.

Clanking. Metal, chains, stone hitting other stone, and some other metal sounds she couldn’t identify echoed through the room.

“How many have you killed in here?” Daniel’s voice.

“You follow the news. You control the news. You should know.”

“ ... and this?” More metal clanks, and some fleshy thuds.

“She was selling drugs to kids. Apparently she’d never heard that song. You know the one? Drugs drugs drugs. Some are good, some are bad? Far as I can tell, she thought they were all pretty good.”

Triss facepalmed. Why, why was her boss such a fucking weirdo?

More metal clanks continued, Daniel examining what Triss could only assume was some sort of torture wall. He had a few more questions too, about kine Jacob had obviously killed and was hanging up back there. The smell of rotting flesh and blood was constant, and Triss had expected it coming down, but whatever techniques Jacob used, kept the smell from escaping beyond the stairway. Good, cause even this smell would upset a grave keeper.

Daniel returned to the light, and stood by the bowl. It was like watching a fucking FBI agent investigate your shit, with you right beside them, unable to stop them for fear of retribution. It was a wonder the sheriff didn't flip the enormous blood bowl just to make a mess.

She stood up straight as Daniel came up to her, and looked down at her. The angle of the lantern lit up his lenses, one of them allowing her to see his gaze. Cold. And, as his eyes switched between the two women, she almost thought she saw a hint of sadness. Was he pitying them, the two witches?

“And you two. What have you done with the veil?”

“N-Nothing!” Jen said. Triss nodded. Hell, the fuck did they know about it? Triss, almost nothing. And Jen, probably less.

He stared, still, silent, not even a twitch of the lip to indicate any emotion. After a while of what Triss could only guess was staring into their fucking souls, he walked over to one of the walls where Jacob had painted various symbols in blood, and dusted with bone. The sheriff raised a gloved hand, and ran a finger around the symbol.

“You really like to walk a fine line, Jacob,” Daniel said.

“You're one to talk, dragon. What sort of nasties have you summoned? What sort of experiments have you performed on the kine, hmm? Does your precious Natasha, or Annie's precious Jack, know about the shit you two have done in the depths of your tower?”

Oh good fucking god why weren't they discussing this shit in private, and not in front of the two little neonates who were well beyond their pay grade? This sort of conversation belonged in a Primogen meeting, not out in the open world. But then, they were underneath a graveyard, in a sealed room. The only people hearing the things they shouldn't be hearing would be people in the room, which were just the two neonates, currently standing shoulder to shoulder, and staring at the two elders having a tiff. And if Daniel thought it was too much information for them to know, he could kill them, and there wasn't much Jacob could do about it.

What a lovely night.

“ ... I can't stop you from acquiring new subordinates, Jacob. But understand the Prince and I will only tolerate your games to a point. If you stir the carnage that occurred before we—”

“Have you so little faith in me, Daniel? How long have we known each other, hmm?” Jacob came up to him, stood beside him, and offered him a weird mix of frown and smirk. Joker put a hand on the man's shoulder too. “And, if you wanted to observe me teaching my subordinates here a crúac ritual, you had only to ask.” Up and down, left and right, damn fucker's personality was all over the place.

“ ... No, I don't want to witness that barbarism.” He pushed Jacob's hand off of him, and again approached the blood bowl. It was impossible to tell what the cold man was thinking, or what he'd do, but he was searching, and a Mekhet searching was a pain in the ass. They always found something with that auspex shit.

And like he was reading her mind, Daniel looked at her, and set a hand on the blood bowl. A flinch crossed his eyebrows, and another, as he looked at her, glasses catching the LED lantern's white light, hiding his eyes. But she managed a glimpse of it again, that weird look, that pity look, as he touched the blood-stained metal where a corpse's parts lay, where Triss had lay when Jacob cut into her.

She knew a little bit about auspex, that Mekhet who had a lot of years on them could take that ability into ridiculous realms of insanity. Supposedly, powerful ones could see things, touch things and divine knowledge from them. The Carthians didn't have any particularly strong Mekhet, so she never got to ask. Which just reminded her she had to talk to Damien at some point.

And there was that. Watching this man, this cold guy as he examined their world, he had an air to him she couldn't quite put her finger on, until she compared him to Damien. A quality, a certain something she found in both their eyes, beneath the surface. Something cold.

And to have a cold thing look at you with a degree of pity, was a strange sensation indeed.

"... be careful, Jacob," Daniel said as he began walking toward the exit. "Things are different this time. The city is built, the people are content, and ... yeah. Think about Minerva, would you?"

And all the voices in Hell went silent.

Triss looked at Jen, who looked back at her, and they both looked at Jacob. The elder had his back to Daniel, his eyeless gaze on the blood bowl. Daniel had his back to him, and never once glanced over his shoulder as he walked up the stairway to leave.

Maybe Triss should have used this opportunity to try and be Jacob's friend a little, like Antoinette had asked her to. Be his buddy, be his support, help him out and maybe stop him from doing reckless shit. Bringing up that the Prince asked her to do that could maybe brighten his day, let him know she was looking out for him. Or, backfire horribly and render Triss's tenuous connection cut. But Daniel had brought up Minerva, and that put a stake straight into the old man's back, and out through his heart.

So, she stood there, and waited for the man to do something. It wasn't until they heard the sliding of stone and grinding rock, announcing Daniel's departure, that Jacob turned around.

"Nosy fucker, isn't he?" Jacob said, half grin, half frown.

"Yes..." Jen, shivering enough for it to be visible, walked forward and peeked over the bowl. Body parts, no doubts, and she made an 'ick' face like an upset squirrel before backing away a little.

"How may kine have you killed?" Jacob said.

"Killed?"

"Yes, killed, you silly girl." He reached into the bowl, and started throwing the body parts around. Legs splattered flaps of skin and wet meat against the walls. There were a couple more skulls too. Good fucking god.

"I ... just a couple, you know that. When I was young."

"Triss, how many have you killed?" the bastard said.

"... I didn't count. A fair bit. Kine who deserved it, when I was in a bad mood."

Jen raised a brow at her. Yeah, that wasn't something they'd discussed yet. For all Jen's confidence, and her delightful embracing of the Circle's philosophies, her hands were surprisingly clean. And then there was the whole thing with Rebecca too. Fuck, now she could see Jen's eyes changing, adjusting, adopting a new perspective on Triss. If she was scared or perplexed or surprised, Triss couldn't tell, but the lady was thinking something new about her.

“You’re going to have to get comfortable with death, and blood, Jennifer.” Once the bowl was empty of bodies, Jacob motioned for Triss to come over. “And don’t worry Beatrice, Daniel pissing me the fuck off won’t make this any worse than I’d already planned it.”

“... right.” Wincing the whole way, Triss handed Jen the lantern, and got into the bowl. She took off her top too, and tossed it aside. It wouldn’t survive if she kept it on, and it wasn’t like Jacob was some sort of pervert. Well, maybe not entirely true, but he hadn’t done anything perverted to anyone as far as she knew.

She put her arms and legs out, and stared at the ceiling, the dirty bowl pressing to her ass and back, bits of the dead rubbing into her skin. The chain hanging over her had flakes of dried blood on it. Sighing, she turned her head to watch Jacob as the man walked over to the wall where the light couldn’t penetrate, and he started ruffling through what sounded like a box. Out came candles and a lighter, and the man began to decorate the bowl with the candles along its edge. Vampires hated fire, and elders really hated fire, but Jacob didn’t so much as flinch as he flicked the lighter on, and lit each candle.

He gave her the necklace, and she put it on. An ugly thing, old string she was sure was coated in the blood of a thousand dead; smelled like it. Or maybe it was the tiny skull on it that smelled so bad. A crow skull. Bird skulls were surprisingly neat looking, and a crow skull just reeked of witchcraft. Triss was almost surprised at how cliché it was that Jacob had asked her to wear such a thing during the first lesson.

But the surprised turned into panic, when Jacob had locked her wrists and ankles down, as he did now.

“... Triss told me about this,” Jen said. “About how this is done.”

“Ah, good, then I don’t need to ease you into this.” Jacob, still not done lighting the candles, yanked a knife out of somewhere in his robe, and slammed it down.

Beatrice had expected him to finish lighting the candles first. Shouldn't have. She needed to be prepared, she needed to use her fucking brain and stay aware. But, not like it would have helped much, as she screamed out, the blade cutting into her intestines. She knew what that felt like now, knew it intimately. No amount of bracing, no amount of preparation would ever be enough, for the feeling of metal cutting through the muscle of the abdomen, and the stabbing into the guts. Parts of the body that were never intended to have anything more than food — or a meal's blood — pass through them did not know what to do about metal puncturing through the wall of flesh. The only possible response, was pain.

“Oh god.” Jen took a step back. Probably for the best; Triss was going to start spitting up blood sooner or later.

“Crúac is blood magic, Jennifer. But at the same time, that is such a poor descriptor, that fails to capture both the power of the Circle of the Crone, and of the Beast in us all.” Another knife came out, and slammed down. Triss was prepared this time, but it didn't matter. The most she managed was to grit her teeth and not scream, her crocodile teeth filling the gaps between each other snug, to the point of grinding on each other.

“You may have noticed, Jennifer, that when I perform my rituals, blood is always needed. Typically Kindred blood. But that is fuel, essence, for the ritual. It is not the vehicle.”

“Vehicle?” she said.

“Mmhmm. Dolareido is such a cozy place these days, I honestly didn't think this would be necessary to teach you or Aaron or Othello. But, Beatrice is interested, and with everything that's happening in Dolareido these days, I think it's important. So I am teaching her at her request.” Done with the candles, he picked one up, and dripped some of the wax droplets onto the bird skull between Triss's breasts. "So, you're going to have to get used to something I think even an open-minded person like yourself will have trouble with."

"... which is?"

Jacob grinned at her, and with a snap of his wrists Triss almost couldn't see in the black, he yanked out the two knives, and stabbed again, higher, getting between ribs and reaching her stomach. Blood flowed up her withered insides, vampire blood, thick, heavy, desperate to stay inside her. Its rise was joined by a flood of searing misery, pain like acid coursing through her flesh. Triss yanked against the chains, yanked hard, putting all her Nosferatu strength into trying to snap the chains. Should have been easy. Steel chains, small ones at that? She was Nosferatu, and she was a strong Nosferatu. Steel was her bitch.

They didn't budge.

Jacob chuckled, pat Triss on the head, and smiled at Jen. All a blur in Triss's eyes as the agony fought to overwhelm her senses. Don't let it, don't let it overwhelm you.

"Letting out your Beast."

"... frenzy?" Jen said. "You can't be—"

Jacob grabbed one of the daggers, and forced it across Triss's body.

There was agony, and then there was this. Bone, fighting against blade, before it gave way. Muscle slicing apart, tearing or cutting, she didn't fucking know. But she felt the fire scorch over her, her entire body, head to toe, until she threw her head back, and thick Kindred blood splattered over her crocodile teeth. Her mouth opened wide, full size, to expose the depths of her torment.

The scream echoed for ages.

The first time they'd gone through this, Triss had asked him to stop. He didn't. She learned for the second time to accept the reality of the situation, to try and embrace what this fucking lunatic was trying to teach her. You had to be crazy to see what this fucker was talking about, the way the beast in a Kindred's guts had more power than they realized. It didn't only speak in terms of animal, it spoke in terms of blood, and things beyond.

Pain, and blood loss, brought that beast to the surface, screaming and roaring the whole way. But she wasn't there yet, and she glared up at Jacob with her snake eyes as the man grinned down at her. She managed a glance at Jen too, and grit her teeth at the sight of the woman, her wide eyes, and the panic starting to rise in them. Despite her confidence, Jen was not hard, not like Jacob wanted from his witches.

Would she be able to handle it? Triss didn't know, and as Jacob twisted the knife, she didn't care.

"I told you to stop trying to control it!" Jacob yanked the knife out, and she screamed as the man made sure to do it on an angle, tearing through ribs with the motion. "If only you were Gangrel, letting your Beast out would be so much easier." Spinning it around in his fingers, between his knuckles, he walked around the blood bowl, smiling at Triss with every step. Fuck him, fuck him and his stupid fucking smile fuck him fuck him.

Again, Jacob dropped some wax droplets onto the skull crow between her breasts. The sting of hot wax was buried in the waves of agony. Her toes stretched outward inside her boots, her fingers and claws tried desperately to grab onto anything; the only thing they found was the blood bowl's edge. She could feel more of her blood pooling inside the bowl, until her ass was splashing in it as it faded into ash. Hungry. So hungry.

“I ... I don't understand. How is she going to learn anything from this?”

“Her mind is in the way. Crúac isn't about learning a set of ingredients, it's about scarring your soul, letting your soul taste the Beast within.”

Triss twisted, squirmed, struggled, tried to break free of the chains. Hungry. So fucking hungry. Had to get blood into her. She was losing more of it, losing all of it, and as her Kindred body started to heal itself, Jacob laughed, and stabbed the blade into her leg. For a faint moment, she wanted to complain about him damaging her jeans, before she screamed, coughing up blood over her chest. Jacob hit the bone, and went into it, twisting the blade around and churning her flesh like potatoes and butter.

Her voice started to go hoarse from her constant shrieking.

“Pain is delightful, isn't it?” The psychopath walked up to her side closer to her head, leaving the one knife jammed into her femur, while he brought the other up to her neck. Then, up her chin, and toward her mouth. “If I bury you in it, let it wash away your thoughts, your feelings, your everything, the Beast within you can actually touch your soul, Jennifer. Like tea time, between these two Brobdingnagian concepts. I have taught Triss the rites for this particular crúac ritual. Now, I must force the communion within. And”—his knife came up at an angle, up through the base of her jaw, and up into her mouth—“that's half the fun.”

Triss's scream turned into a roar, and she twisted her head from side to side to try and dislodge the metal skewering up through her jaw, hitting the roof of her mouth through her tongue. Get out get out get out, eat, eat, let me feed!

To a vampire, the beast was both a problem and an ally. It gave them their instincts, their abilities, it gave them their acute senses and their love of blood. It also took over if a vampire got too hungry, went too long without eating, or suffered so many wounds that they bled away all they had. Any animal went frenzy if dying of hunger, but for a vampire, it was like letting an entity off its chain, Mister Hyde on the inside, something that was there all the time but you kept it down because if you didn't, you'd break the Masquerade and quickly find yourself dead. More than that, you kept it down because you could feel the thing that was still human inside you slip away every time the fucker got close to the surface.

Giving into it was freeing.

Thoughts vanished. Images vanished. Ideas, concepts, vanished. Triss vanished. All she wanted, all she cared about, was getting this fucking thing, this sharp and painful thing, out of her body, and devouring something. Someone. Anything! Anything with two legs, anything that bled.

There were two things, things like her, in the room with her, near her. She could drink them! Have them, drink them, take their lives and fuel hers. Law of the jungle, law of the wild, law of the fucking world, the strong prey on the weak. Break free, break free!

The chains would not break.

One of them was still talking, making stupid noises. Woman beside him was also making noises. Again Triss struggled against the chains, harder, every ounce of her Nosferatu strength pulling against the weird metal. Steel? What was steel? No, just hardness, just a thing she wanted to break through, but she couldn't. Fury and fire mixed together, and the thing inside her guts roared until the walls became an echo chamber, the blood bowl vibrating with her voice.

And then, everything froze.

White. She saw white. Going to die? Bright light? Snarling, twisting, turning, she stared at the white light, and drew her head back to the bowl as it grew brighter. What the hell? What the fuck? Silence came second. She turned her head to look around, but all she could see was white. Yeap, she was dead, this was death. That man killed her ... Jacob, Jacob was his name.

No longer bound. No longer in a blood bowl. Her, standing, naked. She looked down, and sighed relief at the lack of knives puncturing her, her guts or her jaw. Naked, but still with her tattoos and piercings, still with her claws and her crocodile teeth. The beast was no longer roaring in her skull, and the pain was no longer the fire on its tail.

She walked around, on the white endless. It had no feeling, no texture, and she had no weight; strange to be walking around then. She turned around, and around, and around, until a black wall in the distance caught her eye. Wall was a strong word, more like a pocket of shadow, some weird hole of darkness against the endless white that surrounded her. And, there was movement in its embrace.

She walked toward it, but arrived instantly. Wherever she was, this heaven, or hell, or purgatory or whatnot, it didn't care about the physical. Land of the mind, or something. Was this all in her head? But if that was true, then what the fuck was she looking at?

Before her, against the small pocket of blackness, was an altar. A dead crow's body sat upon the small wooden table, candles burning all around it. Its head was already removed, and its feathers, brains, and eyeballs were scattered upon the alter, around the candles. Its skull sat in the center. But she'd seen the altar before, in the real world. Jacob had showed her the ritual, demonstrated it, this ritual, the Crow's Eye ritual. But, words, all words, just words. Feathers and brains and eyeballs, crows, and ... the thing that sat before her.

The beast.

Shadows, flowing, flicking at the whiteness around it, a cloud of onyx with wings and talons, a snake tail, claws, a beak with teeth. It had all these things, wrapped in obsidian and flowing in and out of existence, shadow swirling in and out against the white. Like a tide in the ocean, or blood in a sacrifice.

The beast looked at her, eyes blood red, nothing but blood, only blood. And, with its wing arm claw limb, it reached out, picked up one of the candles, and dripped wax onto the crow's skull. It set the candle down, stepped aside, and waited. Well, far be it from her to keep the beast waiting. Wax on, wax off, sensei. She stepped in, got down on her knees before the altar, and did the same thing, a drop of wax for the crow skull.

The beast reached out with its wing arm claw limb, and cut its talon claw knife fang across it. A drop of blackness fell upon the crow skull. Triss reached out, cut her wrist a little with her claw, and forced out a drop of her vitae onto the crow skull. The beast nodded.

What the fuck was this zen horse shit? This wasn't the fucking Matrix! Oh god, she took the red pill. When did she take the red pill? Why the f—“—UCK!” Pain snapped its ugly maw and devoured her whole once again. Weight, blood, knives and twisting and bone and sinew and tendon and muscle and organs and stained, rusty metal, all came crashing back. Back to the real world, back to heavy, back to two people looking down at her, one of them looking like she was about to cry, one of them grinning an evil, mad doctor's grin, as he stared down at her with no eyes.

He raised his knife.

“Jacob,” Triss said, “... something happened.” Something, something happened. Like a dream, it all faded, hazy, wisps of images and sensations dispersing into the whiteness of wherever her mind had taken her. But something had happened, something had changed. Something in her trumpeted triumph. Something in her roared its power.

Jacob leaned over her, looked into one of her eyes, then the other, and smiled. “Welcome to the fold, witch.”

---

---

~~Jack~~

As much as he loved his vacation, spending every moment he could in Antoinette’s arms, it was time to get back to work.

“Finally done fucking your girl?” Jessy said. “Been at it for a week now. Poor woman must be painted white.”

He laughed. Crass and crude, but at the same time, that was how Jessy gave compliments. It was Jessynese for ‘glad you’re back, hope you had good sex’.

The two of them were in his apartment again, on the couches and opposite of each other, ready to get to work.

“It was pretty great,” he said. “Ever had a stronger person pin you down and pamper you in sex, Jessy? Like, someone who could turn you into ash before you even realized they wanted to hurt you. And instead, that person is making you cum again, and again, and again?” He almost surprised himself with how direct he said that.

The Gangrel raised an eyebrow, and took the glass of blood he handed her. “Can’t say I have. Been that girl, thousands of times. Never been on the receiving end.”

“Hmm, actually, you might be able to try that on Damien. I mean, he’s too strong for that, but, you know what I mean.”

“What?”

He shrugged, and took a sip of his drink. Damien wasn’t around, and both Jack and Jessy knew the man was entertaining the possibility of sex. Seemed safe to talk about, a little at least. And honestly, he was a little happier to talk about something like sex, instead of Angela and Jeremiah and shit.

“You were getting kind of buddy buddy with Damien. Thought you might have wanted to show him the ropes on a few more things.”

“Ha. Kid, are you trying to hook me up with the priest boy?”

“He’s almost as old as you, and I can see that glint in your eye when you tease him.”

“Bah, he’s too small.”

“I’m smaller than him,” he said.

“And I’m not trying to get into your pants, am I?”

They laughed. It was true, and it made being friends with the aggressive animal easier.

“You do have a type.”

“And that type isn’t you or Damien. But, it’s not like Damien isn’t a sexy fucker, just not in my wheelhouse. If I got him into Bloodlust, I could get him laid before the night was over.”

“New mission?”

“New mission.”

“I do suggest you don’t try and get him laid in the actual club; send him somewhere quiet instead, with walls.”

She snorted annoyance, but nodded once she thought about it, and sipped her drink as she leaned back in his couch. “That Fiona was a firecracker though, damn. Didn’t have to do much to get her tits out and legs open.”

How had he not predicted it was Jessy who got into Fiona's pants? Not paying attention.

"Be nice to her," he said. Jessy had gotten into the Fiona friendship circle a little late, and he still wasn't convinced the Gangrel knew how to be gentle with her. The monster inside Fiona may have been something epic and terrifying, but the girl was young, younger than even him.

"I was nice! She had a great night, and so did Eric. I made sure of it."

"Eric, right." The guy that drove Jack to safety. "I've yet to speak to him directly. I have to thank him."

"He works at Bloodlust most nights. Drop by, say hello. Though fair warning, I might be on him at the time."

"Like him?"

"Yeah, I kinda do, actually. He's not as big or tall as I usually like my guys, but still, sweet body on that guy. Used to do MMA."

"I meant do you like his personality." He tried to not laugh, but it came out anyway.

"Not sure yet. He's got some serious grit and bitterness to him. I can like that."

Ah, yeah, gotta love a dark, brooding dude. Ha. He laughed some more and shook his head. Time to move on.

"I suppose we should talk about work," he said.

"It's not work, kid. It's life. You think about it like work and it'll eat you up. Think about it like life and it becomes a motivation on its own. Live and breathe the struggle, and it stops being an annoyance, and starts being as natural as breathing used to be.”

He raised a brow at her, and looked for the joke, the smirk. Not a one. She meant what she said, and despite the messenger, it was advice he had to admit sounded plausible, and useful. Tracking down the hunters, building relations with the neighboring monsters, cultivating the kine into a manageable food source, and establishing defensive measures against all the above, was work, but also not. It was life. Becoming good at it was becoming good at what Kindred did, at their second lives. It’s how you got to live to be five hundred years old.

“That is a pretty awesome way to think about it,” he said. “Guess ... I still think about shit like this in terms of my old life, work as a barrier to get out of my way so I can get back to living.”

“Ha, yeah, you’re a real product of the new world. Well, you’ll get in the groove eventually. It is so god damn satisfying to see your efforts bear fruit when it’s your life we’re talking about. The money is just a nice bonus, the real reward is knowing you can rest easy and drink of the kine, because you defended your territory.”

“Speaking of defense. Any new developments?”

“Not a one. Those hunter fuckers just vanished. Sometimes I wish we lived in a smaller city.”

He nodded, and rubbed his head as he considered it. “Smaller city means this many vamps would draw attention more easily though. We could sire a bunch more vamps here instead; city could handle a thousand or more.”

“But then we’re at each other’s throats fighting over kine. You think it’s tense with the Carthians now? Mob mentality is a ruthless, fickle bitch, and she grows more ruthless and fickle the bigger the crowd.”

“Which reminds me, I should visit Garry.”

Jessy quirked a brow, downed her drink, and got up to get some more. Girl acted like she lived there, but he didn't mind. “Why?”

“He's friends with Avery.”

“Yeah but, we're trying to get around that, not use that. The deal was to give Avery a treat so she'll like us too, right?”

He dismissed the notion with a wave of his hand. “She'll see through that. The council knows it too. They're trusting me to think up something better, some way to get her involved, get her on our side, and get her out there looking for those hunters.”

“ ... and Garry's the key?”

“Sort of. Wanna be friends with someone? Be friends with their friends.”

She sighed, but shrugged. “I don't see that happening, but, whatever, you're the voice. You gonna arrange a meeting with him?”

“Eventually. For now, let's take a trip back to where Barry's den burned down.”

“What? Why?”

“Need to recruit a couple friends.”

---

“Where is Damien anyway?” he said. The two of them were standing on the building Jack had used, when he talked to the two crows. It wasn't so long ago, and he knew crows had good memories.

“Hanging out with Maria, doing churchy things, I assume.” Sounded like she didn't care for the Lancea et Sanctum either.

Jack looked up at the sky, and around the nearby buildings, the old antennae, the vents, steam exits, and the crows that made their living up here on the city's rooftops. Rats and cockroaches too, but they stuck to the insides of buildings, while the crows perched and made the outdoors their home.

“So, uh ... what're we doing?” she said.

“Waiting.”

“ ... uh huh.” She shrugged, folded her arms across her chest, and waited. Sometimes, he really liked her simple mind.

It took a little time, but eventually, two crows took off from some nearby power lines, and flew over to perch atop a jutting vent over their heads. But, once he looked up to meet their gaze, they flew down to land on the building roof a few feet away from him. The two crows hopped over to him, cawed a few times, and fluttered their wings a few times more. He crouched down, and motioned with them to come closer. Without hesitation, they closed what little distance remained, and hopped up onto his arm.

“Careful of the suit,” he said, clicking his tongue to articulate that he meant his clothes. And they obeyed, claw grip growing softer as they hopped higher up. Though, defeated by the lack of space, one of the crows hopped off, catching flight and turning around to land on the other shoulder.

“You're good at animalism,” Jessy said, “damn good for a vamp your age.”

“Thanks.” He looked to his right, and smiled at the crow, made eye contact with it, looked into the black gaze it offered him. She offered him, apparently. He looked to his left, and nodded as he looked into its eyes too. His eyes. A male and female, the two crows cawed at Jessy, who came closer and leaned in to click her tongue at them a few times as well. She could speak to them as well, anyone who knew animalism could; Ventrue and Gangrel, specifically.

“They recognize you.”

“Mmhmm. They tipped me off about the four hunters scouting this place out. I had them watching the ball too, watching me.”

“Smart.”

He nodded, and looked at each crow once again, taking turns. “Did you keep track of me when I left the ball with Damien?” They nodded. “Good. Show me.”

The mental connection required vitae, required him to tap into a part of him inside, animalistic, a creature that spoke in body language, smells, snarls and howls when angry, or purrs and gentle bites when pleased. He didn't do those things, the beast in his guts did, silent but there, and with his vitae acting as the bridge to connect with these creatures, they could hear the beast.

And his beast was stronger than it was when he talked to these birds the last time. They fluttered a little, cawed a few more times, and looked past him at each other with frequently tilting heads. They were asking if this was the same two-leg walker from last time. Looked the same. Smelled the same. Didn't feel the same.

“I am the same.”

The birds shrugged, as much as a bird could shrug, and continued the mental story. An alley. Dark. Damien walked out of it. Jack was still in there. They flew in closer and watched Damien walk away in the direction of the Cathedral. When they landed on the building above the alley where Jack was stabbed, they looked down, but he was gone.

“Didn’t see anything strange? Like, anyone stepping out of thin air? Or something stepping out of shadows when there shouldn’t have been anyone there?”

The birds shook their head, and cawed thrice more. They showed him again, the blackness of the alleyway, and hints of him, hands grabbing him from behind, stabbing him through the heart from behind, and dragging him away. Well, it was another point for Damien; not that Jack still suspected him, but more evidence that the man probably hadn’t betrayed him was good.

“Hey ... you two, you want a home? Easy access to food?”

“Jack, are you turning these two into pets?”

He turned to face her, shrugged, and nodded toward each crow. “Why not?”

“Because you’re controlling them with animalism.”

“I am not, I’m communicating with them, and asking for a favor. Just ... slightly influenced favors.”

Jessy rolled her eyes, but shrugged. “Plenty of Ventrue and Gangrel raise pets, in smaller towns and stuff. Feed them some vamp blood and they’ll be loyal, and addicted.”

“I don’t think that’s necessary.” And he found it a bit cruel. Forcing the blood vinculum on humans, turning them into thralls or ghouls, was a bit cruel as well. But sometimes it was done with good intent, with permission, like with Antoinette’s ghouls. Sometimes it was done simply because Kindred were higher on the food chain, and knew how to use the resources available to them.

Maybe one night he’d have a thrall or ghoul of his own, but not tonight. The two crows looked at each other, then at him, then at each other, and went around and around for a little while, until he pulled out some rolled oats, and tossed them on the ground. He squatted down as well, and smiled as the birds hopped down his arms like a diving board, jumping off, and began poking at the oats.

“I’ve noticed,” he said, “a lot of the Kindred in this city rely on thralls and ghouls for their reconnaissance and labor. Hell, almost overwhelmingly.”

“Viktor didn’t only use thralls, and neither does Julias. Both used animals frequently.”

“Guess I’m continuing in their footsteps. There’s a goldmine of information to be had by making friends with animals.”

Jessy frowned, for a moment, before wiping it away and shrugging. “It’s not easy managing a bunch of thralls. You think you’ll do better with a bunch of crows?”

He looked into the crows’ eyes, and as they poked at the rolled oats until satisfied before eating them, they looked back at him. Something there, something that clicked, something that made sense, something that worked like the right cog to fix a clock.

“Just call me Poe.”

“ ... Edgar Allan Poe? Dude, that was a raven in the poem.”

“ ... shut up.” Ok, maybe she wasn’t so simple. “Alfred Hitchcock then?”

“Better.”

Chapter 57

~~Natasha~~

In the end, she couldn't ask Matt and Art to listen to her. When push came to shove, when rubber hit the road, she was so swept up in the moment that she was reduced to a whimpering set of legs and a river of juices in minutes. But she was going to give herself an A for effort anyway.

She smiled to herself as she washed Matt's body in the tub. Maybe next time? In the meantime, maybe she could try doing a little more ... gate opening? Their gates of course, not hers. Hers could come later.

She smiled down at Matt's back. Art was standing beside them looking into the mirror, shaving, while Matt and her were still in the tub. Bathing together had come naturally, a byproduct of the fact both of her boyfriends were werewolves, and had voracious sexual appetites that manifested biologically. They came buckets. Which, in the moment, during the sex, was so terribly arousing that it melted her into a puddle. After sex, it was a giant pain, sticky and gross and ick and ew! So, bath.

Such a huge back on the gentle giant. So. Utterly. Huge. She couldn't wrap her arms around Matt if his arms were in the embrace, too big. Or, she was too small. Either way, it was quickly becoming a sight she was growing fond of. She rubbed soap along it, and licked her lips at the shape of his muscles, broad, hard, and how they fought against the pressure of the soap.

Wait, you're supposed to be gate opening. Stop admiring his broad shoulders. Less sexual stuff, more romantic stuff.

"You t-two should tell me more about ... how you met," she said.

Art shrugged, tapped his blade in the sink — he shaved with a knife, eesh — and resumed shaving. “Avery’s pack had just arrived in Tijuana. Stephanie was with them, and she knew the place a bit.” Right, Stephanie, the one who died. “I had just suffered my first change ... some people died. It was on the news. I was on the news. I went into hiding, and Avery tracked me down.”

“We found him pretty beat up. I’d only been part of the group for a short while, and eager to prove myself.” Matt turned around in the tub for her, and she began washing his chest. As much as Matt and Arturo were big burly guys, she was thankful they didn’t have too too much body hair. Plenty, but not enough to seem like they were wearing sweaters. Still, she’d prefer they trim some of their pubic hair off, as was fashionable in the city. Maybe she could ask them later?

“So of course Lenny starts a fight with me the moment he finds me.”

Matt chuckled. Mmm, such a warm noise, from so close.

“Hey, you threw the first punch, Art.”

“You grabbed me by both shoulders. From behind!”

“I was trying to catch you. You Irraka are sneaky fuckers.”

“Pretty sure the grab was followed by a tackle.”

And back and forth they went, earning some giggles from Natasha as she listened to the two boys argue. Each had their way about it, an approach, a style. Arturo Ibarra had some grit to him, a touch of anger, a touch of the bad boy, but mostly a playful sort. Matthew Wilson was the gentle giant, and she could tell he didn’t have Art’s wit or grit; words and insults rolled off his back like water though. It was easy to see why they got along. Art was rough, in a way. And Matt was soft, in a way.

“W-What about b-b-before you became werewolves? What was life like? Or ... or um, d-don’t tell me, if you don’t want to.” She offered her best apologetic shrug at Matt, and continued to wash his body. Hard to focus on the questions, when rubbing down his enormous chest and abs and arms. She could fit into the grooves of him, between his arms and legs, and just disappear, if she wanted. No! Bad Tash. Focus.

“It’s a touchy question,” Matt said, “at least for some Uratha. Leaving behind the old life isn’t always easy, you know? I ... I guess you would know all too well.” The giant turned his head to the side, exposing his neck to her a bit, and he looked at her with the corner of his eye. Quizzical, curious, expressions she didn’t normally see on his face. But, it faded a few seconds later, and he smiled his usual smile. “I lost my family when I was very young, well before I became Uratha.”

“Oh...”

“Don’t worry, I was young, it’s a faded memory. I lived far up North, and sometimes the conditions can get you killed, that far up.”

“Far up North? You d-don’t sound like ... you’re from Europe. Oh, Canada?” Must have been living in Nunavut or Labrador.

“Mmhmm. Eh.”

Heh, her gentle giant was a stereotype.

“Do you ... s-say sorry a lot?”

Arturo laughed, hard enough he had to put the knife down. “He does, because he keeps knocking shit over, a regular klutz.”

Matt rolled his eyes, reached out, and picked Natasha up. She squeaked, squealed, and squirmed, as the huge man pulled her, wrapped her legs around his waist, and set her down so her butt pressed against his pelvis. He wasn't aroused since they'd just had sex, but she knew what these werewolves were like, and if she didn't get control of the situation, they'd be doing things to her in two minutes.

The gentle giant smiled down at her. The water of the tub reached their waists, hot, tingling. She wasn't blushing anymore, but from the look on his face, she knew what he was going to ask. Or maybe ask her when he was done kissing her, because he leaned in, and set his lips to hers.

Arg, it was just so damn easy to simply let go, stop fighting, and let them — or in this case, him — take control. She sank into his waist, his shaft underneath her butt and getting harder by the second, as his kiss grew more and more passionate. His eyes were open a sliver, enough so she could see the joy in them, as his hands held her tiny body. Soon he was leaning over her, and she pressed against his chest to try and get him to stop. He didn't stop.

“Matt!” Art said.

“What!?” Matt sat up straight, and dropped her.

Water overwhelmed her, and she disappeared beneath the surface, frowning up at Matt the whole time. The water wasn't too hot, so she had no issues looking up through the waves at the man, who had 'sorry' written across his face in big, bold letters. He scooped her up again, and guided some hair off her face so it was dangling behind her.

“Sorry,” he said, as if his puppy dog face wasn't apologetic enough.

She snorted, laughter breaking through her frown, and pulled on his neck to start kissing him again. Which, of course, caused the shaft underneath her to start getting harder again, and harder, until it was just like it was an hour ago, with the man ready for more sex.

Art was watching them now, standing beside the tub and rolling his eyes. “Matt, I was going to say, give the girl a break. But ... I think we got time for a quickie.”

Oh no. She tried to re-summon her frown, but Art set his hand on her hair, combing it along her scalp with his fingers, before he gently turned her head to face him. And, once he sat himself down on the tub edge, one leg in the tub, he began to masturbate. A few seconds was all it took for his shaft to grow to full length, and aim straight at her. And, as he smiled his devil smile at her, he pulled her head in toward his cock.

... ok, maybe a quickie.

---

If she was human, she'd be sore. Sex, sex, and more sex. Two boyfriends made it hard enough to go five minutes without one of them trying to get into her pants, but the fact both of them were werewolves, and more or less in a constant of ready to fuck, made it impossible. And, the fact that when they got their hands on her, they were rather ... aggressive, about getting what they wanted, made it more impossible than impossible! And the fact that, every time they took hold of her, her whole body was set on fire, and she had to blush life and give in before it killed her, made it triple impossible.

But for now, they were done, and Art and Matt and she were out on the streets, walking toward Avery's base near the Carthian district.

“You sure you want to come with us on this hunt?” Matt said. “Claimed can be dangerous.”

“I d-don't understand what claimed are. So, I ... need information.” Information made the world go round. It made Antoinette happy. It made Natasha happy too. If there were things like urged or claimed in the city, she needed to know what those things were. “And, you’re my b-boyfriends! I should hang out w-w-with my boyfriends.” And she liked saying the word. Boyfriends.

Art leaned in beside her, walking beside her, devil grin on his face. “Want to hold hands?”

“ ... no. I’m t-too small. I’d look like ... your daughter, or something.” Hand holding could come later, when they were alone.

Matt laughed, and turned to walk backward for a few moments while looking at them. “We know Dolareido is a strange city. But a lot of that strangeness, you Kindred don’t really understand, right?” He slowed down for a moment until he was beside her, opposite of Art, and he started walking in line with them as he leaned in, reigning his voice in. “The balance between Dolareido and the Shadow world is an odd balance, sitting on a knife’s edge.”

“B-But I ... d-don’t know what means.” And honestly, it wasn’t her primary or secondary goal at the moment. Still, it was terribly intriguing, knowing her boyfriends could interact with this Shadow world at any time, when Antoinette and Tash had to work so damn hard just to get peeks at it.

“Maybe we’ll show you sometime?” Matt said.

Art shook his head. “Avery would kill us. And more than that, it’s not safe.”

Natasha frowned up at Art. The three of them were walking the sidewalks closer to the Carthian district, which meant there weren’t many people on the sidewalks, at least not nearly as many as the Invictus half of South Side. It gave them the room to walk side by side, and for Tash to try and shove Art. Alas, too light, and she succeeded only in pushing herself into Matt.

“I’m older than either of y-y-you! D-Don’t underestimate me. I ... would love to see it someday.” Terrifying as that idea was. It also wasn't one of her goals, but the idea of crossing to the other side, of seeing this strange world she'd only poked at, of seeing more things like Safe or that strange spirit of secrets, it was all so interesting.

And that was one of the primary goals of the Ordo Dracul, to gain knowledge. Invictus wanted power, money, and structure. Lancea et Sanctum wanted history documented and religious tenets satisfied. Carthians wanted ... well, borderline anarchy. The Circle of the Crone wanted to push their dark agendas, of instigating a predator and prey world filled. The Ordo Dracul wanted knowledge, all knowledge, especially about things that could be of use to a Kindred trying to learn more about themselves, about the nature of being a vampire.

At least, that was what Antoinette and Daniel taught her, and she bought into it, believed it. And now she was strong enough, old enough, to pursue it.

“Honestly,” Art said, “I’m surprised you haven’t been there already. Avery says Antoinette and Jacob have both been poking at the Gauntlet for centuries.”

“Yeah, b-but all we can do is poke.”

Matt nodded, sighing a little as he looked up, leaned back, and scratched his head through his shoulder-length dirty blond hair. “Honestly, I think we should take you. Dolareido’s a great city, a nice place, all things considered. You vamps are a part of that, you made that. You should see what sort of effect it has on the side of the veil.”

She perked up, blinking at him. She didn’t realize their actions could affect the other side directly.

But Art shook his head. “You know if we ask Avery, she’s going to say no.”

The gentle giant shrugged, and set his hand on Natasha's further shoulder, so he could pull her in a bit into a sort of half hug while they walked.

"What she doesn't know can't hurt her."

"The fuck? Of course it can."

"Tash will be fine."

"She might be fine, but she'll definitely be at risk."

"It's her choice."

"Yeah but curiosity killed the cat."

"She's been doing fine so far."

"We almost killed her when we met her."

It was weird listening to the two boys argue, because Art was being the cautious one, and Matt was being the adventurous one. Normally it was the other way around, and she changed from frown to smile and back again as she listened to them argue about her. Eventually, enough was enough, and she elbowed Art in the side.

"I can t-take care of myself, especially if you're both there to protect me. I really ... want t-to see..." See the place Safe came from.

"Arg, don't give me those eyes," Art said, covering his eyes with a hand.

"What eyes?" she said.

"The eyes! The cute, adorable eyes."

"I..." Who was she kidding? She was tiny, she could pull off adorable eyes if she tried. When Art looked at her again, she put her forearms to her chest, hands in small fists against her collar bone, and gave him her best begging ‘help me please I’m so frail’ eyes.

The man groaned again, as if she’d shot him. She had, sort of, with cuteness.

“Fine, fine! If she dies, I’m blaming you.”

Both she and Matt chuckled. She was going to get to see the Shadow world. It wasn’t going to be an imaginary thing in her mind anymore, it was going to be solid and real and something she could touch and see and smell.

But, focus. Primary goal was to deal with the hunters.

“Hey guys,” she said. “You ... you um ... you t-talk to Avery yet? About the hunters?”

Both werewolves visibly cringed. “We did,” they said in unison.

“ ... she d-doesn’t want to help, does she?”

“It’s not like that,” Matt said, “but after what happened last time she was here, she says she’s not jumping headfirst into anything.”

“ ... I see.” Weight pulled her head down, and she let it hang in front of her a little as they walked. Maybe Jack could convince her? If anyone could, it was him, but considering all the baggage around the whole previous incident, with Avery and Jacob and Antoinette, there was a good chance Avery might be hands off. At least, until the hunters decided to hit the Uratha too. Would they do that? Of course not, not if their goal was the Begotten and any Kindred giving them refuge. Fighting a war on multiple fronts was never a good idea.

“On that point,” Art said, “Avery can go fuck herself. You need help with a hunter, Tash, just ask.”

Uh oh. She blinked up at the man, eyes growing wide again. “You’ll ... get in trouble.”

“She’s our pack leader, not our mom.” The Irraka shrugged, like it made sense. “Do your bosses punish you if you’re insubordinate?”

“Yes!” She squeaked, looking around after making the noise. “Y-Yes, they do. Violently, s-sometimes ... a lot of the times.”

Matt laughed. Maybe he didn’t understand, or take her seriously. But, his eyes changed after a few moments. “I ... suppose yeah, they probably would, wouldn’t they? I remember what some of the vamps did to their childees and whatnot, in Tijuana. Nasty. The church dudes were particularly brutal.” But he shrugged, and hugged her in a little tighter. “Avery might yell at us, maybe smack us around a little, but nothing like what you vamps might do to each other.”

Natasha leaned into Matt’s side, and shuddered a little at the memories. Strange, it was memories of Viktor being a colossal tyrant toward his servants, that made Tash appreciate Maria a little more.

“You’ll help t-too?” she said to the gentle giant.

“Not as excited to go against Avery as Art is, apparently, but yeah, I’ll help.”

Once they arrived at a corner, now bordering on Carthian territory, Art and Matt each came to a stop, and both sat on a nearby bench. Not sure why they wanted to stop here, but Natasha shrugged, and stood beside the lamppost, leaning against it.

“Jack will probably tell Avery more details,” Art said, “but you can fill us in too.”

“O-Ok.” She’d told them about the hunters before, but not details, not yet. Wasn’t sure it was her place to maybe cause issues, getting the Uratha involved when Antoinette hadn’t asked her to. Still, Kindred had to be proactive, they had to actively hunt down ways to solve their issues. It was true that action was not inherently superior to inaction, but that was rarely the case when Kindred were typically on the receiving end of antagonism.

“So, um.” Where to begin, where to begin. “W-We know the hunters came for Azamel.”

“The Begotten?” Matt shuddered, and rubbed his arms, kind of like Natasha did when she was disturbed by something. It was cute on him. “No one in the pack has so much as talked to her yet.”

“Exactly,” she said. “That’s p-p-part of the reason that ... that we haven’t talked to the Uratha yet about this. The hunters are ... they’re here f-for the Begotten. Kindred are in their way. But you guys, you’re um ... not really involved. And, w-we don’t want to ... make more enemies.” If they asked the werewolves to help, and some of the werewolves died dealing with the hunters, that was asking for a problem.

“You know much about the Meninna?” Art said. “Us, the Hunters in Darkness.”

“N-No.”

“We told you before the Meninna don’t like roaming. We want a place to live, to stay, to protect. Avery came back here cause she thought she could do some good, to a place that kind of got royally fucked last time she was here, so she says.”

Matt raised a hand. “And David told us the spirits were talking about this place.”

“Yeah, that too.” Art shrugged, and gestured around them. “And hell, we’d prefer to be living out in the wilderness, or maybe some quaint little village. We’re here because we think we can do some good, or at least Avery does. And, honestly? Like we said, Dolareido is a pretty good setup, and we’d like to help keep it that way.”

Natasha tilted her head to the side. That all sounded great. Then... “Then w-why are you all so concerned about ... stepping on eggshells?”

“Because you outnumber us thirty to one.” Art sighed, leaned forward, and let his forearms rest on his knees, hands hanging between them. “We’re on orders to be on our best behavior, because we’d like to stay.”

“ ... you’re afraid ... of us?”

Matt laughed, as if what she said was silly. “This is the only vamp city I know of, with six elders, who aren’t trying to kill each other. If you guys decided to work together, and use those silver swords of yours, yeah, we’d be fucked.”

She meeped, and moved her hand down to her hip. “You ... y-you noticed, huh?” It wasn’t like the sword was out and dangling. She had it hidden inside her suit jacket, above the hip.

“We’re not blind,” Art said. “We’ve seen you take off your clothes. Hell we’ve stripped you many times.”

Yeah, she was being delusional if she thought they wouldn’t notice the new sword. “ ... true.”

“And hey, we understand. It’s a weird situation for everyone involved. We didn’t know Begotten would be here, we’ve never really dealt with them before. We’re trying to be nice, and we almost got that Fiona girl killed.”

And there was that. Instead of Fiona dying, Stephanie died, and despite that, the Uratha were still playing nice, albeit very passively.

The more she learned, the more she felt the Uratha would be the perfect allies for Kindred in Dolareido. Maybe Jack would learn the same thing, and he could find some way to smooth out these issues? Ugh, it was horrible politics. Jacob had every reason to hate Avery, and Antoinette certainly didn't trust them, both vampires unhappy with the Minerva situation. And the wolves had a relationship with the Carthians already, which meant there was stress with the Invictus. Jack had his work cut out for him.

But maybe she could do a little work too.

"If ... if you help, w-with the hunters, I ... I c-can only imagine that ... everyone in Dolareido w-would appreciate that. All the covenants, and even the ... B-B-Begotten."

"Unless we get someone killed in the process," Art said. "We don't play nice, Tash."

"I know!" She fucking knew. Running from them, through the tunnels, and the way they literally tore through walls of concrete, and ripped apart an old subway train like a paper bag, was not a memory she was ever going to forget. "I-I know, b-b-b-but ... we've already lost someone, and almost lost another."

Matt sighed, slouching back in the bench, opposite of Art's forward leaning. "Yeah, it'd have really sucked if that Jack kid died. Dude really pulled through, jumping in there with the Azlu."

"Ha, yeah, now Clara's got a crush on him." Art laughed, and brushed back some of his dark hair out of his eyes. "I really hope she doesn't do something stupid and piss off your Prince."

"That ... is ... is that something she m-might do?"

Art shook his head. “No ... probably not? Shit I don’t know. She’s Cahalith. They’re always a bit emotional, and have a habit of letting those emotions make them do stupid shit.”

“It’ll b-be kind of funny if ... a strange love triangle brought the whole city down, r ... right?” she said.

The two men looked at each other, then back to her, before they broke into laughter. “Yes, it would,” they said together. Was it something they’d seen before? A scary thought, romance destroying cities.

“So, um ... w-what are we going t-t-to do now?” she said.

“Two choices.” Art counted them off, pulling down on a finger with each option. “Matt and I were going to investigate some reports that sound like Urged or Claimed, but nothing serious, nothing we can’t wait on. So instead, we can start showing you the world we live in, the Hisil, what spirits are, and where they live. Or, we can help you get a lead on finding these hunters.”

“I vote option B,” Matt said. “The former isn’t your problem, the latter is. And I’d really hate to see you get hurt in the Shadow world, just cause I offered. Worse, I’d hate to see you die to hunters here, in the physical world. Kind of gotten attached to you.”

“ ... thank you,” she said, smiling and walking in closer. There wasn’t any room on the bench for her, so she sat down on their knees, where their two knees were beside each other. A kiss for Matt, leaning back to give him one. And a kiss for Art too. Nice, big, proper kisses.

A kine walking by raised a brow, a woman, tattoos and dreadlocks. When Tash met her eyes, the woman mouthed ‘nice’, and kept walking.

It was nice.

“I ... I hope Avery d-d-doesn't ... get too upset.”

Matt put a kiss on her neck, and winked at her. “We can handle her.”

---

The three of them took a taxi to the old prison, or near it, at least. They didn't anyone know where they were going after all. The taxi driver offered her a few curious glances through the rear view mirror when both men got familiar with her, touching her legs, stroking her cheek or neck, each putting a kiss on her head. And of course, she got flustered and tried to stop them, including some elbows in their sides. But, she couldn't stop giggling, which earned more touches from her boys, which earned more glances and raised brows from the driver.

Once the driver let them out, and she managed to get her laughter under control, the two of them made the five minute walk toward the old prison. She felt safe with them around. What hunter would be crazy enough to try and take on two werewolves and the red riding hood vampire they were with?

But she wasn't a moron. She kept an eye open, peeked around corners, looked buildings up and down, used her auspex to scan for nearby threats. It wouldn't be able to separate a hunter out from the people walking by, the other kine, but it was better than nothing.

A smooth walk to the old prison. No issues, no hiccups. The Invictus had already cleaned everything up, cleared out any evidence of the incident, and removed any police presence. The front door of the complex was locked, the outdoor gate, but that was easy to deal with.

They jumped over it. Natasha was light, and with a little vampire strength, she launched herself ten feet into the air. Grip managed to catch the top ridge of the gate, and she flipped over it with no issue. Art and Matt both looked at each other, and started clapping, quiet little claps, like they were suddenly rich snobs applauding an appealing performance. Jerks.

The other two couldn't jump so easily; they had to make running jumps, throwing their weight into the pillars of the gate and running up it before forcing themselves upward, and managing the tip of their grip on the pillar top. The pillars were small, with only enough room for one hand, but each beast was able to pull themselves up with the one hand.

Damn that was impressive, for a living creature.

“Not much security,” Art said.

She shrugged, and gestured to the main door ahead of them. “It won't even b-be locked. There's n ... n-nothing going on here, nothing to steal or anything, so—” A hand on her shoulder brought her to a halt, and she looked up and over at Matt behind her.

“ ... something happened here.”

“Y-Yeah, Jack was—”

“No, I mean ... something horrible happened here.”

---

---

~~Jack~~

Heading back to Avery's apartment, except this time he had Damien and Jessy with him. They took a drive, one the larger Invictus cars, one that let the three of them sit in the back. Naturally, Jack and Damien both took a window seat, and Jessy sat in the middle.

“Hey Damien,” Jessy said, “where's that Fiona girl been lately?”

“I have not seen much of her. I believe she is in hiding with her fellow monsters,” he said. “Why?”

“Thought you two might have been dating or something, and you being you, Mekhet and all, were conveniently refusing to share with me juicy details.”

“ ... and why would you think that?”

“She expressed interest, didn’t she? I remember what she was like at the ball.” Jessy elbowed the poor man in the side, complete with a nudge nudge wink wink. “She likes you. Apparently she’s got a thing for dark, brooding types.”

“She is what, nineteen years old? Perhaps twenty?” He sighed, and looked back out the window. “I am over fifty years her senior.”

“Not the same, and you know it.” She wrapped an arm around his neck and shoulder, and pulled him in toward her to face her. Well, face her breasts really, with the way she yanked his head in for a casual headlock. “If you don’t move fast, Eric will take her.”

“Eric? Ah, yes, the new bouncer at Bloodlust.” Poor guy squirmed some, but he wasn’t getting out of Jessy’s bro hug. “He is welcome to her, if he is as—”

“No no, god damn it Damien, you jackass. Fight for the feisty redhead.” Jessy reached out, and yanked in Jack’s head as well, so she had the two of them in headlocks. “Jack here was what, twenty, when he was embraced? And not long after that, he was in the Prince’s bed. And she’s got a lot of years on you, Damien, so I don’t think the ‘she’s younger than me’ defense really applies.”

No doubt Jessy was trying to cover up her own sexual adventures, and how the woman only ever slept with kine, all much younger than her. But it was true, so Jack smirked at her, and managed a shrug, despite the headlock.

“Think we can focus on the job?” Damien pulled away again, and Jessy let him go. But, not before a hint of a smile hit the man’s lips. Enough for Jessy to laugh and wink at Jack.

“It’s all on Jack,” she said. “Nothing we can do. You got a plan anyway, Jack? Wanna fill us in?”

He almost started with the crows. Jessy and Damien both knew he worked with crows, but he didn’t want them knowing everything he was doing. Not because he didn’t trust them, but because it was the safer way in managing a secret; the less people who knew the better. His two pets were watching them from above, and with some practice, the two birds would be his eyes in the sky from now on, permanently.

He was going to take this new position of his seriously. Right hand of the Invictus, with the paltry amount of experience he had? He could already picture the scenarios, some older Invictus questioning him, prodding him, testing him to see if he actually deserved his position. And when the cards were all laid out on the table, Jack would come out on top. Diligence and preparation.

It wasn’t the only reason he acquired his two new pets, but, he wasn’t so stupid to not see the eventuality coming a mile away.

“The plan is to convince Avery to help us.”

“Yeah, duh, I get that.” She let him go, but not without a shove. “I mean, details. How are you going to convince her to help us?”

“Two things. Julias gave us various things we can offer as incentive. But, I can already tell Avery won’t take that bait, not wholly. She’s like Garry, and has no issue living in a rundown apartment building, with cockroaches for neighbors. And she’ll want to do hunts without our interference or help anyway. No, we if want to make friends with someone like Avery, we have to offer her something more than open borders.”

“And that is?” the two of them said.

“Peace of mind.”

Jessy raised a brow. “I’m not following.”

“She’s a leader now. She wasn’t before. The last time she was here, her pack leader Simon got into it with the vamps here, right? But he’s gone, and now the shit show he stirred is on her. I get the impression if Simon wasn’t her leader, things with Jacob and Minerva would have gone differently. The backlash of that is on her, and she wants to fix that.” The memory of Jacob and him running into Clara and Avery in the street was a powerful one. Poor Clara, down in one punch from the Nosferatu. Not even a punch, just a backhand slap.

Both Damien and Jessy shuddered when he said Jacob.

“Y-Yeah,” she said, “good luck with that.”

Jack sighed. He knew what they were going to say. “You don’t think I can change his mind, do you?”

“Not a chance.”

Damien nodded agreement.

But, Jack wasn’t going to be dissuaded. “Look, I know Jacob’s old, very very old, and I know elders are pretty set in their ways.”

The Gangrel shook her head. “No, that’s not it. Jacob’s psychotic, Jack. You’ll be trying to argue with a crazy person, and I doubt you’ll make much headway.”

“I might be able to. Beatrice works for him, so does Jen, and I’m friends with Triss and ... Jen, sort of? Not really but she likes me well enough. I think I can make some headway that way.” As he spoke, he noticed Damien fidget when he said Triss's name. A finger twitch, nothing that should have caught his attention, but Damien looked down at the same time. Weird.

“Alright, sure sure, but what are you going to tell Avery? What's the game plan for actually convincing her your efforts to make everyone sing kum ba yah will work?”

“I'm going to make some promises I may or may not be able to keep.”

Jessy facepalmed.

---

Damien and Jessy stayed outside, in the hallway. Avery didn't want them in the room with him, and honestly, he was kind of happy they weren't with him either. Tense, having more Kindred around, when Avery was already annoyed at the prospect of having these meetings. It was her idea, but he could tell she'd only thought it up as a lesser of evils.

Clara was there, and she smiled as she met his eyes. She was leaning against a wall, and looking outside the window at the streets below, peeking into Garry's territory. No doubt the man kept a vamp or two around, scouting, hiding, keeping an eye on things. Could Uratha smell vampires? Vampires had a far more mild odor compared to their living counterparts.

Matt and Art weren't there, likely hanging out with Natasha, or doing ... werewolfy things, whatever that was. But, there were others.

Mason was a werewolf he knew about only indirectly. Apparently he'd become acquainted with a Carthian named Tilly; very acquainted, based on the sounds he heard walking through the hallways. He'd never heard a woman scream out like that, like it was porn, over the top and ridiculous, but considering the bed squeaking that came with it, he could only imagine it was genuine. It was a wonder the floor didn't collapse. But at least he couldn't hear it inside Avery's apartment. Much.

Avery sat on the couch with two other Uratha, and he offered each of them a small wave. She was so small compared to her pack. Gave small guys like him hope for the future.

On her right was David, tall with short blond hair, the man who never looked at anyone straight. Fidgeting, and rocking slightly in his spot. Parkinson's? Doubtful. These werewolves seemed like they healed from anything. A woman named Monica sat on her left, a black woman with super short air, buzzed almost, and it looked pretty awesome with its naturally kinky curls. She was a fair bit taller than Avery too, almost as tall as Jessy.

They were all dressed in jeans or similar, with raggedy old t-shirts and tank tops and such. Now that he was used to wearing suits all the time, he had to admit, he didn't miss the old clothes he wore. Invictus rubbing off on him, probably, and Julias specifically. Something about a well-tailored, expensive suit, was satisfying to wear. Even now he wore a simple single-breasted dark gray suit, a white shirt underneath, and a solid black tie. It made him feel ... powerful.

Yeah, that was definitely Julias rubbing off on him.

"Avery," he said.

"Hey Jack. We haven't talked since you got all fucked up." She leaned back in the couch, and nodded her head Monica's way. "Monica's Irraka, she got me some nice info about the fallout from that."

Jack sat down in a chair, a half-broken wood thing that made him smirk when it teetered underneath him. "Yeah, fucked up is a pretty good way of describing it. They ... tortured me. Suddenly all those war movies I watched before I was embraced have more gravitas.”

Clara frowned, and looked out the window again.

“Shit like that can put life into a new perspective, yeah. Lot of us have been there, in some way or another.” Avery nodded, and offered him a small smirk. “But you didn’t come here to talk about you. You came here to talk about the hunters.”

“It was the hunters who tortured me.”

“You know what I mean. You want us to help.”

“I understand that you’re hesitant to do that.”

“Wouldn’t you be? I came to the city because some spirits pointed us in this direction, talked of an Azlu, and also about some spirits ready to cause problems. We’ve dealt with the Azlu, one of them, but one of them lived. And the issue with the spirits isn’t dealt with; we haven’t even put a dent into that mystery. You’ll note the word ‘hunter’ has yet to be mentioned.”

“Yeah but, don’t you want to stay here?” He leaned forward, elbows to his knees. “Dolareido was a pretty peaceful place just a couple years ago, Viktor and Tony asshat-ary aside. Everything’s been flipped upside down since...” Since he became Kindred. “And I’d love to get back the old city. You guys could help make that a reality, and stick around to enjoy it.”

“The hunters are here for the Begotten, Jack.” She raised a hand and wiped it aside through the air. “And from what I’ve gathered, there are a lot of them. If we get involved, it’s going to be messy. Your precious, fragile Masquerade could come crumbling down.”

“My sire tells me werewolves have a strange thing about them, something that makes viewers suffer a sort of madness, lunacy, if they witness werewolves performing ... werewolfy acts.”

“Yeah, that’s true, but it’ll only help to a point. You think if a fight breaks out in the middle of the fucking city, that widespread lunacy won’t attract attention? You think you got hunters now, wait till shit like that becomes a media sensation.”

He sighed, rubbed his buzzed hair, and looked over at Clara. Still looking out the window, but still frowning. Maybe she didn’t like Avery’s choice? He looked back to Monica and David, but their expressions were impossible to read. David looked like he wasn’t in the room, like he was outside and looking at clouds. Monica was expressionless.

“The Invictus are offering you open borders,” he said. “I don’t think it’ll be enough to convince you, but it’s a start.”

“Open borders?”

“Like you already have with Garry, I assume. Come and go through our territory as you like, and if you need help with something, a place to live or some equipment, we can give it.”

“... thanks.” She brought her fingers up to her chin, and held it, eyes down a bit and digesting. If that offer managed to sway her a little, maybe there was a chance for this to work out. “I actually think a couple of my pack would like to stay in some place a bit more glamorous. All-expenses paid deluxe suite sort of deal?”

“Um, yeah, sure, in all likelihood. Can’t promise the White House, but we can get you pretty close.”

“Perfect. Clara and Carter have been hoping to try living the rich life for a while. You can understand, Uratha don’t get to do that often.”

He nodded, and smiled. Yeah, Uratha weren't immortal, they died of old age eventually. They hadn't amassed fortunes like the Kindred had, the Invictus in particular. Maybe a taste of money would encourage them to try and protect what the Kindred of Dolareido had managed to build here, and were willing to share. Some.

"I'll make sure they get some luxury apartments then. I've been looking for a new one myself."

"Right, your promotion." Avery laughed, and hand gestured again, to the dingy, stained, white door of the apartment, where Damien and Jessy stood just beyond. "Your buddies and you must make bank."

"One of the perks of being Invictus."

"Really pisses Garry off that you Invictus swim in money, you know."

He put up his hands. Bad topic, bad topic. "Invictus and Carthian issues are uh ... not really my domain."

Again she laughed. "I know." Before he could respond, she leaned in, set her elbows on her knees like him, and met his gaze, a few feet away. "But that offer is not enough reason for me to risk the lives of my pack, for a problem that's not ours."

No, of course it wouldn't be. He couldn't blame her, much as a bird-eye's view of the situation told him the werewolves helping with the hunters made perfect sense. When it was your own people, you didn't throw them into the meat grinder without assurances.

"... I've been thinking," he said, "about that night Jacob and I were walking home, and you and Clara were there."

“Yeah, what a lovely night,” Clara said. “I’d really love to repay that fucker too. Nice candlelit dinner, and a claw down his throat, ripping off his jaw. See him sleep that off.”

He could sleep that off, Jack knew it. If Viktor could come back from losing a chunk of his head, in a matter of minutes, Jacob could survive more.

Avery shrugged. “What about it?”

“I think I can talk to Jacob.”

“And do what?”

“Get him to talk to you.”

“... the man is as old as dirt, one of the most powerful vampires on the planet, and I killed the woman who was basically the love of his life, Jack.”

“Minerva.”

“Exactly.”

“Jacob still wants to know exactly what Minerva was doing that warranted the incident.”

No good. She shook her head, and dismissed him with a wave of the hand. “We’re not telling anyone.”

“Not even wha—”

“Not even what kind of thing she was doing. I’m not an idiot, Jack. I’m not going to give info that can be extrapolated. And I suggest you don’t go digging. I also suggest you don’t bring this up with Jacob, because the man is not going to change his mind.” Sighing, she tilted her head from side to side, earning some loud cracks. “But I appreciate that you’re trying to help me out. You probably think I'm unwilling to help about the hunter issue without bargaining, don't you?"

Ah shit. That was a very true, very callous way to word it.

"Invictus habit," he said. "And, you said—"

"I said I'm not going to throw my family into harm's way without a good reason. You vamps may think that means I need to be convinced. It really means I need time, get familiar with the city again, get a feel for its situation, on both sides of the Gauntlet. And get a feel for you vamps."

Ok, if she wanted a feel for the situation, he could help with that. "Invictus are worried about your relationship with Garry, as well. The situation is a little tense between us and the Carthians lately, and if push comes to shove, it'd be bad for us if we found you on their side."

She raised a brow, and looked over at Clara, who shrugged at her. Laughing, Avery shook her head again, and smiled at him. "Christ, you vamps are ridiculous. You think because Garry and I get along that I'll ever, ever let it affect my decisions with shit like that? Your political games are idiotic and self destructive."

"I ... don't disagree that they can be pretty stupid." The Danse Macabre was a painful lesson to learn, but it was the way of things. At a certain point, it was time to accept that vampires were immortal creatures, loners by nature, and forced to share resources; the environment bred deceit and manipulation. "But like you said, you're friends with Garry. If we showed up at his door one day, with intent to kill him, you're saying you wouldn't get involved?"

"If it ever got to that point, I'd have to be more than buds with Garry to risk my family in a full-on war." She got up, and stepped around behind the couch. Pacing. He understood pacing well, a way to let the mind function more smoothly. Never once in his life did he manage to talk on the phone, without getting up and pacing around. “So calm the fuck down. I’m not going to go to war with the Invictus unless you guys do something that would deserve us slaughtering you.” Confidence dripping out of her pores, she ran her fingers back through her black hair, before pulling the long ponytail around her waist to hold it in front of her. Reminded him of Antoinette, and how she liked to play with her hair when she was thinking. “ ... you’ll still talk to Jacob though, right?”

There it was. He smiled back at her, a subtle one, one that spared her some face, instead of calling her out on it. “Yeah. Apparently peacemaker is my new role here in Dolareido, and ... well, I’m down for that. Gonna talk to Garry too at some point. But...”

“But?”

“It’ll be hard to convince Jacob to do anything, if you’re not going to spill the beans about Minerva.”

“ ... you understand what werewolves do, right?”

“You ... kill spirits. And other things, from ... that other place.” Learning anything about what the Uratha did was tough. The witches and dragons both kept their secrets about their mystical pursuits, like the Invictus and Carthians kept their secrets about their tactical decisions. But with the Uratha, it was like trying to piece together a mystery, using the evidence left at the scene of the crime. It wasn’t that the Uratha were actively hiding what they did, they just didn’t bother to share the details, and the Kindred were hopeless to piece together anything from the aftermath.

It must have drove Jacob and Antoinette both insane.

“We prevent the two worlds from fucking each other up. Mostly, the Shadow world wants to get its claws into this one, and most spirits do all they can to worm their way over here, and spread their influence ... you know what? I’ll show you.”

“Um ... what?” Uh oh.

“I’m not going to take you into the Hisil, relax. I am going to show you the sort of shit that happens on this side of the wall, though.”

“Uh, um ... sure, but uh, what about Damien and Jessy?”

“They can wait here. We’ll keep an eye on you.”

“I’m not sure that—”

“Either they wait here, or I don’t show you shit. Your choice.”

“And the Prim—”

“You can talk to your Primogen about this; it’s nothing they don’t already know, if only a little. But, you’ll probably want to keep this to yourself, Jack. I’m giving you a peek of what’s out there, what’s in this city you’re ignorant of, and your elders are barely aware of.”

He sighed, looked down at the scuffed and dented floor, rubbed his head back and forth, and juggled words on his tongue. He needed to get Avery on his side, as per his Invictus orders, and get her to commit to helping with the hunters. He also needed to be an information exchange point with the Primogen. But, if this information let him make better decisions in pursuit of any of those things, then...

Do it. Get the information, figure out what to do with it later.

“Alright.”

---

Damien and Jessy weren’t too happy about the arrangement. He wasn’t either. But, no risk no gain, supposedly. He wasn’t a fan of that philosophy, and would argue that risk was a great way to get yourself fucked; he knew Antoinette would agree. But, Avery liked him, far as he could tell, and she wanted to throw him a bone.

For the love of god, don't make a dog pun out loud.

Clara and Avery were with him, leader and second-in-command. She had a lot of faith in her pack to be able to monitor and guide themselves, keep themselves in check and under the radar while she was gone, considering the circumstances they were in. But then, she was also willing to split some of them up, and let two of them live in the Invictus territory. Almost sounded like a student exchange program, considering he was currently neck deep in werewolf business, and soon Clara and Carter would be neck deep in the Invictus half of South Side. Hopefully they knew that meant they'd be monitored even more than they were now.

The three of them headed to Devil's Corner. Jack left his jacket and tie at their apartment, not wanting to attract the attention of muggers. It'd really suck for the muggers, to try and jump him and the two women with him. Would the Uratha kill kine that easily? It was better for everyone if they didn't, and besides, the less eyes on him the better. His mother and sister were still alive out there, living their own lives, and one fuck up had already nearly broken the Masquerade.

They stopped in front of a hotel. Except, not really a hotel. A brothel, sort of. Restless Nights was one of the few places in Dolareido that sold sexual services, that had worked out a deal with the Invictus to avoid legal ramifications. Far as he knew, it was a pretty sweet deal for everyone involved. The kine who sold their bodies were kept in good health, provided with health care and such, and the management staff weren't abusive pimps. And those doing the fucking also got to pick their clients; but considering it was commission work, and everyone in Devil's Corner was poor, he was sure they usually said yes.

Course, no one knew about all these details, the broken laws and the hidden dirt, except for the higher ups and the Invictus. And, of course, Vicky and Parker, the two Invictus who ran the joint.

“You ever been here?” Avery said.

“M-Me? No, course not.”

Laughing, she took them around back into a dark alley, and around behind the building. “It has a very low turnover rate, so I’ve learned. Turns out, the whores who work here, actually like working here.”

“ ... maybe it’s because of the benefits? Parker and Vicky keep it in good shape.” They kept other joints in good condition as well. At this point, knowing that Kindred were running brothels in 2018 was almost quaint.

“Maybe. But that’s not everything.” Avery knocked on the back door, no doorknob. It was the sort of back door you expected to find on the back of a suspicious building, the ones that hid their contents inside their basements, making meth or selling children. The latter, definitely not in Dolareido, but the former, probably lots.

Someone opened the door, a portly woman, big cheeks and frizzy black hair. “Hello? We don’t have any appointments with—”

“Take us to the room,” Avery said.

“W-What?”

Ah, the stutter, the classic sign of someone being both surprised, and finding themselves in need of hiding a secret.

Jack waved a hand. “I’m Jack Terry.”

“Oh ... oh! Right, the Master Terry.” The woman nodded, and backed away to let them into the building. “Didn’t know the Invictus were making a visit. Madam Goldman and Mister White aren’t here, but—”

“No no, it’s fine. This isn’t about them, or anything like that.” He nodded a little as he and the two werewolves stepped in, and he leaned forward to look around. Vicky Goldman, Parker White, neither were here, so he could take a peek. A couple of offices, and around the corner, a small hall leading to the front desk. An old, rundown building, like it belonged in the Carthian district, but Devil’s Corner was harsher, meaner, dirtier, than the Carthians like. No money to be had for the Invictus, and no loyalty to be had for the Carthians. But, there’s always money in sex. Maybe not a lot, considering the locale, but there was some.

“Right this way, Master Terry. The room, right. I’m surprised you know about it. Five of our girls and one of our boys is down there now. Looking to meet someone? Of course you’re not, not with that Prince as your arm candy. Good lord, you’re so small, I have to wonder what that’s like. Sorry, never been to any of the meetings myself, I—”

Jack raised a brow as the woman prattled on, and on, and on. A thrall, and one Jack could tell her sire kept out of the loop. But she knew who he was, and knew he was dating the Prince, so, either she knew at least a little, or he was famous enough for all the thralls to be talking about him. And, he had to admit, that kinda stroked his ego a bit.

Instead of taking them into the lobby, she took them into the other office. Old, half-rotting wood, white walls dented or stained, desks with piles of papers on them. A computer with a CRT monitor running Windows Vista. Good god. He looked back at Avery and Clara, and laughed, louder than he meant to, at how the two of them looked around at the place like someone might when entering a lovely wood cottage for the first time. They probably thought the place was homely.

The thrall opened a door, and started down the stairway. The smell of weed and other drugs wafted up into the air. He expected old wooden stairs, damp and scratched concrete walls, and exposed wiring, maybe a dehumidifier sitting on the floor, trying to keep the place from collapsing into a swamp. But, the room greeted him with white walls, cleaner than the ones upstairs, and as they descended, high ceilings showed dangling bits of ... beads? Dark beads, hanging like curtains, hundreds of them, ends connected to the ceiling of polished metal grating, so they came within inches of touching the floor with curving lines.

The sound of moans filled his ears before he could spot the source.

He looked down. The stairs weren't wood, but soft carpet, thick shaggy carpet, maroon and clean. When they got to the floor, the same sort of carpet greeted them; wait, there was a door mat with a bunch of shoes on it, before the door. They should have taken off their shoes. He reached down, but the thrall laughed and shook her head.

“Don't worry about it Master Terry. You and your friends can do whatever you like of course. We'll clean up any dirt, don't you worry none.”

“Thanks.”

“Can you leave us alone?” Avery said.

“... um, if that's what the little Master wants. Not sure the Prince would appreciate this though, Master Terry.”

“W-What?” He raised his brows, looked at Avery and Clara, who were laughing like a couple of jackasses, before he looked back to the thrall. “No, they're my friends. They wanted to show me something, and it's ... kind of private?” Yeah, now that he took a second to consider the situation, it did seem like he came here to fuck, didn't it. Shit. “I'm not here for anything sexual. This is business.”

“Well, whatever you say Master Terry. Just come get me if you need anything.” The big woman smiled at him, offered a small bow, and started back up the stairs. Slippers. Big, fuzzy slippers.

Clara started her way through the beads, though she slipped off her boots before she did. Avery too. Heh, well, if they were going to, he might as well. He slipped off his dress shoes, and smirked down at the feel of the thick carpet giving into his weight. He smiled more at the sound of beads knocking against each other as Clara and Avery started to move them. What sort of secret wonder would they find?

They'd find ... an orgy.

He rolled his eyes as he stepped into the center of the room, the hanging beads creating thick walls around them. Blankets and pillows of all shapes and colors covered the floor, and from the ceiling hung by a white cable, was a small, dangling statue of a naked woman and naked man, wrapped around each other. Shining like silver, it gently turned in spot, as if nudged by the rising smoke of the humans beneath it.

Like the thrall had said, five women, one man. The man was on his back, laid out upon a purple blanket, hands behind his head, while another woman sat on his pelvis, fucking him. The four other women were interacting with the couple, touching, massaging, caressing, suckling, kissing. All of them were smoking, smoking various things as far as he could tell.

They all turned to look at Avery, and froze.

“Uratha!” one of the women said. “We ... we have not spread! We have not devoured or consumed or infected! Only gentle, only urge. Please, you do not need to—”

Avery raised a hand, came up to the orgy, and squatted down beside the group of people. Course she took a peek, smirking as she eyed the veritable feast of flesh before her. Restless Nights kept their workers in good health.

“Not here to send you back, spirit. You’ve shown a lot of self control.”

“Yes, self control!” another woman said. “Do not need to hunt us.”

“But, I do want you to show yourself. Present yourselves to the vampire here. Or I will send you back.”

The six kine looked at her, and then, like a choir, turned their heads together to look at Jack. One by one, they all started to drift to sleep, bodies slipping into a restful coma on top of each other, chests rising and falling with their dozing. They were all attractive and fit. Restless Nights knew what it was doing, and Jack couldn’t help but admire their bodies. No sweat, and the room was a pleasant temperature; must have preferred slow sex. Maybe they—

He jumped back, and opened his eyes wide, as a pink fog began to seep out of their bodies. What in the ever fuck. He froze, stared, and glanced Avery and Clara’s way to see what they were doing, if they were going to freak out like he was. But the two of them didn’t move, Clara with her hands in her jeans pockets, and Avery only moving enough to get up from her squat. Just watch and wait then, he guessed. They may have been used to seeing strange, bright, gaseous blurs rise up from the sleeping bodies of kine, but he sure wasn’t, and he found himself reaching for his knife, kept under his pant leg. Clara stopped him though, putting a hand on his shoulder and shaking her head, while keeping her eyes on the pink display.

Pink began to form into something solid. Six figures, hovering a foot in the air, each about five feet tall. Arms began to form. Hands, fingers. A waist, hips. No legs though, as if he was looking at six genies from a cartoon. Faces formed upon heads with slender necks. And, as he stared on, he found one of his eyebrows lowering, the other raising higher, as breasts began to solidify on their chests.

Some small, some large, and one spirit displayed a set of breasts big enough to dwarf Antoinette's; almost comical, and yet, not, considering the spirit was floating around with no legs. All the curves, the hips and waists, the shoulders into the arms and neck, the back curve into shapely asses, all were emphasized or accented.

Their faces lacked defining shapes, except for solid, glowing blue eyes, and glowing blue lips. Seductive lips, some thick, some thin, but all with small smiles and subtle grins. The pink skin of their forms was see-through, like looking through stained glass art, thick enough it was hard to see to the other side. But as they finished ... coalescing, or whatever it was that they were doing, he gulped at the sight of their nipples, blue like their lips. The obviousness of their sexual nature was almost palpable.

“As you can see Jack,” Avery said, stepping over the sleeping kine and between the slow hovering spirits, “Vicky and Parker have stumbled onto something they may or may not understand.” She reached up, and grinned at him as she flicked her fingers against the small, dangling statue of the two lovers. “This place, one of those ‘sex holes’ I’ve heard about, is frequented by sex spirits.”

“Sex spirits?”

“Mmhmm. Spirits that live on, feed on, the essence that resonates with sexual pleasure. They’re everywhere in the Shadow, in Dolareido. Slut City, right?” She gestured to one of the hovering pink things, and set a hand upon her—its back. Pushing it toward him, Avery laughed, and the spirit, eyes wide with fear upon being touched, grinned after a moment, and let the werewolf push her into him.

Physically touching a spirit. What? He looked at her—it! It, and it put its hands on his shoulders. Without irises or pupils, solid blue eyes were hard to read, but from the slanted squint, and the curling grin, it looked like the spirit was having fun. She dri—it drifted around him, came up behind him, and pushed its breasts into his back. Soft, so very soft, and it felt like human skin, human tenderness, human heat.

“Spirits spread their influence,” Clara said. “It’s what they live for, it’s why they exist. They’ll do anything they can to do that, barring getting themselves killed. They pursue it with total one-mindedness.”

“But, we do not ... spread needlessly. Understanding, yes? We have understanding.” The spirit behind him put its chin on his shoulder, and hugged him all the harder. “Much sexuality from this little one. Can taste it. But, you are dead thing. The Parker, and the Vicky, they can ... blush life, it is called? Join us. We will pleasure, prove we do not overstep.”

Avery rolled her eyes, but Clara smirked at him. Yeah, being called out as having ‘much sexuality’ by a sex spirit was a little strange, and if he was blushing life, he’d be blushing until his face bled lava.

Clara must have been thinking it too. “Much sexuality? Hearing that from a sex spirit, call me impressed,” she said.

Another spirit floated to him, one of the thinner ones with small breasts. And then another, the one with the absurd breasts, both reaching out and taking his hands. They tugged on him, tried to pull him toward the sleeping humans, and they giggled as they did. Such lovely sounds, very feminine, very siren. They were very stereotypical too, bleeding sexuality in such obvious, ridiculous ways, to the point it felt surreal. They felt surreal.

“... why do they all look like women?” he said, doing his best to ignore the beautiful creatures tugging on him. Their tugs were gentle enough he could resist them, and dig his socks into the carpet.

“The form spirits take when they manifest isn’t always specific. For a lot it is, but some look different or change in certain ways.” Avery shrugged again, and gestured to one of the spirits. The spirit, on queue, changed forms, adopting a very masculine figure, with the classic V shape for the shoulders to hips, thick arms, defined abs, and ... a penis dangling down almost a foot long. Well, shit. Still a pink, floating genie looking entity though, partly see-through, with glowing blue eyes and glowing blue lips.

Both werewolves licked their lips at the same time, at the sight of the spirit, and its new, masculine form. Clara laughed, and stepped in closer to the ‘ideal’ male specimen, almost like she was going to kiss the man. But instead, she grabbed hi—it by the shoulder, and pulled it in close.

“You better not be ruining these humans’ lives, right? If people start dying to drug overdoses here, or fucking till they starve, we’ll —”

“Not! We are not. We do not claim, do not harm.” His new, deep, manly voice came through, such a jarring juxtaposition to the feminine giggles of the others. These spirits were ridiculous.

He was looking at spirits. The absurdity of that took a while to sink in, but right in front of him, pink genie things were hovering around, with tits and dicks and an apparent need to possess humans and fuck. Spread sexuality? If spirits liked to spread their influence, create more of whatever it is that they were, then these spirits wanted to spread sex and bliss above all else. And from what Clara said, it sounded like spirits were willing to do that at the expense of humans. But, they couldn’t, because if they did, the Uratha would interfere. So many questions, he had all the questions, every possible question, he had. But he knew Avery wouldn’t answer them. He had to piece together things from the few words they said about it.

Avery gestured to the pile of humans sleeping. Sleeping or, as Jack looked closer, he realized they were high as a kite. It'd take a lot more than some weed to get humans fucked up like these humans were. They groaned, moaned, rolled their heads a little, and made little attempt to do anything other than lay there. At least they looked happy.

“This,” Avery said, gesturing to them, “is odd. The spirits here in Dolareido, in Slut City, are understanding and cooperative. That’s weird. Normally fuckers like this,” Avery grabbed one of the spirits still appearing as a woman, and shook her jaw with a hand, “will do everything and anything to keep spreading whatever it is what they embody. It gets out of control, it takes over, it becomes unstoppable, until a pack of wolves thins the herd.”

“... was it like this last time you were here?” he said. “Spirits being unusually cooperative.” Asking questions was dangerous, but if he was careful, maybe she’d answer some. The spirit on his back started to run her hands down his shirt, and with little giggles and mewls, her hands found his stomach, slipping into his shirt and rubbing his body.

Clara smirked at him. “Yes. Like Avery said, Slut City is a strange place. Plenty of other cities, especially with ones poking at the Gauntlet like Jacob or Antoinette, are a fucking mess. Spirits of murder, spirits of money, spirits of drugs, spirits of concrete and asphalt, even spirits of howling winds or flickering street lights. These can get out of control and destroy ecosystems, turn nice cities into slums, or turn quaint villages into horrific murder fests for snuff films.” Ok, well, at least Clara was being a little more informative than Avery. But at the same time, she was grinning at him as the spirit behind him continued to rub down. “Very sexual, mm?”

“I, um, I don’t know—get off me!” He grabbed the spirit’s wrists and pulled her off, and she giggled before drifting back toward the pile of humans. “So spirits possess people?”

Avery nodded. “They can. These idiots here,” she gestured to the pile of flesh, “are prime real estate for spirits. They can worm their way onto your side of the wall, and attach themselves to a person, urge them to do things. When it gets really bad, they completely take them over, and do whatever they can to keep spreading whatever it is they like.”

“Sounds ... dangerous. Wait, that Azlu thing, what was that?”

Clara shook her head. “Different thing. Don’t worry about that, just tell us if you see the shit you saw in the tunnels.”

“The point of this little exercise,” Avery said, walking over to him, “was to show you the sort of shit we do. We manage a very elusive prey, Jack, and we keep it from growing out of control. Sometimes that means being strict about things. Minerva started doing things that risked ... risked a lot. We told her to stop, and she didn’t listen. So we went to stop it ourselves, but she got in the way, and died for it.” She grabbed his shirt by the collar, and brought him in closer. Such a scary, small woman. “So don’t stick your nose where it doesn’t belong, and everyone will be happier. Capisce?”

“ ... yeah, I getcha. Except this—this is probably not a topic to be had around these,” he said, gesturing to both the humans and the spirits.

“May we return to our feast?” the spirits said, as a choir.

“Go nuts.” Avery waved a hand back at them, and made for the stairs.

The spirits sighed, in sync, relieved and content, and slipped back into the bodies of the people they were possessing. Avery had nothing but their word that they weren’t ruining these people’s lives, turning them into meat puppets and possessing them and doing nothing with them but fucking all day, until their lives were in shambles. Then again, the Uratha prowled the city, and far as Jack knew, they also prowled the other side of the 'Gauntlet' and did their hunting thing there too. Maybe if the spirits got uppity, it showed up there as well?

His second life was so much easier to wrap his mind around when it was just blood, sex, and money. Now he had monsters, werewolves, gross abomination things, and for the cherry on top, spirits. If a ghost showed up at his apartment one day, at this point, he wouldn't even blink.

Clara followed after Avery, grinning at him as she slipped past the beads. Once she was through enough of them they could no longer see each other, he looked to the people, the kine, and watched as they came out of their blissful comas. Without losing a beat, they got their hands on each other, into each other, stroking and rubbing. The woman on top of the man started to grind her hips on him, her side to Jack so he couldn't see what their bits were doing. Probably for the best, he had a hard enough time not thinking about sex with Antoinette every moment of the night, he didn't need more imagery in his head.

He looked up at the dangling statue of the two lovers. Vicky and Parker probably put it there, and knowingly, knowing what sort of situation would arise from its presence. How it interacted with spirits, what it did, why it did what it did, he hadn't the foggiest, but maybe they did.

Did Bloodlust have something like this?

---

Back in the apartment with the werewolves, he grabbed his jacket again, his vest holster and gun, and his silver sword. In its sheath, it looked like a regular sword, and hopefully—Clara snatched it out of his hands, and took it out of the sheath. Fuck fuck fuck.

“We’ve been meaning to talk to you about these,” she said. “Invictus are carrying them, your Sanctum bud waiting outside has one, and according to the boys, even Natasha has one.”

“ ... we don’t have a choice,” he said.

“Don’t you?” Clara looked to Avery, Monica, and David, but the three of them sat and listened, giving Clara the clear to push the topic. He wished they hadn’t. “You want to be our friend, get us on your side, but the Carthians aren’t walking around with silver swords.”

He winced. They knew it was silver, and the Carthians weren’t walking around with werewolf bane, painting the Invictus and everyone else in a pretty bad light. What do what do what do.

“ ... you ever hear of the Prisoner’s Dilemma?” he said.

Clara, frowning, tossed him the sword, and he snatched it out of the air. “No.”

He hooked the sword onto his side near the shoulder blade, inside the jacket on the vest holster, out of sight. “Two criminals that were partners in crime have been caught, and are now being questioned in different rooms by the authorities. They are not allowed to communicate with each other. Both are offered a deal. If you both refuse to testify against the other, you both get one year in jail. If you both try and rat each other out, you both get two years in jail. But, if one of you rats the other out, while the other keeps their mouth shut, then the honorable guy, the guy who keeps his mouth shut, gets four years in jail, while the rat gets to walk free. What do you do?”

“Easy, keep my trap shut.” Clara shrugged. Easiest problem in the world, right? She leaned back onto the windowsill, folded her arms across her chest, and raised a brow. “I don’t understand the dilemma. If they both refuse to testify, they only get one year in jail each. It's measurably the best outcome. The other two options both have a total of four years in jail. Both keeping quiet has a total of two years in jail, one each."

"It's easy because you trust the people you're working with with your lives, Clara. Because, your pack is your family, and you know you'd die for each other. That's not a normal circumstance, Clara, that's an exception. For the overwhelmingly majority of people, the only thing that makes sense is to try and defend themselves against the worst outcome, at the expense of others."

"... I don't understand."

"Each prisoner has incentive to defend themselves by trying to screw over their partner. If you rat your partner out, and they do you as well, you get two years. If you rat them out, and they don't rat you out, you get zero jail time. In both results, you avoid four years in jail for yourself. But, if you try and be honorable, to protect your fellow prisoner, you open yourself to the possibility of being betrayed, of getting four years, while the rat will get to walk."

"That ... that's bullshit! That doesn't make sense, that—"

"That's people, Clara." Sighing, he walked for the door, put his hand on the knob, and turned around to look behind him. Everyone was looking at him, eyes intense. They wanted to hear what he had to say. "People don't think in terms of a group first, they think in terms of themselves first. That's normal, instinctual. And, when you look at the incentives of that dilemma in the sense of an individual, that individual can defend themselves from a four-year sentence, while at the same time getting either two years in jail, or even zero, by testifying. People think in terms of the self first, and in that mindset, it's objectively better to rat the other person out. Werewolves don't think in terms of the self first, I assume; you're a pack, and you'll always be a pack. You think in pack terms."

“... then what hope do you vamps have?” Avery said, one eye squinted as her gaze cut into him. “Humans distrust each other. Vampires distrust each other and everyone, even more. You guys are the rat in this example of yours.”

“Yeah, I know,” he said. “But, give it time, and we’ll come around. You said you wanted time to get a feel for the city and situation, Avery? We’ll need time, before we can trust you. In the meantime, we’re not stupid enough to trust the other guy, and risk us getting those four years.” He pat his jacket where the silver sword remained hidden. “It sucks, and I hate it, but ... yeah, give it time.” Turning and opening the door, he looked over his shoulder at the wolves, and smiled. “And that’s one thing we vamps have in spades.”

---

---

~~Julias~~

Time to make sense of the chaos.

He stood before his covenant, his two fellow councilmen, the three right hands of the council, and all the Invictus Kindred considered to be of senior rank. Isabella Leauvion and Hella Vendram. Bruce Vanna and his friends Vicky Goldman and Parker White. Another eight Kindred were there, each more than twenty years embraced, such as Gloria Jennings; though, Julias wondered if he should talk to that woman. She was getting lazy, and not presenting herself as a good role model for her childe Amanda.

If current circumstances didn’t spark her to be more proactive, he’d make her.

Everyone was sitting around the large table of glass, the room dark, with the LED lights above set to dim. The two elders McDonald and Turio sat at the one end, Jessy at the corner by Michael, Damien by Maria opposite of his partner. Damien being there was a little odd, but they were going to have to get used to it.

Maybe one day, if the Second Estate ever became a power again, they'd no longer be privy to these meetings. But for now, Damien was one of them.

Jack sat at the other end of the table, near him where Julias was standing, here where all eyes were turned, and Julias had his back to the colossal touch screen that covered the wall. A map of Dolareido was displayed, with every minute detail etched in. Blue lines highlighted streets. Black lines highlighted buildings, with every color in the spectrum used to detail things about the buildings, were shown. Sewer entrances with grades of color representing degrees of safety, and how easily they could disappear into the known abandoned sewers from them, were shown. Symbols with different colors representing Carthian or Invictus control were shown. And points of tension of late, namely the Mirrden District, were highlighted with a gradient of red.

But the map had changed. The building that burned down that held Barry's den, was now in red. The old prison where Jack had been tortured, was now in red. The alley where Jack had been stabbed and kidnapped from, got a little highlight of red. Another map, the sewer map, was displayed beside the Dolareido map, and the area where Azamel had made her home, was now in red.

"There is too much red on this map," he said, frowned at it, and then at his Invictus. In particular, he did not like that little strip of red near the Invictus ballroom, the Fall Palace. It was deep in South Side, and was the only bit of red in such an inconvenient place. "Do we have an explanation for this hole yet, Isabella?"

She shrugged, and leaned back in her chair. "Thralls were around, guarding. Not only ours, but reports had sightings of some of the Prince's thralls as well, blending in with nearby crowds. Video footage of the area is plentiful, except for the alleys around behind the building, for no other reason than the target is not a priority to our enemies."

“Enemies?” he said. “Be specific.”

“ ... sorry, I meant the Carthians. I know, they’re not our enemies, but ... apologies.”

He gave Isabella some leeway. Some. She was one of the older Kindred, and she was around during tenser times with the Carthians. Plus, she was Garry’s opposite, and the two of them hated each other. Hostility was to be expected, but not tolerated.

“This brings up a valuable point,” he said, and he gestured to the group. “Unless the Carthians stir trouble, you are not to provoke them. I hope that is obvious. Even Alder Honors made attempts to keep relations smooth with Garry.” The man had been invited to their balls, after all. “Master Terry insists Avery won’t show up on our doorstep looking for a fight if we start pushing Garry around, but that’s not the point. Until these hunters are expunged, the Carthians are our friends. understood?”

Hella leaned forward onto the table, eyebrow raised. “Our friends? You know that Joe fucker broke my arm a year ago? I still owe him som—”

He snapped his gaze to her, shutting her up. “Madam Vendram, if you so much as look at Joe with anger in your eyes, I will break your mind and force you to cut off your own fingers, and eat them. Do I make myself clear?”

“ ... yes, Mister Mire.” She lowered her gaze, and leaned back into her seat. Not happy being pinned in by a ruling, but too scared of him to argue the point. Good. If he had to use fear to get these idiots to not make things worse, than he would.

He started to pace, with occasional glances to his childe. Jack had raised a brow at him, when he threatened Hella, but he recovered quickly. It wasn’t like his childe would disagree with him, but Julias didn’t like encouraging the boy to do what Ventrue often did to get their way: break the minds of whoever they wanted to do their bidding. Then again, when trying to corral a bunch of vampires to use their brains and consider the future in their actions, he'd use whatever worked.

A slippery slope. What separated someone like him from a dictator? A totalitarian? He thought what he was doing was for the best of the city, and the Invictus. But then, leaders of totalitarian governments sometimes did as well. It was so easy for a Ventrue to be convinced they knew what was best, that they should be obeyed because they were smarter, better, than the others. It was a slippery slope he had to navigate carefully, before he fell and smashed his skull open on the jagged rocks waiting beneath him.

“Moving on,” he said. “Areas where Kindred congregate are now considered priority targets. The hunters are not Carthians, they're not looking to spread territory or establish footholds. They're looking to kill us.”

Bruce raised a hand, and Julias nodded to let him speak. “I thought the hunters were here for Azamel, and the other monsters. We could step aside and—”

“We've considered the option,” he said. That got a little more of an eye raise from Jack, but the boy sighed, nodded, and put his eyes back onto the map behind Julias. It'd only been logical to consider that option, and his childe would know that. Hopefully. “But it would be a fool's hope. These hunters are experienced, and this Angela and Jeremiah are particularly deadly, and driven. They are zealots. They'll burn this city to the ground to get to us, if only because we helped the Begotten once already.” He reached out to the screen, and swiped. A picture of a man came up, an older man, with tattoos on his neck, but otherwise his body was hidden in the trench coat. “This is Jeremiah, correct Master Terry?”

“Correct.”

“This picture was taken by Invictus in another city. Jeremiah passed through that city, after ten Kindred deaths.” Communicating with other Invictus, and asking for information, was always a mixed bag. The more autonomous a city, the better. Signs of weakness could be met with other Invictus coming to take command, or sending enforcers to deal with imbalances if they thought it worth the trouble. But interest in Dolareido from outside establishments was rare; Antoinette kept the city in good control, comparatively speaking.

“Confirmation that they’re his kills?” Damien said. Everyone in the group looked at him, each with a degree of annoyance, each with a bit of surprise. It wasn’t entirely normal for Invictus Kindred to question their superiors. For someone not Invictus to do it was fingernails on chalkboard.

But, Julias didn’t mind so much. Skepticism was intelligence made manifest. “The Invictus are nothing if not thorough, Mister Burksen.”

“I see.”

The man in the picture had a distinct look, with the faded remains of scars cutting across his nose, some scars along his jaw interrupting the short gray beard, and one along the head exposing some of his scalp through his short gray hair. He oozed experience, a veteran of his twisted sport.

“Take a good look everyone, this is the man we’re worried about. This is a hunter with a lot of years and a lot of kills under his belt.” Again Julias began to pace, now with his hands in the small of his back, head down. Classic pensive, thoughtful pose, and with the hands behind him, it no doubt made him look like a contemplating, wise leader. Image was everything.

“An attractive, older man,” Isabella said, which got a weird glance from everyone, before she chuckled and shrugged. “For some, I am sure.”

Julias pointed to the man’s neck. “You can see he has tattoos, but hunters do not normally have many identifying marks like this, unless they have a good reason. Based on Jack’s report, it would appear the man has access to some unusual items as well, perhaps enchanted. Jeremiah would not be the first hunter to tattoo enchanted markings onto his body.”

Jessy raised a hand. “Um, enchanted? I mean, I read the report, and enchanted sounds like a bit of a stretch.”

Julias motioned to his childe. If there was someone he could count on to be both methodical, and to not exaggerate in his reports, it was him.

“I’ve seen magic at work before,” Jack said, turning to look back at the table and toward Jessy. “I don’t use the word enchanted lightly. I—”

“Wait, you’ve seen magic at work before?” Hella leaned in again, and tilted her head to the side. “Magic?”

But before Jack could say anything, Maria raised a hand, and waved it aside in a gentle dismissal. “Master Terry was present when Lucas assaulted the Prince. Both he and Mister Burksen can testify that the Archbishop used magic to assault the Prince. Theban Sorcery.”

Damien lifted a finger off the table. “We of the Lancea et Sanctum consider them to be miracles of a sort, but only those of both great power and great faith can summon them so readily.”

Maria shook her head. “We have seen other, magical acts and objects, done outside the grasp of the Second Estate. The Circle of the Crone perform their blood rituals, and the Ordo Dracul have ... flirted, with similar tools before.”

Hella winced, leaning back in her chair again. Perhaps the Gangrel had been living in denial that magic existed; it was certainly easier to pretend it didn't. Far kinder to a Kindred's mind to consider themselves the only supernatural things walking around.

"I felt the difference," Jack said, "between having those cuffs on, and off." Looking down at his wrists, he took a little time to rub one, then the other. Getting your hands chopped off must have been horrible. Being the one that forced that madness must have been a strange feeling indeed. "It was hard, pulling up my vitae, when I had them on. Very hard, like it was being suppressed. On top of that, I looked Angela and Jeremiah in the eyes, from only inches away. They didn't feel normal, they didn't feel like kine."

"Elaborate for the others," Julius said, gesturing to the table. The report had explained, but only the council and the right hands had read it. Time to get everyone up to speed.

"... they felt like ... they felt indomitable. They felt like the sort humans that would walk into a monster's lair, and without hesitation, throw themselves into a pit of snakes to fight the gorgon. Real, crazy, psycho types, you know?" He shivered, and rubbed his head a few times, before he forced his hand back to the table. Old habits die hard. "The others, the hunters they had working for them, felt like normal kine. They were afraid of me, and had all the stress signs of normal humans. But the other two, Jeremiah and Angela, they ... no, they weren't like the others. They weren't normal."

"Then what are they?" Bruce said.

Jack shrugged. "Not Kindred, not Uratha, not Begotten. They looked human, and they smelled human, but..."

"There are other things out there," Michael said, leaning forward onto the table, elbows against it, fingers netted together, "than those things the good Master Terry has mentioned. Dolareido has rarely, in its history, had to deal with them, but there are other terrors in this world of darkness we live in. I do not think such terrors are what we're dealing with, though. No, it would be a strange thing indeed for anything other than a human to be working with these hunters, especially in this manner, with this goal to kill the Begotten, and us."

Jessy looked confused, eyebrow raised, and eyes glancing between Jack and Michael's contradicting statements. "Then what are they?"

"We're ... not sure," Julias said. "Azamel might know something, but as informative as Jack's meetings with the old monster have been, she's refused to give us a direct response on anything. Until we know more, assume that Jeremiah and Angela are both extremely dangerous."

The group of Kindred sighed, but nodded. 'Extremely dangerous' carried some implications with it, and no one liked them.

"Master Terry's latest meeting with the Uratha," Julias said, "has gone both well, and poorly. As I said earlier, we are less concerned that Avery will become a threat to us, but at the same time, she is unwilling to help us with the hunters until she feels more comfortable with the situation and the city. Master Terry has told me she wishes an exchange of trust, before it can progress further. Two of her pack mates will be moving into Carlava Villa, and we will be showing them the utmost respect. Understood?"

"We bending over for these people?" Jessy said.

Her words got her a hard glare from her sire, and she shrank into her seat.

Julias squinted his eyes at her. "Some minor gamesmanship is hardly bending over, Madam Herrington. And last I checked, you've submitted for one of the grand suites in the Carlava Villa to be given to your new friend, the kine who saved Jack's life. Should I question your motives there?"

Bringing in the woman's personal decisions into a business meeting might have been unwarranted or unprofessional, but Kindred were different. There was no separation between work and life, they were the same thing, despite how some Kindred did their best to keep them separate. And Jessy knew that, better than most.

“Wasn't suggesting it was a bad move, Mister Mire,” she said, a grin sneaking up onto her lips despite her resigned pose. “Just wanted to know how far we're taking this. And Eric will prove a valuable ally with time, I'm sure.”

Turio didn't look convinced. “He'd be better off a thrall or ghoul, Madam Herrington. Trusting him is foolish.”

“... I think I can understand Madam Herrington's decision,” Jack said. “Thralls and ghouls are tainted, their minds warped in ways that make them ... reliable, but they lack the spark of a wildcard. Eric's behavior, what little I saw of it, and from what Beatrice and Fiona have told me, is a defining example of that behavior. As long as he does not learn anything that can be used against us, or tortured out of him for that purpose, I agree with my partner's course of action. He will be of use.” Everyone looked his way, Julias included. Jack didn't normally talk to Maria, if only because it was probably easier for him to not, not since he'd killed Lucas. And for a fresh neonate to talk without being asked was almost insubordinate. For him to speak to her in the middle of an important Invictus meeting, and to go against what she said, was a huge step out of his comfort zone. Julias smiled.

So did Maria. “Well said, Master Terry.” The ghost lady offered him a nod, and sat back straight in her chair. Jessy's grin turned into a warmer smile, and she shared it Jack before she sat up straight too. Kid's knack for smoothing out bumps of tension manifested everywhere.

“Back onto topic,” Julias said. “If you see Jeremiah, and you think you have an opportunity to kill him, take it. Understand the danger of the situation, and that in all likelihood, you thinking you can kill him is actually a trap set up by him to bait you. But I’m not going to say don’t try if you think you can do it. He needs to die.

“This brings us onto our final point of this meeting. As some of you know, the woman Jeremiah has recruited, Angela, a person Jack considers to be of similar ... degree of danger, as Jeremiah, is Athalia’s daughter.”

The right hands and the council were unfazed, but for everyone else, this was new information. Isabella, Bruce, Hella, Gloria, Vicky, Parker, all of them raised a brow, and looked at him as they sat up straight and put their hands on the table.

Julias swiped the screen again. No picture this time, but a drawing, made for them by a forensic sketch artist in their employ, and Jack’s description.

“The picture doesn’t do it justice,” Jack said. “The glass eye, I mean.”

“As my childe says, she has a glass eye, so identifying her will be reasonably easy. Unless she exchanges it with a less-obvious piece, which is possible.” But, he pointed to the huge scar that cut across the forehead, down through the eye socket, and down into her cheek. There were other scars too on her face, similar to Jeremiah’s, though less in quantity. “Black skin like her mother, but she buzzes her hair. Remember this face. Master Terry assures me it is otherwise an accurate picture.”

It was Gloria this time to raise her hand. Strange, considering how much she preferred to shut up when in meetings.

“I uh, I think I ... yeah, um, I remember Athalia. Stirred up some trouble, around twenty years ago, right? Very dangerous woman?”

We were told to avoid her and let the sheriff handle her?”

Ah, right, that.

“The sheriff didn’t kill her, Madam Jennings, if that’s what you’re wondering. She was a new Begotten, and the Ordo Dracul are more familiar with them than we are. But, after some time, she left the city. She’s returned on a couple of occasions, never for long.”

“I get that, b-but, I mean, if ... we kill Angela, then—”

“Then nothing.” Enough of this. “We owe Athalia nothing, and we have a right to defend ourselves.” He slammed his palms against the table, and everyone jerked in their seats; except, of course, for the council. “We have a right to do more than that. Dolareido is our city, a Kindred city. The kine are ours, we’ve cultivated them, spent decades, centuries for some of us, raising them. We protect them from themselves and keep this city a safe place, statistically speaking. If anyone encroaches upon it, we are beholden to no one but our own. Kill her if you get the chance, and if issues arise with Athalia, then we will kill her as well. Do I make myself clear?”

“Yes sir,” they said.

“Good. Dismissed.”

Chapter 58

~~Natasha~~

“Something ... h-horrible?” she said.

Art stepped forward into the buildings, into the civilian lobby, and sniffed the air. “Monica told us she found out that, apparently Jack managed to bust his way out of here, and kill a few hunters on the way out. I assume you know more. Can you spare us any more details?”

What details could she share that she’d read about? Antoinette had her ways, and especially so did Daniel, to get detailed reports about what happened here, more than what the Invictus were willing to share. Some things they read were vague, but her two bosses were both more than skilled enough to fill in the blanks based on implication. And Jack was her friend, he’d told her some things, things she’d managed to extrapolate from. Once she’d put it all together, it was a very scary tale.

“Jack ... was tortured, and I g-guess it ... it pushed him over an edge. He dominated three hunter minds, and summoned an army of rats.” She shivered at the image. Rats, swarming, overwhelming, killing? “It sounds like something Viktor w-would have done.” Oops. She’d meant to say that in her head.

“Right, his grand sire.” Matt shivered, and rubbed his arms, in the same way Natasha did. Made her smile, for a moment. “Avery had some stories for us about him.”

“D-Does she? I, um ... not sure, about what ... what happened back then. Avery showed up in the ... fifties, right? I was sired around the purge, in the sixties.” A wonderful ostrich tactic, conveniently ignoring the warning about the horrible thing right in front of her in the prison, to get information about the past. Typical Mekhet, need knowledge knowledge secrets secrets.

The two werewolves continued along through the lobby, sniffing, sniffing, sniffing more, picking up something her nose couldn't, before moving on and heading down the hall toward the prisoner lobby.

"Mmhmm," Matt said. "Don't normally run into Ventrue who give Uratha much trouble. Hard to kill, but it's not like they give us much trouble when the fists start flying. Except, this Viktor fucker, he could dominate Uratha easily."

"... he c ... c-could?"

Art nodded as he circled around the center desk in the prisoner lobby. "Yeah. Uratha aren't immune to you Kindred and your fucking mental powers and shit. Normally, the younger Kindred can't touch us, mental powers or not. But the older ones, you get your fucking fingers into our brains? It's ... never a good thing." He stopped before the gate leading down one of the hallways, where another hallway turn waited, with cells waiting beyond, Tash imagined. "Christ, this wasn't just Jack escaping and killing, this was a bloodbath. The whole place reeks of blood, human and rat, and gasoline. Death."

She couldn't smell any of that.

"According to Avery," Matt said, "Viktor dominated a couple of her companions, at the same time. Forced them both to transform, full on gauru mode, and made them fight each other." He followed after Art, eyes scanning up and down the bars, the floor, everywhere. All clean, all washed, all evidence gone, but whatever the Invictus did to clean it, it wasn't enough to hide everything from the Uratha. "Not a secret, really. Your elders are fucking terrifying."

“I ... I guess. I d-didn't know Viktor did that though.” Viktor's strength was well known. That combined with his growing insanity and paranoia — according to Antoinette — were the reasons Maria and Michael were afraid to challenge him. “D-Did ... anyone die?”

“To Viktor being a jackass? No, no one Avery's told us about anyway.” Art shrugged as he continued down the hall, deeper into the complex, Matt and Tash following after him. “He couldn't break Simon though, apparently.”

The gentle giant stepped ahead of her, and got down on his knees beside one of the cells. “... that kid really left a scar here.”

A rat squeaked, and disappeared into a large crack in the concrete. Where rats were once quite bold, she imagined all the rats for a mile in any direction would be afraid to be seen by anything on two legs, now.

“Scar?” she said.

Art came to a stop by one of the cells. “Yeah, the sort of shit that resonates, creates essence, creates problems. Seems like he's tainted this prison with ... I don't know. Rage? Hate? ... a lot of creatures died here, painfully.”

The rest of them came up to the cell door, and looked inside. Natasha could see nothing out of the ordinary, but both Matt and Art were twitching their noses and looking around, fidgeting fingers and snapping eyes. They didn't like being here.

“Hard to make out their scent anymore. So many vamps came through here, and washed the place down.” Walking into the cell, Art cringed as he approached the metal chair, and knelt down in front of it. “... something happened here. Jack must have been in this chair. He ... was in pain, a large amount of pain. Panic, pain ... then ... revenge?” He got up, and turned to face the gate of the cell. “He ... broke two minds here, I think. Took them over.” He walked back out into the hallway, before turning to face the direction they came from. “Two humans died here, shot down. Then...”

Natasha did her best to not imagine a music montage, of a song shrinking an effort of days down into seconds, like typical TV forensics drama scenes. But, she stared on, wide eyed, as she listened to a bass-heavy alternative rock song play in her head, while Art managed to come to conclusions from utterly nothing.

“Then the madness started. You said rats, right? Lot of ... lot of dead rats. Hundreds ... They started here.” He motioned to the crack in the wall. “And from similar holes in this old place.” He gestured around to the others cells too. “ ... they didn’t die quick either. Most of them died in pain.”

“That’s what it is,” Matt said. “Christ, kid was in pain ... and inflicted a lot of pain.”

“The hunt-t-ters, they ... used fire, and ... burned all the rats,” she said.

Art nodded, and followed the hall back out to the lobby again. “Yeah, death death and more death, all marked with pain. All starts with that chair. And, everything has a generous, heaping pile of hate on it, like ... tar.”

“ ... in the report, it said ... that J-Jack, that um, he had to cut off his hands, t-t-to get out. He d-dominated the two hunters watching him ... despite, um, enchanted hand cuffs, designed to work on vampires we think. He forced them ... t ... t-to cut off his hands so he could escape.” A Mekhet would have used the situation to get a quick phone call out, not cut off their own hands. But she wasn’t there, maybe it wasn’t reasonable.

Both werewolves winced, sucking in their breath between their teeth. “Damn,” they said.

She winced as well. Yeah, damn. “He, um, summoned rats. All Kindred know animalism, you p-probably know, b-but, Gangrel and Ventrue are good at it, naturals at it. And ... Jack, he’s ... he’s Julias’s childe. Julias is a p-prodigy, sort of. Very, very strong. Viktor was ... also very, very strong, and ... and J-Jack is...”

“Is following in his sire and grand sire’s footsteps.” Art knelt down by the desk in the civilian lobby, the three of them almost back out of the building. He ran his fingers along the tile of the floor, and smelled them. “He’s not the first vamp to have an explosion in skill at a young age, but this is pretty big. This whole place reeks of death, pain, and panic. And ... disgust.”

Matt nodded as he walked around, wincing every so often. “We’ll have to keep an eye on it, in case any wraiths show up.”

“W-Wraiths?” Wait, didn’t that secrets spirit thing say something about wraiths? Something about them, and Black Blood?

“Yeah. Not ghosts, though I wouldn’t be surprised if ghost wraiths existed. No, these wraiths are a type of spirit that have grown in Dolareido. Mix of death and fear. There’s not many of them, but enough to be a problem.”

Ok, moment of truth. Tell her boyfriends she knew about Black Blood? Don’t tell them? They might not like her knowing about it, and she didn’t want to become another Minerva. But, Antoinette knew of it, and the werewolves weren’t trying to break down her door or anything.

“ ... d-do they ... do bad things?” she said. Ok, so she wasn’t going to tell them. Yet. She had good reason though, because, secrets and stuff. Mekhet needed their secrets, and it was part of her job to acquire information. If they didn’t know that she knew about Black Blood, they’d be more likely to accidentally tell her things, things she could deduce conclusions from that they wouldn’t expect her to be able to.

Harmless information gathering. Harmless.

Matt nodded. “Yeah, they can get involved in some pretty dark stuff. Seems they’re working together with some other shit, and we’re not sure why.”

“David knows more, but getting straight answers out of spirits is never easy. Always comes with a fucking price tag.” Art shrugged, and continued along until they were back outside, the outer gate they climbed over before them. “And ... you might want to talk to your buddy, Jack, about this. To leave a scar like this, from one incident? It was nasty. I doubt the kid is even aware of how badly this must have fucked with him.”

“I ... I’ll t-talk to him.” She wasn’t sure what she could say that Antoinette or Julias couldn’t, but there was no harm in checking up on her friend anyway. And, she was sure Antoinette was doing her best to soothe the boy’s soul.

---

---

~~Julias~~

He really wanted to go back to his home, the mansion, lay in bed with Triss — and Jen — and stop thinking about all this garbage. He was going to kill these hunters, if only so he could take a single day to truly, wholly relax again. No matter what he did now, the hunters were on his mind, squirming into his thoughts, until it ate at him.

The Primogen meeting room. He was there, as were all the Primogen. No one had missed a meeting since Tony’s death, since he was the only fucker who had the nerve to ignore them at his whimsy. Good riddance.

Christ, he was sour. No word, no sighting, nothing about the hunters. And it was all he could think about, all his mind was concerned with; which made it hard to focus on what Jack was saying.

“Carter and Clara will be staying in the Carlava Villa soon,” the kid said, looking to each elder around the table as he updated them on Invictus business deemed shareable. He stood at its end, opposite of the Prince, hands at his sides and posture rigid. If he’d been wearing a military uniform, the hair would have fit even better. “For an indeterminate amount of time.”

“This some desperate ploy to make friends with Avery?” Garry said, rolling his eyes as he leaned back. “You Invictus are fucked in the head, especially if you think you can bribe her.”

Michael frowned, leaning forward to put his elbows on the table, eyes cutting into Garry. “We offer her a roof, same as you. And we want what you want, Tones, to encourage her aid in dealing with these hunters.”

The two Gangrels frowned at each other. There’d be barking soon, if someone didn’t do something.

Jacob, of all people, leaned in first, and swept the antics away with a hand gesture. “Jeremiah is a deadly beast, to be sure. I spoke with Azamel myself, and while that old bitch refuses to be straight with me, she was obviously afraid of the man, in some capacity. It would appear we’re stuck in this problem she’s created. I don’t blame the Invictus for trying to get some extra help on our side.”

The Prince sighed, tapping a finger on the glass table, the other hand gently combing waves of hair over her bosom. “And we are certain that the damage is done, and the Kindred are bound to this conflict?”

Everyone else sighed, and looked to Jack, knowing what the kid was going to say. He winced, and nodded.

The Prince met his gaze, looked down at the table, and sighed as well. “Merde.” With a growing frown, she gestured for Jack to continue.

“Avery isn’t against helping us,” the boy said, “just ... she doesn’t want a repeat of the last incident, with Simon.”

Maria sighed and shook her head. “She is paranoid. Viktor and Lucas are no longer with us, and they were Simon’s two biggest antagonists. Even Tony didn’t cause too many issues with the Uratha when they were here.”

Jacob laughed and snapped his fingers once. “Were, they were her two biggest antagonists. She can fucking die in a fire for all I care.”

“We need her help, Jacob,” Garry said. “I know Avery did some horrible shit, but she was working for Simon and it was his call. She doesn’t work for him anymore, if he’s even still alive, and she’s here to try and fix some of the crap Simon left behind. Cut her some slack.” If there was anyone on the Primogen council who could convince Jacob of something, it was Garry supposedly, at least according to what Julias knew about them. But Julias wasn’t so sure it was that simple, that Garry and him were simply friends helping each other out. Nothing was ever that simple with Jacob.

But, with a few moments to ponder, the old Nosferatu offered Garry an understanding nod, before leaning back in his chair again. Poor Jack was standing closer to Jacob than others, due to the position closer to the door, and Julias could see Jacob’s quick tongue got the boy anxious. Elders arguing with each other was not a sight his childe was used to.

“In the mean time,” Jack said, “she’ll continue ... pruning the weeds, I suppose is the best metaphor, hunting what Uratha hunt. She says she’s happy with the state of the city, though.”

“And yet, she does not leave,” Antoinette said. “In fact, she intends to stay.”

“... yes, my Prince.” Jack rubbed his hair, before snapping his hand back down once he realized he was doing it again. “Issues with the Circle of the Crone aside, there are many advantages to her staying, and she's being quite reasonable ... about most things."

Sticky situation for the kid to be in, having to argue and make points on behalf of the Uratha, without pissing off his superiors, particularly the Nosferatu with the Joker smile. Julias hid his smirk. He didn't envy his childe, but he was happy with the job he was doing nonetheless.

"Reasonable?" Antoinette said, glaring at him. "She has taken residence in my city, without my permission. What is reasonable about that?"

A pin drop would have shattered glass in the silence that followed, as the Prince glared at the boy. If there was any concern Antoinette would play favorites with her lover, she was successfully crushing them.

"My Prince, she has no intentions of disrupting the Kindred world here, in Dolareido. She only intends to help. That Azlu monster in the sewers was here before she arrived, not because of her arrival, and she dealt with it. Apparently, other such dangers may exist in the city, and one of those Azlu monsters survived the encounter as well. She is doing all that she can to deal with these issues, without damaging the Masquerade."

"... we did not ask for her help with these matters," Jacob said, snarling.

Jack met the old man's eyeless gaze. "Not everyone that needs help is willing to ask for it, elder Jacob. I wouldn't ask for a werewolf to help in matters of nuance, of money or politics or controlling a city, but I know that we Kindred are barely aware of ... the strange things, hiding in the darkness. They are more aware, and more equipped to deal with it."

And again, the silence was profound. Everyone knew about Jacob's constant probing and exploring into such darkness, such secrets and madness, and Jack was straight up calling him out on it, saying the werewolves knew more. Ok, it was fine to be proud of your childe, but at a certain point Jack was going to cross a line; he was already flirting with it. One step too far and he was going to really piss off the old witch.

Jacob laughed, and winked at him. "True that. Much as I hope that Avery bitch dies a horrible death, she has her uses." Winking with no eyes, a bandage covering them, was weird, and only noticeable from the muscle of the eyebrow and cheek moving.

"... you may continue to placate them, and perhaps recruit their aid with these hunters, my Primogen," the Prince said, "but I assume you are all pursuing measures to deal with this threat without their aid?" The group all nodded. "Good. Keep me informed of any discoveries, as I will you."

Much of this had already been said in the emergency meeting following the incident with Jack's kidnap and escape, but Julias appreciated the Prince's thoroughness. Pretty sure she was also doing it to remind everyone they were in this together, not against each other; nice to have her in his corner.

Maria leaned in. "What of Azamel? She and her subordinates have done surprisingly little, when it is they that have brought this trouble to our door. We pester the werewolves, when it's the monsters that created this problem."

"Azamel will help us," Jack said, nodding with the statement. "She is ... concerned about the city, in her own, weird way. Not like the Uratha though, I wouldn't trust her that much. For her it's more a tactical thing. But, she's more willing to form an alliance with us than Avery, and more committed to taking down Jeremiah than any of us."

The Prince mirrored his nod, but her eyes looked into each Primogen as she tapped her fingers once again. “Then I must address the elephant in the room. If Azamel is willing to help kill Jeremiah, is she willing to help kill Angela.”

Julias almost said something, almost got angry. But, no, ill-timed and misplaced. As much as he was frustrated so many people were concerned with upsetting Athalia, Antoinette’s worry was about Azamel. That worry was justified. He didn’t want to deal with an angry Azamel, none of them did.

“I ... don’t know,” Jack said. “Athalia is torn. She says she ... she...” Kid scratched his head some more, giving up all pretense of being professional. No one minded, not at this point. “She doesn’t want to kill her own daughter, but if push comes to shove, I’m not sure it’ll be that simple. Maybe not kill Angela, but detain her or subdue her, maybe? As for Azamel, I get the impression that if the opportunity presented itself, she’d kill Angela, but attempt to detain her first.”

“... I suppose that is better than nothing.” The Prince leaned in, like many of them already were, and set her elbows to the glass table as she looked at each of them. “It has been weeks since they have shown themselves, these hunters. And the Begotten have become scarce, hiding in their tunnels — my tunnels — and hiding in their dream world. Everyone must both remain vigilant, and cooperative. That includes with the monsters and the werewolves, to an extent. If you see an opportunity to earn the help of these groups, consider taking it. We must expel these hunters above all else.

“That said, do not risk your own lives or the Masquerade for these trespassers. I do not want them in my city, but, they have not earned my wrath. Yet.” Her face steeled, and she looked at each individual with a long, determined stare, yet again. On the surface it was innocent enough, a disgruntled boss. Behind that, where the skin didn’t show it, where only the beasts in them could hear the silent growling, she bore into them with her gaze. “Not all of you agree with me, for enacting the purge. On that, your opinions do not matter. It was the correct option, and following it, we had decades of peace. Even Tony’s infantile meddling did not disrupt that. But now I find the city growing more, and yet more unruly, at the hands of these newcomers. If I have to, I will call upon a purge once more, to remove either the Begotten, or the Uratha, or both. And in that matter, I will demand the aid of all covenants should I decide to exercise my right. Do I make myself clear?”

Jack’s eyes were wide, but everyone was looking at Antoinette. The kid hadn’t expected those words. Hell, Julias hadn’t. But, they all nodded, and let the implication sink in. If such a thing happened and one of the covenants disagreed, vampire ashes would rain down on the city as much as blood and bone.

After a few more minor points to clear up, she dismissed them, and everyone got up. Jacob first, offering a small wave over his shoulder, then Garry, grunting and putting his hands in his jean pockets, and then the council triumvirate.

“Mister Mire, Mister Terry, stay a moment, s’il vous plaît? For a personal matter.”

Personal matter, hmm. He could understand her keeping the kid around, but him? They had no business outside of Jack, so he thought. But, he nodded, and stayed seated as the others left. They offered Jack grins, smirks, even a nod or two. Hell, Garry chuckled and pat the kid on the shoulder; which put Jack on edge like nothing else, to the point Julias had to hide his smirk.

But, eventually, the three of them were alone.

“Jack,” Antoinette said, small smile, small grin. Subtle, like she was comfortable with the gentle expressions. It was cute. “I hope my words did not stir your malcontent. Please understand that I would not remove, or kill, your friend Fiona unless she stood with Azamel in such a circumstance.”

“That makes me happier, yeah.” He scratched his head, and came in a little closer until his hips touched the other end of the table, him looking across it to his lover. “I’m trying to keep everyone happy, getting along with each other, and talks of purge ... yeah. Scary.”

“And such a circumstance would be unusual. Even when Azamel was a larger thorn in my side, I did not call for such an act. And when the Uratha caused chaos in the corners of my city with their trespassing and uncontrolled hunts, I did not call for such an act. Only on Lucas, who had every intent to ... well, I am sure you can remember the man’s zealotry.”

“Yeah, no forgetting that.”

“And ... I will see you tonight, non?” she said.

Julias couldn’t help but let out a little grin with that. Big, bad, dangerous, intelligent and confident Antoinette, worried about Jack not being there. It was delightful to see. God damn it made him miss Triss. He hadn’t seen her in a couple nights, and fuck, he really wanted to see her, hold her, forget all the troubles in the city for an hour or two before their daily sleep took them.

And Jennifer could watch. He didn’t mind that Jen seemed infatuated with watching Julias and Triss be romantic with each other, and Triss seemed to actively enjoy it, if anything.

“Yes, of course, my Prince.” Jack offered a small bow, and the same sort of subtle smile. Smooth.

She nodded, and a small finger wave sent the boy on his way. He returned it, before he stood up straight as Julias caught his eye.

Yeah, your sire is still here, kid. But Julius shrugged, and smirked at Jack as the boy disappeared behind the door.

“Now, Mire.” She turned in her chair to face him, leaned back, and set both her hands around the knee atop the other. “I had been meaning to speak with you of personal matters. There has been little time as of late to catch up, and I thought, perhaps you could share fifteen minutes with me?”

“Of course, yes Prince.” Strange. The first time this happened, she’d just showed up at his new mansion randomly, expecting the conversation. Now she was asking.

“I ... had hoped to grow my relationship with your childe. But I am worried.”

“Worried?”

“Oui. There are a host of reasons that I should keep my relationship with the young man the same as it is now, permanently in its waves of honeymoon bliss. When such dreamy thoughts fill our nights, it is easy for the boy and I to rest in each other’s arms. But, when realities seep into the air, and crawl under the door, I grow ... afraid. I worry for the past, of how my relationship with my own childe went. I worry for the future, and how the strife my city suffers will extend to our relationship, if such topics entered our dialogues.”

“I see.” The woman did love to consider the future. It was why she was a good Prince; that, and the strength to back it up. Where was Daniel anyway? “Jack has never been in a serious relationship, and his relationships before were not relationships at all. You’re treading new ground in his life.”

“ ... do you have any suggestions, Mire? I feel like a fool, worrying about this. Natasha herself has suggested that I am fighting inevitability, keeping my relationship with the boy focused solely on ourselves and each other, and not letting the affairs of the city or the harsh realities it brings taint our personal time. But ... but I held that boy in my arms, and watched him struggle to not break into tears, as he recounted the details of his torture.”

Julias winced, groaned, and looked down. Yeah, that must have been painful for her. Hell, kid hadn't filled him in on every single detail, just the basics, and it was painful to hear, let alone see the kid struggle with the misery in his eyes. But at least Antoinette didn't see the physical aftermath like Julias had.

“ ... I don't know why you sired Tony, honestly, Prince. I heard he was a great artist when he was younger?”

“Oui, a great artist, passionate for so many things.” Like washing away a layer of dirt, she wiped her knee at the mention of the man's name. “Why do you ask?”

“Jack is not that. Jack is ... well, Tony was juvenile. No offense.”

“Mire, I am glad my childe is dead. It had to be done. You need not mince words over his image.”

“ ... alright. Well, Jack is not Tony. Tony may have been a delinquent, but Jack is a surly old man in a young man's body.”

That got a chuckle out of her. “Oh? How so?”

“Harsh and analytical, and very much with a ‘I ain't got time for this shit’ attitude, when the man isn't old enough to even know what it sounds like when a music generation changes.”

More chuckles, from the two of them.

“That does capture the harder side of the boy's personality, I admit.”

“I knew Jack pretty well when I decided I wanted to sire him, Prince. I knew he’d be determined, intelligent, methodical, and I knew his small size was no indication of his tenacity. The kid ... can be ruthless, when he needs to be. And honestly, I think you sense that, and you want to keep him from becoming a key figure in the world waiting for him.”

She raised a brow. “And what world would that be?”

“Our world. Viktor’s world. Violent, and filled with responsibilities that wear on the mind. And ... the bitterness that comes with it, maybe the paranoia, maybe the jadedness.”

“ ... yes, I would prefer to keep Jack from suffering such a fate. Or at the very least, I wish to be a soft place he may rest from such tribulations.”

“I sired him for a reason, and as much as it looks like Jack’s getting pulled in that direction, yanked into the Danse Macabre well before others of similar age, he’s the one Kindred I trust to not let it turn him into a jaded, empty husk.” Christ, he hoped he was right about that. “I think you do him a disservice, by babying him.” Bad word choice?

Her eyes narrowed, and squinted at him. Ok, bad word choice.

“Do you think it is wise to continue burying the boy in responsibilities and trials, Mire? I find myself trying to pamper him, because every time I speak with him, he is buried in new pain. You promoted him to being a right hand of your Invictus council, which I agree is warranted, but not in the boy’s best interest. His reward for surviving, where most would perish, is to risk his life yet again.”

“ ... and you keep calling him boy.”

She opened her mouth to retort, but closed it with a hiss, sucking in her breath through her teeth as she glared at him. “He is too young to have such trials thrust upon him so quickly, Mire.”

“I disagree. I think, as painful as this is for me, as much as I don’t want to see him suffer, Jack will manage, and not only will he become a powerful Kindred for it, the city will benefit. Your city.” This conversation was turning sour, and he ran his fingers through his hair, back over his head, as he leaned in toward the Prince. How to fix this. “I understand you love him, but I sired him for a reason. I saw the grit in his eye when he was just a teenager, Prince, just a kid who looked around him and wondered why everyone else had so much trouble managing their vices or futures, when for him, it was as easy as flipping a switch in his head. I could put that kid into that chair again, with Jeremiah and Angela, and I know he’d do the exact same thing to get out, because he knows how to ... flip that switch, how to grab the cold hard truth of situations by the horns and get shit done.”

The Prince’s expression broke. The steel melted, her features softened, and her red gaze fell to her knees. “Yes, I am sure he would.”

“Don’t get me wrong, Prince. I’m doing everything I can to make sure shit like this doesn’t happen, but I’m making the right choice for him, the Invictus, and the city, by putting him in this position. Maria and Michael agree with me.” Fuck last names, they were well past last names. “Maybe he’s growing up too quickly. Maybe ... maybe it’s good that you’re letting him be young. But, Jack thrives on adult conversation too. I think you’ll be pleasantly surprised at how useful his insights can be, and how much he enjoys giving them, if you talk to him about more mature things. He’s not Tony, he’s not going to get bitter or resentful if you call him out on something, point out a flaw in his reasoning or ignorance in his knowledge. Hell, knowing Jack, he’d thank you for proving him wrong; a trait I wish more people had.”

Her smile returned. Thank god. Making the Prince frown for too long was never a good idea. He trusted her to not let her emotions lead to biased decisions, but nobody's perfect.

"Then, I guess I am the fool, for handling my love with silk gloves." She leaned back in her chair once more, warmth on her face as she hooked her hands around her knee again. "I want to help him, Julias. I want to ease his burdens."

"He probably feels the same way about you."

"... I should treat him with more respect then, and involve him in my life. I admit the notion of laying my burdens upon him, in hopes of being soothed by him, had never occurred to me. Always the boy ... the young man, is someone I have wanted to protect, even from my woes."

"I definitely think you should involve him more, treat him as older than he is, because, mentally, he is."

"May I ask something a bit more personal then?"

"By all means." He leaned back as well, arm settling on the table beside him. Far better atmosphere, far more relaxed.

"What sort of things does the boy like?"

"You don't know?"

"I know many things about my little Ventrue, but I know there are many things he does not share, in fear that I would find it juvenile. For example, he plays video games, but does not discuss them with me. Understandable, as I know little about them, but that does not mean I am not willing to find some sort of bridge for us to connect upon."

“Ha, I strongly suggest you don’t get into video games. Definitely a product for a different generation ... that said, Jack has a taste for art that dances on the macabre.”

“I was aware he enjoyed some ... perhaps morose pieces, that I expect you graced upon him.”

He laughed. Yeah, some of his art tastes had rubbed off on Jack. “Before I came along, he was enjoying macabre art too, just with a more fantasy flare.”

“ ... did he now?”

“Mmhmm. Skulls piled into mountains, black knights and evil sorceresses, things like that.”

Something caught her eye, stirred around in her mind until a tiny grin sneaked onto her lips. She tapped the corner of her mouth with a finger as her eyes wandered, arranging thoughts into something he couldn’t imagine.

“Thank you, Julias. I appreciate your help.”

“My pleasure.” He got up from his chair, but the Prince raised a hand, and he stayed there, standing with a brow slightly raised.

“I had meant to ask about your relationship with Jennifer.”

“Oh. That.” He chuckled and scratched the back of his head, not unlike Jack would. “That is ... an unusual development.”

“May I ask for a detail or two? It is of interest to me, considering you are now sleeping with all female witches in the city.”

“I ... I guess I am, heh. Jen had a thing for Triss, and she sort of wormed her way into our bed with time. There’s no romance between us and her, but she seems to prefer it that way, to be our friend ... with benefits.” So cliché, so very cliché. And yet very accurate.

“I am delighted. When Jennifer’s sire left the city, I was saddened. A Ventrue with as open a mind as his is rare, and Miss Denver takes after him; a pity she was not sired Daeva. You are lucky to have her in your midsts.”

“ ... you might just be right about that.” What did Antoinette know about Jennifer? Far as Julias knew, Jen was just a young Ventrue who drifted into Jacob’s employ, no one special, no one the Prince would keep tabs on. But, considering Jen’s attitude, confidence, and the way she handled herself at the ball, half naked for all to see, maybe he should reconsider his impression of her.

“ ... Julias, keep an eye on Maria, would you? I am sure you already are, but I have ... new reasons, to suspect the woman may be getting into affairs she should perhaps not touch.”

“I’m not sure I understand.” Wait, what?

“Then that is probably for the best. But, please, watch her carefully? This is not about Jack, I do not think, but ... something ... something to keep an eye on.”

“ ... will do.”

~~Jack~~

The Primogen meeting was last night, and he wasn’t sure he liked where things were going. But tonight, he wasn’t going to worry about that. He was going to take the night to himself, and share it with Antoinette, who was also taking a night to herself, mostly. She had a few things to do before, but still, her dedicating most of her night to him was nice, and he wasn’t going to waste it.

Upon entering the Elysium tower, the receptionist had a message for him. Go down to F and go to room 4. A surprise was waiting for him.

Surprise? What sort of surprise did Antoinette have? She surprised him all the time, but she didn't announce them. Hence, surprise, usually. Now he knew about it, so he was surprised about the surprise, and now, a little excited about it too. Just a kid on Christmas morning.

It was nice, getting excited about silly stuff again. He missed that.

He took the stairs down to floor F, and turned for room 4. He flicked on the light switch, and started down the hallway. He'd never been down this hallway, like many others; a damn labyrinth down here, and a massive one too. Centuries building in a specific location, how many thralls did she have down here at any given time, expanding her network? Hell, how deep could you dig into the ground before you ran into lava or something? Before you hit some sort of gas pocket and erupted the whole building?

He laughed, smacked himself in the forehead, and continued on down the hallway of black marble, covered in cracks of white lines, like thousands of bolts of lightning. Once upon a time, they were intimidating. Now, they were a second home. He ran his fingers along the smooth surface of the wall, occasional glances upward to smirk at the LED lights curved into holes in the ceiling.

Now that he thought about it, he must have been dating a billionaire, or someone near it. Little him, dating a billionaire, wisped away from his boring life to a new life of money money money, and sex. Ha. Not nearly so simple or shallow, but, the comparison could still be made. Except of course his billionaire delight was an ancient vampire. Even better.

Eventually the hallway did a sharp turn, and once he made it, he stopped. It opened up to a grand door, one of metal, and locks, bolts of shining steel. It was the door he was supposed to open, but it didn't look like it wanted to be opened. He went up to it, and looked around. Double door, and the gleaming metal looked strange against the black marble. Well, not that strange he supposed, as Antoinette's master bedroom was protected by a literal vault door.

He pulled upon the small latch, and opened the door. Not locked, then.

Darkness awaited him, with flickering touches of blue. LED colors? Maybe, but once he was inside the next hallway, and closed the door behind him, he could see the ebb and flow and light fighting against darkness along the walls. Not LED, but fire, blue fire. He gulped, and started down the hallway straight out of a fantasy novel.

It was again the black marble walls, but mostly covered in hanging waves of blue silk. A rich, royal blue, and it caught the waves of ghostly blue light, as every ten feet, two braziers of blue fire sat between the hanging silk waves. And if it was only that, he'd have thought it quite artful, if a bit dangerous. But it wasn't only silk and fire, as each brazier was a statue, metal forged and molded into a shape over each flame.

A black skull, with vampire teeth.

He gulped as he looked down the hallway before him, long, the ends hidden by hanging silk and beads and ... bone? No, it couldn't have been bone, but he couldn't see it from here. He walked toward the barrier at the end of the hall, the dangling silk and chains, and peeked at each fire he passed. The skulls were large, black metal, and they captured the flame as it rose up into them from underneath. Their eyes flicked with the blue fire, small crests of the living death creeping up through the holes. Almost like someone was burning souls to keep the fires lit.

Upon reaching the barrier, he took a second to examine. Hanging silk, blue, like on the walls, many layers of it, and what must have been two dozen hanging chains dangling to the floor, made of links of black metal like the brazier. The links looked like bones, black bones. He touched them, and sighed relief as his fingers recognized the metal texture; not that he would have minded too much if Antoinette was decorating with bones, now that he thought about it. Triss used to hang out inside a catacomb, which was kind of badass, and he imagined the Circle had bones and shit everywhere.

But, maybe he was feeling a little afraid, because he was walking into a dark hallway with blue fire and black skulls, with no idea of what was ahead of him. And maybe seeing legit bones would have been slightly more unnerving, given the circumstances.

A small note, a slip of paper, hung along the silk. A black wax seal kept it folded, and what looked like a claw of some sort jutting from one of the chains skewered its corner. He gulped again, plucked the note from the hook, and broke the seal.

‘Disrobe before entering.’

He shivered, and tossed the note into one of the braziers. Gone in a poof of red, before everything was blue once again. Why was he nervous? He’d had sex with Antoinette hundreds of times already, and he knew what she liked decently well, by this point. Every time he got in bed with her, it was like riding a tiger, or better yet, a dragon, a deadly creature that had taken an interest in him. There was always a thrill in that, and it sent a tingle down his spine as he thought about the first time he’d had sex with her. Every time he touched her that night, he felt like he was trying to steal a dragon’s treasure, and one wrong move would turn him into food.

And he still felt like that, each time the deadly woman took him between her legs. On nights like tonight, maybe he felt like that a little more. They loved each other, and she’d never hurt him, but still, when things like this happened, hallways full of skulls of blue fire, and hanging chains with little black bones and claws on them? It made him nervous. Who the fuck wouldn't it make nervous?

And stripping down until he was naked, before pushing through the silk and chain barrier, made him a hundred times more nervous. It was a few feet of the material, and it became total darkness that he had to feel his way through, pushing aside the dozens of hanging waves, and the dozens of chains that nudged against his naked body.

Wait. For all he knew, they wouldn't be having sex, and on the other side of this barrier were a dozen awaiting Ordo Dracul, ready to interrogate him. Maybe Antoinette would have him tied upside down, naked, while her fellow dragons poked and prodded him, to see what made him tick? Wouldn't that be a fun 'surprise'.

Once he stepped through the barrier and into the next room, he gasped.

He raised his gaze, and looked over the grand room before him. This room, he must have seen this room before? The throne room in Conan the Barbarian, maybe? Or, maybe a throne room in Game of Thrones? No. Maybe ... a throne room in some fantasy book he read? It was something ... beautiful, and scary as all fucking hell.

Far in the distance, was a throne, and Antoinette sat in it. He wanted to look at her, to see what she was wearing, what she was doing, but his eyes drifted around the enormous room, caught in the flowing blue light. A thousand people could stand in the grand chamber, if pushed in to the shoulder. It was tall too, maybe twenty feet high, and silk ropes and sheets connected points of the ceiling with hanging curves of the lustrous blue. Beauty, against the dark of the dangling chains by the pillars. Such a large room, so deep underground, needed pillars of course, and colossal pillars of the black marble lined the room, with a few more toward the center. Decorations dangled from the pillars, black bone, and as he approached one, he gulped at the sight of expertly crafted black skulls dangling from the chains. Dozens of them.

The braziers of metal skulls lined the enormous walls, well out of the way and distant from the queen sitting upon her throne. They were too far to provide much light, but something sat in the center of the room that did the job instead. A statue, a classic Grim Reaper statue, a skeleton with a cloak over its head and body, the robe covering its legs and the statue platform it stood upon. Hidden inside the cloak, a powerful blue light, the same eerie ghostly light, burst from the reaper's exposed chest and face, bathing the room in a more consistent, powerful glow.

There were more statues too, standing between the braziers by the walls. Cloaked figures with ghastly claws poking out from long, heavy, hanging sleeves. It all gleamed with the ghostly blue glow, black metal polished to a shine.

If a necromancer had a throne room, this is what it'd look like.

Eyes enchanted by the beautiful, terrifying display of art and death, he almost didn't notice the moans. He walked — crept, really — toward the noise, slipping past the enormous Reaper statue, and headed toward the throne. There were two bodies before the colossal chair, upon a mountain of the same navy silk that dangled from everywhere, along with dozens of black pillows. Surrounding the mountain of silk were dark skeleton hands, large, jutting from the black marble of the floor, and all facing inward with palms open, fingers up, to catch and keep the blankets from spilling outward. A bed of softness, trapped by hands of black death.

Within the center of the mountain of silk, was a table, an altar really, something topped with black leather, and with a base of black bone and skulls. Uh oh.

The pile of softness sat before the throne, maybe teen feet away, and Ashley and Julee were within it, beside the altar, half covered in the silk waves. The two creatures were naked as well, with their legs locked, smooth slits rubbing against each other, while the two of them were leaning back, hands to the sheets. Closer now, he could smell the sex, the arousal, and he groaned quietly as he watched them shiver and mewl as they rubbed on each other. From the sounds, the sights, and the smell of sexuality, he could tell they'd been enjoying each other for a while already.

Both of them were wearing black collars, and the collars were attached to leashes. Metal, chain-link leashes, polished smooth and thin, but metal nonetheless, and the chains ran along the blankets, over the strange metal hands that surrounded the two ghouls, up the three steps of the throne, and into Antoinette's hand. The throne she sat upon, black metal with black leather cushions, displayed a host of obsidian, shining, metal bones, and a dozen skulls, each looking as if they had come from a vampire, each with a set of fangs. The chairs of the arm looked like skeleton arms, but for a skeleton of titanic proportions, as if she sat upon the corpse of a giant.

He looked at her, and dropped his jaw. Bathed in the deathly blue light, his eyes froze on her, her red gaze disappearing in the blue light as onyx, while her hair emphasized the blue to an almost pale glow. Her free hand was between her spread thighs, and gently caressing her clitoris, as she smiled at him. She looked like a sorceress, and what she was wearing sealed the image, seared it into his eyes and mind.

Upon her head, she wore a metal skull that was set to cover the top of her forehead and much of her hair, its lack of jaw exposing her sharp but seductive face. It had fangs, long, and they came down over her forehead, securing the black metal to her head like clasps. For earrings she wore tiny black skulls, dangling from equally tiny chains. Around her neck she wore a tight necklace, something wide and tall, something that fit the contours of her neck, the top of her shoulders, and it poked down onto her sternum. Little bone shapes were carved into its body, and as he stared at it, he realized it was black leather, adorned with black metal designs. A neck corset.

Each bicep held a circlet, an arm guard, the same sort of design as her neck corset, wide, black leather covered in more black metal, this time with an obsidian skull face compressed to the fabric, with blue, glowing eyes. Blue stone eyes, maybe? Her gauntlets were the same, a black, metal skull face upon each hand and wrist, each with glowing blue stone eyes, and each with fangs.

She wore an underbust corset, and he gulped as he stared at it, at how it pulled her already slim waist into a tight, absurd hourglass figure. The black leather was covered in black metal as well, but instead of displaying a scary vampire-esque skull, it showed fingers, as if two large, black skeleton hands were clutching her waist from behind, into impossibly small confines.

Her breasts were nude, except, another set of enormous, black skeleton fingers reached up from her corset, and clutched each breast tight, four fingers each. Her nipples were exposed, sitting between the second and third skeleton finger of each hand, and he groaned as he stared at how the strange hands pressed her breasts up and together. So much cleavage, and he found his eyes locked onto it, on them, as it was obvious the metal fingers were clutching her breasts tightly.

A set of skeleton hands for her waist, and another for her breasts, as if multiple entities of death loomed behind her. God damn.

He would have said something, maybe something like ‘that can’t be comfortable’, but his eyes fell lower, and he melted. She wasn’t wearing any underwear, her wide hips and delicious thighs completely nude. Her boots covered her feet up to the knee, solid metal, knee guards showing another set of the spooky vampire skulls of black, blue stone eyes. Underneath the boots, and halfway up her thighs, was more of that black leather, pinching her thighs tightly to emphasize their curvy, toned shape. With her thighs spread, she was leaning back into the throne like a comfortable queen, and she continued to gently massage her clitoris as her eyes shifted away from the two ghouls having sex, to him.

“My love,” she said. “My little Ventrue.”

“... A ... Antoinette.” He looked at her, then at the ghouls, back to her, then back to her ghouls. Ashley and Julee, mewling and whimpering, managed only glimpses at him, as they brought themselves to orgasm. He was hard in seconds. “W-What is all this?”

“Most of this is the artwork of a man named Farner Temperman. Dead now, alas. Had I known of his work when he was younger, I may have sired him, to save his artistic genius.” She jingled the chains in her hand, and the two ghouls unhooked their legs, hopped up, and came up to the chair. They sat on their butts, turned slightly, sex slave pose as they smiled at Jack, leaning into the chair. They were shivering with orgasm aftershocks, and the blue light caused the juices on their smooth thighs to glisten.

“You have ... a room, dedicated to this artist?”

“Non. This is a room where I indulge in the occasional art expose, my love. One does grow bored in their old age, and as my collection of art grew, I desired a way to express it more thematically.” A play room, for an elder vampire. Holy shit that was awesome. “And now that I have someone such as yourself to share it with, perhaps we can enjoy more games in the future?”

So very awesome.

“I knew you liked fashion, but this is ... I mean ... wow.”

The Prince smiled at him, a heavier, more seductive smile than she'd been using as of late. He gulped again, and froze as she motioned for Ashley to stand up.

Antoinette stood up as well, turned the girl around to face him, and continued to look at him, gaze on him, as she lowered her lips to Ashley's neck, and began to drink. The little ghoul started to tremble, legs threatening to give out, but the Prince tightened her grip on the girl's neck, other arm hooked around over the other side of her. But she held there for only a moment, before the hand lowered, slipped between the ghoul's thighs, and began to finger Ashley, hard.

Jack stared on, and watched Ashley cum her brains out on Antoinette's fingers, as the Prince drank her down. Through it all, Antoinette continued to look at him, grinning at him with her eyes beneath the fangs of her skull headpiece.

She jingled the chain, and used the same hand to motion for Julee to go forward. Blushing and quivering, the other ballerina walked over to him, and stood before him.

"Ashley and I are your sacrifices for today. You ... you should drink, as much as you want, in preparation for your night with the Voivode of Dolareido," she said, grinning a sly grin he wasn't used to seeing on Julee's face.

Voivode of Dolareido, an Ordo Dracul title.

Fuck, it was easy to forget that, apparently, dragons had a habit of doing some seriously scary shit, experiments with sciences that any modern scientist would call obscene, forbidden, and supernatural. So focused on all the other insanities in his life, he'd sometimes fail to internalize that his love was a practitioner of equally terrifying, mysterious research. She was dressed like an evil sorceress, or a necromancer or something, and as the blue light bathed them, turning her red eyes into black, he could now imagine it, imagine the deadly woman performing dark, inhuman studies in the quiet light of her laboratory.

And of course, the image only made his dick harder, because his dick was like a moth to flame.

He took the naked, shivering ballerina by her bare shoulders, pressed her breasts to his chest, and sank his fangs into her. She melted in moments. But, as he met Antoinette's gaze, and how she was still drinking, sipping Ashley, and fingering the woman again, and again, and again, he mimicked her. With one arm hugging and pinning Julee to his body, his other hand slipped down, got between them, and he thrust two fingers up into her wet slit, palm upward.

She went limp in seconds, conditioned by dozens, probably hundreds of feedings from Antoinette, and lately, by him. Whenever a set of fangs pierced her neck and flooded her with the relaxing waves of the Kiss, a set of lips, or fingers, or a cock, were on or inside her every time. The ballerina was helpless to it, and she started to collapse, her pussy soaking his fingers as her insides clenched on him. The pulsing squirts of her blood, each spurred by the spasms of her muscles, were honey on his tongue, thick and warm, sending a buzz through him as he drank her down.

All a precursor to the main event.

Antoinette picked Ashley up, holding the young woman up by her wrists, both in her one hand. She did the same for Julee, slipping her fingers around the girl's wrist, drawing it around as Jack held her, and grabbing the other, before picking her up. One girl in each hand, Antoinette used her height to keep them from touching the floor, except for the grazing of their toes, as she walked them toward the throne again. And, adorning her throne with ornaments, she set them down against its front legs, laying them out, sacrifices well consumed.

When she turned to face Jack, she set down the leashes still bound to the two girls, and picked up another one, from her throne's arm. Unlike the collar on the girls, this collar was bigger, thicker, fancier, with a skull with blue eyes where a large chain dangled from it, larger again than the chain the girls' leashes were. Antoinette walked up to him, grinned down at him, and handed him the collar. A small lock was on it, and if he put it on, he wouldn't be getting something this heavy and thick off of him without the key. It was heavy in his hand, and he stared at the jawless skull on its face, with the two blue eyes glowing and looking at him, daring him to give into this woman and whatever insanity she had planned.

He put on collar.

Antoinette sighed, long and pleasant, whole body visibly relaxing, joy on her lips and delight in her eyes. "Yes, my love. Mine. My own. No one else's." She tugged on the chain, gently, and guided him toward the throne. He followed, smiling, but shaking a little, as the heavy chain drew him toward the enormous chair. The queen of everything sat upon her throne, leaned back with a deep slouch, and slid her butt forward along the leather so her thighs were spread open and available. "Come to me, my love, and kiss me." Grin unending, she set one hand on the chair arm, relaxed, while the other did the same, chain held in her grip. She wasn't looking for a kiss on the lips.

"Can I ask what spurred this on?"

"Why, you did, my little Ventrue. Your questions about my past sent my mind wandering through faded memories, and thoughts of my old endeavors reminded me of times before I came to Dolareido. There are hazy images, dusty and blurred, of my reign, my power, my indulgences. This scene I have created around you is quite similar to one I enjoyed countless times, centuries ago." She tugged on the chain a little harder, and pointed down toward her smooth slit. "But do not ignore my commands, little Ventrue. You are mine, my love, and I would have you pleasure me."

He got down onto his knees, between hers, and leaned in forward to put his hands on the leather around her butt. With her leaning back, slouching like a relaxed queen, hips forward, legs spread, her beautiful sex looked dark against her alabaster skin lit by the blue light; when blue was the only source of light, red and pink became black. He could smell her arousal, her lips already a touch wet. Knowing she'd been masturbating while watching Ashley and Julee set his body on fire. Groaning quietly, he leaned in, and set his lips onto the soft folds of her pussy.

She sighed again, another long sigh of pleasure, as she relaxed into the grand throne.

“I asked your sire, my love, about what sort of tastes you kept secret from me. He insisted that you enjoy macabre delights, when approached with an artful, skilled hand.” She gestured to the room around her. “He also insisted that, while you share an appreciation of the more serious macabre arts with your sire, you secretly enjoy such exaggerated, fantastical, beautiful pieces.”

“I—” The moment he raised his head, her other hand pressed down on it, and guided his lips back to her slit with enough speed to feel some impact, his nose hitting her mons.

“I did not say stop.” Her eyes grabbed a hint of steel, solid, staring down on him and through him. A little of that dragon showing through.

He held onto her ass, hands sliding in closer so he could grip onto her for some balance, while he got comfortable on his knees, and began to suckle on her clitoris. Long, gentle licks, easing up the smooth, wet lips of her, while his lips buried the whole of her pussy.

“I have tried to suppress parts of me, little Ventrue, that enjoying being more ... dominant.” Despite his suckling, licking, bathing her clitoris in love, her voice did not waver. As she talked, she watched him, gaze upon him, his eyes, while he licked her. A regular conversation for her, but he could feel the wetness of her pussy growing against his mouth, and it wasn't just his saliva.

He raised a brow at her words though. More dominant? Uh oh.

“Do not worry, I do not intend to harm you, my love. But, I do intend to enjoy moments such as these, a little more.” She jingled the enormous chain, lightly, teasingly. “I hope you will acquiesce. I would love to let a touch of my ... old self, emerge, with you. Oui?”

Despite being dressed up in armor that belonged on an evil sorceress, and him now on a leash, Antoinette was the vulnerable one in this conversation. She wanted to be a little more dominant with him, expose a little more of someone she used to be, or maybe was with her ghouls before he came along. Whips and chains? No whips yet, but there were chains now, lots and lots and lots of chains. What would she do next. Hang him upside down and give him a blowjob? Tie him down and force him to watch as she masturbated? He was down for all those things. Hell, the idea of those things ... kinda excited him. Giving her permission to get a little crazier with her desire to be dominant? He really was a moth to flame.

He nodded into her body, nose nudging against her soft, delicate mons as his tongue reached lower to prod at her entrance. And with his eyes, he smiled at her.

She relaxed, visibly; the question must have been tense for her. Her free hand found his head, and she stroked his buzzed hair, returning his gaze, his smiles with her own, and caressing his scalp, an ear, behind his head, and along his shoulder, before she started to cum. Without breaking eye contact, she brought her hand up from his head to her breasts, and began to caress the closer nipple where it sat between the black fingers of her corset bust. Swollen, puffy, she teased it, traced it in circles, as tiny spasms fluttered through her limbs, down her thighs into her boots, and up her flat stomach, causing her belly to crunch lightly with her increased breathing.

Definitely, she'd definitely been masturbating while waiting for him to arrive, to cum this quickly. Fresh droplets of her juices met his tongue and lips, and slid down the curves of her ass as he rested his mouth against her. Stimulating the clitoris during orgasm would have been painful, but gently touching it, resting his tongue against it, as she came? He knew she liked that.

As if she hadn't just made a wet spot on the throne, as if it was just another day at the office, Antoinette rose from her seat, and began to walk. He got up and followed after her, eyes locking onto how the corset pinched her waist into a tiny sliver; a human would have trouble breathing. It made her hips and large ass look divine against the S curves of her waist, up to the curves of her back. The leather underneath her boots went past the knee a few inches, and pinched lightly on her curvy thighs, pressing in on them and highlighting how deliciously hourglass her figure was, all while giving her an edge of dangerousness. It was armor after all, black and covered in skulls with fangs and blue eyes, all buried in the ghostly blue light of the chamber.

He'd have to thank Julias later, for pointing her in this direction. Cause, god damn, he was enthralled. Antoinette grinned over her shoulder at him as she stepped over the black hands surrounding the mountain of blankets, and tugged on the chain to pull him toward her. Softness greeted him, the blankets of blue silk magnificent against his bare feet. The Prince tugged on him again, and he came to her side, obedient, little tingles dancing up and down his spine as he imagined where this would go.

She motioned for him to lie down upon the altar. Holding the altar up as if it were a great weight, the skeletons underneath it, with their blue eyes and vampire fangs, greeted him with almost smiling gazes. Did they know what was about to happen to him?

Had they seen it done to others? The altar was only a foot and a half tall, easy to sit on, or on this case, lie upon, while also long enough for the length of his body to sit cozy on the rich, black leather.

She came up to his head, and leaned over him. “To have you with me, dusk and dawn, has been a delight, my love. Do not think I find your unending desire for sex a bother; it is a joy.” She reached down around the altar, and pulled up some more chains from around its base, hidden beneath the silk. Uh oh yet again. She took one of his hands, brought it down beside the altar, and set the shackle around his wrist. With very little slack on the chain, he couldn’t get his hand higher than a few inches from the floor. It was comfortable enough, since the altar wasn’t very wide, only a couple feet, so his arms could dangle gently, and he could rest his palms against the silk. But if he wanted to lift them, he was boned. And from the size of the chains, he could tell he wouldn’t be able to break them with his strength. This wasn’t a ‘pretend to be bound’ roleplaying situation. He was genuinely trapped.

“I’m glad, because ... you’re not dissuading me from being aroused every moment I’m near you.” Cause, despite the growing shivers he felt dancing on his spine, warning him he was in danger, his cock only grew harder. Understandable at this point. His dick had the survival instincts of a dodo bird.

“Ah, little Ventrue, that is a comfort to hear. And, see.” Walking past his waist, she let one of her arms hang, and ran her finger along his chest, down his abs, and against his shaft where it stood, pointing up at forty-five degrees towards him. She continued down to his legs, and pulled out more hidden chains, these longer, able to pull over onto the altar, and bind his ankles. “It would take a Kindred of great strength to break these chains, my love. A Daeva or Nosferatu of at least twenty years of age, would be needed. But one such as you, is helpless.”

He squirmed a little, tested her theory, and managed a nervous smile up at her. His cock was already hard enough to hurt, and for some reason, being her captive was only making him harder. Any more and his dick was going to pop like some sort of blood balloon.

But then she walked over to his side, raised one of her long legs, and slipped it over the altar while reaching down to take his cock in her free hand; the other still held his leash, chain wrapping her hand and wrist. She tugged on the leash, pulling his head up a few inches, pointing his gaze to her, to her sex, as she eased her hips down, and devoured his cock inside her smooth, hot, soaked slit. He almost lowered his head as he groaned in bliss, but she tugged the leash again, forcing him to keep his head raised, and watch as her lips spread around his shaft.

Once her lips were pressing to his pelvis, himself balls deep inside her squeezing depths, she let her weight sink her body onto him until her butt molded to his thighs, her metal boots on the blankets around them. Grinning like the devil, she leaned over him, free hand pressing to the altar around Jack's head, while the other tugged on the leash yet again, up toward her and her breasts.

“I would have another orgasm, my love, my Ventrue. But do not move your hips, or I will punish you. No, you are infatuated with my breasts, and I would have you pleasure me with them.” And, with her hand still against the altar beside his temple, she leaned down further, and pressed one of her enormous breasts to his lips.

The eight, black metal skeleton fingers holding her breasts in were large, but her breasts were more than large enough to justify the size of the strange corset garment. Plenty of her skin was still exposed, the entirety of her nipples and areola as well, so he had no trouble pulling one of the engorged, swollen mounds into his mouth, as Antoinette pressed her breast into his face. With her pushing down on him, he could let his head fall to the leather of the altar, and gaze up at her from underneath her, her tit burying most of his face.

Normally, her breasts were so large and heavy, they squashed onto him like giant teardrops, but her unique clothes kept them upright, firm, tight against her chest. When she leaned down more, instead of her breast gently covering and nudging onto his face, it pressed down on him, pinning his head to the altar. He couldn't lift his head. She didn't want him to.

She held perfectly still, and captured his gaze from where it poked out from around the huge curve of where her breast covered his mouth, chin, and nose. As he suckled on her, he saw her eyes waver slightly, half closing, her sighs of bliss coming through as she started to shiver, as her insides began to squeeze. The other hand still holding the chain pressed to her free breast, and he groaned into her skin as she began to caress her other swollen nipple. No movement, only the suckling and kissing of her nipples, and her insides responded with clenches, squeezes, trickling juices, and little spasms.

He lifted his hips. Shit.

She lifted her breasts, and tugged on his chain until his head was jammed up between her tits, eyes blinking up at her. "Do that again and I will make you wait hours before I satisfy you, if at all. Understood?" Despite the smile on her lips, she had a touch of danger to her eyes. Dragon was becoming a better descriptor every night he was with her.

"Yes ma'am."

Chuckling down at him. She leaned back onto him, pinned his head to the altar, and buried his face with her breasts once again, the other one this time.

“And call me Prince, when you are bound, my little Ventrue. I am your master, your lover, and your Prince.” She didn’t give him the opportunity to confirm, keeping her breast squashed to his face instead. And, while he wasn’t allowed to move his hips, she was, and she started to ease them back and forth, grinding her hips down toward him in a gentle flow, while he suckled on her.

He could tell, she didn’t want to cum from the penetration, she wanted to cum from his lips on her nipples. God, the thought of that, of how her breasts had become so sensitive, she could cum from them, from having his lips on them, suckling, tongue licking and caressing, was enough to have drops of his precum leak into her. Fighting the urge to drive his hips up into her boiling insides was almost impossible.

She started to cum again. Like before, she didn’t let it stop her, didn’t let it force her eyes closed or her actions to stop. Instead, she kept up her slow grind on his cock, and raised her breast out of his mouth, while she grinned at him. Her insides squeezed, trembling, spasms of random muscle clenches joined by her juices coating him, until he could feel them slide down his testicles. Each rippling wave of clenching bliss sent pleasure down through his sensitive, swollen glans, edging him closer and closer to orgasm, but not into it, not yet. The throbbing was starting to grow painful, and each pulse of need earned another drop of his precum.

“I have been waiting to speak with you,” she said, sitting up straight once more. “Natasha has suggested to me that, it may be foolish to try and separate our romantic life from our Kindred lives.”

“You want to talk about work? Er, I mean, Jessy says I really shouldn’t think about work and Kindred life as separate. I have to agree with her, now that I think about it.”

“Then it is as I feared, and I am doing our relationship a disservice.” Antoinette lifted a leg up and over the altar to join the other, and sat sideways. Still on his cock, still with him inside her, so every movement was a vise on his aching girth. She set both feet on the floor, on the silk blankets, and then folded one leg over the other, the closer leg, like she was about to enjoy tea on the balcony. He could feel it, feel how the position tightened her insides on him, feel her juices leak down his length.

“Y-You are?” Christ, she looked so fucking amazing, sitting there like she was sitting in her office chair. He was that office chair. Why was that so strangely appealing? Probably because she treated her office chair good, as she looked at him over her shoulder, and traced her free hand up and down his chest.

“Oui. I have been treating you as my boy toy, when I should understand that you are an adult, as I am. We should both speak of real things, and share our experiences with each other, support each other.” Still sitting there, on his cock, legs off the side with one folded the other, she began to admire her fingernails, and took a moment to rub them on the chain in the other hand, as if filing them. “You may thrust now.”

Thrust, with her sitting on him, all her weight on him, and his arms and legs bound. Before, she had a lot of her weight on her feet, but now, almost all her weight was pressing down on his pelvis through her ass. She weighed a fair amount, considering how tall she was, with a touch of muscle to her curvy frame, but he was a vampire, and could handle a little weight. And, god, he really wanted to cum.

He put his palms to the blankets underneath him, put some weight onto his shoulder blades against the altar, some onto his heels as well, and started to thrust upward.

Antoinette chuckled, deep, husky, and again began to trace the muscles of his chest, as she bounced on his cock. She didn't help, didn't grind, didn't move, simply sat there, the leash in her further hand, her closer hand caressing his chest, his abs, his chin, everything. Her breasts fought to escape the skeleton hands clutching them, but their grip was secure, and the softness of their squished shapes stayed put, mostly. And, looking at her from the side like this, he groaned openly at how amazing she looked, how terrifying and beautiful the black fantasy armor looked on her. God damn, she was too good to him.

“I ... really don't mind, being your boy toy.”

She slid her free hand down his abs to her closer butt cheek, and pulled up on it beneath the thigh, helping to expose some of where his cock was spreading her open. Soaking wet. “Yes, but, I also want something more. Do you not?”

Didn't even have to think about that. “Y-Yes, very.” So close, it was making talking difficult. Every thrust was causing waves of pleasure to surge through his cock, until the tingling waves were coursing up and down its length.

“We have love, and intimacy, and sexuality, but we lack the back and forth of shared support. I—oh my.” She smiled at him, that devilish smile, as he started to cum inside her.

Finally, release. He shivered and trembled, and his thrusts slowed, as he felt the glans of his cock grow hyper sensitive, so each tiny movement sent powerful pulses of bliss through him. A quick first orgasm, but damn it, the whole situation was filling him with thrills, tingling up and down his spine. He was tied to what might as well have been a sacrificial altar! And the queen necromancer was sitting on his cock, like he was a piece of furniture ... that she really liked, and let fuck her while she sat on it. No idea, no idea at all why that was such a turn on, but it was, and he shivered as he felt the heat of his cum drip out of her lips and onto his pelvis and testicles.

“Quick today, non?” Laughing, she stayed as she was, and again lifted up on her butt cheek and thigh of the closer leg to examine where his cum was leaking out of her.

“Sorry ... just...”

“Oh, silly boy.” She tugged on the leash, causing his head to rise, so her other hand could caress his chin and nose. “Again.” God yes. He started thrusting up into her, forcing her to bounce, until she laughed, closer to a giggle, and tapped his nose. “Slower this time, mon petit.”

Sighing, but understanding, he pushed his hips up into her slower, no longer making her bounce, but the motion causing gentle, shifting friction of her tightened insides nonetheless. Milking the aftershocks of his orgasm with her tight, dripping insides, was divine.

“As I was saying, before I was interrupted,” she said, and tapped on her chin with the leash-wielding hand. “I hope to ... explore, perhaps, a more adult relationship with you. If you do not mind, I would speak to you of things I normally avoid speaking of, things about the city, about my own strifes. And I hope you will do so for me as well.”

This whole scenario was proving to be an interesting dichotomy. He was bound and helpless, but it was her asking him the vulnerable questions.

“I’d love to.” He knew she loved to protect him from that sort of shit, but, this was better. He wanted what she was offering. Maybe, someday, he could tell her about the weird shit going through his head, since escaping Angela. Maybe.

Her smile grew, dark in the blue light, and she unfolded her legs, only to refold them, other leg this time. And with him inside her to feel every shift and clench of her muscles, he groaned. She set her hands onto her higher knee, both of them, legs still off to the side with one foot to the blankets. A comfortable pose, one someone might use when chatting with friends while sitting around in the living room. And, he couldn't help but thrust a little harder up into her when she got settled; she didn't even blink, despite how her insides clenched on him.

She lightly bounced her one leg where it was draped over the knee of the other. "Faster." Groaning again, he started pushing up into her harder, so her bouncing leg bounced higher, and her delightfully large butt jiggled with the impact. "Your meeting with Avery. Please, tell me more, whatever the Invictus do not deem secret, whatever you felt you needed to trim down for the Primogen meeting."

"I uh, she seems sincere about ... trying to right some wrongs from before," he said. God damn it, she was bouncing on him, soaking him in her juices, but her voice didn't waver, no stutters or pitch changes or gasps or moans. She watched him, gaze steady, almost as if she was uninterested in what he was doing to her. But her hot, drenched insides didn't lie, each thrust forcing the squeezing flesh to massage his swollen girth.

"That ... is good to hear. I worry about the Uratha and their violent tendencies."

"She also told ... t-told me, and showed me ... some spirits."

"Did she now? I am most definitely intrigued," she said, raising a brow as she looked at him. "I ... oh." A long, warm, glowing sigh finally escaped her, and she set her free hand onto his chest, as she started to cum. Her insides, quivering, unleashed a host of spasms, tiny random convulsions of heavenly tightness around his girth. She squeezed tight, very tight, wrenching his cock and almost crushing it with the power of her depths, until he was wincing, and her juices were leaking out of her, dripping down and mixing with his cum. "Please, continue." Back to normal, back to status quo, despite the continued trembling in her pussy. God damn, how did she do that?

“She ... she brought me to a sex hole, in one of the brothels in Devil’s Corner.” He started thrusting again, trying to keep himself from going too fast. The quick orgasm from earlier kept the next one a decent ways away, for now. “People there were being ... possessed, I guess. Avery told the spirits to expose themselves, and they came out, and they were these ... sex spirits. Pink, very sexual.”

“I knew wonders and terrors were hiding in my city, but I did not realize an aspect of it had manifested in such an interesting way.” She folded her arms under her bust, with her chain-wielding arm bending at the elbow to bring the hand to her chin, and tap on it a few more times thoughtfully. “Normally, such mysteries remain hidden to all, but these Uratha can bring secrets to the foreground.”

“It was pretty ... interesting.” More groans sneaked into his voice, and he forced himself to slow down. And he could use a break, some fake sweat starting to bead on his body from the blush of life. “One of them ... called me sexual.” No need to bring up that Clara was there to see that.

The Prince laughed, loudly too, and with a long, slow, drawn out motion, slid her leg off its sister, and brought it around, up, and over to the other side of the altar, so she was facing him again. Legs spread, he shivered at the sight of her smooth slit spread open around his cock, and her alabaster skin, now ghostly blue in the lighting. She leaned forward again, set both her hands down onto the altar around his head, and buried his face between her bound breasts.

“You are a sexual creature, little Ventrue, more than most. And, so am I.” She kissed his forehead, and pressed down on him with her breasts, hiding his mouth and nose between them while pinning his head to the altar. “Now, make love to your Prince, Jack. Hard.”

He moaned into the softness of her bosom, and started pounding his hips upward, hard enough to have her whole body bouncing. At last, he managed to earn a proper moan out of her as he drove his hips upward, slamming them up into her, and causing her breasts and chests to shift back and forth along his face and chest, all while she smiled down at him. Much as he was able to pull some moans out of her, her expression remained unfazed, and she cooed down at him with her seductive, inviting huskiness. The bouncing caused some of her long, flowing waves of white hair to fall over her shoulders and around his face, painting the beautiful woman in pale blue, like a majestic painting, as she started to cum again.

He stopped thrusting as fast, slowing down the pace but keeping the strength of each impact, so she continued to bounce on him, and let out tiny moans through her shivering body, as she clamped down. More of her juices soaked him, leaking down his testicles, wetting his thighs, his pelvis, all while she clenched and squeezed on his cock, until it was ready to burst.

But he stopped before he came. Took everything he had to stop, but he did, and forced down the rising pleasure underneath his testicles. So close, one more thrust and he'd pop, but he wanted this to last.

“Oh, my love, resisting me, are you?” She sat up straight, and then stood up, his cock slipping out of her drenched folds, before it stood upright and pointed slightly toward him. It was hard enough the veins on it were bulging. And with her standing over him, armored boots to the blankets around the alter, a couple drops his cum, and several more of her juices, fell from her folds onto his abs.

“Trying...”

“If I had known being bound and helpless like this, truly and terribly helpless, was so arousing for you, I would have done this sooner.” She knew the other times he was bound, it was games, roleplaying, nothing he couldn't break out of. This time it was different.

She reached up, brushed back her waves of hair with both hands, adjusted her skull crown, and stepped over the altar to stand beside it. And, with another playful, long sigh, she got down onto her knees beside the altar, leaned over it, took his cock into her hand, and guided it up to her breasts. Soaked in juices and cum as it was, she didn't bother with lubricant, and instead, pressed the swollen glans of his cock into the crevice of her breasts near her corset. Easing herself down, Jack groaned openly at the sensation of her breasts, so very, very tight around his girth, from how the metal skeleton fingers kept her tits compressed against each other.

He lifted his head, and stared down his body at the sight of her two breasts completely burying every inch of his cock inside her cleavage. Not a single inch of his tingling girth managed to poke out of the bed of tight, silky pressure of her bosom. And, looking at her, at the corset and its skeleton hands holding her tits, at the wrist guards and bicep guards, at the beautiful black skull crown on her head, he moaned. It only took a few gentle, loving sways of her chest back and forth, side to side along his pelvis, to cause the bubbling sparks of bliss beneath his legs to send his cum gushing up his length and into her cleavage.

He held still and let the love of his life milk him of his cum. She didn't use her hands, she didn't need to, not with the beautiful corset keeping her breasts tight together. Tender sways of her chest back and forth was more than enough for her milky, soft skin to caress his glans to almost painful bliss, and cause spurt after spurt of his white cum to spill into, onto, and between her breasts, until it was overflowing and dripping down onto him.

“Again,” she said.

“I, I uh—”

She yanked on the leash, and offered him a steel gaze, a hard gaze, a ‘do as I tell you’ gaze. “Again. Thrust.”

He gulped, and started pushing his hips up, fucking her breasts under his own power, while she kept her weight down and forward, corset pressing into his side, the black metal fingers of the bust pressing against his pelvis and thighs. His cock was still hard, belly full of blood spurring him on, and with his own cum coating his cock twice over, in the tight softness of her breasts, the pleasure was immediate. He couldn't thrust too hard, not with Antoinette leaning over him like that, knelt beside him, but he could keep a decent, consistent, gentle hip thrust going, and he shivered as each inch he managed to slide his cock up and down between her tits filled him with growing heat again.

Her hand with the leash found his chest, and teased circles around his nipples, along his chest, down his abs and serratus muscles, and down to her own breasts. She dipped her finger between them, caressing the hidden head of his cock, its ripe, swollen body sparking with bliss. Now coated with cum, she pulled the finger out of her cleavage, and traced the white along his body, drawing the lines of his muscles with his seed.

Five minutes and he was cumming again. He collapsed his head back, only for Antoinette to yank on the leash again, and force him to watch, as his cum poured into her breasts. Cumming so quickly a third time was a pretty big flag over his head, saying 'you've found my kink' in big bright letters, almost as bright as the white of his cum pouring out over her cleavage, catching the eerie light and becoming a pale, glowing, ghostly blue. He stared on, hips managing small, trembling thrusts into her tits, until a few spurts of his cum managed to squirt an inch into the air up her sternum, hitting her neck corset, before splashing down onto her breasts, and leaking between the black metal fingers.

Finally, she let the leash slack, and his head fell back to the altar, body panting and shivering. Panting was unnecessary, he didn't need air, but the old reflex was hard to break, and he could feel it come to him naturally, along with a couple of tiny moans and a few shivers to go with them. When he raised his head enough to look down his body, he caught Antoinette's eyes, and melted into her gaze, how her eyes were looking his body up and down, and drinking in the sight of him in orgasmic bliss, in the same way he did her earlier. He tried to pin her expression; happy wasn't the right word, overjoyed was too much, and content didn't do it justice. She looked ... peaceful.

She stood up. He looked up at her, head still resting on the soft leather, and he stared on at how the blue light highlighted his white cum against the black of the corset. His cum was trickling down her breasts, down her body, down the corset, and some of it dripped off of the underside of her breasts from the black metal fingers, and onto the blankets beneath them.

"Now," she said, grin returning as she sat down on the altar's edge beside his waist, "we may continue. How was your day, dear?"

"Um ... uh ... it was good. Met a sex spirit thing. Tried to make friends with a werewolf. Apparently going to be giving two of her pack some suites in Carlava Villa."

"Is that so?" She laughed. Retreading the notes of the Primogen meeting, in the new context of lovers talking about their day, was fun, and novel. "That may very well prove fruitful, if they have not tasted the joys of decadence and wealth before."

He smirked at her, and looked left and right, indicating he was trying to see his down and bound hands. Apparently, she didn't get the hint. He knew she did of course, but conveniently decided to ignore him, and leave him bound. Crap.

"You think?"

"Mmhmm."

“I get the impression Carter is set in his ways. I think he’s the oldest person in the pack. Clara might enjoy it though.”

“Oh, Clara ... I feel juvenile, letting that woman’s flirtations bother me so.” She tugged on the leash again, pulling his head up toward her, and she grinned down at him with a touch of a fang exposed. “It is foolish of me, non?”

“Terribly foolish.”

“Indeed.” She let the leash go, letting his head bounce on the leather. He chuckled. “Perhaps I should find her another man to direct her attentions toward.”

“Heh, is Daniel single?”

“ ... he is.” She tapped her chin again, folding her legs again too, and lightly bouncing the one foot while she pondered. A nice, casual conversation, in a necromancer’s throne room. “And dreadfully alone. His loneliness wraps him like a cold blanket, one he is too familiar with to cut from his body.”

Wow. He hadn’t expected her to indulge the topic of Daniel, or to speak about him, about personal things about him. Adult conversation about real things indeed.

“I don’t know Clara well enough to suggest she’d be a good match, but you never know, right?”

She nodded. “People may surprise even me, with time.” With a long sigh, she leaned back a bit, hand reaching behind her and across his legs to the other side of the altar to catch her weight. It caused her torso to lean back over his legs, and arch her back so the ridiculous curves of her massive breasts, highlighted by the suicidal corset, struck him dumb. Where did her organs go!?

“Makes me wonder if we should find Avery someone,” he said. “If we want her to help us deal with the hunters, I wonder...”

“Perhaps.” She picked up the leash again, and tugged on it, idly, like she enjoyed the feel of the metal in her hands. Probably did, especially with his neck thoroughly bound to the other end. “I—oh, I should let you up, should I not?”

He offered a slow nod, eyes scanning her for deception. There had to be deception, no way she was going to let him go that easily. A few moments later she started to chuckle, especially as his eyes squinted at her in their search for lies.

She reached down, undid the binds of his hands, and then again, for the binds of his legs. Oh thank god he could move again. It wasn't exactly uncomfortable, but being bound and unable to move more than two inches for too long was hitting him with a hint of claustrophobia. He'd get used to it, if this was going to become a regular thing, he was sure. Still, he sighed relief as he sat up, and put his palms to the altar's seat.

Only for her to gently push him back down onto his back. Still holding the leash, she slipped onto his waist, legs around him, metal boots to the silk blankets beneath them, and her hands down on his chest. She pulled on the leash, pulling him up to her, and putting his head to her breasts. His cum had faded away by now, so only the softness of her beautiful bo—ow, metal fingers, face, ow. He winced and looked up through the weird contraption up at her, and smirked as she smirked.

“I really do like the armor, by the way. On anyone else it'd be a bit ridiculous, but you pull it off, with the decor and the sex slaves and everything.” He nodded past her toward the two girls, sleeping by the throne. Ashley was drooling.

“Armor is a strong word for the ensemble. It is a dress I commissioned many years ago from a fashion designer, with Temperman's work as their foundation. It is meant only to be used in sexual games. Had I known this drôle sense of fashion and art appealed to you, as it does to me, I would have invited you to share in this wonderful game with me sooner."

"Heh, when I was younger, I used to draw things like ... well, like that." He gestured to the Grim Reaper statue behind them, and the glowing blue light escaping its ribcage.

"And why would a young boy have an interest in such dark art?"

"I never found it dark, really. Just, interesting. A representation of death, this larger than life concept, personified. And, the human skull is ... surprisingly beautiful." He leaned back onto his hands as she let up on the leash a little, before reaching out with a palm to caress the corset underneath her breasts, then the bicep guards and the black metal faces they sported. His fingers drifted down her skin to her wrists, so his fingers could caress the blue eyes on those skull faces as well, before back to the corset where two metal skeleton hands wrapped the black leather.

She really did look like some sort of evil sorceress necromancer. God fucking damn, it was amazing. The fuck did he do to deserve such a woman in his life? His second life, anyway.

"It is beautiful, I agree." Still holding the leash, her other hand caressed the back of his head. His skull was on display all the time, considering his hair was now eternally buzzed very short. "It is an old idea, but reborn in interesting ways."

"What idea?"

"The woman, beautiful, mature, deadly and powerful, dressed in clothes such as these. There was a lengthy period in history I had to deal with, my love, where such imagery was considered offensive. And then the 60s happened. Suddenly, people were encouraging each other to test their limits, to break free of stereotypes, to embrace sexuality ... and drug abuse, but let us focus on the former. Suddenly, women in bikinis riding white tigers were on the sides of vans on my city streets. But, more to my liking, were the images of women delighting in darker imagery, with tattoos of skulls upon their backs, and of snakes upon their breasts.”

“Then you’d love Beatrice’s tats.”

“Oh, you have seen Julias’s lover’s breasts?”

Shit.

“Yeah? Kinda just happens randomly sometimes, cause she’s around him all the time, and she couldn’t care less if I see her topless.” He winced as he said it, blatantly, hopefully putting a drop of humor on his response. Antoinette laughed. Mission successful.

“When such women also wore dark, long, black dresses, often with plunging cleavage, I delighted in its fashion. Visual artists naturally took such fashion to extremes with their brushes, and created imagery of women with their skulls exposed upon beautiful bodies, or with black wings, or wearing clothes ... such as these.” She leaned back, and gestured to herself, her enormous breasts being crushed in the black grip, her neck corset and the small skull on it, and everything else. Jaw-dropping beautiful. “And when you are as old and rich as I, you feel entitled to indulge in the whimsy of fashion movements, even that meant only for paintings.”

“By all means, please, continue to indulge. And if there’s any other fantasies you want to try out, hit me, you know? Doesn’t need to be aesthetics I like. Could be anything.”

“I will hold you to that, my love.” She tugged on the leash again, pulling him closer to her so he was leaning forward into her awaiting body. “I am half a millennium old, and I have, my entire life, admired and sought to explore sensuality in all its glory. I have a refined and developed palette, my little Ventrue, and I will drown you in my imagination.”

That sounded both very sexy, and very sinister. He kind of liked it either way, but still, shivers.

Chapter 59

~~Jack~~

“Name them yet?”

“No. Really torn on it too.” Jack leaned down, held out his hand, and smiled as the two crows each took some oats from his palm. “It’s gotta be something meaningful.”

“Bonnie and Clyde?” His sire laughed at his own joke. Tacky, but the mafia boss man made it work.

“I’m thinking something a bit less depressing. Just ... nothing coming to me.”

“I wouldn’t get too caught up on making the names special or meaningful. A name’s something that should resonate with the person giving it, not carry connotations or expectations on the person receiving it.” Julias leaned back against wall of his mansion. The two of them were outside, around back where there was a garden and some pretentious statues. Beyond the backyard, was the outside of the city, rocks and bits of trees and dirt and road. The mansion was surprisingly defensible, because no one could approach it without being seen. It was something Jack knew Julias would take advantage of. Man probably had snipers in lookout posts nearby, or maybe on top of the mansion.

“ ... Mulder and Scully.”

“You can’t be serious.” His sire facepalmed, loud enough for Jack to hear his soul breaking. “The great Jack Terry, rising star of the Invictus, watches too much TV.”

“Hey! ... does anyone call me that? Seriously?”

“That’s how I sold your promotion to Maria and Michael.”

“ ... you fucking liar.” He smirked at his sire, laughed a few more times, and lifted his hand. He wore a bird handling glove, a black one that matched his suit nicely, long enough to cover some of his forearm, but thin enough to be discreet. Crows weren’t eagles or owls, he didn’t need anything major, and the two crows perched on the glove beside each other without issue. “I was thinking G’Kar and Londo, if they were both males, but this one here is female. So, I’m thinking Mulder and Scully.”

“I hope you don’t tell anyone.”

“I’ll definitely tell everyone.”

“You’re not nearly social enough to use ‘everyone’ in a sentence.”

“True. But Damien and Jessy will know, at least.”

“How are things with the right hands, anyway?” Julias motioned forward, and the two of them started to walk the garden, and then further out, past the gate, and out into the endless grass, dirt, and rocks that surrounded the city. A casual stroll where the sun would be inescapable, if it decided to throw a temper tantrum and rise before it was supposed to.

“Good, actually. Jessy’s teaching Damien and I about the people we bully around to keep the city running smooth. I only just learned about this Terra Den company and the nasty shit their CEO Jeremy Long has been up to.” Cyberpunk mob bosses were a thing, he’d only learned in the past couple weeks. Using fancy tech to run his criminal organization.

“Yeah, he’s a tough one to keep under our thumb, but he provides a lot of benefits.”

Jack wasn't convinced. He frowned over his shoulder, and kicked at a couple of rocks, motion subtle enough to not disturb the two birds still on his arm.

"He traffics some pretty nasty drugs, Julias."

"He does indeed. Heroin, cocaine, barbiturates, others."

"Then why aren't we putting him in the ground?"

"Because he doesn't sell to kids, and he doesn't force his product on anyone. The only people getting addicted and involved in his business are people willing to ruin their lives, old enough and informed enough to make that choice."

"Just because someone's eighteen, and they've read the back of a get-help pamphlet, doesn't mean they're old enough or smart enough to make decisions for themselves." Jack groaned, picked up a rock, and threw it. Still the crows did not move, comfortable on his arm. It made him smile.

"There has to be a cut off point somewhere, Jack. Eighteen-year-olds are fucking idiots, but so are twenty-five-year-olds, and thirty-year-olds, and so on. They're all idiots, just slightly less idiotic than their younger selves. We draw the line somewhere, because the line has to exist somewhere." His sire walked beside him, hands in his pockets, eyes looking up at the night sky. Out here, the darkness was real, and the stars and moon had a chance to shine through. "Half the human adults on this planet aren't smart enough to think more than five minutes into the future, Jack. Don't feel bad because someone gave them some rope and they decided to hang themselves with it."

"Harsh ... but, yeah, I get you. You have to call them adults at some point, and let them do their own thing." They'd had similar conversations, before Jack was sired, when Julias took an interest in him and started asking him questions about things. He asked questions, and Jack loved to think about shit, think out loud about shit too; answering them came naturally. Lots of conversations about the nature of people, that Jack had no idea Julias was slipping predator/prey bias into. Kine were prey. Kindred were predators.

The man had been training Jack on how to be a vampire for years before he ever became one. Damn, Kindred liked to think in the long term.

“So anyway,” Jack said, continuing, “yeah Jessy and Damien and I are getting along. Jessy’s easy, and she surprises me sometimes.”

“Smarter than she seems, isn’t she?”

“Yeah. Most of the time, she’s a crass, rude, sex-obsessed frat boy ... girl. Sometimes though, you can tell she’s got this Kindred thing figured out, more than most.”

“She’s Michael’s right hand for a reason.”

“And Damien is ... well, he’s Damien. I’ve caught him smiling on a couple occasions though, so I think that’s going well.” Getting through to that man was difficult. Half a century of self-induced brainwashing for a psychotic father figure wasn’t going to disappear overnight, or even over months. “Jessy’s got it in her head to get him laid. And I kind of agree with her, it’d do the man some good.”

“You know he’s a member of the Lancea et Sanctum, right?”

Jack shook his head. “He is, but their tenets are about the humans, not themselves.”

“Been researching the Second Estate?”

“A bit, yeah.” Knowledge, it was always about knowledge. If he knew things, he could make decisions predicting more steps ahead, manipulate outcomes, steer circumstances and events. He wasn’t half as good at it as Julias, but fuck him if he wasn't going to do his hardest to get that good. "That reminds me. I wanted to ask Damien about history records. Did any survive?"

"Good question. The purge was a violent affair, but as far as I know, Lucas's records were not completely lost. Bu—" He blinked, and looked down as he folded his arms across his chest. "Garry destroyed a lot Lucas's stuff, during the purge, and then again after you killed him. He went to Tony's lair that Lucas was using, and let out a little of his rage, I guess, before the tunnels were collapsed."

After he killed Lucas. That was still a lot to wrap his mind around, killing such an older vampire, in such a powerful way. Dominating a vampire, even a broken one like Damien at the time, was not something Kindred his age were supposed to be able to do. At the time, both he and Julias assumed it must have been a fluke of circumstance, but after the incident with Angela, he knew it wasn't. He'd be able to do it again, hopefully, if someone put his back to the wall.

He stroked the back of the head of the closer crow, Mulder, and smiled as the bird leaned into the touch. "I knew about what Garry did, but Damien might still have some stuff. And now that he's working for Maria, I bet she's got him digitizing some stuff. Or at least has a thrall helping him out."

"Maybe. Were you looking to check into something?"

"Yeah ... you might actually be able to provide some insight." He leaned in toward the crow, and the crowd leaned in toward him. Nose bump. Scully grew envious quickly, pecking his glove, and he laughed as he started to stroke her breast feathers instead. "I wanted to ask about ... Viktor."

"Yeah? What about?" Julias tried to match his gaze, but he didn't hold it, looking away to the dark horizon instead. His sire didn't want to talk about his own sire, Jack's grand sire, anymore than Jack did, really. But, again, knowledge was everything.

"I keep hearing that he was a very powerful Kindred. But, do we have any history on him?"

"No. Unfortunately, only the Lancea et Sanctum keep records about Kindred, but only those worthy of note, and only the most key points in Kindred history." Their walking took them around in the empty land, but they didn't go far, and soon they drifted back toward the garden behind the mansion. "Everyone keeps tabs on things now though, with the dawn of the digital age. At least, to a point. Detailed records about our illegal activities wouldn't be smart, and any records outright calling out Kindred for being Kindred, less smart. Only the Second Estate would do that, because they dedicate so much of their existence to protecting those records."

"... because vampire memories fade."

"More than fade. You've seen first hand what happens when an elder Kindred needs to take a long sleep, a long torpor, to let the blood lust return to normal levels. Those years of dreaming wreck the mind, turn memories into their playground. Lucas was far more stable before the purge. And Viktor was far more stable when he sired me, far more." Julius opened the back gate, and sighed as it let out a classic metal squeak. "Though, even then, he apparently had secrets from before that I was unaware of."

"Such as?"

"Just ... he was more of a monster than I realized." Back in the garden, they walked beside the statues, the fountains, and Julius gestured to the statue that looked like Viktor. "He had a taste for torture. His torpor twisted him into a paranoid psychopath, but even before then, he'd grown a taste for inflicting agony I was unaware of."

Ouch, so much ouch. Jack could see the pain dripping off his sire's body, like blood into the dirt.

"You're a century embraced and you're probably the nicest Kindred in the city, Julias," he said. "If you're worried about Viktor's past becoming your past, I—"

"I thought you were the one worrying about him?"

"I ... I am. I shouldn't, I know, but I am. Because..." He sighed, the exact same sigh Julias had made moments before. Lot of sighing going on, whenever the topic went in this direction. "Just worried Viktor's bloodline might rub off on me, us, and sneak into our lives in ways we might not expect."

The memory hit him with all the grace of a car crash. How dare they. That's how his mind had put the whole scenario, that's how his anger, his disgust, his hate, had framed the whole circumstance of his capture and his escape. How dare they. Something Viktor would say, to the point Jack could hear the sound of the man's voice ringing in his head.

The last words Viktor had said to him were: learn your place, and die. Christ, he'd wanted to say those same fuckings words during the whole ordeal.

No wonder so many Kindred were stereotypical, brooding, dark and dangerous types. Even knowing about it, even being aware of how ridiculous and silly it was to worry about this, he did, and he felt like hanging out in a dark corner to brood about it. Brood menacingly at that. Maybe it was just something Kindred did when they were upset, brood in corners, maybe with some kine around to provide a meal if they were drawn in.

"I worry about that too, but there's nothing to show that his ghost will haunt us. That's not how siring works."

Nothing to show, right. Nothing at all. Nothing, nothing at all.

“M-Mire?”

Both men stood up straight, backs to the Viktor statue, as they looked out over the bushes and garden railings to the familiar voice.

“Back here, Tash.”

Heh, Tash. Sometimes it was easy to forget Julias had worked with Natasha, for a very long time at that. Julias never hung out with the group of them, him and Tash, Jessy and Fiona, Damien too. The boss hanging out with the employees or their friends was always a weird dynamic. Dumb reason. Jack should ask him at some point.

Natasha poked out from behind the wall of the mansion, and offered a tiny wave as she walked up to them. “Hey g-guys.”

“You alone?” Julias said. “You—”

She put up her hands a little. “Art and M-Matt escorted me. And, um, I c-can call them again, to come by and escort me out. B-But, I was hoping to leave with Jack.”

She was? Strange, he had no meetings planned with her, and from the look on her face, it seemed like she wanted to talk serious talk.

“Um, sure,” he said. “Right now?”

“No, I wanted to visit t-t-too. I don’t see Julias much ... these days.” She came up to them, and smiled a little brighter, especially as her eyes found Mulder and Scully. “Animalism?”

“A bit, yeah.” Jack resumed stroking the heads of the two crows, smiling with the pleasurable texture of soft feathers. “But not as much as you might think. Crows are surprisingly social if you give them a chance.”

She nodded as she came in closer, and Jack lowered his arm to hold out the two birds to the tiny woman. Copying him, she stroked behind their heads a few times each, earning some quiet caws. Not the delightful, pleasant whistling the typical pet bird made, but then, Jack always hated those birds. He'd worked in a pet store for a little while when he was younger, and he knew first hand that parrots of all shapes and sizes could be juvenile assholes. Corvids, on the other hand, or at least crows, seemed to have something else going for them. Like comparing dogs to wolves.

“I do plan on keeping them as pets,” he said. “Haven't fed them any vitae yet either, trying a more passive approach.”

“D-Did you name them?”

His sire shook his head. “No, he didn't.”

Laughing, Jack brought them in closer, and again nudged his nose against their beaks. “I'm thinking Mulder and Scully, but Julias thinks it's dumb.”

“It is dumb. You're a Kindred, a right hand of the Invictus, act like one.” Much as the words sounded like they should have had some bite, Julias was smiling as he said them. He was trying to say the things he knew he should say, Jack could see, but he didn't really believe them himself. Which earned some giggles from Tash.

“How ... about Huginn and Muninn?” Tash said, fingers rising to offer more head scratches for the two crows.

“Who're they?”

She nodded, smiling as Scully pushed her head into her finger. “Odin's t-two ravens, from Norse mythology. They flew around ...

M-Midgard, and kept Odin informed about what happened within.”

Well, damn, that was a pretty good comparison for what he was up to.

“Almost perfect, but they were ravens, right? And I’d like something a little more modern.” He shrugged a little, and adjusted his tie a bit, drawing attention to the suit to pair with his point. “Ugh, picking names for things is tough.”

“It is. B-But I think Mulder and Scully is fine.” Tash walked up to Julias, and offered her old partner a small nod, halfway to a bow. “Any sightings of the hunters y-yet?”

“No.” The older Ventrue found them a bench, and gestured for them to sit with him as he sat on the end of it. Tash sat center, and Jack took the other end so the crows had some room, his gloved hand further out. “It’s like they disappeared. No sightings of those four we’d seen before, and no sightings of Jeremiah or Angela.”

“And Fiona?” she said.

Jack’s turn to shake his head. “Haven’t seen her either. Jessy says she likes that Eric fellow at the club, so maybe he’ll know?”

The little Mekhet sighed, but nodded. “Y-Yeah, the Begotten are hiding more now. I ... I hope F-Fiona is ok.”

Jack hoped Antoinette didn’t get her killed if she did eventually decide to enact a purge. The possibility was there, despite his love’s attempts to settle his worries. No wonder the monsters were hiding, with hunters on one side, and an angry Prince on the other.

“ ... then pay her a visit,” Julias said. Both the tiny vampires raised a brow at him, and he laughed, offering a dismissing finger wave. “You know where Azamel hangs out, and you know she’s probably hiding out there. If she’s in her nightmare world, you know she’s still got feelers on that hole in the ground she loves so much. She'll know where Fiona's been."

Jack shivered. Azamel was forever a giant, twisted, corrupted elephant god, in his mind, no longer the old woman in the rocking chair."You want me to pay Azamel a visit?"

"You visited her last time, without my permission."

Not this again.

"Azamel and Athalia didn't want my visit to be official business. They wanted something more organic, and I can't really blame them for that. We covered their tunnels in explosives."

Natasha shrank down between them as the air started to heat up with impending argument.

"I know you're not a fan of deterrence, Jack, but it's the lesser of two evils here."

"I ... I'm not disagreeing with you. But I'm not going to ignore the knock-on effects of that either. Azamel's pissed. We didn't strap explosives to Avery's home."

"Avery's home is not a stronghold, and not a place she's worried about defending, Jack. And we remember Simon was the true issue with the Uratha last time, not Avery."

"And yet the Uratha have caused more trouble for us in their time here than the Begotten have. They nearly killed Natasha." Not that he was unhappy about the Uratha being in Dolareido, but when compared side by side, the Uratha had already caused some problems with their aggressiveness. The Begotten, not so much.

Tash inched a hand up. "I—"

Julias cut her off. “Don’t forget the amount of kills Fiona’s ravenous appetite led to. And the Uratha didn’t bring hunters to our doorstep.”

“You didn’t know hunters were here when you set up the explosives.” The fuck did his sire not get about how Azamel was being treated unfairly?

“We didn’t know, but we knew trouble was going to follow her arrival, and unlike Avery, we knew it’d be Azamel’s fault. Last time her hunger grew out of control, and she destroyed entire buildings.”

Jack winced, and looked down. Yeah, there was that. “And we weren’t worried about Avery going full on aggro when she showed up, rinse and repeat Simon’s actions? Jacob certainly was, and is.” Why was he arguing so hard to give the Begotten a break? It wasn’t just because of Fiona, despite her being a perfect example of why they shouldn’t judge the hungry monsters too harshly. Maybe it was because of Athalia. The way she’d looked at him during the ball, that hate in her face, steel gaze cutting into him.

He wanted to make her not hate him, or the Kindred. And, he couldn’t imagine how rough things were for her, with her daughter in the city, trying to kill her.

“I know that look, Jack,” his sire said. “Stop it. Stop feeling sorry for other people and trying to save everyone.”

“This isn’t like with the kine, Julias, with the arbitrary eighteen-year-old cut off. This is a mother caught between who she is and a psychopath daughter trying to kill her.”

“It doesn’t matter that she’s a mother!” His voice split the air, going from a raised voice to a full on yell. Mulder and Scully took off, taking to the air and perching on top of the mansion. “I know your mother is still alive, Jack, but that’s no reason to sympathize with Athalia. And don't think we don't know you're still visiting your family, your mother especially, with Amanda's help."

Shit. Shit shit shit shit.

"I ... She doesn't know, Julias. There's no harm."

"She might see you, your sister might see you, and you'll have to get your fingers into their brains again. And ... this situation with Athalia..."

Silence fell on them both, and they both leaned forward to set their elbows on their knees, hands dangling between. Yeah, no need to say it. Jack was letting his family issues cloud his judgment.

He wasn't supposed to have family issues. He never connected with his sister, and his relationship with his mother was 'fine', but just fine. Never a true connection, never any deep meaning, never any major value. He wondered if he'd feel sad at either of their funerals. He wondered ... he wondered why he was still asking Amanda for help, so he could spy on them.

"I ... I um ... uh..." Natasha, fidgeting her fingers like she was tearing apart invisible sheets of paper, stood up, and turned to face them. After backing up a bit of course. "Jack, um, d-do you want to walk me home? I wanted t-to talk to you about some stuff."

"... yeah, ok." He stood up, slipped off the glove, slipped it into his jacket pocket, and faced his sire. "Cool with that, Julias?" First names meant connection, first names meant he wasn't letting the weight of the argument put a wall between him and his sire.

"Yeah. Just be careful, Jack." Good, more first names, both signing a truce. "And, as for your visits to your family? I'd have stopped you already if I didn't trust you."

“ ... thanks.” Much as Jack appreciated it, the cut of Julias’s gaze said enough.

You’re flirting with pain, Jack, and it’s going to eat you alive.

---

Jack called for a drive, and both he and Tash started back for his apartment. He didn’t go there much, but he still had stuff there, and sometimes it was nice to remind himself that he did actually own his own place. Now, he had money for a much better place, but would he ever move into one? The Invictus wouldn’t let him full-on live with Antoinette, probably. He had to keep his Invictus-connected laptop and stuff at his apartment, safe from the Prince’s prying fingers. Safe-ish. As if she didn’t already know everything the Invictus told him.

They got out before arriving at his apartment though, and decided to walk around. Mulder and Scully followed him from above, blending in with the rest of the crows that hid themselves on the rooftops. Plenty of the crows in Dolareido didn’t bother hiding, and perched atop street lampposts, or garbage cans, benches, and street signs. Some of the braver ones stood upon the signs of the local casinos, bars, and clubs. The bravest stood on the street with the kine, and picked up bits of food. He knew about crows that dropped nuts onto the streets in Japan, and used traffic to break them. They used the traffic signs or pedestrian flow, to wait to cross the street, and pick up their prize. And since then, crows had been spotted doing some fairly insane things, intelligence-wise, all over the world.

So Mulder and Scully had no troubles blending in with their neighbors, keeping tabs on his car, and then tabs on him as he and Tash got out of the car and started walking the sidewalks. Time to do some rounds, walk around, see if they spotted anything out of the ordinary. A quick walk around familiar territory just to make sure things looked normal. Chance of it helping with the hunter hunt was less than zero, but whatever, better than nothing.

“Sorry about that,” he said to the tiny girl beside him. “With Julias, I mean.”

“That’s ok. I know w-what it’s like to argue with your sire.”

“ ... Daniel knows how to argue?” Imagining the borderline lifeless man in a debate, let alone an argument, was impossible.

Tash giggled again, quiet and subtle. People were around, better to keep their voices from traveling too far. Normally, kine hearing some of their dialogue was harmless, but the conversation topic was sensitive, and with the risk of hunters hiding in their midsts, best to not get cocky.

“The same way that a s-st-s-stone does, or a w-wall.”

“Then he must be good at it, cause I’ve argued many o’ times with a wall. Lost every one of them.”

They chuckled. Yeah, both of them knew what that was like, rehearsing arguments, or having arguments with imaginary people. It never ended well, just going around and around with pretend situations, pessimism leading to the worst outcomes.

“I, um ... I visited the old prison, w-with Art and M-Matt.”

“Yeah? Invictus leave behind any evidence?”

“No, n-nothing anyone besides Uratha would find. B-B-But ... they ... they um...”

He raised a brow as he looked down at her. She caught his gaze, made a tiny frown, and took his wrist. With a small yank, the Mekhet took him into one of the dark alleys, maybe ten feet into its depths, so the neon lights of the nearest casino cut across the asphalt between the walls at an angle. She put her back to the wall where it hid her from the light, and he stood next to her, both now in the darkness, and soon, both hidden in her cloak of night.

“What’s up?”

“They ... th-they wanted me to ... t-to ask you...” Sighing, she hugged herself, looked down, and shivered a little. Social anxiety, he recognized the signs well enough, but what did she have to be anxious with him about? “Are you ok?”

“ ... um, I guess?” Weird direction to take the conversation, and random. “What’s this about?”

“The b-boys, they ... they could feel the ... the um ... th-they think what happened at the prison, is ... is ... worse than ... than...”

He sighed, long, and hard. Seemed like the thing to do, to finish her sentence with a noise of blatant brooding. Just two vampires, in a dark alley, hiding in shadow, talking about their problems. His problems, this time. Did the cliches never end?

“They could?”

“Y-Yeah, they ... they noticed it, immediately, when we arrived.”

“You asked Matt and Art to help with the hunters, didn’t you? Avery won’t be happy, you stepping around her like that.”

Natasha shivered a little, rubbed her arms, and gulped. “Maybe. The boys, they say they c-can handle her, and that she ... won’t d-d-do anything t-too mean to them, for disobeying her.”

Must be nice, to have that level of freedom. Must be nice, to trust your bosses to be ... human, about things. He trusted Julias like that, but he trusted Michael and Maria a total of zero. If he stepped out of line like that, they’d punish him. No wonder Julias wasn’t too happy about him seeing Azamel without his permission.

“And ... they noticed what happened?” he said. “Thought the Invictus cleaned the place up. The usual evidence sweep.”

“Yeah, the d-did, and no ... no kine would find evidence. But the boys, they ... b-b-both noticed, how ... how bad it was, how bad it must have been ... They said you ... um, that the event, scarred the place.”

“ ... I suppose it'd be pretty stupid of me, to dismiss that, pass it off.” He swiped the air with his hand, like wiping the remains of a broken plate off a table. Part of him still wanted to not say anything, to act tough for others. He had let Julias see how damaged he was, a bit anyway. He had let Antoinette see more. He hadn't told either of them the extent of it, of what it was like for his mind to reach out, and crush the souls of human beings like they were ants, annoying, pestering, biting little ants that deserved to be squashed.

Antoinette said she wanted him and her to have a more adult, mature relationship, talk with each other about serious things, vampire things. At the time, he thought that meant talk more about the trials and tribulations on a larger scale. Now, he realized, it meant he could talk about this sort of disgusting shit, the shit that got under his skin and made him hate being a vampire. Tash worked for the Prince, and he trusted her, so, this could be a trial run.

“ ... it was horrible,” he said. “Yeah, it hurt being tortured, and they terrified me, and sometimes I dream about Angela's psycho eyes.” Fucking daily torpor dreams were never so vivid before. And you couldn't just wake up from a nightmare as a Kindred. You slept through that shit, and let it take you down into a spiraling pit of insanity until the sun set. You didn't have a choice. Kindred could force themselves awake during day hours, but the effort of being awake while the sun was up was like dragging a boulder on your back. You didn't do it to avoid scary dreams.

“That ... d-does sound bad,” she said, voice a hovering waver almost lost to the street noise.

“And ... and it was more.”

“More?”

“ ... you ever want to kill someone, Natasha?”

“I d-d-don’t kn—”

“I mean, have you ever wanted to kill someone. You ever wanted to feel your fingers around someone’s throat, because you know, you just know, deep down in your bones, that the sensation of their windpipe crushing and their bones cracking in your grip, would be the most euphoric sensation? Ever wanted to look into someone’s eyes, actually meet someone’s gaze, hold it from only inches away, and see the life drain out of them, see the terror in them as they realize they’re gong to die? Ever wanted to...” He held out his hands in front of him, and squeezed the air, like he was squeezing organs into mulch. Hate. He’d had no idea what hate was before that. In that moment, in that single night, he’d tasted hate to such a degree, it was scarred into his mind; and onto the prison itself, according to Tash’s wolves.

No wonder he was turning into a brooding cliché. Christ, just thinking about that night had him craving the feel of crushing their worthless minds with his superior Kindred mind. He was the predator, they were the prey, how dare they.

“ ... no ... I ... d-don’t know what that’s like.” The far, far older Kindred looked down, and Jack looked away, toward the street. She had fifty Kindred years on him, and she didn’t know what it felt like to hate like that. Wonderful. “ ... you ... you sounded like you wanted to help Athalia, earlier today, with Julias.”

“I do! Fuck, I do. I ... I don’t ... I don’t walk around, feeling like this. But sometimes, it hits me. Sometimes, I remember what it was like being trapped in that chair, with those fucking hunters holding me hostage, and...” He looked at his hands again. His hands were squeezing the air, like he was crushing minds, like he was crushing organs and bone. “ ... I feel like a fool.”

“W-Why?”

“I’m just over a year embraced, Tash. Who the fuck am I to be getting so morose about this? I survived hunters trying to kill little ol’ me, and dealt them a serious blow at the same time. I have the most amazing girlfriend. I’m swimming in money, sex, and blood ... food, for the metaphor. I ... I’m just a confused idiot who over thinks everything.” He shouldn’t be letting it get to him so much.

“ ... I would ... I would say you might be over thinking, a little? B-But ... all Kindred have to fight their ... b-b-beast,” she said, looking at him, weak smile on. “You w-want to help Athalia, and others. That’s good. You ... you’re tasting some ... some p-powerful feelings ... that Ventrue come t-t-to naturally. It’s your b-bane, right?”

He sighed, nodded, and leaned his head back, putting it to the old building’s wall so he could look up at the washed out sky. All Kindred blood clans had tendencies, weaknesses inherent to the blood, that manifested in their behavior. With Ventrue, it was perfectly manifested in that one moment where Viktor had cut him open. ‘Learn your place, and die.’ Only for Viktor to die, in the end.

He nodded. “Yeah, it is.”

“Then, you ... you ... I d-don’t know. You’re one of the nicest Kindred I know, Jack. I ... d-d-don’t think you have anything to worry about. But ... but the boys, they ... they were surprised, by the ... the pain and hate and death ... carved into that place. I wanted to make sure you were ok. Are ... are you ok?”

“ ... yeah, yeah I think I am.” He smirked at her. “Antoinette told me that you told her, that she shouldn’t try and keep the real world out of our relationship?”

She squeaked, and lowered her head. “ ... I d-did.”

“ ... thanks, for that.” And he shouldn’t try and protect Antoinette from this side of him, just because he thought he was overreacting. He probably was overreacting, and Antoinette could confirm, with her wealth of experience. Or, in either case, help him.

Natasha’s phone rang. She pulled it open, blinked at it, and answered. “Sheriff? ... um, Terry is here with me, should ... Oh, ok. Um ... sure, we’ll b-be right there.”

“We will?”

She smiled at him, a tiny, curious smile, as she put the phone back in her pocket. “He said y-you would want t-to see this anyway.”

What wonderful, delightful twists and turns was Dolareido going to throw at them tonight?

“Hey Tash?”

“Y-Yes?”

“Don’t tell the Prince about our conversation, if you don’t mind. I’ll tell her, eventually.” When he could wrap his mind around it a little better.

“Sure.”

---

They took a drive toward Devil’s Corner, closer to the border with the Carthians. This late at night, and in this particular section of the dirty corner of the city, it was basically the most dangerous place Dolareido had to offer. The people who were outside hung out in alleys and in groups, heads covered in whatever was a fashionable 'fuck you I'm dangerous' getup. Men were particular to tattoos on the chest, and jeans hanging down till they were basically falling off. Women were particular to fancy chain link piercings, and short haircuts, sometimes going bald.

Getting mugged was a possibility, for Jack and his little Mehket friend, but it would only be an excuse to let off some steam for him. And, he didn't want to let off steam by breaking kine minds and bones. Instead, he looked up and made sure Mulder and Scully were still there, before he headed down the alley for the location. A storage locker rental site, where storage lockers as big as small bedrooms were set up, hundreds of them.

Daniel was waiting beside one, back to the roll-up locker door, wearing his usual trench coat. Hands folded across his chest, holding his elbows, he was looking down at the facility's floor, mind wandering about god knows what. He didn't look happy, but the man never did, so that didn't tell Jack anything. The facility was no different than a garage for storing cars, multiple floors dug into the earth, with some above ground, pillars of concrete and other building materials, old metal, rusting doors, and the occasional puddle along the cracked ground.

In Devil's Corner, this was the perfect place for people to get involved in the really nasty shit, the visceral and hands-on brutal stuff, and hand-me-downs from Terra Den drifted this way. Drug dealers fighting over turf, or dealing in general, were not uncommon in the multi-layered dens of old buildings like this. And what sort of shit people stored in these lockers, he could only imagine. How Dolareido was, statistically speaking, safer than other cities, Jack didn't understand, when he first got involved in the nightlife. But seeing how Jessy bossed around big, bad corporations like Terra Den, and kept them in line, he understood now. The Invictus kept the titans with money from ruining everything, and the Carthians kept their local population of ... rougher types, from getting too rough with shit.

But, Devil's Corner didn't have the Carthians, and the Invictus had no reason to deal with it either. So a trip to storage cell, in the middle of the night, with the sheriff standing outside it waiting for him and his childe, had an air of crime scene, murder mystery, or other grizzly discovery. The sheriff should have been smoking, and there should have been police tape around, to complete the image.

"D-Daniel." Tash walked up to him, and stood straight, smiling up at her sire. "You found something?"

"Indeed." He turned, and offered Jack a small nod, before leaning down to pull the roll-up door open. Darkness awaited them, and he ushered them in, before closing the door behind them, and turning on the light.

Jack wished he hadn't.

The Ventrue gasped, and stared. Walls, all the walls, all the fucking walls, were covered in symbols. The floor was covered in the biggest one, so large it covered the entirety of the room's base. Red, painted, etched and carved. They smelled, rotten blood, a smell all Kindred knew well, knew instinctively, knew to never ingest lest they wanted to vomit their guts out for hours. Joined with the sight, it created a nauseating mess.

He recognized the symbols. Anyone would recognize the symbols. Inverted pentagrams in circles. A bird skull. A cow skull. A horse skull. The skull symbols sat outside the flat edges of a triangle, a triangle that surrounded the pentagram. And around the triangle itself was another drawn circle, two borders, with symbols drawn within the two borders, letters of a language he didn't know.

"... what in the ever living fuck." He looked around and around, and gulped with each wall he looked to. The enormous symbol beneath him was big enough to reach the three tables that were pressed to the walls, out of the way of the door. And each table was covered in more symbols, hundreds, thousands of them, many carved into the wood their surfaces, many painted with more dried blood.

“J-Jack.”

“This looks like something the Circle would do. But, why would they, in a locker in Devil’s Corner? The fuck?”

“ ... Jack, um—”

He turned to Tash, and gestured to the table and a stack of papers on it. Piles of drawings, done in pencil. Drawings of the symbols, but drawings of other things too, and he reached out to start pushing them aside. A drawing of a skeleton. A skull. A hand with half of its flesh eaten off. Whoever drew these was really talented, and sick as fuck, and—

“Jack!”

He turned around again, and looked to Tash as she tugged on his arm. But, she wasn’t looking at him, she was looking up. And, like being asked to not look down, he followed her gaze up to the ceiling.

There was a skeleton, nailed to the ceiling. Not a fake skeleton, not a drawing, and not an old skeleton. It couldn’t have been more than few months old, he could smell flesh and blood, but he couldn’t see them on it, minor traces of the smell a vampire couldn’t miss. String, or some sort of thin rope, tied the limbs to the nails, and they looked stained with blood.

Now they were knew where the blood came from, used to paint the symbols.

“Fucking god.” He walked over to it, underneath it, and stared up at it, slowly rotating in spot. “Sheriff, why d...” Why do you think this has anything to do with me, or that I’d want to see this? No need to ask, no, not when he was staring at himself.

There was a drawing, of Jack, on a necklace. And it was dangling from the skeleton’s neck.

“I’ve already dug up the records on this facility. No one was renting this locker, according to the manager’s records.” Daniel walked up to stand beside Jack, and looked up along with him, at the picture. Or probably, at least, but Jack couldn’t look at him to check, eyes locked onto the picture.

It was a really good picture. Someone with a great hand, a fan of the pencil, someone who could cross-hatch and capture the depth of a shadow, and the depth of an emotion. They caught the look of joy in his face, the total, overwhelming bliss he felt, when he put on his headphones and let music wash away his thoughts. The only thing that could ever truly, totally and utterly silence his mind, was music. And when he listened to complex, long music, with sprawling movements, let it take him away on a journey of pure sound, vibration, waves, energy, he knew he wore that emotion on his face.

Someone captured that expression, the unique expression he wore when listening to music, fucking drew it, and put it on a corpse.

“I ... I ... how? Kindred faces don’t show up on camera! Digital, or analog, or what-fucking-ever!” He gestured to the picture, and started looking around for some sort of reference. “How the fuck!?”

“Jack, p-p-please, calm down.” Tash grabbed his hand and tried to pull him away, but he yanked it free and gestured back up to the hanging picture.

“What is this? What’s going on?” Oh god, oh fucking god. He stared at the picture, at the portrait, and put both hands on his head to begin rubbing his hair. “They ... that...” He had headphones on in the picture too, big ones, open, supra-aural, expensive and magnificent. “My apartment! They ... they ... had to be watching me ... and drawing me...”

Panicking. He was panicking. He was legitimately, truly, panicking. He didn’t know what that was like, to lose control, have your body fight against you, have your impulses go haywire. If he was still alive, with a beating heart and dependent on oxygen, he’d be gasping and fighting his own body for air. He stumbled around, pushed past Tash, and fell toward the table. Still on his feet, he slammed his palms down against the wooden surface, and forced his eyes to focus on something solid, but all he could find was occult symbols, and drawings of dissected body parts.

Someone was stalking him.

Why did that hit him so much harder than anything else? He’d fought monsters, survived explosions, and had managed to withstand torture. Why did this get his skin crawling, run ice down his spine, have him trembling. It was a Kindred instinct to remain hidden, to never let anyone have a piece of evidence proving you were there, that you existed. Someone had a very, very accurate portrait of him, done in fucking pencil. It sent that part of him into hysterics, and he took long, hard blinks trying to reset his mind.

The fact that he was in a room where a human had probably been cut up, dismembered, blood used for painting and bones used for a ceiling decoration, wasn’t helping.

“How d-did you find this?” Tash said. The next moment, she was behind Jack, patting his back. He didn’t have the heart to tell her he would prefer to not be touched right now.

“ ... I can't share the details. Sorry.” Daniel, not sharing details with his subordinate. Strange.

Jack forced himself to stand up again, gulped on nothing, and turned to face the two Mekhets. “I imagine you're ... you're investigating ... the unknown threat.”

“Unknown threat?” Tash blinked at him, but with time, her eyes settled, and she looked down.

“ ... yes.” Daniel nodded and adjusted his glasses, glove to the bridge over his nose, as his dull eyes remained fixed on the skeleton above. “But we should not speak of it. With anyone.”

Just as Jack suspected. It wasn't just him keeping an eye open for stranger, dark things, miscellaneous things, things that would lead to Azamel warning him. Daniel was keeping an eye open too, and considering how often the man vanished, it was probably his full time job now, hunting down whatever the fuck it was that had Azamel so spooked. Did it have Jacob or Antoinette spooked too? Did they know anything about it? Antoinette must have, if Daniel was looking into it.

Jack sighed as he forced himself to look back up at the skeleton on the ceiling. His face. His god damn face, eyes closed, headphones on, and a serene smile. It was tilted on its side, but whether that was the paper or the angle of the portrait, he couldn't tell. The picture showed a fraction of his neck, but not enough for him to be able to tell anything else, except that he was probably sitting or lying down for it.

“D-Do you ... listen to your music with your curtains open?” Tash said.

“Rarely.” It was the portrait that was getting him so nauseated, and overwhelmed. The skeleton, the blood symbols, the blatant occult work surrounding him, all of that was blasé, dull, compared to the god damn bit of graphite on thin white paper with his face on it.

The tiny Mekhet sighed, a tiny, mouse-like sound, and reached out for her sire. “Should ... should we ... t-t-take it down?”

“It’s been here for a couple months,” the sheriff said. “I think we’re safe to do that. I’ve already completed my investigation; what I can accomplish from here, anyway.”

Jack looked around, and groaned as the horrible smell took on a new meaning. “Couple months? So ... they ... they did this before they kidnapped me.”

“Correct.” Daniel pulled a small knife out of his sleeve — what a place to store a knife — and cut the string holding the skeleton’s right arm to the ceiling. And then another string, and then another. What flesh remaining between the joints keeping the thing together tore under the disturbance, and soon Daniel didn’t have to do much to make skeleton come down and apart. With quick, snapping hands, he grabbed the bones as they fell, like a professional juggler, setting each bone down to the floor in the same position they’d been in when above. Fast hands, very fast.

With the skeleton reconstructed on the concrete beneath them, Daniel held the picture of Jack in his gloved hands, and rotated it around.

“ ... here. Give this back before you leave.” The sheriff nodded, and handed him the picture.

“Shouldn’t I keep it?” Jack said. “The Invictus might—”

“We’ll be keeping it, for evidence, and to help with the investigation.” Daniel adjusted his glasses again, and began to walk the perimeter of the small room once more, one hand in a pocket while the other touched the tables and symbols. Not a request, a demand. He was the sheriff, he got to make demands, and everyone else had to listen. But, Jack had to bite his tongue to keep from saying something anyway. It was him, god damn it. Him in that picture.

“D-Do you have any theories, sheriff?” Tash said, following after him and taking pictures of the symbols with her phone.

The tall, lanky man came back to the skeleton, now on the floor face up, and he squatted down beside it. Him and his childe investigated the place like a duo, detective and the rookie. Amanda would have done the same thing. Mekhet were like that, and he was glad to have some helping him, especially now.

But, Jack could see, the sheriff didn't want to share details. If the man was trying to keep details from the Ventrue about what he'd been doing during his recent disappearances, Jack could understand. Hell, if the man was keeping secrets from Tash, just to spare her from having to know things she didn't need to know, he could understand that too. Jack didn't tell Jessy or Damien about having Mulder and Scully shadowing him twenty-four/seven now, for the same reason.

Couldn't even be honest with your partners. The Danse Macabre was such a lovely bed fellow.

“ ... if I had to guess ... someone used this man's body—”

Jack stepped in closer. “Man?”

The sheriff nodded and gestured to the waist. “Shape of the pelvis.”

“ ... right.” Breathing deep, trying to stop the pin pricks dancing up and down his spine, he looked down at the portrait, and stared at his face. A portrait of him, a beautiful one, done in pencil and with such a delightful hand, was awe inspiring. And terrifying. The juxtaposition was a cheese grater on the soft matter of his brain, tearing it apart and shredding it into bits until he felt the weight of its remains hit his feet.

Pull yourself together. You're a Ventrue. And this, this is nothing more than a threat to be dealt with. Right? Right.

"I believe someone used this man's body as part of the ritual." Daniel gestured around to the symbols, especially to the giant circle beneath them. "They wanted information. If this occurred before Jack's kidnapping, we must presume that whatever they learned from this was directly involved in the kidnapping, and perhaps the cause of."

Jack sighed, but nodded. "From how they were talking to me, I got the impression they knew a lot about us. Not just Kindred covenants or blood clans, but about how our covenants are set up here in Dolareido, about us, and about the Prince." They certainly had information, no doubt about that.

"Then ... w-we should ... look for more of these?" Tash said, gesturing around the room. "If this is some way for the hunters t ... t-to get information, or a location, or ... or anything, they'll p-probably do it again."

Nodding, the sheriff got up, and folded his arms across his chest as he stared down. "I'll check missing persons, and see if there are any other kine who've vanished."

"How are you going to be able to separate random missing people from the other death and whatnot?" Jack said. Much as Dolareido was a safe place for kine, it wasn't perfect. People died, were killed, sometimes by vampires with a motive, sometimes by vampires who got lazy. As long as the Masquerade was not damaged, Kindred were allowed to kill kine, and that made tracking down shit like this oddly complicated.

“I’m sheriff for a reason, Jack Terry.” Daniel didn’t shrug, didn’t roll his eyes, didn’t smirk or anything. He stared at the skeleton, and held out his hand to Jack, for the picture. “I’m good at what I do.”

Jack sighed, nodded, and handed the picture back to him. A picture of him. Of Jack.

Christ.

---

He wasn’t going to go back to his apartment, not yet. No fucking way.

Not being able to go anywhere outside central South Side without a companion was a pain in the ass. He didn’t think it would be, considering he didn’t really go anywhere, but tonight he wanted to put a little distance between him and his apparently spied-on den. He also didn’t want to go back to the Elysium tower, and start dumping all these troubles onto his love’s lap.

But, he knew that was because he was an idiot. The night before, she’d asked him to start doing just that. More than just that, she wanted him to talk to her about things as an equal, not simply him dropping his woes onto her so she could soothe his pain. Actually talk about shit, actual real shit. If they weren’t vampires, it’d be the sort of thing two people looking to spend the rest of their lives together would do. It was the step up from enjoying chemistry, to establishing compatibility. Marrying Antoinette was an image he enjoyed, but it wasn’t how Kindred did things. Normally.

“What did you want to talk about?” Damien said. The two Kindred sat upon one of the man’s secret tower hideouts, way up high, an old radio tower. He had a telescope up here, and Jack looked through it with intrigue. You could see so many things up here, and he was sure Damien had probably looked at him in the past, spied on him, or some such.

“You any good with a pencil, Damien?”

“I am, actually. Had a lot of time to practice, hiding all those years.”

“ ... ever draw a picture of me?”

“No. A strange question.” He tilted his head to the side, eyebrow raised as he looked at him.

Jack, sighing and shrugging, sat down on the small tower roof. Only six feet wide, with a radio tower of rusted metal above them, and some concrete bench-like walls the tower stood from. Perfect for two Kindred to sit and talk about the scary shit coming their way.

He didn't suspect Damien, but it seemed prudent to poke about the topic a little. Later though. He'd ask about it later. The moment he steered the conversation into the direction of dark rituals, a stalker's portrait of him, and all the weird implications it brought, that's all the conversation would be about. But there were two reasons he wanted Damien with him.

“Damien, you ever worry about your sire?” Nice and quick, like a bandaid, one of the strong ones that rips out all the arm hair with it. How ladies could ever stand to wax their legs, let alone other body parts, he'd never be able to comprehend.

“ ... worry about him? You killed him, Jack.”

“I ... that's not what I mean.”

“You mean whether or not your grand sire's reputation will re-manifest itself in you.” Blunt and on point. Jack appreciated that, or would at least, if it didn't hit so hard right now.

“... yeah.” Jack sighed, leaned back, and looked up at the sky. In the South Side of Dolareido, the stars were invisible, lost to the night lights of the city. The natural stars of the universe were distant and weak, compared to the nearby lights of bars, casinos, clubs, and everything in between.

“I assume you’ve already talked with Julias and the Prince about this.”

“Julias, yes. With Antoinette? ... not so much.”

“May I ask why?”

Jack brought his head back up, and raised a brow, mirroring Damien. Surprising, for Damien to be so forward with a question about personal stuff. He wasn’t the man he used to be, whatever that meant, but it was plain to see in his body language and vernacular that the man wasn’t dripping with brooding hate, like he was when Jack met him. For a question about the sire Jack had killed to not faze him, was a better outcome than Jack could have hoped for.

“I assume you read my report about my escape.”

“I have.”

“And I assume you’ve acquired more details about it, from Jessy or Maria or elsewhere.”

“... I have.”

“I ... had to—”

“If you’re going to tell me you had to become the Alder Viktor Honors to escape the confines of torturous kine bent on killing us and our friends, and that you’re worried such a mental state will follow you home, then I’m going to have to insist that you’re being paranoid.” The Mekhet shook his head, leaned back, and looked up at the sky, same as Jack had been. “How familiar are you with psychology?”

“ ... more than most, but not enough to call myself anything more than an interested amateur.” Where was he going with this?

“Then I assume you’re aware that it’s human nature to look back at our past to explain our present. And that, our past often manifests in our present because humans are drawn to the familiar.”

“Absent father leads to daughter who grows up to become more interested in emotionally unavailable men. Yeah, I get that.” As usual with psychology, the theory — hypothesis, really — was soft science, filled with examples but with no way to prove direct causation.

“Your father died when you were younger, yes?”

“ ... yeah.” Jack didn’t think about his dad much. But, it was true, the old man was a void to be filled.

“So now you look for him. You look for him in yourself, and your sire, and your grand sire.” Damien shrugged, like Jack would shrug after giving a simple explanation, before he leaned forward again, and set his knees to his elbows, eyes on Jack. “But, if you’re thinking that maybe there’s something more going on, something specific to Kindred, something in the blood, then I’m afraid there are few examples to back that up. In all likelihood, your ability to handle that situation the way you did, as brutally as you did, was you being you, Jack. Viktor’s bloodline is strong, but that’s it.”

If there was anyone who knew what it was like to be on the receiving end of desperate Jack, it was Damien, Jack supposed.

“ ... I’m not sure I like that explanation any more.”

Damien managed a smile. A small thing, the sort of smile Jack might have expected to find on Daniel, if the cold man ever heard something that tickled his funny bone in just the right way.

“Lucas was a powerful Kindred as you know, Jack. And, an unusual one. A Mekhet with ... Ventrue tendencies, I suppose is the kindest way to put it. Controlling others, ruling others.” The assassin wiped the definition aside, old dust on a tome. “From the moment I awakened him from his long slumber, I could tell that he and I could not be more different. I followed his lead, convinced myself it was the correct thing to do, blinding myself with a delusion ... be careful you don’t do the same. You’re you, you control you, and you can change you.”

Jack leaned in, mirror to mirror. “You’ve changed more than I give you credit for.”

“It’s easier to change, when you’ve hit rock bottom and have nothing to hold on to.”

Jack laughed. Ok, there was some wisdom in that, he supposed. Very Buddhist. Also very Fight Club.

And the man had a point. Jack was so convinced that his newfound desire to crush people was some carry-over from Viktor, and not just him being him. Was that better, or worse? No idea, but he felt a bit better about it, at least. If it was him being him, he had control of it, or at least more control than he did if it was Viktor’s ghost coming to haunt him.

“Course, I could just be making a mountain out of a mole hill,” Jack said. “Could all just be in my head, and I’m spiraling my brain down into a pit with this reductive reasoning.”

“Better that you think about things, than to not.”

“Jessy would disagree.”

They both started laughing. This was good, this was fun, this was growth. It'd been a while since the whole Lucas incident, and Damien was quickly becoming a Kindred he could trust with his life. From enemies to friends. Straight out of a romance novel, heh.

“Seen Fiona around?” Jack said.

“Not yet.”

“Julias said I should visit Azamel, to see what's going on, where the Begotten have been. And since we've both been to the nightmare, we're supposed to be working on that ... project?” Determining what that project entailed was difficult. Maria wanted them to consolidate their knowledge, but they'd already tried that. They knew fuck all.

“Then I suggest we pay them a visit.” Another smile sneaked its way onto his face. Jack was sure the man liked Fiona, but he wasn't sure if Damien knew he liked her. And he knew that he was the last person on Earth to be giving relationship advice.

Maybe this was that stereotype, that everyone in a relationship felt the need to get everyone else they knew into a relationship, or give relationship advice in general? His life was becoming some sort of weird, dark comedy sitcom. Queue dropping a chainsaw on a naked hooker's head from a stairway balcony. Queue laugh track.

“Alright. I have to call in a shit show first.” He sighed, pulled out his phone, and looked around for Mulder and Scully. Sure enough, they were there, sitting on a nearby building. They'd come closer if Jack asked, but he wanted them to stay at a distance for now, keep an eye on things.

“Shit show?”

“Long story. I can tell you about it on the way to Azamel's hole in the wall.”

---

“ ... did you suspect me?” Damien said. “The question about my drawing ability suggests you did.”

“No, but I won’t let that bias affect decisions. Just cause I trust you doesn’t mean you might not be secretly planning to stab me in the back.”

“True.”

They chuckled again as the two of them walked the tunnels. Same night he learned he was being stalked by some sort of deadly ritual, and he was already laughing. Jaded, or growing accustomed to the life of a vampire, he didn’t know.

The lights were working, and many repairs were already completed; not that those tunnels were the tunnels they were currently working through, but still, it was nice to know that the tunnels were being maintained, even if they looked like they weren’t. The dingy, flickering old lights, the dust and dirt and rats and everything in between, it all screamed abandoned tunnels. And they were abandoned, as far as the populace knew, so he supposed it fit the disguise. Just in case a kine managed to get into the abandoned tunnels by accident.

“I don’t recognize your description of the ritual,” Damien continued. “It sounds like ... it sounds strange, in a cliché sort of way. The symbols you describe are classic symbols used in witchcraft, known by kine across the world. But, real ... supernatural things, rituals, sorcery, we know they don’t bend to such bastardizations.”

“If they’re bastardizations. Just because they’re popular today, used in media and shit, doesn’t mean they never worked in the past.”

Again the Mekhet nodded. “That is a valid point. The pentagram, upside down or what have you, in the circle, in the triangle, in the circle, with the symbols, definitely sounds like a ritual circle. The sheriff’s presumption is probably correct. What surprises me more is the presence of a skeleton.”

“ ... not the portrait of me?” Cause dealing with the dead was a not-uncommon act for Kindred.

“The portrait could be explained through multiple avenues. Did they use it during the ritual to learn about you, or did the ritual inform them about you, leading to the drawing? Did the ritual create the drawing? As much as the portrait is ... strange, a body being used is what surprises me more. A sacrifice is extreme.”

“I guess it is.”

It’d only taken them ten minutes to put some distance under their heels, deep under the city streets. So easy to get into the tunnels through the Invictus half of South Side, especially near the HQ Xnomina like Damien and Jack were. A casual stroll, two Kindred, two right hands of the Invictus, wandering around in the poorly lit tunnels. Dangerous, but not terribly. Invictus and Carthians used the tunnels regularly, and with the buddy system going, it was unlikely the hunters would risk getting caught in them. They’d get collapsed on from all sides once the Kindred found out. No, the hunters would likely remain topside, where they could hide in the thousands of buildings and alleys. Like cockroaches.

Unless they were hunting monsters. Azamel was down here, which meant the hunters would have to come down here eventually, right?

“You remember the details Beatrice shared with Julias, about the incident with Jeremiah?” Jack said.

“Mostly.”

“She said that Jeremiah guy showed up, in Fiona’s nightmare.”

“Correct.” The Mekhet rotated his shoulders a little as they walked. He was wearing a long black jacket over his suit, and from the way he held his posture, he probably had a sword in there, a long one like Daniel liked to use. And some guns of course, because it was the 21st century.

“The four hunters followed Fiona into the nightmare, but how did Jeremiah get in there?”

He shrugged. “I had assumed the same way the other hunters had. He—”

“He broke in.”

Both Kindred jumped, spun around, and pulled out weapons, Jack pulling out a pistol from inside his suit jacket, while Damien pulled out a sword from within his overcoat. Smooth, quick. For a moment, Jack felt some pride about that; for Damien it was expected, but for Jack, it was progress on his skills. Except, of course, that being happy he managed to do that as a reaction was his hubris kicking in at the worst fucking time.

“Athalia?” Damien said.

Yeah, Athalia. Jack lowered the gun, looked at the woman for a moment, then sighed and put the pistol away. Julias said kill her if she became a problem, but she wasn’t a problem yet. And if there was anyone who could keep it that way, it was him, supposedly, for some reason.

“Damien, Jack,” she said. “I’m surprised you’re both down here.”

With a small breath, Jack nodded. The situation hadn’t changed, despite Julias’s words. She was a reluctant ally until shown otherwise. “Came to see how you guys were doing, actually. Haven’t seen much of the Begotten lately.”

Wearing some jeans and a black sweater, Athalia walked up to them, and motioned for them to continue walking. Attractive, with an icy bite in her eyes that always put Jack on edge. He’d gotten past it, when she talked to him at the ball. But now it was back, that wall of ice he’d have to break through if he wanted to make progress with her.

She’s not a wild animal you need to tame, Jack. Grow the fuck up.

“We’ve been spending more time in the nightmare, as you can imagine.” She got a couple feet ahead of them, and kept that pace. Yeah, it was her tunnels, in her mind. “With Jeremiah and Angela looking for more ways to get to us, we’ve been keeping an eye on things while remaining hidden.”

Damien looked at Jack, and Jack looked at Damien. Both shrugged. If she wanted to do the leading, whatever, that worked for them.

The Mekhet put his sword away, slowly, wearing his hesitation longer than Jack did. “Did you notice us coming down here, or did you stumble onto us?”

“Fiona sensed you coming.”

He raised a brow. “How?”

“She’s very skilled, especially for a girl her age. You tripped her threads.”

“Didn’t see any spider webs,” Jack said. Damn, that was an impressive skill, if Fiona could lay out trip wires like that. “There any news? Any sightings?”

A long sigh fell out of her, like she was rolling a heavy boulder off her back. “No. And that is a problem. Jeremiah has no reason to wait, not when his goal is simply to eliminate Azamel. Is he looking for a new avenue of attack? We do not know.”

“How did Jeremiah break in last time?” Damien said. “Into your nightmare world.”

“It ... it’s something some people can do. We don’t know how, exactly, but Jeremiah and Angela can break through to our chambers.” She shivered. Athalia, afraid, was a strange image. It was hard to think of her as anything other than the legless, winged reaper entity.

Heh, she’d fit in nicely in Antoinette’s collection of Temperman art.

“I could tell Jeremiah and Angela weren’t entirely normal,” Jack said. It was enough to pull Athalia’s gaze over her shoulder, catch his, and squint at him with her steel eyes before looking back to the tracks they walked.

“Elaborate.”

“Um, well, I couldn’t get through to their minds. It was almost like a wall was there, blocking me. The others were easy, but those two? Felt like trying to climb Everest.”

“ ... yes, that does make sense. You are the only vampire I know who’s attempted such a feat, and lived to speak about it at least.” Nodding, sighing, she slowed down a little, enough for the two Kindred to walk beside her. Good, progress. “I’m surprised you’re talking to me at all, honestly.”

“Because of Angela?”

“Yes. I’m sure your superiors told you to kill her, and now you all know she’s my daughter. And ... you know I do not want her death.”

Jack looked to Damien, but the man said nothing. He was good at knowing when to sit and listen, or walk and listen in this case. Another voice would have damaged the tenuous, fragile bridge Athalia was offering Jack, one of communication. It was times like this he was glad Jessie wasn’t with them all the time.

“Well, if detaining her is possible, then we’ll do that,” he said. Lied. Sort of. Julias and the council wanted him to kill Angela, but surely if he could capture her, they’d prefer that? It was his job to keep everyone getting along, and killing Athalia’s daughter was not a step in that direction.

And he was going to ignore the pulse in his brain that started to pump agony and fire the moment he thought of Angela’s face.

Athalia laughed, shrugged, and put a hand out to offer him a small pat on the shoulder. Her expression was both sad and humored, his words no doubt having dug up a mix of memories for her.

“You can try, boy, you can try. But she’ll kill you. She’ll kill all of you, and she’ll smile doing it. I know your bosses would prefer she was dead, and I don’t blame them.”

The Mekhet stepped in, small frown to go with. “Then you are putting us in a strange situation, Athalia. You won’t help us, but will you stop us?”

“I ... don’t know.” She might have been offering Jack some compassion, but steel would have been envious over the look she gave Damien. “Consider the circumstance I find myself in, blood leech. She’s my daughter. Do you have any children?”

“ ... no.”

“Any childes?”

“No.”

“Neither of you have the faintest idea what it’s like to be a parent, and being a sire doesn’t even come close. But I don’t need to waste my breath. Go read a book about it, there’s only been ... what, a hundred thousand books about the overwhelming power of parenthood written in human kind’s short existence?” Scoffing like she was talking to things less than insects, she looked back to the tracks ahead of them, and took them toward Azamel’s home. “So I’m struggling with the circumstance.”

“I—”

Damien flicked his wrist toward Jack, shutting him up. “I don’t deny the circumstance you find yourself in is a horrible one. But that’s ultimately irrelevant, and you know it.” Didn’t expect that from Damien, not at all.

“ ... that I do.”

Jack didn’t expect hard words to mean much to Athalia, but the topic was a strange one, and Damien’s cruel approach seemed to reach the monster woman between them. But with a few more seconds, she shrugged it off, steeling her gaze once again, as they followed the turns down deeper into the depths of the Earth.

“How’s Fiona handling this?” Jack said. “I mean, with people actively hunting your kind, it must be a pretty huge change for her.”

“Fiona is an interesting girl. Her horror is unique, in a way, with its own identity and memory to draw upon.”

“Vrallar’trakla, of the Eight Blade Arach,” Damien said, chin in his fingers, eyes down on the tracks.

“Yes. She has a reservoir of experience to draw on, but at the same time, is just a young girl.” Shrugging again, Athalia took them into the final tunnel to Azamel’s abode.

But the old woman wasn’t there. Fiona was there, and the Begotten Jack had to assume was Mark. They both sat on the stage, doing their own thing, Mark reading a book and Fiona watching something on her laptop. There wasn’t any internet down here, no WiFi or anything, so the only way she was getting things onto her laptop was trips topside.

“Damien! Jack!” The redhead hopped off the stage of concrete, and ran up to them. She hugged him, then Damien, full on tight hugs, with a little extra time for Damien too. Girl probably delighted in making the man squirm, as having a feisty, curvy redhead full-on bear hugging him had him squirming like a trapped pet, looking over the girl’s short height at Jack.

Jack shrugged back at him, smiling. “Hey Fiona.”

“Jack. How are ye? I’ve been meaning to talk to ye since the whole ... since that whole horrible incident. It sounds terrible!” She guided them over to join her on the stage, where she re-sat in Azamel’s chair. Why she was sitting on the old monster’s chair, Jack had no idea, and seeing her get comfy in the worn material was strange to the utmost degree. He expected Azamel to incinerate anyone who dared touch her cigarette-ash covered throne, but Fiona looked calm and comfortable. Athalia and Mark didn’t seem to care either.

“I’m fine now. It was pretty horrible, but smooth sailing since.”

“I hear ye were promoted too. Pretty young vampire to gie promoted!” She put her laptop aside, and rocked back and forth in the chair. There was nowhere else to sit, so the two vampires stood. There was something comfy and fun about the girl’s obliviousness to the fact the two guys were forced to stand while she sat. With Kindred, especially older ones, he'd have to do a song and dance about making sure they had a place to sit, or he'd stand and let them sit instead.

“Yeah, promoted, and now I have a host of new shit to worry about.” He shrugged it off. Half joke, half serious, a lovely balance of sarcasm and witlessness. “It’s good, and bad. Things I’d normally pass up the chain, I’m now tasked with trying to figure out myself. That’s half the reason I’m here, really, to see what the Begotten are up to.”

“N’ I hear ye have a buddy system.” She gestured to Damien, smile growing when she did. “Protecting each other?”

The Mekhet nodded, but said nothing. When the redhead caught his gaze, Damien didn’t hold it for long, looking away and putting his hands back into his overcoat pockets. Uncomfortable, but at least his expression didn’t sour. It made Jack tempted to bring up Eric, and see what was going on there, see if Fiona was still interested in Damien. But he didn’t have the social maneuvering skills to do that without making shit awkward. Julias could do it, but he couldn’t.

“Damien’s protecting me more than I him.”

“True.” The Mekhet nodded, matter-of-fact. Heh, jackass.

“Did ye come aw the way down here to talk to us, ‘n’ me?” Giggling, Fiona started rocking the chair, but with her feet up on it, folded under her knees. “I was going to visit ye lads soon. But until we have a better feel for what’s going on, where th’ hunters might be hiding, we’re hiding.”

“I’d have greatly appreciated that, thanks,” Jack said. “Cause, information is at an all-time low right now, or rather, the need is at an all-time high. Shit just hit the fan and I’m scared shitless.”

“Wha? What happened?”

To share the info or to not share the info. Daniel and Tash would keep the scene locked down, prevent any kind of interference, and when the Invictus arrived, they'd do a proper clean up and cataloging of any evidence the sheriff let them keep. Ultimately, the sheriff dictated policy in such matters. But in the whole of that circumstance, at no point was telling the Begotten about the ritual, the skeleton, or the portrait, a needed step.

And yet, they might be just what he needed. The hunters were here for them, and Kindred — him specifically — were getting caught in the middle. They wanted to help, and considering it was probably the hunters that performed the ritual, the hunters hunting these Begotten, they might be able to help. Julius wouldn't like him sharing the info, but Jack was allowed to exercise his right as right hand of the Invictus, and make decisions, even bad ones.

“Have you guys,” he said, “ever heard of a ritual, involving a room filled with ... basically every occult symbol from the big book of occult symbols? Big ritual circle on the floor, pentagram in the center? Most done in blood, some carved with a knife, far as I can tell. And, uh, a skeleton nailed and tied to the ceiling?”

Damien poked him with an elbow, and Jack offered him the biggest ‘I have no idea what I'm doing’ shrug he could manage. The three monsters all looked at him like he'd lost his head, too.

“I have.”

The five of them looked down to the tunnel at the other end of the large room, and the two vampires tilted their heads to the side, as an old woman came around the corner. Mark, who'd otherwise been sitting around on the stage in jeans and a hoodie, doing absolutely nothing, hopped off the stage of concrete and went to the old woman's side.

Jack hopped off the stage as well. “Um, hi, Azamel. I was hoping to speak with you.” He glanced over to Fiona, but the girl continued to sit in the old monster’s chair, rocking back and forth, as if she wasn’t risking her life by pissing her off. Maybe Azamel wasn’t so harsh with fellow Begotten. Mark seemed more than invested in helping her, as he slipped his arm under hers, while she waddled toward the stage, leaning on a cane.

“About the sacrifice?” she said, offering him something between a smirk and snarl, before finally reaching the raised concrete of her weird home.

“No, actually. We came to ask about your scarcity as of late. We thought maybe the hunters got you, or that you were in hiding from them.”

“Hiding is a strong word.” With Mark’s help, she got back up onto the stage, and with a few thumb gestures, sent Fiona packing. The girl jumped down with the two vampires, while Azamel got comfortable in her chair, slowly, body creaking with the motion. “That bastard Jeremiah can break into our home, our true home, and I must be vigilant.”

Damien didn’t know what Azamel looked like in the nightmare world, now that Jack thought about it. Jack had described her to him, and he hoped a description is all he’d ever get.

“I see,” Jack said. “And, uh, you said—”

“I’d ask to see a picture of the ritual aftermath, but, I already know what happened.”

Oh thank god. “Please, by all means, fill me in.”

The old woman eyed him up and down, squinting. Probably wondering if the information was worth trading over, if giving it to him straight wasn't as good as getting something out of him in return.

“ ... the picture was of you, boy, wasn't it?”

He winced, and nodded, head sinking between his shoulders. “Yeah, it was.”

“Then, it sounds like Jeremiah had his eyes on you, in more ways than one.” Azamel pulled out a pack of cigarettes, and got to lighting it. Or, trying, but it was easy to see her old, bony, veiny fingers couldn't go through the motions, not without causing the old lady to wince in much the same way as him. Mark came up beside her, and after a few moments of more failed attempts, the old woman grumbled, and put the cigarette pack and a lighter in the man's hands.

“More ways than one?” God, finally, some good news. Azamel knew what the fuck was going on. And of course lots of bad news to accompany it, but that was expected.

“I don't know how Jeremiah does it, but it's a ritual he's done before. He's got eyes on you now, and he'll find you, learn things about you.” The old woman laughed, took a puff, and broke into coughs. Deep, lung-destroying coughs. “Well, you know that now, since he kidnapped you.”

“ ... yeah.” He shivered, rubbed his arms, and looked to the rest of the group. The girls were looking at him, Athalia with something between pity and disdain, Fiona with straight up concern. It was sweet, and he gave her a half smile, half shrug. Yeap, this was just his everyday life these days. “Do you know about the person that had to die for the sacrifice?”

A puff of smoke later, she tapped the cigarette ashes into the ashtray, and sighed as she looked up, leaning back in the chair. “I'm sure Jeremiah picked some nameless fool off the street.”

“Wait,” Damien said. “These are hunters, convinced that, to protect their fellow human, they need to kill us. Why would—”

Azamel blew her next puff of smoke at the man. And considering she was up on the stage, Damien back on the ground, the fact the smoke reached him was impressive.

“You mistake Jeremiah for a hunter. The hunters, these cliché humans, bundles of hypocrisy, self loathing, and traumatized pasts, are his tools. He is not them. His purpose is grander.”

“Grander than lives?” Jack started to pace, rubbing his head as his eyes fell from the old woman, to the concrete beneath him. “... he killed an innocent person, to gain a tactical advantage on his hunt for you?”

The old monster shrugged, took another smoke, and looked to the side. Digging through memories. “I doubt Jeremiah would break into a person’s home and kidnap a loving parent, for this sacrifice. I am sure he took someone he thought the world wouldn’t miss, a thug or thief or some other ludicrous stereotype, drugged them to keep them under, and sacrificed them to the madwoman witch.”

“... I’m sorry, what? Madwoman witch?” He stopped pacing, and blinked. A lot.

But while he sounded confused as all hell, and was, Azamel shrugged again, casual, and blew some smoke at him.

“There’s an old woman, almost as old as I, that serves Jeremiah quite faithfully. Every so often, I can see her fingerprints on acts, such as the divining she used to learn about you.” A hand gesture to him, before she tapped the cigarette on the ashtray again.

Damien sneered. A hard expression and far more disgruntled noise than Jack had heard from the man for a long time. “And you didn’t think this important enough to mention earlier?”

Again Azamel shrugged. “Often, there are years between her acts, and it has been years since his companion has performed any of her rituals, to my knowledge. I thought she might have been dead.”

This bitch. Both Fiona and Athalia looked uncomfortable, wincing as Jack and Damien looked to each of them for a little support. But both seemed loyal to Azamel; hell, it seemed like they liked her. And for Azamel to not bring up information like this, was a power play, her indirectly reminding the Kindred that she knew more than them, and that they needed her. It was also her being a colossal jackass.

Mark didn’t seem to care either way, standing by the chair, hands in his pockets, with his bored expression on the vampires.

Her warning about mysterious forces, whatever the fuck that meant, was genuine, he had no choice but to believe that. Daniel was looking into something, and it was probably related. Anything to do with this witch Azamel was bring up now? No, it couldn’t have, Azamel acted like this woman was nothing more than another tool for the pest Jeremiah. Her warning had been far more heavy, and filled with concern.

“Is there anything we can do?” Jack said. “I’d prefer to stop this ritual from happening again. Innocents getting killed should be avoided, and prevented.” The only people who seemed to give a shit about the humans getting caught in this horribleness, were the vampires and the werewolves. How fucked was that?

Athalia hopped up onto the stage, and pulled out a wooden stool from around a changing wall to sit on. “You really care?”

“Of course I care. Kindred don’t kill kine when we can help it.”

“Here,” she said. “Kindred don’t kill kine when they can help it, here. I’ve been to other cities, and the Kindred there are far less worried for the lives of their meals.”

This again, ugh, retreading the same ground. He sighed, forced his body to relax, and walked up to the stage to look up at Athalia and Azamel.

“Yes, here. You guys know it’s not like that here in Dolareido. By far and large, we want to keep people alive. And not just for ‘waste not, want not’ reasons. So, yeah, we have a little more compassion than your typical vampire, and that extends to stopping a psychopath from murdering innocent people.

“And before you interject, yes, that also extends to stopping said psychopath from being a major tactical advantage for the enemy, against both Kindred and Begotten.” He squinted at Athalia, catching her retort before she managed to speak it, before he looked back to the old monster rocking in her old chair. “I stuck my neck out, giving you this info about this discovery. I’m hoping you can throw me a bone here.”

Mark snorted. Athalia snorted, quieter, but still a snort. Fiona nodded several times, eager but bound by Azamel’s ruling.

“Jeremiah’s witch is an old woman, very, and human. I have never seen her myself, but I imagine she is on death’s door,” Azamel said. “She will likely be in a wheel chair, and with several humans to take care of her. Fragile.”

“Thank you.” That was something he could work with. There were a decent amount of old women in wheelchairs in Dolareido, but it was a much smaller number than millions.

“And I suppose you want to know if I have made any progress in dealing with this menace.” Another puff of smoke, and a sneer to go with it. “That is why you’re here, yes? Not simply to check if I am still alive.”

“ ... a little, yes. I wanted to see if you guys were still alive, but I suppose you won’t believe me on that.”

“I believe you!” Fiona said, sitting down on the stage edge and kicking both her feet out.

Athalia snorted and shook her head.

“I believe you,” Azamel said. That got some raised brows from everyone. “You are young, naive, and foolish, Jack Terry. That’s a large part of why I trust you.”

“Thanks?” I guess? “I know Jeremiah managed to get into your nightmare world without being let in. And, considering how paranoid Kindred are of the idea of someone catching them sleeping, I can only imagine what that’s like.”

“There ... is a striking similarity to be had there.” Another puff of smoke later, she put the butt down, and fetched another cigarette. Good god, how was she not dead yet. “Your superiors and Prince may not be welcome, but a silly fool like yourself is a welcome sight, Jack Terry. And, if you need a place to escape to, come here and we will know. Someone will be along to take you into our home.”

“Wow, thank you.” Their home, right. Walls covered in bleeding faces. A bloody version of Dolareido. A malaria-filled jungle, supposedly. He shivered at the thought, and all four Begotten chuckled, each in their own unique way. Yeah, make fun of the vampire for being a little afraid of nightmares, jackasses.

“If something happens, I’ll find ye and gie ye somewhere safe.” Fiona hopped down to join him, hooked his arm, and Damien’s arm too, and started walking them back the way they came. “If I had known ye were worried about me, I would have visited sooner.”

Jack looked back over his shoulder, at the three monsters watching him leave. It was his job to meet with the monsters, be their friend — or intermediary at least — and see how things were going. If it was as simple as a casual visit to the tunnels, maybe he should be doing it more often? Probably not, with hunters around making every journey outside a dangerous circumstance. Better they visit him.

“I’d come around more, but it’s dangerous these days,” he said. Damien’s cloak of night, or Jessy’s brute strength, were all well and good, but these hunters had too many tricks up their sleeves.

“Then I’ll come to ye! Me or Athalia or Mark. We can gie around a wee bit better. In fact, I’ll show ye.” Like a soldier, she turned around, pointed to the other tunnel, and marched. Damien and Jack managed some glances toward the three monsters on the stage watching, but they didn’t look interested in the silliness. In fact, it almost looked as if their minds were elsewhere. And for three monsters to be sitting and standing around, with half-glazed looks, minds elsewhere, was strange.

The other tunnel was dark, and it was where Jack had found the strange hole and stairway that led into a Hellraiser landscape. No hole this time, but the darkness was still there, more darkness than there should have been, considering Azamel’s room was lit, and they’d only just made the corner.

And as the darkness enveloped them, humidity took them as well. Oh shit.

The girl between the two Kindred started to change. It was all lost to the darkness, absolute, total darkness, but both Kindred had no trouble noticing that little Fiona was getting taller, considering she was holding their arms. Taller, and taller, and eventually, hovering, the natural impact and sway of walking gone. Rustling, branches and leaves, catching the impact of delicate, long limbs. All lost in the oppressive obsidian of their new surroundings.

Until his boots started to meet mud. Yeap, this was the jungle, the place Damien had told him about. Jack coughed, then gagged as the heat, humidity, and smell smashed into his nostrils. Dirt, rot, fruit and fungus and insects and life and death in its most compact form.

Another step almost had him tripping, but Fiona's hand found him, and caught his wrist.

And then pulled him up by the wrist, up and up and up. He gasped, and stared at the approaching leaves, the passing branches and vines, as the moon came into existence. Moons. More gasps as they went higher, and higher, passed what he was sure was monkeys howling in trees, and snakes waiting for prey to stumble into their thermal strike zone. Damien was beside him, but it was hard to see much with any clarity, not with how fast Fiona was lifting them.

Soon, they were high in the trees, high enough that falling would have meant death for a human. The canopy gave way, and the open sky was above them, the stars and moons shining with such brilliance, Jack had to gasp yet again. Gasp and slip, cause the branch Fiona set him on was slippery as fuck. She caught him though, one of those massive spider legs reaching across his chest, like a parent stopping their child with their arm during harsh stop in the car.

Damien was on a different branch, another tree, a sister tree Jack supposed, with how the branches were almost touching.

“Um ... why are we up here?” Jack said.

“I wanted to talk to you where it's a little harder for people to eavesdrop.” Scottish accent gone, this new, eyeless creature of curves, a silk dress, and blades, continued to hover, a single inch above the branch. “Have you talked with Damien about Azamel's warning?”

“... no, I haven't.” Ugh, Fiona didn't understand the dance, or Danse, didn't get how to word things in just the right way to avoid implying things, not commenting directly on things, and protecting information. Reminded him of himself, when he was younger.

“Oops.” She brought her claw fingers to her lips. If she was trying to look sheepish, she couldn’t pull it off without eyes. “Sorry.”

Damien, standing far more comfortably than Jack was, tilted his head to the side. “Something I should know? Or, shouldn’t know?”

Maybe he should tell Damien? Man was becoming one of the few Kindred Jack trusted. Or, he was the source of the problem Azamel warned him of ... nah. He was already trusting his partner with a lot of things, might as well go the whole way on the big stuff. It’d be nice to have someone to consolidate knowledge on.

“Azamel’s warned me that someone out there is up to nasty shit,” he said.

“ ... nasty shit?”

“Yeah, exactly, I don’t know what it entails either. But someone out there is preparing something, I guess, something dangerous that will probably get a lot of people killed.”

Damien sighed, and grabbed a nearby branch with his gloved hand. At least he was a little more familiar with the insanity of randomly being in a jungle than Jack was. “Any more to go on?”

“Nothing, except that it’s some magical shit. Spirits, monsters, dimensional stuff, the sort of shit that would have a creature like Azamel scared.”

“ ... Cthulhu?” he said.

God damn it. Jack laughed, and shook his head. He didn’t give Damien enough credit; the man could be funny when he wanted to be.

“We do not know,” Fiona said. Or, Vrall said, or something. “But, we Begotten are tuned in to far more of the hidden worlds. We can ... smell, that something is changing, and we can see the scars this thing's travels are leaving on the pathways." The eyeless monster sighed, enormous horns flowing from where her eyes would be if she had any, curling back into the grand crown of black horns. "And now that we know Jeremiah's witch friend has set her eyes upon Jack, I fear you will be targeted again."

The Mekhet sighed as well, and looked up at the moon. For a moment, Jack thought he might have been doing that ironically. But, no, he was doing it un-ironically, like Daniel would.

"I kind of wished you hadn't told me."

Jack laughed, shrugged, and gestured to Fiona. "Blame her."

"I do." He looked back to them, but there was a grin there, enough to pull a chuckle from the spider woman. "You said scars, Fiona?"

"Mhmm. Someone is breaking through to other worlds, and not gently. There are scars where they tunnel through to other realms."

"Other realms? Like, the spirit world?" Jack said. "Like, where the Uratha more or less tell us to fuck off and not touch?"

"... yes, that is one of the realms."

Yeap, this was one of those precipices Jack knew he should back away from, but was going to throw himself off of anyway.

"Show me."

Chapter 60

~~Beatrice~

Part of her wanted to sneak up on Julias, try and catch him by surprise, see if her scant twenty years could get past the man's eyes. Have fun! Play with him, like old times. But, these weren't old times, and her sneaking into his mansion, or trying to at least, was a bad idea. He probably had lookouts about, snipers, and they'd shoot first if they saw suspicious rustling in bushes.

So the front door it was. Knock knock.

"Good evening Miss Damor, Miss Denver," the doorman said. "Please, do come in. The master is in his study."

"Study, eh?" She looked over her shoulder back at Jen. "Cool with just sitting around while Julias and I talk? Join in too, if you want."

Jen nodded and smiled. It was easy to see the girl wasn't following Triss in hopes for sex, but rather, because she didn't want to be alone. Learning the ritual, and testing the ritual, must have been horrible to watch. Going through the process was hell on Earth, but still, she didn't envy Jen having to see it all. Stuck on the sidelines while being forced to watch torture was a horrible way to get introduced to this stuff.

The Nosferatu touched her new necklace, a simple black string with a tiny, white crow skull on it, and followed after the servant.

The study was exactly what you'd expect in a building as old and as grandiose as Viktor's mansion. A tall room lined with bookshelves filled to the rim with books. Fancy, thick carpet the color of blood, against the gold trimmings of walls and columns that held the wood bookshelves in place. In the center of the large room was a beautiful table, thin wood, almost as red as the carpet, and Julias sat before it.

There were a couple books on table, on Hinduism. Another on the history of monsters, vague as that was. Another she didn't recognize; something about artifacts. So, he knew that Azamel was some sort of twisted nightmare version of Ganesha. The book on history of monsters was self-explanatory, but the one about artifacts was odd. Maybe the man was looking into more of the stranger artifacts, things considered magical. Might find something about those handcuffs Jack mentioned.

“Light reading?” she said, coming over to sit at the fancy table across from him. Jen offered the servant a nod, and he returned it before closing the door behind him.

“You could say that.” He wasn't reading the books though. Smart phone in hand, he probably had other books opened on that, showing on the phone's screen. Such was the way of the digital age, sitting around surrounded by books and not using them, because ultimately, you had literally 100,000 fold the information available on your phone. Sad, but true.

Once she was comfortable, Julias put the phone down, and smiled at her. Hell, he got up out of his chair, gave her a kiss, a proper one, before sitting back down. Fucker knew how to sprinkle bits of love in just the right way. To inconvenience himself like that, to stop researching, and get up out of his chair just for a kiss? He was too damn good at being romantic.

Which Jen caught onto immediately, and swooned, before she started wandering around the library. Not library, study room. Much as the walls were covered in books, there weren't any rows of the bookshelves.

“How you been?” he said. “Haven't seen you for a few nights.”

Triss nodded, shrugging. “Been ... getting in deep with Jacob, honestly.”

Jen threw a glance her way. Probably didn’t expect her to be so forward with Julias about what she was doing.

“Sounds painful,” her love said.

That got a laugh out of her, and an eyebrow raise from him.

“I’ll tell you about it sometime.”

“By all means.” He put the phone down, and got in closer to the table, elbows down and eyes on her. “Did you see Jack leaving?”

“No. Was he here?”

“Yeah, got into a little argument.”

Ooh, argument between childe and sire. Something she’d never get to experience. Time to pry and learn.

“About what?”

Julias stopped for a moment. Might have been too sensitive to talk about, and if that were the case, he wouldn’t tell her. But he was contemplating, which meant he was evaluating; maybe it was Jen’s presence’s slowing down the evaluation.

“Kid’s trying to play nice with everyone. I appreciate that he’s taking his role as intermediary with the other paranormals seriously, but he fails to recognize how that niceness can backfire. The specific hangup was Azamel and Athalia.”

She winced, and nodded as she leaned in as well, mirroring his position, elbows on the table. “He probably wants to keep Athalia happy, doesn’t he? Not kill her daughter.”

“He’s going to do something stupid, maybe spare the girl’s life when an opportunity arrives to do otherwise.”

“Hard to imagine.” She remembered what the kid looked like when she found him, and how terrifying the imagery was, of Angela sitting on him and ready to cut him into bits. “And of course, she could still be dead. No one’s seen her since the accident.” Accident was a funny word to pick for actively running someone over, and she smirked.

“If only we were that lucky,” Jen said, sighing as she sat on a nearby couch, pulled out her phone, and ... probably checked her Twitter feed. Ugh.

“New necklace?” Julias said, hand gesture included.

She smiled. Just like Julias to notice; she loved that. It wasn’t like she hadn’t worn similar, things that matched her tattoos and piercings, and yet the man noticed anyway. Always the little things that made her smile grow.

“Mmhmm. Jacob’s been putting me through hell, and this is a first step to becoming ... his apprentice, I guess.” She flicked a fingernail against the skull, and cradled it between two claws. “I’ll show you later how it works.”

“You should have seen her, Julias,” Jen said. “It was ... disgusting, and brutal, and I know few Kindred who could stomach what she went through.”

Triss threw a grin her way. Yeah, it was disgusting and brutal. And it was so god damn empowering. The blur, the haze of her memory, she could still feel it, smell the scent of the beast and the touch it left upon her. It was exciting, thrilling, and it got her undead blood surging through her with a desire to taste more.

She really was a twisted fuck. Probably what led to Jacob being interested in her in the first place.

“Is that why you have a new necklace?” he said.

Triss nodded. “Yeah, but, it’s a secret what it’s specifically for, sorry.” Much as she loved her man, Circle secrets were Circle secrets. He’d understand of course; not like he dumped Invictus secrets on her.

“And Jen was with you during all this?”

“I was.” The other Ventrue got up and joined them, sitting beside Triss. She was in her usual suit, but the shirt was done up this time. The torture session put a bit of chill into her, Triss could see, and the woman had become a little less open to having her breasts hanging out, considering how gory and scream-filled the past couple nights had become. That’d probably change, now that Jacob had taught her the first ritual, and it’d be a little while before he’d teach her another. And of course, because Julias was here, and Jen did love to throw herself at him, she’d probably get the tits out sooner or later.

Except, she didn’t seem to want to right now. The woman was looking at Triss, her necklace, and then back to Julias, and just watching, thinking thoughts Triss couldn’t guess. Seeing the Nos get cut up, stabbed, bled, and screaming her head off, put a fear into Jen. It’d really suck if it damaged the relationship. Jen was her friend, but also a fuck buddy, and that fuck buddy dynamic was working out unusually well. It wouldn’t continue like that if Jen could only picture screaming, blood-drenched Triss in a giant, dirty metal bowl, with kine body parts sitting around in the metal basin with her.

“You look spooked,” Julias said.

“It was ... hard to watch.” Jen shivered, but slid in closer so her chair was almost touching hers. “Beatrice is a lot tougher than I expected. I used to think I was tough, but it’s a different story, when Jacob’s ... yeah.” They couldn’t share the details of the ritual, but no reason to tiptoe around how brutal it’d been.

“I know the Circle, and Jacob, can get into some horrific stuff,” he said, “but you girls are always welcome to visit me and wash away some of that horribleness. I get the impression blankets and pillows aren’t a luxury you get to have in your dark caves.”

“Ha.” Triss shook her head and leaned back in her chair. “We got it pretty cozy, actually. Not as cozy as here though.”

“No sign of the hunters?”

Jen shook her head. “No. And we have been looking. Aaron and Othello have been looking more than us, but they’ve reported nothing.”

Superman nodded, and pulled out a deck of cards from within his suit jacket. “We’ve been looking too, of course, and we have a lot more eyes than the Circle does. But still, these damn hunters evade us. It’s really starting to get under my skin, that they can hide so well.”

Both girls watched the man’s hands. Was he trying to be sexy? Hard to tell. He liked shuffling the deck, one-handed at that, showing off his skill like a god damn peacock showing off its feathers. And it was sexy, whether he meant it to be or not.

Her mind turned to sex the moment Julias was in the same room as her, and Jen was only making it harder to stop. And lately, with all the dark, witch stuff she was doing, she felt ... empowered. She wasn’t the little Nos girl watching insanity from the sidelines anymore. She was learning. She was becoming one of those creatures of fiction, the sort you read about, practicing dark arts, exploring the boundaries of only god knew what. A witch. And that filled her with a tingling thrill.

She wondered how that made Jack feel, considering all the buzz he was getting. Did he get inta-horny when he was around Antoinette, ego as swollen as his dick? Heh, probably.

“Hey Julias,” Jen said, grinning at him, and the cards in his hand. “Looking to play?”

---

The poker room. Triss was sure that’s what it was for, cause even though Julias had only moved in a nice, legit poker table recently, the room reeked of high-stakes gambling. Not a small room, not a large one either, with armless chairs with nice, red cushions. A fancy chandelier, a small one, hung from the center of the ceiling, and it cast a gentle light over the table, the sort of dim you wanted when eying other players to read their tells.

“How come we haven’t played in this room yet?” she said, pulling out a chair. “We’ve played in others, but not, what is apparently, a room designed for this?”

Julias shrugged, pulled out another chair, and sat down. “This room is meant for serious poker. Back in the day, I’m pretty sure Viktor did negotiations in here, while playing poker.”

“Well, deal ‘em up.” Jen rotated her right arm, then left, like she was prepping for a fight or a workout, before she sat down as well. Jen was likely to immediately establish the rules for the game, with sex as the intended outcome. Strip poker, or something like that. “How about a game of ... history?” Or not.

“History you say?” Julias smirked, for a moment. That look in his eye, of confidence and determination, faded. He wasn’t sure of himself, maybe, feeling a bit exposed. Not a look Triss was used to seeing on him. “Elaborate.”

“We play, and cash in chips to learn about one piece of history from everyone else at the table.” Jen gestured to the chips already on the table. It was normal for them to use chips when they played, and cash in your chips to earn something. It made strip poker take a while, but far more interesting than just comparing hands. These Ventrue loved to bluff.

“ ... personal history?” Julias said.

His nemesis nodded. “Personal history. I want to learn more about you, Julias Mire, and maybe a little bit about Triss here too.” The evil woman got comfortable, and waited for Julias to deal. He always dealt first, his house after all.

“I ... I’m not sure,” the man said.

Triss blinked, and so did Jen, both women looking the man up and down. Always so confident, and his suit betrayed no weakness. But his eyes betrayed plenty. They fell to the table, to the cards he was shuffling, and he winced every so often.

Triss didn’t go digging through the man’s past willy-nilly like this. It was enough to learn the man had once been married, before being embraced, and had to leave that life behind. Watched his wife move on without him, meet someone else, die of old age, all the classic turmoil Kindred went through, given enough years. Everyone human, everyone they let live their lives without becoming a ghoul, or a vampire, gave way to the years. Kansas had it right, people were dust in the fucking wind for someone like Julias. So Triss let the topic be.

Jen had no such compunctions. “Of course, if you do well, you won’t have to share anything.” Her slender fingers took a stack of chips, and lifted them, only to let them fall back to the table in controlled fall between the fingers. Satisfying click click click sounds, masking the gravity of what she was asking. And she was a smart girl, she knew exactly what she was asking, for Julias to take a trip down memory pain lane. Strange timing.

“... deal.” He tilted his neck to the side, managed to get a small crack out of it, and started dealing the cards.

“Wait, Julias,” Triss said. “Come on, you don’t have to—”

He shook his head, a hand up, while he dealt the cards with a single hand, sliding a card off the top with his index finger. Fancy fucker. “It’s ok.”

Was it though? She eyed him closely, head drifting to the side as she tried to analyze his face. But he put on his poker face, and that meant she was fucked in that department.

She sighed, and tossed in a chip; no blinds here, just everyone putting minimum bid into the pot. She barely understood how to play poker, and shit like ‘blinds’ and ‘ante’ and fucking whatnot was hard for her to wrap her mind around. But Julias and Jen were merciless, which she both appreciated, and did not.

Texas Hold ‘Em. She knew how to play that, mostly, sort of, kind of. A little. The fact Julias and Jen liked to play with some house rule quirks made everything just a little harder to figure out, too. Julias tossed each of them a card, and then another. And she was going first, ugh.

Queen and an Ace. Good, yeah? Or not good? She frowned and made it look like she had bad cards ... which, she may have had, for all she knew. A glance at Julias and Jen was borderline pointless, their gazes showing their usual, calm, collected faces. Julias didn’t blink, or anything, as he waited for her opening bet.

“... I open one.” Woo, opening bet. God, she had no idea what she was doing.

“I’ll call,” Jen said, throwing a white chip into the pot.

“Call,” Julias said, mirroring the two women. With a devilish little smirk, Julias ‘burned’ a card, whatever the fuck the point of that was, and dealt the ‘flop’, three cards face up on the table. Queen, Seven, and a Five.

Triss felt the urge for a cheek muscle to twitch, but she didn’t have cheeks, so it caused the edge of the muscle above her crocodile teeth to shift slightly. Was that how Jen and Julias could read her? Her hair was covering her crocodile teeth though, so maybe not. How those bastards were able to figure her out, every time they played, was her new mission to find out.

But two Queens was good, so.

“I bet one,” she said.

“Raise you one.” Jen winked at her, earning a long groan from Triss, before she looked back to Julias as she tossed in two chips. “Did you play poker much, when you were alive, Julias?”

“I did, actually. But, isn’t that one of the pieces of information we’re supposed to be playing for?” He threw in two chips, and made an obvious point of showing another before tossing it in as well. Raising by one, then.

“Call.” Triss tossed in one again.

Grinning the biggest, most devilish of all devil grins, trying out out-devil Julias, Jen put her cards down, folding. All that confidence, and she wasn’t pushing forward. Did she have a bad hand, and was masking it with her control of facial expressions, or did she have a good hand, and was folding anyway, to throw people off the trail of her tells. Triss couldn’t recognize a tell to save her life, so it didn’t do much for her.

“I was hoping the secrets we’d be playing for would be of a more personal, meaningful nature,” she said.

“Trying to get your fingers into every personal aspect of my life?” Julias chuckled, and juggled some chips in his hand as he played around with his poker face. But, after a while, Superman nodded, burned another card, and tossed another onto the table. A Queen. Triss felt her finger twitch.

“I bet two,” she said.

“Fold.” Julias reached out, took back the cards, and started shuffling.

“God damn it.” She frowned down at her claws, and stabbed one against the table. Not hard enough to pierce the nice surface, but hard enough to make a click. She won, but she could have won double that or more, if she’d managed to pull Jen and Julias into the hand.

This wasn’t a game for Carthians, that was for sure.

“I am trying to get my fingers into your lives, yes. You may have noticed that I like Triss quite a bit, and I think you and I should connect as well.” Jen leaned forward over the table. With her shirt done up, it almost looked cute, how her breasts were concealed instead of being served on a silver platter.

Julias raised a brow. Not his usual ‘I’m surprised but not really’ eyebrow raise, more like his occasional ‘I’m actually surprised’ eyebrow raise. Knowing her man well enough to recognize those expressions wasn’t helping Triss with poker; if anything, he was taking advantage of it for his bluffs. But still, it wasn’t what she expected to see from him, to Jen’s statement.

“It may interest you to know the Prince keeps an eye on you,” he said as he handed Triss the cards. Her turn to deal.

Jen raised a brow, same way Julias did. “Does she?”

Two peas in a pod.

“She does. She wasn’t happy that your sire left.”

Rolling both her eyes, Triss dealt each player two cards. If the Prince was watching Jen, it was because Jen wanted people watching her, considering how she acted and the way she dressed. But then, there was that time where Triss and the Prince talked, on the balcony, and looked out over everyone, including Jen. Antoinette had taken particular notice of Jennifer, enjoyed how much the girl embraced sexuality. Her dream for Dolareido, or something like that.

Everyone threw a chip into the center of the table, before looking at their cards.

“Marcus felt ... wait, I’ll save that one, for after the game.” She winked at him, licked her lips, lifted the corner of her cards off the table to take a peek, and tossed in a couple chips. Opening two, then.

“I never spoke with Marcus myself.” Julias held a chip in his hand, and rolled it across his fingers, knuckle to knuckle. “I do remember he enjoyed wearing suits. A rarity, considering he was a Carthian.” Julias tossed in a couple chips as well.

And what did Triss have? A Two and a Five. Well, whatever. She tossed in a couple chips too, calling. Round over, Triss threw in three cards for the table. Two Sixes and a Five. Ooh la la. Feint having a bad hand, or push for a win? What to do what to do. But, not her turn yet.

Jen tossed in a chip. “Carthians sometimes wear suits. But they don’t always feel comfortable on the soul.”

“Believe in a soul?” Julias tossed in a chip as well.

Jen nodded, and nodded again in Triss’s direction. “After the things I’ve seen? I have to believe in something beyond a simple body.”

Yeah, no argument there. Triss nodded, and tossed four chips, raising by three. Jen and Julias called, so Triss dealt in another card to the table. A five. Full house! No, wait, don’t get excited, control yourself. Don’t start bouncing your knee, and don’t look to Jen in anticipation of the round starting.

“Do you not, Mister Mire?” Jen said, and tossed in a chip, betting one. It’d be nice if they could say what they were doing, to help Triss keep track. But the two Ventrue lived and breathed this atmosphere.

Superman tossed in a chip, and another. Raise by one then. “I’m not sure honestly. I consider myself a pragmatist, but I’ve seen enough in our world to believe in something beyond that.”

Triss smiled. Good, because she’d hate it if it turned out Julias didn’t believe in anything. It was rare for vampires to be atheist, considering all the shit vampires were, and could do. They were usually agnostic to some extent, believing in something beyond flesh and blood. And after the trip Jacob had sent her on, into the unknown of where-the-fuck-ever, Triss certainly believed there had to be something more than simple science. Part of the reason she was in the Circle, as was Jen. They believed the old myths, the old mythologies, in some form or another, that they were perhaps metaphors, or interpretations of grand designs.

She thought back to one of her first conversations with Jacob. ‘Do you think there is some hidden meaning to being a Kindred? Some explanation to our existence that will raise us to a new level of understanding?’ he’d said. And she’d said no, because of course she didn’t think so. A new level of understanding, like a religious person finding divine purpose for their life? Fuck that. But, as she hung out with the others in the Circle, she started to notice Jen, Jacob, Aaron and Othello, everyone seemed perfectly open to the idea of there being higher entities, like gods, or greater aspects to the individual, like a soul. And Triss found herself leaning in that direction more and more.

Heavy topics seemed to be the theme of tonight, all driven by Jen.

Triss won the hand again. She felt like a bystander in the conversation though. Julias and Jen were fencing verbally, that much she could tell, poking at each other and looking for holes in their statements. Too preoccupied with each other to care about the game, maybe.

Triss slid Jen the deck, everyone threw an ante into the pot, and she dealt the cards.

“Sometimes I wonder,” Jen said, handing everyone their cards almost as smoothly as Julias would, “if the Invictus believe in anything beyond money and power.”

“Money and power are pretty appealing, and have proven their worth time and time again in the real world. The concept of a soul, or whatnot, hasn’t so much.” In went a chip from Julias’s pile, betting one.

Triss checked her cards. Five and a Jack. She tossed in a chip as well, calling, as did Jen. Her friend dealt three cards to the table. Three, Six, and a Queen. Nothing. But, the two Ventrue weren’t glancing her way, only looking at each other. Perfect time to try bluffing.

Julias tossed in one.

“I’ll see your bet, and raise three.” In went four more chips from Triss. Ahead, but if this backfired, she’d be hurt. Why was she bluffing? No fucking idea, except that it was something people did in poker.

Jen matched Triss's bet, and raised by three as well. New raises always had to be at least as much as previous raises, according to them. "Has it not?" Jen said. "You Invictus deal in only the things you can touch. The Circle, the dragons, even the idiot priests deal with real things that exist beyond your money, or defined walls of power."

Julias threw in his chips, calling. "No one in the Invictus denies that the Circle touches on forces that defy science, and our understanding of Kindred."

Triss called, and Jen threw in another card. Queen. Still nothing for Triss then.

Julias threw in two chips. So did Triss, and another two. Jen saw it, and then raised four. Pot growing damn big.

"Sometimes the Circle gets the impression the Invictus look down on us," Jen said, playing with a few chips in her hand as she waited for Julias to make his decision. "You and Triss hooked up when she was a Carthian. She's a witch now, though, a member of the Circle. Would you have given her the same chance?"

Triss raised a brow, and almost said something. But the environment was perfect for listening, digesting, absorbing. She knew Julias didn't care she was a witch, hell if—

"If anything, Jennifer, I would have been more intrigued. I dislike the Carthians and their juvenile attachment to their illogical anarchy. But the Circle? I respect your group, quite a bit, and I respect your beliefs ... what I know of them." Julias called, throwing in enough chips to catch up.

They were playing for secrets, personal secrets. Kind of weighty, kind of a big deal. Twenty chips for a cash-in, to turn these innocent pieces of plastic into valuable information about the other players. It was a weird thing to play for, especially considering how open Triss and Julias were with each other. If Triss wanted to know about his past, she could just ask him. But, she felt it might be akin to torture for him.

“Triss hasn’t told you much, about the Circle?”

“She’s told me a little. She respects the privacy of the Circle.”

“I try,” Triss said with a grin, calling. Neither Ventrue looked at her, gazing at each other, or glaring. Almost made Triss envious, with how Julias was looking at Jen. Or maybe not, considering how much it was starting to look like a fight brewing.

Another card on the table. Better for her. Better for the others though? Their expressions were unreadable, but she was committed to the bluff. Julias threw in some more chips, so did she, and so did Jen. Only person looking at the chips was her though, the two Ventrue doing some sort of mind dance with each other. Now she was thinking about two cowboys dueling at the strike of noon, or two samurai, having a stand-off.

“I have to admit,” Julias said, “I do occasionally imagine you lovely ladies, dancing naked around a bowl of blood or something. Chanting and swaying, painting your bodies with charcoal, and praying to unseen entities.”

Triss snorted on a laugh. Half true.

“Maybe we could show you sometime?” Jen said, tossing more chips into the pile.

“I’m not sure your boss would be comfortable with that.” Chuckling, Julias threw in some chips as well.

“And if he was?” More clink clinks, Jen shifting chips around in her fingers.

“Then I would say yes, I’d be interested. To observe, of course, not to partake.”

“Does the concept of dancing naked around a sacrifice in the moonlight frighten you?” And of course, Jen had to add sacrifice to the description.

“Yes, but I also find it intriguing, and romantic in a way.”

Heh, yeah, he probably did. Considering the sort of paintings Julias liked to keep around, he had a love of macabre shit, and dancing around naked in moonlight around a sacrifice was probably a painting he had somewhere already.

The hand ended. Triss came out on top. Again. This was getting very strange, because it was the first time Triss had more chips than others, let alone what was turning into all the chips.

But the two Ventrue had enough left for some more hands. Chips were going fast, faster than usual. They could cycle them back in, but they’d put out enough chips for a total of five secrets, and considering how powerful each cash in was, getting secrets from all other players, too many chips would have been deadly.

Normally, with strip poker and the way they played it, it was each time someone lost ten chips down from their starting pool incrementally, they’d have to remove some clothing. Pair of shoes, pair of socks, pants, shirt, etc. Doing it this way, getting to cash in on secrets, everyone’s secrets, was weird. Why didn’t she notice it before? Jen proposed the rules, Julias accepted, and Triss just went along with it. It was a weird way to play.

Were they letting her win?

---

---

~~Julias~~

Well, Triss figured it out, perhaps a little. Poor girl wore every expression on her face, beautiful snake eyes dilating with every good hand, every realization.

Julias had picked up on Jen's plan the moment she'd mentioned the word secrets about their past. Talking about the Circle, souls, everything, was just pretense, poking at each other and seeing where boundaries lay. Dancing around each other in silly circles, because Ventrue never liked to lower their guard, expose their neck when engaging in contract negotiations.

Which is what they were doing, in a way. How deep were they willing to take the secrets they were willing to answer? Jen brought up souls, and he responded in kind. She invited him to see her dance naked around a sacrifice, and he found that inviting. Scary, and inviting.

This woman would be amazing at the Danse Macabre, if she engaged in it more. Jacob kept his circle out of city affairs, mostly, so Julias had little exposure to Jen when it came to dealings about territory, or dinner parties with Kindred poking holes into each other's defenses. Did so and so do so and so to so and so. Answer a question without really answering it. Ask a question without asking it. Imply a threat, suggest a course of action, without ever exposing your own motives. She'd be really good at it.

Triss wouldn't. Poor girl was perplexed, and glancing between them, trying to understand what they were up to. It was so damn cute, it made Julias want to hug and kiss her. But that would break the duel he was locked into with Jen.

Another hand, another round. Julias folded earlier this time. Another hand later, and Jen folded earlier. Throwing Triss off the trail. It didn't take long for the two Ventrue to run out of chips, and for Triss to have them all, leaving both Ventrue vulnerable.

If Triss had been with him alone, answering questions about his past would have been easy ... easier, at least. And probably likewise for Triss and Jen. But two Ventrue, in the same room, learning a bit more about each other? That'd never come easily.

"Guess I'm cashing in." Grinning a big grin, but still eying the two Ventrue with mountains of suspicion, the Nos counted her chips up. Enough for five secrets, from everyone else at the table.

"Secrets of a personal nature, correct?" Jen said.

Julias nodded, eyes falling to the deck of cards in his hand. Idle shuffling, a great way to mask fear. Few Kindred enjoyed talking about their past, and none of them enjoyed putting their neck out, over personal issues or otherwise.

"... you guys don't need to do this," Triss said. "This is starting to turn heavy. How about we all go to the master bedroom, fuck, eat, fuck some more, and sleep?"

Both Ventrue slowly shook their head. No, this was as good as it was going to get, to get both Ventrue willing to talk about shit like this.

"Marcus was a playboy, as you know," Jen said, swiping a hand across the table and snatching up a chip. "As often with sire and childe, our relationship was romantic, and sexual. But that faded quickly. The fallout of our splitting is one of the reasons I left the Carthians. And one of the reasons Marcus left Dolareido."

Now that was a secret. Julias looked at her, caught her eyes, looked into them and waited for the smirk or the grin to label it all a joke. Never came.

“... I never knew that,” Triss said. “Barely ever talked to Marcus, and you weren’t in the Carthians long enough for me to ever talk to you.”

“I noticed you though.” Chuckling, Jen mirrored Julias’s chip trick, rolling the chip between her fingers across her knuckles. “God, you were a bitch. Hated everyone, always hung out alone, listening to your metal music and hiding inside a tomb.”

“Hey! I was ... cultivating an aesthetic.”

Both Ventrue laughed, and Julias rolled a chip Triss’s way. Girl could be damn funny when she wanted to be.

“My turn I guess.” He sighed, and began cutting the deck with his one hand. Then shuffling it, with one hand. Decades with a deck in his hand, playing poker with kine in various circumstances, to sharpen his instincts and skills. It was always about the facade. “I was married when I was embraced, as you know. Viktor wanted me to stay here and help grow his arm of the Invictus.” Long sigh, for dramatic effect, and because it was sincere. “After the embrace, I visited her, and we got into a fight. I hit her.”

Both women sat up straight, looked at each other, at him, at the poker table, at him, and winced. Lot of wincing going on these days.

“Why?” Triss said.

“I was angry, at everything. My life was gone, and I had to leave her behind, and I couldn’t tell her why. We were screaming at each other, and I tried to convince her to understand, and ... and the argument grew larger, encompassing other things, earlier things.” He rubbed his temples with his free hand, trying to dig the memories out of the haze of years gone by. “It wasn’t the happiest marriage. It was a hundred years ago, and ... you know how it is, was. Not that that is an excuse, but, I don’t think she was ever truly happy, being my wife. The anger came out, from both of us, and ... I let out a swing. Not a slap, but a punch, with a bit of my new strength in it that I couldn't control.

“She lived. I damaged her jaw, but didn't break it. I took her to the hospital, and vanished that night.” He couldn't remember much, couldn't remember the details, couldn't remember what they were arguing about. But, he could remember the anger in her eyes, and then that single moment of realization, and fear, when he threw the fist. “I came back to her, a decade later, to visit, to apologize, maybe give her some of my new fortune as a member of the Invictus. But I found she was re-married, moved on, had children, and ... and she looked happy.” Another delightful memory that would last with him for hundreds of years, scarred into his mind. His wife, ten years older, gorgeous, with a smile on her face as she enjoyed an evening with her family. “I left. Didn't say anything to her, didn't let her know I was still around, or anything.”

Both women stared at him for a while, giving up pretense of avoiding the awkwardness of it all. He sighed again, and stared down at the cards in his hand as he continued to shuffle them in the one palm. Never told anyone that story, ever. Not Tash, not Jessy or Jack, and certainly not his sire.

“I ... can't imagine you hitting a girl. I mean, not in that context, not like that.” Triss squirmed, and when he looked her way, she looked down. Yeah, painful.

“Me neither.” Jen didn't lower her gaze when he caught it though. “You've changed a lot since then.”

“Have I?” If Triss had said that, that he'd changed, he could understand. He'd had the time to prove to her and himself that he wasn't that guy anymore. But Jen, she barely knew him. Or that was the problem, that he thought she barely knew him, when she did. And in there, was probably the motivation for this dangerous game.

Maybe they should have played truth or dare instead, so he could at least take dares for the remaining secrets.

“You have,” Triss said, and she slid her chair in closer so she could reach out and poke him in the leg with a claw. “I’d make a joke, maybe something like ‘if you hit me, you know I’d hit you back, and I hit harder,’ but ... doesn’t seem like the time. So, serious note, yeah, I don’t get that impression from you at all. Hundred years of being a vamp has done you good.”

“Ha.” He laughed, barely, and set the cards down so he could take Triss’s hand in both of his. And, of course, kiss her knuckles, like a princess. Which got her chuckling, and then rolling her eyes and pushing his hands away. Which made Jen swoon like a school girl.

“Kindred are often sired for reasons more than obvious.” The opposing Ventrue reached out, took the cards, and began to shuffle them, in varying ways of fancy flourish. Not like Julias could of course, considering how long he’d had to practice compared to her. But still, he watched her fingers work the cards, and both he and Triss smiled at her.

“Do tell,” Triss said. “I can do that, right? Ask for a more specific secret? I did win, after all.”

“... alright.” She palmed the deck, and began cutting it, over and over, one-handed like Julias. “As I said, we are often embraced for reasons not so obvious. It comes out of us in strange ways, small parts of us we take for granted.” With a shrug, she started dealing herself a hand. Five-card draw. Two twos, two kings, and an ace. She dropped the ace, and drew a five. Two pair, mediocre, and she sighed as she put the cards back into the deck. “Marcus was hoping to use me, to play in the Danse Macabre, high stakes.”

“How?” he said. Night was getting more and more interesting.

“He knew I had a knack for political seduction. And he wanted me to use my personality to sleep my way to the top, in a sense, ridiculous as the notion is. When I found out much of our relationship was built on that assumption, that I’d do his bidding because I was his childe, I told him to go fuck himself.”

Antoinette had it right then, about Jennifer at least. Maybe not about Marcus, if the man was willing to use his childe as a stepping stone in the Danse Macabre.

Triss laughed, leaning back in her chair. But with a few moments, her laughing faded, and her expression grew heavy. Yeah, the grossness of the situation sank in, and she scratched the back of her head as her eyes looked left and right down at the table, piecing together the images. Girl was so damn readable.

It meant Jennifer’s new life as a vampire, was founded on a lie. Marcus didn’t love her, and her new eternity of being an undead creature, forced to subsist on the blood of the living, was bullshit.

“Damn,” Triss said. “That must ... really fucking suck. You know my story, that my sire was just an obsessed stalker. At least ... at least mine has some honesty to it.”

Jen shrugged, dealt herself another hand, and came out with a full house. “Marcus always did like to think long term, a trait sadly missing in most Carthians.”

“ ... you should talk to the Prince sometime,” Julias.

His fellow Ventrue laughed. “You can’t be serious. She’s ancient, and I’m a decade embraced. Everyone at this table is older than me.”

“Yes but not everyone at this table manages to capture the eye of everyone the way you do.” Winking at her, Julias held out a hand for some cards. She tossed him five, and after a quick peek, he held up two fingers. Four jacks. He showed the hand, as if it was prophetic in some way. He smirked at the thought, but he could see the two women were a bit more moved by the lucky hand than he was. They were witches, after all.

“ ... you think I capture everyone’s eye?” Jen said.

A chip nailed the woman in the face. Incoming fire, from Triss.

“You go to a ball, basically naked, and have everyone staring at you? Not to mention I’m sure more than a few kine came their brains out because of you.” The Nos rolled her eyes, got up, and slipped behind Jen. Curious move.

Not so curious, when Triss set her hands onto Jen’s shoulders, then slid them forward to reach the woman’s neck. At the chest, she started undoing the buttons of Jen’s shirt. Jen was in a dark suit, jacket buttons undone, white shirt underneath, and a pencil skirt. Seemed Triss wanted to get her out of it, as her claws started to undo the buttons of the shirt, all the way down to the skirt. Jen never wore a bra, pointless as they were to a Kindred, and Triss set her claws along the inside of the shirt to spread it, exposing Jen’s breasts.

And Jen let her. She sat back, leaned her head into Triss’s neck, and kissed her jaw. But she kept her gaze on Julias as she did, both women did, subtle grins abound.

“I thought we were going to share more painful memories and secrets?” he said. Not that he minded, eyes drifting down the visual feast Triss was creating for him. Jennifer’s smooth skin, tinted slightly dark, and heavy breasts with red nipples, were beautiful. And Triss cupping her breasts, letting the size and weight of them conform to her fingers and claws, was an addictive sight.

That first night he’d gone on a date with Triss, helped her get a meal in the Bloodlust club, and the kine had actively sought Triss’s touch on her breasts, was a beautiful night. He’d never thought things would progress this way, that he'd be waking up each dusk with her in his arms.

And Jen being there too was an alluring, fascinating bonus. He'd slept with multiple women at the same time before, but this was a strange dynamic that deserved to be analyzed. He loved Triss, she loved him, and Jen was the friend that enjoyed tagging along for that ride, in all its aspects. It was all new to him, waking up to someone who was there for more than sex; not since the marriage had he enjoyed that. Hell, sometimes, there was no sex. Double hell, sometimes Jen was there, for the day to sleep, when there was no sex.

His romantic relationship had grown terribly strange, and wonderful. And considering the grin in their eyes, they didn't seem to mind the horribleness of his secret. Thank god. Like a soothing balm on his guilt, he watched the two women, and leaned back in his chair as well.

"I still have three secrets to share," Jen said, "and you, four." Her hand reached up, caressed along Triss's jaw and neck, before her hands fell to relax against the table completely, like his own. And through it all, Triss grinned at him while massaging the Ventrue's breasts. "But if we share more, we might spoil the night."

Once Jen began to blush life, her nipples hardening before his eyes, Triss ran one of her hands down to the woman's stomach, and under the waist of her skirt. A shiver and tremble from Jen made it obvious that Triss had begun caressing the woman's clitoris, or at least, the lips of her sex. No need to jump to such powerful stimulus so quickly.

And then his phone rang. Jack's ring.

"Um, hold on ... in fact, don't stop what you're doing. It's Jack. I'll tell him to leave me alone or something." He pulled out the phone, and brought it up to his ear as he watched Triss and Jen both continue to grin at him. Succubuses. Neither of them were Daeva, and yet, they both took a strange delight in acting like them. Hell, Triss was really getting into it, riding Jen's love of showing off, and joining her at every opportunity these days.

He loved it.

"Yeah Jack?"

"Julias, there's, um ... been a development," the kid said.

"Development?"

The girls remained silent, but didn't stop the show. Jen slid the shoulder of her jacket off so it fell back over the seat, and Triss took advantage, sliding the shirt apart further, and then undoing the zipper of the skirt. Black underwear of Jen exposed, Triss slipped a hand down underneath it again, and began to gently stroke the hidden flesh within, as the two women watched him on the phone.

"Yeah. If you give Tash a call, she can fill you in on more details. The sheriff found ... what looks to be something straight out of the Circle's ritual book, if I had to guess. We think it was done by the hunters though, but it certainly feels the same. Sacrificed kine, bloody symbols drawn on the walls, etc."

"... that ... does sound like something they might do." If Jack and the sheriff thought it was done by hunters, and looked like Circle work, that was worth looking into.

Looking into anything other than what he was looking at, was going to be difficult.

"Distracted?" the phone said.

"You could say that."

“Sorry, but this is important. It, it’s uh ... yeah, there was a picture of me, at the site. Hand drawn.”

What? Fucking shit. Julias forced his eyes away from the display, from the two beautiful women trying to seduce him, and got up to begin pacing.

“That is not good. Must have had something to do with...” He looked the women’s way. They caught on quick, Jen redressing fast as Triss let her go, and got up to walk toward him. “Hold on.” Hand over the phone, he winced the biggest wince he could, like he was a college student losing his one opportunity to get laid. “Business, ladies. Apparently, hunter business.”

Both sighed, and pat him on the shoulder as they started to walk out.

“Shame,” Triss said. “She wasn’t lying, you know, about showing you what it’s like in the Circle. Dance naked in the moonlight? Child’s play.” She winked at him, and walked out the door as Jen waved at him.

“Jack, I hope you realize I’m watching two very attractive women walk out the door because of this phone call.”

Both women laughed as they shut the door behind them.

“Sorry Julias, but, yeah, blood ritual thing, and my picture at the crime scene. Hand drawn, too. I’ll have a more detailed report tomorrow. Right now I’m going to take a visit to Azamel’s, see what’s up there. And, who knows, they might know something about this fucking insanity.”

“I’ll send over the clean up crew immediately.” He hung up the phone, looked at the table, and sighed. Time to head back to HQ.

He looked down at the cards, and smiled. One secret down, four to go, right? They were probably going to kill him.

---

---

~~Natasha~~

“I ... I’m surprised, you d-didn’t let him take the photo,” Tash said.

“The ritual must have left scars on it. The only Kindred who could learn more are the Circle, and us.” Daniel walked around the room, with more attention paid to the symbols than before. Last time, the picture of Jack, and the skeleton it was dangling from, had been the stars of the show. But there were hundreds of symbols, and they had to be inspected.

“I know, b-but ... it must be terrifying.”

“I know it is.” Daniel leaned over a table, and snapped a picture with his phone. “Everything always is. Now come on and help me look for anything I might have missed.”

“R-Right, ok. What did you get?”

“A decent scan of all primary images, but I haven’t touched anything.” The sheriff found the stack of papers, and started taking pictures of each one individually, before setting them on the table. “Each of these will need to be cataloged.”

“Right.” She’d get into detail mode then, and look for the little things. With her own phone, she started snapping pictures of each, and every tiny little symbol. So many. So very many.

“Jack’s no doubt reported this. Let’s do a sweep, and take the pictures back to the Elysium tower. We can leave the clean up to the Invictus.”

She nodded, and hmm'd her agreement as she zoomed in on some of the symbols on the ritual circle. So many symbols, and lettering of some kind. She didn't recognize it though, and that was strange. What language had letters she didn't recognize? She was sure she'd recognize nearly any language written, even if she couldn't read it. Strange that it wasn't Latin, because she expected anything like this to be using Latin.

The symbols of skulls were more easy to recognize. Bird, various hoofed animals, but no human skulls though. Suppose that was the point of the human sacrifice, to complete the arrangement of skulls. Worthy point of note then, maybe something to do with the different animals in the total?

“ ... how are things?” Daniel said.

“Um, ok? These, um, skulls are—”

“Not with this. I mean, in your personal life.”

He did say that, right? It wasn't just her imagination. Her sire was asking about her personal life?

“Um, it's ... it's uh ... good, actually. Surprisingly g-good.”

“Still seeing those two Uratha?”

“ ... I am.”

“Is it a fulfilling relationship?”

Ok, wow. This was way too weird a topic to have with her cold and dead sire. But he was asking, and that deserved reward, some effort on her part to return the effort he was putting into it.

“It is. They, um, they're smart-t-ter than I thought.”

“Oh, you thought they'd be stupid?”

“What? N-No! No, I ... I thought maybe, they’d be ... like what the stories, about Simon p-painted them as. Aggressive, and ... yeah, st-stupid, I guess.” Thinking about it in that term, maybe she owed them an apology, when she saw them again.

“Uratha are stupid.” Her sire managed the tiniest chuckle, and she followed suit. Yeah, they kind of were. Were there any academics in the Uratha business? Instead of digesting mountains of books, she imagined their smartest sat around totems, and spoke to otherworldly creatures. Not exactly book smart.

Maybe it was better to think of them in terms of wisdom. A smart person knew a tomato was a fruit, a wise man knew to use it in a vegetable salad.

“B-But they do know a lot, and they show ... p ... p-patience, in a strange way. And, they’re ... sweet.”

“ ... I appreciate that you’re in a unique relationship, Natasha. Understand that Antoinette is my friend, and has been for centuries; I am all too familiar with unique relationships.” A less-than-subtle hint about the Prince’s rather sexually diverse past. It made Tash smile.

“Th-that is true, b-but, a girl doesn’t t-t-talk to her dad, or sire, about the boys she brings home.”

“True,” he said. Tash glanced over her shoulder at him, and managed a peek at her sire’s quiet smile. Typical, that he had to be surrounded by the remains of a deadly sacrifice ritual, and investigating it, to be able to let a bit of himself out.

She was just like him. Antoinette’s guide to finding love was still on her mind, cultivating the garden of the self, letting others see it, and all the silly, romantic comparisons that came with it. Opening the gates for others was something she’d find easier doing while working, and, that's what her sire was doing. It was cute in a way, and she mirrored his tiny smile as she watched him work.

With a heavy sigh, the sheriff took another picture, and flipped the paper to the next one. "I do not understand why this artist bothered to draw scenes from this ritual. The result is Terry's face, but these other drawings seem pointless." He turned, and showed a picture of a knee being cut open. "At least, whoever this kine was, they didn't suffer."

"D-Didn't suffer?"

"Not likely. No signs of struggle, all the bones are undamaged, and these drawings are ... detailed. They show signs of dissection, of detailed inspection of tendons and muscle fiber." He showed her another picture, of the skin of a finger being peeled off. "... it's almost as if ... whoever was drawing these wanted to show someone something."

"I don't—"

"Ever read a medical textbook, perhaps on muscle tissue?"

"N-No. Glanced, once, maybe?"

"They're filled with diagrams of muscles and bones. They look similar to these, except without this rather ... macabre approach." Another picture showed skin being pilled off the shin. Another showed muscle being pulled aside, and then cut apart, to show what looked like the bones of the forearm. "Someone was doing a demonstration."

"... horrible." She shivered, and resumed looking at the symbols. At this point, she was glad she was looking at the strange occult markings, and not vivid images of a body being dissected. The sort of nefarious purpose would lead to a dissection of a sacrifice, she couldn't guess. "How m-much of this ... w-w-will we leave behind for the Invictus?"

"We'll be taking the skeleton and the images. Invictus will handle disposal of the locker's contents."

"... skeleton?" she said. Daniel nodded, and gestured to a duffel bag by the closed door. "... ugh."

"... do you trust those two boys?"

"Um, Art, and Matt?"

"Correct."

"... I ... I am starting t-to, yes. I wasn't sure at first, b-because of what I'd heard about Simon, and ... and um, how I m-met the ... boys."

Daniel nodded, eyes on the papers. Diligent, giving no pause except to examine his evidence more thoroughly.

"A painful introduction. I would tell you to be careful with them, Natasha, as they are wolves and aggressive by nature, but ... I won't tell you that, because I trust you."

She chuckled, and peeked at him again. Like a hardboiled detective, he continued his work without looking her way, but she knew he was probably smirking with his joke. At least, as much as his face was capable of smirking.

"I asked them, Art and M-Matt, to ... investigate the old p-prison with me."

"Putting your boyfriends in an awkward position. Help their girlfriend, and upset their boss. Obey their boss, and upset their girlfriend," Daniel said.

“ ... yeah, I g-guess.”

“No, you made the right call. We need information about these hunters, and if we can get the Uratha to help, then by all means.”

Heh. She took pictures of each individual letter in the circle, tilting her head around and around to see if she could figure out what they meant, or where they were from. Nothing, no memories triggered, no awareness raised. Utterly clueless. Sighing, she moved on to take detailed pictures of some of the symbols on the walls, zooming in to inspect individual ones. On close inspection, she saw a lot of the symbols were repeated, placed in varying sizes, but usually oriented upward.

“Should ... sh-should I ask them to come here?”

“ ... that may be prudent, before the Invictus arrive and contaminate the scene.”

---

“Sheriff,” the two wolves said, at the same time.

Daniel raised a brow, and looked down at Natasha beside him. Yeah, talking at the same time was something they did, a lot. She thought it was delightful, but her sire, probably not so much.

He stepped back, and gestured them into the locker room. Both boys stepped in at the same time, and each whistled as they looked the walls up and down.

“ ... I smell humans,” Art said. “A few humans were in here.”

Matt took a long sniff as he went down into a squat beside the skeleton. “Smells like this poor bastard’s blood on the walls. Couple months old? Ugh, reeks.”

Dogs had a sense of smell so much stronger than any Kindred’s, let alone kine’s. Tash did not want to be them, in a room reeking of old blood.

“Never seen symbols like these.” Art leaned over one of the tables, and ran a fingertip along the blood. And then tasted it. Ugh, ugh! Tash gagged at the sight, and the wolves chuckled. “Yeah, human.”

“I thought that was considered a ... sin, of a sort?” Daniel said, gesturing to what Art just did.

“Eat not the flesh of man.” Shrugging, Art ran a finger along one of the carved symbols, while Matt came to join him. “It’s old, rotten blood. Not exactly a problem.”

“It’s a good thing you called us, Tash.” Matt took some time beside the skeleton as well, and sniffed the air several times, loudly, drawing in each breath with slow, calculating depth. Twice now she was seeing them play detective. It was a good look, she liked it, put them in a more respectable light than just her silly boyfriends. They were professionals, and dedicated.

“Why d-d-do you say that?”

“Spirits were here. Summoned.”

Daniel stepped in, and held out a picture. “Anything to do with this?”

“Shit, Jack?” Art took the picture, and compared it against the others on the table. “ ... fuck, this is some ... horrible shit. What happened here?”

“You don’t know?” the sheriff said.

“Nope. Never seen anything like this. All I know is, someone cut a hole through the wall. It’s gone now, but someone cut a hole, a tiny sliver, and was ... probably talking, or showing...” Arturo held up the picture of Jack, and a picture of a human heart, free of its ribcage, drawn in the same style, same hand. “I assume Jack’s still alive and kicking, as much as a vampire can be alive. And being Kindred, not like you can just remove the heart and draw a picture of it. Then again, how did someone get this angle on him, on his face? Quite the mystery. And I always did love a good mystery.”

“Thought you just loved shadows, hiding like a pussy?”

Art threw Matt a punch in the arm, and Matt returned it. And then another round, punch for punch. Daniel looked at Tash, and managed a subtle eye roll. Tash did her best to keep the laughter between sealed lips, but it didn’t work too well. Leave it to these two goofballs to go from professionally analyzing a blood ritual, to making jokes, in the middle of what looked like hell.

“Wraiths?” Art said.

“Wraiths,” Matt said.

Tash glanced Daniel’s way, but the man said nothing. She expected a ‘Wraiths?’ from him, to roll with the flow of the conversation, but that was her naivete showing through. If he knew or didn’t know anything about what they were talking about, it was advantageous for him to not let the Uratha know what he knew. Like her earlier, when they mentioned wraiths at the prison. She knew, and Daniel knew, wraiths were connected to Black Blood, and, maybe Maria. But that was all, and that wasn’t enough.

Art turned to face them, wincing as he looked down at the portrait of Jack in his hands. “I’m getting some familiar scents, but nothing I can pinpoint. I can’t track it down, but ... hunters talking with wraiths gives us something to look into. We’ll get back to you, or Jack, if something comes up.”

If something comes up. That meant something. Matt made a quick peek over his shoulder, and when she caught his eye, he offered a small wink.

They were going to show her something.

---

---

~~Beatrice~~

Back in the Three Kings Cemetery, Triss looked up at the sky. Too close to South Side to see any stars.

Jacob probably hated that. A member of the Circle, long as he was, as old as he was? Man was probably born under the stars, and danced naked in the moonlight on regular occasion, back in the day before electricity, and phones, and cameras. Did he sacrifice humans callously? It wasn't hard to imagine, a Nosferatu getting hardcore about his delving into the dark arts, sinking deep into a pit of cruelty, malice, and madness to join it.

Hopefully, the mental image wasn't entirely accurate. Jacob seemed to have a soft spot, enough to at least do as Antoinette asked, and keep kills to kine who deserved it. But, she doubted the man, back in the day, realized he'd lose the stars by helping create a city. Probably didn't realize how much stuff he'd lose, going down that route.

Sympathy for the devil. And the devil, was whistling what she was sure was a Saturday morning cartoon theme from the eighties.

“Your sacrifice doing ok?” Jacob said.

“Um ... she's a sacrifice. Do we care?” Triss adjusted the body on her shoulder. Unconscious. A heavy woman, some muscle and fat to go with. Supposedly a killer, drug dealer, and a lot of things in between, according to Jacob. But considering the hellhole they picked her up from, a dark, dirty crack in the ground in Devil's Corner, she bet he was right.

The joys of cities, for Kindred at least, was that the population drifted into group categories, whether they wanted to or not. Certain categories were easier prey, easier to make vanish. Certain categories were asking for it. Certain categories bred unjust, unfair environments, that naturally lent toward self destructive behavior. Sad as that was, deadbeats wanted by the police and liable to get thrown in jail for a few lifetimes, were perfect prey for Kindred who wanted to remain on the down low. Not all Kindred were concerned with the validity of the charges though, and she had to trust Jacob put in due diligence. Not the easiest thing to trust in him for.

No chance of them being seen, in Jacob's cloak of night. She and Jen were free to walk, skip, jump, or do whatever. Jacob took full advantage, while the rest of them were a lot more comfortable feeling the vibe of the cemetery: dead. They walked slow, somber, while Jacob hopped around, climbing up some tombstones, and offering a kiss to one of the larger angels.

"We care a little," Jacob said. "Don't damage the goods."

"She's a person." Jen sighed, rubbed her arms, and looked around. Didn't take her for the type to be afraid of cemeteries, but after what happened below, maybe that had changed.

"A wanted criminal, and justly so. As far as we're concerned, she's just a sacrifice." Jacob, in his dark robes, slid down the angel's side and approached Jennifer. "You wanted to go deeper down this rabbit hole, Jen. You'll have to get used to killing kine."

"I thought we fueled the rituals with vitae?" She said, bite in her voice as she pushed past Jacob. Took guts to push around the elder, but at this point Jen was familiar enough with the man to know he enjoyed it when people got snippy with him, pushed back. More familiar than Triss really, but unlike Triss, Jen's punches were harmless.

"We do, usually. But fresh blood can be used in different rituals, in different ways. And besides, we need the body. Gonna introduce you to an old friend."

Triss jumped over to Jacob, and reached out with her free hand to pull down on his robe to get him to walk beside her, lean in to her so she could whisper as they moved.

“The fuck, you’re going to summon that thing again?”

“I am.”

“Why?”

“Because he’s my friend. He’ll want to meet Jennifer, and—”

“Black Blood? That ... that thing, that possessed the corpse first time you sent me into this mess? That thing is a god damn fucking ... thing! You seriously consider it a friend?”

“Ha! Sent you? You volunteered. And besides,” he draped his arm over her shoulder, and onto her other shoulder where the kine lay, “Black Blood’s eager to get to know you better. I trust him, he’s my friend, like I told you.”

“ ... better? It”—and it was an it, according to the sheriff—“is a fucking ... spirit. An actual, real, fucking nasty son of a bitch spirit, Jacob. The fuck sort of game are you playing at here?”

“Whatever do you mean, sweet Beatrice?” Chuckling, Jacob walked up to the mausoleum, and opened the stairway down into their lovely little slice of hell. He put a little distance between them so she had to speak up to keep the conversation going, meaning he didn’t want her to whisper anymore.

“I mean, that thing ... that thing scared the fucking shit out of me last time, Jacob. You can’t be—”

“I can be friends with whoever I want, Mom.” Bastard laughed, a little louder, as he pulled out his LED lantern, and started down the stairs.

They never talked about Black Blood. Jacob avoided the topic the few times she tried to bring it up, or kept his answers short and vague, like that time they were visiting Azamel. Figures, that Jacob wouldn't reveal more details about the alien entity that had possessed a corpse, and joined in torturing her that first night. She shivered as her mind delighted her with unfortunately vivid memories of the corpse staring down at her, laughing, as she, it, stabbed her in the stomach, and let Jacob explain the whole technique of learning a ritual. Empty the mind, let the beast through, and find your fucking zen.

They weren't doing that tonight, no plans to teach her more crucial rituals any time soon, thank god. Tonight Jacob was going to demonstrate a ritual, with Black Blood there, for whatever reason. Poor Jen, girl had no idea how deep this insanity went. Neither did Triss. And that was exciting, and terrifying.

Down into the depths and darkness. Down beneath the hundreds of dead of the cemetery. Down into the Earth where the light couldn't penetrate. Down into Jacob's home away from home. Triss adjusted the unconscious woman on her shoulder, and followed the robed man into the black, lit only by his lantern. Jen stayed close, and squinted her eyes to try and see ahead of them. Last time the sheriff had been waiting for them, and that had been scary in its own right.

"... you got another hole in the ground like this somewhere?" Triss said.

"Of course."

"Yeah, that makes sense. If Daniel knows where this place is, and I assume so does the Prince, you ... probably have some place that they don't know about." To do your more heinous, dangerous shit.

"I suggest you girls do the same. Find a place no one knows about, or make one. It might take a few decades, but with diligence and determination, you can have your very own underground hole in the wall. Collect your favorite possessions. Bring your enemies so you can torture them safely, without fear of interference. Learn to play the drums without bothering your neighbors.”

Triss could almost hear Jen roll her eyes.

Slowly, they approached the bowl. It didn't take long for the bowl to mean something new to Triss, after the few times she'd seen it. Every time, it was pain. Every time, it was screams. Even now, she ducked her head and looked around at the walls of stone, sure she could hear the sounds of people dying. Her voice was mixed in there somewhere, had to be, still echoing from those nights of torture.

She set the kine down beside the bowl, and she squatted down next to them. Here, it was plain to see the dark skeletons holding up the bowl, the great weight on their bodies, crushing them, destroying them. She almost wanted to ask if Jacob had carved them, or sculpted them or whatever. Hard to tell what the material was, old as it was. Smooth stone, or old metal. Could you make something like this out of metal, back in the old days? Was it from the old days? Lot of questions, and she wasn't sure if she'd ever ask them.

Nah, she would eventually. It'd take time though.

Jacob picked the sacrifice up, and jumped into the bowl. Up and up, he raised her until he got her hands over the hook that dangled above, and let it catch the rope holding the kine's wrists. Dangling. Meat on a hook.

“Back in the days of yore, Kindred, or everyone really, thought that without pain, a sacrifice was meaningless. Burn the witch? She had to be awake for it, otherwise what was the point? Hang the criminal. Make sure they squirmed. Wasn't until the late 1800s they came up with humane neck snapping hangings. Heh.”

“So I guess we’re civilized, because we’re doing this with drugs? Keeping them under?” Jen circled the bowl, arms folded across her chest, and a touch of a sneer on her nose and lips. She wasn’t used to killing kine, and this display was closer to hanging and gutting a deer, than any sort of way a Kindred normally killed kine.

Triss was used to it, to separating herself from the reality that she was killing something she used to be, letting out her young Nosferatu frustration and beast on humans that deserved death. She’d developed quite the reputation in her younger years, and had had Garry talk to her multiple times about her bullshit. The Masquerade was more important than her life, and if she continued to increase the body count, the sheriff would put her out for sunrise. Probably nailed to a cross too, for dramatic effect at the Prince’s request. Her siring had been done without permission, after all; each day she was alive was a gift, according to Garry.

Jen’s younger years, on the other hand, had been lacking in the violence department. Sleeping around was about the worst of it, which meant nothing to a Kindred. She did have a couple kills to her, the typical accidents a young Kindred might have. But Jen didn’t have the animal inside her that was comfortable with killing prey; yet, according to Jacob.

“Indeed we are civilized, little lady, indeed we are.” Jacob hopped off the bowl, and started toward the other side of the room, where the darkness was impenetrable. “At least, relatively. It’s all relative. Everything is.” He tossed the LED lantern over his shoulder as he walked, and Triss jumped for it. If it broke, they’d be fucked, and have to feel their way out of here. Fucking bastard.

Snarling, she followed him.

“The fuck are you keeping back here?” she said.

“You probably don’t want to see.” The old man glanced over his shoulder at her. It was getting easier to read his body language, despite the bandage over his eye sockets.

“Why would I—oh fucking god.”

The lantern reach was less, in the strange dark side of the room, like there was a fog fighting it. There was no fog though, just oppressive blackness, and Jacob’s wall of what the fuck. From this close, she could see he had chests, old fashioned wooden chests that you’d keep large blankets in, except in this case, it was bones. At least, one of the chests had bones sticking out of it, human bones. As she looked around, lantern raised, she noticed the other chests were partially open, one with handles sticking out, weapon handles. Knives, swords, similar. Another chest had limbs, rotting limbs. The smell hit her, and she gagged, causing the lantern to shake around in her hand as she struggled to remain standing. The smell was localized to this side of the room though, mostly. Maybe it had something to do with the weird blackness.

She raised the lantern, and tilted her head to the side. More symbols. So. Many. Symbols. Hundreds, thousands of them, many spattered with a language she’d never seen before, letters she didn’t recognize. Circles and triangles, in and outside each other, and various drawings of bones, of skulls. Cow skull, bird skull, others. No human skulls though, except for one, in the center of a triangle, in the center of the wall.

On the wall were chains as well, dangling, each lined with hooks, and many of the hooks held a body part of some kind. They seemed preserved somehow, as if someone had dried them, but without them shrinking. A hand. A foot. A leg. Limbs, angled and hung in a pattern, and Triss raised the lantern higher to scan the wall. The pattern was a loose circle, and a triangle of limbs within.

The wall was bleeding. Black? She stepped in closer, beside Jacob, and reached out with her free hand to touch the onyx liquid. Cold. But, as it coated her fingertip, it faded away, dripping off of her like oil, but evaporating quickly like alcohol. This is where that alien thing came out of last time, then.

She looked at Jacob, and he looked to her, big Joker smile on his face.

“It was a long, long time, figuring out this ritual,” he said. Meandering along, he ran his fingers across the stone of the wall, the chains, the body parts, and smiled as he stopped in front of one of the symbols. A painted bird skull. Probably a crow, considering Triss was wearing a crow skull around her neck.

“What’s this ritual for?” Jen’s voice. Triss looked over her shoulder to find her fellow neonate hugging herself, and looking the wall of death up and down. Her eyes lingered on one of the chests, and the body parts it was full of. Like a heavy blanket, the smell enveloped her too, and she gagged, taking a step back.

“You’re about to find out. And, do keep this a secret, would you, Jen? The Prince knows, but as you can tell, the sheriff doesn’t appreciate what I’m doing. You can only imagine the sort of dirty looks I’d get if more people knew.”

“And what is that?” Jen said, gesturing to the wall. “I ... I don’t—”

“Words can’t do it justice.” Jacob chuckled a little more, opened one of the chests, and pulled out a large knife. “Come on. We get to eat!” With a slow, wandering sway, Jacob returned to the bowl, knife hand taking practice swings at the air. Like a child testing his new toy sword. “Did you know, my ladies, that I once met a Kindred, before I came to Dolareido, that didn’t eat only blood, but also flesh?”

“Flesh?” Triss followed him, Jen a moment later, and the Nos looked up at her boss with a raised eyebrow. “Doesn’t sound like a vampire.”

“And yet they suffered all the same weaknesses. Fire, daylight. Unfortunately for them, they had an extra weakness: the need to eat fresh flesh.”

That was some classic movie monster madness, by the sounds of it. “Sounds like ... sounds like something different. And how the fuck do you remember something that long ago? Thought you elders didn’t remember shit from that far back.”

“You wound me, Beatrice! Some of us remember better than others. Some of us take the time to write down important things, and reread our journals back to ourselves, to break through the illusions torpor brings.” Shrugging, Jacob gave the body a push, so she ... it swayed back and forth over the bowl. “I helped her. For a while, I hunted with her, back in the old days when ... when we embraced our beasts with reckless abandon, in the dark corners of the world. Even took a bite of flesh, to try it. Alas, couldn’t digest it.”

Jacob kept journals? What fortune would the Prince give Triss in exchange for those. What secrets, what power. Triss smirked, and looked back up to Jacob.

“What happened to her?”

“No idea. It was hundreds of years ago.” And with all the grace of a shitty butcher chopping up meat with a cleaver, he ripped the woman’s clothes from her body, and took a swipe at the hanging, naked flesh. The belly. Jen and Triss both jumped back, gagging, Jen choking along with it, as the woman’s guts fell into the bowl. Jacob didn’t let them fall out either, but made them come out, using his free hand and yanking the globs of meat free. “She fucked like a minx, though.”

Both women stared on, eyes wide, jaws dropping, as Jacob emptied the woman of her insides. Drugged to high heaven, she wasn’t waking up, and after this, she never would.

“Jesus, Jacob.” Triss walked around, held the lantern up despite herself, and peered into the bowl. Rope and rope of intestines. Kidneys. Liver. He ripped the diaphragm open and tore out the heart and lungs. He kept yanking things out, ripping, tearing, blood gushing over his robes. He managed to avoid other juices, other things that came out of the body and its organs, but he more than embellished in getting blood on himself.

The girls said nothing. Triss couldn't say anything, and a quick peek at Jen showed the same paralysis. The fuck. The fuck fuck fuck.

Jacob, laughing, chopped off the woman's leg. A hard hack, knife carving through skin and muscle and bone with a single swipe, before it got stuck in the other leg. Jacob grabbed the removed leg before it landed, hopped down off the bowl, and smiled at the ladies as he held it over his head. He let some of the drops of blood fall onto his tongue, then held it out to them. “Quickly now, before it spoils.”

Leg. Leg. He was holding a leg. As if to show off his trophy, he rolled the leg back and forth in his palms, and held it out to them. Muscle, fat, fresh dripping blood. Down deeper, and deeper, into this private pit of hell of theirs.

Oh, what the hell. She grabbed the limb, held it up by the knee, and let the blood drip onto her tongue.

This bloody display was disgusting. It was barbaric, and horrific, and ... thrilling. So dark, so wrong, so bad, that it stroked a little part of her brain, somewhere, that liked being bad. Life in the palm of her hand, life in so callous and visceral a form, a limb from prey. Part of her wanted to make a comparison to a chicken or cow leg, but that didn't do it justice. A human life, even a scumbag life like this kine's, someone Triss would have gladly killed in her younger years, was still significant and special. To feel a kine die in her arms as she drank them to death, was a feeling she knew well enough to recall from memory. But this approach, dismembering, spilling all the blood everywhere, and tasting it from a limb? This wasn't feeding, this was a ritual. This was special too.

She held out the leg to Jen, and waited. Sure enough, after a few useless breaths, Jen took the leg, and did the same thing. A hunk of meat, of sacred meat, of something worthless and special, all wrapped in one.

Jacob nodded, smiled a quieter, more sincere smile, and tossed the leg into the bowl of death and pain. "Now, each of us will spill a drop of our blood onto the mess."

"Mess?" Jen, gagging some more as she leaned over the bowl, gestured to the entrails. "This was ... ugh."

"Kindred these days." More laughter, always with the laughter, Jacob slipped a knife out of his robe, and sliced open his palm with all the grace of a bulldozer. "You drink human beings, you drink their blood. Never forget what they are. A soul, wrapped in guts and muscle, sinew and bone, tendons, and"— he reached into the bowl, and pulled out something wet and dripping, something that fit into his palm—"organs. A divine combination of meat and something more. And, how easily, it all slips into nothing but a bowl." After tossing back in the lump of guts, the psycho reached his other hand out over the bowl, and squeezed his palm until a thick drop of Kindred blood fell into the gory mess. Without looking, he tossed the knife Triss's way.

She snatched it out of the air, and slit her palm open as well. Long passed giving a shit about being careful or gentle about knives and flesh. She stepped in toward the bowl, forced herself to look down at the abhorrent jumble of death, and dribbled a couple drops of her blood.

Jen took the knife, and cut her palm, but with a blatant wince and hiss. Not used to pain. She would be, if she continued down this road. Sighing, she dripped some blood onto the mess as well.

“Sure you don’t want to be back in the cave with your kine bedfellows, Jen?” Jacob said. “Or maybe Julias’s bed?”

The Ventrue rolled her eyes, and threw Jacob the knife. Almost threw the knife at him, too, but Jen seemed to calm down at the last moment. And once disarmed, she looked down at the cut on her palm as it healed.

“You’re just like Marcus. All you think about is sex,” Jen said.

“You’re the one sleeping with everyone in the city, not me.” The eyeless bastard shrugged.

“That’s not what I meant. You keep reducing people and their actions down to sex, and only sex. You don’t know me, Jacob.” She stomped over to him, and jammed a finger into his chest. “I like sex. That doesn’t mean it’s all I think about, or that I am defined by it.”

The old man laughed, and gave her a poke in the sternum too. “I know. Lighten up, girl. Been working for me for what, six, seven years? You need to let your tongue fly loose more, loose as your legs.” Without skipping a beat, the jackass pulled a necklace out of his robe, a string with various small animal skulls dangling from it, and started to shake them over the entrails.

Triss said nothing. Better to let these two hammer out their issues, than for her to jump in and make things worse. It was plain to see that Jacob kept the circle at arm’s length, and Triss was the first one, since his original circle, to really try and break through to the man. She was an asshole though, and could match Jacob’s asshole attitude easily. Jen was a calmer, more articulate, elegant sort, who didn’t like to get her words dirty.

She was going to have to learn. With all the blood and guts that'd be falling on them, drowning them in no time, Jacob wouldn't hesitate to get just as visceral with his language.

Jennifer snorted, and folded her arms across her chest once more. "When's the last time you gotten between anyone's legs, old man?"

Ok, maybe she could throw an insult or two.

Jacob, laughing like fucking Santa Claus, reached into his robe again, and pulled out another necklace. This one didn't have skulls, but it did have some stones, smooth black stones, wrapped and looped in the string the necklace was made from. He dangled it over the bowl, and shook it as well.

He began to chant. A language she didn't recognize. Sounded like it came from maybe the Middle East, but she didn't know shit about languages, so maybe not. Whatever it was, it sounded melodic, and almost hypnotic. Until the silence around them joined in, with the screams of the dead.

Hell opened its gates for them.

Drip. Drop. Drip drop. Black began to ooze from the walls, heavy, thick, sliding down the crevices of the stone like molasses. Scary, black molasses. It churned and bubbled, splashed and boiled, and splattered out over the stone floor of the cave, as it crept out toward them. Like a scene from a James Bond flick, the water in the cage rising to drown them. Except, this black liquid wasn't water, and Triss stepped away from it as it came closer, and closer.

Jacob did no such thing. With a big smile on his asshole face, the eyeless Nosferatu squatted down, and let the couple inches of heavy obsidian liquid roll across the bottom of his robes. He ran a finger through it too, scooping it around and around like a child playing with his pudding. Heavy and sticky, the strange liquid coated his fingers, and he laughed as he stood up to let it drip off.

“Um ... uh ... what do we do?” Jen said, backing up toward the exit.

Triss sighed, and held up a hand. “We wait ... Malachi here is going to show you ... well, some strange shit.”

“Malachi?”

The old man walked up to Jen, hooked an arm over her shoulders, and pulled her back toward the bowl. “An old name I sometimes used when communicating with the other side.”

“ ... the other side? Like ... the Disney song?”

“Shh!” Jacob shuddered, and pressed down on her shoulders, so the two of them started creeping along. “Don’t say the D word!”

Ok, Jen might have been annoyed and scared by the whole situation, but Triss couldn’t help but laugh.

“I ... I...” The Ventrue winced as she looked down, and shivered as the black ooze started to pour over her feet. “Is this ... what happened when you ... did this, Triss?”

“Nope, Jacob had already done his madness when I arrived.” Her turn to wince, as the ooze started to coat her feet. It felt cold, and alive. “Or at least, some of it.”

“Indeed my beauties, indeed. But this ritual is not always done in the same manner. There are many ways to break through the wall. Especially when you have help from the other side.”

“You sound like a cartoon villain,” Jen said. But, even as she tried to make jokes, come off strong, she was staring down at the cold, rippling liquid creeping up her ankles. Past the ankle, to the shin, and she started to shake. “I ... I still don’t know what’s going on. You mention Black Blood, but ... I thought we were here to learn crúac? I thought we were going to ... to delve into ... the dark arts of the Circle?”

“Oh, but we are.” Jacob hugged her shoulders again, and gestured to the bowl.

The skeleton sculptures beneath the bowl were crying black tears. Heavy, thick globs of the onyx liquid fell from their empty eye sockets. If a skeleton could make a facial expression, horrified would be the word Triss would use to describe them now, as if their eyes had widened, as if their lips had pulled back, as if their pupils had dilated, mouths open and screaming their fear.

The ooze started to climb. Not up the girls anymore, or Jacob, but up the walls, the same walls it'd bled from. Defying gravity, it started to climb the stones, the symbols, the crevices, until all the walls were a mix of black flowing both up, and down. The ooze that surrounded them, covered their feet in the cold, started to creep along the ceiling. Gravity reversed, the ooze covered the stone above in the same way it did their feet, and, as if to taunt them for being bound by physics, it started to rain black. And then the pool of black around them started to rain upward.

It was no longer a question of avoiding or dodging the drops; they were coming from everywhere. The lantern fell from Triss's claws, and she cursed as she reached for it. Too late, it fell into the black, and floated. Thank god. Or, not floating, but rather, hands, obsidian hands rose from the goop, and kept the lantern aloft, four hands together, palms up. The only source of light, and the black ooze knew to keep it above the suffocating blackness.

Triss and Jen each turned around, slowly, stopping to stare at the floating hands for a minute, then looking at the raindrops of cold darkness going up, and down, up, and down, and then back to the floating hands. The skeletons holding up the ritual bowl continued to cry tears, but the skeletons on the top layer of the metal bones cried tears downward, and the skeletons beneath cried tears upward. A pattern.

Then the screams erupted.

Triss and Jen threw their hands up to their heads, and covered them as best they could as a woman's shriek split the soaked, dark air. A man's followed, a bellowing holler that caused the black ooze to ripple. Another woman's, and another man's cries bounced around in the cave, echoing over the death water and into the Earth.

No wonder people called Three Kings Cemetery haunted.

Black mist began to roll over the area, swallowing everything as it crept over the black water. This part she recognized, this part Triss was here for last time. She forced herself to hold still, except for a couple steps toward Jen to get closer to her, as the rising onyx fog grew. There were screams in the fog tonight, far louder than last time, and Triss took Jen's hand, squeezed it, and closed her eyes as the mist swallowed them.

She opened her eyes. Just like last time, she could see. The black ooze was gone, no longer raining up and down, no longer coating the walls, no longer falling from the skeleton's eyes. Instead, mist leaked from their eyes, mixing into the gentle haze of darkness that swallowed them all. The lantern was gone. The light was gone, but she could see, and she knew the others could see too. The screams started to fade away, and a calmness settled over them. The sort of calm you'd expect to find by surrendering to hypothermia in an icy river, letting the numbness of your body sink you into sweet oblivion.

A hand snapped out, enormous, solid black ooze with mist dripping from the claws, and the hand ripped the corpse from the hook.

Jen screamed and jumped back, crouching, ready to fight or flight. But, both Jacob and Triss raised a hand, and motioned for her to come back. Impressive that the Ventrue responded that way; Triss figured she'd fall on her ass.

“Oh my, three blood of the undead tonight. Why, I can feel a certain tingle to that, if I may say so.” In the darkness beyond them, beyond the bowl, in the black where Jacob's wall of goodies sat, the sound rolled out from, as if the abyss was speaking to them. And, unless Triss was going out of her mind, the abyss had ... a bit of a southern accent?

“Trying a new voice today, old friend?” Jacob said to the darkness.

“No, old friend, this is an old voice.” The deep, bassy rumble defied gender standards. Multi-layered and thick, the strange sound vibrated through the air, through the bowl and metal, and into the bodies of the Kindred staring, one of them with jaw dropped. “This one, you brought me ... a hundred a fifty years ago, Malachi. I remember. A Mister Gardener? What a fine man he was. Fine man.” The laughter was deep, melodic, almost soothing, like as if someone gave a blue whale a southern drawl, and a cigar.

“Ha, did I? Christ, that's a fucking long time ago. Was he fat?”

“That he was.” Black Blood's laughter drew them in, or Triss at least. The rumbling grumble, from beyond the veil of shadow that swayed in the black beyond the bowl. That was a sexy voice. A sexy, alien, unimaginable voice.

Twitching movement. Flesh, naked, sagging and thick, flopped and stumbled as it came out of the blackness. Unnatural movement was easy to see, for any person. A subtle twitch, a sway that didn't make sense, something that broke what humans learned were common movements to all other humans. Horror movies took advantage of that, made ghosts or whatnot twitch in unnatural or impossible ways. The uncanny valley, something that looks human, but a part of your brain knows it's not.

Jen and Triss groaned, quietly, in disgust at the sight of the sacrifice's body coming forward. The removed leg was reconnected to the pelvis, but hovering maybe half an inch beneath the joint, with black mist seeping out of the empty space. As the corpse came forward, knees crunched, ankles twisted and broke, and the body's right arm snapped back and forth at the elbow, ninety degrees in the wrong direction. Crack. Crunch.

"That ... that is ... w-what..." Jen stared on, hands fallen limp at her sides, until one hand managed to rise and touch a couple fingers to her bottom lip. Jaw still dropped.

The corpse came closer, and as she—it opened her mouth, black mist seeped from over its teeth. The closer it got, the closer the wall of black behind it came, a second wall of black fog Triss did not want to touch.

As it stood there, one of its arms snapped off completely, tearing, twisting like a crocodile death rolled it. It grew still after, arm now hovering to the shoulder, attached by black mist instead of tendons and ligaments.

"Come, stand by the offering." It waved them in, motion jerking, not smooth at all, as it walked over to the bowl.

Gulping, Triss did as requested, and walked over to stand in front of the entity. Jen did as well, after a moment or two. Jacob was already there, waiting, arms across his blood-soaked chest, and a warm smile on his face. So very, very creepy.

"And who is this fine lady?" it said, nodding in Jen's direction as it leaned over the bowl. Twitching grip found one of the organs, the liver, and Black Blood raised it from the bowl to examine it. Triss was sure the entity would have begun eating it, but, instead, it inspected the liver bringing it up to its face, and eyeing it.

“ ... Jennifer.”

“Well Jennifer, pleasure to make your acquaintance. I do hope this meeting leads to a grand friendship.” The corpse winked at her, and squeezed the sacrifice’s liver, until it popped.

Chapter 61

~~Jack~~

“Promise me ye’ll keep this a secret,” Fiona said to the two of them. “Azamel’s warning wasn’t for aw folk to hear. I screwed up.”

“I hadn’t told anyone about this before you brought it up.” Laughing, Jack gestured to the darkness ahead of them. “How’d you get us here? One moment I was in a jungle, next I’m walking through dark again, now I’m ... in a warehouse?” Yeap, warehouse. The large, dirty windows high above, the towers of metal beams holding rows upon rows, shelves upon shelves, of boxes, the forklifts, and all the amenities. He did not envy anyone a job moving or boxing products, dealing with nothing but enormous walls of capitalism personified. Slave labor.

“Mmhmm.” Giggling, the Scot tugged on their hands, and dragged them both through the warehouse, between the isles of boxes piled sky high. A big damn warehouse, exporting some sort of toy or blanket or something equally innocuous. “There’s a lot of tricks I’ve learned from Vrall. And, both in the dream, and in the physical world, I can see the gates.”

“... gates?” Damien said, glancing around. “This is Banner’s Fields warehouse. They sell ... I don’t know, really. Nothing anyone cares about. I don’t see any gates.”

Jack nodded. “And we should be careful. Could be people working late.”

Fiona took a moment to glance around, and everyone took a longer moment to listen. But other than distant cars, it was unlikely anyone would be around this late in North Side. Damien shook his head too; no one around.

“Lads, there are tunnels atween worlds. Ye ken nae everything is limited to the physical world, to these flesh and bone things we all like so much. There are ... strange places, in the beyond. And ye ken who can see those places? Visit those places? This lass.” She pointed her two thumbs at herself.

“ ... what sort of places?” Jack said.

“I’m nae sure, honestly.” She shrugged, and skipped ahead, sneakers kicking along the concrete, and fingers touching boxes as she moved by. “There’s the Shadow world, that the Uratha deal with. Begotten don’t normally go there, according tae Vrall. Nae reason to. The things there are ... they aren’t what we need. We cannae feed off them.”

Jack tilted his head to the side as he followed after her. “Something monsters can’t eat? The spirits?”

“Exactly. That place is ... it’s a shadow, and it doesn’t have what we need for food, like we find in folk. Nothing for us to devour. And, it’s a dangerous place.”

“More dangerous than Dolareido?” Damien didn’t sound convinced. “Considering the ritual Jack described, I find that hard to believe.” Walking slow, he continued looking around, eyes open for anyone that might be nearby, and no doubt ready to turn on his cloak of night if needed. “And, we have assault rifles and explosives here. Shotguns too.”

“They have entities that defy reasoning!” She leaned in toward Damien, hugged his arm to her chest — hoodie and jeans were hilariously cute on her — and waved across the empty air over her. Parting the night sky they couldn’t see. “Trees that talk. Deer with wings. Roads that walk.”

“ ... roads that walk?” Jack said. What? How the fuck did that make any sense?

Fiona laughed at him, and poked him in the shoulder. “Ye’ll find out soon enough. But, be careful to not ... do anything? I dinnae ken much about this world, except that it’s dangerous, and there’s these ... we’ll, maybe ye’ll be able to make sense of it. I can’t.” At the end of the warehouse, before a roll-up door, she held out her hands.

And the world changed.

Damien and Jack stepped back, and drew weapons as the wall started to vibrate and screech with a loud hammering, as if a hurricane had shot itself across the ocean and decided to pay them a surprise visit. The walls shook, trembling with the weight of the impacts Jack could not identify. The walls began to do more than vibrate, they began to bend. Both vampires ducked, expecting the twisting material to shatter or explode with the colossal pressure, but the walls had no intention of losing their solidity, bending with a curve of the air like looking through shaped glass.

It was like looking into a black hole. Fiona kept her hands up, fingers trembling, the horror inside coming out and engulfing her in its form. No longer simply Fiona, but the Vrall creature as well, both standing there, both with hands outreached. Vrall had a lot more limbs though, and she used them against the air, pulling it apart to expose the guts of the universe. The universe didn’t like that, and the little bit of light in the warehouse flickered, lost to the void descending on them. Jack expected the light bulbs overhead to shatter, and rain down sparks, or for fire or lightning to crack the air. Instead, he stared into a void, a black void that cut into the emptiness before them. Black didn’t do justice to describe the depth of the abyss.

What was the name of that new black, blacker than black black? Vantablack? Blackest? Like that, something that pulled his eyes in until he felt like he was sinking.

“You ... found this?” Damien said.

“Mmhmm. Someone, or something, made it, a long time ago. And there are others, in the city. The wolves don’t know about them, or at least don’t use them, but they don’t need them to get into the Shadow world. And these gates can go other places too, if you can find them.”

Jack gulped, and stepped beside her, and the deadly spider creature sharing her space. “You can’t make them?”

“Maybe some Begotten can. I can’t. I can tunnel into the dream, and into this physical world. But other places? I have to find those doors, like this one, and they’re almost always locked. But...” With a big, happy grin, she winked at him, and looked back to the portal before them. “Begotten are monsters. True, real, monsters. We go where we want.”

She yanked her hands apart, and tore the blackness open. It bled gold and white over them, a rushing water that had both vampires reaching up to block it with their hands. But it did not touch them, despite washing over them, covering them, burying and drowning them in the flowing colors. Plenty to see, colors shining, but nothing to touch them, like it didn’t exist.

“I ... holy shit.” Jack lowered his gun, and looked out to the sides of golden road ahead of them. Not a road, no, an unending wall of fog, that was a road, that was surrounded by swirling gray cracking against an endless tapestry of blacks and vortex whites.

“Stay on the road,” she said, hand gesturing out to the gold before them. “There are ... things, in the black out there. And ye could get stuck, or lost, or ... or things. Vrall has memories of things in the black, dangerous things.”

“In the black?” Damien caught up, and looked out to the void around them, the dark gray of a storm incoming, with ebbing onyx tipped with curving sparks of silver. “Something ... something lives in there?”

“Something lives everywhere.” Fiona shrugged, rubbed her arms a little, tiny shivers working up and down her arms and legs. “I dinnae ken what or how something can live in this wall, this strange wall, but things do. Other things live in the Shadow, where we’re going, and other things live in ... other places. Live, in their own way.”

“Nightmares,” Jack said.

“No, that’s where I come from. That’s what I am.” Fiona hip bumped him. Her horror was gone. Now, it was only the girl, a small, curvy little redhead with a grin on.

He remembered the bloody Dolareido nightmare. He remembered the stairway to hell, where Athalia waited for him. He remembered the jungle, dark, filled with rot, insects, howling monkeys and growling jaguars. The smothering humidity that threatened to drown him, if he needed to breathe. The two moons.

None of that was as scary as the wall he was walking through, the unimaginable, the strange, a wall he couldn’t begin to think about in terms of measurements. Might as well have been an optical illusion.

At least nightmares made sense, in a way, a thing born of human fear, and human imagination. His simple, weak little mind couldn’t handle the width of a literal dimension he was walking through. Would it even look like a gray and black void filled with white lightning to others? What would the Uratha see? What did Fiona see?

Maybe he’d be better off not seeing where this rabbit hole took him. Ah well, too late.

The golden road was a gateway Fiona had found, not created. That alone was terrifying enough. But, as they moved along, and the golden road came to end, a wall of a new color presented itself, silvers, with black jagged streaks running down through them.

“Someone tore this door open from the other side,” Fiona said. “Ye can see it ‘ere. Can ye see it? There are ... na words I can use to describe the shape or color, na English words for them.”

Guess his gut was correct then. A simple little vampire; Athalia called his kind nothing more than blood leeches. Now, looking up at such alien and colossal constructs, things well beyond him, things that monsters touched upon in their everyday life, he couldn't blame her for looking down on him.

“I can see ... a little of damage, I think?” Damien said. His sword was still in his hand, but Jack doubted it'd do anything to anything in this place.

“It's closed now. I'll open it.”

Jack leaned forward past Fiona a few inches, eyes staring at the bleeding, crackling colors. “I don't understand how you're doing this.”

“The world is our playground, Jack.” Her voice dropped deeper, losing its giggles and chuckles as she stuck her hands out, Vrrall shadowing over her once again. “The physical world is our feeding ground, but the whole world is ... well, ye'll see.”

The white cracks of lightning broke away, and the silver cascade of waterfall aether started to split, as Fiona's arms began to shake harder. Big grin on her face, despite the tonal shift of the voice. She was happy to be doing this for them, taking them along on this perilous journey into fucking only God knew where. She knew, but she was some sort of inter-dimensional traveler! Biggest leap Jack had made this far out of his comfort zone, of his own choice anyway, was visiting a club. This was a bit bigger a jump.

He tried to imagine Azamel doing this, the titanic, giant elephant monster, opening doors for the two little vampires. He couldn't.

The door, or silver waterfall, or whatever the fuck it was, split apart, and the next world greeted them. The gold and white of the road, the black, gray, and white lightning of the wall between realms, it all collapsed and shattered, crashing down around them with explosive effect. Jack and Damien jumped, smashing into each other as each leapt away from the walls that had once surrounded them, threatening them with its void. For a moment, Jack thought he was inside a mirror, and someone had come along and smashed it, like falling sparks, bits of mirror glass splitting and crackling around the asphalt around them.

Asphalt! Street! Oh thank fucking god. Jack climbed off of Damien, and tapped on the street a few times with his palms, before bouncing up onto his feet. Yes, asphalt, something he understood. Damien held out a hand, and Jack yanked him up so the two of them were standing, and looking behind them. The wall of the factory where Fiona had originally opened the strange gate. Now they were on the other side, out on the street.

It looked like a dinosaur had gone to town on the wall. Enormous claw marks decorated it, jagged, snaking, black lines left in their wake; the poor building was ripped into. The claw marks didn't penetrate the wall, but they looked deep enough, big enough, like they should have. Instead of being able to see through the giant slash marks, he found only a strange blackness inside the slashes. Staring into the void? No, the void, or wall between realms, had been black and gray, with white lines, to his simple Kindred eyes. Whatever he was seeing beyond these slash marks, was solid black.

“Torn ... open... ?” He looked to Fiona, and she nodded as she scanned the scar marks herself.

“I guess ye cannae see it? I can see the gate, and the damage this thing did, opening the gate. But nae on the other side where we entered the gate, almost as if someone opened the other side with a key.” She shrugged, and reached out a hand to press against the wall of the factory, beneath one of the enormous scars. "I've seen other gates too, with this sort of damage, opened from the physical world's side though. Someone or something is traveling around, and doing ... something. Lot of somethings. But that's why I brought ye lads! Ye're the smart ones, sneaky ones. I bet ye'll be able to find out who." She shrugged, and gestured back out to the street behind them.

Jack and Damien stared on, and gulped.

The Shadow world. The most ridiculous name he'd ever heard, but, as he looked across the darkened asphalt, the twisting and bending street lamps, the moon above fading in and out like a heartbeat, and the skittering black wisps on the air, he couldn't think of a better name.

It was Dolareido! It was, and it wasn't. What the fuck was going on? He stepped out onto the street and peeked left and right. It was North Side, not too far from South Side at this point, and normally there'd be visible traffic no matter the time of night in this area. Not here. And yet, it was Dolareido, sort of. The street lamps all had a bend to them, and a bit of a corkscrew twist, each pointing toward South Side. Bats flew by, but they weren't bats. Eyeballs? They had tendrils, tentacles even, so they looked a bit like a squid, who happened to have a giant eyeball in the center of the main body.

The insanity didn't stop there. It wasn't obvious at first, hidden in shadows and the uneasy lights that never stayed perfectly consistent, but there were things, moving things. Jack drifted toward a sidewalk, and looked up and down the building. The windows were solid black, and they dripped of a clear liquid. Water? He bent down by the building's side, and squinted at what looked like rats. Except, not rats. Their features weren't defined enough, as if someone had only done the basic layout of a rat, and forgot to tighten it up with specific fingers and toes or a face. And it wasn't running, it was floating, a couple inches over the pavement. Three of them hovered together, and moved along the base edge of the building, into the shadows beyond.

He looked up, and gasped. A crow! Except it was huge. Gargantuan and overwhelming, the great creature flapped its wings once, twice, and settled on the top edge of the building.

“... from Gurihal?” it said, blinking its immense black eyes at them. The head tilting was very birdlike, but it was talking English. The voice was crow-like though, a half caw, half croon sound.

Either this was a strange coincidence, or crows and Dolareido had more of a connection than Jack thought. Mental note: get back to the real world and give Mulder and Scully some attention. They deserve it.

“You speak English?” Damien said.

“Yes. I speak English. Give me your names, tiny bugs.”

So very tempted to say ‘well fuck you too’, but, that wouldn’t work so well on this side of the wall, he imagined. Oh good god he was going to play intermediary to spirits, or at least, first contact ... ambassador?

“I’m Jack Terry, Kindred of the Invictus,” he said, to the giant talking bird. Hard to wrap his mind around, hard to accept, but there it was, sitting on a building with black windows that continuously dripped rain despite the lack of rain. “I’m investigating this.” He gestured to the damage behind him.

He had no idea if it was a good idea to be honest with this giant bird thing. It wasn’t like it was a secret, but having these spirits know who he was wasn’t the smartest idea. Lying wasn’t necessarily better. Welp, when in doubt, go with your instincts. Something Jessy would say, he was sure, and something he’d never do in the past.

“ ... so you are the Terry.” The enormous creature flapped its wings once again, before settling down, and began preening itself.

“The Terry?” Fiona said, standing beside him. “I’m sorry, ye know about Jack?”

“ ... you wish to know?” It flapped its wings once again, thrice this time, and the heavy air fell on them with the gust. Jack couldn’t identify the smell. Kind of like Mulder and Scully, but not. “Trade.”

Damien frowned, and came in close to the two of them. “We should leave. We have seen what we wanted to see.” Hand back and pointing to the enormous claw marks and the dark abyss they left behind, he came in closer until he was almost touching foreheads with them. “This place is unnatural.”

Fiona shook her head. “It’s nae unnatural. This place is old, Damien, just as old as the physical world that ye think is the normal world. Been ‘ere since...”

“Since the divide. But, that is not knowledge for me to share.” With a long, gentle caw, the bird entity stuck its head out, and tilted it to the side to look at them with one eye. “I will tell you why people know the name Terry, if you will tell me why you have come.”

“ ... you could lie,” Jack said.

“Could I?” The creature shook its head, ruffled its feathers, and clawed at the building’s roof edge a few times.

Damien did not like that. Frowning all the more, he began to walk around, pacing, steps slow and calculated, eyes darting around. Normally he’d walk with his hands in his overcoat pockets, but he had them out, sword drawn and free hand ready to draw his pistol at a moment’s notice. Would those things even work in this place?

This was the third Dolareido the three of them had seen, now that he thought about it. The physical one, the specific nightmare version that Fiona had found, and now some sort of mirror world of Dolareido. Why, why couldn't things remain simple, grounded in solid matter? This was turning into witchy magic overload. He had to get back to the physical world, go hang out in a club and seduce some ignorant kine, or maybe stalk the alleys and catch one by surprise. Hunt on the asphalt, hunt in the buildings made of wood, brick, marble, concrete, and steel. Wear sunglasses at night and edgy trench coats, typical vampire stuff. Solid things he could wrap his mind around. Looking around at the spirit world was giving him the impression it wasn't solid at all. Felt solid, but whenever he let his eyes linger on something, he started to notice a piece of it wasn't holding perfectly still.

Poor Damien couldn't have been happy about this. Visible confirmation of a parallel world probably didn't jive too well with his beliefs. Jack didn't think they were mutually exclusive, but he was no expert.

“Ye cannae lie?” Fiona said.

The crow shrugged. “Maybe?”

Ok, diplomatic moment. Trust the bird. Don't trust the bird? He knew nothing about negotiating with spirits, and he doubted any Kindred did. The Uratha did, but they wouldn't share that information. What did Avery say about the spirits? They existed for one purpose only, to spread their influence, and for the case of spirits, that was a far more impactful, palpable thing. And how they went about doing that wasn't something that just happened to be a motive, it manifested in the spirit itself, if those sex spirits were anything to go by.

What did that make this bird? It was enormous, and it was a crow. A bird well adjusted to living in the city, smart, observant. And maybe it wasn't only the bird itself, but what did crows represent? He had no idea if what they represented would affect its portrayal here, but, crows were often considered signs of death in some cultures, signs of messages and revealing information in others. In Dolareido, they were the denizens of the sky, as much a part of it as the humans living there, so people generally felt. Maybe that was it.

“ ... like I said, we're investigating,” he said, and he gestured back to the cut in the world, the slithering black lines, and the deep crevices they'd left. “We want to know who or what is causing things like this, as there are more damaged gates like it.”

“Oh? You search for knowledge about the scars?” The bird picked at a feather under its wing a few times, before eying them once again, head to the side. “Why?”

“That wasn't part of the deal. I told you why we came here. I don't need to tell you the why of the why.”

“ ... I see why the eyeless one mentioned you.”

“ ... w-what?” Jack looked to Damien and Fiona, and his fellow Kindred winced as he grit his teeth. Fiona did too, a moment later once she pieced it together. “Jacob was here?”

“The eyeless one may or may not have been. I tell you that he mentioned your name, to some denizens of the Hisil. I need not tell you how.”

Heh, yeah, fair play. But, why would Jacob bring him up? And who did he bring him up to?

“ ... two minute conversation with the first thing that can talk in this realm, and we're rendered confused as all shit.” He looked behind him, to the enormous scars. Go back? They probably should go back, it wasn't sa—Damien tapped him on the shoulder. Jack looked at him, and followed his gaze up, to the sky.

A cloud was coming. Massive, black, and unless he was hallucinating, it had wings. A lot of titanic, black wings, that spread across the sky. It cut through the moonlight, and shimmered as the moonlight struck it, caused it to gleam with far more presence than any cloud should have. And, after a quiet moment with everyone staring, it cracked lightning, a streak of blinding white that hit the city somewhere in the distance. But a second later, the skull-rattling thunder said it wasn't so distant.

“Um, Fiona?” Jack said, backing up.

“Y-Yeah, let's go.” She tapped Damien on the shoulder, and began to back up toward the scar.

The bird didn't like that. It flew down, and let the impact of the wind gush knock them back a few feet as it fell in front of the damaged wall. “Why do you leave?”

“Um, because of that thing?” He pointed to the incoming cloud.

The crow shrugged, if that's what a shrug looked like on a crow anyway. Jack's crows never did that, never raised their wings up at the tip toward their heads. Human gesture on a crow was strange.

“The Harrowing Provisioner? It will come, it will go. You three, you must stay. Talk with me.”

Come and go? Giant death cloud will come and go?

“I don't trust you,” Damien said.

“Smart, smart to not trust.” The crow nodded its head up and down a few times, each time turning its skull to look at them with a different eye. “But, safe with me. Jacob is no friend of I. Black Blood and his agenda do not concern me either. Come, I'll show you.” The giant crow started walking, same as Jack's crows would. Which made no sense, because the larger an animal, gravity and mass distribution across surface area worked differently. But, it did anyway, same as Azamel's giant horror did. Nothing in these worlds ever followed the rules.

Ok, follow the enormous spirit crow, or run away, from a possible treasure trove of information. He already had his hands full with hunting down the hunters, and trying to learn more about the ritual that had the picture of him. He really shouldn't be biting off more than he could chew. But he wanted to know more about this Black Blood too.

What the heck.

"Alright," he said, and shrugging at Fiona and Damien, he followed after the enormous bird. "What's your name?"

"I am the City Sky." It nodded, cawed, and continued along. Birds could walk, and it was often easier for them to do so than fly, from Jack's experience. But seeing a giant bird do it was bordering on hilarious.

"City Sky? I ... I suppose, yeah, crows do represent the sky of a city, in a way." The name made him smile. Fellow citizens, denizens of the sky. He had it right.

"Jack," Fiona said, catching up to them, "this is dangerous. We cannae trust this spirit, and who the fuck knows what's waiting out 'ere for us?"

"You don't know?" he said.

"Na! I don't explore this place. This isn't for Begotten. These spirits have as much mind as the wind or stone. They are wind and stone! Without a subconscious, there's nothing for me to feed on." Shivering again, she rubbed her arms, and looked out into the city streets, and the twisted reality it had. "And there are things 'ere we should be scared of."

“Black Blood is busy,” Sky said, turning its head and pecking Fiona in the arm, hard enough to make her squeak and jump away. And Jack laughed, cause it was damn funny to see a huge crow peck at a person smaller than them. Funnier, to see her punch back, and miss, as the crow yanked its head back and hopped away.

He really needed to go find Mulder and Scully the moment this insanity was done.

Damien came up on the other side of the bird. “Busy? Do we care about this Black Blood?” For all the madness being dumped on them on the reg, Jack was surprised the man was looking the bird up and down like it was a mythical, dangerous creature of legend, and not just a big bird. Jack was starting to become jaded, at this point, to the wonders that existed beyond what he knew only a year and a half ago, much as he preferred the solid world. And Fiona might as well have been walking down Ordinary Lane, despite the fear she was showing.

“Black Blood has much to say, much to control, in Dolareido,” the bird said.

Jack chuckled. “I’m surprised you call it that, Dolareido. I figured it’d have a more spirit-y name.”

“It does. Translates to: Blood-Flowing-Sex-City. Jacob laughed, when he heard that. Called it Dolareido.”

“You met Jacob?” he said. Blood-Flowing-Sex-City was a bit of a mouthful, but apt.

“Yes. Trade?”

“... do we have to trade? We are trading anyway, that’s what a conversation is.”

“Spirits trade.” The bird laughed, if it could be called that, a weird cawing croon sound, and pecked at its breast feathers some before it resumed walking. “But, not all trades must be so exact. So, yes, conversation. Yes, half-head,” the bird said as it glanced Damien’s way. Jack had to try doubly hard to not laugh at the hair remark, and Damien’s half shaved head. “Yes, Black Blood is dangerous. Very dangerous. Controls much of Blood City. The Harrowing Provisioner does not get along with him. Neither does Red Tide or Street-Tail King.”

“Who are they?”

“Powerful. Powerful entities.” Caw caw. “Politics in city are dangerous. Uratha meddle, try and fix problems. Sometimes work. Sometimes. You?”

“Ha, yeah, not too dissimilar a boat, actually. Uratha causing trouble for us, but helping us out too.” Careful, don’t throw away information by being too honest. Control your Achilles heel. Oh, oh, oh! “Does the name Minerva sound familiar to you, Sky?”

“Yes.”

Yes! Oh shit, he was dancing on the edge of another precipice, and this one was pure information. Even more dangerous.

“What can you tell me about her?”

“Nothing. Know nothing.”

“... shit. Where did you hear her name from?”

“Where did you?” Caw. Good play though, good play on its part.

“Jacob and the Uratha said her name. She was Jacob’s old love. Killed by the Uratha over sixty years ago.”

“Oh! Big info, big. Very big.” It nodded, a bunch of times, never stopping its bird walk though. “Black Blood once mentioned her, to his wraiths, long ago. Maybe sixty years ago. Something about failure. That’s all I know.”

This creature had gone from uncooperative, to very, in a small amount of time. Either Jack had a natural affinity for crows, or this spirit of the city sky spoke a language Jack understood: city gossip, the sort of gossip an eavesdropping crow might be interested in.

A hand on his shoulder pulled him back. Fiona, eyebrow raised, and glaring into him.

“Jack,” she said, “this isn’t a good idea. What are ye doing?”

“Sky is giving us info, info we so terribly need.”

“It’s a spirit, Jack! Spirits give nothing for free.”

“So I’ve noticed. We’re trading information.”

Damien stepped in, pushing Sky’s beak out of the way so he could stand in close. “You’re trading information with a spirit, and you have no idea what the repercussions of that will be.”

Typical Kindred. He could understand the paranoia, the concern, always looking over the shoulder thinking an enemy was on your tail. But they were flying blind, in trying to figure out this warning Azamel gave them. They had to try something.

And maybe, City Sky might know more.

“Sky, do ... have you ever heard of a ritual, involving a human sacrifice, and drawing body parts?”

“I have, I have.”

“Know anything about it?” Booya!

“No,” it said. Fuck. “But Street-Tail King does.”

He looked back at Damien and Fiona again. Both were shaking their heads. What do what do what do what do.

“Where is Street-Tail King?”

“Near the Blood Tower.”

“ ... can—”

Damien and Fiona both grabbed him, and started dragging him back to the gate. Shit.

---

---

~~Eric~~

“You ok Kat?” Eric said. The little dumbass meowed at him, and rubbed against his leg. “Probably didn’t even know I was gone.” Meow meow.

Rolling his eyes, he sat down on the couch, lay down, and put his feet up on the arm. Kat wasted no time, and jumped onto his chest. Within moments, she had her head against his neck, forehead pressing into his jaw and under it, body vibrating with purrs. Not a care in the world.

He looked around at the boxes lying everywhere, and smirked. Other cats would be upset, other cats would be freaking out, other cats would be backed into a corner and hissing at anyone nearby, if their home was getting uprooted. Not Kat. Kat was beyond dumb, and he appreciated it. Loved her for it.

Maybe he needed a woman in his life, of similar temperament and intelligence? That Fiona girl was a joyful sort, and perhaps not the sharpest tool in the shed. A lot of similarities between Kat and her, young and stupid and eager to make friends. Then again, so was his wife, in a way; her joviality hid the insidiousness underneath, though.

He set his hand on Kat's ears, and began to scratch. Gentle little strokes of the fingertip along her cheek, under her chin, around and over her eyebrow, and the inner tip of her ear. She wasn't a big fan of the full body stroke, much preferring to keep it localized to the head and neck. So he did, and smirked as her purring increased in volume, until it was like a massage against his chest.

"Tomorrow, Kat. Tomorrow we'll be moving to a new place. Bigger, better, a lot more room for you, and less smell." The scent of pot and cigarettes was soaked into the walls at this point, and his new nose did not appreciate it. "You'll probably see Jessy at some point, more than likely. And maybe that Fiona girl."

He closed his eyes, and let his mind drift to the two women. Fiona's body, curvy, hourglass, short, stacked. Her cute button nose, her long, frizzy red hair, her bright smile, her gold eyes. The feel of her insides clenching on his finger had been heavenly. The sight of her large, soft breasts jiggling as she came on his fingers, had been intoxicating.

And then there was Jessy, his new boss. Muscle, lean and curvy, plentiful breasts bouncing against her defined chest, abs crunching and rolling as she ground on his dick. The blissful smile.

He was getting hard just thinking about the two of them.

The divorce had put a serious dent into his sex drive, he knew that, but since the changes had started to happen, his dick had returned with a vengeance. Sex was on his mind all day, every day, since that first night at the club with Jessy and Fiona. He tried to pass it off, and not let the manipulative vampire realize how much he was hurting for it; but no doubt the woman could read through him. She had a lot of years on him, and probably knew how to manipulate men — and women — easily. So he cut himself a break, and didn't beat himself up over letting her manipulate him. Win win scenario for everyone involved, far as he could tell.

He spent a lot of time looking for a catch in the deal too. The dangers were upfront and spelled out for him though, and the new rules and walls on his life were plain to see. If there was a catch he couldn't see, it was hidden damn well, because everything else was told to him straight. And the perks? God damn, the perks were amazing. Getting his idiot dad to a better hospital was great. Getting himself into a luxury suite on top of that was even better.

Getting his life controlled by vampires and their dark agendas, not so much. A gilded cage.

“... the dreams haven't stopped, Kat.” Sighing, he sat up, and adjusted his baby so she was on his lap instead. Damn girl didn't even bother to open her eyes. “They're only getting worse.” Nightly, vivid dreams, or nightmares, about hunting and defending territory, about howling at the moon, about the moon trying to talk to him, none of that was stopping.

Where the fuck was Fiona?

He got up, set Kat down on her tower, and walked around. Boxes all over the place. Ultimately, not as many boxes as he figured most people would need. He threw out most of his old shit from his old life, or sold it. Paintings and crap, sold. Pictures of him and his wife, thrown out, sometimes burned. The really nice blender he used to have? Sold. The pillow cases that his wife had picked out? The texture alone warranted burning, tainted by the whole experience.

Something about divorce brought out the worst in people, the thousands of idiosyncrasies that grated on each other building up to explode over years of being at each other's side. A lot more going on in that marriage than just her being the asshole; he'd been one too.

He sighed, set his hands down on the counter top in his kitchen, and took a moment to do some exercises for his bad knee. Slow, gentle motions, keep things aligned, keep things flowing smooth.

The box on his counter labeled KITCHEN SHIT was filled with nothing but utensils, plates, cups, and some other bare bones miscellaneous crap. Maybe now he could afford some fine china again? Ha, no, never again. Fuck the useless crap, fuck anything that weighed him down with pointless burdens. From now on, if it wasn't something he was going to use at least once a month, he wasn't going to buy it.

Maybe he'd try living without a car for a while? He was within walking distance of his new job, and if he wanted to go anywhere, the thought of driving there made him gag. Then again, the thought of being in a cab made him gag twice over. Never again.

Kat jumped up onto the counter, rubbed against a box, and then against his arm. Needy, so needy. He chuckled, and started to scratch and stroke her chin once again.

“What do you think, girl? Think you'll like a luxury suite? Expensive furniture included, ready for you to destroy.” Meow. “A hot tub for you to avoid like the plague.” Meow meow. “And I'll start getting you the best food, all wet food, chicken and turkey and duck and rabbit.” Meow.

Knock knock.

He raised a brow, and looked down at Kat. The idiot did not hesitate to jump down from the counter, and walk from the kitchen, through the living room, and up to the front door of his shitty little apartment. Meow. With a sigh, he followed after her.

“Kat, that could be a huge dog barking itself hoarse and you wouldn't care. Come on, get outta here.” He scooped her back with his foot, and stepped up to the door. But, didn't open it, using the peep hole instead. Something told him not to look, to step back, something in his gut. His gut had been talking to him a lot lately, telling him so and so was dangerous, so and so was not, and so and so was easy prey. His gut helped keep him alive during that whole fiasco with Fiona and the hunters. And his gut was telling him to step away from the door. Maybe he should listen to it more.

Too late. The door greeted him with all the enthusiasm of an avalanche, and his attempt to peek through the peep hole gave it free reign to destroy his face.

The world went black, and then red, as he fell back onto his ass and spine. The cheap, thin carpet of his living room said hello, and slammed into his skull, two-teaming him with the door. The world got blurry along with the red, and pain joined in a moment later.

He knew his nose was broken. The sound of crunch combined with the blood splatter, and the warm sensation filling his sinuses made that easy to discern. And there was a certain sort of pain that came with a broken nose, a lovely mix of a high spike, and then a gargling headache. All his new senses, undone by the constant smell of smoke, the background noise of an apartment, and the idiocy of thinking his door would protect him.

Wolves were right to stay in the woods.

He forced himself onto his palms, and looked up. Through the swirling images taunting him, he recognized two faces, and didn't recognize two more.

“Hey there, buddy,” the short fucker said.

“ ... Pitt.”

“Mr. Pitt.” The bastard snapped his fingers, and the two new faces came into his apartment, with Pitt's usual henchman following suit. They grabbed him, the two new fuckers taking his arms and yanking him up to standing. All of them were bigger than him, heavier than him, stronger than him. Came with the territory of steroid abuse, and hiring people only for their size.

Pitt's favorite henchman punched Eric in the gut, knocking the wind out of him, and the thoughts. So much for Jessy's promise.

"Montel got specific instructions from Mister Long, that he was to avoid you, leave you alone, not touch you. Debt cleared, supposedly." The short fuck came up to him, and, sly grin chiseled into his face, kicked Eric in the knee. The bad knee. Eric tried to scream, but the big guy in front of him grabbed him by the jaw, covering his mouth. Steel palm against his lips, the henchman glared at him as he squeezed until Eric could hear his cheek bones creak. "And you see, Montel, he's got the boss's back. Mr. Long's gonna make things happen, Eric. And you, you stupid fuck? You're gonna be the message."

Eric glared at the fucker with every bit of malice he could. Worthless shithole on his left, worthless shithole on his right, big guys with tiny brains. They didn't know what they were doing, mindless thugs following Pitt's word. Pitt didn't know what he was doing, doing what Montel told him to. None of them knew what they were doing, and that was going to get Eric killed.

Eric shook his head. Bad idea. One of the fuckers holding his arm punched him in the lower back, beside the spine. Going for the organs. A second punch joined in, higher, getting the ribs hard. Nothing broken, yet, but the familiar pain of collision on flesh caused Eric's body to wrench, and for the pain to jolt through him. Without being able to lower his arms, and a dumbass's disgusting hand on his mouth, he couldn't brace for the hit, couldn't prepare for the pain, anything.

Get out, get out, free yourself. Free yourself and kill these fucking slabs of meat.

“Now, you’re probably wondering to yourself, ‘what sort of message, Mr. Pitt?’”

Kill him. Kick your legs out, get them around his neck, and kill him. Break bones. Break all their bones.

“The man asked you a question!” Goon number one tightened his grip on Eric’s face, jaw, and mouth, forcing him to breathe through his broken nose. And naturally, he followed the yelling with a punch to Eric’s gut, causing him to hunch over. He couldn’t hunch over though, not with goon two and three keeping him upright along with goon one. He had to stand there, and take it.

A few more hits to his body mixed the pain into a whirlwind in his head. His eyes began to close, a moment of weakness, of agony blinding him and forcing his eyelids to press down. He knew it was a mistake to close them, but he couldn’t help it, and goon one took full advantage, driving his fist into Eric’s gut once again when he wasn’t looking, wasn’t ready for it.

He couldn’t answer the question. They didn’t want him to.

“You see, Eric Tanverson, the sort of message we’re gonna send is ‘fuck you, I won’t do what you tell me.’” Laughing, thinking his RATM reference was genius, Pitt paced around in front of him, and kicked him in the knee again. Eric got some sound out through his broken nose, and some gargled splattering of blood running over goon one’s hand. Bastard didn’t blink. “We got plans, Eric. Mr. Long is going to push those shit wipes out, and we’re going to take over this city. Xnomina? Fuck them.”

The idiot was telling him a lot of stuff. Either he loved to monologue, or he knew Eric wasn’t going to survive this encounter. Or both, probably both.

Eric started panting, eyes snapping around. Each goon was a big threat, but the Pitt fucker wasn’t, just a maggot with a mouth waiting to be torn apart. He had to kill them first, break them apart, tear into them, rip and tear and shred. But he couldn't. Fucking christ, he couldn't. He tried, pulled on his arms, tried to break them free, but their grips were absolute and their weights bigger than his.

“And since that bitch Jessy has her eyes on you, what a perfect place to leave a message.” Chuckling, Pitt pulled out a knife, and twirled it around in his hand.

A door at the end of the hall opened. A woman came out, flab hanging off her arms, gut hanging out from her t-shirt and between her stained bathrobe, cigarette between her fingers. Everyone looked at her. She looked at them, eyes wide, flicking between everyone a hundred feet from her.

She backed away, and slammed the door. No chance in hell she was going to call for help, call 911, the police, nothing, not now after the criminals saw her face. Had to protect herself of course, not do anything to attract attention from the wrong sort of crowd. God, he fucking hated this place.

Knife. The fucker had a knife. And from the look in the stupid little man's eyes, it seemed like he was going to use the knife on Eric, probably with intent to kill. Message, he was a message for Xnomina that Terra Den wasn't going to get bossed around anymore. They probably had no fucking idea about Xnomina's true nature, that they were going up against vampires. Idiots, fucking idiots.

The fucking idiots were going to kill him.

“Any last words, Tanverson?” The short stack of meat said, standing a foot from him, knife up and picking at his nails.

Now or never. Eric kicked out—goon three caught the foot with his own, a preemptive trip, and goon two kicked him in the bad knee, causing Eric's weight to give out from underneath him. The two assholes holding him let him fall to his knees, including the bad one, and Eric screamed into the hand of goon fucking-one as his weight crunched against the kneecap.

“Now now, that’s not a word, Tanverson.” Pitt winked at him, and came in closer, taller than Eric now. To be looked down on by this tiny, pathetic, weak stack of flabby meat, was infuriating.

Eric forced himself to breathe harder, and faster, forced air into his lungs as he felt his blood begin to boil. He shivered, eyes snapping around, heart beating into a frenzy in his chest until it was a machine gun in his ears. He started to struggle, harder, hard enough to feel his muscles strain to pain, hard enough he could feel his bones ready to break. One time, in a match, he’d blocked an opponent’s kick with his shin, and the impact had nearly broken the bone; it did break the opponent’s. The sickening texture of breaking bone, and the feel of it, was a scar on his mind. He could feel his bones approaching that point, going too far.

But something in him didn’t care. Bubbling, groaning, rising to a roar in his mind, between the eyes. It told him to keep fighting, to push against these idiots, these fools, this prey that was stupid enough to challenge him in his territory. His! It was his territory, and they were violating it. It was his life, and they were threatening it.

Move, fight, rip and tear and shred. Bite them! Go for the neck! The stomach! Soft spots, kill spots, the belly and throat. Survival of the fittest, the strong eat the weak, the strong kill the weak, the strong build their futures on the bones of the weak.

The knife came closer. The fucker’s smirking, shithole face came closer.

Spill their guts.

Break their bones.

Bite into their lives, and end them. Bite into them! Bite into them! Bite!

He struggled, panic mixing with anger, until bile rose in his throat, burning his esophagus. Closer, cold metal held by a cold, idiot prey. Eric was the wounded predator, and this prey was taking advantage of it, rats attacking the sickly, injured cat. A sickly, injured cat deserved such a fate if it couldn't defend itself, but Eric was not a sickly, injured, fucking cat.

Oh god, Kat.

Oh ... god ... Dad.

Pain, pain he could not imagine, started up from his stomach. The tall, muscly thing in front of him holding his jaw did not let him look down, and Eric wasn't sure he wanted to. Metal, cold and cruel, eased its way through his shirt, his skin, his stomach, and into the things inside. Soft, belly, no bones to protect the contents.

He was going to die, in this most pathetic way. The most possibly pathetic way he could imagine.

Boom.

Boom.

Time slowed down. Somewhere, in the back of his mind, he dug up, through the fog of rage and hunger, the memory of a movie he once saw. It said time slows down when you're about to die. Life flashes before your eyes. But all Eric was seeing in his eyes, was misery, and a short, stupid stack of meat that needed to die. The moving pictures had been right about the slowing down though; his pulse was like a whale's, thundering in his skull, slow, and overwhelming.

Boom.

Boom.

His eyes looked up at the big prey still holding his jaw. This one met his gaze, but Eric could see the meat was too stupid to appreciate what was happening, that he was committing murder. Eric tried to look to the others, but they'd pulled their heads back, and watched from above, beyond Eric's line of sight. No stomach for the kill.

“Eric...” The small meat's voice was slow, almost warped, as Eric's eyes snapped to and fro.

Boom.

Boom.

“You're ... going ... to ... die ... as ... a ... message.”

Slower, slower. Time pulsed in his skull, joining his heart, joining the life-ending headache that worked down through his spine. There was a piece of something in his gut. Something hard. What was the word? Metal? Something, something sharp. A claw. This meat's claw. This meat that didn't have his own claws, had to use something hard from the ground, something it tore up from the ground, and cut into him with.

Stupid, idiot meat. Meat was only good for one purpose. And this meat, the stinking pile of meat didn't have claws, or fangs.

This wolf did.

Boom.

~~Julias~~

It was one thing after another in Dolareido these days.

Julias stared around at the mess, at the red that coated the walls, the curtains, the floor, the couch, the boxes, and sighed. What in the ever living fuck.

He wandered around, inching his way through the shitty apartment. The blood coated the walls in streaks, like someone had been finger painting in some places, or trying to do a Pollock. Randomness, and yet not, a moment of action given form. Someone had done something, something visceral, and it'd led to the deadly paintings of blood around him.

The fact it was a shitty apartment kind of ruined the artistry though. In a nicer place, a house or some such, it would have been oddly beautiful. Might have made for a good painting in his old apartment. But here, the cheap carpet embraced the blood to the point he had to avoid the puddles.

A meow drew him into the kitchen. He raised a brow, and entered into the tiny thing, to look down at a cat on the counter.

“ ... the hell?”

“Eric’s cat. Kat,” Jessy said. She was in the kitchen with the creature, and sighing as she stroked the small animal’s cheek. “Said she was a dumbass. Considering she’s still here, after this fucking insanity, and has zero issue with strangers? Yeah, total dumbass.”

“Ferret, trapped in a cat’s body.”

“Excuse me?” She raised a brow at him, and scratched the cat behind the ears. Audible purrs followed.

“Never seen a ferret before?”

“Cat snakes?”

“ ... um, sure. I owned some, in my early experiments with animalism. Give them five minutes around humans, and they become sociable with them for the rest of their lives. Zero survival instincts.” Cute as buttons, though. There were few animals that personified playfulness and obliviousness quite like a ferret.

Jessy smiled, for a moment, but he didn't manage to get a laugh out of her. She looked sad. That was surprising, considering how the girl never looked sad. Angry, sure. Happy, often. Sad? Never. But her eyes were downtrodden, and her shoulders hung heavy as she slipped past Julias and back into the crime scene. He followed after her, but made a glance back at Kat the cat. The animal sat there on the counter top, and did nothing.

Back through the apartment, small as it was. The knocked over boxes were almost tragic, with how few things were in them, some clothes fallen out of them and scattered about onto the soaked crimson carpet. This Eric fellow must have been living a sparse life.

“Any signs of struggle in the bedroom?” he said.

“No, everything is localized to the living room and the front door.”

“Any idea what happened?”

“Sort of.” Jessy waved a hand over. A couple of ghouls were walking around, taking pictures while also preparing cleaning supplies. One of them was Jessy's. The man nodded to Julias, almost a bow, and Julias made eye contact with him, enough to accept the gesture, ghoul to vampire.

“What have you got?”

“Arm,” Jessy said.

“Arm?”

“Arm.” She squatted down, and pointed to the corner of the apartment. Behind one of the blood-splattered boxes, was an arm, sleeve wrapped around it and half-soaked red. The arm wasn’t cut off, and Julias doubted it could have been shot off, despite all the bullet holes and casings lying around. No explosives had been set off either. But arms didn’t magically fall off, someone had to have removed it from someone else.

Someone must have torn the arm off.

“It’s not Eric’s arm,” she said. “I ... oh shit.” Waddling forward, still in a squat position, she reached out, and pushed aside some more boxes, ones that had been sitting underneath the most bloody wall.

Body parts.

“ ... Pitt, you fucking little sack of garbage.” She reached out, and yanked out a head from the pile. His dead gaze stared up at them, mouth open, fear etched into his paralyzed muscles. It would have been more normal to see such a head on a pike. “See this fucker? This is Pitt, works for Montel.”

“Long’s man?”

“Yep.” She stared at the head, glaring, grimacing, lip curled into a sneer as a tiny growl escaped her. “Always wanted to kill this fucker, but it’d be juvenile of me. No reason to make things harder with Terra Den either.”

“Why’s he here?”

“Eric had a debt with Montel. I told Long to drop it.”

“A large debt?”

“Nope. Pennies. I’m guessing Montel overstepped, or Long was looking to piss us off on purpose.” Shrugging, she pulled the boxes further away from the wall, exposing more body parts. Some more heads, two of them missing significant chunks of their skull. More arms, more legs, many again having been torn or otherwise missing too many pieces to complete the limb.

The smell wasn’t too bad yet. Scene couldn’t have been more than six hours ago. Happened before Jack called him about the ritual then.

“How’d you know to come here so quickly?” he said.

“Ganders called me. Said Eric didn’t show up for work.”

“He called you?”

“He knows I hang out with Eric at the club sometimes. And he knows that Eric knows about Kindred, so he knows Eric wouldn’t just randomly take a sick day with him under our thumb, especially not without telling him.” She shrugged, but every time she said the man’s name, her shoulders slumped a little more, and her head fell down a little more. Poor girl probably didn’t realize it, or what it meant.

But, not his place to pry into something like that.

“Anything here that could be him?” he said, gesturing to the pile of body parts. The fuck was in the Dolareido air lately, that could cause these sorts of scenes? Jack’s report about the ritual was barbaric and brutal enough, but now it was Julias standing before a disgusting sight, not Jack.

“Nah. I’m seeing ... well, I mean I guess I’m seeing ... three?” She got up, moved over to a different corner, and pushed aside some more boxes. “Make that four bodies. Missing a lot of meat though, lot ... ugh, ok, well, the guts are here.” Gagging, she stepped back, and brushed her fingers off on her jeans. “And ... there ... and over there...”

The blood on the walls that surrounded the apartment, was because someone had flung the limbs, the torsos with opened bellies too, into the walls like water balloons. Splat. That explained the patterns.

“Not enough mass,” he said, stepping around Jessy’s ghoul, and pointing to the body parts. Another box here, another box there — most of them were mostly empty, poor guy owned almost nothing — pushed aside revealed more shreds of flesh. A hand with a ring. A shoe, quality, with the attached foot and leg coming halfway up the shin. The bones were broken, cracked like twigs.

“So many claw marks.” Jessy gestured to one of the legs, where another ghoul was taking a picture. “This is nothing like that ritual site Jack found. That was planned, and meticulous. This is chaos incarnate.”

Two clean ups in one night was unheard of, and they were of polar opposite nature too. Chaos didn’t begin to describe it.

“Gangrel gone on a frenzy, perhaps?” He walked over to the front door again, and looked down the hall. The walls were damaged, and now that Jessy said the word ‘claw’, he had no choice but to frame everything in that mind. The trio of lines down the wall, all the way down the hallway? Claw marks. Enormous claw marks. Something had been dragging their claws against the wall as they moved.

“Maybe. We could do that, make some claws big enough for that. Doesn’t seem Gangrel style though.” She followed him out into the hallway, where two more ghouls, and Vivienne Maorie were standing.

“This ... is pretty bad,” Vivi called out from the room at the end of the hallway. “Old woman in here, scared senseless. Alive though.”

Nodding, Julias looked down as he walked. There was some blood splatter in the hall, but not where Julias wanted it, on the feet. A bloody footprint would have been great, something he could use to identify. Instead, there were various puncture marks along the shitty ceramic tile. Weird patterns, weird scratches.

No, not so weird, not if he let himself consider the possibility.

“Someone tall made these claw marks?” he said, looking over his shoulder to Jessy as he walked to the other apartment.

“Someone, something, yeah.”

“Someone or something that can rip apart people like paper.”

“... I see where you’re going, Julias.” She jogged up to him, shaking her head. “No chance in hell one of Avery’s people did this. I mean, why the fuck would they? The hell reason would they have to be here?”

“Mister Mire may be correct.” Vivi came forward, and offered him a bow. Natasha’s childe, a meek and shy girl, offered her best smile, and most confident stance. Not very. “If you look here, you’ll see the weird scratches in the floor are mostly in line with each other, and there are four of them at a time, the two in the center slightly ahead of the others.”

“Claw marks on the feet?” Jessy got down beside one of the long stretches of slashed tile, and looked back over her shoulder. “The fuck ... we got any surveillance on this building?”

“Only the entrance to the building, outside.” Nodding as she looked down, Vivienne walked up to Jessy and offered her her phone. On the screen was a camera feed, and Julias stepped in to look over the Gangrel’s shoulder to watch.

A shitty angle, providing little detail. Blurs from cars driving by, and a long distance, meant the footage wouldn't be providing much.

But the three of them gasped when the front door of the building smashed open, and a blur came out. Well, that explained the front door of the building being busted open and sent into the street. It didn't explain the blur though, a smudge darting down the alley, and into the darkness. A large blur.

“... can you enhance this at all?” Jessy said.

Vivi raised a brow at her. No, technology couldn't do that, it couldn't fabricate accuracy from nothing; or at least, not technology that was being circulated yet, or available to the Invictus. Julias tried to hide his smirk, but he could see Vivi struggle on how to tell her superior that she watched too much TV, and the zoom in and enhance thing was bullshit.

“Um, no, sir. That technology is still in the works.”

“Damn.” She threw up her hands, and leaned in closer, as if a few more inches gained on the blurs would help identify. “This ... this blur doesn't look like the rest of the blurry shit though. This is extra blurry. Like it's warped.”

“... didn't we have reports that pictures of the Uratha, when Simon visited, were warped?” Julias stepped away from the two, and walked down the hall into the where the claw marks continued. They went down the stairs and out the door as well, a mix of slashes and cuts that, now in the new context, did indeed look like the marks a huge wolf might leave behind. He started down the hallway, away from Eric's apartment, and toward the door at the end of the hall that was forced open. “I remember cameras were new technology at the time. We chalked it up to bad tech. But, if this is something that Uratha lunacy can do...”

“Similar to Kindred, in a way ... except for this.” Vivi followed after him, and cut by him. Surprising, but she had the look of someone determined on her face, lost in her moment of realization.

She guided him into the apartment ahead. No blood except for some around the claw marks. The door had been kicked in hard enough that it came off the hinges, and slammed into the wall of the small home. And there, a raggedy woman sat in a chair, hands on her temples, rocking back and forth.

“I ... I ... my door is gone ... I ... I...”

Julias looked back to Jessy, but after settling in the room, she raised a brow at the woman, and shrugged. “Looks pretty loony to me,” he said. Terrible, terrible way to describe it, but it was accurate enough. Her eyes were all over the place, or staring ahead into nothing, as she cradled her skull like it might fall off if she didn’t. “What did you see?” He squatted down in front of her, and waited.

“A ... b-blur ... blur ... blur? It ... the bad men, they came and ... they were hurting him, and ... blur ... and ... blood ... and ... screams and yelling.”

He raised a brow and looked at Vivi. “Bad men?”

“She means Pitt, and his goons,” Jessy said. “Fucker was a slimy piece of shit, and you could tell just by looking at him.” Jessy moved in front of the kine, and waved a hand in front of her eyes. No reaction. “Yeap, loony. What a fucking stereotype.”

It was a silly stereotype. The vampire stereotype was that they didn’t appear in mirrors, or on film, which was absurd. They appeared, but in pictures or footage, the faces were always a touch blurry, or never met the lens straight on. The fact this woman was actually confused, and dazed, almost to the point of appearing like a lunatic for the Uratha sighting, was so on-the-nose as to almost be drôle. The fact the footage of the werewolf was blurry, blatantly blurry, was just as aggressive and obvious as Uratha were in general.

Maybe Jack was right. He was hard on Azamel, threatening her and her hole in the ground, but he was kind to the Uratha, asking for their help and giving them their space, when the evidence was here in front of him that maybe the Uratha were a bigger issue. He hadn't seen damage like this since a young Gangrel had gone frenzy in their apartment building, and had killed their neighbor. A blood bath, and a lot of work for the Invictus to clean up, and hide from the media.

That Gangrel had been found, and once it became clear they were lost to their beast, in a near constant state of frenzy, they were executed. If they found this Uratha in the same state, the result would be the same, no matter what Avery said. The Prince and the sheriff would deal with it, and as much as the Uratha were brutally strong, the dragons would be able to handle it. But if they did, Avery's backlash could be catastrophic.

This night was turning into a pain.

“Ma’am.” Julias snapped his fingers in front of the woman’s face. No response. He touched her shoulder, and her gaze snapped to him. Better. “Ma’am. Nothing happened here tonight. Nothing happened to the man down the hall, and nothing happened to your door. It was all a construction accident.”

He stared into her eyes, her trembling gaze, and reached into her mind. A spark, a white spark, floating around inside her, something he could see as he reached out for her mind. Something mystical, something beyond definition, except that it was inside the shell of her mind, and a mind was something he could define, and rewrite.

His thoughts drifted to Jen, and her verbal jousting. Did he believe in a soul? Yes, he did. He believed he could crush it, too. But he had no need to crush it, he wasn't Viktor. A subtle touch, gentle fingers on the mind, to wipe aside the memories until they were nothing but blurred tracks in the sand, was more than enough.

“Sleep.”

Down she went, head rolling back, body collapsing backward in her chair as she went limp.

“Fucking impressive,” Jessy said.

“Yes, very.” Vivi smiled up at him, nodding.

Nothing like compliments from a couple of beautiful ladies to stroke a man’s ego. He winked at Vivi, and motioned for them to come back out to the hallway, then down the stairs to the front door of the apartment building.

Several cops stood around, with police tape blocking off the scene. Thralls, and one ghoul. The residents who came home from work stood outside, waiting to get in, arguing with the cops about how their oven might be on, or their cat needed to be fed.

And, thinking of, Julias looked behind him, and raised a brow as Jessy came down with Eric’s cat in her arms.

“ ... what? She needs someone to look after her, until we find him.”

He came back in, and stood with the two women on the stairway, small glances over his shoulder to make sure no one could hear. “You don’t think the Uratha got him? Assuming it was an Uratha, and not something else.” Always the possibility it was a Begotten, after all.

“I...” Frowning, she looked down at the cat in her arms. The cat was oblivious to what was happening, except that someone was holding him, and that that meant snuggles. Cute, but kind of pathetic too. Pathetic could be cute though, when it was on something like a cat. “I’m not sure he wasn’t the Uratha who did this.”

“ ... say what?”

Vivi turned around as well, both eyebrows raised. “Why do you say that?”

“He felt ... different, you know? Didn’t feel like other kine. And I tasted him. Fucker tasted damn good.” She held Kat to her chest, and the cat had no issue rubbing herself into her neck. Perhaps she smelled Eric. “But, yeah, I didn’t think he had this in him. So, I dunno, it might not be? I ... oh fucking shit, Fiona.”

Julias motioned for Jessy to follow him, and continued outside. “What about her?” The police had the alleyway blocked off as well, and the two of them went down the path. Invictus clean up crew included Vivi, and she nodded to Julias as he nodded to her, before she stayed behind.

“Fiona had an interest in him, kind of out of the blue. And ... and didn’t she go to him, asking if he’d seen Jack and whatnot, when he disappeared?”

“That’s what the Prince told me, with what she was willing to share in her report. So Eric told her, anyway.”

“I wonder why she was so interested in him, why she went to him specifically.” Shrugging, she jogged to catch up to him, and walk beside him shoulder to shoulder. “She’s a monster, right? Jack says she can see us, see other paranormals, see what we are with only a glance. So, if she saw something in Eric ... knew he might be able to help finding Jack...”

“ ... that does make sense.” He stopped at the manhole between buildings, and peered down into the black. Someone had yanked manhole cover off, and thrown it. A hundred-and-fifty-pound disc, embedded into a dumpster thirty feet further down. God damn.

“We going down there?” she said.

“I shouldn’t, supposedly. I’m supposed to be working on the macro, and letting you do the micro.”

“Yeah, but Jack and Damien aren’t nearby, and neither is Isabella’s crew, or—”

“Exactly.” Sighing at himself for being such a moron, he started to climb down the ladder. “Bring the cat. If you’re right and it’s Eric, and he’s going berserk, then maybe the sight — or smell — of his cat will make him hesitate.”

“And if it’s not Eric?”

“Then the cat’s owner is dead.”

She winced, and looked back to the alley they came from.

It was written all over the girl’s face, and she didn’t know it. A lot like Beatrice in so many ways. But he couldn’t tell her, it’d only damage the outcome; what that outcome would be, he had no idea, but best to let it progress on its own. Maybe she’d figure it out, with how much she’d suddenly developed an attachment to the man’s cat.

A cat. If Eric was a werewolf, it didn’t make much sense that he owned a cat. Then again, Kat the cat seemed more than stupid enough to not care. Lucky for Eric, if Jessy’s hunch was correct.

And she probably was. She was an Invictus right hand both because she had brawn, and she had a knack for good hunches. Worked well with Natasha’s analytical side.

God damn, he missed Tash.

---

---

~~Eric~~

Bite.

Kill.

Tear.

Shred.

Eat.

Hunt.

Hide.

Hiding was strange, and weird, and wrong, but a part of him, somewhere inside the pulsing waves of his mind, knew he had to hide. They'd be coming. He had to defend his territory, defend himself, but he couldn't do that if he was surrounded. He needed a better place, someway to defend himself, and then return to his territory. His territory. His. No one else's.

He looked at the walls of the tunnel. Hard wall. Man's wall. The shapes in repeating patterns made him growl in frustration. Flickering light ahead, from the walls above him. Dead silence ahead of him, unending, deep into the ground where it was safe. Safer.

Get back to the top, kill everyone and everything.

No! Safe, find safe place, let this pass, then go back, then make safe. Rip and tear and eat anymore who dare violate your home.

He licked his chops, mind swirling with the thrill of the kill, the taste of blood, of human flesh. Human, man, stupid prey, mostly bone. But that small human, the one he hated, hated with everything, was tasty. Fat was tasty.

Eric crunched down on his teeth, and let out a satisfied rumble as he felt the remains of human bone break apart between his back teeth. Yes, humans, in their stupid layers of color. The colors, blue and white and black, they did not taste good. But the meat inside, the flesh, the blood, was delicious.

There had been other humans, a couple, that had seen him as he ran for the tunnel entrance. They squeaked like rats as he tore the hard thing from the tunnel's mouth, and jumped into the blackness below, getting underneath the ground. He knew they would be no threat, and his hunger was satisfied.

The hunger was, the anger wasn't.

He knew which tunnel he picked, knew how to get to it, the tunnels beneath the tunnels where humans didn't go. There was a barrier between him and the tunnel, of that same hard thing that had cut his belly, but the word was long lost. Whatever it was, he tore it off the human wall, nothing more than a piece of grass in his path. Now, he was deeper, and deeper into the ground.

Alone, in the dark, he howled until it rang in his ears, until it echoed down the long darkness between the flickering light, man light, and he slashed the wall. The hardness gave way to his claws, like grass, like twigs, like skin. He slashed again, and again it split apart. Again, and again, he slashed, and slashed, until a roar was joining it. He didn't mean to roar, but it came out, came pouring out of him, echoing down the tunnel with more heat and impact than his howl could hope to match.

He wanted to kill.

He wanted to tear things apart.

He wanted to feel a living thing bleed in his mouth. Feel them die between his teeth. Feel them snap, break, crush. Nothing else mattered, nothing in the world. All that mattered was the hunt, the kill, the pulsing fire rushing through his veins, the saliva dripping from his chops, the hunger in his chest for violence.

Some inkling, some tiny spark of him knew what he was doing, knew he was stalking through the tunnels, knew he was bigger, and stronger. Knew he had survived getting stabbed.

Stabbed. Not clawed, not bitten, stabbed. Human word, stab, with metal. Metal was the word, to stab with metal. Metal knife, metal cover tunnel, metal door in the tunnel, and ... concrete.

He shook his head left and right, and smashed his shoulder into the human wall, hard enough for some of it to crumble away and fall at his feet. His feet? His claws. Talons. His paws.

Thoughts bubbled beneath the rage, but he couldn't pull them up. Every time an image, a word, someone or something that made sense, that reminded him of ... something ... it was washed away in a torrent of red rapids. Fight. Kill. Bite and tear. Rip and shred. Hunt.

He continued along the tunnels, and raised his nose as he sniffed the air. Dead things were walking around, dangerous. They weren't prey, he couldn't eat a dead thing, but he could kill them if he had to. Most of them were not dangerous enough to stop him; some were, but not most. None of them were around either, not as far as he could tell. The still air hid the scents of others, but only to a point. He was alone.

Or, wasn't. He came to a stop, crouched down low until his colossal claws found the old, worn hard things beneath him, two of them running together along the ground behind and in front of him. He licked his chops, felt his saliva drip from his tongue, and moved forward into the awaiting blackness. The human's lights no longer worked, no longer shined upon the hard earth and tunnel around him. Darkness, around the turn, darkness ahead into the depths of the awaiting chasm. Darkness, to cover his guise for the two seconds he needed, before he could strike.

This one ahead of him, in the black, wasn't one of the dead walkers. This one was alive.

They weren't there a moment ago, though. Out of nothing, out of the ground or the sky, or the walls of human hand, this one came. This new prey wasn't human, but, was. He could smell it, smell the blood, the flesh, the breath. He could hear the beating heart, he could hear the swishing of human colors rubbing human skin with movement. And most of all, he could hear the tap of feet against the tunnel floor.

Tap.

Tap.

Tap.

The beat of it—her, from the smell, the beat of her heart matched her footsteps almost exactly.

Thump.

Thump.

Thump.

Closer, and closer, the human came closer, unsuspecting, unknowing. Easy prey, easy food, easy to taste more of that flesh. More of that sinful flesh.

Sinful flesh?

Meat! Meat, organs, bone, sinew. Rip and tear. Kill them, hunt and hunt and hunt and drown in the taste of flesh. He threw himself at the oncoming movement, his roar shattering the silence as his talons sundered the hard ground underneath him. He was heavy now, massive, and yet, light, his strength having no trouble moving him with the grace of a hare. One leap, two leap, the ground underneath flew by as he sailed over it, pounced over it, and threw the whole of his body at the woman.

She threw her hand out at him, and from the darkness, movement came. In the obsidian depths of the tunnel, where what little light existed was lost around the corners, he caught a glimpse of the massive, skeleton arm, that greeted him with its knuckles.

He bit, and clawed, and tore into the enormous hand, but he was biting, clawing, and tearing into bone, a giant bone arm. This woman had bone arms?

The darkness was close to absolute, in this section of the tunnel, almost as if the female had wanted the darkness, had come from, or had sought the darkness. And whoever, or whatever she was, she could see him well enough to punch him. He had trouble seeing her though, the black burying him.

If only there'd been a flicker of moonlight, this alien thing would be dead and eaten.

He lunged again, and she threw herself back, rolling onto her shoulder and back onto her feet. All blurs in the dark, a subtle silhouette all he had to go on, and his ears and sense of smell. It was enough. He pounced at her again, snarling, roaring, and landed on her with his claws.

But again, hard bone formed a well between him and the soft flesh, between him and the thing that smelled of sweat and skin, between him and meat. It had to be an arm, enormous, and strong enough to catch his weight, and launch him back. He had no idea how some sack of meat could be that strong, but he flew backward, and landed on his back, hard ground greeting him. Pain? A tiny thing, pain, background noise, lost in the raging, screaming tides of pumping blood in his skull.

Again he dove at her, this time going low. But, despite being on all fours, he was still as tall as the human-looking thing he was hunting. If only he could see her! See her, bite into her, rip her open, eat her muscles and taste the layers of fat under her skin.

For a moment, a fleeting second in the dark, he saw eyes. Two white, beady eyes in the dark, spread further apart than a human's eyes. This human thing had something with her, inside her, something defending her, fighting for her, with her. Something he could kill.

He rammed into her, shoulder first. She blocked with the arm again, and he knew she would. With the whole of his weight smashing into her, and his talons digging into the hard rock of the tunnel ground, he slammed her back. She flew, rolling against the floor, body almost bouncing. Opportunity! Throat, go for the throat, or the belly, tear open the soft flesh, bleed the prey. He dove at her again, claws first.

The giant bone hand came out from underneath him, up through the ground. No sound, no rumbling, and the ground did not break. Like a ghost reaching through the earth, the hand came into existence, materialized, and the enormous silhouette punched into his stomach and legs. The forward momentum caused the punching monster arm to crush his legs against the ceiling, and he thundered agony and rage as the angle caused his shin and ankle to bend, bend, and break.

He fell, body limp, pain causing the muscles in his body to clench, only making the pain worse. And then, the pain renewed, as he felt the muscles and tendons within the mangled and ruined limb force the bones back into position, force the cartilage back into form, and seal, as if by fire. Crack. Crunch. His body was not gentle with the process. It did not care for his pain, for the misery coursing through his veins, it snapped back the flesh and sealed the wounds with all the grace of an earthquake.

But he was healed, and he could continue the hunt. All that mattered now was to get up, and pounce at her again. He was bigger than her, stronger than her, and—

In the darkness, the blur of onyx unleashed both fists, each fist almost as big as his body, and each fist made of hard bone. Each fist slammed into his body. The shock of impact was like falling into a frozen river. He slammed into the tunnel wall, and his skull crashed into the concrete hard enough to dent it, to earn crumbling bits of it onto his fur.

He recognized that arm.

“At ... thalia?” His tongue didn’t move the way he wanted it to. His lips didn’t exist. But he wanted to talk, had to talk.

And the voice, what did the great voice tell him? Breathe. He had to breathe.

“ ... you must be Eric.” The woman walked over to him, and stared down at him, from what he could tell from the silhouette. Down. He was lying down, on his ass, enormous legs out in front of him. Fur. Claws. “I suppose you know who I am because you saw me in the nightmare, after I showed up with Beatrice.”

“I...” I. Eric. Wake up. Wake up you fucking idiot, wake up and fucking breathe!

He looked back at the dent in the wall. A big fucking dent, made by his body. His steel body. He got back to his feet, easily at that, the wounds, the concussion, all fading away in moments. Some nicely, some not so nicely, screaming their vengeance at him in a flurry of pain as the wounds within him healed.

He stood tall, and breathed deep, each breath bombarding him with a thousand scents. With this woman so close, most of them came from her. He could smell old bone. He could smell the stones of a cemetery. He could smell cigarette smoke, a complicated aroma. And he could smell rotting flesh. Most of those he could guess, but the rotting flesh?

He looked at her, then the ground, the wall, the ceiling, all details lost in darkness. But, a smash into the wall jolted his body just like an ice bath did, and he forced that little spark of thinking up through the lava coursing through his veins.

“I’m ... Eric.”

“Having trouble talking there, big guy? Christ, get out of that form before you give me a heart attack.”

Form. Form? He was in a form. He was so fucking tall! He put out his hands in front of him, and blinked at the titanic size of his claws, his palms.

He was a fucking werewolf.

“I ... I don’t ... I...”

“Sounds like you’re going through your first change? Well fuck me, if I hadn’t seen you coming, I’d be dead.” She gestured to the darkness around them, arm a blur in the black. “Perk of who I am, darkness is no issue. Now, let’s just step back out into the light, and you can take a breather and calm down.”

“C ... Calm down...” Hard to talk, but the words had to come. But, as he talked, so did the memories. “I ... trying to remember ... trying to—”

BREATHE!

The thunder of the moon's voice shattered his mind, and he fell to a knee as his claws grabbed his skull.

BREATHE!

He gasped, lungs fighting against him, muscles clamping down, air resisting until he forced it in. One hand fell to the ground, and he grumbled and groaned as agony shook him, paper cuts on his insides where he couldn't see or touch. Biting, gnawing, eating at him from the inside out. Something, he was supposed to do something.

He was supposed to calm the fuck down. Let it out. Let it go. Breathe. Just breathe.

Don't breathe! Not next to this monster, this alien, this deadly thing from the black.

Breathe. She is not your enemy. Those hunters are. This Athalia woman is not. Fiona is not.

He forced in the breaths again, each deep into his diaphragm, each causing a low rumbling sound, quiet but there, almost a purr. The monster next to him chuckled, and smirked at him, as the two of them walked a little further until they were under some weak light a ways down the tunnel.

Breathe, and relax.

He groaned again, pain working through his bones and muscles as they began to shrink, as the weight began to fade. The ceiling above him grew more distant. The claws beneath him grew closer, and smaller. The length of his arms decreased, pulling into him, as well as his claws.

Clothes began to reform. Human fabrics. His fur faded, along with his tough skin, and human fabric colors emerged, the black pants and the tight gray t-shirt, the nice shoes, all clothes he couldn't afford before he got his new job.

Job. He had a job.

Jessy. Jessy had said she'd dealt with his debt.

Pitt, Montel, and Long disagreed.

He'd eaten Pitt. Eaten. Eaten. Eaten.

Eric fell to his knees, and vomited.

“Oh god ... oh ... fucking god ... I ate someone, I—”

“Avery should have visited you to deal with this, help you deal before it got to this point.”

“Avery ... I don't know an Avery. Fiona mentioned her, but ... where is she? Where is Fiona? She was supposed to ... to tell me ... about who I am.” He stared at the mess of shit he vomited up. It was red in color.

More memories surfaced, digging up through the crimson rapids they were lost in. Faces. Clothes and flesh tearing in his hands, bones breaking. Screams. The sweet satisfaction of meat, of prey, breaking apart in his jaws. He was defending himself, his territory, and succeeding.

“I need to go back. I ... I have to ... my cat, and ... oh god, the damage, and ... and...”

“The Invictus will cover up the damage. Your concern should be whether or not you'll get in trouble for damaging their stupid little Masquerade.”

“... shit. Shit shit shit.” He forced himself back up to his feet. “I ... I must have destroyed ... so much. Fuck. What do I do?”

The woman shrugged, and rotated her shoulders a few times. Recovering from the fight. She looked like a regular woman now, but the monster inside her had managed to hold him off, hit him hard enough to knock some sense into him. Scary.

“I hate to say it, but I suggest you stay down here with us, honestly.” Sighing, she waved a hand in the direction he came from. “The vamps might shoot you on sight, if they think you’re too dangerous to keep alive. They might not, I don’t know. And they’ll use silver bullets too.”

Silver bullets were a thing? Shit.

“And ... and this Avery woman?”

“Werewolf. Bunch of werewolves here in Dolareido, a pack of them. They’ll want to talk to you.”

“Oh...”

“Just, follow me. Don’t do anything stupid, ok? Follow me, remain calm, and keep yourself under control.”

“You make it sound like I’m a wild animal.”

She laughed at him, and shrugged, complete with a slow head shake. The classic ‘you’re an idiot and what am I going to do with you’ sign.

“You are.”

“I...” He breathed deep, and his eyes went wide as the bombardment of smells washed over him. Sensory overload. He could feel every crevice of the soles of his shoes. He could feel the ground, the hard metal of the old tracks, pushing through his shoes too, the specs of dirt. He could taste the stagnant air, and the individual smells of vampires that used it. His nose knew they were dead things, just from the smell. He could see better; not in pitch dark better, like this monster woman apparently could, but he could still see a shit load better than before. He could hear the distant vibrations of cars overhead, and their sounds echoing down and dancing through the tunnels.

“Yeah, your first change must be quite the night. So, keep yourself in check, or I’ll put you in the ground, ok?”

“Yeah ... yeah ok.” As he followed after the deadly monster, a big smile started to grace his face.

“The fuck you smiling about?”

“ ... my knee feels fine.”

~~Natasha~~

Cemeteries were cliché.

Such was the way of Dolareido, created by vampires over the course of its growth, from a simple village to a massive city of millions. The elders had shaped its growth and biased its construction, turning it into both a utopia for Kindred to enjoy sustainable food, but also, to enjoy other indulges. Macabre art? Check. Cemeteries and catacombs? Check. Hilariously common dark alleys were functional for Kindred to take advantage of too, but a lot of the lighting placement also emphasized the shadows in drastic ways, purely for edgy aesthetics.

It was Maria’s Cathedral, once Lucas’s Cathedral, that was perhaps the most impressive sight though. The Elysium Tower, the Black Hall, Xnomina HQ, the strips of clubs and high roll casinos, they were all impressive sights to behold. But it was the Grand Cathedral of Dolareido that Lucas built, without the Prince's permission, that was the most grand site of all. Tash was surprised the Prince didn't tear it down after the purge. She knew Maria protested, but it wasn't like Antoinette couldn't do it anyway.

Maybe the Prince liked the giant, Gothic building, and refused to admit it?

Tash stared at the huge building in the distance, as she and her two werewolves stepped into the Three Kings Cemetery.

"God damn," Art said. "This place is fucking amazing." He walked on the path of stones interspersed along the smooth ground, and gestured to the enormous tombstones around him. "This is something straight out of a museum, or history, or something. Look at this." Eyes wide and jaw almost dropped, he stood before an enormous tombstone, an angel, covered in a cloak to hide her face. She stood over him, enormous, sword and shield dropped and sculpted into the base of the robe. "Here lies Carla Bianco, protector and saint."

Matt came up to join him, whistling as he looked up at the angel. "What's her story?"

Tash shrugged, and joined them. "1894 t-to 1905. Oh, I remember r-r-reading ... about this. She was a child, who saved s-someone from an angry d-d-dog."

"Oh fuck." Art stepped back, grimacing, and looked down to her with sad puppy eyes. "A dog killed her?"

Sighing, she shook her head, and walked along the path to the next grave. "N-No, it was the story that m-m-made her famous. She ... d-died of an illness." It was 1905 after all, and diseases were deadly back then.

“Hard to imagine that this city’s been around for centuries, with vamps here for most of it.” Matt gestured to the Cathedral in the distance, and then continued along the path up further, toward the mausoleums in the back. “Centuries is a long time.”

Yeah, it was. She was fifty years embraced, and it was a becoming a reality that was she becoming one of those older, stronger, deadlier vampires. Ancilla. Was it fifty-one now? It was a lot of years, and the earlier years, especially her human years, were blurs. Remembering the details of a former life was difficult.

She’d once heard a theory that people had trouble remembering their childhood memories, especially those before the age of four, due to the difference in how a person’s mind works as an adult. Incompatible. She had no idea if there was any truth to that, but, she felt similar, with how her mind had trouble remembering things from her time as a human. The disconnect between smells, hunger, taste, even how things felt to the skin, was too huge.

Not being able to feel the sun on her skin again, well, she’d always been a library geek anyway. The sun had been nothing but cruel to her pale skin, if memory served. Now it was doubly cruel, so no real loss there. Jessy, she remembered lamenting the loss for years. Said she was a fan of the nude beach. Dolareido didn’t have a beach; she’d meant tanning on the roof. And probably fucking on the roof, too.

Wow. She stopped, and blinked. Strolling through a cemetery was sending her mind into a stroll down memory lane, like a fly to honey. Arg, so hopelessly cliché! Bleh.

“W-Why are we here,” she said to the boys, as they started following her. It was their noses that took her here, after all.

Art caught up, but stopped the moment another tombstone caught his eye. “The sort of fucked up shit you found at that strange ritual is the sort of shit wraiths are interested in, the weird kind of wraith spirits you find in Dolareido anyway.”

“W-What kind of wraiths are you ... more used t-t-to dealing with?”

Matt caught up as well, but like Art, stopped as his eyes locked onto the tombstone. “Well, your typical shadow wraith is your black shadow fear monster. Looks kind of like a ghost, all black and inky and shit, vague features, big glowing, scary eyes. They spread fear, they are fear.”

“But,” Art said, cutting in, “what you got here in Slut City is a bit different. The wraiths here are a bit bloodier, and a bit more interested in ... well, gore.”

“ ... gore?” She shivered again, rubbed her arms, and looked at the tombstone they were looking at. A man, a knight, carved into the stone, standing with his sword blade pointed down between his legs, hands on the hilt while the sword stabbed into the nameplate. The knight looked like something out of the age of King Arthur, fantasy and history combined, with many of his features hidden in a cloak billowing in the nonexistent wind. It would have been tacky, if not for the similar tombstones everywhere.

Dolareido was many things, but subtle wasn't one of them.

Art nodded. “Yeah. They like fear, but they also have this infatuation with blood, and guts, and bones and shit. I have no idea what sort of soil would grow fucked up spirits like that, but apparently that's what you got here.”

“And we know they come here regularly, this specific cemetery ... and ... I smell ... something weird.”

“W-Weird?” she said, looking up at the boys.

“Something’s going on,” he said.

Nodding, the two boys looked at each other. “Ruh roh. Time to investigate.” Together, in unison.

Oh god damn it.

Chapter 62

~~Natasha~~

“This place reeks of wraiths ... but ... there’s more.” Matt pointed them toward the mausoleums, deep in the cemetery, raised up slightly on the gentle slope with platforms of stone, concrete, and stairs. “Someone’s been walking this path.”

“Can’t smell em,” Art said, “but yeah, someone’s been walking this path.”

“B-But, if you can’t smell em, how d-do you know?”

“Traces of difference in ... eh, it’s hard to describe.” The gentle giant shrugged, and started up the slope toward the back of the cemetery. Big cemetery. Walking there would take a moment. “And ... there’s ... there has to be a locus here. Has to be. Where is it?”

Art shrugged, and the two of them started poking around tombstones as they continued on. “Dunno Lenny, keep looking.”

Lenny and George; sometimes she wondered if either of them had actually read the book, or had just seen the movie. Gary Sinise was delicious in 1992, yum. She rolled her eyes at where her thoughts went, and refocused her mind.

“Umm, I know that B-Beatrice used to live in a different cemetery, South Hill Cemetery. But, um, I don’t think any Kindred live here.”

“I know I can smell something weird,” Art said, stepping around another enormous tombstone. A statue of an angel, again, this one with a skull face, armor, and six wings. The werewolf continued along, bending down and over, and looking at various grooves in the ground and such.

“W-What’re you looking for?”

“A secret switch.”

“ ... a what?”

“Secret switch.” He shrugged, and gestured to Matt. The big guy was doing the same thing, down on a knee behind one of the statues, and running his hands underneath the grooves of the stone.

“Why ... w-would there be a secret switch?”

“City was built by vampires, right? I assume every major area has a half-dozen secret switches or levers, to open secret doors, to secret tunnels and whatnot.”

Laughing, she shook her head. “Um, m-maybe? I may be older than you, b-b-but ... still n-nowhere near as old as Jacob, or Antoinette, or the others. They m-might know, but they wouldn’t t-tell us if they did.”

Matt stood up, and looked at her like she was crazy. “Your bosses wouldn’t even trust you with things like secret stashes?”

“N-No, it’s not their fault, I w-wouldn’t either.”

“You wouldn’t trust your Vivi with a secret location?” Art said, moving his search further up the path.

“Not all of them, no. She understands. It’s ... it’s b-because ... Kindred live so long, and ... and you c-can’t trust someone to always b-b-be an ally. She might be d-dominated by a powerful Ventrue, or coerced by a p-powerful Daeva. Or, with d-decades of time, might no longer like you, m-might no longer be ... an ally.” No wonder so many Kindred lives turned into soap opera dramas. They had the years and the motivations to make a soap-opera-esque string of ridiculous circumstances a reality.

She smiled at Art and his question, though. He remembered Vivi's name.

"Avery says you vamps need to learn to trust each other, and watch each other's backs," Matt said, heading in her direction, before passing her and heading up further through the cemetery. "Or rather, she says you need to, but it can't, and won't ever happen."

"That ... is accurate," she said. No hope there, despite Antoinette's best efforts, to ever get Kindred trusting each other. There were acceptable compromises though, and Tash felt Dolareido had found that, for the most part.

"Maybe it's a good thing we're here, then." Art winked at her, and gestured for Matt to follow as he walked up to the mausoleums. "Could be a case of a lack of proper role models. I, for one, would make an excellent role model for new Kindred." Placed at the top of the slope of the massive graveyard, the row of mausoleums overlooked the rest of the cemetery, the imposing buildings of stone and their adorned stairways and archways casting judgment over approaching explorers. Art and Matt shivered, and Tash did as well, eyes looking between each religious symbol that awaited her. Excitement, anticipation, or preparation, she wasn't sure what it was she was seeing in the two men, but the weight of their bodies shifted forward onto the balls of their toes more, and their fingers curled and uncurled at their sides. They were getting ready for something.

Hard to ignore a mental image of two dogs, excited before a front door as they hear the unique noise of the master's car pulling up the driveway.

The two of them stood before the mausoleums, and their eyes scanned over the beautiful artwork. The statues were impressive, and she spent some time re-imprinting the image of them in her memory. The one of the female angel, nude, with sword drawn high, and a man's collapsing body cradled to her side with the other hand, was empowering. But, the two boys were more interested in the statues of Mary.

The stairway up to the mausoleum wasn't very big or long, a single step in reality; the statues of Mary made it seem like an ascension into heaven, a long stairway rising from the hard cruelty of stone and life. The statues had their arms outstretched, and the features of their guises were washed away with at least a century of rain and wind. The discoloration was saddening to look at, and Natasha frowned as one of the statues caught her gaze. With empty eyes of stone, Mary gazed into her, faded and smooth face caught between a stare of longing, and one of horror.

Tash gulped, and followed the boys to the arch above, where a cross adorned the entrance to the old building of stone. If there was any place a vampire shouldn't enter, it was a church, or a cemetery beside one; so the myth went, anyway. Bogus, and incorrect. It didn't change she was unnerved to step underneath the cross, and let the large pillars that held the building and its walls up envelop her. Undead thing in a holy building, how did Maria do it? Sleeping beneath a Cathedral was asking for divine retribution.

Inside the mausoleum, they found exactly what she expected: shelves of dead people inside boxes. She didn't expect they'd also find smaller caskets, many partly broken open, showing weird things. She'd forgotten about such things, sometimes found inside mausoleums, storage for special items. One was cracked enough to see straight in to a doll inside; a very creepy doll.

Art and Matt didn't seem creeped out. They peeked at it, looked at each other, chuckled and nodded, then made reference to something they both remembered. At the same time, no doubt. Then, they got to work, examining the small room. Mausoleums weren't huge on the inside to begin with, and this one had shelves of caskets on all the walls, leaving only the middle of the room open.

“Still looking f-for secret ... sw-switches?” She giggled, and shook her head, as she watched the silly men feeling up the old stones. “Hey! Respect the ... the d-dead.”

Art smirked at her, and winked, too, as he ran his fingers along some dust atop a coffin. “I am. I am also dating one.”

“H ... Hey.” Sometimes it was easy to forget she wasn't only a vampire, she was also a corpse. But she could tell Art was teasing her, and she kicked him in the calf for it, hard enough to hurt at least a little.

Matt laughed, but he, too, was feeling around the old caskets. “The dust and dirt around here has been disturbed. And I can hear something coming from somewhere.”

Click.

Matt and Tash turned to look at Art, and Tash's jaw dropped as the floor beneath her began to move aside. With a squeak, she jumped out of the way, over to Art, and stared at him.

“S ... Secret switch?” she said.

Art winked at her, and tapped the side of his nose a few times. “Irraka.”

Matt rolled his eyes, and looked down at the stairway. A tiny stairway, that led into blackness. “ ... um, can I fit in there?” He made the attempt, stepping down a little ways until it was time to duck under where the floor became the stairway's ceiling. “Yeap, barely.”

“W-We don’t know what’s down there!” she said. There was brave, then there was suicidal.

Art shrugged, and started down the stairs after Matt. “We can handle it,” he said, like it was a perfectly normal trip into the bowels of Earth. She grabbed Art’s hair once his descent brought his downward journey to her hip level, and yanked him back a bit, earning a quiet yelp from him. “Hey!”

“D-Do you wolves always barge in head first? Like you said, it ... c-could be a secret Kindred room. It ... it c-could be ... dangerous, with traps, and ... and things! Or hunters!”

Both Matt and Art looked at each other, then her, and shrugged.

“We’ll keep an eye and ear open,” Matt said. “We are pretty good at this, you know. Tijuana was a pretty big trial by fire sort of city.”

“Did ... d-did you kill many Kindred there?”

Art sighed, and nodded after a few seconds. “Killed some, yeah. Lost a couple of our pack, too.”

“Then you ... then you know how d-dangerous Kindred can be, w-when you ... touch their personal things.” Secret room underneath the Three Kings Cemetery sounded like either the Lancea et Sanctum, or the Circle of the Crone. The former was gone, but the latter was very much not. She shivered at the memory of Jacob grabbing her, the terror that had run through her, being in the grip of that psycho, before she shot him.

“Yeap, we do,” they said together.

“Then, the hunters c-can be found in a d-different—”

“This isn’t just about tracking down the hunters, Tash,” Art said. “Those weird red wraiths are up to something. We knew that before you called us in for the ritual. There's a connection, and we're going to find out what it is before it leads to ... well, what you can imagine a gore-obsessed wraith might want to perpetuate."

Sighing all the louder, she nodded. They were doing their duty as werewolves. Duty. Werewolves. Why they had a 'duty', she couldn't understand, but apparently it was something they just had, something that was expected of them to do. Made zero sense to her.

She was thankful, since it meant monsters like that Azlu creature were no longer a threat. It also meant they were willing to help deal with the hunters, since the ritual was linked to these weird wraiths they kept talking about. Lot of things lining up, but now, it meant seeing her two boyfriends putting themselves in danger, straight up.

She didn't like that.

Groaning, she pulled out her sword, her pistol, and started down the stairs. "You t-two be careful, and stay n-near me, so I can cloak us." With a stern look up at Art, shutting him up before he protested, she pushed past him in the tiny stairway, and got between the two wolves. "L ... Let's go."

For a moment, she thought the two boys would stop her. Part of her wanted them to, but a bigger part of her didn't. She was more than capable of taking care of herself, and could handle Kindred better than they could; at least, when trying to avoid violence. They might stumble onto what Maria was doing, maybe something to do with what the secret the spirit had mentioned. They might stumble onto Jacob doing some dark ritual. They might stumble onto Garry, running a secret meeting of the Carthians, or planning a strike maneuver against the Invictus. They might run into the Prince, performing some dark, evil sciences where she thought no one would bother her.

It paid to be paranoid. Kindred were strong, but they didn't get to live forever by being careless. The two Uratha with her, on the other hand, could get run over by a train and probably survive, so, maybe it paid to be more adventurous in their circumstance.

Tash set her phone to a dim light, and hooked it onto the breast pocket of her suit. The tiny bits of light broke through the fabric, and in the ensuing pitch black, the glint of light was enough to show the way ahead.

The tunnel was old. She expected something closer to what Maria had, a grand chamber built of strong concrete and metal. Instead, she found dirt and rock, and wooden beams, deep under the cemetery, beneath the dead and ash. Some of the rocks were a bit wet, but she wasn't sure where the humidity was coming from. The air was stale, stagnant, and she smelled death on it. Old, and new death. And if she could smell it, Art and Matt surely could. The two sniffed, and grimaced in tandem with the thought.

A large support beam, held up by two of its kin, braced the thousands of tonnes of rock over their heads, and the wooden sign that dangled from it, completed the lovely trip into hell they were taking. Continue Forth, and Death Awaits Thee. It was burned into the wood, and several skulls hung from the sign as well, with hooks rammed through their sides.

Circle, definitely looked like something the Circle would do. Jacob.

She tapped Matt on the back, and squatted down. The two boys got down as well, a knee each; maybe not flexible enough for easy squatting.

“This is p-probably one of Jacob's lairs,” she said, voice a whisper, and buried in her cloak of night. It wasn't going anywhere, unless she let it.

“We don't have much experience with the Circle.” Matt shrugged, and looked down the tunnel ahead of them.

Art nodded. “Even Avery doesn’t have much. They were pretty low key in Tijuana, and from what Avery tells me, her issues with Jacob when she was here last didn’t exactly expose the intricacies of the covenant to her.”

“Intricacies is ... a, um ... light w-way of p-p-putting it.” She peered down the tunnel as best she could, and pulled up her vitae until she could feel it in her eyes. Sith sight. Auspex was a discipline only the Mekhet knew, and she put it to good use. Why hers let her see better in the dark, she wasn’t quite sure, but far be it from her to not take advantage of it. She saw only empty tunnel ahead of them though, and heard nothing.

No, that wasn’t quite true. Screams. She could hear screams, little things that echoed down the tunnel, like ghostly wisps along the walls, hidden in the grooves of the rocks and dirt. Her eyes locked onto the walls, the wooden beams, the skulls above and the sign; her gaze darted around looking for the movement she was sure she could see. No, no movement, no ghosts, but no matter how many times she shook her head to dislodge the sounds, they came back, shrieks on the air.

Art and Matt both made quiet growling sounds. It’d have been cute, if it didn’t mean they could hear them, too.

“You ... you sure you want t-t ... to keep going?” she said.

Art touched his nose again. “There’s something going on down here. You don’t want to know what it is?”

“I d-do, b-b-b-b-b—”

Matt set his hand on her shoulder, and winked. “Relax, we’ll be fine.”

She punched him in the chest, and pointed up at the sign. “That is n-not fine!” And if Jacob found her snooping through his stuff, she doubted that would go well at all. Or, maybe it would? He might enjoy her brazen disregard for his superiority.

Art gave her a small shove, and she squeaked as she fell onto her hip. Not sneaky at all! “Look, Tash, we have to investigate this place, anyway. If shit’s fucking with the Gauntlet, if someone, even Jacob, is opening up a can of worms they can’t control, we need to know.”

“We’re trying to shut this problem down before it grows any bigger. David and Avery brought us here for a reason.”

“I ... I d-don’t know what that reason is, you w-w-won’t tell me.”

“We’ll show you, eventually.” Matt nodded, and helped her back up into her squat. “But if you think this is too dangerous, then we can’t take you to the Hisil, either. Shit can be a lot worse there.”

Perspective, like an ice bath after being out in the heat. Or a slap to the face with a tire iron. They were about to do something dangerous, probably something that would upset Jacob, and that was the level of danger the Hisil provided. Either the Hisil was fucking deadly, or these two were underestimating Jacob.

Both, it was always both with these things.

Gulping, they resumed. Deeper, and deeper into the Earth, deeper into the awaiting screams that crept along the stone and wooden beams, that came up behind them in the black, and down upon them from the dead, above. Some tree roots reached them, aged and covered in dirt, like everything else down here. It would have almost been expected for a skeleton to pop out of the walls or ground, and come at them with ragged, rotted clothes dangling from their limbs. But only the mix of silence, and there-but-not-quite-there howls of pain greeted them.

Soon, her eyes could no longer penetrate the darkness ahead. It looked like the tunnel was about to open up into a chamber, but instead, a wall of black blocked them, like a fog, except with no body, nothing palpable. More like, staring into a black hole, some abyss, some barrier of alien origin. As if Death itself had set up its home, and the little leech and her two canine friends had stumbled onto the deity's lair. As if the gates of Hades were—

Matt reached out, and touched it.

Tash and Art both slapped themselves in the forehead. The following pop, as if Matt had pin-pricked a balloon, caused the three of them to raise their arms in defense. Yeap, dead, so dead; Death's wall was going to eat them.

Except not. She blinked, and looked at her arms in front of her, before lowering them. Still alive, still in a tunnel, Art and Matt still with her. Art walked up to his friend, and slapped him in the back of his head.

“God damn it, Lenny!”

“Hey! I—” The two wolves went silent, and stared on into the chamber ahead of them, as a corpse collapsed.

Tash came up to stand beside her two werewolves, and peeked at the sight, at the symbols on the walls, at the giant bowl in the room supported on the backs of lying skeletons, at the corpse of the disemboweled female corpse on the floor next to it, and at the mess of blood everywhere. A hook dangled over the bowl too, the sort you might use to lug cargo with. What in the world?

“... Triss,” she said, and managed a small wave with her gun hand to go with it.

“Um, hey, Tash. And, uh ... this is Art and Matt, right?” The snake woman tapped on some of her crocodile teeth a few times with a claw, and looked left and right at her boss and her friend, Jen. “Whatcha doing here?”

“I ... I um, c-could ask you the same thing.” She gestured to horrific display, the two other Kindred standing around it, and the symbols that surrounded them all. She did not like that she recognized them from recent memory. “W-What’s going on here?”

“Private business.” Jacob took a step forward. Tash took a step back. The boys stayed where they were, lips curled into snarls. “You two have balls. I like that. You know, I knew a girl, a weird sort of vampire that needed to eat flesh to survive. She had a thing for eating the testicles of men, especially the brave ones.”

“Was ... was that corpse ... standing up?” Tash, shivering, trembling, did her best to keep her hands tight on her sword and pistol. They’d be useless against Jacob, but it was better than nothing.

“Indeed it was! Your two boy toys have probably put together what I was doing.” The man reached into the bowl, and withdrew something red, and dripping. Something that belonged inside a human body. Chuckling, he whipped it at Matt, and the big guy knocked it aside with the back of his hand. Blood splattered across his wrist and over his face and shirt, but Matt didn’t flinch.

“We didn’t realize you were fueling Black Blood’s mutation,” Art said. He snarled a few times, loud, voice rumbling, getting deeper than a human’s could. “What was it originally, before you poisoned it?”

“Me? Poison a spirit? You must be joking. And besides, Black Blood was in Dolareido before I ever was.” Jacob came closer, and again Tash took another step back, now behind the two boys. They still didn’t move. “I think you two dogs should be moving on. Tell Avery I said hi, by the way. Next time I see her, I’ll make sure to give her a present.”

“Leave her alone.” Matt came in closer, balls of his feet pressing to the stone, ready to fight. “She tried to apologize, and—”

“I do think you should shut your mouth, child.” Jacob walked up to the huge man, stared up at him, and grinned. “And I think you should get out of my home away from home.”

“Do you even know what you’re causing?” Art said. “What sort of things those wraiths have been up to? Think they all serve Black Blood, or that they’re so void of will that they’ll line up for you? People are dying, you fucking moron, and this locus here you have under your control? You’re going to bring a mountain of trouble down on your whole city.” He came up beside Matt, reached out, and shoved Jacob back at the shoulder. Oh no.

Jennifer came up to Jacob; he’d let the shove push him back a few feet with a sort of drunken flow. She put a hand on his shoulder, but he shrugged it off, bodyweight leaning from side to side, foot to foot, as the eyeless maniac grinned at the two wolves trying to stare him down. Bad bad, this was very bad.

Triss came up to Jacob too, and mirrored Jen, standing beside her boss and reaching out to his shoulder; he shrugged her off too.

“... no one’s been hurt here. Not anyone who doesn’t deserve it, anyway.” The younger Nosferatu gestured to the bowl behind them, apparently filled with body parts, just like the wraiths Art and Matt were hunting would probably like. “This human deserved it.”

Art shook his head. “And the fucker who died for the hunter’s ritual?”

A flinch, from all three witches. From Jen and Triss, Tash expected it, but from Jacob, that was a surprise. It was subtle, a nudge of the eyebrow, mostly lost and hidden from behind the eye bandage, but there. Julias’s lessons in tells were paying off.

“Ritual?” Triss said. “Hunter ritual?”

Matt stepped in closer, yet again. “Jacob isn’t the only one communicating with spirits. The hunters trying to kill you vamps are, too. It’s not like the spirits care who they use to spread their influences, just that they do. And you,” he pointed at Jacob with a stern finger, “are making things worse.”

Jacob didn’t like that. The playful smile turned into something heavier, and he licked a fang as he chuckled. “Black Blood sends his condolences about Stephanie, by the way.”

The roar that came out of Matt had the three women take a step back, and stare, wide eyed, as Matt uppercut the Nosferatu. Matt was a huge man, and Jacob was not. The punch sent him up and back, and he collided with both the ceiling of the cave, and the wall, before landing. But, as much as the ladies tried to watch Jacob, it was Matt that forced their gaze, as he began to transform.

His clothes faded into his body, as his skin erupted with fur. The size of him, his height, his muscles, all of it exploded with mass, with volume. Enormous and hunched, the beast towered over them, width growing, and growing, until there was no way the giant could fit back through the stairway they’d come from. His face erupted into hollering roars, again and again, as a snout burst from his face, the sickening sound of bending and breaking bones filling the silence of the deep cave as his body took liberties with itself, destroying and reforging itself into a beast.

Tash stepped back further, sword up to her chest, pistol pointed, at Matt.

She managed a peek at Art. Maybe he could stop this madness before it escalated. But, no. She winced, and stepped back all the more as he too, erupted into a beast. For a moment, she wondered why his clothes didn’t erupt. Not practical? The next moment, she had her gun pointed at him instead, as a shattering roar slammed into the walls around them, echoing until it felt like the Earth was roaring at them too.

Both colossi jumped for Jacob.

Jen threw herself to the side, eyes wide and jaw dropped. Triss did too, but she wasn't as surprised; still surprised, but not as bewildered as her friend. She ducked around behind the two Uratha, ran up to Jen, grabbed her, and ran back to join Tash, a fair distance away from the unleashed carnage.

"They're ... they're ... huge," Jen said.

Huge, and dangerous. Tash could still remember that time in the tunnel, when Matt had trouble controlling his anger, caught under the rubble with her and Art. He'd nearly gotten them all killed in his mad attempt to tear everything down and apart. It was enough of a hint the Uratha were dangerous to more than their enemy, when in this form.

She scooted a little further away, and so did the two witches, as they stared on.

It was hard to see what was going on, with both of the giants crouching over Jacob, claws out, ripping and tearing. Bits of Jacob's robes started to fill the air as the wolf tore into him, and Tash chattered her teeth as she fought the desire to say something. Stop! He'll kill you! She knew she wouldn't be able to stop them, not when they were like this, not after what Jacob had said. There was a chance they'd turn and attack her, too. She couldn't imagine that happening, but now, seeing them scream and roar, bellow and cry out with rage in waves of magnitude she could not comprehend, she didn't know.

Matt's roar turned into a shrieking yelp, as he went flying across the room. The titan of muscle, ten feet tall and more than capable of ripping a train apart, spun through the air on his side, over the strange ritual bowl, and crashed into the other wall. Crunch. The girls winced, each with eyes locked on Matt, as the brute slumped to the stone floor. His right arm was bent backward ninety degrees at the elbow.

He got up, pushing off the ground with his free arm, as the other arm snapped back into place, on its own, as if some invisible ghost had come up to him and bent it back the other way with all the empathy of a torturer. Matt let out a rumble of pain with the audible crack of bone.

Another yelp. Tash forced herself to look, and grimaced until her sight was blurry. Jacob had Art over his head, holding one of the wolf's enormous wrists in one hand, ankle in the other, turning Art into a pretzel. Art still had an arm and leg free, but couldn't reach or kick underneath him, not with Jacob holding him, almost folded in half.

The elder switched his grip on from wolf's wrist for his other ankle, and holding the titan by both feet, spun around and slammed him into the wall, repeatedly. Hundreds and hundreds of pounds of meat and strength, helpless, as the eyeless Nosferatu turned him into a slab of flesh being beaten against stone. Again, and again. Tash forced herself to watch, but didn't know what to do, didn't know what to say to stop him. All she could do was watch as Art's blood started to smear over the wall. Crunch. Crunch. Crunch. Each slam drove the poor man's face into the wall, and by the third slam, bloody wolf teeth were sliding across the ground.

Jacob used the werewolf's greater weight like a weapon, a heavy weapon, letting it cause his own body to swing with it against the friction of his shoes on the stone. In comparison, Jacob looked like a child, wielding a sword huge enough to leave him constantly teetering left and right to manage the momentum. He did it with ease, as if ... as if he'd done this before.

Matt sprinted forward. The ground beneath his talons ripped away, shredded open by the weight of his body and the force of his movement. His roar split the air, a ripple cutting through the emptiness like a shock wave, knocking the witnesses on their asses.

Tash squeaked as her pistol and sword went flying, smacking into the ceiling, then the floor. The bowl of body parts shook and rumbled, but remained where it was, while the contents inside splashed over the edge. Triss and Jen scampered to get out of the way as Matthew ran past them, each slam of his paws, monstrous mutations, filling the cave with more vibrations. It was like Jurassic Park, complete with the outcries and roaring.

Jacob was too busy with Arturo to dodge, and Matt's shoulder collided with Jacob, slamming him into the wall hard enough to crack the stone. The ceiling of the cavern began to rumble, and Tash whipped out her light to try and get a better look. The lantern the witches had provided some light, but with hers she scanned hurriedly, and managed a quick sigh of relief. No cave in, no cracks in the roof, not yet, but she was getting flashbacks of last time she was trapped underground with the—she wasn't trapped this time. She could leave, run, or do something! Get Avery's help!

She looked to Triss, and the two of them stared at each other. Fear, in her snake eyes. Jen's eyes were stuck on the madness, at the claws tearing and shredding, at Matt slamming his entire weight into Jacob, and sinking his claws into the vampire's stomach. Art, chest down, on the floor, was trying, but failing, to push himself to his hands and feet. His arms and legs weren't broken, but his face was bashed in, snout shattered, nose destroyed, teeth gone, tongue bitten off. Blood poured from his face, and he coughed up a river of saliva and crimson with it, pieces of his teeth, bones, and tongue, splattering over the cursed stone.

He got up, and looked at Natasha. Blood covered everything, his eyes, ruined face, and fur. It poured down the muscles, the indentations of mass visible through the fur, down to his claws, until it was dripping down around his feet. He looked at her, and growled, as his snout started to reform, new teeth erupting outward from destroyed gums to replace broken ones, length of his snout snapping back into place with a sickening crunch, the nose reshaping itself before her eyes.

How the fuck do you kill a werewolf? She didn't want that thought going through her head right now, but it was there. She forced herself to look Art in the eyes as she reached into her jacket for the hidden chest holster, and put her hand on her extra sword, the silver sword.

Art snorted, another splatter of blood splashing over the stone, before he turned and ran to Jacob. Oh, thank god.

Matt, for all his trouble, got a fist to the face from Jacob. One punch, and Tash looked away as he spun halfway through the air. Not as far this time, but enough for him to do a half rotation before landing. Everyone heard the shoulder crack against the cave floor. Everyone heard the bones snap back into place.

"I tried to be nice," Jacob said. His robes were ruined, slashed open, a giant hole in the gut exposing some of his skin, and the bits of insides Matt had exposed of his withered intestines. "Do my own thing, let Avery do her own thing. But twice now I've had you fuckers try and talk to me. Didn't Clara tell you what happened?"

Art roared in his face, unleashing a hail of spit and blood over Jacob's visage. Jacob smirked at him, licking a bit of the blood off the corner of his mouth, as he held Art at bay, hand to hand with the titanic beast, palm to palm. Jacob's hands weren't big enough to wrap around Art's by much, but just enough to get his fingertips and thumbs around the edges. It was enough for him to squeeze.

Tash forced herself back to her feet, and held out a hand. She wanted to say stop. She wanted to do something. But, her stomach turned upside down, and her gaze faltered, as Art fell to his knees, Jacob squeezing his hands until they broke like twigs. The elder put one boot to Art's neck, under the jaw of the snapping, biting, wild animal, and glared down at him with his eyeless gaze.

“I should rip off your arms. Think you can regrow arms? I'm not sure if Uratha can, and you know me, I'm a curious guy.”

Art's voice cracked, jumping octaves as Jacob began to pull the werewolf's arms, and push his boot against the animal's neck harder, and harder.

Matt was up again, and roaring thunder as he ran at Jacob again. Until Jacob looked his way, and Matt froze. As if his titan body had run into a swamp up to his waist, he came to a stop, and fell to his knees, sinking underneath the black surface of the invisible muck.

“You'd think Avery's story about Viktor would have scared you idiots straight. But, no, too stupid to stay out of trouble. You'd bite your leg off if you were caught in a trap, and it'd be the wrong leg. You fucking stupid, worthless dog.”

As Art's roars turned into yelps of agony, Matt sat there, colossal arms limp at his sides, knuckles to the floor, eyes looking up. Tears joined the blood on his face, and his mouth started to hang open. His breathing was fast, getting faster, and tiny yelps mixed into the heavy panting.

“... d-don't ... don't ... please get up...” The words were strange and guttural, wolf mouth struggling to articulate. But the tears and trembling limbs conveyed what was happening all too well. Matthew was in a nightmare.

“Jacob!” Triss marched over to him, now that the chaos had settled into a sea of still misery, and put a hand on his arm. “You've made your point. Come on, stop.”

“Made my point? These fucking dogs waltz into my city, my fucking city, and dictate policy to us, to me. They act like the other world and its denizens are theirs to command. They come into my home, and break my fancy new vase. They spit in my face!” The Nosferatu spit onto Art’s face, lowered his foot, yanked Art forward, and slammed his head toward him. The sound of Jacob’s forehead smashing down onto Art’s only recently reformed snout was like a scene from a movie, where all the sound effects are exaggerated. And when Art hit the floor, he bounced, head turning enough so the side of his face and snout smashed into the ground. Blood splashed outward, as if someone threw a water balloon filled with ketchup at the ground.

He didn’t get up this time.

Triss pulled on the man’s arm. “Jacob, come on. Avery will—”

“Fuck Avery! She killed Minerva! You have any idea, any fucking idea, what that—for fuck’s sake Triss, keep Julias in your life for another twenty years, then lose him. You might have some, some fucking inkling of what it’s like to suffer what I’ve suffered.” He drew his foot back, and kicked Art in the shoulder. More sickening crunches, and from the angle, Tash knew Jacob had shattered his collar bone.

“Yeah, but—”

Jacob turned, and looked at her. Through the bandage, from the corner of his eyeless gaze, Tash was sure she saw a glimmer of something, a tiny shimmer of color behind the gray fabric, where his eyes should have been.

Triss let go of his arm, and backed away.

The elder reached down for Art’s fur on the back of his head, and held him up enough for Jacob to look him in the eye. It was strange, seeing the normal-sized, perhaps small man, lean body now exposed through his tattered robes, lifting a gargantuan creature so easily. The juxtaposition of difference in size and strength was unreal, and Tash stared on, as Jacob swatted away Art's swiping arm, hard enough to snap the forearm like a twig, earning a howl.

"I should kill you. Arturo, right? I should fucking kill you. I should fucking rip your god damn guts out and let Black Blood take a peek. But I suppose they'd return to normal before he could. Shame. You know how much he'd love to get a look at that? Oh, the blood would flow so sweetly."

"You ... you're ... you're making ... these ... dangerous ... spirits."

"You have no idea what I'm doing, worthless mongrel. If shit was as bad as you thought, the streets of Dolareido would be swimming in blood, black and red, and bodies would be flowing up to our doors like the fucking river Styx."

"Jacob!" Tash walked up to Jacob. Each step shivering, each step trembling, she forced herself forward, shoes pressing down against the increasing ocean of red blood the two Uratha were pouring. She forced herself to peek to the right and look at Matt, the biggest of the werewolves, a hulking titan, and trembled as she saw more tears pour down his furry face. Locked in a nightmare. Art was no better off than Matt, his broken arm not regenerating with the quickness of his injuries before, blood unending flowing down his face.

The eyeless man looked at her, and she froze. Blood coated him, werewolf blood, head to toe, mixing into his salt and pepper hair. It soaked through the gray bandage on his eyes, and a black glint shined against the red wetness. Something was behind the bandage, in his eye sockets. Jacob's lips curled into a snarl, and he glared at her as he back handed Art, sending the man spinning over the floor, limbs in a tangled mess, other arm now dislocated.

These beasts had torn through concrete, a metal train, and had managed to run her down, her, a Mekhet, when she was running from them in the tunnels. They'd taken on a giant spider monster thing, an enormous mutation with scythes for arms. To the psycho elder glaring at tiny her, they were children, biting off more than they could chew.

“ ... let them go, p-please.”

“Let them go? Natasha Natasha, you're not your sire Daniel. You have no sway here.”

Jennifer looked at her, eyebrow raised. Well, no use in worrying about that secret anymore. It didn't really matter anyway, now that she was back in the Ordo Dracul. But the fact Jacob knew it was another reminder that the man knew everything, and that if Antoinette owned the city, so too did Jacob, in a strange way.

“They're d ... d-d-defeated.”

“Are they? You see that fuck?” He pointed to Art. “Another five minutes and he'll be up again. I should rip off his legs. And him?” He pointed to Matt. “Gentle giant over there is swimming in some horrible nightmare, half of his own making. But these fuckers have the mental depth of plates. He'll get over it, and come running back for another swing at me.”

“But they're ... they c-can't ... can't—”

“Can't what, hurt me? They're werewolves, stupid girl. Mindless, idiotic beasts, capable of nothing more than pursuing their instincts. If I let my guard down, I could find their teeth at my back. And, in case you haven't noticed, they like to use them.” A gesture, with a flippant twist of the hand, toward the lacerations of his robes. The giant gashes he must have received were already healed.

“I ... I w-won't let ... them attack you.” Not that it'd matter. Jacob had proven his superiority; he knew he had it from the start. The comment about Stephanie was bait, an excuse for Jacob to let off steam, and maybe get Art and Matt killed in self defense. “P-Please...”

Jacob glared into her, and she forced herself to stare at the bandages she was sure were covering some sort of eyes. This wasn't the same as the time he caught her peeping. This time, she found him peeping, or doing something naughty at least. Similar situation, sort of, but reversed, except she was again on the receiving end of the man's random violence and random ... everything.

She managed a smile up at him, a tiny thing, meek and pathetic, but at this point, shooting him with a pistol wasn't going to work like last time. He'd tear her in half. And, this time, it was a good idea to back off on the violence, get everyone to settle down, maybe see past the insanity of this and let people recover and walk away.

She was fooling herself. This wasn't going to end well. Jacob was a psycho, a killer, a murderer, a witch, and a—

He let them go.

Art rolled away, coughing and mixing snarls with gargling on blood. Matt collapsed forward, rumbling breaths vibrating the room with its bass. And, with time, both titans brought themselves back up to their feet. Unkillable, without a silver blade to put them down, or an Elder to rip them in half. And aggressive described them perfectly, unrelenting, growling, leaning forward and ready to pounce at the Nosferatu as their limbs and minds reassembled themselves.

She stepped in the way, and held out her arms to the sides. “Stop!” Itty bitty little Mekhet in front of two Uratha, goliaths of muscle and strength.

The Uratha stepped forward, looking over her head

She stepped forward, and slammed down her foot. The sound was quieter than the breathing of the two beasts, but the motion was enough to snap their enraged, twitching gazes down at her. She was lost in their shadow.

“I s-said stop! Now!” Please listen please listen please listen.

They stood there, panting, growling and snarling, claws digging at the floor, hands twitching and squeezing. She was half sure they were going to eat her, but she stood her ground, and frowned at them, at their massive teeth drooling saliva and blood, at their eyes, lost in rage and madness. If she didn't stop them, Jacob was going to kill them, and she didn't want that.

Trembling with only God knew how much adrenaline pumping through their massive veins, the two werewolves looked down at her, then to Jacob behind her, then back to her, and around one more time, before their body language started to relax. Their colossal arms fell to their sides, their pounce poses stood up taller, straighter, and their heads fell forward. They began to shrink, hundreds and hundreds of pounds of muscle fading away, disappearing into nothing, as their clothes started to reemerge, taking over where the fur had once covered them. Eyes recolored, claws slipped back into their fingers, and lips replaced their snouts.

Both men, sweating and shaking, stared at her, eyes looking her up and down, breath coming in heavy and heartbeats loud enough for the Kindred to hear them. The only two heartbeats in the room, after all.

“... he killed Stephanie,” Art said. “I don't know how, but he's responsible. Him and Black Blood ... did something, must have...”

Tash looked over her shoulder at Jacob. The evil man smirked, leaned back into the wall of bloody and carved symbols, not unlike those found at the ritual site, and folded his arms across his chest.

“M-Maybe, somehow, but you don’t know! Let’s ... let’s go.”

Matt didn’t look convinced. He came in closer, and she put her arm out to block him. Like a wall of iron.

“He’s fucking with the Hisil, Tash. He’s causing mayhem, and he’s probably behind these fucking red wraiths. Look at this.” A sweeping gesture to the bowl, the room, and the smell of the dead. “He’s making deals with devils.”

Jacob laughed, and tapped a finger on his lip. “I wish.”

Tash looked back at him, blinking. What a strange thing to say. Sighing and steeling herself once more, she reached out, and pushed against Art and Matt.

“Let’s go. He ... he c-can do whatever he wants. We know he has this p-p-place now, and what he’s d-doing, that’s enough.” She put her hands to the chest of each beast at her eye level, and pushed. They didn’t know what he was doing, not really, just what he was using to do whatever it was he was doing. But, it was still something.

The two wolves gave in to her pressing, and started back toward the exit.

She expected Jacob to say something, to taunt them, to invite more of their aggression; he could handle it easily enough, and it may give him the excuse to kill more of Avery’s pack. Steel face! Don’t let him know you’re worried.

Too late. The evil man smirked at her, winked — she thought — and waved at her. The boys didn’t see it thankfully, their heads pointed forward for a few seconds, drooping, like sad dogs. Her sad, sad dogs.

Digging through the memories of her time as a kine, she found one, a tiny one, buried in dust and jadedness; once upon a time, she did want a dog.

“Say hi to Maria for me, Tash,” Jacob said. “Hope she succeeds.”

She peeked over at Jacob, and the corpse that had collapsed when they penetrated the fog. A corpse that had collapse, and a final poke at a secret about Maria, or the secret she was keeping. Jacob was a bastard, a royal bastard. But then, why would he say something like that, poke at something like that, point Tash in that direction?

Antoinette might know. She'd make sure to ask. But for the rest of the night, she was going to take care of her wounded dogs.

---

“Th-thank you,” she said, as she invited the boys into her apartment. She hadn't slept there in weeks, but it was still home, for now.

“I smelled more than Jacob and his witches there,” Art said as he dragged himself in. Much as he looked fine on the outside, it was easy to see he was beat up bad, mentally and physically. “Smelled wraiths, and Black Blood, and the sheriff, too.”

“That ... d-doesn't surprise me. I'm sure my sire has b-been there, and ... y-yeah, him and Jacob d-don't get along.” No need to worry about the sheriff being her sire. They didn't care, and they were unlikely to repeat it to anyone but their fellow pack anyway.

“... Avery is going to be mad at us,” Matt said, sinking onto her couch. Poor couch, it struggled to handle his mass. “Those red wraiths are obsessed with blood and guts, are linked to this, to what Jacob's doing. It's very strange. It's not something spirits would be interested in normally.”

“B-But nothing bad has ... uh, I guess the ritual, but we d ... d-don’t know if that’s because of Jacob or not.” Jumping to conclusions was bad. They had to be scientific about this, or they’d end up blaming the wrong person. It wasn’t like vampires didn’t often try and misdirect.

Art nodded, not happy, but understanding at least. “We’ll talk to Avery about this, leave you out of it. If there’s some connection between Jacob and Black Blood, these red wraiths, and that ritual those hunters probably performed.” Nodding to himself again, he slumped down onto the couch beside Matt, and pat the man on the shoulder. “You ok?”

“Yeah ... yeah. He hit me with that dream, and ... yeah.”

“Dream?” Tash came up to the boys, Art scooted aside, and she sat between them. Her poor, expensive couch did not like fighting to support their weights, but she might as well have not been there, perched on the mound of couch between the two wolves.

Art looked to Matt, but Matt kept his eyes on the floor.

“A ... it’s a ... it’s so stupid,” the gentle giant said.

Tash blinked at him, looked back at Art, and found his friend with his eyes drifting to the floor as well, heavy.

“If you ... d-don’t want to tell me, it’s ok.” If anyone understood a desire for privacy, it was her.

“Nah, it’s not that, just ... it’s a stupid dream that’s been bothering me since I was a kid. Keep seeing my parents freeze to death, and ... and I wasn’t even there to see it happen. Fucking digs at the gut though, you know? Keep thinking I could have helped them if I was there...” The gentle giant let his head slump more, and his forearms dangle off his knees.

Part of her wanted to share the misery from her own past, her issues with her father, and what her disappearance had done to him. But, no, another time. Tonight had been rough enough on the two of them, especially Matt, if Jacob had forced him to relive such a nightmare. She reached out, stroked his leg, and nudged her head into his arm.

“Thanks, by the way,” Art said, “for stopping us. Damn easy to get caught up in it, in that form. Really want to sink your claws into something, tear it apart...”

“That was brave of you.” Matt leaned down over her, kissed her head, and set his hand on hers on his leg. “After what we did to you, when we met you? Very brave.”

She grinned up at him, and Art too. “You ... you t-two were ... scary.”

“Were we?” Art reached out, slipped his arm around her shoulder, and pulled her toward him. Didn’t have far to go with all their hips bumping, but soon her shoulder was leaning into his side, against his waist. “After what that vamp did to us? Figured he knocked us down a peg on the intimidation scale.”

“... n-not very much.” Seeing the two Uratha get royally injured had been startling. Seeing the two Uratha stand back up and regenerate in moments, more startling. “B-But, Jacob is ... Jacob is special. Him and the P-Prince, they um ... they are ... t-t-two of the most powerful Kindred ... in the world. Please b-be careful with him.”

The giant nodded. “Yeah, after tonight, I won’t be getting in his way unless the pack’s there.”

Unless the pack’s there. Could Avery and her pack kill him? Maybe. They were strong, and she was sure Avery was extremely strong. But Jacob was Jacob, and there was no getting around that he wasn't only an elder. He was ancient, and wise.

Sighing, she buried her face into Art's side, and breathed him in. She didn't want them hurt. Knowing Matt was haunted by dreams of his family dying, family he didn't get to see die, put a new perspective on the indomitable werewolves: they were still human, deep on the inside, like her.

Art hugged her closer with his arm, and his hand drifted down her opposite hip, then onto her stomach, where his fingers started to pluck at her skirt's waistband.

"Arturo! You ... you can't b-be serious." She frowned up at him, and nodded her head toward Matt. "He's can't b-b—"

Matt slipped his arm behind her, around her to her other hip, and got his fingers under the waistband, as well.

She rolled her eyes, and slapped them both on their legs at the same time. It did not deter them, and she squirmed as the two beasts started to fight against her clothes. Off came the jacket, and out came the shirt from the waistband of her skirt. She squeaked, and stared up at Art as the man took her shoulders, and turned her around so she was facing Matt. Matt took her legs, pulled them up onto the couch, and slid his hands up her legs before finding her skirt and pulling it off.

Trapped! Trapped and about to be ravished by two beasts. She struggled to hide her smile. Apparently, their sex drives were indomitable as well, if a night of being thoroughly beaten by an old enemy wasn't enough to deter them.

"D-Don't you ... um, have to report to Avery, or ... or something?"

Matt shook his head. "It can wait till morning."

Right, right, morning. Not an option for her, but the werewolves had no trouble, and they often went long bouts without much sleep, so they could spend time with her.

She squeaked as Art started on the buttons of her shirt. Wait, didn't Antoinette suggest she try something? That she should try taking charge for once, instead of being on the receiving end?

After what she accomplished in Jacob's lair, maybe she could manage that.

She gave Art and Matt's hands a quick tap, a touch harder than usual, and they stopped, eyebrows raised. She stood up, only in her shirt and underwear now, and put her hands on her hips, in fists. Time to take charge.

"I ... I'm going t-to ... change into something sexier! And tonight, you ... t ... you two are going to let me give the orders!"

Art and Matt looked at each other, her, back and forth again, and nodded. "Yes ma'am," they said, in unison.

Wow, that was easier than she thought. No hesitation, no issue, no playful aggression she'd have to break through. They understood what she wanted, and immediately, at that. She beamed with triumph. Not that she was against letting the boys doing their usual thing with her, but tonight she was feeling bold. Tonight, she had wandered into one of Jacob's lairs, negotiated with him, convinced him to stand down, and had managed to stop two very angry, very deadly, hulking beasts of brawn, to calm them down. She wasn't some silly neonate anymore, she was ancilla; a deadly creature, powerful, and a force to be reckoned with.

"You, stay," she said. Both boys smirked, and she meeped. That was a dog command. Shrugging, doing her best to pass it off, she went to the bedroom. What else did she and Antoinette speak of? Clothes! Something girly, something silly, something fun. She didn't need to always be bookworm Natasha, or sneaky, shadow lurker Natasha. She could be fun and spontaneous, like Jessy, and maybe feminine too, like Antoinette. And, maybe cute too, like Gloria.

Or, she could stop trying to label everything, stop trying to put all her actions into neat and tidy little categories, and just go with her emotions. Hard for her, very hard, but was getting easier, especially with these two boys making her laugh on an almost daily basis. Easier for her to do something like, grab the pink nightie and pink thigh high socks from her closet, and change into them.

A second to look in the mirror. She was a tiny, dainty little thing, a few inches shy of five feet, with a skinny body and small breasts. But, she looked like a woman too, a petite woman with sleek curves; she grinned in the mirror as she rotated to admire how the nightie exposed her stomach. No underwear. She shivered a little as she looked at her tiny slit in the mirror. Just a body part in the past, but now, something she was proud of, and eager to share with her boyfriends.

So salacious! So very much unlike her; except, not true, not anymore. There was that time that Jessy had complimented her sex, described its tiny stature with lascivious adjectives. At the time, it'd been overwhelming, and almost offensive. Now, she realized she needed to pay Jessy a compliment, for exposing a new side of herself.

Later. For now, she was going to ride the high of being in charge, and have fun with her boyfriends.

“Ok, b-boys ... come in.”

Like hungry dogs, they shuffled in quick, and both of them dropped their jaws at the sight of her, on her knees, on the bed.

“Damn,” they said together.

“You t-two ... Naked. Now.” Another order. She was on a roll tonight.

The two men didn't waste time, and tossed their clothes away with all the grace of children, jeans landing on the floor, shirts onto the wardrobe, socks lost to the closet monster. Once they were naked, she motioned them in toward her, and pointed at the bed. And, nodding, eyes wide and locked onto her, each of the titans slipped onto the bed, and knelt around her, one at each end of the bed, facing her.

She giggled, a bright sound she felt terribly embarrassed about, and more flustered as her skin, demonstrated her embarrassment with total body blushing. But it was ok to be embarrassed, she knew; Art and Matt didn't care. They both stared at her, licking their lips, on their knees with their shafts standing up at attention. All the control was in her hand, she could do whatever she wanted, and they would her. Not only that, but staring at her was enough to get them both hard, very hard, cocks twitching every so often, and their eyes eating her with ravenous need.

She was getting wet.

As her eyes drifted between the two large men, she looked their bodies of mass and muscle up and down, eventually settling on Matthew. So utterly massive, Matthew was, and his shoulder-length dark blond hair and face scruff gave him that rugged model look. And his green eyes were to die for. She crawled toward him, cat-like, or her best attempt anyway, and set her hands onto his naked thighs, then his hips, and then his steel chest as she got in closer, and closer. Soon she was on her knees between his, his cock against her bare stomach.

Near seven feet of titanic strength, size, heat, testosterone and desire, kneeling there, unmoving, and watching her with his hands on his knees, his eyes wide. After what happened to him tonight, he deserved a little treat, first.

“You t-two ... you always get so aggressive, pin me down and ... d-d-do things to me.” She shivered with the memory, and shivered twice over, as one of her hands reached down to rest along the thick girth pressing against her flat stomach.

“We—”

“No, d-d-don’t ... apologize. I like it ... a lot.” Whole body blushing red, it was easier to say embarrassing things now, at peak blushing, when she couldn’t get any redder. And it was good to say it, they deserved to know she liked it; and it was good to hear them both groan with desire at her words. “But, sometimes? A girl ... she likes t-to ... to ... lead.” Her hand upon the man’s cock pressed down on it, while she herself knelt straight up. Matt was sitting on his ankles, which gave her enough leeway, with her hips raised, to guide his cock’s head to press underneath her folds.

In seconds, she could tell. She’d coated the first two inches of him in her juices.

“I can definitely say that Art and I are perfectly cool if you want to do that,” the giant said, breath quickening, heart rate increasing. From this close, she could hear it, thumping in his chest, demanding satisfaction with animal need. But he remained in control, if only barely, she could tell.

“Good.” She nodded, grinning up at the man as her one hand pressed against his hard, enormous chest, and her other began to tease and caress the top side of his cock. “I ... I mean ... d-don’t think you shouldn’t ... you know ... g-get aggressive and ... d-d-do things to me, like before. But t-tonight ... I want to ... b-be in charge.” After seeing Jessy and Antoinette both do it, and have so much fun doing it, she wanted to try it at least once.

She came in a bit closer, until her thighs were nudging against the giant's testicles, and his glans started to spread open her pussy. She shivered, mewled a little, and started adjusting the angle of her pelvis to help guide the man's cock into her, spread her open, and stretch her little hole taut. But with her on her knees, and kneeling straight up, that was the only depth the angle allowed. He could have easily picked her up, and slammed her down onto him, but he didn't. He stayed sitting, and gazed upon her as she trembled, his cock's head reaching only two inches into her depths.

She reached up for his neck, and guided the man's head down to find her. Her other hand slid up from his cock, found her clitoris, and began to caress that instead, all while Matt's lips found hers. She kissed him, eyes drifting closed, as the pleasure sparks flowed outward from the tiny, swollen nub. Muscles squeezed, heat rising to a bowl, and she mewled into Matt's lips as she squeezed harder on his cock, until her juices were trickling down the length of him.

And just as Matt started to groan, she slipped off of him.

"Oh, that's how it's going to be, is it?" the man said, smiling. He looked down at his shaft, the forty-five degree angle of which it stood up from him, and the drops of her juices working down its veins. As Natasha stared at it, a drop of juices dripped from the tip, from the opening of the fat, swollen head of his cock. His precum.

She stuck out her tongue at him, grinning all the more, and turned around to crawl toward Art. So utterly wet, to the point of ridiculousness. Each time she got into bed with these two idiots, she got wetter, faster, like her body was addicted; and it was. She licked her lips again as she got in close to Art, and did the exact same thing, kneeling up high between his thighs, and guiding his cock to trace along her stomach, down her smooth mons, and then under her. Its upward angle guided the swollen head to rub against her entrance, and she cooed up at the man as she got in closer again, nice and snug, and guided his cock into her. Just those first two inches though, only enough to feel the fat thickness of his glans press on her g-spot.

She smiled up at the animal, and waited. The struggle was clear on his face, his breathing coming in pants, his eyes devouring her, his hands flexing and releasing at his sides. He very much wanted to grab her hips, and skewer her. He wouldn't, though, because she asked him not to. Because, she asked him to sit.

“M-Matt, get the lube.”

“Yes ma'am.” The giant, without hesitation, got up off the bed, and retrieved the lubricant from the nightstand.

She'd always considered herself a woman who'd own a cat one day. But now, she was definitely thinking dog. Obedient and loyal, and to feel protected was a warm, delightful sensation.

As Matt fetched — ha! fetched — the lube, Natasha slid herself off of Art's cock. The poor man whimpered his sadness, almost like a dog sad his owner was leaving for a day of work at the office. So cute, she almost exploded. Giggling at him, she backed up a little, and with one hand pressed on his leg for balance, she leaned in, and put a kiss on his cock.

The damn man was too tall! Or, she was too short. Both, definitely both. With him on his knees, and his butt on his feet, his pelvis was too high for her to get onto her belly and elbows for proper, intimate fellatio. She had to stay on her knees and lean in. It was only temporary though. She giggled at her silly thoughts as she put another kiss on the man's wet cock. She could taste her own juices. No wonder Matt and Art were always so eager to get inside her, with how wet she got, how quickly. She could see lines where droplets of her juices had run down his length to his pelvis and testicles.

Matt hopped back onto the bed, lube in hand, eyes wide with hopeful expectations. They got wider when she peeked over her shoulder at him, and wiggled her ass a little.

“ ... p-prepare me.”

The giant groaned, almost growled, and got in closer, leaning over her. So big, the bed threatened to sink into the floor; she had to adjust her knees to compensate, to stay between Art's so she could continue to plant gentle kisses on his long cock in her hand. Kind of a hard position to hold.

It got even harder, when Matt set one of his titanic hands against her ass, and drooled the cool lubricant onto it with the other. It warmed instantly, and she shivered as the beast began to rub it into the rose of her tiny butt. She'd gotten much more comfortable with anal sex, and at this point, happily embraced that vampires were forever anal ready. Of course, she'd never tell Jessy how much she was starting to enjoy it, or how much Jessy was right; the Gangrel didn't need anymore ammunition to tease Tash with.

It was when Matt slid a finger into her, spread open her muscles, that she started to tremble. Practice makes perfect, and she'd gotten good at letting her muscles relax, push out sometimes too, to swallow the penetrating digit. She mewled, louder than she wanted, and looked up at Art as she quivered all the more. Each quiver, each shake of her body, made the beast in her hand clench his jaw as he stared. He wanted to skewer her before, and now he wanted to fuck her into torpor, if his eyes were any indication.

Matt removed his finger, and she frowned at him, as she looked over her shoulder.

“D-Don't ... stop. Keep ... keep ... fingering me, there.”

The huge beast nodded, gentle face adopting a sinister smile, and he pressed his finger against her small ass once again. Two fingers scooped into her, large, deep, lubricated, filling and stretching her clenching ring of muscle. And as the man sank his digits into her ass, he pressed them down toward her belly.

God. Yes. Pressure, hitting that spot, those spots! Hitting the wall of her swollen, aching depths through her insides, through that thin wall of flesh; it made her feel so dirty, so naughty, so very much not like sweet little Natasha who was shy and meek. She whimpered, body struggling to keep from collapsing as the pleasure sparks spread outward from between her legs. She wanted to keep pleasuring Art, to keep his gaze locked onto her; keep him on that edge of animal need. Her lips found his swollen cock's head, and put another kiss on it, beside it, lower and lower, suckling and licking, gently, as she put her head beside his length. The long phallus stuck up beside her head, and a thick, heavy, slow drop of his precum started to dangle from his ripe glans, down onto her shoulder beneath him.

She put her hands into the blankets between his thighs, and collapsed. Her ass stuck up in the air, back arched, chest and face to the sheets, and she trembled like a squeak toy in a dog's mouth, complete with the squeaks. Matt pressed down, and down, and down, each curl of his fingers pressing along her depths, and forcing waves of tingling bliss through her pelvis, into her thighs and up into her chest. And, as her toes curled and her feet kicked the bed a couple times, a hard clench of her empty pussy caused a squirt of her juices to shoot out toward Matt. She managed to peek beneath herself, and found the giant had gotten close enough, knees out and her between them, for her cum to soak over his hard, awaiting cock.

Cumming, from anal, from someone filling her ass with fingers. Jessy would have teased her to death. The boys did not.

“You are so beautiful, it hurts,” Art said. She managed to peek up at him, between the waves of sparks forcing her feet to twist. The hunger was palpable, and another drop of his precum dripped from his glans, onto her shoulder, a long strand of the clear, viscous liquid connecting her to him.

“ ... M-Matt ... you c-can ... enter me.” Blushing until she was sure her face would catch fire, she peeked at the giant from over her shoulder again. He looked ravenous as well, precum building on his glans’s opening, his eyes devouring her ass, his free hand holding one of her butt cheeks while his other slowly eased out of her.

She forced herself back up onto her hands, and again, began to kiss Arturo’s cock. But, she wanted to do more, to keep drawing his eyes. With shivering lips, and eyes looking up at the man before her, she eased his thick girth into her mouth, guiding it further, and further. As she gazed up at the animal, the huge beast of muscle and need, she eased his cock down her throat.

“God ... damn ... Tash, you...” Arturo leaned forward, and set his hands on his knees, keeping his weight on them as if he was about to fall onto her. His lips were parted, almost drooling, and his eyes stared down at her as she looked up to meet his, with his cock filling her throat. Learning how to deepthroat in her personal time had been surprisingly easy; perhaps it was a Kindred thing? She smiled with bliss at the sight of Arturo’s eyes.

Keeping eye contact turned nigh impossible, as Matt began to ease his cock into her ass. She didn’t need to breathe, and keeping Arturo inside her was easy enough. The problem was keeping eye contact, not letting her eyes close or roll up too far, as the giant began to slip his shaft into her quivering insides. She managed some gargled groans, but if she wanted to talk, she’d have to lift her head off of Arturo’s cock. But, with her lips around the base of him, nose nudging against his pelvis, she could see the man was hypnotized by what she was doing. She doubted she was the first woman to deepthroat him, but she was probably the first one who didn’t need to breathe.

“Can I turn you over, Miss Vola?” Matt said.

She smiled around Art’s length. Miss Vola. The man had caught on, in ways she hadn’t realized she wanted him to. She pulled her head back slowly, let Art’s long shaft ease out of her, before she looked over her shoulder at Matt. The beast had half of his huge shaft inside her, and still a long way to go. Maybe he wanted to see more of her as he entered her?

“Y-Yes.” She expected him to pull out so she could turn over, but instead, he reached out, and simply, flipped her. Slowly, gently, but he stayed inside her, and she shivered at the weird sensation of his half-submerged cock rubbing against her walls.

On her back, she looked up at Arturo again, and reached out with her small hands to press them against the inside of his thighs. Both men were so close, their thighs created a cage around her tiny body. And both of them were staring at her, her belly and breasts, her smooth slit and swollen clitoris, and her black hair spread out on the blanket around her.

“So beautiful,” they said, in unison. Too cute, it made her chuckle. They had to have planned that.

She opened her mouth a little, licked her lips, and nodded Art’s way. More than enough body language for the man to get her meaning, press down on the base of his cock, and guide the long, thick, wet member onto her lips again. Now, the natural upright pull of its angle tried to make it press to the bottom of her mouth, and all she had to do was let it run along her tongue as she tilted her head into the blankets, and let the rigid flesh enter her throat again.

Something soft slipped under her butt. A pillow. Once Matt had her pelvis tilted upward, he again began to sink his cock into her ass, and she mewled onto Art’s cock as she felt the fat head of his girth push up toward her belly. Those spots; sensitive, and begging to be pressed again, sent more waves of bliss through her, making her shiver, making her squirm.

Once Matt was balls deep inside her, so deep it made her head spin, he guided her tiny legs around his enormous waist and hips, nothing but hard muscle greeting her thighs as she rested her legs upon him. Both with their knees spread and around her, both staring down at her, both being so gentle with her. Art wasn't even moving, and she knew that man was the more aggressive of the two.

She reached up to her own body with her hands, on her exposed belly, and ran her fingers up and down her skin, before tapping their legs. Touch me, please.

She melted, vanishing, turning into dust and bliss, as both men set their hands upon her. Art was balls deep inside her now, and she giggled a little, throating squeezing his cock, as she felt his balls press to her nose and forehead. It was fine, she didn't need to breathe, and the feel of his growls rumbling through his body, into his cock, and into her throat, was making her shiver. And feeling his hands cup her small breasts, his thumbs caress her nipples through her nightie, his fingers massage the small mounds of softness, more than made up for the strange position. Matt's hands too, they ran along her smooth belly, teasing her navel, her thighs, her legs inside her long socks, her dripping folds, and her swollen clitoris.

“You are the most beautiful creature I have ever seen,” Matt said.

She expected Art to tease him about his poetic words, but instead, Art ran a finger up her chest over the soft fabric, up to her throat, and lightly caressed it, the delicate skin, the distension showing where his cock filled her.

“You ... really are,” he said.

She smiled, butterflies filling her belly. Compliments, while on her back in a spitroast, with two very large cocks penetrating her, one of them being in her ass. She expected compliments like ‘you’re so sexy’ and ‘arg I need to fuck you now’ and such, more the sort of thing you’d hear in bad porn. But, with a little guidance, and a little request here and there from her, the pace of the sex slowed down to a delicious dessert.

As Art stayed balls deep within her mouth and throat, Matt began to push against her ass, gentle strokes using only slow, deep thrusts of his hips. Art’s hands massaged her body, her neck, her breasts, teasing the skin with dancing fingers, and she returned his affection with a playful tongue, lightly lapping at the thick thing filling her esophagus. Or at least, she tried to, but as Matt continued to gently, deeply fuck her butt, pillow insuring his cock hit toward her pussy again, and again, and again, his fingers also started to play with her clitoris.

Fingers caressing, gently circling and teasing her clit; the final drop of water that broke the dam. Her muscles clenched down, and her hands reached out to press against Art’s knees, as she began to tremble. The man eased his cock out of her throat, and met her teary-eyed gaze, almost awestruck, as she raised her head, and looked down along her body, to Matt. A tiny squirt of her juices shot out of her, and splashed against the man’s lower abdomen, her cum coating his steel abs. Another splash came as well, and this one forced her head to collapse back to the sheets as her voice broke down into whimpering mewls.

She came again, and it wasn’t because of the fingers on her clitoris, at least not mostly. A wild beast was between her legs, a giant wolf man, and he was tenderly fucking her ass until she came on him, came hard enough to squirt onto him. So naughty, so ... utterly ... naughty.

She reached out for Matt, and made grabby hands at the air. “ ... p-pick me up, and ... and lie down.”

Matt beamed a bright smile, saluted, and reached down. Enormous hands took her small waist, and he pulled her up onto him as he lay on his back. A valley of muscle, with touches of sweat on his massive pectorals, his stomach, his arms nearly as thick as her body, and wet lines of her cum between his abs. Soon she was straddling him, staring at him, and gulping as she shivered, orgasm aftershocks still working through her and making her ass clench on his cock.

But then, she turned around, shivering again as she felt the turning of flesh inside her. Once she was straddling the beast, but now facing away from him, she motioned for Art to come closer.

“Cum ... on my breasts.” As she said it, she met the man’s hungry gaze as best she could, but she knew she was giving him begging eyes, giving him ‘please fuck me now’ eyes, no matter how hard she tried to put on Antoinette’s seductress eyes instead. But despite that, the hungry animal, rumbling deep in his chest, came closer, and closer, until he was kneeling upright in front of her. With her sitting on Matt’s pelvis, her knees out to the side, her bare pussy dripping juices down onto his testicles, she had to look up to meet Art’s gaze as he pulled up on her nightie, and gently lifted it off her body.

Now she was completely naked, only in her thigh-highs. And that, apparently, was enough to have Art almost shaking with hunger. But the man put a hand on her shoulder instead, leaned down, and kissed her.

She melted away, hands reaching out to hold onto the man’s waist, and gently run her hands up and down the solid meat of his body. He kissed her more, and more, and pressed his cock into her breasts, his kneeling upright position putting his pelvis at level with her chest; he had to lean down quite a bit to reach her lips. His other hand took his cock, and began to stroke it, his hips nudging forward gently to press his wet glans against her naked, small breasts. With one hand still on her shoulder, he had the freedom to have a little fun, and slide his cock from side to side along her chest, drawing lines of moisture on her pale skin, until he stayed on one of her nipples. His large, hot glans circled it, leaking warm precum onto it as he masturbated, hand working his length while his hips gently eased him back and forth.

Matt's hands found her hips, and she reached down with both hers to hold onto them, letting go of Arturo. Another man, holding her, his fingers caressing her waist, her back, as the other man masturbated onto her breasts. If Matt had started thrusting, she'd have cum all over again, she was boiling so much. But he seemed content to let this play out, and she was thankful, because kissing Arturo while he started to masturbate faster and faster, was turning boiling into a scorching inferno.

A warm squirt of fluid earned a squeak from her, and she broke the kiss to look down at where Art was rubbing against her breast. After all the teasing she'd done to him, it was only natural he was going to cum a lot. Three squirts. Four. Five. Heavy strands of white splashed against her, up along her alabaster chest and neck, onto her collar, while much of it poured over the subtle curve of her small breast, coating it in the viscous liquid. So much of it, it ran down her petite frame and flat belly, catching onto her hips and thighs.

She met Art's gaze once more, absorbed the mix of hunger and bliss she found there, and lay back upon Matt's body. Turning her head to the side and craning it up to look at the giant, she reached up for his neck, and offered his jaw, his shoulders — arg, so massive, so hard — and his lips some gentle caresses, before she looked back to Art.

“ ... f-fuck me. Gently ... I ... I like rough, but when you go too deep, it can hurt a little.”

“So don’t go all the way?” Art said as he came in closer to her.

“Um, n-no, please keep ... getting ... as deep as you can ... j-just don’t thrust too hard when you do that. You c-can still go rough! Just, not when so d-deep. Ok?”

The man nodded, his smile softening as he leaned over her.
“Done.”

“And, right ... r-right now, I ... I want ... gentle sex.”

She almost squealed when she felt Matt let out a long, deep, rumbling growl. Was he frustrated? She turned her head again to peek up at him, and shivered all the more as she met the gentle giant’s gaze. Not frustrated, just terribly aroused. Poor man had been inside her for a while, and had yet to cum.

Art got over her, set his cock on her clitoris, and rubbed against it a few times, before easing it down lower. He had to squat around the two of them to make the position work, awkward and hard on the legs she was sure, but Art didn’t care. Soon her legs were hooked around his hips, pink socks up in the air, and she stared up at the man as he got onto his knees, and sank his cock into her.

On her back like this, she managed to look down her belly, along her naked breasts and cum-soaked skin, to where the man was stretching open her tiny slit. Not a hair to be found on her body, the little budding clitoris between her petite folds stood up, announcing her extreme arousal almost as well as her shivering body and whimpering moans did. Deeper, and deeper, he forced in the thick, hard girth of him, fighting for space inside her with Matt already filling her up. It made every inch tight, made every inch cause his flesh to press and rub against her spots, made every inch send shivers through her body. Eventually his cock reached her depths, and she gasped, putting her hands to his chest. Arg, so much hard muscle, and blood, and now some sweat, and she could smell wolf, beast, sex and need with every breath. Please go slow, please go slow.

As she had asked, Arturo gently eased in the last two inches of this long member, and stretched her inward with a soft pressure. She sighed bliss, relaxed her head onto Matt's chest, and let her arms roam up and over Arturo's body, his thick arms pressed into the blankets around them, and soon, onto her own body. Cum, werewolf cum, hot and thick, all over her. She ran her fingers through it, and giggled between tiny whimpers, as she remembered Antoinette riding Jack, with her enormous breasts covered in cum. Tash didn't have the breasts, but she had the cum, more than, considering how much these beasts came. And as she trailed lines through the white liquid on her nipples and subtle mounds of her breasts, both the men stared on, Matt's head raised on a pillow so he could gawk at her actions.

Both of them were staring at her, her doing lewd things, just like Antoinette had done with Jack. She could do more. Flexing her muscles and bracing her hands against where Art's were pressed into the blankets, her fingers squeezed his enormous forearms, and she pushed her hips upward, before letting gravity pull them back down.

Rumbles flowed through her, the two wolves making that purring sound that filled her with butterflies. They liked what she was doing. Managing her best determined gaze — weak and silly, but better than nothing — she picked up a proper rhythm pushing her hips up against Art, before pushing them down toward Matt, devouring and rubbing on them both a few couple inches.

It only took a few more strokes to earn a quiet sigh and groan from the gentle giant underneath her. He must have been on edge for some time, because of her. Men, eating out of her hand, like Antoinette said. She giggled, and looked up with a turned head to smile at the beast beneath her, and where his head was propped up on a pillow. And as she smiled up at him, she continued to move her ass against him, and clenched on him in time with the rhythm. Each sway caused the friction of the two cocks inside her to rub against her sensitive flesh, sending more tremors through her, but she wanted to focus on pleasuring Matt for now.

“Feel ... good?” she said. The man was cumming inside her, pouring his hot fluid into her, and she could see the rapture on his face.

“God yes,” he managed to say. Twitches, a few shivers, and some hard flexing of his muscles signaled each wave of his seed gushing into her.

She continued to dance on his cock, each driving upward motion of her hips causing her ass to clench tight on him, and meet Arturo’s length until she’d managed to take him to the hilt, his length stretching her inward. God, that spot, deep, sensitive, but when he pressed against it like that, slow and filling. It sent the pleasure sparks tingling up and down her body again, and she collapsed onto Matt as she lost energy. She wasn’t cumming yet, but was getting there.

One of her hands took Matt’s, and made it secure on her hip so she wouldn’t go anywhere. The other, she guided up to her neck, and she melted onto the gentle giant’s chest as Matt settled his titan grip around her throat.

“Ok, you t-two ... can ... fuck me. Gentle, ok?”

They both rumbled as she closed her eyes and prepared for the two beasts to pound her into a trembling mess. But, they didn’t. Arturo leaned over her, his weight on his palms on the blankets as he put a kiss on her bottom lip, and began to gently thrust into her. Matt’s grip on her neck stayed, and squeezed a little, but not as tight as he or Art often did. His grip was gentle, tender, and his motion under her body with his pelvis pushing upward just as gentle.

Instead of deep, rough-but-wonderful sex, she felt like she was on the ocean, in an ebb and tide of gentle, wonderful sex. Both men found a rhythm with each other, sinking themselves balls deep into her until she could feel the heads of their cocks fighting for room in her depths. Both of them, pressing against that spot so deep inside her, stretching it deeper into her until she thought she'd fade away. Her hands, with minds of their own, drifted back to her breasts, and she again began to massage them, fingers tracing along her nipples, gentle, triggering the delightful sparks along her breasts she was hungry for. And tracing Arturo's cum along her skin was heavenly.

She came again, and sighed bliss. Not a powerful, mind shattering orgasm, but something a little more controlled, a little more subdued, something she could open her eyes during, and smile up at Arturo as she clenched on his cock, as well as Matt's. The sort of orgasm she imagined Antoinette often enjoyed, a mix of pleasure, and control.

It may have been a little too much for Art. He pulled out of her, set his cock on her pelvis, and began to stroke himself as he rubbed the head into her belly. She raised her head, and blinked down at him, at the valley of muscle above her, and the grip he had on his cock, as he started to pour another wave of it onto her body again.

"I'm ... going to be so st-ticky." She gulped, and stared on as the fat, swollen head of the man's cock rubbed along her already cum-soaked skin, and squirted another wave of the hot fluid onto her. And another. And another. Some of the harder squirts reached up to her breasts, and she gasped as it splashed over her fingers, getting between their knuckles. Hot, so very hot, and it smelled of sex and animal and ... beast.

"Couldn't help myself," he said as he smiled down at his work. "Hope you don't mind?"

“ ... I ... don't.” She didn't, she really didn't. Memories of Antoinette's cum-covered breasts flirted with her mind, and she sighed again as she relaxed onto Matt's chest again, and rubbed his friend's cum into her breasts. So much of it, so much, and it was so warm. And, most of all, massaging her hard nipples with it was causing both wolves to rumble with primal need, her display bringing them both to attention.

But they stayed gentle with her, even as Art slipped his cock back into her soaked insides, and squirted a couple more gushes of his cum into her. These werewolves were unending waves of sexuality, life, hunger, aggression, and they came like fire hydrants. And, at her request, they were being gentle with her, as they both fucked her at the same time.

She whimpered openly, and reached out to hold onto Art's forearms again. He wouldn't mind the cum on her hands.

“ ... faster.”

Art lowered himself closer to her, growled, the rumbling sound working through his body into her. Matt did too. So much vibration from their voices, filling her, announcing their new rhythm as they both started to fuck her. She held on, her voice fading away as Matt tightened his grip around her throat. They were both so into it, into holding her, touching her, staring at her, eating her with their eyes. The heat of them, the size of them, she was lost to it, and she shivered as they began to work together. Both in to the hilt, then one out, then the other, then both in again, like she was a cog in a clock.

Her little butt was filled with cum, and she could feel it trickle out of her, coating the giant's length as he eased a couple inches of himself in and out of her. Art had more to work with, his angle and position allowing him to draw himself back further, and bury himself into her with a little more impact. Each one would have earned a squeak, but Matt's grip on her throat stopped her. If she wanted to stop them, it'd be hard to, at this point. She was a quivering, shaking mess, and the pleasure was starting to build up again. At their mercy, as they pumped into her.

It was enough to bury her mind in waves of bliss. Sinking into pleasure, lost in the back and forth of giving over control at the last moment to these two rugged animals, so they could have their way with her.

She closed her eyes, went limp, and came. They continued, thrusting, pushing, burying. Somewhere along the line, Art lowered himself closer still; her body sandwiched between the two walls of muscle and sweat.

Did Art cum again? He probably did. She couldn't tell, drifting away on a cloud, or some silly cliché that manifested as cloudy, glowing images with blurry edges. Limp and exhausted, she managed some quiet mewls as they pumped into her, until at some point, they started to slow down. Slower, and slower, until she could at last feel their lengths soften, and no longer stretching her tiny insides to bursting.

Movement. Art picked her up, and laid her upon her bed beside Matt, before he lay beside her.

"I ... I need to ... get back t-to Elysium Tower b-before sunrise," she said. She did say it, right? It was hard to tell, voice soft and blending into the background noise of two werewolves breathing, and their heart beats thundering, before they too began to slow. "Um, let's ... g ... get a quick shower."

"... hey Tash," Art said, looking up at the ceiling, and raising a hand to trace invisible stars, "I don't want to put you between us and your job, but, you might want to talk to the Prince about this Black Blood business, with it and Jacob."

“She knows, about it, and, um, I’m sure she’s d ... d-doing all she can.”

Matt forced himself up to sitting, nodded, and turned to look down at her. “Maybe. That Black Blood spirit is some sort of mutation, probably a Magath, and ... and it’s worse than we realized, if it’s talking on the regular with Jacob. If it’s possible, it’d save everyone a headache, and probably a lot of lives, if Antoinette could just stop the man communicating with it.”

Convince Antoinette to get confrontational with Jacob, and stop him from continuing his private pursuits, directly. That was very much not a Kindred thing to do, and very much not an Antoinette and Jacob thing to do.

“I’ll ... I’ll s-see what I can do.”

Chapter 63

~~Jack~~

“Guys, guys! We need to stick around and figure out all we can.” He tried to get out of their grip, but it wasn’t going to happen. Fiona had a good grip for a small girl, and Damien had fifty years of his second life in seniority. Struggling was pointless, but he wasn’t about to throw this opportunity away. Sandbagging was the best option he had, so he let his bodyweight succumb to gravity. Unfortunately, they were both strong enough to drag him, regardless.

“Jack, you pride yourself on your reasoning, yes?” Damien said.

“ ... I do, yeah.” Fuck. Already knew where Damien was going with this, but he didn’t want to hear it right now.

“I know figuring what to do about this ritual thing targeting you is a top priority. But, we’re in over our heads. We saw what we came to see, but—”

“Azamel’s warning is—”

“Has nothing to do with the hunter ritual.” Damien shook his head, as he looked back over his shoulder at Jack. “We have an idea now of what’s going on, so we should get out of here. Report, meet up with Jessy, delicately avoid talk of mysterious warnings, and mention Azamel’s explanation of where the ritual came from.”

“ ... fine.”

Fiona, giggling and almost jumping in spot, helped him back to his feet. Turning fear into excitement was a skill she had in droves. “Come on! Who knows what ... what...”

Jack stood up, and turned around to face the direction Fiona and Damien were taking him. There'd be something bad ahead, something that warranted Fiona's pause, something that was going to make Damien right, and make Jack regret his one moment of spontaneity.

"Uh oh, uh oh." Sky came up behind them, and flapped a feather over their heads. "Leave, better leave!" And leave it did, flapping both wings and catapulting itself into the air, abandoning the three little monsters to find a perch on higher ground. That was fine, Jack couldn't blame any bird for escaping at the moment of danger, that's what birds did. But at the same time, he was really wishing the bird would have taken them with it.

They came out of the street, out of the cracks of shadow running along the uneven asphalt, out of the corner where building met pavement, out of the rainy windowsills, and out of the shadows cast by warped benches. Red bits of wavy fog leaked out of crevices, as if someone was smoking, and blowing puffs of crimson cloud. With each wave of the fog that crept out onto the street in front of the three; hissing began, quiet and taunting. Drip, drip, splashes of red liquid fell to the street, before disappearing into nothing, wisps of more red smoke, while entities began to form.

Most definitely not the sex spirits he had seen in Dolareido.

The red things had streaks of black moving through them, or streaks of red moving through masses of black; hard to tell as the two colors mixed and fought for surface area. But with time, it was apparent something black, something that looked like tar dancing with smoke, was draped in red which ran like blood. Drip, drip. The red things had human-like torso shapes, but without distinguished features; legs as solid as cigarette smog. With time, long claws of black crept out of their hands, subtle but massive. Worse were the eyes, glowing white eyes, slitted and slanted. Demon eyes.

And there was a dozen of them.

“Someone ... tore open ... verge ... who?” One of the strange, hovering spirits came forward from the group, and looked at them.

And that was enough for the weight of its presence to hit them. The three of them took a step back, and Jack gulped as he felt the ice in his stomach start to form. He stared into the eyes of the demon creature, until the bent streetlights started to flicker on and off, aware of the eye contact. Shit, shit, shit. As if the city itself was not happy about the creatures, the streetlights warped, bending away from their city-center hope, away from the hovering entities. The shadow was powerful as the lights began to turn off, one at a time; each a flicker, then a dying gasp, before it was gone.

As the strange spirits spread out to cover Jack’s exit back to the ‘verge’, darkness settled on them, until only the moon and its unsteady light offered them vision. Fiona might be able to see in total darkness, but Damien and Jack would be fucked. It hadn’t come to that, but it was getting a little too close for comfort.

Damien and Fiona nudged Jack in the back of his shoulders. Oh, right. Now that everything was going to shit, he was the ambassador, again. If it wasn’t his fault for them getting caught, he’d have kept his mouth shut. Well, would have liked to, but the situation wasn’t giving him any options.

“Um, uh ... verge?” he said.

The strange, shadowy figure of obsidian death and bleeding crimson, gestured to the wall of the factory the three intruders had come from. “Black Blood has claimed this.” The choir of entities hissed, one or two of them shrieking. The sound stirred the rat-like black blobs that ran along the building perimeters nearby, and sent them darting into whatever hole they could find.

“Black Blood has no claim to the old verges!” Sky squawked from his perch on a rooftop, and clawed at the roof edge a few times. “They’re from before!”

The dark spirit in front of its brethren moved forward again, without a glance to the bird. “You ... you two are Kindred. Dead things. Useless. But you...” It drifted toward Fiona, closer, drip drip of something very blood-like creating a trail behind it. “Skin. Sinew. Bone. Organs. Muscle. Fat. Let us see.”

“Oh, I dinnae think so!”

So much for diplomacy. Before Jack could reach out, stop her from turning a bad situation worse, the woman let out her monster.

The giant spider creature, the woman of blades, of horns covering the top half of her face like an elegant mask combining into a crown, of spikes for feet and fingers, of silk and shadow, slashed out. A flicker of shadow in the already dim light was easy to miss, but Jack knew what to look for. The blades Vrall used weren’t for slashing, they were for stabbing, like an estoc sword. A very, very, very long estoc.

Either the strange spirits didn’t recognize what Fiona was, or they underestimated her, and how quick she’d be to throw the first punch. Eight blades upon long, smooth, sectioned spider legs stabbed out, cracking the air with a snap, and stabbing into each spirit, through their chests; if that was a chest, on top of their legs of smoke. It must have been, because the eight creatures all let out a weird shriek, distorted with ear-splitting nails-on-chalkboard shrill sounds.

The eight of them fell to the ground. And then, started to get back up.

“Warned.” One of them said, spreading out, body disappearing into the shadow of a nearby bench.

“Warned about the Begotten.” Another, one getting up from the wound, stood before them, fearless. The hole in its chest showed only more of the black and red smoke that made its body, and the hole was closing back up.

“Begotten opened the door, without permission.” Another moved toward the building on Damien’s left, and its body pressed to the brick, flatter than it should have been able to. As it moved toward them, shadow spread out from where its body merged with the building, burying it and the surrounding asphalt in billowy onyx for a dozen feet. A smokescreen of bleeding tar. “Kill Begotten.”

Ok, yeah, that sounded bad. Sounded like they didn’t want Begotten opening doors that were otherwise locked. Sounded like covering up their tracks. Sounded like Black Blood was giving these things orders, too? He’d ask, but doubted they’d answer.

Jack stepped away again, drawing his pistol and sword, and began firing. No reason to be diplomatic at this point. “Shit. Shit shit shit. Plan?”

“Escape.” Damien mirrored him. Though his weapons were already drawn, he wasted no time following Jack’s lead, sinking bullets into the spirits.

The dozen spirits scattered, becoming smoke on the wind. Their eyes and enormous claws remained solid, but their bodies did not, half opaque as they took to the sky. The one against the building jumped for Damien, one set of claws slicing up through the asphalt like butter. But, a need for melee meant Damien had little trouble putting a bullet through the creature’s head, sending it toppling to the street, at his feet.

It started to get up, hole in its head filling in with a mix of the black tar, and crimson mist.

No one wanted to say it, but none of them knew anything about spirits. Jack was starting to learn a thing or two, but ultimately, he had no idea if spirits were immortal, or if guns and swords could kill them. And these spirits kept getting back, even as Jack and Damien continued to sink bullets into them. Another one dived at them, this one from the front, and Jack sank six bullets into its chest before it went down. It too started to get up, slowly but surely.

“Run!” Sky said, and it took to the air and flew away. Typical bird.

Ok, he took it back. Jack wouldn't blame a bird for running at the first sign of trouble. Strangle Mulder and Scully when you get back, just because.

Damien tapped him on the shoulder, and nodded his head back toward the path behind them. Empty street, no movement as far as Jack could see, and the curved streetlights pointed the way toward South Side. He was afraid to see what South Side might look like in this strange Shadow world, and it was a good mile or two run from here, anyway. Kindred could do that, no need for air, but could Fiona? It seemed like she couldn't transform into her horror, not completely, not unless she was in a nightmare.

“Cover me, Jack.” Damien got onto a knee, put his sword away, and nodded his head toward Fiona. “Get on.”

“Oh, my hero!” Giggling, always with the giggling. She hopped onto Damien's back, and like he'd done this a hundred times before, he started running, one arm hooked onto her thigh to keep her secure as she hugged him. With his other arm free, he continued to fire his pistol, and unlike Jack, he didn't miss.

Well, at least this way they didn't have to worry about Fiona growing tired now. Jack broke into a full on run, letting a touch of the beast out, a little of the hungry animal channel into his legs, tapping into that Kindred part of him that had no issue running. The beast loved to run, hop building rooftops, stalk the shadows, and track prey. Running was all he needed, for now.

The spirits gave chase. Naturally. But they didn't run on legs to do it; hell, their legs had vanished. The dozen spirits floated after them, flowing left and right in the air like sharks, arms hanging underneath them and pulling back with the momentum of movement and the impact of the air they cut through. Some of the spirits merged into walls, others into the street. They flowed after the three running intruders like living shadow. As the three of them rounded a corner, one of the spirits hovered over a bench, and its claws sliced through its bent shape without resistance.

It was like running from a bunch of Wolverine ghosts. What the fuck?

“Fiona, can you not walk like you do in the nightmare?” he yelled, turning back and shooting at one of the spirits as it pulled ahead of the pack. Miss. Miss. Hit! It shrieked as lead tore through its demon eye, and it collided with the street, crimson and onyx splattering around, half of it in drops like tar, or thick blood. Half of it spreading into the air like mist. But, with time, the ethereal splatter of whatever the spirit was made of, began to pull itself back into its host.

“I cannae! Nae easily. Summoning Vrall out 'ere is hard. It's ... it's nae home, nae the nightmare. But if we can find a place dark and secluded, someplace quiet, I might be able to open a pathway back to my lair.”

Easier said than done. The whole place was dark, but secluded wasn't going to happen, as every corner, every building, every object they passed, Jack was sure he saw something alive, or at least moving. More of those rat-like wisps along the corners, or new things he couldn't put a name to, but looked like slugs creeping up old buildings. Hairy, old slugs.

A shriek sent him down, falling to his chest hard enough for the street to tear into his suit, and some of his skin. Ripped fabric and bits of ash, lovely. One of the spirits flew over his head, and he shot at it from behind as it darted through the air, left and right. But, if it was going to consistently move like a shark, he could use that, and predict.

Miss. Hit! Getting better. The creature went down with another shriek, higher pitched, full of pain, and frustration. Physical things hurt them, but were they dying? How the fuck was he supposed to know, they kept getting back up.

He threw Fiona a glance as he got up, while Damien waited for him. Nice to know the man wouldn't leave him behind, when the shit hit the fan. There was so much shit, Jack struggled to see anything else. Trapped in a parallel dimension, with ghost things chasing them. Fuck. Fuck fuck fuck.

They rounded a corner, and Damien threw open a door of a nearby building. Front door of an apartment building.

“We’re going to be trapped in here,” Jack said, running up the stairs after Damien.

Damien shook his head. “We’re going to get run down, if we stay out there.” Once he stopped by an apartment door, he set Fiona down, and kicked it hard. Jack expected wood to splinter and the door to fly open; kicking open doors was a common Kindred tactic. But the wood did not budge. Tilting his head to the side, Damien tried again, driving his boot into the wood hard enough to send an echo through the hall. Nothing. “... what in the world.”

The door snarled.

The three of them jumped back, and stared at a door that just made noise. It opened a couple of eyes from the white coating of cheap paint. Small eyes slitted vertically with black pupils. A lipless mouth followed, large and reaching from edge to edge, with bars for teeth, the sort of bars you'd find on a window in a rough neighborhood.

"Go away!" it said, voice full of deep thuds.

"Go away!" another door said.

"Go away!" said another.

"Ye've got to be shitting me." Fiona, caught between a laugh and hiccup, turned around and looked at the doors. They were all doing it, all sprouting eyes and mouths, all glaring at the intruders. Did people in Dolareido really live in this sort of paranoia? Maybe the Carthians had it right, and it wasn't as good a place to live as the Invictus and Antoinette liked to pass off.

Maybe he could talk past the door? Screams ripped down the hallway, putting an end to that idea as each door closed their eyes and mouths, becoming regular doors once more.

The three of them turned to face the sound, and began to back away from it. The hallway was lit with flickering light, bulbs that dipped in and out of different colors. Red to white, to black, and then back again, as if the light itself was bleeding on them in rhythm with the delightful ear-splitting shrieks that filled the corridor.

Silence fell on them, heavy and cold. They continued to back away from the stairway, pistols up, swords out, and the two Kindred glancing over their shoulders to look behind them. The hallway came to a stop except for strange windows, which looked like they were being rained on. Despite the lack of rain. The carpet was damp, dark, and stained. The walls were cracked, bleeding rust, and showing other signs of wear and tear. It was one of the apartment buildings built on the North Side's edge, where people could find a cheap place to live without risking Devil's Corner shit. Maybe that's why the doors wouldn't let them in.

How much Dolareido reflected on itself, in this shadow world, was startling. But, it was also useful information. If he could predict what sort of reaction they'd get from environments based on what he knew about the city, maybe he could avoid situations like this.

Too little, too late. The silence pressed against them, and shadows beyond poked at the corners of the hallway. Outside, where they could run, the strange ghosts had been scary; inside a hallway, with no escape, the strange entities took on a new level of terrifying. Not Damien's fault, but Jack couldn't help but give the man a frown, as the shadows dancing on the edge of the corner ahead of them, started to emerge.

"Give us the flesh." Beedy eyes poked out from around the corner, but they didn't expose their bodies, yet. They carried darkness with them, like ink, or a poisonous fog. It hid their features, so only their glowing eyes cut through the obsidian nebula surrounding their guise.

"W-Why would a spirit want flesh?" Jack said, small sword in one hand, and pistol set to brace against his wrist. Whatever spirits were made of, they refused to die, no matter how many bullets the two Kindred sank into them. Fiona's monster limbs seemed to do better, but not much better. Would silver work? Probably not.

Another set of eyes poked out from around the distant corner, white slits cutting through the pulsing, bleeding light. Drops of black and red fell from wisps of onyx, and crept along the ruined carpet toward the three intruders. Every moment it got closer, darkness was drawn inward, like a vortex.

Vampires, and a Begotten of darkness, stepping back from shadows. Fucking lovely.

“Flesh, blood. Tools from the other side. Stupid creatures know not the power of their own bones, of their sinew.” Claws reached out from the black, arms misty red and flowing with waves of darkness, like food coloring dropped into water. Drip, drip. The claws came out further, then sank into the floor, as if the shitty carpet was nothing more than water.

The thing was talking about human bodies as if they were toolkits, as if the limbs, organs and contents thereof, were items to be used in ... in a ritual. Crúac? But, there was more to crúac than just guts and bones, as far as Jack’s paltry understanding was concerned. It didn’t make sense.

“Did ... did you have ... anything to do with a ritual ... with pictures? Drawn pictures?”

A laugh, a shriek mixed with ups and downs of tearing vocal cords. Another spirit crept in with the black, piercing eyes drifting down along the floor, then up against the opposite wall.

“One of us. Not one of us. Secrets, on the parchment, of the flesh and bone. A glimpse of who it is the monster speaks with. The trail for their goal.”

“W-What? I don’t understand, I—”

The chorus of shrieks erupted, and the eyes and claws came with it. Darting out of the black, the spirits ripped and shredded the floor, ceiling, walls, and doors as they dashed for the three intruders. The doors opened their eyes and cried out in pain, eyes flitting around in a panic as claws sliced them open. Some of the doors fell apart, revealing obsidian endlessness beyond them, cold and empty.

Jack and Damien started backing up, each unloading bullets into the oncoming swarm. Screams echoed through the hallway, against the hollering doors that cried in pain, as more claws came for them. Rabid animals.

Fiona swung both her arms from side to side, as if knocking aside a great tide. The monster inside her snapped out with its limbs, and splattered white against the walls. Webbing, a mountain of it, in a pattern of chaos. Ropes, and ropes of it, joined wall to wall, thick strands, more than big enough to hang a man, covered the hallway passage.

The spirits crashed into them. Either they didn't see, or didn't expect them, many getting their claws trapped underneath the webbing at angles they couldn't use to cut. And as they struggled, the three of them continued to back up, shooting, and shooting.

Jack glanced over his shoulder. Window. If the doors weren't going to open for them, though even if they did, nothing seemed to exist behind them, then the window was the only way out. Jump out the window? He could handle the fall, Damien could handle the fall, and Fiona could too.

"Go, go!" Jack yelled as he slammed his back beside the windowsill, reloaded, and fired into the approaching black cloud. Swirling bits of red followed the pairs of eyes moving up and down in the obsidian wall, and the webbing Fiona left disappeared into the rolling waves. Left, right, up, down, the eyes moved around and around, letting out shrieking cackles, and dragging a pair of claws up the walls, floor, and ceiling. Jack shot at them, taking his time to aim for a set of eyes each time, and squeezing the trigger with solid strength, Kindred strength. The odd sounding thud of bullets hitting spirit bodies joined high pitched shrieks, as pair, after pair, of slitted white eyes fell into the black. Then, got back up.

Damien shot the window. Jack half expected the window to not break, then announce its frustration to the intruders. But the satisfying sound of a bullet shattering glass filled the hallway, causing Jack to sigh, in relief, as he glanced at Damien, watching him work. Boot against the glass and wood, Damien made short work of the window. Before he could say anything, Fiona jumped out.

“Fiona!” Damien threw his hands up, before he, too, jumped through the window.

“Give us the woman,” the spirits said, their voice a harsh whisper between the gunshots. Many voices, fading in and out, speaking out of turn from each other. Voices overlapping, cutting through each other. “Give us the woman, Jack Terry, and we will tell you more of the ritual of faces.”

Ritual of faces. Name? Could be, or just what the spirits call it. Better than nothing, though. He had something to go with, something to sink his teeth into, and learn about. Later. For now, Geronimo.

They weren't up very high, so landing wasn't easy. He was light, undead; the combination made falling a couple floors easy to manage. His shoes didn't like it much, but his bones handled it fine. Fiona landed on her spider legs. Jack expected her to descend to her human feet, but she turned around, and sliced several spider blades at the window. The monster's blades slashed over Jack's head, crashing into the window, and slathering it in webbing.

A moment to catch their breath. Or for her to catch hers. The Kindred looked at each other, the web-covered window, then around themselves. Two courses of action: run, or ask Fiona to cover the apartment building entrance with webbing, and then run.

A shriek from around the corner, outside the building, made the decision for them. Jack looked left and right, and let his shoulders drop, as more of the deadly creatures started to emerge from shadows. Their eyes blended into the flickering darkness, slits of white joined by dripping blacks and reds that leaked onto the street before them. Cracks in the sidewalk filled with the dark liquid, mixing red and black into ribbons, little streams, and overflowing veins that bled onto the street.

“Leave the flesh.”

“Leave her to us.”

“Undead will be left alone.”

“But only if monster left behind.”

“Will dissect her.”

“See her insides.”

“Blood, muscle, organs, bile.”

“And the horror inside. Where is it? How does it work?”

“Taste. Let us taste the Begotten.”

If aliens came to Earth, and needed to ingest people to figure out how they functioned, Jack figured they'd sound like this.

“I’m nae letting ye touch me!” Fiona backed away, down the empty street toward South Side. But, even if they could run to South Side, there wasn’t anything there to escape to. Where were they running?

They weren’t running anywhere. They were just running. Sky said run, and unless the bird had some miracle planned for their rescue, their running was fruitless.

Damien didn’t agree. He scooped up Fiona, and bolted, making his way to South Side. “Don’t stop.”

“But—”

“Jack, keep running. We’ll figure this out.”

Easier for a Mekhet to say in the circumstance. He could run, he could hide. A Ventrue was at his best when standing his ground, preferably with army of thralls and ghouls under his command. An army of animals, at his beck and call, would not go amiss, either.

But, he had none of that, so he did the only damn thing he could. He ran, firing shots behind him. Was Sky overhead? He didn’t know, and couldn’t pause to look. Run. All he could fucking do was run. All he could do was—the two vampires, and the monster luggage on Damien’s back, came to a dead stop, and stared at the wall of water coming their way.

Holy fucking hell, had a meteor hit Earth? That’s what happens in all the movies, a giant wave of water followed the meteor’s impact, and half the world drowned, or some such. A quick glance up showed the moon was still there, so the Moon didn’t fall to Earth. And the water wasn’t coming at five-hundred miles an hour; maybe a tenth of that. But there was no denying, it was a giant wave of water, fifty feet high, hitting the rooftops of North Side factories and warehouses, as it crashed down and around them.

Jack threw up his hands, covered his face, and waited. He couldn’t drown, he hoped. He didn’t need to breathe but considering where he was, for all he knew a giant wave in the Shadow world was more than capable of drowning a vampire. Maybe he’d melt away, like in some vampire myths. Maybe he’d walk on water.

Whatever it’d do to him, he didn’t get to find out, as the crashing tide split around him and Damien at the last moment. Snapping out and back in, whipping around them with ferocious drive, the great water smashed into the oncoming, shrieking dozen of pursing death creatures. He turned, and stared on, as thunder rumbled through his body, enough to make his feet inch along the vibrating street. It would not have surprised him if one of the spirits had started to cry out ‘Moses!’, as the collapsing walls of compressing terror crashed in upon the ghastly creatures. Poor Ramesses.

Like drops of red and black food coloring, lost to insurmountable amounts of crashing water, the spirits began to fade away into the unending liquid. They cried and shrieked, alien sounds that reminded Jack of a fox’s scream. Bone chilling. It was impossible to see what happened to them after the first ten feet of water, as the splashing white foam and rapid, crashing waves disguised their journey, well and beyond what he could see. But, with how hard the water was slamming against the buildings, any human would have cracked like an egg on contact.

With time, the water began to fade, and Damien set Fiona down before drawing his sword once more. Jack still had his, but the hell was a sword going to do against water? He stared into the path ahead, where they had planned to run; there was now a river cutting around them. Nope, no glass between him and the water, but Jack peered into the water anyway, wondering if fish would be swimming by, like in one of those underwater aquariums.

The strange places a mind went when death was on your door. Maybe this was why Fiona always turned into a weird, giggling creature when she was super excited.

The water was eventually gone, draining into the gutters and manholes, and leaving behind a goddess of the Nile. Jack tilted his head to the side, and stared at the beautiful entity, with white wings, rising high, and catching the moonlight. Whatever the wings were attached to, it had womanly curves, formed in the clear blue liquid body. The goddess had no arms, but a human-ish body nonetheless, with jaw, neck, shoulders and hips. Its legs merged into a flowing blue wave which seemed to churn on itself, over the asphalt. Mist sparkled and flowed out of the woman’s shoulders where arms should have been, and the sparkling crystal spread outward, nudging against the dead streetlights, rekindling them.

“... you are Terry?” she ... it said, as it came toward them. “And you two must be Damien and Fiona. You are lucky my pack did not catch you during the misunderstanding, monster, or your death would have been sure.”

“I, um ... your pack?” Pack? The misunderstanding had been with the werewolves, but—“You work with Avery?”

“She does.”

Jack felt every muscle, every tight, gripping, squeezing bit of his insides relax, as he recognized Clara’s voice. She stepped out from behind the strange spirit, wearing jeans, brown hiking boots, and a loose white shirt. Casual, comfy, and beautiful against her tan skin tint.

“Hey, Clara.” Wait, shit! They weren’t supposed to be here. Crap! This wasn’t a good thing, but at least it was better than being cut up by those other things. “Um ... how’s it going?”

“Oh, you know, fine. Was hunting some red wraiths, until apparently, someone stirred the hornets’ nest. Every red wraith in the area converged here.” She nodded up to one of the rooftop ledges, where Sky had perched. “And this fucker found me and Carter, said you were in trouble.”

Carter, right, one of the werewolves getting a new apartment, courtesy of the Invictus. Older, and tough as nails by the look of him.

“Um, er ... yeah, uh—”

“This one,” the water creature said as it pointed at Fiona with one of its angel wings, “tore open the verge ... but it is closed once more. So, not torn, then. Opened?”

Fiona, with a single nod and silly giggle, hopped off of Damien's back. "Aye! I go where I want. I'm a—"

Damien snapped his hand out, and covered the girl's mouth. Yeah, no need to follow that up, Fiona talked too much.

Carter stepped forward, snarling, and cracked his knuckles as he came in closer and closer. "If Begotten can open portals, then she's too dangerous to be left alive."

"Whoa, whoa!" Jack threw up his hands, and took a step forward, getting between the oncoming old man, and Jack's two friends. "No need for that, and you don't have the right to make that call. Fiona goes where she wants, and she wanted to show us the damage to the ... verge, whatever that is."

Carter didn't seem too convinced. He reached out, and shoved Jack aside, with all the grace of a bully. High school flashback. Funny thought, before the asphalt greeted Jack and his torn up shirt and jacket, again.

He wasn't worried about Fiona and Damien though; Damien was an assassin and Fiona was freakishly strong when she chose. The fragile truce between the wolves and vamps didn't need more shit dumped on it though, and someone did love to throw shit at it.

Groaning, he got back up, and marched back over to Carter. The old man was built strong, not fitting his age at all, but the scars and gray hair didn't lie. If he'd shaved or buzzed his head, Jack was sure he'd recognize the man as a drill sergeant from any number of old war movies set in Vietnam. Now if only the old wolf would unleash an either unrelenting wave of insults, or a particularly malicious insult that rendered someone a sobbing mess in only a few words, the image would be complete.

"Ye want to fight, old man? Fucking mon' then! Ye bawbag." The small girl took a few practice swings at the air as the somewhat large, tall man, who might as well have been made out of steel, came in closer.

Then Damien stepped in the way. Without losing a beat, he ejected the magazine from his pistol, slipped in a new one, and manually ejected the old bullet by racking the slide, all without letting go of his sword. But, there was no need to manually eject the old bullet.

“You don’t own this world,” he said. “You want to keep things secret from us? Fine. But you have no basis for telling us we can’t be here. We’re exploring, learning, and you have no right to make us do otherwise.” Steel face, eyes locked, the Mekhet’s eyes might as well have been a pistol barrels, with the look he was giving Carter.

Both Jack and Fiona raised a brow, and stared at the normally calm man. So did Carter, before he smirked, and drew a hand back.

“You expect a bullet to stop—”

Damien pulled the trigger, and Carter let out a scream as he fell to his ass. Big and bad drill sergeant Carter gasped and clutched his jeans covered leg, staring at the wound, his mouth open and eyes wide. The blood splatter was unusually massive, considering it was a typical 9mm pistol, but as Carter’s scream turned into a guttural, growling snarl, hands still clutching the leg, Jack understood.

Silver bullet. It’d left a shredded hole through the wolf’s leg. The flesh bulged with veins and flexing muscle around the damaged skin. The veins show red, blue, and bits of black, as if the silver was poison. But then, if someone had shot a bullet made of fire at Jack, he’d be screaming in pain, too.

“You fucking maggot!” Carter struggled to get back to his feet, but the bloodshot eyes and trembling body made it all too obvious he wouldn’t be doing that for a minute or two. Caught by surprise by his bane, the werewolf held out a hand, and Clara helped the man to his feet. Er, foot, poor guy forced to stand on the one good leg.

Jack expected a follow up: something to explode, Clara unleashing hell, or the strange water goddess-spirit thing with the soft, white eyes half hidden inside the flowing, crystal water face, to unleash a special kind of torture on them. Or maybe just for Fiona to take Damien's actions as an invitation to go all out on the offensive, instead of the warning shot that it was. But, no one moved, jumped or started shooting or slicing. The only person who made any more noise, other than Carter's snarling and growling — very guttural despite still being in human form — was Sky, crowing and cawing.

Jack sighed in relief, and stepped between everyone again. "Ok, Damien's views aside, we might have overstepped ourselves a bit here. We had planned to go back once we were done getting our toes wet, but ... those weird, um, you called them red wraiths? They ganged up on us. Apparently, they wanted to get their claws into some meat." He gestured back to Fiona, the only one of the three of them who qualified.

Clara smirked at him, but when she opened her mouth, the water creature spoke, instead, sliding forward over the shallow water beneath her.

"You wounded one of my pack," it said, billowing mist as a gesture at Carter.

"Your pack?" Damien said. "Thought it was Avery's pack."

"I have entered a contract with Avery. You need not know the details, except that if you wound one of mine, you contend with me." The angel of water started to rise higher, and higher, water pulling in from the gutters, from the windows that were forever wet, from the cracks in the old and worn asphalt, from everywhere. Higher, until she was ten feet up, and her white angel wings grew larger along with her. “You need not permission to be here. I need not permission to kill you, either.”

Ah, shit.

Clara stepped around the flowing water, jeans getting wet as she stepped onto the curving waves which formed the spirit’s lower body. “Calm down Flow, he’s not our enemy. Much as this little fucker, and his friends, have a habit of showing up where they shouldn’t be, we owe him our lives.”

“... sympathy is disaster in the making, Clara,” the singing voice said, words cutting the opposite direction of the angelic voice. Flow shrank herself back down to normal human size, and flowed over to Carter, before encompassing his leg in some crystal blue. Within moments, the wound began to heal. Shards, of what Jack assumed was the silver metal bullet, were removed, and Carter breathed heavy sighs of relief as the wound closed.

“You didn’t say that to Avery the day you met her.” Rolling her eyes, Clara got down on a knee, and examined the wound, as well.

“That was not Dolareido. We must be strict here.”

“Uh huh.”

“Your juvenilism will get you killed, Clara.” Shaking her head and shrugging her wings, the water goddess flowed away, and took position higher in the air, waves pushing up her body until she was looking down at them and some of the shorter buildings. Nice vantage point.

Ok, time to take stock of the ridiculousness that was his current situation. He was in a parallel Dolareido world. He, his fellow vampire, and their spider monster friend, were just on the run from a bunch of weird wraith things who very much wanted to cut her open and play with her insides. Two werewolves were upset at the three trespassers, because they were on the wrong side of the Gauntlet. And, the three troublemakers had been saved by some sort of water goddess creature thing.

The Prince was never going to believe this.

“Um ... Flow?” he said. One mystery at a time, what the fuck was Flow.

“Flowing Sanctuary.” Patting Carter on the shoulder, she nodded in Flow’s direction, and with a grunting sigh, the man walked off to join her. It. “Our totem.”

“Totem?”

“Totem.”

He tilted his head to the side, and rubbed his buzzed hair. Totem? “I ... I’m picturing Native Americans, or First Nations people, and totems.”

“Well aren’t you a racist fucker.”

“W-What? No! I ... um ... I plead ignorance.” He threw up his hands. No knowledge whatsoever on the topic. But, she said totem, and there were spirits, so of course that’s where his mind went.

She rolled her eyes, and laughed. Yeah, make fun of the young kid for not knowing anything about this stuff. Must be what she was thinking, cause she came forward, pat him on the shoulder, winked, and started walking, arm hooking around the shoulder too so he had no choice but to follow.

“Relax. You had a giant bird called City Sky helping you, so, yeah.” She smirked at him, then offered both Damien and Fiona a nod as she guided Jack past them, and back toward the road they’d been running on. “And you’re right, we don’t have a right to keep you out of here. But that doesn’t mean we won’t.”

Yeah, saw that coming. He glanced over his shoulder, at Damien and Fiona, but the two of them were busy keeping a close eye on the strange water spirit, and the very angry Carter. The first time anyone had used silver on the wolves, as far as Jack knew. It could have gone a lot, lot worse. Fur flying, ashes too, lots of blood, screams, and carnage; that’s what Jack was expecting. Instead, a single incident shut down a wolf who thought a little too highly of himself.

He should have trusted Damien would make a rational decision, ‘cause he did. A leg shot was good. He could have shot him in the chest, and potentially killed him, or in the head, and guarantee it.

“We’re not here just randomly exploring,” he said. “A ritual’s been performed, back in the real—”

“Physical world.” She tightened her arm around his neck, enough to hurt a little, before releasing him. Sighing, she walked over to one of the wet, warped benches, sat down, and gestured to the bent street lamp which was turned almost corkscrew toward the city’s center. “Shadow world is as real as any other.”

“Right, I mean ... well, you know what I meant. Back there, a ritual’s been performed, and I’m trying to rack down details.”

“Ritual? Fucking Jacob up to more shit again?”

He sat down next to her, and looked around at the spirit world, the Shadow world. Still a little ways from South Side, and he was already starting to feel a bit overwhelmed at all the strangeness. The larger buildings in the distance didn’t look normal, some of them bent and warped in subtle ways only someone who’d been born in the city would notice. He couldn’t tell from here if they’d have the same water running on their windows, but it wouldn't surprise him. At this point, blood on the windows wouldn't surprise him, either.

“We think it was the hunters.”

“Hunters, doing a ritual?”

“Jeremiah and Angela aren't exactly normal hunters. Azamel thinks some old woman who works for them did a ritual. It was ... pretty nasty.” He looked back down the road they'd run down, and gulped as he forced himself to examine the memory. Red wraiths chasing him, hovering after him, after his friends, claws and bodies dripping a weird blood as they moved, claws slicing through everything.

It wasn't so bad compared to what it could have been. The wraiths had come up to them, talked to them, practically introduced themselves. Of all the ways to meet sick fucks like that, wanting to claw up Fiona and dissect her, out in the open in the moonlight wasn't so bad. Except, now, he wouldn't be able to shower without thinking they were ready to pounce him whenever he closed his eyes. Great, just great.

“Natasha was examining the scene, too,” he said. “She might have told Arturo and Matthew.”

“Maybe. When was this?”

“Must be ... six, or seven hours ago.” Yeah, daylight was coming, and he didn't want to be outside when that happened, Shadow world or not. “At least, that's when we found it. Ritual was done well before that. Weeks, maybe months before.”

She threw up her hands before leaning forward, to let them dangle off her knees. “Well, you've seen them, and, yeah, I guess you know they're out for flesh. You have any idea how fucking weird that is? Spirits sustain on essence, not flesh.”

“I uh ... I don’t think they were looking to eat it. More like ... looking to ... study it?”

“Slightly more viable, but still fucking strange.” She looked left, looked right, and leaned in closer to him. Too close, close enough her breath was on his ear, close enough he could tell she was flirting him, indirectly. “Avery sent Carter and I here to check out where these wraiths were going. Where did they find you?”

“Don’t tell her!” A caw and a gush of air later, the enormous crow came down to join them. It stood on the street, preened its feathers a few times, and shook its head. “Uratha are bullies.”

“We already know Begotten can get in here,” she said. “But, if Fiona doesn’t want to share—”

“Aye, I dinnae want to share with the likes of ye.” The redhead marched up to Clara, and glared down at her, height advantage given by Clara still sitting down. “Sky is right, ye werewolves are bullies. Mean, loud, bullies.”

Jack started rubbing his head again. Being the in-between for the Uratha and Begotten, when dealing with Kindred, was tough enough. Please don’t make things worse, Fiona.

Flow flowed over to them, Carter behind her, and the waves lapped gently against the street and Jack’s feet as the spirit circled around them. Far as he could tell, the spirit was glaring at Sky, crystal white, glowing eyes piercing through him like an actual angel warrior’s might. Intimidating, to say the least, and Jack kept glancing her way as she gently moved about.

“Back to the ritual,” he said, before this spiraled out of control. Too much going on, and he needed to make something of this, before they were taken back to the physical world.

He described the ritual, in perhaps a little less detail than he should have; his Kindred prerogative to hold onto details coming through a bit, and wait for Clara's reaction. Some nods as he described the symbols, the skeleton, the blood and arrangement, but her eyes went wide as he described the pictures. She gulped when he described the picture of him.

"Everything sounds like someone was communicating with these weird red wraiths," she said, "but ... the pictures ... that doesn't."

"It's strange! It's haunting," he said. "Fucking has me looking over my shoulder all the damn time."

"Let's talk more, when we get back."

"I—"

"We're going. Now."

---

---

~~Eric~~

So this was Azamel, old Granny sitting in a shitty old chair, smoking a cigarette. Like a scene from his childhood.

"This is the Eric Fiona spoke of?" She blew a puff of smoke at him from her perch on the weird concrete stage. "Attractive man. No wonder Fiona was interested in you."

"Um, thanks." He scratched the back of his neck, and looked at the rest of them. "Mark, right?"

The man shrugged, nodded, then returned to his book. Well, so much for conversation.

"I suppose you are looking for Fiona," Azamel said.

“He wasn’t, actually.” Athalia shrugged, and gestured to him once she’d climbed up onto the stage and took a seat. “Fucker just had his first change. And based on the few words I picked up, he’s killed some people, eaten them, and now he’s terribly worried about his cat.”

“... that’s the long and short of it, I guess. Athalia thinks I should hide out here, with you guys, for now, at least.” Which seemed like an unusual, and random offering of goodwill from someone he’d never talked to. Was Fiona talking him up? Having someone in his corner was a nice change of pace.

“That would be prudent,” the old woman said, blowing smoke out through her nose as she talked. “Of course, if we do you this favor, I expect the favor to be returned some day.”

“Of course.” He was in over his head, so deep, so fucking deep, that he needed to grab onto something before he drowned, anything. This old woman he trusted about as much as his ex wife throwing him a rope. “I ... I really would like to see if ... if my cat is alright.”

Mark smirked at him, but returned to his book. Eric was almost tempted to say something stupid, like ‘help a brother out’, but he would have choked on the cliché.

“When Fiona returns, she can go search. But I doubt the cat survived your anger, Eric, if this was your first change.”

“Any idea when that’ll be?”

“No. And I do not lie, about your pet’s chances of survival. The old myth goes that a wolf hunts those they love, when they change. Myths are born from truths, mixed with ignorance, in the dark.”

Shit. He couldn’t leave Kat behind. Not a chance, no way. Only damn thing on the planet he trusted, at this point, was that cat.

“Then, I decline. Sorry, but I’m going back. Thanks for the offer.” He nodded to Azamel, and Athalia, before he turned and walked away. He could be sneaky, right? Figure out a way back into the apartment, see if his cat was there ... see if he killed her. Fuck, what would he do if he’d killed Kat? Stomach full of human flesh, that was one thing, but knowing he’d kill his pet and only friend was a fate he wasn’t sure he could stomach.

“They might kill you,” Athalia said, unmoving from her perch. “You don’t want to hide here with us? We could use a werewolf who owes us. But if the blood leeches think you’ve violated the Masquerade to a large degree, they’ll end you.”

“Yeah, I know.” He shivered at the memory of the white-haired woman. Tall as the tower she commanded, her amber red gaze confident and calculating. The queen of Dolareido. Yeah, she’d kill him, and now that he could understand the memory, and understand the feeling looking at that woman put into his gut, he knew he wouldn’t have a chance against her in a fight.

But he needed to see, now, what happened, what he did, how bad it was. And god damn it, he needed to see if Kat was alright.

“I’ll go with him.”

Eric looked over his shoulder, and the two ladies raised a brow as Mark hopped off the concrete stage, leaving his book behind. A thicker man, dark skin like Eric, short curly hair, and some fat to go with what Eric could see was some muscle mass underneath his hoodie. Eric knew his type, from his drinking days, the guy at the bar who hangs by himself, watches people, gets drunk, occasionally gets into fights when they drift his way, and does more than hold his own. Some fat to go with the muscle was a very, very effective way to make a body strong and resilient, when weight classes weren’t a factor.

His voice sounded plain, but the man did not seem plain. He seemed gross. He smelled gross. He felt gross, the air around him, the presence he took with him. A glance down at Eric's arms showed there wasn't any creepy crawls on his skin, but this Mark fellow made it feel like there was, and it only got worse the closer he got.

"Why?" Eric said.

Mark offered a small, backward salute to Azamel, and nodded toward the tunnel Eric came from. Deep breaths, deep breaths, nothing to fear from these monsters, they were friends of Fiona's, and you know the circumstance they're in. If you're a freak, and apparently you are, other freaks should be your friends. He might not be the same type of freak, but a freak anyway.

Was freak PC? How the fuck do you ask a question like that?

"I want to see the fallout," Mark said. "We're not on the best terms with the vamps, and this situation is a good test."

"Test for what?"

"See what happens if a Begotten let their hunger out, and the vamps went on the offensive to stop it."

"... you'd eat people?"

"Depends on the Begotten." He shrugged again, and continued down the path, hands in his jean pockets, eyes on the tracks ahead of him. Casual, calm, creepy. "Some of us? Yeah, some of us would do exactly what you might have done. So, let's go find out."

"Alright, sure. Keep an eye open for my cat, too. Black and gray lines, white tummy. Soft face."

"... you're the only werewolf on the planet who owns a cat, I'm pretty sure."

Eric smirked, and shrugged. “She’s a dumbass. I love her.”

The two continued in silence after that. Attempts at conversation with the man went nowhere, as this Mark fellow was lost in his mind, thinking about God knows what. The most annoying thing was, as they walked for minutes, through the winding maze of the depths of Dolareido’s guts, the smell of rotting flesh. It wasn’t coming from Eric, and it wasn’t coming from the stuff Eric vomited earlier; that had its own unique smell. Whatever the scent was, it was distinctly the smell of rotting, decaying flesh. It made Eric’s hair stand up straight, despite Mark’s relaxed body language. Eric could feel that the man wasn’t using any aggressive body language, but that smell carried its own threats the man couldn’t put a finger on.

The smell of two undead joined the subtle smell of necrosis. Eric slowed down a bit, but Mark shrugged and gestured ahead. Keep walking then, it’s only two Kindred, what threat could two Kindred pose?

Or Mark was looking for an excuse to fight.

“Eric!”

“ ... Jessy? I...” God damn he was happy to see her; especially happy that she wasn’t greeting him with a hail of gunfire. He smiled at her, and his smile doubled as his eyes fell to the cat in her arms. “Kat! Oh thank fucking god, I thought I might have—”

“So it was you.” The man next to her was tall, wearing a suit that must have cost thousands. With his combed back blond hair, broad shoulders, and clean shaven look, he might as well have had ‘mafia’ tattooed to his forehead.

And Eric didn’t like the way the man was looking at him. It was obvious enough the big guy wasn’t happy, and was now thinking of Eric as the werewolf who had caused unwanted damage, but there was something else to him, too, something in his eyes made Eric want to avert his gaze before it became dangerous. Almost as if the vampire — and he was a vampire, from the smell — was going to attack Eric with his eyes alone. Jessy hadn't exactly shared many details with him about how vamps worked, but he'd seen enough vampire movies to know some of them could use mind powers. Not that movies were the best source, but better than nothing.

“I ... uh ... yeah.” Eric folded his arms across his chest, and did his best to look apologetic, but not too apologetic, something in between, like ‘I’m sorry, but it was inevitable’ sort of sorry. Made him feel like a politician. “Apparently ... I’m a werewolf.”

The big guy snorted, and looked to Jessy. She had something between an awestruck smile, and a know-it-all grin. Meeting the man's gaze, she raised Kat up to her cheek, and rubbed her face into the cat's body. Kat, being Kat, responded with a quiet meow, some loud purrs, and full on return snuggles. Not like Kat would care she was surrounded by werewolves, monsters, and vampires; if anything, Kat was overjoyed to be rubbing against an undead creature. Damn cat.

“Sorry about Pitt,” Jessy said, still snuggling Kat. “You really tore the place up though, made a huge mess, and now we got a clean up crew working overtime dealing with it. Can you fill us in on what happened?”

“He—”

Mark held up a hand, turned around, and pulled Eric back with him a few steps. “Careful what you say,” he said into Eric's ear. “You want out from under their thumb? Don't give them information so easily.”

“The fuck do you care?”

“Azamel doesn’t get along with the Kindred of Dolareido. And now that you’ve pissed off the vamps, damaged their Masquerade, neither do you. We could use a friend like you.” Well, at least the man was honest.

“I get ... along...” He glanced over his shoulder at the two vampires. Jessy was grinning at him, in a way he hadn’t really expected, almost playful, as she gently swished side to side with Kat, cradling her. The other guy was in a permanent state of subtle frown. “If they wanted to kill me, don’t you think they would have done so by now? I’m sure the two of them have guns, and vampire shit at their disposal.”

“You underestimate how strong you are now, as an Uratha. And besides, Kindred never do things directly. You’ll figure that out soon enough.” The man nodded, turned back to the two vampires, and waited.

Never do things directly. Eric didn’t like the sound of that, and this big guy with Jessy did seem like that sort. But then, the fuck did Eric know about shit like this? Mark was being upfront with him about things, about needing a friend, but Jessy had been upfront with him too.

Sighing, Eric stepped forward to speak with the Kindred once again. Less reacting, more thinking, make intelligent choices about what to say next.

“Pitt showed up, said Long was going to send Xnomina a message, about not being bullied around anymore. My body was supposed to be the message, I guess.” Wouldn’t have surprised him if Pitt was going to write a literal message in his flesh though. Slimy fucker.

He ate the slimy fucker. The rush of the kill was pleasing and satisfying in his memories, like a warm blanket on a cold day. The feel of human flesh going down his throat and into his belly, was euphoria, ambrosia, divine and addictive. Nausea hit him again, and he struggled to stay standing. Ignore it, ignore the fact you ate Pitt, that you ate his goons, ignore that you swallowed bits of their muscle, their limbs, their brains.

“We figured as much,” the big guy said. “But, instead of just killing them, you created a huge mess, woke up every person for half a mile with the racket, left a huge amount of evidence of a paranormal, and have undoubtedly turned a bad situation with Terra Den into a catastrophe.”

“Julias, come on, he saved your kid’s life. Cut him a little slack.”

Julias was his name, then. That was the name of the man Beatrice said she was dating, whose mansion she’d taken Jack to.

“... you’re Jack’s sire,” Eric said.

The vampire snarled, and glared down at Jessy. Both she and Kat shrank a little. No hiding that body language: Julias was a deadly man if he chose to be. Eric’s new instincts were in overdrive, in a very blatant screaming-in-his-ear sort of way. Be careful with this man.

“Your help in saving Jack’s second life has already been returned by the Prince, Eric. That deal she made with you was continued by us.” The man, arms folded across his chest as well, tapped his finger against his bicep. “And you’ll find disturbing the Masquerade is not only more important than a single Kindred’s life, but you were specifically warned—”

Eric stepped forward, and let his arms hang, available, in case he had to get physical. After everything that had happened tonight, he didn’t want to get physical. It was late, very late, and all he wanted to do was go to bed, curl up with Kat, and sleep.

“I didn’t know this would happen. I didn’t know a slimy loan shark was going to show up at my door and try and kill me, mister big bad vampire. I didn't know I ... I'd change..."

"You didn't know?" Jessy said.

He shook his head. "No." Don't give them anymore details than they need, than will serve you. Much as he felt he could trust Jessy, Mark had a point. If he was going to get out from under their thumb, it was in his interest to not let them know everything, so he could get some damn control of his life back. "Hit me like a fucking train, out of nowhere, and I ... can barely remember what I was doing."

"... ok." Julias began to pace side to side, head down and chin in his fingers. "Much as I'm sure this Begotten here is trying to recruit the new werewolf, understand that this is a Kindred city, Eric. You do what we tell you to do. You caused some major damage, and the clean up is problematic."

"I can—"

"Unless you are versed in mind breaking or forensics, shut the fuck up. The issue is that news like that inevitably leaks, in some fashion or another. You know damn well we have a hunter problem, as is, and there's no way we'll be able to cover up every detail about this event so they won't know. And being that they're human, some we won't recognize could have already visited the crime scene by now."

Thinking ten steps ahead seemed to be the man's game. Eric could respect that, as long as it didn't mean biting Eric in the ass over something that wasn't his fault.

"... so what do I have to do to make the vamps happy?"

Maybe vamps wasn't the right word, cause Julias eyed him with a little more malice than Eric was hoping for. Learning how to be PC in this strange world of darkness was going to be tricky.

“Go talk to Avery and get yourself put on a leash.”

“Avery?” Play dumb, see what he says.

“Leader of an Uratha pack, the Hunters in Darkness, here in Dolareido. Jessy, take this man to his new apartment. He’s your problem until Avery talks to him.”

The Kindred grinned a sneaky, deadly grin, like a child given access to their first BB gun. “Yes, sir.”

“ ... ok.” So much for not being under anyone’s thumb.

Jessy walked over to him, winked, threw Mark a snarl, and nodded in the direction of a different fork in the tunnels. “What about you, boss?”

“Gonna head back to the scene, talk with Vivi, and make sure everything’s fine.” The man made the same sort of snarl Jessy did, again aimed at Mark, who stood there with all the defiance of a lazy statue.

No gunfire, no claws or fangs, no blood, no nothing. All in all, coming out of the altercation with his life was a pretty big step up from the horrible execution he was expecting. He wasn’t happy though, another leash on his life. At least Jessy was enjoying this, grin permanent and unending.

---

“Holy shit.”

As a kid, it was always a delight to watch movies where someone who was poor suddenly became rich. Thrust into a life of money and options, thrust into luxury; the comparison of their old lives to the new life of indulgence was escapism at its finest. Those movies always ended with the poor-become-rich getting to keep their money, to some extent at least, and coming to some sort of moral lesson that allowed them to become a better person. Eric would be content with the former; he didn't need the latter.

The whole place was reeked of slick, modern, rich, and technology. It smelled of chemicals, the sort used to keep a place sparkling clean and sterile. Sterile was a pretty good word to describe the giant apartment in general, now that he thought about it, as he kicked off his boots, and started walking around. The walls were mostly windows, but the drapes — with switches to control them — might as well have been made of black panther fur, far as his eyes could tell.

A giant, open kitchen, with an island, black upon the white tile floor. Not cheap tile either, but something that might as well have been expensive marble. There was a crystal thing hanging over the dining table, with lights inside bathing the table in gentle waves. The table itself was glass, thick glass, with red wood legs from a probably endangered species of tree. The walls were white like the floor, and the cupboards, the shelves, all of it was stainless steel color, screaming of professionalism despite how it was an apartment, not a chef's kitchen.

Jessy winked at him, and set down Kat. "I know cats can ... take time to ... the fuck?"

Eric laughed as Kat ignored Jessy's otherwise true comment, and walked over to the couch. Black, and from the scent Eric's new nose picked up, it was real leather. It wouldn't have surprised him if Kat started to scratch it, with no scratch tower in her new home, instead she jumped on its back, and looked out through the enormous window behind it. Perch mode.

"She'll be there for a couple hours," he said, sitting down on the couch as well and reaching out to pet her behind the ear.

"A couple hours? Analyzing her new view?"

“I doubt she’s analyzed a thought in her life, cat or not.” He shrugged and motioned for Jessy to join him on the absurdly expensive couch. “You know if you hadn’t shown up in the tunnels with Kat, tonight would have gone much differently.”

“I can imagine, seeing that we found you with Mark. We’re not on good terms with the Begotten, Invictus especially. How’d you wind up with them?”

“I was ... on the run, I guess. Hard to remember the details, blurry and fading, like a dream. I remember running into the sewers, because I knew ... the territory, the land, had a network of tunnels. Something in my brain kicked into ... a mode. I had to go to safe ground until I could take my home back. My ... den.” Den was as good a word as any, and it was how his mind was framing things. But now he had a new den, in the same territory. That was normal enough, he supposed, for his new instincts to adapt. A new, better den.

“The Begotten do hang out in the tunnels a lot,” she said.

“I ran into Athalia, and I ... tried to kill her. Didn’t go so well.”

“Ha! Beat up by a girl.” She sat down with him, gave him a soft punch, and winked at him. “I’ve never seen Athalia fight. What was that like?”

“Like trying to fight a monster. Bones, claws, and spikes ... and she could fight in total darkness. It was startling, to say the least.” He made a couple of quiet kissing sounds in Kat’s direction, coaxing the dumb cat to come his way. Meow meow and a hop later, she was on his lap, smiling up at him. Far as he knew, cats didn’t smile the way humans did, but Kat might as well have been, with the big grin on her face as she got comfortable on his lap. Purring like a motor, she looked between the two of them, before burying her face against his stomach. “She knocked some sense into me at least.”

“Still can’t believe you’re a fucking werewolf. That complicates so many things, but at the same time, it’s really fucking awesome.” She got in closer, and licked one of her fangs with blatant boasting. “Vamps could really use a Uratha in our corner.”

In their corner. Was he in their corner? He didn’t think he was, at least, not by choice. Far as he was concerned, they had a gun to his head and he had to play by their rules, or they’d shoot. That included Jessy, much as he was enjoying her company, and she him, evidently.

“The Begotten were sure you’d be a problem, that you’d kill me if I’d made too big a mess.” And he agreed with the monsters.

“We wouldn’t do that unless it was warranted.”

“What qualifies as warranted.”

“If you weren’t willing to reconcile.” She sighed, and looked down. Didn’t take a genius to read the body language; she’d been avoiding saying things directly, and he was calling her out on it. “You’re already working for us, so that’s fine. But, sometimes, a vamp can go frenzy, and they don’t come back. I imagine it’s an even bigger issue for werewolves.”

“Frenzy?” Asking about it was pointless; he could tell what she meant when she said it. He felt like he was in a constant state of frenzy the moment the transformation had hit him. Didn’t surprise him that vampires could do that, and it scared the shit out of him that they could succumb to it. Like she said, a bigger issue for werewolves.

“The beast inside craves blood, above all else. The hunger can overwhelm, and you give into it, ride it like a wave, and sometimes vamps don’t come back from that.” She shrugged, got up, and started to walk around the inordinately expensive apartment. “The mess you made is what a frenzied vamp might do, if they were pissed enough, and ravenous enough. If you weren't able to come to your senses, we'd have put you down."

"Or try to."

That got her. She flinched, looked his way, looked at Kat, then started to drift again.

"Yeah. You're Uratha now, which means you're dangerous. Julias is going to make sure everyone knows that, and now ... now I don't know. It's a weird situation to be in."

"You're telling me," setting his hand on Kat's head, and scratching her cheek and ear, as he considered, " ... what am I supposed to do now?"

"Boss said talk to Avery, get a leash ... but, well, fuck him."

" ... I'm sorry, what?" He raised a brow, and tilted his head to the side. Kat didn't care, and pushed her head into his hand with the sudden cease of his scratching, demanding more.

"I'm saying, you're a fucking werewolf now." As if lightning had struck her, she paused, and looked up with a snap of her fingers. "A fucking werewolf, Eric. You have any fucking idea how dangerous that makes you? You know how few vamps can pose a threat to you? Ancilla and elders, that's it, and the city isn't exactly swimming in them. The overwhelming majority of vamps are neonates, no threat to a werewolf. That makes you," she pointed a finger at him, grin included, "a major player."

"And, I'm doing ... what, with that?"

"You're going to play the game! The Danse Macabre."

"I'm sorry, I'm really not following."

“You’re going to lie. To Avery. To Julias. To the Prince.”

“ ... you want me to lie, to these people I’m pretty sure are more than capable of tearing me in half with their pinky finger?”

She jumped onto the couch, her weight causing the leather to tremble, and bounce Eric an inch. “Well, before, you were agreeing to do what we told you, because you didn’t have options. Now you’re strong enough to give us pause. You’re strong enough that, you can just play along, knowing you could break out of your golden chains whenever you want to.”

Golden chains. Guess she was onto the gilded cage metaphor he’d been subconsciously framing this whole situation as.

“So in either circumstance, I—”

“In either circumstance, you get to have a sweet new place to live, lots of money, and get to slip your foot in the door with a lot of factions. The Begotten desperately want a werewolf on their side, cause they really are the underdog in this shitstorm. The Kindred will want to keep you even more controlled now; expect another meeting with the Prince, and maybe one with the other covenants, too. And most of all, the Uratha are going to want you in their corner.”

“What makes you think I won’t join the monsters or werewolves? It’s the vamps who tried to put me in a cage.” He brought Kat up to his shoulder, so her front paws could press on him, giving her easy access to rub her head into his neck.

“Because the monsters only know how to chase their hunger, and the werewolves are ... I don’t know, honestly. You’d be better off asking them, I guess. They seem obsessed with doing some sort of ancient duty, hunting spirits and shit.” She shrugged, scooted in closer, and set her fingers to Kat’s neck. Immediate purrs. Slut.

“Something to do with the moon, and some Father Wolf or some shit.”

Try as he might to hide it, her words struck something in his mind. Glass broke, and the splintering cracks wore away at the wall until it fell apart, shards dancing along the remains of his mind. Father Wolf. The moon ... Luna. Memories bubbled, new memories, images of things, of teeth and claw. They weren't his, he didn't own them, but they came up, anyway. Old claws, covered in ancient dirt and older blood broke free of prehistoric graves in his brain matter, each holding up signs written in crimson earth.

You're not the same anymore.

You can't run from what you've become.

You have a duty now, Uratha.

They'll come for you now, Uratha.

With web, with claws, with tail and fang, feather and tongue, they'll come for you.

They can see you now, Uratha, sense you. They'll come for you, find you, possess you.

Nothing will ever be the same for you.

Breathe.

“Yo, breathe Eric. Looks like you've seen a ghost.”

He gulped down the rising panic in his throat, and hugged Kat tight. Didn't care if Jessy got to see his vulnerable side. At the moment, he needed to hold his only damn friend in the world.

Jessy tilted her head, and watched him. No laughter or grins, despite his expectations. Nothing like that, only a small smile as she watched him.

“ ... I have to get back, sun will be up soon. This place is pretty secure, Eric, so rest easy. I’ll see you tomorrow night to follow up.”

“ ... thanks, for everything.” Especially with Kat. Above all else, especially with Kat.

She winked at him, and left.

~~Natasha~~

“It’ll be d-dawn, soon,” she said, “so, I have t-to go.”

Both boys pouted, and transformed. She squeaked and jumped back as the two men began to shrink in size, clothes vanishing and fur popping in, instead. For a moment, she thought they were transforming into their larger forms, that she’d driven them to some sort of anger. But instead, a couple of wolves now sat upon her living room floor, giving her puppy eyes. Art with a darker shade, almost black, and Matt was a soft gray; both were too damn adorable.

“B-Boys! What are you doing?” she said. The two canines made whining sounds, sad puppy whining sounds, and walked over to her. They pressed up against her skirt, and pushed gently, nudging her away from the door. They were full-sized wolves, and she had no chance of pushing them out of the way with only her bodyweight. “Come on, boys! I ... I need t-to go, the Prince will be upset, if I’m late. She’s getting very ... p-p-protective of things lately.” Understandable given the circumstances, but now that Tash worked for her, it meant Tash had to appease her. If she showed up late, she’d get a firm scolding, or at least, a firm glare.

But the boys either didn’t get the hint, or chose to ignore it, likely the latter. They pushed against her some more, until she was giggling. A signal of their triumph, as they each let out a quiet bark, before pushing her hard enough she started to fall. With a squeak, she went down, and hands reached out to grab their soft fur, as the floor greeted her.

“Come on, I ... I have to. I can’t stay here. I know y-you’d p-p-protect me, b-but it’s safer at the tower. And, it’s the P-Prince’s orders. And—” Knock knock.

“Madam Vola. It’s me, Madam Turio.”

Natasha jumped straight up, and spun around. What? Why? Why was she here? And why now? Gulping, Tash started pacing back and forth, and looked down at the two enormous dogs sitting by her. They didn’t transform back, content to sit there, eyes wide and looking at the closed door of her apartment.

Her boyfriends were here. That made a discussion with her old superior a strange conversation to have. But maybe it was good Art and Matt were here. She’d be able to rely on them, trust them to back her up if things got hairy, if things got violent. They wouldn’t get violent though, no way. Maria wouldn’t resort to violence against another covenant unless absolutely necessary, and if she wanted to be violent, she wouldn’t have knocked.

Tash looked at the two wolves, nodded, took a deep, useless breath, and walked to the apartment door. Slowly, she opened the barrier to an old wound she’d hoped to forget about.

“H-Hello ... Madam Turio.”

“ ... hello Vola. May I come in?”

“Y-Yes, please.” Tash nodded, and backed away while gesturing with her arm into the apartment. Maria was an elder after all, and respect was due, no matter their past or affiliations. “I, um, I’m v-very surprised, that you’d ... come here ... in p-person.”

“These are strange times,” she said, as she nodded toward the two wolves. “I am glad you’ve found company you enjoy. For all the years I’ve known you, the only one you could stomach were your fellow right hands.”

Julias and Jessy were her only friends, that was true. Not so true anymore, but the memory was a powerful one.

“Stomach ... is a strong w-word. It’s not ... l-like I ... didn’t...”

Maria turned to face her, raised a brow and chuckled, before moving into the living room. Without a glance or care for the wolves, Art and Matt were forced to step aside to make room for her. They stayed in wolf form, maybe to remind Maria that they were indeed werewolves, and were dangerous. Or because, dogs were loyal, and Natasha could use a couple of loyal companions right about now.

“I do not lie. I am ... glad, that things are going well for you.” The ghost lady sniffed the air, and chuckled again. No hiding the smell of sex, not with what the werewolves did.

It was hard to read Maria’s expression. She was wearing a white dress, something in fashion a hundred years ago, at least. If she was seen out in the open, anyone would have assumed she was a ghost, a pale lady, a woman in white, a specter, something that would have sent anyone nearby into a panicked run. But the elder was a master at the cloak of night and its derivations. If she didn’t want to be seen, she wasn’t going to be seen.

It meant that a ghost woman was walking around in Natasha’s apartment, white mist falling from her cracked and rotted skin. It was enough to keep both wolves away from her, backing up and staying out of range of the fog she leaked, wherever she walked. One of the more blatant examples of how vampires were, genuinely, supernatural and paranormal creatures. Natasha had dealt with it for years, but after not being near the woman for some months now, it was a shock to be so close to a walking, torn up corpse leaking cold mist around her.

“ ... th-thank you.”

“This must be Matthew Wilson, Rahu Uratha. And this is Arturo Ibarra, Irakka Uratha.” The ghost lady leaned forward, hands to her knees against the dress skirt, and a half grin on her lips as her wavy black hair fell over her shoulders. “Don’t feel like showing your faces to me?”

The two canines shook their heads, and growled. A quiet growl, enough for Tash to tense, while Maria didn’t react. Stone cold, as always.

“If it’s any consolation, little doggies, I never agreed with Viktor’s rather harsh treatment of your kind, upon Avery’s last visit.”

It wasn’t. Art and Matt both growled again, and showed their teeth a little.

“B-Be nice, boys. Mar ... Madam T-Turio is only ... only ... I am not sure what she’s doing, actually.” Truth. Maria’s visit was unexpected, and more so was what she was saying.

“ ... may we speak in private, Vola, before the sun rises?” The ghost lady turned to face her, but backed away at the same time, before turning to look out the window. She nudged aside the drapes with a hand, bits of her peeling skin falling off and vanishing into ash, as some of the street light came into the apartment.

The two wolves came up to Tash’s side, and growling louder. They didn’t want to leave. Tash didn’t want them to leave either, but this conversation was important, and it was one they’d both been avoiding.

And maybe, Maria would drop clues about the secret the strange spirit was talking about.

“You boys, you can head on back. I’ll b-b ... I’ll be fine. She’s not the enemy.” Mostly, mostly not the enemy. It was hard to forget about the betrayal, but at the same time, Tash kept trying to put herself into Maria’s shoes. Give up your subordinate, who had a fifty-fifty chance of surviving, so the love of your life could pursue their wildest dreams? It was hard to think about the question objectively, and she had to accept that. Emotions got the best of everyone, given time, even Tash.

Art and Matt transformed, human skin and clothes emerging from the depths of animal muscle and fur. A smooth transformation, nothing like what it’d been when the two wolves were getting ready for war. Each giant of a man gave Maria long, harsh glares, before they stepped toward the door. When they left, they each gave Tash a kiss, Art winking, and Matt smiling, as they moved into the hall.

“See ya later,” they said together, before starting down the corridor.

Tash smiled at them, gave each a small wave, and closed the door.

“No longer being in the Invictus has agreed with your sex life, at least,” Maria said, still looking out the window.

“It, it um ... it’s been good.” No use trying to hide the grin. “B-But, um I don’t think that has anything to do with the Invictus, or m-me being in the Ordo Dracul now.”

“ ... we haven’t spoken, since that happened.”

“ ... n-no, we haven’t.”

The two of them sighed. Maria's sigh was far more bold, obvious and direct. That was Maria, never one to shy from direct words; it made the whole conversation very unusual, given how Maria was tiptoeing around the issue.

"Understand, my ... Natasha, that I ... I did what I did, because I assumed you would not be harmed. Lucas promised your safety, and that, if push came to shove, he would not kill you."

Not kill her. That didn't necessarily mean not hurt her, torture her maybe, in hopes of breaking Daniel. But, still, that was better than nothing.

"... th-thank you ... Maria." First naming an elder, let alone an Invictus superior, was dangerous business, but Maria seemed intent on making this personal. That was a huge step for the woman, even if it sounded like nothing. "That ... that w-wasn't the only reason I left the Invictus."

"Oh?"

"Yes. Um, p-people knowing that D-Daniel is my sire, that ... that proved to me, that maybe I ... I had what it took to follow in his footsteps. That I have what it takes."

"I'm not following."

Tash nodded. Not following because Natasha was doing a horrible job explaining it.

"P-People, they weren't ... too surprised to learn about it. Many, they just nodded like ... l-like it was to b-be expected." So either everyone already knew, or she'd made enough of a name for herself that people were expecting someone like the sheriff to be her sire.

Maria nodded, confirming Tash's suspicions. "You worked your way up our ranks quickly, Natasha. I'm surprised you were ever concerned you weren't regarded with respect, and fear, by your younger Kindred. You were my right hand for a reason." Maria shrugged, stepped away from the window, and into Natasha's kitchen. "May I?"

"Um ... oh! Y-Yes, make yourself at home."

The elder nodded, and fetched a bottle of blood from the fridge. "I will not ask for your forgiveness, Natasha, over the incident; I do not expect it. Such is the way of things as old as I, to let transgressions marinate our souls." She chuckled, a coughing hoarse sound from the ghost lady, before she took a sip of the red drink. "Something Lucas used to say. I think now, perhaps, it was merely his way of avoiding asking for forgiveness, from ever having to say, he was sorry."

Talking of Lucas, with her. This was brand new territory, and Tash found herself tripping on her tongue. What to say, what to say?

"W ... What was he like?"

"You know damn well what he was like, Natasha. You saw his brutality and one-mindedness, firsthand."

"I ... I know, b-but, what was he like ... behind closed doors?" Very new ground, very new, and Tash held her unneeded breath as she waited for Maria to respond. Times like this, it would have been great if she hadn't asked Matt and Art to leave.

"... different." Sighing, Maria walked over to Tash's couch, and sat down. The apartment wasn't exactly high class, not the sort of class an elder vampire would want, but Maria didn't seem to care at the moment. Or it was all a ploy to get Tash to let her guard down, reveal secrets about the Uratha, or the Ordo Dracul. "As you can imagine, this body cares little for sexual stimulus, anymore."

“I ... I d-didn't know.” G guessed, she'd guessed, but never let her mind get that far, to the point of picturing it. But now she couldn't stop. Corpse, trying to fuck. Ew.

“We indulged ourselves in blood, drinking kine by the dozens. He was not disturbed by this body, and was more than eager to hold me and kiss me, when we feasted.” Ghost lady smoothed out her dress skirt, took another sip, and motioned for Natasha to join her. Still the boss, even though Tash hadn't worked for her for months.

And Tash joined her. Because, why not?

“When the blood was gone,” Maria continued, “and it was only Lucas and I, he would ... he would settle. The harsh wall that guarded his soul would fade, and sometimes, he would set his head upon my lap, and melt away. He'd speak of his trials, his doubts, of his pain.”

“This was ... b-before his revival?”

“Yes. Torpor did not treat him well, Natasha. Not once did I meet that man, the man who had doubts, the man whose resolve was only as deep as was ... reasonable. Lucas was hungry for power and determined to grab it before his sleep, but the awoken Lucas was a new creature entirely. I do not envy Damien, to have spent so long caring for the sleeping body of his sire, only for the raised Kindred to be a ... deluded fool, a zealot to the core.”

“Are ... you g-getting along with Damien?” Talking. A normal, natural conversation with her old boss; a Kindred over a couple centuries older than her. In the past, she'd defer such things to Julias, who'd handle conversations like this with finesse. This was Tash stepping well out of her comfort zone; Maria was too, though. So, even ground ... ish.

“The boy is devout, and diligent. At first, he and I agreed his becoming a right hand was not possible. Did you know that?”

“I d-did not.”

“But, with time, we’ve all grown to trust him. And, I admit, it is nice to hear him speak with me of the Testament of Longinus. There are few left that consider the word of such a figure to be something to consider. Few left who fear God.”

A million responses to that jumped to mind. It wasn’t scientific, it wasn’t evidence based, so how could anyone believe it. But then again, Maria couldn’t even walk two feet without leaving a trail of ghostly mist behind her, so, the supernatural was more easy to accept for someone like her. Or Tash just lived in constant denial of the supernatural nature of Kindred. Not anymore though, not after the things she’d seen, not after the things Antoinette had shown her.

Maybe it was time to consider that ... maybe, Maria, Damien and Lucas had decent justification for their religious beliefs.

“I admit m-my knowledge of ... Longinus is a l-little lacking.”

“The tale of Longinus, the Spear of Destiny, of Christ’s death, it is all very ... powerful, and fills a Kindred’s life with purpose. Lucas followed that purpose, and while I believe age and power corrupted his undead soul, as it does so many, I do believe his faith never wavered. I had ... I had hoped if I offered you to him, as a tool to defeat the sheriff, perhaps victory would soften him, and return the man I once loved.” She sipped her drink again, and traced her scarred finger along its contours. “A silly girl’s hope.”

Tash looked down, and let the weight of that sink in. Yeah, it was a silly girl’s hope, the classic ‘love can change him’ fallacy that destroyed so many relationships. It was stupid, and pathetic, and something Tash would trip and fall into if such a situation came her way; she had no right to judge.

Tash's mind began to drift to the events of the night. The ritual which had ended with Jack's face drawn on paper. Did Maria have something to do with that? No, Maria had no reason to perform such a ritual. But, Art and Matt said it likely had something to do with the weird red wraiths of Dolareido, and the trail led them to Jacob doing something weird with that Black Blood spirit. And there had been a corpse, a walking, moving corpse, which had randomly collapsed when the three of them had disrupted the ritual.

“ ... If ... if you could talk to Lucas again, M-Maria ... What would you say ... t-t-to him?”

Maria looked up from the glass, and met her eyes. Look down, look down, look down. No good, Tash's gaze was locked with the ghost woman's, and wasn't going anywhere.

“ ... I would say to him that I love him, little Vola. I would confess many things to him, and once the confessions were over, and I had recomposed myself, I would demand he cease his unending quest for power.” Again, the ghost lady's eyes drifted to the drink, and she took another sip as she stared into the void. “I would do almost anything for such an opportunity.”

That was very on the nose, and Tash had to focus to not let out a squeak.

“I'm sorry ... that it ended the way it d-did.”

“Yes, well, I cannot blame the Prince, or the sheriff, for killing him. Self defense, and Lucas had it coming. A tragedy, in all its manifestations. And as much as I would love to speak to Lucas again, to have that fool back in my arms, I would council against revenge.” She got up, and poured herself more blood from the kitchen. To see a corpse walking around her kitchen, reaching into her fridge, like she was a frat girl trying to get drunk and forget an ex boyfriend, was an image Tash would remember for years.

“D-Did ... did you come here ... for anything else?”

“Looking for me to leave, Vola?”

“N-No! No, just ... you never talked about yourself much, even when I w-w-worked for the Invict-tus.” Tash stirred in her spot on the couch. If she didn’t move, stayed put and listened, maybe Maria would confide in her, tell her about her secret involving spirits.

“What is there to speak of? You know of my past as much as I do, Tash. Blurry memories, a haze of pain and anger over the damage this transformation has done to me. It is a told story, cliché at this point.”

“ ... N-Nothing’s a cliché when it’s happening to you.” Much as she’d like to take credit for the line, she’d heard it elsewhere, and it stuck with her.

“Too true.” Maria didn’t rejoin her on the couch this time, instead taking a stool at the counter. Even more unusual for the prim and proper corpse. “ ... thank you, for listening to me, Natasha Vola. It has been a long time since I’ve talked with anyone openly. Not since before the purge.”

Not since before Lucas took his fifty-year torpor then. Poor woman. Tash had Jessy and Julias, and slowly but surely, her circle of friends was expanding to include Jack and Antoinette, and even Beatrice, Damien, and Fiona were not uncommon people for her to see. She could talk to people if she wanted, let out some of her troubles. Maria had no one.

Tash got up, stepped into the kitchen, and poured herself a glass of blood, as well.

“ ... you can ... t-tell me now.”

Chapter 64

~~Jack~~

Getting taken back to the real world was a curse and a blessing. Everything, everywhere, was teasing him with answers he couldn't get to. What was the Ritual of Faces? Black Blood and the red wraiths, what did they have to do with the ritual, how were the hunters doing it, why were hunters and spirits working together, what did the red wraiths mean when they mentioned 'who the monster speaks with ... the trail to their goal.' Azamel? Were they talking about Azamel? If they were, how did they know Azamel was talking to him, and that he'd somehow be the way they'd get to her. How did the spirits know what he looked like?

All the answers were on the other side of the Gauntlet, and the Uratha weren't going to let him stick his fingers into their world to find out.

"You should recognize this place," Clara said, popping open a door behind one of the newer apartment buildings bordering on the Carthian edge of South Side and North Side. "Well, not this specific place, but you'll know what's going on."

"I don't—"

"A sex hole!" Fiona said, bubbling voice earning everyone's glance. Too loud, too high pitched for the somber surroundings, the darkness and flickering lights, and the curved, unnatural bend to the street lamps. "I've been 'ere, on the other side."

"I ... don't understand," Damien said.

Carter smirked at him. "You have no idea how much this side bleeds into yours, no idea how much of the insane crap you glimpse is the work of spirits.” No doubt the older werewolf was looking for a chance to get back at the Mekhet; a little face rubbing of knowledge over ignorance wasn’t too dishonorable, evidently.

If Fiona was right, and it was a sex hole, Jack knew what he was going to find inside. Or at least, he knew what the physical version of it looked like. What would the spirit version look like?

Inside the building, there weren’t hallways or doors. Which made no sense, because it was an apartment building, like the one Jack and them had tried to find a hiding place in earlier. But this building, once they were inside, had none of that. The building was five floors high, and once inside, there was no ceiling on each floor; it was a big, open building.

The walls were pink and light blue, and curved in ways to emphasize the bumps and S shapes associated with flesh. From the ceiling dangled an enormous chandelier, twenty feet tall and a hundred feet in diameter, made of crystal, and lit with flames of mostly pink and blue again, with some lit as varying shades between. The human sexuality metaphor of the flame was blatant.

Some of the sex spirits Jack saw last time were here. Maybe not the same spirits, but the same idea, same premise, same shapes, colors and floating torsos of breasts, curves and musculature. They were swirling around what looked like, maybe, a five feet high mountain of pillows. It reached from wall to wall of the enormous building. That was a lot of pillows; thousands of pillows.

Near the center of the mountain of softness, was a larger spirit, perhaps ten feet tall, and with a shape far more developed and specific than the other spirits. She — it — looked human, to an extent. Curvy, with a flat stomach, wide hips, and heavy breasts that hung from gravity. She was lying sideways, her breasts smooshed to the blankets. Her multi-colored hair was unhumanly long, and flowing over the pillows, maybe twenty feet. Like the chandelier, her hair was pink and soft blue, but changing from one, to the other. Her skin color was similar, drifting between colors you'd not expect to find on any normal human. As much as her body looked developed, with fingernails, nipples, toes and legs, her face was a nebula of color. Hard to describe, hard to nail down in absolute terms, as if a woman had put on make-up that was a portal into the endless nether of stars, energy, and souls. Pretty.

“You come to my home, Clara? Flowing Sanctuary?” it said. A heavenly, singing voice, layered many times over. A choir, both male and female voices filling the massive room with echoing rapture.

“Just using the locus to get back across. Got a problem with that?” Clara said. “You and your sisters”—she raised her hands to physically quote ‘sisters’—“walk on thin ice already, don’t—”

The beautiful entity shook its head. “No, of course not, I ... I am surprised at your company though. Sexual little creatures, aren't they?”

The two vampires and monster glanced between each other. “What?” they said.

“The one with no hair,” she said, and gestured to Jack. “Forever buried in sexuality, aren't you? You are aging like a fine wine, as the humans would say. Whoever is enjoying your many layers of flavor in the bedroom, I hope they are mature enough to appreciate the depth you offer.”

“I ... I um...”

“And you.” The goddess of sexuality looked at Fiona, and smirked. “Many women are flowers waiting to bloom. You are a volcano, waiting to erupt, and unleash your lust upon all you wish.”

Damien, Jack, Clara and Carter, even Flow, then looked at Fiona, as the small girl blushed red enough to hide her freckles.

“You, half-haired one,” it said, with a flick of her hand toward Damien, “are a conundrum. But, I’m sure once you pierce the walls of your inner bliss, you’ll find you have pierced a dam, holding back a river of desire greater than most.”

Ok, wow, what a way to meet a spirit: a sexuality reading that had everyone feeling uncomfortable, except for Clara, who was doing her best to not laugh.

“Um ... thank you?” Jack said.

The enormous creature shrugged, rolling onto her stomach and settling her chin on her forearms. She looked so human, but wasn’t a she, and wasn’t human; it was something which looked human, but fed on the sexual atmosphere created in parts of Dolareido. Hell, created in all of Dolareido. Slut City.

Clara took a little longer staring at Jack, than he liked. He, apparently, was a fine wine of sexuality. Maybe she liked the sound of that. He didn’t get to ask. She placed a hand on his and Damien’s shoulders, and the three of them fell into nothingness.

Fog, white fog. Endless, encompassing, burying. It wasn’t the road, the portal, Fiona had used to bring them to this world. Whatever it was, Jack didn’t want to be in it, touching it, swallowed by it. It was not good to touch it. It didn’t want to be touched.

Images of waking up, trapped inside a brick wall assaulted Jack’s mind. He was in a wall. He was in a massive, world-encompassing wall. He was—

He was in Dolareido. The bunch of them stepped out onto asphalt, and into the night of normal, good ole normal Dolareido. No spirits scurrying along the cracks of the streets, no talking birds in the sky, no thunderstorms with names, and no red ghost things hunting him down.

“Thank the Lord,” Damien said with a sigh.

Groaning, Clara offered them a salute, and started walking off with Carter. No Flow; the spirit had stayed behind, as far as Jack’s eyes could see. “Stay out of the Hisil. We won’t always be around to save your ass.”

And just like that, they were gone; leaving two vampires and a monster standing behind an apartment building.

“We ... we should get back,” Jack said, “before sunrise.” He desperately needed a quiet moment to process the what-the-fuck his night had been.

“Aye! Please, hate to lose ye to the sun.” Fiona smiled at him, patted him on the back a few times, and started to walk off. Pausing, she added, “Ye know where Eric lives? I need to speak with him.”

“Um, yeah, Damien? Can you fill her in on his new place?”

“Sure.” He nodded, walking off with the girl.

Jack watched the two of them as they left. Fiona walked a foot behind Damien, to his side, and more than once, glanced at his ass. Volcano, indeed. Now, if only she could pierce Damien’s dam, the former assassin could find a little happiness of his own.

---

He dragged himself up the stairs of the Elysium tower. Tired, fucking God, oh, so damn tired. How much stuff could happen in one night? Sunrise wasn’t far off. All he wanted to do was lie down and let the softness of the Prince’s blankets lull him into the deepest torpor.

Sex? He didn’t think he wanted any, wrecked as he was, but seeing Antoinette had a habit of changing his mind. But, at least for the moment, he didn’t want sex. He wanted to melt into pudding and become one with the pleasant contours of a glass bowl. He wanted to be the blood he sipped from a champagne glass, settled and still, except for maybe the gentle ripples caused by someone nudging it. He wanted to become a cow, and graze on grass, without a care in the world.

Brain fried, yeap. Complete and total exhaustion sending his mind through loops and into strange dementia, conjuring odd imagery like one might if they hadn't slept in days. He'd done that once, spent three days awake; using energy drinks to stay up, so he could study for exams and finish projects. Every illness around hit him after that, sinking him into bed with the flu, a cold, pink eye, and everything, in between, for three weeks. After that, he started taking better care of himself; he already was, thanks to Julias, but proper amounts of sleep became a priority after that.

He was hungry, starving, the need for blood itching in his veins. A strange feeling for a vampire, craving blood like a heroin addict, while needing sleep like an insomniac. Maybe Antoinette had Ashley and Julee nearby? A quick drink before sunrise, and he could pass right out. Like a kine, drinking a cup of hot chocolate, after a long day of skiing.

Mulder and Scully found him easily enough; not many short men walking around at this time of night, wearing a suit with shoes like his. They circled above for a little while, scanning the area, no doubt, before they came to him. Some thralls walked by, Antoinette's servants, wearing suits and earpieces similar to Ventrue gear. They nodded, offering small smirks as they watched the two crows come to him. Summoning crows to do his bidding must have seemed very vampire-ish, maybe even cool.

Jack stepped to the side, sat on the stairs, and held out his hands in front of him, turned slightly sideways, so Mulder and Scully could each perch on a hand. They'd gotten the hang of not piercing his skin when they perched, making holding them so much easier and enjoyable.

“Anything to report?” he said. They both shook their heads. “Damn. Well, I’ve had a very productive night ... in a way. Keep an eye open for this.” He leaned in, and made a few clucks with his tongue, as he tapped into the minds of the two birds, conveying the best mental image he could of an old woman, a very old woman, in a wheel chair.

The two crows stood taller, cawed several times, and gazed into his eyes. Yes, they had seen someone like that, with several other two-legs watching over her.

“Could be a coincidence. Pretty sure most old ladies in wheel chairs would only be outside if they had friends or family with them. Still, if you see them, keep your eyes open.”

The two crows nodded. If there was one thing crows were good at it, it was keeping an eye on things.

“You two know I ran into a crow spirit? That a god you worship, or something?”

Scully tilted her head to the side, showing him her profile, and blinked her eye at him. Apparently they did not.

Jack clicked his tongue again, leaning closer. Trading images, scenes, and sounds with animals wasn’t easy. It required vitae to tap into the animalism discipline. Tired and drained as he was, he dug some up, and shared images of the crow spirit, City Sky. Mulder cawed in, what Jack could only assume was, envy.

But the idea of a deity, or worshiping something, was beyond their minds. Good. He smiled at his pets, set Scully on his other hand beside Mulder, and reached into his pocket to pull out some oats. It’d become an all-time thing by this point, to always carry some. They plucked it from his palm with their beaks. Poke poke, careful to not hurt him.

“Sorry I was gone so long. Shit happens. But, I’m sure you have things to occupy yourselves when I’m not around.” They cawed their yes. “Good. I’ll see you two later. Maybe in the future, I’ll see if I can convince the Prince to let you come inside.”

To his surprise, the two crows hopped up closer along his arm, claws careful with his suit jacket, and they each offered a nudge of their beaks against his shoulder, before flying off. A goodbye kiss, sort of. Where’d they pick up that trick?

Once inside the Elysium Tower, he went down the stairs, down and down, deeper into the black marble with white lightning cracks, past the statues of dragons, down and down, toward the giant vault door leading to Antoinette’s bed chamber.

She wasn’t there. No one was there. Ah, well. He sauntered toward the bed, dragging his feet more with each step, until he was sure there were boulders attached. But once he reached the enormous pile of silk, he stripped until naked, and climbed into the sheets on his belly. With another thirty minutes until sunrise, he couldn’t really sleep, but that didn’t mean his body didn’t want sleep. A weird mixture of his old body’s desire to sleep, combined with his new Kindred body being worn out from the bombardment of stress.

Melt away, stress, please melt away into the blankets. Melt—

“Oh, dear Ventrue. Naked already are we?” Antoinette’s voice. Oh thank god. He tried to turn over, to give the elder vampire the respect she deserved, and because he loved her and the least he could do was get up. But, instead, he groaned into the blankets. “Tired, I take it? You look gaunt. My pets, help him.”

Putting his palms to the sheet, he pushed himself to his knees, as Julee and Ashley joined him on the bed. They weren't naked, or wearing anything sexual; either they knew he'd not be in the mood, or Antoinette wasn't in the mood. They didn't waste time either, getting close to him in their simple, colorful, pink and white pajamas.

He'd have said something, maybe how cute they were in the pajamas. But, no, too tired. They saw it, and a moment later, their necks were open to him, and he took a long drink from each. Two ghouls meant he didn't have to drain them; combined, they provided more than enough blood. After the quick feed, both girls were able to walk away from the encounter, but now, were as exhausted as when he arrived; they'd go to the room, next door, to pass out, and sleep the Kiss away.

Antoinette sat beside him on the bed, still wearing a business power suit.

“... busy day?” he asked, nodding at her clothes.

She chuckled, and gestured at his nudity. “I could say the same for you. You look ready to collapse.”

“I ... I am.”

Raising a brow, she reached out, and nudged his shoulder. Collapse he did, face down, while the tall woman looked down from the side of the bed. The best he could offer her was a weak smile, his face pressed to a pillow, and turned to face her.

“Daniel has reported the details of the ritual he discovered. And ... I admit, that is a terrifying discovery.” She sat down next to him, skirt nudging against his hip. Shuffling fabric drew his eyes, and he watched her slide off her jacket, dark colors with padded shoulders, before she set her hand on his back. The power suit looked great on her, with its dark skirt and white blouse. He managed to take a peek at her legs, as she folded one over the other. Smooth, long, curvy, toned legs with milky, alabaster skin.

Got damn it, dick, stop! You're supposed to be exhausted.

Yeah but, you just had a bunch of fresh blood to drink. You're good to go!

He forced his eyes back to hers. No sex, stop it.

"That was ... honestly, only part of the mayhem tonight."

"You may speak of it, if you wish. Whatever you do not think should be kept to the Invictus alone, you may discuss with me. No more holding the city at bay, remember?" She ran her hand up and down his back, soothing his spine, while her other hand started to undo her blouse.

"... I visited Azamel."

"Did you, now? That is a dangerous game to play."

"I thought she or Fiona might have information. If the ritual was done by the hunters, and the hunters are here for the Begotten, they might know something. Azamel did. She thinks an old woman is working with the hunters, some woman capable of the ritual."

"That ... I did not know." Antoinette stood up, slipped out of her skirt and blouse, then sat back down beside him. White bra and underwear, perfectly normal, not sexy or anything. But, it still looked damn sexy on her, boring or not. The ridiculously huge cups were almost comical, doing their best to cover and support her breasts. "That is useful information, Jack. Thank you for sharing it. I will make sure Daniel is aware."

"... Fiona also took me into the Shadow World. We ran into some strange red wraith spirit things who are, probably, partly responsible for the ritual. Communicating with this shaman the hunters work with, I guess.” And they were linked to Black Blood, and they were linked to the ‘verge’ thing that Fiona had opened, and someone had ripped their way through the portal, and it was all linked to the warning Azamel gave them, and it was linked to the mysterious dark threat Daniel was investigating. Good God, what had his life become?

“I ... cannot say I agree with your choices, little Ventrue, but I admit that you have seen things of which I have only dreamed.” She slid closer, nudging him aside on the sheets, and lying on her side beside him. Soon, she was pressed to him, her bare breasts — she’d taken her bra off in a smooth, slipping motion as she lay on the bed — pressed to his arm, her leg sliding over his. “What was it like?”

He was mostly on his belly, but turned on his side a little, to face her so he could lay his head on his arm and the pillow. With her in underwear, and pressed to him, the meal he’d just had started to tingle along his skin. Her amber, almost crimson, gaze from just a foot away, and her heavy breasts smooshed against his arm, were so terribly inviting.

“It was ... terrifying ... weird ... and ... and it was Dolareido.”

“A shadow of Dolareido, then.”

“Yeah, that’s as good a way to put it as any. It was filled with spirit ... spirit things. There were apartment doors that didn’t want to let anyone in. There were rat-like things, black wisps, sneaking around buildings. The windows were rainy, even though it wasn’t raining. The lights, not even the moonlight, were ever stable, always flickering. The streetlights were all bent and corkscrewing in the direction of South Side. I even met a crow, a giant crow named City Sky.”

“I ... I am ... mon dieu, I am envious.” She ran her hand down his shoulder and arm, his waist and hip, and down his leg. “I would have enjoyed visiting such an interesting place.”

“Interesting ... terrifying. I can understand why the werewolves don’t want us there. Half to keep us from getting ourselves killed, half to keep us out of the politics.”

“Politics?”

“Yeah, spirits with big names, I guess. Black Blood,” — her right eyebrow raised slightly at the mention — “Red Tide and the Street-Tail King. It’s ... weird, I guess. From what little I could piece together, they have their own factions, same as we do.”

“Oui, of that I am aware. But the details are forever beyond my grasp, little Ventrue. Thank you for sharing this information with me. I would ... hesitate, if I were you, to be upfront with your superiors, about how much information you have given me.” Her questing arm reached across his waist to find the small of his back, and pulled him in a bit closer. Body to body, her breasts pressed straight into his chest, and she set her lips onto his buzzed head. “I am sure they would love to dangle such information in front of me, out of my reach.”

“This is bigger than the Invictus. And the Invictus, they ... well, you know.”

“They care nothing for such mysticism. A sentiment I do not share, but can appreciate.” She pulled him in closer, until his face came to rest against her collar. Melting, a perfect place for melting. He slipped his arm around her, and hugging her back, trying to merge them together. Two bowls of pudding, all mixed up.

But, as much as he would have lit up like a Christmas tree fire in July, if she tempted him, she didn’t. Maybe she was exhausted, too?

“How was your day?” he said.

“Horrendous, though while I had assumed I would be complaining to a listening ear tonight, I had not thought that your night would be worse.”

“Oh, shit, sorry. Please, complain away!” He lowered his head enough he could feel the softness of her breast, near her collar bone. “I’m all ears.”

“Ah, well then, I must take advantage of such an offer.” Sighing, a lovely, deep, long sigh, she started to stroke the back of his head. Fingers, against buzzed hair. Euphoric. “Much of my day is spent managing the Masquerade, as you know. There are squabbles that occur between Kindred, or mistakes made by Kindred, which must be hidden. Today though, a rather ... unusual event occurred, centered around that fellow, Eric.”

“The kine? The dude with Beatrice when they saved me?”

“Indeed. In retrospect, I should have realized something was strange about the man. His inclusion into the affairs of the night was quite random, but no longer. Evidently, he is a werewolf.”

Jack yanked his head up and blinked at her. “Really?”

“Oui. And now the man, once a small thorn, is a potential knife in my side. Julias has supervised cleaning of the man’s awakening — apparently this was his first transformation — to make sure the fool’s destruction is not known by the public.”

“This happened tonight?”

“Mhhmm.”

“Wow. Everything happened tonight.” He smirked, laughing, and settled his head back against Antoinette’s collar. Another werewolf, holy shit.

“Why do you laugh, my love?”

“Just ... just find it ... great, you know? That we’re talking like this, talking about the shit happening in Dolareido. We didn’t do this much before.”

The goddess nodded, leaning forward enough to kiss his head. “I was afraid it would taint our interaction. When we first met, you were a shining beacon of wonder, joy, and honesty. I would have done anything to keep you pure, isolated from the dirty machinations of the city.”

“Aw, come on, it’s not that bad, is it? I mean, yeah, I’m not the same guy I used to be.” And frequently, he was put into situations where he was forced to become like Julias, had to lie, or manipulate, or withhold information. On top of that, he’d discovered a new level of hate and anger inside him, sometimes to the point of paralysis. He’d confided in Tash, now he should confide in Antoinette.

Later, he could confide in her, later. For now, God damn it was nice to relax with her and talk about their day.

Antoinette got up. Jack raised a brow, watching; oh, she wanted to get them under the blankets. He rolled with her movement, making space for her to pull the sheets back, and soon the two of them were beneath the blankets, cuddling. Jack had not really cuddled with anyone, until Antoinette. It must have sucked, horribly, for two kine to cuddle; body heat alone made the idea nauseating. He’d die of heat stroke.

But two vampires? No heat issues to worry about. So, he hugged her tight, as her back fit against him. He got to be the big spoon. Which, of course, didn’t work very well. He chuckled again, as his face pressed against her hair for a moment, before shifting his chin over her shoulder, instead. With the blanket over their shoulders, he couldn’t see her body. But he could feel it, feel the way her large, curvy butt and legs pressed along his body.

Possessed by some evil spirit, or inspired by a sex spirit, his hand drifted over her hip, and up her flat belly, to caress her breast. Maybe one of those sex spirits he dealt with tonight had hitched a ride in his body? It wouldn't have surprised him, as the touch of Antoinette's skin against his body set him on fire, despite his exhaustion.

The best part was, she didn't stop him, say a word, or do anything to discourage him. All she did, was chuckle, as his hand slipped between her breasts, and began to cup and massage where the weight one pressed down on its sister, squashing it to the bed. The softness of it, combined with the weight of it, was the most pleasant feeling in existence, and he sighed joy as he softly squeezed her bosom.

“We have fifteen minutes before sunrise, little Ventrue.”

“Yeah, don't mind me.” No sex needed, but even without sex, there was no denying how great a breast felt in his palm. “If I had my own, I'd be cupping and massaging them all day.”

“Yes, I do believe you have said that before.” Chuckling, she brushed her hair with her fingers, finding a better angle for it against the pillows. “What will you do about Eric?”

“I ... I don't know. That's really Julias's decision.”

“Anticipate your superior's actions, my love. An important skill, to insure your future actions can be made swiftly, and in the correct context.”

“Good point. I suppose Julias will want him to see Avery at some point, turn him into a known factor. I might be asked to be involved.” His hand drifted down a bit, so he could hug her proper, arm cutting across the upper half of her stomach. “I ... don't think we'll kick him out of the luxury suite. Jessy put him there, since he helped us out, helped me out. She trusts him, a bit, and since he works at Bloodlust, the arrangement made sense.” Comfy and cozy, she sank into him as he pulled her close. Her arm found his, rested upon it, her fingers settling on his wrist.

“I will have to speak with him, again. The poor man was quite nervous, when we met.” The tall woman chuckled, turned her head a touch, and waited. Message received; he leaned in, kissing her neck and cheek. “Fledgling Kindred have their sire to rely on, while this man does not. Whatever advice Avery gives him, I must give him context that it is my city, not hers, and that his decisions must be made with that in mind.”

“I don’t think Avery will use Eric to rock the boat, or do anything like that.” Avery does seem to have the city’s best interest in mind, even if that means wanting to do things her own way.

“Perhaps not on purpose, no. But I am sure she will attempt to convert him to her cause, and indirectly, that will create a barrier for me. Truthfully, I would be more content if he continued in his current capacity, as a bouncer for Bloodlust, and in his new living location. There, it is easy for us to keep an eye on him.”

“A werewolf bouncer ... watching vampires come and go, Kissing kine every night. That is an interesting idea.” It was a good one too. “But, Uratha aren’t like us, they don’t create their own reasons for existing. They have a powerful reason built into them, hunting spirits and keeping the ‘balance’.” He struggled to raise his hands, to make air quotes. Not easy to do, lying on his side, but it was warranted.

“Long ago, there was an Uratha who hid within my city for a short while. She did not serve any of the tribes. I asked her what she called herself, if not a member of a tribe, and she answered: ‘a ghost’.” Shrugging, Antoinette brought his hand to her lips, kissing it. “Perhaps Eric will pursue the same fate.”

“A ghost ... a ghost werewolf?” What a strange way to refer to oneself. He nodded, and hid his face in the back of her neck. “Maybe. It’d be nice if he could create a little stability out of this. Can’t go five minutes without something turning upside down.”

“Indeed.”

Exhaustion returning, he sighed, as the rising sun called for slumber. It didn’t matter he was deep underground where its rays didn’t reach him, Kindred knew when the sun rose or fell. When it started to rise, a Kindred’s body and mind grew heavy, eyelids too, until there was no choice but to give in, close their eyes, and turn into a corpse, until the sun fell, again.

“Love you,” he said into Antoinette’s ear, as he drifted under. If she said it back, he didn’t hear it, but she said it all the time anyway. He should say it more.

~~Beatrice~~

The next night. She awoke, stretching her arms out and yawning, exposing her crocodile teeth. Back in the lair with her fellow members of the Circle, back in her small hole in the wall, with all the blankets. All of them. She smirked at the pile, sure some real fur was mixed in there; not a fan of killing animals for a fur blanket, but damn it felt snuggly. Maybe she could convince Julias to spend some time here with her. Fucking with the curtain pulled aside so everyone else could watch.

Her long tongue licked her huge teeth at the thought. Yummy.

She got dressed: combat boots, gray jeans, and a black tank top. Kindred were creatures of habit, after all. But, mostly, she just liked to show off her ass and abs. They pulled people’s eyes down, away from her mouth; a habit she doubted would ever die. Jacob wore a bandage over his empty eye sockets though, so, she could justify drawing people's gazes to her better features. Not that Julias minded her teeth, but still.

She slid out of her cave, and hopped up into Jen's, expecting to find four extra legs in the girl's room. But, no, just Jennifer, alone. She was wearing a ... Snuggie, one of those blankets with sleeves, designed for comfort above all else. A book was in her hand, and not an eBook reader, but an actual book.

"Whatcha reading?" Triss said, as she plopped down next to Jen.

The woman turned the page enough for Triss to see there were some pictures to go with the walls of text. "Manifestations of the Paranormal, by Terrence Moulovia." Nodding, Jen flipped back a page to show what she'd been reading a moment before; the picture was beautiful, if disturbing. A dissected crow, wings typically pinned, with its stomach peeled open and pinned apart, like the wings. "This book is a hundred years old, it has examples of myths, things witches were supposedly doing to sacrifices."

"The Masquerade isn't as well guarded as we thought, if this shit keeps ending up in books." She reached over for it, and Jen handed her the book without complaint. "Jacob showed me some inof his books from his collection. Similar stuff, but much older."

"Yeah, many cultures have been documented these rituals at different points in history. More surprisingly, the same rituals, but at different places in the world, often with an ocean separating them." Jen pointed at the dissected crow, then at the necklace Triss was wearing. "Makes you wonder what sort of ... things, really exist."

"You mean Black Blood."

"Partly, yes. That thing ... possessed a corpse, Triss. And it talked to us."

Triss nodded, flipping the page to another picture. “He’s used different voices before. Seems like he’s settled on the voice of a Texan now. I feel like he—err, it, would be right at home cooking us up a barbecue, or talking about cheese.” She laughed, but it was a cover. Black Blood’s jovial attitude, and undefinable nature, made the damn thing terrifying in a way she couldn’t quite put her finger on.

“I always imagined,” Jen said, “entities like that, colossal in scope, wouldn’t really talk. They’d exist, but do things on a plane beyond our understanding.”

“Well, that Black Blood thing is a spirit from the Shadow World. Far as Fiona has told me, that’s a sister world to ours. Things there can get ... pretty ... crazy.” Dark, bleeding, black ooze, obsidian death fog, encompassing and overwhelming them. Something that could punch through to their side of the coin, in the most sick, twisted, macabre way. What other entities existed in that world? “I wouldn’t be surprised if a lot of the gods of myth and legend were spirits.”

“Think they were all spirits?”

“Unlikely,” a third voice said. Both girls looked up from the pile of blankets and pillows they sat on, to the pale Gangrel, Aaron. He raised a brow when his eyes caught sight of Jen, in the blanket-with-arms, before shrugging.

“You know something?” Triss asked.

“I do.” He came in a little, and once Jen offered, he sat down on the blankets, facing them. “Jacob’s interest isn’t only in the Shadow World.”

Jacob wasn’t home. He was out, doing his usual sneaky sneak things. Probably sleeping in some hole in the ground he’d dug a century ago. It meant they could talk about him, if they kept their voices down. Jacob’s ghouls could hear them, if they got too loud.

Triss slipped Jen back the book, and tilted her head to the side, squinting at the man. “What are his interests?”

“No idea. But I’ve been around him long enough, seen enough of his artifacts and overheard his rants, to know he dips his toes into other worlds.” Aaron shrugged, reached out, and took the book from Jen’s hand. “And you, Triss, already know he has an interest in nightmares.”

Ah, yes, can’t forget about nightmares being an actual place. Professional envy there, Nosferatu and their ability to bestow nightmares ultimately outclassed by literal nightmares walking around. Athalia, and her horror, that torso of bone and wings, was just too damn fucking cool.

Footsteps turned their heads, and the three of them offered a nod to Othello, as the beautiful man jumped into Jen’s home.

“Talking about Jacob?” he asked, long hair falling over his dark, tan shoulders. Man never wore a shirt, showing off his muscles every chance he got. Fucking Daeva. Not like she was one to talk, though.

Triss nodded again. “We are.”

“I’ve known him longer than the rest of you. I can assure you, his interest in other realms is nothing new.”

“By how much?” Jen said. “How long has he been ... well, tempting fate, calling on entities from across God knows what?”

Othello shrugged, sitting down beside Aaron. All the witches, sitting across from each other. If they had a ouija board, it would have been perfect.

“Since forever. I suppose he became more interested in it after Minerva’s death.”

“... that’s a good point,” Triss said. “You’re pretty damn old, Othello. Been around longer than any of us. What was Minerva like?”

Her question hit him in a strange way. He lowered his gaze, and leaned back so his palms caught his weight on the blankets.

“She was nice, I guess. I never talked to her much. It wasn’t every day a Kindred got to be on speaking terms with both the Prince, and the Joker. But she was nice, and sweet, to the point it was almost sickening.”

Heh, Joker. Dude was far too old for comic book villains, but maybe Othello stayed up to date with pop culture. Daeva did that sometimes, obsessed with the material as they were.

“She talked with both Jacob and Antoinette?” Jen said.

The Daeva nodded, and adjusted his jeans a bit as he got comfortable on the blankets. “I get the impression she was involved in both their secret pursuits. We know Jacob’s agenda includes ... well, being an all powerful warlock,” he said. Right, not witches, it was witches and warlocks. “The Prince is a dragon, so her pursuits are undoubtedly similar, only pursued in a different way.”

Aaron leaned in, voice a whisper. “Operating tables and scalpels, computers and fancy tech, less chanting and blood rituals, more detailed notes and experiments.” He flipped through some pages, stopping at a page showing a human in a coffin, being lowered into the ground. “While we touch on topics like ... the meaning of life, or death, and which ancient gods drift among us, manifesting as unknowable concepts, the Ordo Dracul treat it like science.”

“Yeap,” Othello said, “and Minerva seems to have been interested in both worlds. Probably something to do with why Avery killed her.”

Jen's eyes lit up. "Were you there for that?"

"No. Glad I wasn't. I saw Jacob the day after, and he was beat up bad." Smirking, the Daeva leaned back a bit, putting his shoulder blades on the cave wall. "Then again, so were Avery, Simon, and the rest of the pack."

Triss tried to whistle. No good, damn it. "Jacob against a whole pack of werewolves?"

"We did watch him beat up Arturo and Matthew, Tash's two boy toys." Chuckling, Jen reached out and took the book back from Aaron. The chuckle faded, and her eyes fell as silence buried them. The boys waited, looking at each other and the women with raised brows, until Jen sighed. "It wasn't pretty. Jacob really hates werewolves, that mindless sort of hate, you know?"

"Yeah." Triss collapsed backward as well, settling her shoulder against the wall as she looked at the cave ceiling. "It was impressive, seeing a small guy like that decimate two werewolves in hand to hand, like they were fucking children. But at the same time, he goaded them, and took advantage of the situation." Not doing the best job keeping him cool, Beatrice. Prince asked you to, maybe you should try a little harder. "I should talk to him, later." After you go see Damien. Been putting that off long enough. Ugh.

"Where your boys been lately, Jen?" Othello asked, gesturing to the cave around them. "Used to be you and me stinking up this place with ghoulish sweat. Now it's just me."

"I ... honestly ... haven't really felt like enjoying them." She shrugged, the blanket-with-arms looking utterly hilarious, and cute, on her. "Been more than satisfied with Triss and Julias."

Triss winked at her, before looking back at the ceiling. Was Jen getting drawn into the lovey dovey romance Julias and Triss drowned each other in on the reg? Or was the sex that good, Jen didn't need it from anyone else? Either way, it made Triss chuckle a bit, and earn an elbow in the side from the Ventrue.

Othello smiled smugly, then let Jen's admission pass with a shrug. "I remember the way Jacob was, after Minerva's death. It wasn't pretty. He turned into a stone. It was a long time before the Jacob we know and love, and hate, came out again."

"It was true love," Aaron said. "Rare among us vampires. I can only imagine what it must be like, to know someone for years, know you could spend the next century loving them, and then someone else tears them away, like"—finger snap—"that. I wonder if Jacob even realizes the powerfulness of his life story." God damn, Aaron did love to over-narrate things. Maybe a repercussion of his unhealthy love of reading. Why read when you could watch the movie.

"He's had no one to talk about it with," Triss said.

The other three vampires looked at each other. The guilt on their faces was blatant.

"Correct," Aaron said. "Approaching Jacob about the topic isn't easy, as you can imagine."

"Since her death," Othello continued, "Jacob's been buried deeply in his rituals and research."

"Research?" Jen said. "You make him sound like a dragon, not a warlock."

Triss snorted, throat catching on a small laugh. The word witches sounded cool, bad ass, and very dark and mysterious. Warlocks sounded like nerds.

"He's being a bit more thorough," Othello said, "than I remember him being before Minerva's death. Not that I know that much; we avoided getting too involved in the crúac, Triss, until you called us out on it. Dolareido's been ... easy living, for the most part."

Aaron nodded. "We just sit here and watch the Carthians and Invictus get on each other's cases, while our boss explores the depths of madness, and other dimensions."

"You had a good thing going," Triss said. "I can't blame you. It's not ... well, yeah, I mean now that everything's turning to shit, monsters, werewolves, hunters, and fucking what not, I expected the you three to participate a more. But if Jacob's been hands-off with you this whole time, yeah, no wonder you haven't been involved." Leaning back in, she tapped a claw against one of her larger crocodile teeth, several times, as she looked at the others. "Within six months of working for the Carthians, Garry had me doing scouting missions on operations the Invictus were running. That bar over by Fifth and Darper Street? That was me."

That earned some oohs and aahs from the other vampires, and Triss grinned with the sound. Yeap, she'd done some damage that night, when she wasn't supposed to have. Broke some poor suit's arm too. Bitch had it coming, though.

Those were the good days. Instead of worrying about monsters, nightmares, spirits, and what might as well be gods, she worried about when and where to get her next meal, and how she was going to get away with breaking an Invictus woman's arm. In the end, the woman probably didn't report it, to save face, or whatever. Good for Triss, because it had been a stealth mission; one she fucked up. Now, if she fucked up, she'd piss off a demon, or an ancient spirit of the Black Plague or some such, and get everyone killed. Not only bigger stakes, but a playing field she wasn't comfortable with, not at all.

No, that wasn't entirely true. Now, she was dipping her toes into crúac, and overcoming her fear of pain. Now, she was talking to an ancient, deadly spirit on something similar to a schedule. She was earning the title, witch, very much so.

“Any news on the hunters, by the way?” she said. The two boys were supposed to be looking into it.

Aaron raised his hand for a moment. “I spoke with some of my crow friends. I ... actually, did you know your little Ventrue friend Jack has been dipping his toes into animalism?”

“Has he?” she said.

“Mhmm. I don’t think he knows how many other Kindred have also made friends with the crows and rats of Dolareido. He’ll learn, eventually.” Holy crap, the Gangrel actually smiled. “My friends noted some weird activity in Devil’s Corner. Of particular interest was an old woman in a wheelchair, hooked up to a breather.”

Othello rolled his eyes. “Yeah, you told me about this. Lot of old people in the city, Aaron.”

“This one had an escort.”

Jen leaned in. “That’s not ... too unusual. There are...”

“It’s not just that. My friends told me they didn’t like what they saw. There was something unusual about it, about her, about everything.”

Triss shook her head. “That doesn’t mean she, or they, were hunters. Hell, Azamel is an old woman, sitting in a crummy chair, with a bunch of bodyguards around her.”

Aaron mirrored the head shake. “Based on what you told us about Azamel, this wasn’t her. This woman looked two days away from death. Only thing keeping her alive was drugs and the respirator.”

Shrugging, Triss got up, stretched a bit more, and headed for the exit of Jen's hole in the wall.

"Wait," Jen said. "We should ... we should talk about that night, with Black Blood."

Yeah, they probably should. Problem was, Triss didn't really want to talk about it. Much as it appealed to a dark part of her that loved scary shit, that loved she was a part of scary shit, there was no denying the chills Black Blood sent up her spine.

"We'd love to know the details," Othello said. "And if Aaron and I are ever going to join you in these secret rituals ... I know I'd like to know a little more, instead of going in blind."

"Yeah ... ok." Groaning, she sat back down. Maybe this was better than the awkward conversation she'd planned to have with Damien. "Black Blood is a spirit, and that's about the extent of my knowledge. That, and Black Blood knows Jacob, has known him for a long time. Calls him Malachi."

"Malachi?" The two men said.

"Yeah. No one else calls him that, and I don't suggest you start. Probably an old name from his younger days, when he first came here to Dolareido. Far as I can tell, Jacob was just as wild then as he is now, and had another group of vamps as part of his Circle. They got down and dirty with the blood magic, the crúac rituals, and all that shit. Jacob discovered Black Blood, on the other side of the wall, when Jacob and company were still newcomers to Dolareido." She looked up, letting her mind wander for a moment, to images of cowboys and farmers, old bars and streets of mud and horse shit, to brothels and prostitutes with warts on their faces. A time when superstition ruled the world. God damn, it must have been a paradise for Kindred; if they could find a safe place to sleep, far from mobs with torches.

“They’re friends, I guess,” she continued, “if you can be friends with a spirit. It ... it was like speaking with a shadow of a god, if you can imagine that. Something dark, something that literally oozed black stuff, black mist, black water, black everything. It took the place over, used all the symbols and shit Jacob had set up, and seeped its way into our world. It likes to use a corpse as a host, I guess, or at least, a tool. I don’t think host is the right word here, more like a puppet. And, like Jacob, or Malachi, it shares an interest in crúac, blood rituals, and other things. The two of them seem to be buddy buddy, and delight in...”

“In being gross,” Jen said. “Black Blood seems intelligent, really intelligent, the sort of intelligence that comes with not being human. Above human. It was weird, and as it and Jacob talked about the next crúac ritual like it was as mundane and predictable as the weather, I ... it was scary.” She shivered, and hugged the blanket tighter as she looked down, at the book. After flipping through pages to where she’d left off, she turned the page. A person burning on a stake greeted her. The artist had taken the liberty to not show the facial expression of someone being roasted alive; how nice of them.

Above the burning person, was a wisp of smoke. Smoke made sense; the drawing was detailed, and the artist didn’t spare details like flames on the wood, or the smoke it gave off. But the cloud above carried an expression, cuts through the smoke making the shape of eyes, and fangs.

“Ain’t no vamp surviving this,” Othello said, as he pointed to the picture.

After a moment of reading, Jen shook her head. “This account suggests the person was human all along, and was being possessed by a vampire.”

“Dominated?” Aaron asked.

She shrugged again. “This book wasn’t written by a vampire or anything, just a human touching on things when they’d only scratched the surface. I’m reading it because Jacob said it was oddly accurate in many ways, and a lot of the information was pertinent to the things we witches and warlocks can do with crúac.” Her fingers found the drawing, and she caressed where the smoke formed the grinning face. “I guess this is the sort of stuff we’ll be exploring, with Jacob and an otherworldly entity as our guide. Cheating death by possessing people? Seems doable, considering the things we’ve seen Jacob do. And considering what we saw Black Blood do.”

Silence fell on them again; no need to say what they were thinking: what boundary had Minerva crossed, to earn death at the hands of the werewolves? Was Jacob and Black Blood going to get them killed, if they pursued the rivers of blood and insanity the old Nosferatu was inviting them into?

---

---

~~Eric~~

The forest. A bright, shining moon. A gibbous moon. Grass around his naked feet. Breeze against his naked skin.

He was dreaming.

Catching on quickly, aren’t you?

The voice in his head. His normal voice, his him, his me. Good ole Eric’s voice, internally narrating. Nothing wrong with that, everyone does that.

You’d be surprised at how many people don’t. You know who narrates their actions and motives in their heads?

Introverts?

Well, yes, them too. But so does a Cahalith.

Cahalith?

Mmhmm. You think all Uratha walk around, seeing things, hearing voices? The Ithaeur may be harassed by spirits, but what's happening to you isn't the same.

... am I sure this is me?

Yeah, just you who knows more than you. And I'm telling you, you're in for a rough ride, werewolf.

Eric breathed deep, and looked down at his naked body. Him, the man he knew. Average height, very dark skin, and well built. Muscular, with little in the way of body fat. Lean, abs and serratus anterior muscles, everything chiseled and ready for war. Old habits die hard, and keeping the fat mass low meant staying in a lower weight class. It also meant people underestimated you, when you were wearing clothes.

No clothes out here though, in the soothing, gentle breeze of mother nature. Out here where it was the rule of the world. Mother nature? Father wolf is dead, you coward. Your forebears ruined everything, and now it's on you to manage the mess. Mitigate, like a janitor cursed to wear a ball and chain while idiot school children continue to litter and spill. Poor fool, doomed to wander the halls in a circle, forever cleaning, never done.

Eric turned, and looked to the city before him. Dolareido had no forests, not like the one that surrounded him, but his dream felt different. He stood high on raised ground, sloping hills of grass, with endless trees behind him. The city of lights, drugs, and sex lay before him.

So I'm Cahalith.

Indeed.

What does that mean?

I'm sure Avery will give you a better breakdown. Or a worse one, depending on how much bias you're willing to accept. All I know, is that you're a storyteller. A fucked-in-the-head storyteller, Eric. Which is hilarious, by the way. It doesn't fit you at all. Or maybe it does? Forever in pursuit of glory, because glory makes for a good song; or good media exposure, in the modern world, anyway. That is why you got into fighting, isn't it?

That's how I destroyed my knee. I learned my lesson.

Well, recent events are giving you a second chance. Get to be big, bad, dangerous, and glorious! All the glory, all the fucking glory, all for you, Eric. That knee is fine now, nothing to stop you from going on a glorious hunt.

For ... Father Wolf? Or ... Luna?

You know her name. She's been talking to you, hasn't she? Because if she didn't, you'd have crumbled by now. You don't know how to breathe, how to take a moment, how to focus on the fucking moment. You should feel proud, special; Luna actually talked to you. Maybe she likes you?

Eric looked up at the sky, the few clouds that gently moved by, and the moon that cut through them with its light. Her light.

Were his ancestors' sins, his problem? No, of fucking course, they weren't. He didn't ask to be a werewolf. He didn't ask for...

Someone's here.

---

He sat upright in his bed. Kat was there, and her smell assaulted him from every direction; she'd been rubbing up against everything while he was sleeping, evidently. She sat beside him, meowing a few times before stretching out. A few more meows, then she walked over to rub her face against his chest.

Fur was everywhere. The new bed did not appreciate it, its purple silk sheets exposing all of Kat's glorious colors. The maid was going to hate him.

He had a maid.

Eric laughed, crawled out of bed, and put on some loose pants. His new apartment might as well have been a mansion, far as he and Kat were concerned. So much space. What was he going to do with so much space? Laughing again, he stepped out of his room, and—

“Hi.”

“Sweet Jesus!” He jumped and spun around, bringing up his fists. The room was dark, the only source of light the crack of illumination getting around his black-out curtains. But it was enough for his new eyes to see well, and see that he was alone in the room. The door was closed, too; Kat's routine was to sleep with him for solid eight hours, every night, though there was still five hours of sleep left on the schedule. The joys of working nights.

No one else was supposed to be in the room. His front door was locked, and the bedroom was locked with a new, proper lock. He did recognize the voice, though.

“Fiona? Er ... Vrall?”

“Yes, that is who I am,” the spider woman said. Her voice was quiet, but not a whisper. She didn't need to whisper, given how much these fancy suites focused on sound insulation. As far as Eric knew, his neighbors might as well have not existed, sound-wise. Made talking with the monster who'd snuck into his room, and was now under his bed, easier.

“How did you get in here?” He squatted down by the bed, with enough distance that, if something decided to reach out to grab him, he could jump away in time. No reason to suspect Fiona, but there was no denying that a giant spider lady was talking to him from under his bed. He couldn’t see her, but she was there.

If there was one way to get arachnophobia, it’d be from something like this.

“Damien knows which room you’re staying in. He showed me.”

“How, exactly did he show you the place? I haven’t left here since last night.”

“You can’t hide from the eyes of a Mekhet, especially that one.” She chuckled. “But, it’s true that I’ve never seen the insides of this particular room before. I had to use Vrall’s past experience with half-blind jumps to ... well, find this delightful corner of shadow.” A hand reached out from the blackness. Her hand. Not Fiona’s, Vrall’s. Less fingers than a human hand. Each finger was a long, pointed blade. If she squeezed anything with that grip, her fingertips would sink in like a fat needle into an arm, hungry for blood.

“And why ... why are you ... like that?”

“Like what?”

“Why are you in that form right now? Where’s the pretty redhead?”

“Ah. Here in the dark, on the edge of the dream you just had, Vrall can come with me.” More chuckles, and another hand slipped out from the darkness. Two sets of claws began tapping on the floor, until at last the spider woman’s face peeked out from the black. Only the bottom half of her face emerged, so the top half of her head — which would not be able to fit under the bed anyway — was hidden. The seductive smile, thin lips, dark skin.

Damn she was beautiful, in a ‘come into my web so I can fuck you, then eat your head’ sort of way. But she was a spider, not a praying mantis. So she’d fuck him, then liquefy his insides and suck out the juice.

“Did you see my dream?”

“No. I have never been able to enter the dreams of others, only nightmares. Some Begotten might be able to? It would be interesting.”

“I ... I’m a werewolf, Fiona.” And she fucking knew it, too.

“Yes.” Her hands and face slid along the length of his bed a foot, then back a foot, without making a sound, without altering her angle; like she was sliding on a sheet of ice under the bed. “Did something happen?”

“You haven’t talked to your buddies?”

“Athalia? Mark and Azamel? Not yet. I only just arrived back from a rather long and dangerous journey. The sun is beginning to rise.”

The black-out curtains would keep the sun out for a long while, thank god.

He leaned down a little closer to the spider woman’s face, so she’d see his frown.

“I killed four people, and ate a chunk out of each of them.” He spared no expense on the malice in his voice. There was anger there, rage, maybe even a little blame, aimed at Fiona for not telling him more, when she had the chance, before the madness started.

“I ... can’t apologize, for that.”

“You fucking ... no, no, of course you can’t.” He sighed, and fell back, his ass meeting the hard bedroom floor. Right then, he kind of missed his old apartment's shitty carpet. "Yeah, I know. I fucking know, but ... fucking christ, Fiona. I killed people."

"What happened?"

"Those fucking pricks working me over a loan came for me. Jessy had wiped my debt with an asshole, but apparently they wanted to kill me and send her a message." He laughed, a sad laugh caught in his throat. "I vomited up bits of human. I can still fucking taste it too. Blurry images, nothing specific, but there was a rush, a terrible, amazing rush, when I bit into them. It ... it's still there, on my tongue. The fuck am I?"

Cannibal. Cannibal? Was he actually a cannibal, if he wasn't human? And he wasn't human, not anymore. His dad was human though, so Eric had to be human, too, to some extent. Christ, Dad. He had to go see his dad again, and soon.

"If I had had time, I would have told you more, Eric."

"No time?"

"Correct. After the hunters showed up, my kin and I had to hide. I became distracted. I haven't been to the Bloodlust since then. And, I am hungry."

A hungry monster. He gulped, and found himself inching away. He was a hungry monster, in a way, but what was he compared to the nightmare under his bed.

"How do you satisfy your hunger?" How do you satisfy our own, new hunger, Eric? Far as he could tell, he wanted to eat what he always liked eating. Except, maybe, a bit more toward bacon and beef, spare the carbs.

"It's different for different types of Begotten, and not by our ... nature. I am a monster of darkness: Eshmaki." Without moving her fingers or face, Fiona's exposed hands and chin flipped upside down, as if she was now clutching the underside of his bed. Fucking christ. "But, so is Athalia, and she doesn't eat what I eat. She doesn't find those who are guilty, and make them suffer for their violations."

"Violations?"

"It is different for each Begotten who satisfies their hunger in this way. Nemeses. I, Vrall, must find those who have mistreated others, bullied others, abused others. I devour the dread dripping from their pores. I inhale the fear escaping between their clenched teeth, then absorb the terror fleeing from their screaming mouths." She sighed, wistfully, and licked her lips. He still couldn't see above her nose, the shadow of his bed somehow hiding her enormous crown of horns. "When I first came to Dolareido, I let Vrall indulge her hunger, and torture prey to the point of death. I even devoured their flesh."

"How many did you kill?" This tiny girl — not so tiny right now, but still — was a killer, someone who had killed people before. A young, small woman, with blood on her hands. What did that make him?

"Almost a dozen, before the Kindred sought me out. I had crossed a line, damaged their Masquerade."

He winced, and nodded. Athalia was right, then, all of them were. Eric had come dangerously close to a precipice he didn't know existed. If he had damaged their Masquerade irreparably, those vamps would have his ass on a stake, no matter if he wanted to reconcile.

"I know the feeling," he said. "You've ... killed people ... coherently?"

"It was easy for me. The people Vrall wants to eat, or at least terrorize, deserve to be punished. Abusers deserve nothing but pain and suffering.”

“Personal vendetta?”

“No.” Still upside down, the nightmare licked her lips, then opened her mouth enough to expose some of her fangs, this time. “Vrall is the horror, the monster in us all that ... it is too large a concept to explain so easily. There are men and women who have nightmares, Eric. Nightmares that haunt them because of a little kernel inside them. A little nugget of wisdom, a tiny voice they’ve buried speaks to them in whispers, begging for them to stop being such horrible people, to stop torturing others for their own sick pleasures. They ignore the voice. The voice crafts nightmares to persuade them to stop.” Grinning, her claws reach up to tug on his blanket’s edge. “Those nightmares extend, touch, and live in a realm beyond your imagining. The dream world touches everyone’s mind, and in an unconscious mass, horrors are birthed, to teach lessons. Fear the dark, fear the long drop, fear the greater predator, fear the wrath of the vengeful.”

“You teach people lessons?”

“Some Begotten think in such a way. Vrall does. Whether or not it is taken to heart, is up to the Begotten. But, I can tell you that Vrall, that I, am not some scarred and beaten thing that has come back from the beyond to enact vengeance. I am an idea, a nightmare, that has grown from a seed planted deep in the minds of billions of people.”

Ok, yeah, literal nightmare.

“Heavy stuff.”

“And you, are an Uratha. Vrall knew of your kind, centuries ago. You guard the wall, tend the herd, keep balance between this world and its shadow.”

So his dreams were telling him. It was nice to hear someone else confirm it, so he knew his new life wasn't just a delusion brought on by insanity.

“And, if I don't want to play guard duty, or worry about culling weeds?” He got up, rubbing the sleep from his eyes. Breathe, right? Breathe. A meow cut through the silence following the question, as he stretched his shoulders and opened the bedroom door. Kat knew where the litter box was, no need to help her.

Fiona, or Vrall, started to change. Maybe, because he was more awake, or from the light bouncing down the hallway, and little bits of the sun were working their way through the rest of his apartment. Whatever it was, as the room became lighter, until a normal human could see, Fiona was no longer the spider monster.

Out from under his bed, crawled the redhead. Wearing jeans and a jacket, she was the epitome of a casual, fun-loving gal. A tired gal, though. He could see the stress on her face and body, the weight in her steps. The strain of stress didn't erase the smile from her face, though, as she hopped onto his bed to sit at its edge.

“Fancy!” she said, accent returned. Kat returned from her outing, and hopped onto the bed, and looked at the short woman. Fiona returned Kat's curious look, tilting her head to the side. “Never seen a cat get along with a werewolf before.”

“Kat is brain damaged, I'm pretty sure.” He shrugged, and sat back on his bed, as well, with Kat between him and Fiona. Kat seemed hesitant with Fiona, looking her up and down. With Jessy, Kat was more than content to get affectionate. Fiona was giving her pause. Strange.

Fiona held out her hand for the cat, and Kat sniffed it several times, before at last rubbing her cheek against Fiona's hand, inviting pets. The redhead giggled, and began to pet the stupid feline. Feet bouncing against the side of the bed, the monster smiled at Eric, and looked him up and down several times.

“I still owe ye a date,” she said. “And after that night with Jessy, I think it’s safe to say we can escalate!” Chuckling, Fiona turned on the bed a bit, pulling up one knee onto the blankets.

“You look exhausted.”

“So do ye!”

“I work nights, Fiona. I’m running on two hours of sleep. I should go back to bed.”

“... can I join ye?” She giggled, but she also looked down, and started tracing shapes into the blankets. Giggling was her nervous tick, then. Shy? No, but inexperienced.

“I don’t think that’s a good idea,” he said.

“Ye dinnae?” She frowned for a moment, before slipping out of her jacket, and setting it aside. Now, wearing only a t-shirt, she pulled that off as well, all with the grace of a drunk — or very tired — college girl. Her massive bra exposed, she lay on her back, making grabby hands at him. “Dolareido is called whore town, right? I’m very much looking forward to enjoying some of that.”

“You really ... should find someone closer to your age.” And maybe someone with a disposition a bit closer to yours. Maybe a giant sunflower.

“Come on, ye telling me ye dinnae want a piece of this.” She rolled over enough to stick her ass out. The jeans hugged her tight, showing she was a very beautiful woman. A beautiful monster, with a sunny personality he couldn’t wrap his mind around.

“I’m serious, Fiona. This is a mistake. I’m a fair bit older than you, and—”

“I dinnae care. Ye’re handsome, and ye’re nice, in yer own, strange way.” She sat up straight again, reached behind her, and tossed her bra to the side. “I’m tired, sore, and I ... I feel like I owe ye. I should have told ye more, before I went into hiding. From now on, I’ll be around more; so will Athalia and Mark.”

Kat, perhaps psychic and predicting, jumped off the bed and left, giving Fiona free room to crawl toward him. Suddenly, Eric found himself caught between staring, and laughing. It was true that Fiona was gorgeous, the frizzy red hair, the freckles, the pale skin, and the enormous breasts swaying beneath her were an overpowering combination of beautiful. But she had zero grace, and her attempts to be seductive were atrocious. Her cat crawl might as well have been a donkey crawl.

“Fiona, come on, I’m serious.”

She’d gone deaf; his words weren’t landing. She crawled onto his lap, smiling at him as she put her knees on either side of his legs, and hooked her arms on his shoulders, hands crossed behind his neck. Her body was on display, and she leaned back until her heavy breasts flattened against her torso with their mass. God damn.

“Ye didnae enjoy that night, with Jessy and me?” she said.

“I did. A lot.”

She took his words for invitation. Hands found his, and guided them to her body, her bare stomach, her soft skin, and her luscious breasts. He groaned quietly, as he felt his fingers sink into them, her breasts’ softness molding them around his hands. It earned a shiver from her, too. She giggled nervously as she looked him up and down, and re-hooked her hands around the back of his neck.

“If I ... if I had to guess,” she said, “ye’re interested in her.”

Shit.

“I ... um...”

“Nae, it’s a’right. Though I think ye might be barking up the wrong tree. She has four servants, and she bangs them on the regular. At the same time.” Fiona kept one hand on his neck, and let her other drift down his chest muscles. She licked her lips, and Eric smiled at the difference between her and Vrall’s lips. Much as Vrall was unusually attractive, for a monster, Fiona’s pink lips against her pale skin were far more appealing.

“Yeah, she does.” Though Jessy seemed to suggest her ‘ghouls’ were banging other people, and not her, as of late.

“If there’s a’body on the planet that won’t mind a lass having a taste of ye, it’s an open-minded woman like Jessy.” Still with one hand hooked behind his neck, she reached down to her pants, undid the button and fly, and reached in. “I was in the Shadow World last night.”

He tensed, hard enough for the girl to notice; she knew he knew what that was now, to some extent or another. With a nod, she smiled at him, and continued to touch herself, while one of his hands slid down to hold onto her waist. She wasn’t ripped like the girls he knew in MMA, or Jessy, but she was mostly thin, a bit curvy, and a touch of softness to her, that was so terribly inviting. His other hand continued to sink into her breast, now reaching under to cup it, letting its fullness overflow his palm. Warm and heavy, her swollen, pink nipple begged his thumb to touch it. It did, reaching up to caress while his fingers continued to cup the breast’s weight.

God damn, he broke easily.

“You were in the Shadow World?”

“Yeah, helping some friends learn some things. We met a sex spirit there.” Fiona slipped her hand out of her pants, and put it on his chest. Wet. Already. “She had some interesting things to say about us. Apparently, everyone in Whore Town is ... a slut. The vampires are the worst, but the spirit had some interesting things to say about me. Clara laughed at us.”

“Clara?”

“A werewolf, like ye. I’m sure ye’ll meet her, too. Bet she might even give Jessy a run for her money at stealing ye.”

“I’m not—”

“I’m just kidding.” Giggling all the more, her hand slid down his chest, over his abs, and down to his pants. Simple, loose sweat pants to wear at home provided no protection from her hands, nor did they hide how hard he was getting. He couldn’t stop caressing the woman’s breast, and that was only making things worse.

Her hand found his cock, then giggled and shivered all at once, as she began to gently stroke it within his pants.

“I still feel like I owe ye, for saving my life, and helping Beatrice save Jack,” she said.

“You don’t—”

“I want to.” She started stroking him faster, her grip at the base of his cock, working him back and forth similar to that night with Jessy. “It’s a treat for ye, and it’s a treat for me. My hometown was so boring, and Dolareido isn’t, and ... and I haven’t really gotten to partake! I get to see it, all the time, in my hunts. I lied to my friends, but it wasn’t until that night with ye and Jessy that ... that someone else touched me. A’m needin’ more.”

Horny girl leaves hometown, and struggles to break out of her shell in the big city. He could understand that, he supposed. But it only served to highlight how young the girl was, and how her aggressive, sexual attitude was far more 'fake it until you make it' than legit.

That didn't mean he didn't agree with her, though. And when a topless, beautiful woman is sitting on your lap, and stroking your cock while pointing it at her, it's hard to think clearly.

Whatever was happening to him, whatever it meant to be a werewolf, it was sending his body a very powerful message: you are alive, healthy, and ready fight or fuck at any time. And do it again, and again, and again. And god damn, he wanted to.

"Don't ... suppose you brought any condoms?" he said.

"What? No, course nae. Ye're the man, ye should have some!"

"Only thing I brought with me to this new place was Kat. Been a pretty hectic night."

"It's a fancy place, right? I bet the bathroom already has some." She let go of him, got up, and walked toward the door as she kicked off her pants. Left only in her underwear, she grinned over her shoulder at him. Simple underwear, blue, and terribly cute.

He got up, and followed after her. Early in the morning, sun rising, and he needed sleep. A middle-of-the-night tryst with a deadly monster wasn't what he had planned for his morning, not after what happened last night. But, watching the small girl's large butt, her curvy hourglass figure, and breasts so large he could see the sides of them from behind, he couldn't deny what he wanted, now. Typical man, breaks like a dry twig the moment a girl shows her boobs.

He got up, and followed her, only to find underwear on the floor outside his door.

“This place is nice! I like it.”

“It pays to have friends in high places.”

“The Kindred own the town, I admit that.” She found the bathroom down the hallway, and whistled as she flicked on the light. “Oh, oh! Hot tub!”

He laughed, leaned against the door frame, and watched the naked girl explore his bathroom. Yeah, it was ridiculously classy and sleek, a large scale bathroom with a middle of the floor drain, so the corner shower didn't bother with glass panels to contain the water. He'd heard of places like this, of rooms like this, called 'open design' or something. What the fuck would a couple do if one was showering and the other wanted to take a piss? Zero privacy. Well, the place probably did have an extra bathroom somewhere, considering how big the damn apartment was.

“Found some!” She drew some condoms from a cupboard, and waved them in the air, prize earned.

“I still think this is a bad idea.”

“So do I, but I'm a young lass, and I deserve to make mistakes. Tasty, delicious mistakes.” She wiggled the condoms left and right as she came closer, grin so big he could see her teeth. No fangs, nothing unusual.

“You're kind of skipping some steps, too,” he said.

“I am?”

“Yeah. Last thing you want to do is jump right to the sex, Fiona.” Don't do it, don't do it, don't do it. “Sit on the tub, and spread your legs.” God damn it, Eric, you weak fucker.

She squealed, doing as directed, zero hesitation despite the blatant blushing. Redheads did blush easily, pale skin catching the red blood and putting all her emotions on display. Nervous. Giggling nervous. She set the condoms aside, put her palms on the white tub’s edge, and spread her milky legs apart.

Wherever the sun struck, there were freckles. Her face was covered with them, and so were her upper arms. But under them, everything from the breasts downward, was creamy, milky white, alabaster almost, and demanding to be kissed. She’d shaved herself smooth, normal for Dolareido, and her pink pussy shivered along with her trembling thighs. Very nervous.

“I wish I had a bevvvy.”

He rolled his eyes. “I’m sure there’s something to drink in the place. I haven’t looked.”

“Later, then?” Grinning big once again, she reached down between her thighs with one hand, and caressed her folds. Very wet. What had that sex spirit said to get her so riled up?

Maybe you should stop worrying about why these beautiful gifts are being dumped on your lap, Eric. Your knee is healed, you feel as healthy as an ox, and you have a great, new place to live. Pitt is dead, your debt is gone, and you got some vampires in your corner, backing you, willing to deal with that Montoya fucker. And two women are throwing themselves at you, both fun, both gorgeous, both looking for something non-committal. Perfect, right?

Well, maybe he was looking for something a little more committed? He wasn’t young, anymore. Not old, not young, an age where the idea of getting drunk and sleeping with a stranger lost its appeal.

He shook his head at his thoughts, smiled at the beautiful creature waiting for him, and approached. He was still wearing his pants, but the loose fabric didn't bother him, despite how it hugged his upright cock. It'd be good protection for his knees, since he was going to be on them for a bit.

He breathed in, deep, and earned a sigh of desire from the small woman as she looked him up and down. She liked the look of him, and seeing a girl sigh with lust, was the biggest stroke to a man's ego he could imagine. It set his blood on fire, and filled his mind with imagery. If things continued, he'd have this tiny, curvy, busty creature in his bed, and he'd fuck her, and fuck her, and fuck her, until she wasn't able to move anymore.

All in good time.

He got down on one knee, set a hand against the tub edge outside her leg, while his other reached in, finding her sex. Warm, soft, wet and hungry. Fiona bit her lip, and chewed on it as she watched him, cheeks growing redder, and redder.

And all the redder, as he eased two fingers into her awaiting body.

“Oh! ... b-be gentle.”

He smirked at the trembling woman, but did as requested. He'd had sex hundreds of times, but she hadn't. How much did she know about it, about her own body, about pleasure. No reason to do things quickly, when he could go slow, and help her find what she liked.

With his palm up, his middle and ring finger together, he pressed them into her body a few inches, and looked up at her. Her expression melted, and her hand, once caressing her folds, reached out to grab his shoulder, instead.

“You ... you ... know w-what you're doing, right?” she asked. Poor girl was trying so hard to be the aggressor, bouts of shyness made her so unbearably cute. Like sweet ice cream, almost too sweet to enjoy. Almost.

“I do.” He leaned in, breathed deeply the scent of her flesh, her soft skin and curvy thighs, then set his lips onto her wet clitoris. A sharp inhale confirmed her sensitivity; no surprise there. He set his tongue against it, and kept the pressure soft, gentle, with long and caressing licks. Her shivers increased, and little squeaks started to come with them. Her breasts shook with her trembling, their softness causing them to ripple from movement. Her quickened breathing only made it worse, and Eric found himself staring at her just to watch her breasts jiggle.

The young creature was too beautiful. He almost felt unworthy, touching something so pure. Maybe pure wasn't the word, but there was no denying the girl was a bundle of joy who wanted the experience of the pleasures life had to offer; she was untainted. Strange, considering she was a monster; a shining example of what all the monsters, vampires, werewolves, and God-fucking-knows-what-else should strive to be. She was happy.

It was infectious. He grinned up at her, groaning into the softness of her mons. Vibrations from his voice earned a mewl from her, and mewl became squeak as he pressed his fingers up against her g-spot.

“Oh! There, inside ... I like that ... more, there.”

Not afraid to admit what she liked. If only more people were like her.

She was already wet, and waiting; no need for him to gently warm her body. If she wasn't so ready and hungry for it, he'd spend time warming her up, kissing and suckling her clitoris while gently massaging her lips and labia. If there was one thing Sheryl didn't have any complaints with, it was the sex.

No no, don't think about Sheryl. Don't think about Sheryl, or werewolves, or debts, or your worthless father, or the fact you're probably still digesting a human fucking being. Think about the gorgeous woman in front of you, creaming onto your hand with only the slightest touch. And god damn it, just look at her, smell her, feel her. Her warm juices leaking down your knuckles feel great, and her mix of feminine deodorant and sweat — whatever she was doing earlier had been physically taxing — smelled better than than some fake scent perfume crap.

He groaned into her clitoris once again, and wrote some letters on it with his tongue, as he probed against her g-spot faster. Much faster. Her body started to tremble from the effort, and her breasts jiggled blatantly as she gripped the tub side with one hand, and his shoulder with the other.

She came in moments. Shaking like a leaf, she squeaked between her high-pitched, quiet moans, and squeezed his shoulders. As more of her liquids trickled out, he eased up the pressure of his tongue; no need to overstimulate the tiny nub he was suckling. But, by keeping his tongue on it, holding still while she came, he could tell the tiny redhead was forced to mewl as every movement brought friction against her hyper sensitive flesh. His fingers pressing against her depths forced her to become a shivering mess, though. Each upward thrust of his digits against her g-spot forced mewl after mewl out of her, in a blatant display of surrender.

She started to fall back, and he snapped out his free hand to wrap around the small of her back.

“W-Wait! Slow down ... I...”

He grinned into her smooth pussy, and drew away his face. His fingers within came to a stop as well, but remained within, as he enjoyed the random spasms of her depths around his digits. Warm, and tight, the juxtaposition of her hard, clenching muscles within, compared to the softness of her body, was alluring. Christ, he couldn't wait to get inside her.

He started again.

“Wait! I said w ... wait ... nnnng!” The poor woman had little control of her voice. She set both of her hands on his shoulders, and pushed against him, trying to get him to stop. But her body responded with all the grace of lit kindling. She was sensitive, aroused, and her body wanted to be touched. She wasn't ready to be fingered so soon after an orgasm, but there was something deliciously primal about hearing a woman's exhausted moans, and small, begging words, as they were being forced to cum.

And she did. Poor thing looked at him with begging, golden eyes, and started to shudder all the more as her grip upon his shoulders renewed. To say she was sexually sensitive would have been an understatement, and Eric stared up the valley of her belly to admire her convulsing body and trembling breasts. Wow. It almost felt wrong, touching something as pure as this girl, his cynical and jaded mind unworthy of being near her. Her body came and came hard, her insides squeezing down on his fingers like a vise, causing more juices to leak onto his palm.

He forced his fingers through the clenching, and continued to finger fuck the trembling redhead.

“Eric! St ... stop ... I...”

Again, the sound of her begging for a ceasefire, between mewls and moans of pleasure, set his whole body on fire. If they'd been in bed, he'd have thrown her to her knees, and pounded her hard enough to wake the neighbors. The squeaks and squeals, mewls and whimpers, mixed in with moans, begging, and breathless words were intoxicating. Her words and sounds drove him to finger her harder. Hard enough to make her ass bounce against the tub edge, and her thighs to squeeze his arm in a futile attempt to stop him.

It wasn't until he felt her juices trickling down his wrist, that he stopped.

Poor girl collapsed forward, and he helped ease her down the outside of the tub to the floor, so she could sit with her back against the white tub. She sat there, legs spread, and shivered without stop. Panting and breathless, she looked at herself, where her legs were quaking; he doubted she was used to her body refusing to listen to commands.

"Ye ... bully..." She grinned at him, before her gaze fell back to her own flesh. Still panting, still trembling, her eyes traced the length of her legs, down to her curling toes, before up to her smooth mons. She cupped her breasts with both hands, and hugged herself, cradling her breasts with her forearms as she shivered. "Och, that is ... is so much better than ... doin' it by myself." Giggles mixed with the mewls, as she hugged herself a little tighter and her grin grew.

"You are a shameless woman, aren't you?"

"I have shame! Somewhere. I lost it, haven't found it." Giggling up a storm, she tried to reach out for him, but the trembling in her thighs stopped her. She hugged herself again instead, and bit her bottom lip while looking him up and down. "I'm all tingly."

He licked his lips, and growled. A growl, and a rumble, something close to a loud, bassy purr. He had never make that sound before, but it came out as naturally as breathing. It earned a wide-eyed stare from Fiona, before she reached up to touch her lip.

"... I like that sound," she said.

If she complimented him one more time, he was going to explode. He rumbled again, earning more wide-eyed stares of wonder from the beautiful, naked, and shivering woman sitting on his bathroom floor, her spread legs were trickling with her juices. How much his life had changed. So many downs, so many ups. This one was a very, very good up.

He reached for his pants, and—

Knock knock.

He froze, and looked out the bathroom door into the hallway. Room service? It was an apartment, not a hotel. Landlord, or what-the-fuck-ever they had in a fancy building like this?

“Just ignore it,” he said. “They’ll go away in a minute. And I very much need to get inside—”

Knock knock, louder this time. “Eric! This is Avery. I know you’re in there, open the door.”

Oh god mother fucking, stupid fucking, shit, fuck, god fucking hell, shit, fucking cunt.

Chapter 65

~~Eric~~

“I’m busy! Come back later,” he called out to the hallway. Please go away. He could have life-altering conversations with other werewolves later. Right now, he very much wanted to fuck the small woman giggling and trembling on his bathroom floor.

“Open the fucking door or I break it down,” the woman said. Avery, she’d said her name was. Hadn’t even seen her face yet and he was hating her guts.

Fiona managed to smile up at him, before she grabbed the tub ledge, and forced herself to standing. “I got mine. Ye can get yers next time we meet.”

Talk about a gender reversal, and not one he agreed with. Fuck. Shitting fuck shit, he was hard enough he figured the veins on his cock were going to burst and start squirting blood everywhere.

“Alright, I’m coming!” he yelled.

Fiona giggled at him. “Apparently nae,” she said, voice a whisper as she picked up her clothes, and slipped them on like a drunk girl trying to sneak out before her mistake for the night woke up. With a wink, she stepped into his bedroom, slipped under his bed, and was gone.

Holy fucking shit that was fucking creepy. Could she sneak in whenever she wanted? Supposedly a fellow named Damien helped her find him, and helped her see into Eric’s place; prerequisites for her strange abilities, maybe? She’d said something about Vrall having a special ability, too.

Eric's erection died fast. Girl gone as quickly as she'd shown up, new problems at his door, and he still needed another five or six hours of sleep. Fucking hell. Groaning, he walked to the door, dressed in only his pajama pants. Kat was at the door already, meowing a little, and he scooped her up into his arms before letting another set of problems into his life.

"You must be Eric," an older woman said. A short woman, about the same height as Fiona. Unlike the redhead, the older woman had some muscle to her small frame, and a black ponytail down to her hip. Light tan skin and blue eyes too. Attractive, in a 'could be a young grandmother' sort of way.

"And you're Avery?"

"I am."

Eric grunted. His nose told him she, and the few others with her, were all werewolves. But he didn't need his nose to notice that. Every instinct in his gut, every hair on his body, every hint of their body language all said the same thing: we're wolves, big, bad, unstoppable wolves.

"This," she continued, "is Clara and Carter. I figured you should meet them too, because they're your neighbors. Sort of. Different floor, but you get the idea."

Oh, wonderful. He looked to Carter, a man a bit older than this Avery woman. He was favoring one of his legs; a lifetime of doing that made it easy for Eric to recognize the signals. The long gray hair and beard were intimidating though, like a rocker who'd seen every side of Shitsville, and returned to tell the tale. And his body looked like it was carved out of wood.

Clara was beautiful. God damn. His eyes drifted up and down her body a moment, a reflex she noticed, and returned. He was shirtless, after all. Clara was average height, with the body of a boxer. The dark tan skin, dark brown eyes, and long hair done in box braids, were all terribly attractive, and—Eric, you're just horny because of a severe case of blue balls. Stop thinking with your dick, and calm the fuck down.

“And,” Avery said, “this is David, and this is Noah.”

Eric looked past the two women and Carter, to the two men in the back. David, based on the gestures Avery made, was the closer of the two. A big guy, with broad shoulders and short blond hair, beige skin. He refused to make eye contact; hell, his eyes kept drifting around, or stopping on something random, like the floor or something on the ceiling. He looked young, too young for what Eric imagined was a rough life, based on the scars, clothes, and musculature on the lot of them.

The other guy was pale as fuck, dark blue eyes with a shaved head, and tattoos along his skin. A lot of his skin. Eric's eyes lingered on him a bit longer than the rest of them, picking out shapes and images from the lines that adorned the man's head and neck, and the arms exposed from his black t-shirt. Eric half expected to see images of wolves and shit, but no, the man had tattoos of dragons and mermaids and skeletons and flowers.

There was a theme to the tattoos, at least. One half of him seemed to be more uplifting, while the other had a darker side. Chainlink tattoos — a classic — circled and separated the two opposing themes. A man who took his ink seriously. Eric could respect that, to an extent, until your body started to look like a billboard for manifestos. This guy was riding dangerously close to that line.

“Can we come in?” Avery said.

Eric groaned, and nodded in toward the inner sanctum of his fancy, gilded cage. “Sure.” Sighing, he walked into the living room, and kept Kat in his arms.

The mood was strange. He didn't know these people, and they didn't know him, but they felt familiar. Maybe it was because they were werewolves too, but he doubted it. It was more to do with what they were wearing, their posture, their stances, the clothes they wore and the glances their eyes made.

They reminded him of that Beatrice chick, or even a bit of Jessy. Blunt and honest sorts. He'd take them over that suit Julias he met in the sewer any day.

Avery and Clara got comfortable, taking a seat on the couch. Noah and David didn't seem interested in sitting, Noah stepping to the window to pull the curtain aside and watch the sun peek over the buildings as it rose. David drifted around the apartment, slowly, eyes digging for something. If Eric didn't know better, he'd figure the man was looking for something to steal, or maybe clues to a murder.

Avery motioned for him to come sit on the couch opposite of her. "So, how much do you know about us?"

That you're a cocky, stupid bitch if you think you can order me around in my own apartment. He frowned at her, subtle but piercing, made sure she got the message, and stood beside the TV instead.

"Not much, just that you're the pack in town."

"Julias contacted me," she continued. "Surprising, but I guess Jack was busy. He said you had your first change early last night, and caused a mess."

"You could say that."

"We're not your enemy," Clara said, "you can lower your guard a bit, you know."

Eric redirected his frown to her, and checked Kat. Kat didn't seem very interested in these other wolves; if anything, she looked annoyed, and she gave them the same annoyed glare Eric was giving them. Filled him with pride, and hope, that maybe the dumb cat knew other people better than he gave her credit for.

The man at the window, Noah, shrugged. "We're here to dictate terms for his new life, which he's apparently been getting a lot of, lately. I wouldn't want us to be here either." Evidently, the man was good at putting things into perspective.

Avery rolled her eyes. "I'm not here to ruin your life, Eric. And fuck me, from the little Julias told me before he went under for the day, it seems like you got yanked into the night world by the monsters."

He said nothing. Nothing to say. So, he stood there, and stroked his cat.

"Look, Eric," Clara said, leaning in and putting her elbows on her knees. "You're a brand new Uratha. There's a lot of shit being thrown at you, and unfortunately, you're a problem now."

"Problem?"

"Yes, problem. You have no idea what sort of attention you'll attract from the other side, in your new state. Bewildered, and ... and ... is that a woman, I smell?" She lifted her head and looked down the hallway. "I know that smell."

"... Fiona was here, to check on me. She's gone now." No need to bring up the sexual encounter. Hopefully the smell of sex wasn't too identifiable.

"You're awfully buddy buddy with the vamps and monsters," Noah said.

“No reason not to be. They’ve helped me out.” He gestured to the apartment around him. As long as they ignored the fact it was a cage, and he was under the vampires’ thumb, his new life arrangement was pretty amazing compared to anything they could offer him. “And Fiona is a friend.”

Avery nodded, but the look in her eye made it obvious she wasn’t convinced. “And we have no problem with that. But, we are here to prod into your life a bit. Spirits are going to be a thing now, they’re going to show up in places you don’t expect, makes themselves known, dislike you, or attack you. And with a brand new Uratha like you, they could try and do more. You need to be aware.”

“Thanks for the warning.”

Wrong thing to say, when combined with enough sarcasm you could swim through it. The small woman got up, and jammed a finger into his chest. It was enough to make Kat hiss at her, but Avery glared at the feline with enough malice, Eric could feel the coldness of it. Shut poor Kat right up, and she shivered as she pressed herself back against Eric’s chest, hair standing up.

“You got a problem, Eric? I’ve come here to help you, to keep you from getting killed or worse, and to help stop you from doing more stupid shit like what happened last night. You think the vamps will be a problem if you fuck with the Masquerade? I will personally decorate this city with your innards if you fuck shit up for us.”

Eric stared at the small woman, and gulped. Ok, yeah, he felt that. Something in her eyes cut through the bullshit, and through the wall of sarcasm and cynicism he knew he carried everywhere.

“Alright, I’m listening,” he said. Truce.

“Good.” Avery sat back down, folded one leg over the other, and set her hands onto the back of his couch. Very queenly; and mixed with the jeans and shirt, made her come off as some sort of rocker royalty. He could dig that, much as he didn't want to be dealing with it right now. "So what kind of wolf are you?"

"Kind?"

"You may not know. Not everyone gets the whole suite of info when they change. But you'll get some stuff. Basic understanding of the First Tongue, at least. For example, the First Change almost always brings on a bout of Kuruth."

Kuruth. Death Rage. He winced as the memories hit him, of teeth tearing through clothes and flesh, of the screams of his victims, before they turned into a gargling mess of blood. A flash of an image, of blood squirting from veins with the beat of a panicked heart. Ugh.

"I ... I know the word ... Cahalith."

Avery nodded, and gestured to Clara with her chin. "Clara and I are Cahalith, the Gibbous Moon. So are you, glory seeker."

Glory seeker? Right, the dream had said something about that. Ancient memories surfacing in his dreams, fucking great.

"And them?" he said, looking to the two men.

"Noah is Elodoth," Avery said. Half moon. The judges. "And David over there is Ithaeur." Crescent moon. Spirit talkers.

The meanings came to him naturally; he didn't have to dig them up, like he might if someone asked him to speak Spanish. These words were ingrained into him with all the subtlety of a chisel hammering stone. He wouldn't forget them, couldn't forget them, and he knew it completely.

Avery smirked at him. Fuck, he probably had realization showing blatant on his face.

“Our pack is of the Meninna,” Clara said. That one was a little harder to comprehend. Hunters in Darkness? Meaning came with it, something about defending territory, something about hunting... “Shartha. We hunt the Shartha, Eric.”

The Hosts. Whatever those were. But the mention of them was enough to kick start his heart, getting it pumping a little faster, and earn a quiet growl from him. Something about old things, terrible things, things from before the great divide, things to be feared.

Growling, in front of strangers. Good fucking christ, what happened to him? He knew what happened, he was a werewolf now. But the cliché sounds were so fucking horrible. Or at least, he thought so, but damn, the look on Fiona’s face when he started rumbling in his chest, made him reconsider.

Maybe it was ok to be a bit cliché then, if the results were so acute. And it wasn’t like he didn’t deserve to indulge a little, with all this shit falling on him, shit he didn’t ask for. Instead of brooding about it, maybe—

Finger snaps woke him up.

“Just like a Cahalith,” Clara said, smirking at him and lowering her fingers. Loud snaps, considering she was still on the couch. “Like to narrate your thoughts much?”

Shit. “ ... I do.”

Avery laughed. “And what kind of history do you have?”

“Used to be a fighter, MMA.”

“With cameras on you, I assume? And an audience?” she said. He snorted, and looked down at Kat as more painful memories stabbed him. Cameras, spotlights, announcers, and then fancy dinners, fans, photoshoots. “I can see it in your face. No need to continue, and it’s not fair for me or Clara to pick on you for it. We're guilty of indulging in a need for glory as much as any Cahalith. What's the point in being in a story, or creating a story, if it's not a story worth telling, and retelling?"

Ok, a little admission of guilt on her part, he could appreciate that.

"Alright, so, what's the plan?" he said. "Far as I was concerned, I was going to continue doing what I was doing. Got a good job, good place to live." Money to keep my idiot father in high-grade hospital care.

The two women looked at each other, each raising a brow.

"Honestly?" Clara said. "End goal of the conversation is to make sure you're in the know about Uratha. You need to know spirits are going to make your life hell now, and you need to know you can come to us if shit becomes a problem."

"... and that's it?"

Noah stepped away from the window and stood behind the couch. "We also could use another member in our pack. The Azlu killed one of our kind, so we're down a member. And you know the city well; we're very out of our element, in this city."

A member of their pack. A new family. Ugh, he hated his current family enough, and that was only one other person. The fuck would he do in a pack.

"Not used to cities?"

"A lot of us did work in Tijuana for a while," Avery said. "But that is not the same as here. Most of my pack is not used to city life such as Dolareido's, closer to Las Vegas than anything else. We could use your help."

Monsters asking for his help, and werewolves asking for his help. He was surprised the vampires weren't, too. Then again, Jessy told him he should play the field, since he was strong enough to take care of himself against these inhuman foes. Not foes, come on, they're trying to help you out. It made sense they'd want something in return. But then, that put them on the same footing as the monsters, and no better. The vampires were the ones doing things differently, putting a leash on him while also giving him a new, quality life. Different, but not better.

What to do, what to do.

"I'm not sure what that entails," he said. "What do you want me to do?"

The pack leader cracked her knuckles, and made a sweeping gesture. "For now, nothing. In the future, we'll take you on a hunt, then the Shadow, show you what your new life is going to be like."

"And if I have no interest in joining you on a hunt?"

Noah frowned, but said nothing, and looked to Clara and Avery. Avery opened her mouth, but it was David who spoke up.

"The spirits will find you, Eric. They do not like Uratha, and they will make your life miserable." He came up to Eric, and looked down at him. David was a decently big guy, but the constant distraction he wore in his gaze made him seem shy; even now he didn't look Eric in the eye, his gaze on the floor, and flitting left and right.

"I don't care if—"

"You'll care." David reached up, and set a hand on Eric's shoulder. Anyone else, and Eric would have shoved him away, but this David guy didn't have any of the body language of an aggressive person. Sort of like how, if someone moved their hand slow enough, they could slap you, and you wouldn't defend yourself due to the slowness not triggering a defense.

Eric tilted his head to the side, and tried to catch the man's gaze. No good. David's eyes weren't dodging Eric's, like a shy person's would. They were looking at things Eric couldn't see. Insane? No, he was a spirit talker. He was seeing things, things Eric probably didn't want to see. He was having enough trouble stomaching the mountain of shit falling on him right now; he wasn't going to go looking for more.

“Fine, I'll do the new employee dance, go through the indoctrination crap. But I'm telling you now, I have no interest in any of this shit. I didn't ask to be Uratha, and I have no interest in hunting, or guarding any fucking ... anything. Just want to live in my new digs, bounce at the club, and have sex with the pretty ladies.” Which you fuckers put a stop to.

Maybe Fiona was there, waiting for him, under the bed? No, she'd have left, or the Uratha would have sensed her presence or some shit. Fuck. Fuck!

The four werewolves looked between each other, and let the silence sit there, like a wet, cold blanket. Or they did, for a moment or two, before they all started laughing. Even the David fucker managed a smile.

“Give it time,” Avery said, “you'll feel different.”

~~Jack~~

“This is a pretty great place for a group meeting,” Jessy said.

Damien nodded, and gestured to the telescope he brought. Without hesitation, Jessy put her eye to the lens, and scanned the horizon. Horizon in Dolareido was nothing but a bunch of large buildings, but Damien had found a convenient location on a high rooftop that allowed him to watch many of the apartment buildings Invictus Kindred slept in.

“I can see into my place from here!”

“Yes, you can,” Damien said, face completely deadpan.

Ah shit. Jack raised a hand to hide his grin from the man; poor guy just walked into it, and Jessy turned around to catch it like a frog catching a fly.

“Damien, you son of a bitch. You spy on me?” She grinned a hyena grin, and waited for his inevitably plain and easily teased response.

“I spied, and spy, on everyone, Herrington.”

“Seen me having fun with my ghouls then?”

“I have, yes.”

“Perverted fucker.”

The Mekhet frowned, slightly. “You put your body on display for the whole city. Some are bound to notice.”

Jack raised a hand. “That giant sex spirit did say you got a bit more to you than you let out, Damien.” Ah well, might as well throw a little gasoline on the fire.

“Giant sex spirit?” Jessy said.

Jack nodded, and motioned for her to sit down. The three of them on a rooftop, no one else around, only them and Jack’s two crows on his shoulder. He fed Scully and Mulder some oats, and told the tale of the sheriff’s phonecall, the strange ritual, the trip to see the Begotten, and his journey into the Shadow realm. No need for any details about the mysterious damage, and looming threat over Dolareido; him, Damien, the Begotten, and the sheriff knowing about that was plenty.

It wasn't like he didn't trust Jessy, but the woman wasn't exactly good with delicate matters. If they told her some sort of evil, mysterious force was coming for them, she'd take it as a proclamation of war, and bring it to the council. No, better that others didn't know, so Jack — and now Damien — could continue hunting for the truth in secret.

“Those fucking wolves,” she said. “They really think the other world is theirs, don't they?” Damien and Jack nodded. “Well, fuck that. It's not theirs. You say it's a sister world of Dolareido, a shadow of it? Well, we own this city, and we own its shadow.”

Damien shook his head. “The Uratha would sooner say something like ‘we guard this territory, not you’ or something.”

Yeah, they would. Jack shrugged, and watched as the Gangrel returned to the telescope. “Prince tells me other shit happened last night too. Eric's a werewolf as well?”

She threw her hands up, but let them drop with a groan, before she resumed scanning Dolareido with Damien's telescope. “Apparently! Like, the fuck are the chances? I guess Fiona recognized it in him, before he ever truly became one.”

A raise in the pitch of her voice, and an elongated vowel every now and now, put Jessy's words in a new light. Normally she spoke with a bit of bite; it was her natural state, to bite and snip and snap with her voice, even when just being playful or kind. But there was a softness to her voice now, subtle but there. Julias's training paying off.

“What's the plan with him?” Damien said.

She shrugged, and turned the telescope around as she squinted the one eye with ridiculous exaggeration. “He’s gone from being a useful set of eyes and ears, in a high traffic zone, to being an extremely useful set of eyes and ears in a high traffic zone.”

That was true. Much as Kindred had great eyes and ears, Uratha’s were better, and they had a great nose to go with it. They also had aggressive tendencies to go with them though, which made Eric’s position at the Bloodlust an issue.

“If he doesn’t break someone in half for looking at him the wrong way,” Jack said.

Jessy laughed, and shook her head. A smile crept onto her face, one he doubted she realized was there. It was damn adorable on her. “Jack, you should see this man’s cat. Kat the cat. She is the nicest creature on the planet. You can’t be an asshole if you have a cat like that, unless she was fucking lobotomized. Never had a cat rub up against me like that, you know? Not since being embraced. It was so ... so ... why are you looking at me like that?”

Shit, he was wearing his expression on his face again. Shaking it off, he shrugged. “Nothing, just sounds like you two are getting along.” More than getting along.

“I haven’t seen you parading yourself in front of your window, as of late.” The assassin’s smile returned, and he held out his hand for one of Jack’s crows. With a small nudge from Jack, Mulder jumped to Damien’s hand, and the man fed the crow some of Jack’s oats. Good training, for Mulder and Scully to be comfortable with other Invictus. “Could it be you’re hesitant to engage in your typical sexual endeavors, if you like this man?”

“I gave my ghouls a break, Damien, nothing more. I’m too god damn old to be going one-on-one with any man, or woman.” She sat down beside him on the roof edge, shrugged, and pulled out her phone. Checking messages or news updates, no doubt. But the tiny lip twitches, and quick glances of her eyes in Damien's direction, gave her away. "And besides, aren't you interested in Fiona? I know she likes Eric. And I know firsthand she's a firecracker."

They didn't need Jessy's words to prove that, not with the unusual sex spirit's words still clear in their minds. It was clear in Jack's mind anyway; no doubt it was for Damien too. The man looked down, tiny frown on his lips as he offered Mulder some more of his oats.

"You know I'm a man of the cloth, in a way, Jessy?"

"You didn't take a vow of celibacy." She shrugged, reached out, and offered Mulder some rubs of his breast feathers, before rubbing the back of his head. Scully, envious, pecked at Jack's hand, and bit him a little too, hard enough to earn an ouch, before he rolled his eyes and began to scratch her, as well.

"Can we talk about something other than sex?" Damien said.

"Can we?" Shrugging, Jack set Scully back on his shoulder, and Mulder flew over to join her, opposite shoulder. It earned a smile from him, when his crows willingly came to him. Animalism had been the tool to establish their first link, but since then, he only used it for communication. The crows came to him on their own, happy to help in exchange for food and attention. "It's Slut City, right? Sex kind of sneaks its way into everything we do."

The assassin glared at him, and Jack had to do his best to not grin like a giant jackass. The Julias grin, the grin the man gave whenever he let a conversation prove him right. Dance, puppets, dance.

"Unless the hunters hire a prostitute," Damien said, "and that somehow becomes a lead for us, I don't see it helping us in our main objective."

“All work and no play makes Damien a dull boy,” Jessy said. Heh, nice dodge on the Jack name in the original quote. “Much as I’m all for focusing on the job, because the job currently involves saving our asses from getting murdered, I do think we should always take time to enjoy our second lives, Damien.”

“I—”

“And hey, I know you’re a priest boy, but you didn’t take a vow of celibacy, and far as I know, your religion believes in embracing being a monster, right? Scare people into the awaiting arms of God, or whatever. Well, Fiona’s a monster. Should be fine to fuck her silly, right?”

“ ... I—”

“And yeah, I know, fucking a monster doesn’t really help in your religious goals, but maybe if you learned to relax a bit, you might recruit more followers. I mean, how many have joined your church since the Prince let you start practicing again.”

Ok, maybe it wasn’t a good idea to tease Jessy; she didn’t take it very well. Girl played dirty.

“I have yet to tell others the church is open. And the great cathedral is Maria’s home; I must contend with that barrier, that the place I will give my sermons is the place one of the more terrifying Kindred sleeps.”

Good to know it wasn’t just Jack that was scared of Maria. He knew that already, but hearing it confirmed, especially by one of the few ancilla Kindred of Dolareido, was reassuring.

“Mulder and Scully reported seeing a woman that fit Azamel’s guess as the shaman’s description,” Jack said. “But I’m sure a lot of women fit that description, in Dolareido.”

“Better than nothing.” Jessy took some oats from Damien, offered her hand, and the two birds pecked from it for a moment. “That ritual must have been a terrifying sight.”

“Yeah, that’s putting it lightly.”

“Nice of the sheriff to share the info. Good to have friends on the inside.”

No way was the sheriff his friend. He doubted anyone could be, considering the man might as well have been made of stone, or ice, or both. But, the first night Jack slept with Antoinette, on the journey down the tower, he still remembered what Daniel had said to him: ‘Be kind to her, young Kindred. She is more fragile than you know.’ The words were carved into his brain, never to be forgotten. But if they were true was another question, because, yeah, man was stone, and probably thought everyone was fragile. If that was the reason Daniel was helping Jack more directly, to keep Antoinette happy, well, he was cool to roll with that.

Would Antoinette be able to handle Jack dying, was not a question he wanted to think about, and probably part of why Daniel was helping him.

“It is,” he said at last. “I’m pretty sure I’m not the focus of Daniel’s efforts, but, yeah, nice of him to share. He’s going to keep looking, and so’s Natasha, for more leads linked to the ritual. Best we can guess is it was for information, and now we know it probably has something to do with spirits, and Black Blood. Why this shaman working with the hunters needs to ... do those things, with the pictures and the sacrifice and ... I don’t know. And Azamel said the shaman has done this ritual in the past, in different cities. Is Black Blood elsewhere? I doubt it; seems localized to Dolareido. The red wraiths seem involved, so maybe they’re elsewhere? Or ... or did someone come to Dolareido with the shaman?”

“That’s the conclusion I would come to,” Damien said.
“Something must have come to Dolareido with this shaman woman, if Azamel was telling us the truth.”

And she probably was. The more they found out about the shit happening in Dolareido’s shadows, and the Shadow World evidently, the more it seemed like Jacob had been working with other-worldly entities for some time. The shaman, whoever she was, brought more insanity into Dolareido.

City Night had mentioned other names. Red Tide, and Street-Tail King? Maybe one of them.

“ ... do you guys ever miss when things were normal?” he said.
“What was it, something like a year ago, I walked into Bloodlust, scared as all fucking shit because I ran into the Prince. She made me sit down with her, and flirted with me, just to watch me squirm. I remember before that, going to the Invictus ball, and being scared shitless of talking with Viktor. I managed, but it was rough. Not long before that, I’d awoken from a frenzy, and found I was on a rooftop, with the corpse of a woman ... Mrs. Pavala.” Pavala. Christ, that name grabbed his mind, dragged it through the blood-soaked mud, and made sure to sink some sharp rocks into his soul before he managed to pull it back out. “Honestly? I’d take all that shit, over this. I’ll take dealing with scary vampires, and still struggling to stomach drinking blood, over fucking Cthulhu and kin nesting in our city.”

The Gangrel raised a brow, and leaned in a bit toward him. “That include the werewolves and monsters? Figured, since you keep getting drawn into this intermediary role, you have to have a soft spot for them.”

He threw his hands up. “I do! Even Avery, a hard bitch, and Azamel, a colossal bitch.” Damien raised a brow, and Jessy laughed. Yeah, calling them both bitches was uncalled for; and it didn’t really fit his normal dialect. Bit of Jessy coming out of him, there. “Because they’re still people, deep inside. We are, they are, we still got a fucking soul inside our guts, and it means something. We can talk, we can communicate, we can settle our differences with fucking words!” He got up, and started to pace. Just like on the phone, something about focusing on the words forced him to get up onto his feet, and move, so he could feel the feedback of solid mass beneath him. “Sometimes I feel like I’m the only person on this god damn planet who remembers we can always communicate, even with people we’d consider to be monsters. People, they’re people. Maybe not normal humans anymore, but still people, capable of fucking reason, and logic, and if we can just find a way to communicate, we can make progress!” Mulder and Scully stayed with him, and for a brief moment, Jack had to wonder what the image of him was like, pacing around with philosophical thoughts falling out of him while two crows adorned his shoulders.

“ ... and Angela?” Jessy said.

Fuck. Leave it to the damn Gangrel to shatter his dreams with a fucking sledgehammer, as if they were nothing but thin glass. The mention of that fucking abomination of a human brought him to a standstill. He lowered his head, clenched his fists at his sides, and bit down on his teeth until he heard his jaw crack. The name was fire on his spine.

“I’d love to be able to talk to her, and get through to her. But I looked that psycho in the fucking eyes, Jessy. I’d have an easier time breaking through an arctic glacier with my god damn face.”

She laughed. Hell, Damien smiled, too, but it was short lived humor. The silence that followed was painful, and Jack sat down again before he resumed feeding his crows.

“She sounds like Lucas,” Damien said. “A true believer in her cause, and also a twisted soul. There will be no communicating with her, and if the opportunity presents itself, she will delight in torturing those that get in her way.”

Jessy nodded. “A zealot. You won’t be able to talk her out of anything, based on how you described her. Was your report objective?”

“Yes,” Jack said, sighing as weight started to pull him down. Angela was the perfect counter example to his views. “It was. We’re all in agreement here, there’s no talking with her or Jeremiah. The other hunters though? They came here with those two, and I bet we could come to some kind of common ground.”

Or could they? He remembered the words in his mind, clear as water, when he found the strength to break free of his capture. Hunters, kine, were lower on the food chain. There’d never be peace, not even a truce, as long as that continued, as long as Kindred required kine blood to survive. No one would ever accept being lower on the food chain, when they had every reason not to be, too. Billions of humans with shotguns and flamethrowers would be more than a match for all the Kindred of the world.

He had to wonder if hunters tried to prove their existence before, and just gave up. The media could spin anything to mean anything, and vampires had their fingers in that world, deep in it. Political matters, vampires were a part of it. Matters of global economy and trade, vampires were a part of it. Matters of religion, well, he was sure vampires were involved somehow. They were the puppet masters, and they were everywhere. It was probably true that hunters used to try and prove the existence of vampires, and stopped trying when vampires came to positions of power in the human world. Or maybe it’d always been that way, and hunters were screwed from the start. Perhaps with the dawn of the cyberpunk era, the Masquerade would prove too fragile to survive, Antoinette’s fears come true.

Capturing a young vampire like him wasn't too difficult, was the issue. He, and others his age, were Masquerade liabilities. He doubted a Begotten or Uratha could be captured, but young Kindred were a different matter. He'd hate to be the reason the Masquerade was violated to the point it led to a global extermination of his race. That would majorly suck.

"What are you going to do about Terra Den?" Damien asked.

The Gangrel shrugged, went back to the telescope, and began another scan of the buildings. "I'll pay them a visit, in a more official capacity. Michael will come with me, maybe Julias too, and we can scare them straight. As for Montoya, I'm sure that snake is trying to push things along in underhanded ways. We should pay him a personal visit." She stopped turning, and whistled before licking her lips. Probably some people having sex in clear view.

Jack raised a brow. "We?"

"Sure. He's yet to meet the rest of the new Right Hands of the Invictus. Should be interesting."

---

---

~~Antoinette~~

"You were correct, Daniel."

She stood upon a rooftop with Daniel at her side. The man was a master of the cloak of night, and had no trouble keeping them hidden within the invisible veil. Anyone glancing their way would find their eyes sliding off of them, and their simple minds refusing to process the two people standing in the open.

She envied the Mekhet and Nosferatu clans their skill at the discipline. It was a skill she could use, of course, but she would never come to the same mastery as the other clans.

The two of them stood in the moonlight, and watched one of the outdoor restaurants. A quaint and homely little place, bordering between the Carthian and Invictus half of South Side. Less kine in suits or fancy dresses, and more people in jeans in worn t-shirts. It was an appealing distinction Antoinette had long realized, that people with less money walked differently, and talked differently, than those that had money to waste. They were all liars, as was the norm; only her little Ventrue was an exception to that painful truth of reality. But at least those with less money did not wear their lies on their clothes or in their gait.

With a sigh, she squinted her eyes, folded her arms across her chest, and stared at Avery. The small woman sat in the outdoor seating of the archaic-but-charming restaurant, eating what looked to be a blue-rare steak. A man sat with her, someone of similar age to her, at least in physical appearance. Avery was far older than she looked, perhaps a hundred years old, and the man she ate with was likely fifty. But the man carried his age well, with his long salt-and-pepper hair coming in waves to match his finely groomed, trimmed beard. He may have only been wearing jeans and a simple red shirt, but it was plain to see the man took good care of himself. He was likely built well under the clothes too; she expected no less from any Uratha, than for their sexual partners to share in a desire for fitness. Vigor was to be expected from werewolves, after all.

Had the old wolf found a lover? The signs of attraction were blatant, and so too were the signs of familiarity. The two chuckled as they shared small talk, words Antoinette could not hear from her perch, and they shared joyful glances too. Perhaps more telling was when the unknown man touched Avery's hand, and she didn't pull away.

The man was eating spaghetti. Antoinette doubted Avery could stomach such a meal.

"Reports say Avery visited Eric yesterday morning," Daniel said.

“Do we know the outcome of that conversation?”

“No, but I’m sure she will tell Terry soon, and we will learn after that.”

She nodded and sighed. Having Terry as an intermediary was proving fruitful; it lessened tension with the wolves and monsters, to the point Antoinette felt they were not both on a collision course with the Kindred of the city. But it did create a delay between events, and Antoinette learning of the details. In the past, she would walk down to Avery at this very moment, and ask to know what had happened, which would no doubt lead to an argument. It was better this way, frustrating as it was.

The two stood and watched, as Avery giggled. To see the small woman of steel giggle was interesting, and telling. Perhaps there were more feelings for this simple human than lust. Coming to Dolareido, meeting a man, and becoming involved in a sexual relationship was expected of anyone that came to her city, but a romantic one was a different matter entirely. And for one in Avery’s position, a weakness. Defeating others through indirect means was a Kindred’s greatest skill, after all, and any Kindred in Dolareido would be able to use this man against Avery. A simple matter, to dominate his mind or turn him into a slave with majesty. A simpler matter, to feed him some blood, and render him an infatuated thrall.

Such acts were cruel, malicious, and a part of the Danse Macabre. Play the game, or be destroyed by those willing to stoop to its disgusting lows.

She smirked as she watched the smile on Avery’s face, but despite herself, she could feel the smirk begin to soften. To smile in such a way, a genuine way, where the muscles of the face include the eyes, and the whole of the body leans into it, was a powerful thing. Melts the heart. It made her long for Jack’s touch, to feel his body hugged tight to hers, feel his lips upon her breasts, find his gaze, and stare into his soul.

Annie, grow up. You are not a child, and your relationship with Jack is already many months in age. It is stable. You are a fool to let your mind melt with a simple thought of the boy. You can melt all you want when he is in your arms, but between such times, you must harden yourself. Her city was in increasing disarray, and it was time to take a more active role in settling it.

“I wonder,” she said, “about the things my love shared with me last night. There is a connection between Black Blood, these red wraiths, the hunters, and Jacob.” And she most sincerely did not want a connection of anything to Jacob. Why could her old friend not simply let things be, and enjoy his elder years? The damn fool was worse than any dragon, with his unending need for information and power.

Daniel nodded, and adjusted his glasses. “And Azamel’s warning?”

“Oui. But, whether Jacob is connected directly or indirectly, to such a grand threat, is an important distinction.”

“You could ask him.”

She chuckled, and combed some of her hair over her shoulder in front of her with her fingers. “Do you think he would tell us the truth? I am sure you offended him when he found you in his ritual chamber.”

“Our ritual chamber. It is our city, after all.”

So it was, officially. Jacob never truly agreed to that rule, that Antoinette was the Prince. In Jacob’s mind, he was equal party to ruling the city, and he simply chose to leave affairs in her control. If he decided to contest her on that, the fallout would be disastrous.

But, Jacob was her friend. A strange friend, but a friend, and his counsel was both appreciated and wanted. The issue was, how with every new discovery, every new piece of information that came into her possession, she found more reasons to not trust the man. Now, he was teaching his new students the power of crúac, according to Daniel, and likely involving Black Blood.

She would have to speak to the spirit, and soon.

And then, of course, there was the squid-like spirit she had summoned, that had told them of Maria. A strange coincidence, for the necklace to summon such an entity with its resonance. Talk of Maria could have been a mislead, a goose chase, but she doubted it. Even if the necklace had been tampered with, and the results of the summoning a consequence of that tampering, it did not cast much doubt onto the spirit's words. Spirits were strange entities, and the dance of lies was not one she suspected they usually joined in.

Oh Maria. Please, do not destroy yourself in some insane pursuit of resurrecting your fallen lover. If Antoinette had to kill Lucas herself this time, it would be horrible for the Nosferatu, a blow to her soul twice. The Prince doubted any vampire of serious age could survive such pain doubled, in so short a span of time.

In addition, the concept of resurrection itself was foolhardy, insane, and liable to lead to the deaths of others. An old tale, and one that always ended in disaster. What dark corners of the world would someone obsessed with bringing back their lover go to, was forever on her mind. She half expected Jacob had walking, talking, fake Minervas in a basement, made of body parts the man had collected from graveyards. The two elder Nosferatu were at the top of the list, for such audacious courses of action.

If the spirit's words were not about a futile attempt at resurrection by Maria, but rather, Maria's attempts to determine the details about Lucas's death, then that was less a threat to the city, and more a threat to Terry. The details were unneeded, as Maria had no reason to not believe Damien's explanation: Lucas died at Antoinette's hand, and that was that. But Antoinette could not blame the woman for seeking more details about her love's death, either. If Jack had died, Antoinette would not rest until she had enough evidence to recreate the scene in its entirety, with exact detail.

If Maria was the cause of Azamel's warning, Antoinette would have no choice but to kill her, once she could confirm Maria was engaged in dangerous activity that risked the city. She did not want to do that. As much as Maria was a cold, harsh woman, she was one of the wiser Kindred Antoinette had dealt with.

"Thinking?" Daniel said.

"Oui, mon ami." She smiled at him, and motioned for him to follow. A small amount of strength was all it took, to send both Kindred flying through the air, back toward her tower. Once they were a few blocks away, they dropped down into the street, while Daniel's cloak of night kept their descent hidden and casual.

"While Jacob flirts with the other side," he said, "and perhaps, so does Maria, we ignore Michael and Garry. Those two dogs are bound to bite each other, sooner or later."

She sighed, and turned to watch the crowd they walked past. As they headed deeper into South Side, the dresses and suits returned, the lies that people wore on their skin, perpetuated with money, money, and more money. Prime real estate for any Kindred looking to trick, exploit, or flirt their way to a Kiss. Of no concern to any Daeva with some years under their belt, though, who naturally gravitated toward owning several ghouls, and only drinking from them.

She smirked at no one, and raised a hand to touch her lips. Her mind truly was wandering, drifting, as of late. The squabbles of Michael and Garry were low on her list of worries, but that was because her mind refused to focus on the real threats, instead, preoccupied with the invisible ones looming overhead.

“You do not believe Julias will keep the Carthians and Invictus from conflict?” she said.

“I don’t. I admire the man’s conviction, in dealing with the hunters, and the Begotten, and the Uratha, but he forgets the troubles at his feet.”

Ah yes, another thing she had in common with the man.

“I wonder,” she said, “if Garry will take advantage of the rising stress, and create a scenario the Invictus will lose territory or power in. Avery is his friend, to some extent or another, and if Maria is truly entering dark waters, then Avery and Garry may both have reason to confront her. And if they confront her...”

“Then the Carthians and Invictus might have a reason to restart the violence of old,” Daniel said. If that happened, she would be forced to bring the two covenants in line; or worse, side with one.

“What has Michael done of late?”

“Some Invictus were seen in a Carthian bar, getting friendly with kine.”

A precursor to feeding. It was an easy way to test the waters, to show up at a location, and through simple flirtation, see what kine responded. And, to see what Kindred responded. If no Kindred did respond, the Kindred encroaching on territory would feel emboldened to continue violating territory, and perhaps begin discreet feeding. Like cliques in high school, poking each other, or the machinations of warring Greek states, testing each other’s borders. Juvenile idiocy that neither kingdoms nor people never dropped as they aged. Infuriating.

“As much as I would like to scare the children straight, please continue your search for the threat Azamel has warned us of. I will mention this in the next Primogen meeting. If something happens between the Carthians and Invictus, then I will insure they comply with my wishes from now on.” Even if it meant smashing their faces in with her fists until they both agreed to be good little children.

“It’s been a long time since we’ve meddled in their affairs directly. You sure you don’t want to do this a little more hands off, like with Viktor and Tony?”

“Perhaps. Not Michael, or Garry, or Avery will handle their situations with delicacy. Jacob and Maria will, but I do not trust the outcomes they will create. I will have to predict their motivations, and set them on a path of failure.”

“You could let them be.”

She stopped, and looked at the man. His face was still as always, almost cold, and he adjusted his glasses as he stopped as well. To let them fight would mean damage to her city, and moreover, a threat to her little Ventrue. But at the same time, it could be a way for the two covenants to settle differences; violence, despite conventional wisdom, was a profoundly effective means of settling many problems.

But it was not without its problems. The two covenants might find themselves in situations where they could damage the Masquerade, on a whim of self preservation. Or they could damage her city, in order to gain advantage in their idiotic cold war with each other, elevating it from cold into something far worse. In the modern age, that meant a combination of both cyber warfare, and tools of war beyond the easily controlled. Flamethrowers were easy to construct from any kitchen in the new world, and not her primary concern. She was far more concerned about the explosives that could be attached to the underside of vehicles, or new age sniper rifles that could be fired from miles away.

She longed for the days of old, where the worst she had to worry about was a musket, and maybe a torch. Back in such a time, she, Jacob, Daniel, Tony, and Viktor had found this quaint little village, and had had no trouble setting up their plans. She broke the minds of the men and women with silk words and the majesty discipline, turned their leaders into dotting servants, and created safety for her fellow Kindred. They built their underground tunnels over years, and created a quiet utopia where their different covenants could co-exist. When Carthians came, she accepted them. When the blasted Lancea et Sanctum came, she accepted them. It was a utopia for all.

Sometimes, she wondered if that was a mistake.

“You’re going to think yourself into a hole,” Daniel said.

“Oui, mon ami, c’est vrai. But it has served me well. These are ... difficult problems, not only in complexity, but philosophically.”

The sheriff shrugged, and they continued along. Just two people, drifting amongst the growing crowd of citizens walking the sidewalks, with cars driving by at slow speeds, and with bright lights from casinos and clubs lighting their way.

“You and I could wipe the Carthians out,” he said. “Only Garry would pose a challenge, and I think I could take him out before he realized anything was up.”

“Do not hurt the man, Daniel.”

“What about Michael MacDonald? He’s just as much a mindless mutt as Garry. They’ll be at each other’s throats, despite all these problems falling down on us.”

“If we cannot keep the peace between the covenants, then we ... then I will have failed in my greater mission, old friend.”

The sheriff frowned. For a stone statue to frown was as powerful as a sword cutting through metal. “Or they’ll have failed you.”

“That ... may be a detail of truth, but one that reality does not care about. It is on me to insure these fools cooperate, and I will see it done, one way or another.”

---

---

~~Julias~~

“I killed a child.”

The two women stared at him, and gulped. As Kindred got older, they dropped that reflex; not so with Jen and Triss, not yet. The two women were young enough to gulp, and stare, and look terribly uncomfortable by the reality of what he’d just said.

Two secrets down, three to go.

“H-How did that happen?” Triss said.

The three of them were in his mansion again, but not the negotiation room. This time, the descent into pain and misery would be had in one of the living rooms, where softness could do its job, and lighten blows. His thralls had changed the curtains, moved the couches, changed some of the chairs, so now the room was gold and white motif. He sat on the couch with Jen, and Triss sat in a chair backward, facing him, only a few feet away.

“I was young, and trapped in a cellar. I had to hide from the sunlight, and I’d suffered serious wounds in a fight with the Carthians.” The memory ran up his spine, like fire with a vengeance. It wasn’t Garry’s fault, but the man hadn’t done much to prevent the incident either. “Healing during the day drained me to almost nothing. When the sun set, a kid came down into the cellar around the time I woke up. I went into a frenzy, and jumped him.” Eyes. He could remember the eyes, more than anything. Shock, fear, rising into a climax of terror, as he sank his fangs into his young neck.

Fiddling with her crow necklace, Triss looked down, and stared at it. Easier than looking at him, he supposed.

“Never killed a kid,” she said.

“Good.” He leaned forward, and let his arms dangle over his knees. “Took years to let that go. And I never really can.”

Jen tilted her head to the side. “Why?” She was wearing something more conservative than usual, a suit with a skirt, but with the blouse fully done up. The body language was different, too. She didn’t lean forward as much, no longer showing off her impressive bosom. And her eyes held a little anxiety to them, as if something had spooked her. Something probably had. Maybe Julias’s words, but he suspected it was more so something Jacob had done.

“Sometimes the memories start to cut, especially when I get very hungry. State-dependent memory, maybe? Probably not, being undead and all, but...” He shook his head, and looked down. Everyone was looking down at this point, and it made it easier to let the words resonate. But he didn’t let the silence sit for any longer than a minute. Any longer and the air would turn to ice. “It was a very long time ago, and, time heals all wounds, right?”

He chuckled. They didn’t.

“I hope it does,” Jen said. “So, um, my turn?”

The Nosferatu shrugged. “We really don’t have to do this, you know.”

“No no, this is good.” Sighing, Jen reached out, and pat him on the leg. “I’ve killed a youngling as well. But, not a human. A Kindred.”

Well, shit. “When did that happen?”

“Five years ago. A Kindred, not even a year embraced, had recently come to Dolareido, alone. They were testing the waters, learning about the covenant balance here.” She put a fingernail to her lip, and nibbled on it. “She cornered me. She had a problem with the Circle, and thought she saw an opportunity to ... impress the other covenants, I guess, if she took me out.” Shivering, she got up, and started to pace the room. “It got ugly. By the end of it, we were tearing chunks out of each other with our fingers. It ... it lasted a while, and killing her was ... was brutal.”

Triss got up, got behind Jen, and hugged her, setting her chin on the woman’s shoulder and looking at Julias. “That doesn’t sound like you.”

“No, it doesn’t. It stuck with me for a while. I can still remember her begging for her life, when I finally got the upper hand. But, I could tell she was just looking to make me hesitate, find an opening to take advantage of. I ... bashed her skull in, with a pipe.”

The unfortunate truth about killing a Kindred: it was a messy, brutal affair. They had a nasty habit of surviving ordeals that would kill a kine a hundred times over, as long as their body was mostly intact, and the head was still attached. Jack had gone through such trials, and he’d seen first hand Antoinette being put through much worse, at Damien’s hand. If Jen’s first experience with the amount of punishment a Kindred could take, was bashing in another Kindred’s skull until they were dust, a young Kindred’s too, he could sympathize. That was a painful lesson to learn.

He smiled as he watched Triss. The girl was hugging Jen from behind in a protective manner, chin still on her shoulder, and the side of her jaw rubbing into Jen's neck. It was terribly cute, and Julias doubted Triss realized she was doing it.

The two of them looked to him again. Yeah, his turn. Secret number three.

"I hate the Begotten." Just tear it off, like a band-aid. A giant band-aid stitched into the skin.

"You do?" they said.

"Yeah. I can't shake it, I can't get rid of it, and Jack called me out on it. The Invictus are treating the Begotten more harshly than the Uratha, and not without just cause. But it's more than that, and the more I analyze it, the more I have to agree with Jack on this, that I'm being unfair. I really can't stand the Begotten."

Triss shook her head, pulling it back from Jen's a bit. "But ... but you're Julias. Silver lining guy, right? Superman. You look for the good in everything."

"Sorry." He leaned back on the couch, and offered his best apologetic shrug. Hollow. Sighing, he ran his fingers back through his hair, and let the motion roll his head back until it rested against the back of the couch. He could stare at the ceiling, that was less painful than the look they were giving him. 'What, Julias, hating someone?' Yeah.

Still a long way's away from Viktor's capacity for hatred and malice, but the path was there, in front of him. He didn't like it.

"Why?" Triss said.

"Because they're the worst of what we paranormals have to offer. They're devoted to one thing and one thing only: their hunger. Azamel will destroy this city if she had to pick between it and her hunger. Much as everyone likes that Fiona girl, I'm sure she would, too. And Athalia, her inability to manage who she is, her hunger, led to this situation with Angela; a child abandoned by her mother, after exposing her to the darkest pits of horror this world has to offer.” He forced his head back up straight, and made eye contact with the two women. “We struggle, and we struggle, to stay above our blood lust, and to be better than the mindless, hungry predators these hunters think we are. We’re nothing but a plague of leeches to them, feeding on humans, and ... and we’re better than that. But no one will ever believe that with creatures like the Begotten showing just how bad paranormals can be.”

It was their turn to sigh. The secret about killing a child was easier to let go; it wasn’t his fault, it was a vampire’s instinct to frenzy when starving. But the comparison to a monster was there in that frenzied action, and his hatred for the monsters made the hatred for himself, and his inability to stop himself from killing a child, poignant. He couldn’t escape the self loathing, no matter how much he analyzed it, defined it, or intellectualized it. Such a horrible cliché.

What was the expression? Nothing’s a cliché when it’s happening to you.

“Superman is human after all.” Triss let go of Jen, stepped around her, and sat down on his lap, legs to the side. “Well, vampire. You know what I mean.”

“Thought you’d be upset with me,” he said. “I know you’re friends Fiona.”

She shrugged, leaned in, and rested her forehead against the side of his neck. “You make good points, and I’m sure a lot of Kindred feel the same way. I don’t, and I know Jack doesn’t, but we’ve been seeing them from a different side. So I get it, but maybe you should talk to Jack about it? He’ll be more upset than we. And maybe talk to Fiona too, so she can show you it’s not all bad.”

Nodding, Jen came over and sat down on the couch as well. “I wouldn’t feel too guilty about that secret, if I were you. Legitimate concerns.”

Well, color him surprised. It wasn’t in his nature anymore, to be hateful, to hold grudges, or to discriminate. He forever strived to accept others for who and what they were. Kind of had to, to not drag himself down a path that led many Kindred to suicide. But, he just couldn’t do that with the Begotten. As per usual, he was being over-dramatic, and turning his thoughts into comically sad compulsions.

Maybe Triss was right, and he should change the paintings he kept around the mansion. They were all dark, melancholy, somber, or otherwise depressing to most people. He thought they were peaceful or interesting; maybe he kept them around because they were familiar and comfortable to his psyche, instead.

“Three down, each,” Triss said. “I think that’s enough confessions for today.” Shivering, she raised a leg, and gave Jen a kick in the shin, earning a yelp from the Ventrue. “This is your fault! You two stubborn fucking oxes have to make a god damn game out of ... of private shit! You know this is the sort of stuff people slowly learn about each other through intimacy, not fucking poker?”

Jen and Julias shrugged, in unison. “Fair game.”

“Yeah, uh huh, sure it was. Fuckers.” Rolling her eyes, Triss set her forehead back to his neck, and sank against him. He reciprocated, setting his hands around her, one for the small of her back, while the other sat along her lap. “Jacob got into a fight with the werewolves, last night. Art and Matt.”

“He did?” Shit, of all the trouble he needed growing in Dolareido, Jacob’s tense truce with the werewolves was not something he wanted ruined. “How’d that go?”

“They lived, and walked away,” Jen said. “Tash stopped them. It was very cute, and endearing, seeing that little girl hold off two Uratha. Transformed Uratha, I might add. Very ... sexy.”

Julias laughed, but he noticed the glint in Triss’s eye. “You two got a thing for wolves?” he said, smiling.

Busted. The two girls looked at each other, and then away in random directions. Jen whistled, and Triss tried. The poor crocodile woman couldn’t whistle worth a damn though, and Julias laughed again as he stroked the small of her back.

“I don’t know about Beatrice,” Jen said, “but, seeing how colossal those beasts are, and knowing some men are inside those giants of muscle and animal aggression? Arg, so tasty.”

“I dunno.” The Nos got up, and slid into the groove between Julias and Jen on the couch, so she was squished between them. “I mean, I looked, and I didn’t see any place for a penis. Just fur, and a pelvis groove.”

Julias choked on a laugh, and buried his face in his palm. “Maybe I should ask Jack to ask Avery if Uratha are capable of sex when transformed.”

“Could always ask Natasha, too.” Jen winked at him, and reached out for the Kindred between them. Triss chuckled, and leaned back, giving clear access for Jen to start feeling her body. Triss was in her usual tank top and jeans, so Jen had an easy time lifting up the shirt to expose Triss’s breasts.

Triss didn’t stop her. If anything, she was hoping Jen would do that; might have felt guilty about winning the poker game and leading to this painful result, and was using sex to make him feel better. He’d be lying if he said it didn’t work, and Triss knew it. Hell, it was a part of how they met. She knew he was a playboy, and she wanted him to take her on a date.

Best thing to ever happen to him.

He turned on the couch a bit, and set his elbow against its back, so he could hold his head up against a fist while he watched. “I suppose this is a metaphor for a very strong positive to being a Kindred.”

“What positive is that?” Triss said as she slipped off the tank top. God damn, that body, the pierced nipples, the tattoos, the lean physique and defined musculature. His other hand reached out, and found her abs. Fingers traced along the muscles, before sliding down under the waistband, down her smooth mons, and to the piercing over her clitoris. She blushed life, silent permission for him to continue.

The crow skull necklace dangled between her breasts, and he found his eyes locked onto it. Something about it, about bone, about a dark pagan symbol sitting against her bare skin on her beautiful body, was delicious spice to her aesthetic. And when contrasted against her tattoos, it fit so damn well.

She moaned, and turned to face him. A girl with tattoos and piercings, topless, in jeans and combat boots, was damn hot. She knew it, too. And ever since she'd gotten over her hangups about her crocodile mouth, she embraced her sexuality with reckless abandon. At this point, Julias was along for the ride; and so was Jen. Good. He liked her, the sneaky devil.

Triss turned completely toward him, picked her legs up, and set them on his lap, as she leaned back onto Jen's lap. Her legs on his lap, her torso on Jen's lap, and her butt on the couch, Triss reached down, undid the button and fly of her jeans, and wriggled them off. Laughing, Julias helped, and grinned down at the woman sitting and lying between the two Ventrue. Soon, the only piece of clothing she was still wearing, was an itty bitty string thong, black.

“The positive thing,” he said, “is, we can always let time do its thing, and heal wounds.” There was no denying his past was some seriously traumatic stuff, filled with events that would have left any normal person buried in guilt or PTSD. Maybe it didn’t heal the wounds, but time blurred the details, and dulled the edge of the painful memories. Time let him get over his shit, and enjoy the here and now; specifically, the nearly naked, beautiful woman half on his lap, and the still-dressed woman across the couch.

“I hope that’s true,” Jen said. Her hand near Triss’s head began to play and tug on the woman’s piercings, while the other reached across her torso, down between her breasts, and followed the snake tattoo down to her crotch. The thong was small enough, it left her smooth mons almost completely exposed, displaying how the snake tail reached all the way to almost touch Triss’s clit hood. Jen slid her fingers under the thong, and began to caress the woman’s clitoris, as her eyes raised to Julias.

Those eyes. He knew those eyes. Those were his eyes. Smart, devious, and proud. As the woman began to massage Triss’s clitoris, and earn some moans from the deadly woman between them, it was him Jen was looking at. He returned her gaze, doing his best to read her. The two of them were sharing deadly secrets with each other, to get to know each other better; like wolves exposing their necks to each other. And now, she was preparing Triss like she was preparing a steak. Or like a wolf, offering a meal to the pack leader. Offering her to him, if he was reading her right.

He kind of liked that.

Triss nodded, teeth exposed from the smile Jen’s massaging was earning. “Me too. Cause, I mean, I look at Jacob, and he’s still torn up about Minerva. He hides it well, but yeah, it’s in there, digging at him.”

Nodding as well, Jen slid out of her suit jacket, and started undoing the buttons of her shirt with her left hand, all while Triss still had her head in her lap, and all while Jen continued to pamper her clit with her right hand. The Nosferatu moaned, closed her eyes, let her head fall relaxed on Jen's lap, and set her hands onto the couch. Spoiled princess was going to lie there, do absolutely nothing, and be coddled.

Or, so he thought. But Jen pushed Triss back up into her seating position, and stood up. Both Julias and Triss raised a brow, and watched Jen, as she stepped around and stood in front of him.

"I think I can fit in another secret," she said. And, winking at the two of them, she started to undo her skirt.

He shook his head. "You don't have to, really. I mean we—"

"This is important, in a way." Grinning all the more, she inched down the skirt, until the creature was standing in only her underwear. Black, and beautiful. Not underwear to wear for comfort, but something to wear to drive someone crazy when exposed. But, it was a bra, more than she usually wore underneath the shirt. And damn, it made her large breasts look all the more amazing. Even Triss whistled at the sight of them, or tried to, failing horribly.

"Important?" Triss said. Before Julias could say more, Triss reached across his lap, and started undoing his clothes. Quite the reversal, Triss being the target of attention, and now suddenly it was him, all at Jen's whim. Girl would probably take charge in every bout, if he let her. Maybe he should do that more often.

"Mmhmm." Jen came in closer, and got down on her knees. "I haven't been sleeping with my ghouls, as Triss knows. I said it was because, why would I bother, when I'm getting plenty here?" Between his knees, she reached out for the waist of his pants, and tugged on them. "But, actually, I'm not sleeping with them, because I don't want to ruin this. I've gotten really comfortable with this arrangement, and dare I say it, happy." With Triss's help, the two girls worked to get his pants and underwear off, before Triss got to work on his shirt.

"Trying to worm your way into my man's heart, too?" Rolling her eyes, Triss helped slide his jacket off, and then his shirt. Naked, the couch fabric was soft and inviting against his bare skin. Not as inviting as the two women though, especially with their underwear on display. Triss in a thong, though predictable, was divine. And Jen wearing a full lingerie ensemble, was like watching a runway model getting down on her knees. It hypnotized him, and Triss too.

"A little. This ... isn't a fling, is what I'm saying. I don't want it to be." The Ventrue smiled up at him, eyebrows sinking as the weight of her words fell on the room. Once Julias blushed life, her eyebrows raised again, excitement filling her as she climbed in closer, and closer, until her breasts were pressing to his thighs.

A single glance down at the woman's large breasts, wrapped in the black bra, pressing against his thighs and shaft, was more than enough to send fake blood pumping into his length.

Maybe it was because they were sharing secrets, exposing their necks to each other, that Julias felt touched. Or it was the extreme arousal. Or it was the way Triss hugged his closer arm, and held it to her body, while she looked down at Jen with what looked like intrigue, and perhaps a little empathy. Jen glanced up at her too, and the two of them sighed with some gravity in their voice.

Something was happening between the two women, in their personal lives, that was increasing their friendship. The glances shared were similar to the glances Julias shared with Jack, when they both remembered something, or traded info without using words. He would have been jealous, if it weren't for how both their gazes drifted back to his own, and both girls offered him melting eyes.

“I wouldn’t want it to be a fling,” he said. “You’re good for Triss. And ... hell, you’re good for me.”

Both women let out long, girly sighs this time, straight out of a bad romance movie. But they laughed it off, and earned some chuckles from him too. Once the dreamy, cheesy, but sincere noises had passed, Jen reached out, took his cock, and guided it to her lips.

“No wonder guys like blowjobs so much,” Triss said. With a small mewl, she hugged into his side nice and tight, pressing her breasts and their hardened nipples, nipple piercings too, into his arm. He lifted it, and she laughed before slipping under the arm, so she could press herself into the side of his chest instead, all while looking down at the woman between his legs. “I mean, god damn, look at that slut and her slut eyes, gazing up at you from between your legs.”

He did at that. Jen stared up at him, raven hair coming down her shoulders, matching the mascara and eyeliner she used to make her eyes pop. Blowjob eyes, Triss called them. Jen didn’t disagree. Moaning onto his cock, she buried the swollen glans of it with her lips, coating it in fake saliva. Her hands reached out, and settled onto his outer thighs near his hips. And, despite himself, he set one of his hands on one. Maybe a little too romantic, but Triss didn’t mind, and she joined in, setting her closer hand onto Jen’s hand as well.

“You call me a slut,” Jen said, rolling her eyes. “I think you like sluts, considering how many women Julias had been with when you went on a date with him.”

“Maybe I do.” Laughing, Triss slid her closer hand across his thigh, off of Jen’s hand, and onto the base of his shaft. Her fingers and claws squeezed it, causing it to stir inside Jen’s mouth. Sparks of pleasure ran down the length, causing Julias's inner muscles to flex; the bliss of the woman's lips and tongue on his glans was extreme. "And, I really like his big dick too."

Jen chuckled, kept her lips on his shaft, and began working her head back and forth enough to drag her lips along the swollen tip. The hot, sensitive skin sent waves of pleasure down the length, each spark enticed and enhanced by Jen's suckling lips and playful tongue. Warm, wet, and delightful, the Ventrue moaned onto his cock with enough deliberate vibration for him to feel the buzz down through its length. Triss took it as an invitation to grow more playful, and she worked her hand up and down his length a little faster, grip tight enough to massage its hard girth.

He could tell they were trying to soothe him, considering how painful his secrets were. He never considered himself to fit the wounded soldier stereotype, but there was definitely something drawing the two women to him. And he'd done enough brooding and self loathing to satisfy a couple lifetimes; no reason to not enjoy himself. Time heals, like he said. Half lie, half truth.

And it was very hard to not enjoy himself right now. He sighed relief, and relaxed back into the couch, as Jen bathed his cock's head with her tongue. Around, and around, she licked the contours, the base edge, and chuckled around it when he let out a small groan. God damn, she knew what she was doing.

He looked over at Triss. She still had her closer hand around his cock, but she'd slowed her movements, distracted by her other hand and how it had reached under her tiny thong. Fingering herself. Her snake eyes were locked onto Jen, her mouth slightly open, and little pants sneaked out of her as she fingered herself faster. As usual, she put him to shame, with how quickly her body lit up, and his eyes drifted down her body to watch her abs crunch as her orgasm approached.

The Nosferatu hugged into his side, and let out a few whimpers, as her juices started to soak her thong. And through it all, she watched Jen, and kept her grip on his cock as she did.

Only when Jen started to slide her mouth down further, did Triss finally move her hand out of the way, setting it on Julias's thigh inside. Triss, shivering in post-orgasm, and Julias, shivering in impending orgasm, both looked on, as Jen worked his length into her mouth. She lowered her chin closer to the couch seat, and kept her eyes looking up to them, to give her mouth and throat a straight line to fit his cock as she eased it into her.

When her lips found the base of his shaft, she shifted around on her knees, got a little more comfortable, and set her hands onto his hips to hold onto him. Her tongue bathed the length of him from underneath, and her muscles gripped and squeezed around every inch, milking at every inch of him. She was an expert.

Triss stared on, locked on, more hypnotized than Julias. And she started masturbating again as well, faster, enough to make Julias's body shake slightly with the impacts of her hand against her insides. And through it all, Jen held onto his waist while she massaged his cock with her lips, tongue, and throat. Her gaze drifted between him and Triss, and she smiled around his girth as Triss's forceful fingering soon had her legs spreading, nudging against the two Ventrue, as she squirted a tiny stream into her thong.

Jen lifted her head, lowered a hand down to grip his cock, and rolled her eyes as she looked at Triss. "Twice already girl, and he hasn't cum once yet."

"Fuck you, this is hot." Triss slid off the thong, and kicked it away, exposing her smooth pussy and the tiny piercing hooked into her clit hood. Trembling, but apparently done for the moment, her other hand took his cock again, and netted with Jen's fingers.

The two of them squeezed and massaged his length, as Jen set her lips back onto his glans, and suckled. Waves of pleasure started up from between Julias's legs, tingling bliss, each earning a flex of his inner muscles, which caused a gush of the warmth to flow up his length, and into Jen's mouth. She moaned onto his cock, on purpose, using her suckling lips and vocal vibrations to fill him with pleasure. He started panting, struggling to handle the stimulation, as the two girls continued to stroke his cock while Jen kissed away each gush of his cum.

Getting milked by two women at once was a very good reason to enjoy the moment.

When only a few drops remained, Jen licked them away, and stood up. Triss and Julias looked up, and watched the beautiful woman slide off her underwear, and climb onto his lap. Triss shifted aside a few inches, to give room for Jen to fit her leg in between them, and the Ventrue took it. Straddling him, Jen reached down, took his still-hard cock, and guided it up to her wet folds.

She winked at him, and squeezed her soaked muscles around his girth on the way down. He groaned, louder than he meant to, and sank into the couch, as both he and Triss watched the busty creature — still in the amazing bra — lower herself down onto him. When the lips of her pussy devoured him to the hilt, and he felt his glans pressing against her depths, it was Jen's turn to moan, and she did it with her mouth closed.

She set her left hand on his shoulder, and held up her right to her mouth. Winking at him again, she opened her mouth, and let the heavy flow of his white cum pour into it.

“God damn,” Triss said. “What're you ... shit!” The Nosferatu let out a squeak, as Jen set her cum-soaked hand against the woman's bare, spread, smooth pussy. Chuckling, a touch maniacally too, Jen massaged Julias's cum against the girl's cunt, and lower, soaking Triss's ass in the white fluid, before she began to push two fingers into her.

Triss spread her legs a bit more, and hugged Julias's arm as she edged her pelvis forward. Jen had more than enough access to sink her middle and ring fingers into Triss's ass, palm up, while squeezing Julias's shoulder. Comfortable, she began to finger Triss's insides, using her arm muscles and pushing up against Triss's insides, while rocking her hips back and forth along Julias's lap. Good at multitasking, to say the least.

Julias's arm closer to Triss hugged her, pulled her in, and kept her snug to his body and Jen's leg. His other arm reached out, and found Jen's breasts. No use in denying it, Jen had large breasts, and the subtle bounce her movements gave them were hypnotizing, along with the bedroom eyes she was giving him and Triss. Laughing, she reached behind her back, undid the clasp, and leaned forward to let the beautiful garment fall to the floor. Free of their cage, her breasts jiggled gently with her swaying, and drew the eyes of both spectators once again.

Jen started fingering Triss harder, enough to make her ass bounce against the couch lightly, and to make some wet, slapping sounds. He could feel it. With Jen sitting on him, and his cock buried inside her to the hilt, stretching her open, every muscle clench she made in her effort to finger Triss was a muscle clench he could feel. Tight, hot, squeezing like a vise. He hugged Triss tight to his side, and made a show of cupping and massaging one of Jen's breasts, half to enjoy the feel of its large softness molding to his hand, half to draw Triss's gaze to it.

Jen leaned in, and put her forehead to his shoulder and neck, turned so she could kiss his jugular and face Triss at the same time. "I like this."

“What’s this?” he said. With Jen so close to him, his groping hand slid behind her instead, and held onto the small of her back. Despite himself, his hand slid higher, and pressed against the middle of her back, encouraging the woman to press herself into him. Were it any other woman, it’d be crossing a line into romantic territory; romance was reserved for Beatrice. With this strange woman though, it was something else, something he wasn’t used to.

Friendship? Maybe. Maybe not. It wasn’t the right word, didn’t fully describe the strangeness this Ventrue had created.

“Indeed, what is this?” Laughing, Jen moved her head up to his lips, and gave him a quick kiss. A jolt of guilt ran up his spine, but it vanished as he listened to Triss’s moans. A glance her way showed she watched it happen, and if she had any complaints to make, they were lost in the onslaught of mewls that escaped her, as Jen increased the speed of her fingering arm.

Triss held onto Julias’s arm, and Jen’s leg, as she squirted onto Jen’s palm.

Julias looked down at the lean woman’s body, the tattoos of her skin, her abs crunching, and her small clit-hood piercing shaking, as Jen fingered her ass. Any other girl, and Julias would have expected to see them playing with their clitoris, or fingering themselves. Not Triss, who had no trouble cumming her brains out from only Jen’s fingers fingering her backside.

God damn, that was hot.

“I’m not entirely sure what this is,” he said. “You’re like a lovely parasite that’s attached to Triss and I.”

“Aw, you think I’m lovely?” Completely ignoring the parasite part, she chuckled again, and nudged her nose against his chin, before leaning down toward Triss. The Nos was exhausted, panting, and watching the two Ventrue with lazy, drifting eyes. Unlike the small peck Jen gave him, she set her lips onto Triss's proper, and plucked on them with her own, while looking at Julias through the corner of her eye.

"I ... I think..." Still shaking, Triss pushed her head forward, nudging it into Jen's and pushing her away a few inches. "I think ... you're ... you're both Ventrue, and this is sort of, like, third friendship, third business contract, third sex. And—"

Jen didn't appreciate Triss's contribution, apparently. She put her lips to Triss's again, and buried her in a kiss, as her fingering hand resumed its work. Defeated, Triss collapsed back against the couch, into the nook between Julias's body and arm, and looked to him with half closed eyes.

He grinned at her, hugged her tight to his side, and watched her body as the pleasure started to ripple through her again. Completely defeated. Poor woman's eyes closed, and she whimpered into Jen's mouth, as the Ventrue fingered the girl's ass hard enough to have the large, toned curves of Triss's butt rippling against the couch. Each upward slap of Jen's hand hit toward Triss's stomach, hit toward those spots Julias knew well, and earned a tiny squirt of gushing cum from his love. And then another, and another, each splashing against Jen's palm.

"I think," he said, after staring for a little while longer, "that we should probably stop trying to define 'this'. I love Beatrice, and you haven't damaged that, like we were worried you might."

Giggling, Jen lifted her head back to him, and set her lips onto his neck. "You're fucking a couple witches, Mister Mire. A little open mindedness about sex goes a long way." She eased her fingers out of Triss, and brought them to his arm. Squeezing his bicep and soaking the muscle in Triss's cum, she pressed her breasts into his chest, and nuzzled her nose and lips into his jawline.

“I like to think I’m pretty open minded,” he said. Girl of his dreams sitting next to him on the couch, recovering from a slew of orgasms brought on by fingering from their friend, who was currently riding him? It was pretty outside the norm.

“You are. Fuck, turns me on so god damn much.” She kissed his shoulder, and turned her head enough to look Triss’s way, as she began to grind her hips down against him. “And, you may think the secrets you’re sharing paint you in a worse light. They don’t.”

He smiled, took a deep breath, and relaxed into the couch, as Jen’s grinding earned his second orgasm. Soaked muscles clenched on his length, working back and forth, leaking juices onto him, as his own juices flooded her taught depths. The feel of her heavy breasts pressing to his chest was heavenly, but it was the hard squeezes of her cunt along his swollen glans, that had him struggling to hold still. Each motion she made earned a gush of his cum, until it was trickling down testicles, along with her own juices. Warm, thick, it filled his length with pleasure ripples that spread out from his cock, and down into his pelvis.

And through it all, she kept her head buried against his collar, face turned to look at Triss. The Nosferatu was watching, exhausted but watching, and smiling at them. She reached out too, and set one hand onto Jen’s ass, squeezing and massaging it, and helping Jen grind back and forth on Julias’s cock. The pleasure sparks were almost endless, and despite the orgasm he could tell Jen was trying to recover from, she kept grinding on him to milk him, pleasure him, please him. She wanted to make him happy, and Triss; and she was doing a damn fucking amazing job.

“I think,” Triss said, nuzzling into his side, and leaning in toward Jen to kiss her again, “that we’re all just teenagers, exploring our sexual desires.”

Jen didn't agree, apparently. She sighed and shook her head. "Unfortunately, we're not teenagers. Our bosses keep dumping responsibilities on us."

He shouldn't say it. He really shouldn't say it. Every instinct in his body was telling him to go with Triss's view, and bask in the moment like a stupid teenager who only thought of sex sex sex and more sex. Forget the shit tide coming, stop thinking about it, and enjoy the tight confines of Jen's hot, dripping insides.

"I'm my own boss," he said, "and ... I guess I'll dump some responsibility on my own shoulders. Let's talk about Jeremiah, and Angela, and the ritual about Jack."

And so began another night of sharing evidence, theories, and strategies to be brought up at the Primogen meeting. Ah well, the moment of respite was nice while it lasted.

Chapter 66

~~Jack~~

He hated waiting.

People handled waiting differently, and with different degrees of stress. Some people shut down, to save mental energy. Some people shut down because they couldn't handle the stress in general. Some people became antsy, anxious, and volatile. Some people panicked, and started spiraling down ridiculous trains of thought that were nothing but self destructive.

Jack became a planner. When he had no choice but to wait for the event, the action, the conclusion, the whatever, to happen, he planned. He was a good planner, and he enjoyed it. Spreadsheets of his old diet, before he was embraced, calorie counting and such, were a joy to craft. Writing out flowcharts of his various career choices, and where they could lead him, were too. It helped relieve and manage stress when he had to think about something coming his way that he had to deal with, but wasn't here yet.

These hunters were coming, and no matter how much he looked, no matter how much Mulder and Scully looked, no matter how much the Right Hands looked, or anyone else looked, no more details availed themselves. So, he did the only thing he could do. He went to Bloodlust.

“Hello Eric,” he said. “Long time no see.”

The man looked him up and down, before shrugging, and leaning against the wall. On the first floor, it was noisier than upstairs, more people around. Jack didn't like it, and from the way Eric was looking at the people around him, he didn't like it either. Strange job choice then. Jack was almost tempted to ask him how he became a bouncer, but the look on his face suggested he shouldn't.

“Jack. Good to see your guts on your inside.”

Heh, yeah. Jack looked down, pat his stomach, and slid into the booth beside Eric. Empty, now that the couple that'd been in there were leaving. The werewolf probably scared them off.

And he was a werewolf. Jack hadn't been in a position to analyze him, the first time he saw him, and apparently the man had never transformed until recently. Whatever it was his first transformation had done, it'd changed him. He looked different, smelled different, and moved different. There was something animalistic to his stance, aggression, defensiveness, territorial maybe. Or Jack was letting his knowledge taint his view.

“How's it going?” Jack said. Yeah, small talk, with a guy Jessy warned was not interested in small talk. This was going to go well.

“What do you want, vamp?”

Damn. Spot on. Jack could relate to the antisocial tendency, but not the aggression. The fuck had Jack done to earn the glares Eric was giving him now?

“Checking in, to see if you've seen anything unusual.”

“Like those four hunters? No, nothing like that.”

“Would you know?”

“I'd smell them.”

Jack raised a brow up at the man beside him, and took a sniff of his own. Lots of smells, lots of sweat and alcohol and sex and drugs, but he had no way of separating it from the more subtle smells. Man must have been a blood hound werewolf.

“You sure?”

“If not, I’d see something. I’d notice if something was off about someone, and if they weren’t something with fangs or claws, I’d know that that person was dangerous, and probably a hunter. I’d report it. So you can fuck off and—”

“Whoa dude, whoa. Not here performing any kind of check to see if you’re doing your job, Eric. Just here because ... need a place to wait for the shitstorm.” Not entirely true, but good enough to progress the conversation.

Eric grunted, a noise closer to a growl than Jack supposed the man meant to make, because his eyes opened wide after, and he shook his head out. “Fine. Shitstorm?”

“The hunters are going to do something. We need to find them, beat them to the punch.” Sighing, he shifted in the seat so he was facing out of the booth. It set his feet near Eric’s, so Jack didn’t have to yell; not like he wanted the nearby kine to hear. The pulsing music and background noise of sex and chatter was only effective cover to a point. “Probably something involving me.”

“You? Because you’re dating that tall, white-haired chick?”

Jack smirked up at the man. Tall, white-haired chick. He couldn’t tell if Antoinette would be upset or amused at the description. Probably both.

“Maybe. And because I know Azamel. It’s her the hunters are after.”

“Right, granny in the rocking chair.”

“Well, I’m sure after that daring rescue you made, they’ll be coming for me, other vamps, and maybe you too.”

Eric shivered, and ran his fingers along his shaved head. Jack knew the reflex well; buzzed head versus bald head though. Could be fun to try that haircut, and since he was Kindred, he’d only have to keep the change for a night. Eric raised a brow at him. “Why are you staring at me?”

“Oh, uh, no reason.” Chuckling, Jack looked to the door of Bloodlust. There was Damien, and Jessy, coming in to join him as planned.

He watched Eric in the corner of his eyes, and waited to see if his hunch was correct. Once the man looked toward the door, and saw the two vampires, a small crack showed through the wolf’s hard exterior. Chin raised, arms relaxed, Eric watched Jessy, and as she came in closer, the crack of a smile on his face grew. Eventually, the man realized he was smiling, and wiped it off with his hand, but Jack saw it all, through the pulsing lights of Bloodlust.

Jessy liked him. He liked Jessy. No issue there, as long as Avery didn’t create a problem, and get Eric dragged into it. Worst case scenario. Well, he was paid to think of the worst case scenario now, especially as a Right Hand.

“We’re heading up, team meeting,” he said, standing. “Wanna come, keep people from getting too close?”

“The fuck you having a team meeting in a club for?”

“Let’s us keep an eye on things,” Damien said, stepping in close enough for the conversation. Man had good ears.

“Yeah.” Once she was in close, Jessy walked up to Eric, tapped him on the shoulder, and winked at him with all the subtlety of a firecracker. “Plus, think of it like a work meeting, right? We’ll grab a snack while we’re here.”

“Never worked in an office environment, or anything with team meetings.” He shrugged, and smiled for a moment when Jessy winked at him.

“Come with us,” she said. “Be a lookout.”

He managed a snort laugh, a quiet noise Jack had heard many dogs make. Sort of like a canine’s way of putting an exclamation point at the end of a sentence. Jack wasn’t exactly well versed in the man’s normal body language, but he assumed it used to be more human; it wasn’t anymore. Every glance, every breath, every tap of his finger on his own bicep, and every motion he made, had the calculated, prowling depth of a wolf’s movements. He might as well have been Clara or that Carter fellow.

And as the three Kindred went upstairs, he followed, up the stairs and to one of the booths in the back. Dark, secluded, where the music wasn’t as noisy, and where the kine weren’t. Back in the day, Jack would have found it a tad scary, maybe even spooky, to hang out in the shadowed corner of a night club. Now, he gravitated toward it naturally. Give him some mascara, an earring, a trench coat, and he’d wear them without irony.

Well, maybe a little irony.

The three Kindred sat down, and Eric stood by the booth. Took his job seriously, or knew to go with the flow to prevent issues. Jack made sure to sit down on the outside of the booth, beside the werewolf. Time for the part he wasn’t looking forward to.

“Jessy tell you about me?” he said.

Eric raised a brow as he looked down at him. “Not sure what you mean.”

“He means,” Jessy said, leaning over Jack’s shoulder and grinning at Eric once she was in the booth, “that Jack here is your new goto, sort of.”

“Did you three come here to have a meeting, or talk to me?”

Jack sighed, and shrugged. “Both, in a way. I need to know what Avery told you, what the Begotten told you, and ... well, what your plans are.”

Every muscle on Eric’s body tensed. Whatever Jack said, it was nails on chalkboard to this guy.

“My plans?”

“Your plans.” Ok, at least he was talking. Jessy warned him the man was a ‘bitter fucker’, her words. She also said he seemed to appreciate honesty. A fine rope to walk, as the truth was usually a tough pill to swallow, and in a bitter jackass, was liable to get spit back out. “If you’re going to join Avery’s pack, that’s fine, I talk to her regularly anyway. If you’re not, and you’re going to hang with the Begotten, you—”

“Why does everyone think I’m going to do anything with them?”

“You’re friends with Fiona, aren’t you?” he said. “And Jessy found you in the sewer with them.”

“That was ... that was an accident.”

Accident or not, the mention of Fiona turned his eyes downward. A glance Jessy’s way showed a knowing smirk from her though; which, from Jessy, likely meant some sexual manipulation. Ugh.

“Well, alright, if you don’t have any plans to side with—”

“What’s with this ‘side’ crap? You guys at war? Not what Avery told me.”

This guy liked to interrupt him. Jack didn’t like that. A quick glance to his companions showed some different opinions. Damien was annoyed, but not over the interrupting; probably just hated having to waste time talking to this extra thorn in their side. Jessy was smiling, and likely thought the man’s antics cute. Blatant bias. If he was anyone else, she’d have the man’s head pinned to the table while she drilled orders into his ear.

“No, we’re not at war, but...”

“But we could be,” Damien said. Stone cold face on, the man put his elbows and fists on the table, and glared at the werewolf standing beside the booth. “When we all thought you were kine, you’d be nothing but a worthless bystander in any potential conflicts. But now you’re not.”

“Jessy gave me the run down.” The man snorted again, and leaned against the wall before folding his arms across his chest. Defensiveness. He thought he was being attacked, but not from Jessy. It was Jack and Damien putting the man at odds. What did that woman say to him, before now?

“I’m sure she did.” Damien looked at her with the same cold face, and Jessy rolled her eyes in return.

“Whatever.” The werewolf shrugged. “My plan is to keep working here, and help out if those hunters show up.”

Jack shook his head. “What does helping include? You understand if those hunters show up, or anyone else does with a similar agenda, helping could mean listening to our orders, when we tell you what to do?” The man didn’t seem to get it. Another poor sap sucked into a world they didn’t want to be a part of, and their desire to stand on the sidelines was not acceptable. He was too valuable as an ally, and too dangerous as an enemy, to ignore. “That could mean doing whatever Avery tells you. If things turn weird on us, it could mean doing whatever Azamel tells you. It will likely mean us telling you what to do. And that isn’t simple either. The Carthians might ask for your help. They might want you to help with the hunters, or they might pull you into some shit that will force you to make enemies of the Invictus; or at least piss them off. It’s a complicated world of darkness, Eric, and we’re just trying to stay afloat.”

Ok, rant over. It was enough to pierce this asshole’s shell though, and get through to him a little, based on the man’s expression. Pensive, contemplating, his eyes fell to the booth, and his head tilted slightly as thoughts undoubtedly rolled around in his head.

And Jessy winked at the man.

That wasn’t good. Jessy was talking to this man, and talking to him about more than just sex, if she was winking at him about this topic. What game was she playing? Much as he wanted to believe she was too stupid for the Danse Macabre, too stupid to be playing a sneaky game of her own, he doubted that was true anymore, not since he’d become a Right Hand and started seeing her intelligence shine through.

“I can’t just ... tell everyone who comes to bother me to fuck off?” he said.

Jack laughed, and shrugged. “You could try. It might even work. But we’re talking about strong entities, people with the individual power to pursue staggering agendas. They rarely suffer a neutral party. They’re with us or against us types.” He put his hands up in surrender before Eric could interrupt him again. “If you want to try and remain neutral, fine. My sire told you to talk with Avery, and we’ll defer to her about this. If she’s ok with you being neutral, then I hope you can remain neutral.”

Chuckling, Jessy leaned in, and pushed Jack in the shoulder, always buddy buddy. “Except, of course, if you try and play the neutral card, you’ll default to working for us Invictus, since we write your cheques. I assume you want to keep the job and the nice apartment and shit.” And, again, a wink.

She might have been smarter than she seemed, but the lack of subtlety was a nasty weakness. Her brute strength might have worked on weaker Kindred, and she was damn powerful, but Jack was starting to grow worried the woman was going to get them all in trouble. Azamel wouldn’t swallow her bull shit, and neither would Avery.

“The Prince told me a neutral party Uratha used to live in the city,” Jack said. “Said she was a ghost wolf, or something.”

“Ghost wolf?” Eric raised a brow, before a small smile came in. “I like that.”

The four of them looked to the stairs across the second floor of the Bloodlust, as a couple of women walked up to join them. Fiona, with her pale skin, freckles, and frizzy red hair, could not have looked more different than Athalia, with her dark skin and long black hair. Short versus tall, and curvy versus skinny, too. What they were wearing was just as contrasting, Fiona fully embracing the club label Bloodlust carried, despite its lounge nature. Athalia wore some torn-up, tight jeans, and a tight white t-shirt, while Fiona wore a dress, a green dress, straps tied around her neck, and plunging cleavage showing off her impressive breasts.

Jessy whistled, and motioned for her to come sit beside her. Giggling, Fiona jumped in place a little — boing boing — before hopping over to sit beside her. Damien was trapped between Jessy and Jack, but based on the look on his face, he preferred that to being closer to the other people joining them. Fiona getting into the booth put him on edge, and it put Eric on edge, though he seemed a little more interested in looking at her, than looking away from her.

Fucking high school romance drama crap. At least they kept it to their body language, and didn't put any of it to words.

"You, you fucking little devil, looking fucking gorgeous in this." Jessy leaned in, put a kiss on Fiona's neck, and earned more squealing giggles from her. Ok, maybe not so high school.

"Keep it in your pants," Athalia said. "Not here to fuck."

"Could do you some good." Jessy, laughing, put another kiss on Fiona's neck, more deliberately this time, and she earned giggles weren't as girly anymore. There was a moan in there.

Talk about awkward. Either Jessy was a brain dead moron, or she was trying to pull some reactions out of Eric and Damien. Why, he didn't know. Could be trying to push Damien into fighting for Fiona, so she could have Eric to herself? Or vice versa ... or she could be trying to engage a foursome.

Jack choked on a laugh. A foursome as Damien's first foray into sex. The ramifications on the poor man's mind would be worthy of poetry.

Athalia wasn't amused. She sat down in the booth as well, and offered Eric a small nod. "Hey dumbass. Still alive I see."

"Yeah." The man shrugged, and forced his eyes away from the sight Jessy was creating. "You all here to talk about me?"

Damien shook his head. "No. We're here to talk about the hunters."

Fiona, finally free of Jessy's lips, nudged Athalia with her arm. "Tell them!"

Rolling her eyes, Athalia leaned in, and motioned for them all to, as well. “Saw an old woman fitting Azamel’s description of the shaman. We think she’s somewhere in Devil’s Corner.”

“You sure?” Jack said. “They brought me to North Side, when they caught me. Figured they’d have a base or underground hideout or something in that half of Dolareido.”

“Or they’re smart, and wouldn’t bring you close to their HQ.” Athalia shook her head, and took a moment to look around. “Sure it’s safe to talk here?”

Jessy nodded. “Yeap. Built by vamps, for vamps. The only people who could be eavesdropping would be other paranormals.”

Athalia frowned, and continued looking around. When she caught Jack’s eye, he shrugged at her, and offered her a small smile; like Jessy’s, but gentler. Bloodlust was a great place for what it was meant for: a place for Kindred to get an easy meal. It turning into a good meeting spot was a strange turn of events, not the intent. They could trust Eric’s nose though, to spot the hunters. And it wasn’t like the hunters would come waltzing into the center of Invictus territory anymore anyway.

Several of Jessy’s ghouls were around, too. And once the vampires, werewolf, and monsters were all together, the ghouls happened to start getting busy with some of their girlfriends. Their moans were background noise, joining other moans, groans, and thudding crap music from the rest of the club. No one would be able to eavesdrop through the noise, anyway.

Athalia’s gaze lasted on the sexual display longer than Jack thought it would. Maybe his talk in the Black Hall sank into her a bit more than his impression gave him. Something told him the woman could use a good lay; Jessy, specifically, told him that, on several occasions.

“Devil’s Corner,” Damien said, “is problematic to deal with. Lot of places to hide. A lot of people to make deals with, too. I wouldn’t be surprised if they’ve recruited, without explaining to who they’ve recruited exactly what they’re up against.”

Yeah, it was a messy place to handle. “I’d prefer to keep casualties to a minimum,” Jack said.

Athalia scoffed at him, but said nothing. Good. It was starting to get irritating, how she absolutely refused to give him or any Kindred an inch. How much of a paradise did Dolareido have to be before she realized Kindred weren’t all just looking for blood and slaughter.

Paradise by a vampire’s standards, maybe. Begotten weren’t having as easy a time of it, thanks to Julias and the others.

“We can try,” Jessy said, “but when push comes to shove, getting rid of these hunters takes priority. Besides, we don’t know if they’re hiring. That’d be dangerous to do, don’t you think? Hire random strangers. Might give away what they’re up to.”

“They’re good at hiding what they’re up to.” Nodding, Damien pulled out his phone, and brought up a map of the city. “Killed Barry here, kidnapped Jack here, brought him here, and then disappeared when the Invictus showed up. We found the weird ritual here, and —”

“Weird ritual?”

Everyone looked up over their shoulders, to see Eric looking at what they were doing. If the man wanted to remain neutral, his reflexes didn’t agree. Curiosity killed as many dogs as cats.

“Sure you want to know?” Jessy said, smiling at him.

“I ... you know what? Sure. If these hunters are doing something, I should know too. They know my face, know I helped Fiona. I wouldn't be surprised if they decided to shoot me on sight.”

Yeah, Jack could agree with that. Nodding, he leaned back a bit, so the man could see past him to Damien's phone easier.

“Here,” Damien said, “in a storage locker in Devil's Corner, we found a ritual. An occult ritual. Your imagination will probably end up closer than you think. Blood symbols, a fresh skeleton, the works. The peculiar thing was, we found drawn pictures of a body being dissected, rigorously, every detail. And, attached to the skeleton, we found a face.”

“My face.” Kind of Damien to leave out that detail, but Eric was right. The hunters considered him a threat, so there was no reason to not fill him in on the pertinent details. Hopefully.

“That ... is some seriously disturbing shit,” Eric said. Jack could almost see the man's brain collapse with the new knowledge that occult rituals existed, and likely worked. And from there, his brain would spiral Fibonacci style, adding more and more possibilities to the ever expanding pattern. The world of darkness was filled with so many new possibilities, each darker and crueler than the last.

“You're telling me.” Laughing again, Jessy leaned in close and motioned for Eric to lean in as well. “But what's truly disturbing is this was something done by hunters. Freaky shit like this? Vampires do this sort of stuff, the witch ones. Begotten are ... well, you know them.” With an eye roll and a flick of her wrist toward the two monsters, she continued. “And I'm sure you Uratha do some weird stuff. Dance in the moonlight naked, and devour the raw flesh of your prey, or some weird insanity, right? But humans doing that, is weird. And...”

And horrifying. Vampires, werewolves, monsters, they lived and breathed such absurdities, because it was in their nature. Even vampires, relatively normal and nearly human, compared to the other two, got their hands dirty with some pretty disturbing shit. Humans had no business getting into that stuff, and if they could, what the fuck was wrong with them? Like cannibals in the woods, disturbing on a level monsters like Jack and his companions in the booth could never hope to reach.

Be afraid of vampires, of werewolves, of monsters, sure. But being afraid of humans was like being afraid of your neighbor. It was sickening, and he didn't wish that fate on anyone. No wonder that episode 'Home' from X-Files was so fucking scary.

"So, what's the plan?" Fiona said, leaning in. "I ... I dinnae ken if ... I dinnae ken if ye should go there, nae alone. B-But if ye go as a crew, they might catch ye, and it'll be dangerous for other reasons."

Damien nodded. "If only it was as easy as simply walking through the city and removing them. Unfortunately, they know our weakness, and they seem to have tools to deal with us."

"Your elders could—"

Jack raised a hand, cutting Athalia off. "If shit hits the fan, or we get solid evidence, they'll step in. But elders don't risk their lives on a whim. Much as I hate that we have back up we can't use, I can't ask for Garry or Maria or Michael, or the Prince or Jacob, or even Julias, to throw in their weight until we have something better to go on." And besides, elders weren't gods, they weren't invincible. He saw that first hand, too many times. Much as he hated that he knew they'd refuse to help until they had better evidence, he hated that he agreed with them all the more.

The covenants needed their rulers, or they'd collapse in a vacuum, or to each other. What a bitter truth.

"I'll talk to Isabella," he said. "Or Hella, rather. I know Hella likes to dig into Devil's Corner occasionally. So does Vicky and Parker. I'll talk to them.” They ran some sex holes in Devil’s Corner, so maybe they knew something.

The rest of the meeting went about as well as planned. With a new target, Devil’s Corner, as the focus of their search, they had something to work toward. Athalia and Fiona would provide some support, and Jack was to come to the Azamel if he found Jeremiah. He could report back what he found to Julias, and see what they decided. It’d be what Jack figured, though.

Like Antoinette told him, learn to predict his superiors. Just, he knew they’d also try and take advantage of the situation in ways he couldn’t predict; the Danse Macabre was a bitch.

---

~~Eric~~

“You look different,” his dad said.

Eric shrugged, and turned to look at the TV. Baseball again.

“You don’t.”

His dad shrugged. Probably where he got the habit from, when combined with the look-away. Delightful way to say ‘don’t fucking care’. “How’s your new job treating you?”

“Good, and bad, I guess.” Eric leaned back in the visitor’s chair, and took a moment to look around at the hospital room. Not much had changed since the last time he was here. Nothing had changed since the last time he was here. His dad had made no effort to get up off his fat ass, and Eric’s money was giving him an avenue to continue eating crap.

He should tell the nurses to only give him shitty hospital food; which, he supposed, they were probably supposed to be. Maybe he was bribing them, to get more crap shit sneaked in. Eric should follow up, and see if he could make his dad's life more miserable. At least it'd save his stupid life and get him off the shitty food.

“What's bad?”

“The company that's hired me wants to do a song and dance.”

“Like back in the day? You gettin' on camera again?”

Eric shuddered. “No. I may be in a bit of a spotlight with these money types, though.” Money types described the vampires well enough. What type were the werewolves and monsters? Pains in the ass, for sure, but the vampires were easier for him to understand. Dealing with news crews, lawyers and accountants, the media, and celebrities, fit right into dealing with the undead fuckers.

He sighed, and looked up at the tile ceiling. Jessy put a small hole into that approach. She was the sort of woman he could trust, more than others. Came at him straight, put things into a realistic perspective, and gave him some options too. Play the field, she said. You have the power to defend yourself and pursue your own agenda now, she said.

His dad changed the channel. The news, volume low, captions on. Old habit again, or he was looking to continue the conversation.

“Make any friends?” the old man said. Guess he wanted to continue the conversation. Talkative today.

“In a way.”

“Woman?”

“A couple.”

“Don't fuck it up like you did with Sheryl.”

Sheryl. Just the mention of her name made his knee tense, which made his whole body tense in preparation for the pain ... that never came. Healed. Silver lining to all this hell.

“My knee is feeling great lately, thanks for asking,” he said. He was starting to wonder if maybe he should fake a limp, before someone started asking questions about the knee.

“She’s not to blame for the knee, boy. And I meant, you and Sheryl were a horrible pair. Do better this time.”

“I’ll get right on that.”

“Seen a few cute doctors around here. Go ask one out.”

“Think I’ll pass, dad.”

The old man rolled his eyes, groaned, and erupted into coughs. He winced once the grotesque noises passed, and scratched at the IV needle in his arm.

“When’ll I be getting out of here?”

“When your health starts to bounce back. Think you can stop eating cheeseburgers and potato chips for a few fucking days?”

“Son, let me do what I want, would you? I’ve lived this long—”

“You’d be dead if I didn’t interfere.”

“Says you. Remember O’Malley? Man lived to be eighty-nine years old, smoking every day of his life. Came out of his momma’s cooch with a cigarette between his lips.”

The idiot said it without irony. No point in trying to explain survivor bias to his stupid father. No point in trying to explain how pathetic it was, to trust the things you see with your eyes, as a representation of general truths. So, Eric sighed, shrugged, and looked back to the TV. Some other place in the world was burning to the ground. Wonderful.

If Eric pushed him, said something like ‘fine, let’s go, I’ll take you home’, his dad would probably die. Maybe not today, maybe not tomorrow, but he’d deteriorate into a fat tub of lard until his heart gave up or his blood-sugar levels destroyed him from the inside out. And his dad didn’t want that. Stubborn and stupid as he was, he didn’t want that. But he was stubborn enough that, if Eric pushed him on it, the dumbass would agree to go home, and be done with the hospital.

Every time Eric was in the hospital, he juggled that fucking option in his mind. Keep his dad alive, because he knew his dad wanted to live, despite his stupidity and resistance. Or, let his dad die due to his own incompetence and laziness. Let him die, so he’d be out of your life. Just an anchor holding you down.

Anchor that kept you from going adrift in a storm.

“Question for you, pops.”

“Yeah? Thought you got the world figured out by now, don’t need no advice from anyone.”

“Yeah, well, lot of weird shit happening to me lately, making me question my omniscience.”

“Fine, ask away.”

“What would you do, if you were being asked to pick sides in a cold war? Got a few groups of people ... pushing for money, business acquisition type stuff. Some of them are your typical money snakes. Some others are honest, but I don’t trust them to not get rough, maybe even break some knees. And the others are—”

Steps at the door cut him off. “Oh, this has got to be good. What are we in your hilariously inaccurate breakdown?”

Eric froze, and looked to the door. Athalia.

“This fine lady looking for your help, Eric?” His old man sat up in bed, and winked at her.

She laughed.

Eric raised a brow at her. He didn’t know her well, but from that meeting last night, it seemed like everyone expected her to be a cold bitch. Nothing wrong with some ice, and Eric could do with some ice in his life about now anyway. Refreshing, when everyone else was trying to get him on their side.

But the look on her face, as she looked between him, and his father in the hospital bed, wasn’t ice. She smiled at his father, and tossed her hair over her shoulder a little. Flirting with the old man; not something an icy woman would do. Most definitely not the same woman who punched some sense into him when he was transformed. Not the same woman who had some sort of undead god horror inside her. And yet, he knew she was, he could feel it, could almost smell the disgusting waves of unadulterated terror made manifest dripping from her pores.

“I was going to say,” Eric said, “you’re something of the underdog, I guess. An underdog with nothing to lose.” He got up, walked over to the monster, and frowned at her. “Makes you dangerous.”

“Son, stupid boy, gonna introduce us or not.”

Fucking hell. If only the old man knew who or what this woman was. Not like Eric could share that information with him. And what the hell was she doing here anyway? The only people who should know about this part of his life were people either tracking his finances, like the Invictus, or people following him. He expected

Avery to be following him, to have someone tail him, though he hadn't seen or smelled anyone yet. The last thing he expected was a Begotten to show up.

"Don't mind Eric," she said. "I'm Athalia. And I got plenty to lose."

"What're you doing here?"

"Came to see you."

Why? He almost asked it, but a look in her eye made the answer obvious. To talk about dangerous shit. Sighing, he motioned to the door with his head.

"I'll be back before I leave, dad. I—"

"Boy, get out and go hang with the beautiful lady. Get me some fucking grandkids already, for Christ's sake."

A lovely way to be dismissed by his dad. Better than usual, he supposed, with the two of them usually growing increasingly irate until he simply had to leave. And Athalia's laughter was a delightful sound; not much of that going on in the hospital.

Rolling his eyes, Eric stepped into the hallway with Athalia, and the two of them made their way to the cafeteria. Big hospital with a lot of money meant a nice cafeteria for visitors and patients. The staff had their own he figured, since no nurses or doctors were around. Plenty of seating, too.

"You know," he said, sitting down at one of the tables by a window, "I was in a hospital when I was younger."

"Oh?" Ice expression returned, Athalia leaned back in her seat, and looked out the window. The hospital had a small garden view, a grassy area in the center, between its halls and walls.

“Terrence Hospital. Run down, horrible, barely functioning.” It was easy to argue for premium health care if you had money to spend on it. He’d seen the other side of the fence. “It’s almost sickening, how much better this is.” South Center Hospital might as well have been hospital care for royalty, as far as Eric’s upbringing could tell.

“I was there, once, when I was younger. Terrence Hospital, I mean. Pretty sure, if it wasn’t for my horror, I would have walked away from that hospital with an infection and disease on top of the wound.”

He smiled. Yeah, he got that. “What kind of wound?”

“Dislocated my shoulder.”

“Sports?”

“Fighting.”

“I—”

“Not fighting for a sport, like you. I got into it with some bully when I was younger. This was before Angela.”

He kept a straight face when she said her daughter’s name, but it wasn’t easy. “South Center is ... the people here are spoiled.”

“Very.”

“How did you find me?”

“Not telling.”

“Why?”

“Because, it’s my prerogative as a monster. You’ll never understand, anyway.”

“I get the impression you don’t like me very much, Athalia.”

“I don’t. You’re a dog, and all of your kind are aggressive brutes, incapable of controlling your impulses.”

If he didn’t know any better, he’d think that was a sexist statement, more than a racist one. But he noticed a lot of frustrated, annoyed looks at Jessy too, during the meeting. And Jack. And Damien. Only person she seemed ok with was Fiona; maybe because everyone liked Fiona, or because she had issues with werewolves and vampires. She apparently disliked werewolves, so the extrapolation was reasonable.

Fuck, stop running the thoughts through your head. What did Avery say, that Cahaliths like to narrate their thoughts, like spinning a story? Fucking stop it.

“Alright, so, why are you here?”

“Came here to re-offer Azamel’s offer.”

Ugh, this shit again. “I’m not taking any sides in anything, Athalia.”

“That’s just it. The vamps think this is about sides, and the fucking dogs think this is about sides. It’s not like that for us.”

“You telling me you’re all free agents? Seems like you all work for Azamel.”

“She guards us, but we don’t work for her. And we’re not a family, not a pack, not really.” Shrugging, she got up, and walked over to the selection of food. A few minutes later, she came back with some fruit, and a sandwich with beef.

The look of it turned Eric’s stomach. The beef was alright, but the rest of it? He didn’t want it. In the past, he’d have wanted it. The fruit would have looked delicious, and the bread, an enticing base for other flavors to compliment. Now it looked like the shit prey ate. Athalia enjoyed it well enough, though.

“Surprised you’re eating that.”

“It tastes good.”

“Do you need to eat?”

“I eat.” She smirked at him, and took a bite of the sandwich. “I feast on destruction.”

“ ... destruction?”

She leaned in closer, and glared into his eyes, piercing him. Sheryl used to give him that look, when she was ready to literally pierce his eyes with her stiletto heels. A mix of condescension and anger, wrapped in a layer of ice. Unnerving.

“That’s the problem. That’s why I don’t trust you, or the vamps, as you’ve no doubt noticed. You’re just animals, looking for food. Begotten are more than that.”

His turn to lean back, and sneer. “Wanna fill me in?”

“No, but, Azamel thinks you can be of value to us, so ... Jesus, explaining this is like explaining science to an infant.”

This woman was begging to be hated. It was an act he knew well, too, actively making people hate you, so you could avoid ever having to connect with someone. No one can hurt you as much as a friend, so, better to not make friends. He didn’t want to agree, but, sometimes he did.

“I am basically an infant, in this new, fucked up world, Athalia.”

“... true.” She took another bite, and looked out the window. Felt like the sandwich was just a precursor to conversation for this woman, as if she didn’t need it. “Werewolves want to hunt, patrol, do their duty. Vampires have their squabbles and political agendas. You know what Begotten want?” She didn’t look his way. Rhetorical question. He almost answered it anyway, just to piss her off. But that was the old him, and the least he could do was shut up and listen. “We want to exist.”

“Sounds simple enough.”

“So you’d think. It’s not.” She turned to him again, and leaned in. “I get the impression that’s all you want, too. You don’t want to serve in any vampire wars, and you don’t want to be doing some ancient duty for some ancestor you had nothing to do with.” Another bite. “No rules, no organizations, none of that shit. We want to exist, to eat, and be left alone. You want similar, and fuck me, if I didn’t see that, I wouldn’t be here. It’s what you want, and it’s what we Begotten want. So consider Azamel’s offer, and all we’ll ask of you is to be there for us if people try and kill us. Otherwise, you do whatever the fuck you want.”

He frowned, and looked out the window too. Yeah, she had him pegged. He didn’t want any of the bullshit the Uratha or Kindred brought. He just wanted to fucking exist, do his own thing, and eat and fuck and sleep and be left the fuck alone.

“... I’ll consider it.”

---

~~Beatrice~~

Ok, that was enough fucking for a while.

Beatrice sat up, and looked around. Jen was between her and Julias, and they were all naked. The room smelled of sex and blood and flesh. Not theirs of course; that all faded away once it was off the vamp's body, fake stuff created by the blush of life. Julias had brought some of his servants into the guest bedroom, where they'd decided to fuck like rabbits. Yummy yum.

Two guys, two girls, passed out on the floor. Each had been drunk to exhaustion, and each thoroughly satisfied by fingers and tongues. Julias had watched, for the most part, while Triss and Jen had indulged in the four kine. Making the kine cum on each other, while drinking them, was such a power trip, and Triss delighted in it. So much easier to be a Ventrue than a Nosferatu, when all you had to do for a good time was look a kine in the eye, and tell them what to do.

Triss smiled at Jen, and snuggled into her side. Julias did the same, but he reached over, and pushed her onto her side, facing Triss, before he scooted into her back. Classic spoon position.

She was never going to get over how weird this relationship was. Jen got it; she slept with a pair of ghouls on a regular basis, before Triss came along. Julias got it; he was sleeping with kine all the time before Triss came along, sometimes two at a time. Antoinette got it, with her two little pet girly ghouls. Heh, what a kink, dominatrix with her harem. Jack must have been loving it, if he liked being a sub anyway. Clearly, Antoinette enjoyed being in charge, in and out of the bedroom.

Triss put a claw to her necklace, and flicked it. It was silent. Good. As long as the necklace was silent, she wasn't worried.

Jen smiled at her, reached out, and pulled her in. Bed hugs were weird to do, with the mattress blocking one arm, so Jen used the one arm to pull her in. Triss still had her nipple chain on — Jen's usual request — and it rubbed against Jen's larger breasts. Hard nipples. Sighing, relaxed, happy, Triss let the Ventrue pull her in snug, until their chests were tight to each other.

“How do you know if the ritual’s working, if no one triggers it?” Jen said.

“I can feel it. In the blood, in the bones.” Gave her a damn thrill, feeling blood magic working through her, through the necklace on her neck, through everything connected to her.

“I wonder what that’s like. I—oh!” With a squeak, Jen looked over her shoulder, to Julias.

The bastard grinned at her, then at Triss, and began moving his hips back and forth. Jen was reduced to moans in seconds. Surprise sex! Well, leave it to Julias to be bold when the mood struck him.

“How the fuck are you not satisfied?” Triss said.

He shrugged, set his head to rest on one hand, elbow to the pillow, while his other hugged across Jen’s body. Fingers found her breasts, and he began to fondle the large tit. With Triss so close, it caused Jen’s nipple to rub into her own. A pleasant feeling, but Triss was thoroughly spent. No more sex for her.

But watching her boyfriend and best friend have sex, while she felt her up, was a fun time nonetheless. Laughing, Triss leaned up and in, and Julias leaned in to match her, so the two could begin kissing. Oh yes, Julias was a good kisser. Being a royal slut for a century had bestowed the man with some amazing skills, and Triss’s lips were still human enough for kissing action. Doing it over Jen’s face, and earning some longing sighs from the observing Ventrue, made it all the better.

Better still, when Julias started thrusting again, and Jen let out a quiet moan. Triss pulled back, set her free arm on Jen’s hip, and watched as the beautiful woman enjoyed a spooning from her man.

“Julias fucked me this way, the first time.”

“Thanks,” she said, “for letting me try it, then. It’s ... relaxing.”

“I know, right?” Triss’s hand slid down her hip, down to the woman’s smooth belly, down her beautiful mons pubis, and then between her legs. Swollen clitoris, wet, and then a little past that, where Julias’s cock was spreading her tight little cunt open. “You can just lie there, let him do all the work, and take it easy. Read a book.”

“I sincerely hope you’re a little more focused on enjoying the sex,” Julias said, “than reading a book.”

Triss laughed again. She hadn’t actually tried reading a book during spooning sex, but she was definitely going to, now.

Sighing the same sort of relaxed, pleasant sigh as Jen, Triss put her other elbow to the pillow, and propped her head up, same as Julias. Her other hand continued to explore between Jen’s thighs, and offered some gentle strokes of her clitoris. Nothing rough, not the point of the position, or Julias’s aim. If he wanted to spoon, it was to relax, too.

Triss lay there, and watched. Jen’s expression was melting away, each thrust from Julias bringing her closer and closer to orgasm, but never over. It’d take forever to cum this way; just the way Julias liked it. And, it was a good opportunity to take a moment, and admire just how god damn fucking hot Jen was.

No wonder her sire did what he did. Christ, what an asshole.

Eventually, the two Ventrue started to cum. Triss leaned over Jen again, found her love’s lips, and made sure to give him a proper, long, mushy romantic kiss. Catching him mid-orgasm was fun, and bombarding Jen with the disgustingly tender display of her catching his quiet moans with her lips, was even more fun.

More fun than that, was lowering herself down to Jen's neck, and kissing the exposed skin. Poor woman's mewls turned into outright moans, and she gasped all the more as Triss pressed their bodies tight, and suckled on her jugular. Hickey time.

Except, not. Failure. Triss didn't have cheeks, but enormous crocodile teeth instead. Without cheeks, she couldn't create any suction. She could, however, use her long tongue, and lick the girl up like prey.

"Eeek!" Squealing, Jen pushed against her, but she had no strength. Not like a Ventrue could beat her in a competition of might anyway, but the busty lady was too busy cumming to fight much.

Laughing, Triss continued to hug her, hug Julias, and press against them as they came.

"Ya done now, finally?" she said.

Julias sat up, stretched his arms up over his head, and returned her smile. "Yeap."

Jen rolled onto her back, and closed her eyes as she sank into Julias's fancy bed. Everything the man owned was fancy, and the juxtaposition of all the sex and sin against the antique beauty of the mansion was a huge fucking turn on. Jen knew it too, as she spread her thighs, and reached between them to coat her fingers in the white cum leaking out of her, the master of the house's cum.

She trailed his cum up her stomach, and onto her breast closer to Triss, before looking up at her with expecting, hopeful eyes. Yeah, ok, there was sinful, and then there was this. But damn, Triss did like to get naughty. She leaned down, set her lips and long tongue against Jen's breast, and slowly licked up Julias's cum. The weight and pressure of her tongue was enough for the softness of Jen's breast to mold to the wet appendage, and Triss took advantage, causing the big tit to bounce against Jen's chest a few times, up and down, up and down.

"Sunrise is in fifteen minutes," Julias said, "much as I'd like to go again."

Forever the voice of reason. Triss rolled her eyes, but nodded, and jumped out of bed. Underwear underwear, where was—ah, underneath one of the kine. She pushed over one of the men, and slid her thong out from where it was sandwiched between him and one of the girls. Still clean, thankfully.

Everyone threw their clothes on in a hurry. In the past, they might risk sleeping in the bed. The mansion was secure, and the thralls in Julias's employ would keep them safe. But, half the thralls were out of commission, sleeping on the floor, naked and covered in sex. The other half wouldn't be a match for hunters; hell, all of them wouldn't be a match for hunters. That meant the three vampires were going to sleep in Julias's secure bunker.

They might fuck there too, when they woke up.

"When's the next primogen meeting?" Jen said as she slipped on a robe. Julias preferred to put on his suit, and Triss only had her typical shit, jeans and a tank top and army boots, but Jen liked the mansion and the mansion-y lifestyle. Expensive, soft robes called Jen's name, like moth to a flame.

"Couple nights from now. I do not look forward to it." Julias finished getting his suit on, but kept the tie off. Better in his pocket, or at least more comfortable.

With the three of them wearing clothes, or at least two of them, Jen in a robe, they left the room, and headed downstairs. Stairs down and down led to the much creepier, much more secure bunker room deep underground that no one was getting into without a nuke.

“Why not?” Jen said, once they got underground, and started down the long halls of stone.

“Garry has been a pain in the ass lately. He’s not happy about the Mirrden situation. This hunters problem has everyone looking for hunters, but the council, Garry, and I assume the Prince and Jacob, are trying to play two games at once. They want the hunters dealt with, and they’re working to plan out the futures of the covenants at the same time. Garry and Michael, in particular, are...”

“Barking at each other like a couple Gangrels.” Triss shrugged, and stepped in beside him. “I can’t blame them. They’re elders, and they’re good at playing the long game.”

“True.” Jen ran one of her fingers along the old stones around them, and let her eyes drift about randomly. Such an old tunnel had an almost romantic feel to it, like something out of a story or play. “But if they don’t focus on what’s in front of them, it’ll kill them.”

“I’m with Jen on this.” Nodding, Julias opened the gates and doors, digital locks and all, to his underground room. “And I’m trying to make them see that. But to the Primogen, I’m just a young punk that doesn’t understand how long life can be. They want to weather the tide. Fuck, even Garry does, and I was hoping he’d be in my corner for a little more aggressive action.”

Yeah, Garry defied some expectations. He was the leader of the Carthians for a reason.

Once they were through the last gate, Triss waited for Jen to pass her, before she turned around, and slit her wrist.

“Um, Beatrice?” Superman said.

“Getting better at this.” With a deep sigh, she let the pain fade away, and forced out some of her thick blood onto her fingers. She reached up, and painted the frames of the door with her blood, her vitae, and her will. A moment later, the blood began to fade, but it didn't turn to ash like usual. It left behind traces of black, almost invisible against the metal.

“What's that about?” he said.

Grinning all the more, she climbed onto the bed, and lay beside the man. “Witchy stuff.”

“Witchy stuff...”

“Mmhmm.” She kissed him, opened her mouth wide, and pretended to bite his neck with all her extra teeth. He shuddered, and she giggled. Such a lovely feeling, knowing she could still get a thrill out of him when wanted to. “Can't share the details though.”

Blood of the crow. Crows were very observant birds, knowledgeable, wise, and with a know-how other birds didn't have. According to Jacob, that translated into something real, something in the animal, something that the beast could identify. Something that the Crone could bestow. Triss didn't know if she believed in the Crone or whatever, but she believed the beast in a vampire's gut was real, and more real than most Kindred believed; crúac saw to that.

If anything came near the archway she painted, the crow skull would warn her. How exactly it'd warn her, she didn't know. Would it speak? Burn her? Start glowing? It'd have to do something impressive, because unless it could wake her during the day, it wasn't terribly useful. Jacob insisted it could, and that she'd be more than capable of dealing with the intruder, despite the overwhelming exhaustion daytime brought with it.

Hopefully, she'd never have to find out.

“Sure you don't want your suit?” Julias said, sitting up on his elbows and looking to Jen.

“I only wear the suit because I know you like it.” Laughing, Jen snuggled into Triss’s side, still in her robe.

The Nos nodded. “She’d be naked twenty-four-seven if she could get away with it.”

“Bah, you kids. You’ll change your minds when you grow up. A suit is a man’s — and woman’s — second skin. Clothes make the man, you know.”

Triss rolled her eyes. No denying that there was something damn sexy about a suit, though.

---

~~Jack~~

Waking up next to the Prince was always a thrill. No matter how many times, no matter how often, no matter what, waking up next to the deadly woman sent the beast in his gut into a panic. It only lasted a moment, as his guts came to the realization that he knew this other beast in bed with him. It knew the colossal, ancient, grand creature, and its immeasurable strength. Immeasurable patience too, considering all the shit that came at her, especially lately.

He scooted in closer to her, and watched her eyes open. He woke up with a jolt, normally, but Antoinette woke up slowly and gently. Those red eyes, god damn. And the way she smiled, sent a jolt stronger than the kick that wakes a Kindred for the night.

He got in closer, pressed himself to her, and kissed her.

“Ah, feeling bold this evening, are we?” She returned his kiss, and pulled him in close with her free arm, other trapped between her and the mattress. It was just the two of them, Ashley and Julee nowhere to be seen. So Jack was in the clear to slide in close to Antoinette, hug her, and simply let the world come to a stop.

“Can we ... stay here?” he said. “Jessy’s dragging me around the city to do some crap, Invictus crap. You’d think with hunters at our doorstep, we’d focus on that and only that.”

“Unfortunately, my love, the world does not stop because hunters attempt to spoil it.”

“It should! If we don’t deal with this problem, we’ll all be dead.”

“Perhaps a metaphor will serve, in this instance. How familiar are you with chess, little Terry?” Her hand raised up to his head, and stroked the back of his skull. Mmm, fingers on buzzed head.

“I used to play it a lot, in high school. Decent player, I guess.”

“I suppose you would consider this war we fight against the hunters to be similar to a game of chess, oui?” She leaned down, and kissed his forehead. The position forced his head into the crevice of her breasts and sternum, and he melted into it as she continued to stroke his head. This is what it must have been like, to be a puppy and melt into pets.

“Yeah, I guess I do. They’re moving pieces, trying to control the board, and we’re doing the same, trying to catch each other and poke holes in defenses.” Sounded like a simple enough comparison.

“And while that is true, the game we play against these hunters is not of the grand scale I speak of. These hunters are a single piece on the board, and there are many others in their color. If we focus all our eyes upon that single piece, then we will surely be able to capture it, but we will leave holes in our defenses against the other pieces.”

“I ... I guess I am focusing a little much. Tunnel vision.” It was hard not to, after what happened to him. “Who are the other pieces?”

“There is the Uratha, and the Begotten, each a single piece. There are the covenants, each a piece. And then there are forces beyond our knowledge or understanding. Spirits flirt with my borders, and test their strengths. And, as you know, there is something amiss in my city, something that threatens us all. A cliché for the ages, and yet, something very real that must be contended with.”

“Nothing’s a cliché when it’s happening to you.” Where did he hear that before?

“Too true. As for all these pieces, they are controlled by life itself, the opponent. We forever battle its whim, and if we do not control the field, defend against all the tools it may attack us with, we will be destroyed.”

“Sounds stressful, trying to manage so much all the time.”

She laughed. The feel of her voice, with his ear against her chest, was delightful, and he hugged her tighter as she continued to pet his head.

“It is. One of the many reasons Kindred often seek delights to alleviate their woes.”

“Delights, you say?”

“Oh yes, delights.” Chuckling again, she pushed against his shoulder, and slid onto him. The blanket slipped down her body, and Jack groaned as he watched her beautiful figure expose itself. She sat on him, his waist, his stomach, and smiled down at him as she reached her arms up to stretch them out. The tug of the motion on her breasts raised them, and caused them to jiggle with the subtle sway of her body.

No way she was doing that just because. She was doing that to arouse the ever living fuck out of him.

She blushed life. Yeah, definitely had a motive. He blushed life as well, and a moment later, his cock was pressing up against the crack of her bountiful ass.

“You got time?” he said. “Thought you had a Primogen meeting to prepare for.”

“I have time, and the meeting is not until tomorrow night. If the worst comes, I shall tell those idiot children to wait. But it is not for some time yet, and I have done plenty to deserve time with my love.”

She always called him ‘her love’. Title of endearment, but also, how she felt about him. He didn’t say it nearly enough.

“... I love you.” It almost sounded forced and unnatural to say it like that. She didn’t care. She blushed a touch red to her cheeks, and leaned down, pressing her hands to his shoulders until her lips found his.

“Merci.” She gazed into his eyes, and he let himself relax into the bed as she shifted her hands onto the blankets above and around his head. As she began to gently grind her pelvis down, and rub her clitoris against his body, her heavy, enormous breasts swayed over his head.

He reached up for one, only for her to take his hands, and pin them down to the blankets, a foot over his head. Fine by him. He opened his mouth, and let her guide one of her nipples down onto his awaiting lips.

The feel of her tensing for a moment, and then relaxing against him, as he began to suckle on her, was amazing. How could such an ancient creature enjoy sex this much? Blew his mind, every time. He pushed his head up into her breast, and let the softness completely bury his face, as he sucked and licked. Her areola swelled in his mouth, half with her arousal, half because he sucked on it, drawing blood to it. And when he could tell he was getting a little too rough, he eased up on any suction, licking gently instead.

Antoinette let out several, long, heavy sighs, as she ground her body against him. She was getting wet. A small trail of damp warmth ran along his skin, above his cock where she ground herself. It used to have trim hair, but now it was perfectly smooth skin, at Antoinette's request. No rough hair to bother her, as she rubbed her clit against him.

"I hope you are keeping your Right Hands friends close," she said, smiling down at him. "After the incident, I must insist you remain safe at all times."

He nodded, let go of her breast, and moved his head over to the other. She helped, leaning her other breast into his face, so he could pamper and bathe it with his lips and tongue, same as the other.

"How does your position in the Invictus fair, my love?"

He shrugged, and managed a smile with his eyes, before resuming sucking on the most amazing thing in all of existence: breasts.

"I suppose it is a mostly stable position now, is it not? You work with your fellow Right Hands, and are one of the primary drivers of prosperity for your entire covenant." Her eyes looked up, and her shoulders came down lower, smooshing his face in the whole softness of her tit, so he couldn't see her anymore. "In one so young, it must be quite the thrill. Have you any plans on how to spend your new found wealth, or perhaps enjoy your new power?"

At last, she let go of his hands, and sat up. And to his surprise, she pulled him up to sitting as well.

"Not sure. With the money, I figured I'd get a penthouse suite, or something? But I really like it here. And ... and honestly, I haven't thought about it too much, since the incident with Angela."

“And I enjoy having you here, little devil.” With an exaggerated sway of her head, showing off her long, flowing white hair, she hooked her legs behind his lower back, while lifting her ass so she could sink her pussy down onto his length. Hot, squeezing, and god damn heaven. Antoinette didn’t so much as moan, as she buried him to the hilt inside her clenching muscles, and got comfortable between his legs, hers now crossed behind him over his hips.

She was so much taller than him. Sitting on him, on his thighs and pelvis, it put her breasts at head height, and he melted into her chest as she guided his head back to her body.

“Do not fret, my love. As much as these hunters, and the other troubles on our doorstep, are a thorn in my side, our side, it is also true that such things will pass, if we are diligent. As long as you do not let fantasies of how to spend your wealth blind you to present circumstances, I see no fault from indulging.” She started to grind herself back and forth, eyes closing, head drifting back and letting her hair dangle behind her.

Jack was just along for the ride. Course, they’d been having sex for many months now, and he was starting to get more comfortable being proactive with her. She didn’t like having control taken from her, and it wasn’t like he could actually take it, even if he tried. But, she did like it when he followed her lead, and slipped into the groove of her rhythm.

He started shifting his hips with hers, back and forth a couple inches. Nothing crazy, nothing to push either of them to orgasm, but euphoric nonetheless. Each motion she made, she squeezed on his cock, and forced the vise-grip of her soaked insides to massage the hard girth of his length, and its swollen tip. The pleasure sparks came in a consistent, gentle rhythm, and Jack made sure to go slow, to hold off orgasm as long as possible.

It was damn hard, as Antoinette squeezed her curvy, toned, and fucking amazing thighs around him, nice and tight. As she did, she leaned back even further, and let her head dangle behind her completely, so her hair rubbed against the blankets and his knees. Leaning back so far, her breasts were no longer reached by his lips, and instead, were put on display, jiggling and flattening against her chest for the few minutes she hung back, her hands on his shoulders. Up and down, up and down against her chest in slow waves, like a tide.

Holy shit.

But eventually, she sat back up, and slid a hand up the back of his neck to hold his head again, and guide his lips back to her breasts.

“Natasha enjoyed seeing us make love.”

“Uh ... what?”

“In the third wing living room.”

The room with the pretty lighting. Right, he was lying on the couch, and—”She watched us?”

“Of course. We were in the open, and you know she sleeps here in my Elysium Tower, as well as joins me in affairs of the Ordo Dracul.” Laughing, she started to work herself faster, pulling some quiet moans from him, while she barely made a noise other than her words. Total control of her body, despite how he could feel her juices coating him, more, and more. “But do not worry. She enjoyed what she saw.”

“Oh.” Heh, that was good. Stroked his ego, knowing Natasha thought he was attractive. “ ... or, did she like seeing you naked?”

Antoinette shivered, and guided his head down to find her breast again. “I am a terribly splendid example of the human body, am I not?” Her confidence was practically Ventrue level. So hot.

As he suckled on her nipple again, her insides clenched on him like a vise, almost enough to hurt. And with her constant rocking, the friction of her dripping insides massaging his girth and rubbing against his sensitive glans sent him over the edge. He closed his eyes, and sucked her nipple into his mouth, as if he was hungry for milk. He wasn't going to get that, but the more he bathed her breast in kisses, the more he circled her swollen areola with his tongue, the more she clenched on his girth.

She may not have made much noise when she came, but he did. Too much, too blissful, feeling her insides squeeze and milk him as he came, for a few groans to not escape him as the warm fluid gushed up his length. Soon, it was dripping out of her depths, onto him, along with her own juices. She pulled his head from her breast, and kissed him. Eyes half open, she gazed into him as she milked him, and as she came. He was hopeless to resist, and did nothing but stare back into her red gaze as he shivered, struggling to manage the stimulus of her gripping and squeezing.

He couldn't come forever though, and eventually he went slack in her arms. A signal for her to let go of him, slide her legs out from behind him, and let him fall to the blankets.

“You, my boy, my little Ventrue, are to be careful with your adventures. Trips to the Shadow Realm are dangerous at best, and as much as it is your duty to communicate with the Begotten and Uratha, you are not to throw your life to suicidal whims. Understand?”

Before he could respond, she stood up. With one foot beside each side of his waist, thighs spread slightly, she put her hands on her hips, and gave him a very ‘angry mother’ glare. Frowning at him, a one-eighty on the sex they'd had literally twenty seconds ago, she raised a foot, and pressed it down against his chest.

He could see a mix of their cum dripping down her thighs, until it reached the ankle of the foot pressing to his sternum.

“I’ll try, but—”

“But?”

Oh shit. She glared down at him, and pressed down on the foot. It wasn’t like she was very heavy, by vampire standards; even Jack could lift something a couple hundred pounds without much issue, these nights. So even if she put enough strength into the foot to crush metal, it didn’t matter if she only weighed as much as a tall-but-fit woman normally does. Thank god, because there was a bite to her eyes he hadn’t expected.

“I ... I mean, I’ll really try. I can’t guarantee it though, you know?” If there was one way he was going to die, it’d be by pissing off his lover. Probably the most dangerous of all his options, but he had to be honest with her.

“I understand the ritual showed your face, Jack, but that was likely due to your closeness to either Azamel or myself. For all the trials that may come your way, understand that you need not be the one that throws themselves into the fray to see them solved. Your partner Herrington, or even that fool Damien, are older than you, and more than capable of dealing with threats.”

He blinked up at the woman, and gulped. From sex to orders in a single minute. But after staring up at her for a while, he nodded. “I’ll be careful, and make sure someone else is there to deal with things if they get hot.”

“Good.” Stepping down from the bed, she sighed, and looked over her shoulder as she reached out to scoop up her clothes from the chair by the mirror.

“Something bring this on?” He jumped out of the bed, and walked after her, standing behind her once she sat down in the chair.

“Nothing specific, non. But, after the incident with that man Eric, and his random change, it is hard to not imagine what it would have been like if he had suffered such a change in your presence.”

“That’s ... a random thing, to be worried about. After all the things I’ve deal with, that—”

She picked up her brush with a snap. Mood swing? He wasn’t about to say it, or he was liable to get torn apart.

“Those were not things that should have been thrust upon you. The incident with Viktor and Tony was of my doing, and your presence was a regrettable accident. Lucas’s insanity and kamikaze assault were not for you to contend with, it was my problem to solve, and Daniel’s. That monster that plagued our sewers, the arrival of the Avery and her Uratha, the arrival of Azamel and the resurgence of other Begotten, and now the arrival of hunters? Please stop throwing yourself headlong into these situations, or you will find yourself in a crisis you cannot escape, if this continues.”

“That ... is a lot of things, now that you say it like that.” He came in from behind her, and as she started brushing her hair, he took the brush. With a sigh, she set her hands down, and worked on getting dressed. She slipped her underwear on, and did up her bra; did it so smoothly, she could probably do it all one handed.

“I apologize, but it bothers me terribly, to look into your eyes, little Ventrue, only to imagine them in such fraught situations.”

He chuckled, and brushed through the waves of white. “I seem to be pretty good at surviving those situations, don’t I?”

“Yes, and you forever impress me. But, no doubt this situation with Angela has led to a horrible outcome, has it not?”

Shit. Did she know? Know about his hang-ups and baggage about her? Shit. Shit shit.

“Um, what do you mean?”

“With Athalia. I remember her talking with you, at the ball. And you have met her on several occasions since then. I thought, perhaps, she might become a friend to you.”

Oh, right, Athalia. “She is, sort of. She was at the last Right Hands meeting, sharing with us some information about the hunters.”

“Oh? She has news?” She turned her head slightly. Either a queue to start brushing that side of her hair, or a way to look at him in the corner of her eye. The tone of her voice changed too, to something more analytical. Prince mode, he supposed.

“She does. The council will fill you in at the Primogen meeting.”

“You do not wish to tell me?”

“Oh! Um, I can, sure. Just figured you wouldn’t want a double dose? And, we usually avoided topics like this.”

Sighing, but nodding, she looked back to the mirror, and leaned forward to peer into it. With a quick but precise hand, she started applying her makeup. Again, something she could have done with her eyes closed, he was sure.

“It is good to hear it from you.”

He wasn’t sure it was. But, it was a part of being in a serious relationship, according to her. So, even if it wasn’t good, it was required, if they were going to be equal partners in their relationship. He never felt like an equal partner in the past, and she was making efforts to change that. With other couples, it’d be talk of student loans, or car repairs, or the uncle’s cancer, or mom’s drinking problem. With them, it was about the hunters at their door coming to kill them.

“Since Azamel thinks the weird ritual was performed by an extremely old woman, Invictus and the Begotten have been keeping an eye out for an old woman.”

“Not exactly a difficult thing to find in Dolareido. There are many.”

“Yeah but this woman is supposed to be very old. Scully and Mulder told me they saw a woman on a respirator and in a wheelchair, so I’m thinking it could be her? And Fiona and Athalia say they saw a similar woman in Devil’s Corner.”

“That is a lead worth exploring. Well done. And your skill with animalism grows too.” She grinned at him, before returning to her mascara.

“Oh! Speaking of Devil’s Corner. I wanted to ask you about a ... a thing, a symbol, artifact, object, something or other, dangling in one of the sex holes. Vicky and Parker run that sex hole; doing a side business thing, I guess. You know anything about the object? Avery seemed to know something.”

“Ah, yes, I know of the object. I suppose if Avery shows interest in it, then that confirms my suspicions. It summons, or creates, an essence of sexual delight. And spirits come to feast, and spread, such influence.”

Antoinette sounded like Clara, or Avery. She knew a lot about spirits then. Maybe he should ask her more about them, in the future.

“You know where they got it?”

“Jacob and I, long ago, imported many objects of such a strange nature.” She moved onto her lipstick, and blew him a kiss in the mirror after applying the blood red. “And I continue to do so. I am sure Jacob does as well, though we no longer share with each other what objects we acquire. I am sure the man has had dealings with all the Kindred of the city, in ways you do not know.”

“But you know.”

“Ben oui, mon amour. But I cannot tell you how I know.”

He nodded, and laughed. Yeah, secrets. Much as they were in a serious relationship, quote unquote, they’d never be able to share with each other all their secrets, as long as they were in different covenants. Even if they were both dragons, he doubted the great Voivode of Dolareido could tell him everything she knew.

So, Jacob probably gave them the object. Or they somehow acquired it, and Jacob was the one who brought it to Dolareido. An innocent exchange, or was the old bastard manipulating Vicky and Parker? The rabbit hole was so deep in Dolareido, it might as well have been endless.

He watched Antoinette’s reflection for a while. She’d returned to looking at herself as she worked her face with tools and stuff he’d never truly appreciate. She looked smoking hot wearing make up, but damn, what a hassle; she looked smoking hot without it too, so it wasn’t like she had to wear it, or so much of it. A Daeva would never go without their mask, she’d say. Smiling at the memory, he kept watching her reflection as he brushed her hair. The mood swing earlier was a little strange. It was true his second life kept throwing shit at him, but he’d made it through so far. No reason to suddenly get angry about it.

Unless something was bothering her.

“ ... Antoinette.”

“Oui, mon amour?”

“ ... how much do you know about Black Blood?”

She froze. He froze. Yeah, that was a sensitive spot. He didn't know why it was a sensitive spot, or what Black Blood had done to make her so anxious, but something about it was connected to things. From her reaction, she definitely knew about the spirit; she'd reacted to his name, last time he mentioned it. He didn't pursue it at the time, though. Better to let that tidbit rest while they talked about other things. Not this time.

“It is an old entity, Jack. Ancient. It was here before Jacob and I came to Dolareido. It was here before we turned a tiny village into our haven.”

“You've spoken to it?”

“ ... I have.” Sighing, she got up, took the brush back, and started getting dressed in her suit. “I cannot tell you how I have spoken to the creature, but I have.”

Scary. He shivered a bit, and sat in the chair as Antoinette put on her shirt and skirt. “I'm only asking because the name comes up in strange places. It might have something to do with ... well ... everything.”

“I sincerely hope it does not. The beast inserts its tentacles in every facet of my city, in ways I struggle to understand.”

Hearing Antoinette admit to not knowing something was almost strange to the ear. She was usually confident, almost to the point of warranting a Viktor comparison.

“It does?”

“Yes. Dark currents forever sweep through my tunnels, through my streets, through the homes and business locales that pepper my city and fortress. It ... it has motives that I do not understand, and that Jacob has only scratched the surface of.” Fully dressed, she set her hands on his shoulders, leaned down, and set a kiss to his forehead. “It plays games in my city, and it is not above murder in its pursuits. Its name is Black Blood for a reason, little Ventrue. Please, be careful with it.”

Maybe it was his visit to the Shadow World that had her more anxious than usual. He'd said Black Blood was one of the powers there, and then other names, Red Tide and Street-Tail King. Big names, names that had her startled. He was poking at a world she didn't understand, and dealing with names beyond her comprehension. Beyond anyone's comprehension, except for maybe Avery. Maybe she felt helpless, that no matter what she did, he'd get himself hurt or killed, dealing with things outside of purview. And if there was anyone who couldn't handle not being in control, it'd be her.

“ ... you really think it's my proximity to you, or Azamel, that led to the ritual showing my face?”

Sighing heavy, she pulled him up onto his feet, and hugged his naked body tight to her. Tall as she was, she set her chin on top of his head, and squeezed him.

“Yes. Do you think it could be something else?”

City Sky knew his name. Jacob mentioned him. People and spirits were talking about him, for reasons he didn't know.

Jacob. What the fuck was that man doing? He had to be involved in the damaged portal door thing, and the other mysterious shit happening. Either he knew who was doing it, or he was responsible. But, to imagine the vampire tearing open holes across the worlds, was a bit much. Even Fiona, a monster and ancient horror apparently, didn't tear open holes to the spirit world. She found doors and opened them.

God damn, he missed the old days.

“ ... Antoinette?”

“Oui?”

“I haven't seen you at the Bloodlust lately.” Maybe he could ask her to rekindle those old days.

“That ... is true. I have been buried in concerns and worries. I spend many of my nights standing at my window, looking at the city, and considering my options.” She let go of him, and started toward the vault door of her grand bedroom. “Perhaps tomorrow night, after the Primogen meeting?”

“Tomorrow night? I'm supposed to be meeting with Beatrice and Jen. Fiona too.”

“Oh? Where?”

“My apartment. We're going to talk about the hunters, but I think Triss is planning to just chill. But, I can ask if they'd prefer to another time.”

Antoinette smiled at him over her shoulder. “Perhaps, instead of asking them to reschedule, ask them to come to Bloodlust?”

“Um, sure.” He returned her smile, and finger waved as she disappeared through the door.

Beatrice and Jen, and Fiona, and Antoinette. That was way too many women. Hopefully she wouldn't mind if he invited Damien. Julias was busy, but Damien might have a few hours to spare.

---

“What. The fuck. Is this?” Jessy swept her arm through the air, pointing to the vampires of the room.

The only vampires that should have been in the room were the Right Hands of the Invictus, but there were two more. Garry Tones sat on the edge of Jeremy Long’s desk, arms folded across his chest, and a wolfish grin on his lips. He was completely at odds with the aesthetic of the building, slick and modern, with a few warmer colors than the Xnomina HQ, but otherwise still similar to its motif of money money money.

Garry didn’t reek of money. Garry reeked of brutishness. He reeked of zero elegance. He reeked of being a bully. His shaved head, the jeans, the jean jacket from the eighties, and the scars, were perfectly at home on the elder Gangrel. It fit his aesthetic, but Terra Den’s HQ did not.

Jack looked around the room some more, and glared at the man in corner. Montoya Montel. A ghoul, apparently, based on the way he kept glancing Long’s way. Not the usual glances of an employee, but of a devoted slave. Of course, it was Long being a Kindred, that had everyone shocked.

“Jack, Jessy ... Damien, little fucker.” Garry rubbed his fingers on his jacket, as if removing dust. A classic display of nonchalance, to show that they weren’t a threat.

He was wrong. They were a threat, at least a small one, even if the man didn’t realize it. That knowledge was the only reason Jack wasn’t urging the three of them to split before shit hit the fan.

“Mister Tones,” Jack said. “I, uh ... am I to take it that Jeremy Long is your new childe?”

“Yeap.” The elder smirked, and turned slightly to give them a more clear view of the CEO of Terra Den.

Jeremy Long was of average height, and though he was wearing a suit, Jack guessed he had a decent build underneath. If he was Garry's child, it was probably more than decent, and actually tough as metal. Chinese heritage, though born in the US near Washington. Came to Dolareido for its prosperous industries of sin and vice, and created Terra Den.

Jessy was not happy. "When the fuck did this happen?"

"Jeremy's been my ghoul for some time, and now that the Prince has opened the door on siring, I embraced him." Shrugging, Garry hopped off the desk, and took a seat by a fern. At least Xnomina embraced its dead-and-professional look. Terra Den felt like your typical, slimy, evil, pretty-on-the-surface corporation. Very not-Garry, now that he thought about it.

"You fuckin' this brat?" Jessy said.

Christ. So much for trying to be Garry's friend.

"... not that it matters, but no, I'm not fucking Jeremy." Garry rolled his eyes, and gestured to Montoya. "Or his ghoul. Get your head out of your ass, Jessy. Idiot child."

If it was any other Carthian, Jessy would have torn into the man, verbally or physically. Not Garry. Much as he was the youngest elder in Dolareido, he was still an elder, and the power that radiated from him shut down the three beasts of the Right Hands, like whiny, scared dogs. Jessy's loud words were just barking.

"How may I help the representatives of Xnomina today?" Jeremy said. He had the jackass grin that you'd expect from an expert poker player, CEO, and all around evil asshole.

"... Christ I hate you." Jessy motioned to Jack. "This is Jack Terry. You already know Damien Burksen."

“Ah yes, Jack Terry. Your name has a habit of circulating conversations.” The man leaned back in his chair, and tapped one hand’s fingers against the table, while the other swished around a glass of red. Blood, instead of wine.

“Does it?” Jack said.

“Indeed. Your recent encounter with the hunters is a topic worthy of discussion.”

Montoya snorted on a chuckle, and wiped his thumb across his lip. “Hear you nearly died. Shame you didn’t. Could use some holes in the Invictus.”

What the fuck. Jack looked Montoya’s way, and stared daggers into the man. Long and Tones were happy to dance around insults without ever saying them directly, while Montoya didn’t feel the same, apparently.

Montoya Montel was a fat fucker, pale skin, and tall. Every step was liable to break the floor. His brown hair was long, wavy, and his beard was a bit scraggy. What was a lazy, unkempt man like him doing with Long? Long’s hair was very short, and he had a tiny chin beard fitting his Asian heritage; he looked damn professional, while Montel looked like he belonged in a fast food joint, eating burgers. All the burgers.

Damien and Jessy sneered, Jessy louder. Jack winced, and analyzed. This was a strange move on Garry’s part, and untimely.

“Mister Tones,” Jack said. Let’s see if he can salvage what was turning into a train wreck. “Are you aware Montel’s man Mister Pitt tried to kill Eric Tanverson? According to Eric, it was to send a message to Xnomina.”

Garry shrugged. “Kine lives. Nothing Jeremy can’t do what he wants with, as long as he doesn’t damage the Masquerade.”

“Except Eric isn’t kine,” Jessy said. “He’s Uratha.”

“He didn’t know that at the time,” Garry said.

Not good enough for Jessy. She marched up to the big wooden desk, glared at Long, before turning and marching over to Garry.

She reached out, picked him up by the collar of his jacket, and punched him.

Shit.

Chapter 67

~~Jack~~

He would have facepalmed, if he wasn't too busy staring at the catastrophe.

If they were Invictus, they'd have been stunned at the sheer audacity of Madam Herrington. To a Carthian, it was an invitation to a fist fight. And Garry looked liked he pissed and shit fist fights.

He drew back his fist, and punched his fellow Gangrel in the face. A courtesy punch, maybe, because Jack knew Gangrels didn't use their fists when trying to hurt, they used claws. He'd never seen a Gangrel summon their claws, or use any of their protean abilities, and he didn't want to; Julias's horror stories about the damage McDonald could inflict when pissed was plenty.

Backing up, he reached for his pistol and sword, and kept his hands on their grips, as Jessy flew across the room, slammed into the wall, and fell to the floor. Dislocated jaw. Jack stared on as Jessy got up, grabbed her jaw, and yanked on it. Vitae and elbow grease to get her jaw working again. Fucking god, that was nauseating. She marched toward Garry again, straight toward his pissed off face, before Jack jumped between them.

“Jessy! Come on, stop!”

She didn't appreciate him trying to stop her, but at least she didn't throw him aside. “This fucker is a loose cannon! Hunters on our fucking doorstep, and he's looking to piss off the Invictus.”

“You're one to talk.” With a snarl, Garry sat back down, and adjusted his jacket. “Like I said, we didn't know Eric was Uratha when Long decided to make it known he wasn't going to take orders from the Invictus anymore."

Jessy kept trying to push past Jack, and he kept pushing her back. Like trying to keep a bull back, but at least she wasn't so stupid as to throw herself at Garry full force again. With a minute to calm down, she backed away, and started pacing, fuming in place. Probably grinding her teeth into powder.

"Like it would have mattered!"

"It would have." Long stood up, came around the desk, and sat against its front edge. "He was just a pawn to be used in a little jab against the Invictus. A deserved jab, might I add."

Eventually, Jack pushed Jessy back toward the door, next to Damien.

This was strange. Garry may have been an asshole, but he didn't normally throw kine lives under the bus; typical Carthian drama, protectors of the people, shit like that. If he was willing to let Long kill kine just to piss off the Invictus, then he was looking to poke the bear, maybe start a fight, or instigate an outright battle. The timing was atrocious, or perfect, if Garry had some plan the Invictus didn't know about. Likely; Garry was smarter than he appeared.

"This is an awkward situation," Damien said, stepping forward. "We came here to talk to Long, and to make sure he realized Terra Den, and he in particular, were not in a position to challenge Xnomina. But if he is now Kindred, that complicates things."

Complicate indeed. The timing of Long's embrace was odd, and on top of that, Kindred usually groomed a kine before embracing them. So, Long might have known about Kindred well before his embrace, to the point multiple meetings with Xnomina were had with his knowing they were Kindred. It'd be tough to learn when and if Garry told him anything, if he wasn't willing to share. And a punch to the face from Jessy probably shut the door on that idea.

"Long told me," Garry said, shrugging. "That's why I'm here. Making sure you don't hurt my childe."

"Antoinette is ok with this?" Jack said. Maybe he shouldn't have said it, though. Mister Tones threw him a glare, with a tiny smirk to go with it. Yeah, his relationship with Antoinette wasn't going to help him here.

"She is. As per the Prince's law, when she opened the floor to siring again, I talked with her to make sure this was allowed." The bastard licked his teeth, and his smirk grew. "Surprised she didn't tell you, short stuff."

"... did ... did you sire this guy, just to know if Antoinette was telling me things that'd help the Invictus?"

"Nah. I sired him because Long is a friend, and he's earned this."

Jack didn't believe him. Much as Garry was a typical Gangrel, aggressive and direct, he was also an elder, and that meant an ability to lie. Dance the Danse.

Damien sighed, shook his head, and tossed a glare back at Montoya before looking to Garry again. "This is ill timed, Mister Tones. We have hunters at our door, and—"

"Shut up, church boy," Garry said. "If it wasn't for the Prince, I'd kill you myself, right now. Lucas's childe? You're nothing but a thorn in my side. And you two?" Garry pointed to Jack and Jessy. "Invictus dogs, nothing more."

Something was off. Something was going on, something not obvious on the surface. Why Garry was pulling this shit, Jack didn't know, but it wasn't for the reasons he was saying. Or maybe it was for those reasons, and Garry was combining two motives.

"I don't believe this." Marching left and right, Jessy kept her glare on Garry and Long, each turn of her body an opportunity for her to posture and growl. "You're messing in Invictus affairs, directly at that, Tones."

"Could say the same about the Mirrden district."

"We don't have time for this!" She threw up her hands, and stomped for the door. "Let's go, boys. This is a matter for the council."

"Speaking of the council," Garry said, eyes hard and glaring, "keep an eye on that Maria bitch, would you? She's messing with shit, and it's going to backfire."

Damien and Jack froze, while Jessy turned around again.

"The fuck you talking about?"

"I'm saying, Maria's fucking with nasty shit. I'm not sure what, I'm not sure how, but she's going to screw up, and bring hellfire on the city." He tapped his nose, and nodded. "A warning."

Frowning, Jessy turned back to the door, and the three of them left. With Jessy a little ahead of them, Jack and Damien looked at each other, and winced. Yet another possible source of the unknown danger looming over the city. Fucking great.

---

Isabella's hideout was beautiful, and creepy. The underground cave, the candles, the blatant Victorian clothing, and furnishings Jack was sure he'd seen in Julias's mansion. It wasn't like the underground labyrinth of the Elysium Tower, but it was still damn impressive. It'd have taken many years to carve this hole out of the ground, and more besides to do it underneath the old theater.

“No no no! Passion, my dear boy. Passion!” Isabella’s voice. Her arms were around her chest, pressing to her breasts and raising them slightly; on purpose, no doubt. Other vamps were standing around, and watching a male and female vampire in the center of the group, kissing. Guess they were practicing for a play.

Jack smiled as Hella brought him into the main chamber of the cave, and gestured for him to sit in one of the fancy chairs. He did, and took a moment to admire its soft, red cushion, and the wood finishing. How did they sneak shit like this down here?

The girl backed off from her kissing partner. A skinny thing, with long blond hair and pale skin. Cute, and beautiful.

“Vanessa, it may be the boy cannot kiss you passionately, because you keep backing away!” Isabella said, snapping her fingers and motioning for the girl to step back in. Ok, she may have been cute and beautiful, but maybe her acting skills weren’t up to par.

“Or because Jeremy is gay,” she said, scoffing and and folding her arms across her chest. Unlike Isabella, she did it defensively; didn’t like having her acting questioned, apparently. It was enough to earn a chuckle from the crowd, and a scowl from Isabella.

“Irrelevant. We are acting.” Isabella marched up, grabbed Jeremy, and kissed him.

Jack raised a brow, and so did Hella, before the Gangrel laughed. Yeah, Isabella was dedicated to the craft, because god damn. She pulled Jeremy in close, and laid it on him. She was a tall woman, and the ornate arrangement of blond braids she sported were done up in a spiraling crown on her head tonight. Seeing someone like that, with her sharp chin and ice blue eyes, grabbing a man and kissing him, was kind of arousing. The fact both Jeremy and Isabella were gay made it awkward, but getting over that sort of stuff was part of acting, he supposed. It was the similarity between them, and Antoinette and Jack, physically, that was arousing.

Isabella was fucking hot, in a classic Victorian queen fantasy sort of way. Antoinette was a bit taller, and her bust was bigger, but that didn't change that Isabella was both tall, busty, and lean and curvy with pronounced hips. Wearing a black see-through robe with a full corset and flowing skirt underneath, Jack couldn't help but let his mind wander. Isabella was gay, and Antoinette was hardly against have women in the bedroom; Ashley and Julee, of course. The idea of Isabella and Antoinette, legs locked, kissing, naked breasts pressing to each other? God damn.

Something about the sight of a busty lady in a corset, being aggressive, that made him want to lie down in her bed and let her do whatever she wanted, and ask her if he could do whatever she wanted. A glance Hella's way suggested she might have been into the same thing, considering the way she was smiling at Isabella's aggressiveness. He'd figured Hella was an aggressive type, but then, so too was Isabella. Maybe one of them was different behind closed doors, timid and submissive. Maybe not, and they liked to fight for the top position, heh.

For the love of god, Jack. Get your mind out of the ditch, and onto the task at hand.

"You see?" Isabella said, and stepped back. "Your movements must be exaggerated and pronounced. The audience cannot see the batting of your eyelashes, dear. They will see the bent knee, the pressing of your breasts to his chest, and the gripping of his back with your hands."

Made sense, like a book cover; useless if the thumbnail wasn't eye catching.

The students resumed their scene. Some more tips from Isabella, mostly about ‘passion’ this and ‘passion’ that, before they broke for the evening. Satisfied, Isabella came over to sit on the edge of her four-poster bed. The luxurious wood sat perfectly level, despite being on the uneven ground of the smoothed cave floor. White sheets this time, pristine white, in contrast — or in defiance — to the dirt of the cave. Then again, it was damn clean, for a cave.

Hella sat beside her, then slid behind her, reached around for her lover’s stomach, and undid the robe. Isabella kept it on, but with it opened, she leaned forward a little as she hooked her hands on her knees, one over the other. The angle and corset meant the upper half of her large breasts were on display like melons on a platter. No wonder it was hard to keep his mind out of the gutter.

Hella was beautiful too, in a ‘I’ll kick your ass at rugby’ sort of way. Her dark eyes, fit body, and tan skin were gorgeous, and reminded him a lot of Clara. Oh, reminder: go see Clara, and see how things are going with Eric.

“What brings you to my humble abode, Master Terry?” she said. “Or, Mister Terry, I would imagine? A Right Hand has earned his place, after all.”

He squinted at her with one eye, and looked to Hella for a read. The Gangrel smirked, for a second, before she noticed his looking, and wiped it away. The Daeva probably didn’t like that he got the promotion then; which made sense, considering she was one of the few ancilla in the city, and was passed up on the promotion for him. Must have bothered her. Hopefully her Invictus loyalty would keep this interaction fruitful.

“Madam Laeuvion, I had a couple questions for you.”

“By all means, ask. After the damage you did to the hunters who killed Master Tellern, I am more than willing to help.”

Oh, he didn't see that coming. Especially the flirtatious gaze that came after. She was manipulating, exploiting her body and her gaze, and trying to twist him around her finger. Well fuck, she was good at it. Fucking Daeva. But her thanks for his blow against the hunters, a sort of revenge for Barry, must have been legit, considering the original request she'd made, before he was a Right Hand.

“Unfortunately, Barry Tellern's real killers remain at large; the hunters I managed to catch off guard were only pawns. And the hunters are partly what this visit is about.”

“Yes, of course.” Nodding, she snapped her fingers, and pointed to one of the students. One of the actors from earlier, a woman, still around and chatting with some of the other students, ran up in a jiffy. A very attractive woman, tan skin like Hella, but with softer features and gentler brown eyes. Her hair was black, and came down to her hips as several ponytails with intricate braid work. Definitely Isabella's childe.

Jack hadn't seen this girl before, and the beast in him said she was a young Kindred, younger than him. That was damn rare. He knew Antoinette had opened siring, but embracing new Kindred was a largely private affair. Only when they were ready, would a sire bring their new childe to the Invictus council, and only after that, show them to other Kindred.

Jack's circumstance had been unusual. This girl's was more normal, he imagined. Normal, and probably filled with sex, considering her sire was a Daeva.

“Miss Danny Florence,” Isabella said. “This is Mister Jack Terry.”

“Hello,” she said, offering a small bow. Dressed in a thin, black dress with blatant Victorian inspiration, like everything else in the room, she squirmed a little as she made eye contact with him. What had Isabella told her to make this new vampire afraid of him? Probably a comparison to Viktor, if he guessed right.

He raised a brow again, at Isabella, as she snapped her fingers, and pointed Danny at a nearby desk against the cave wall. Much as Isabella seemed to adore Victorian everything, she had a laptop on her desk. Power and internet, he was sure, with a wifi router hidden under the bed or something. He struggled to not smile at the thought, as Danny scooped up the laptop, and brought it over to Isabella.

“Your report to the council, about the old woman, was relayed to us. I have seen such a woman, in Devil’s Corner. Or rather, Hella has.” She turned the laptop, and showed him the picture.

Based on the angle, it was taken from a rooftop, similar to the mental images Scully and Mulder had tried to convey to him. A bird’s mind wasn’t a human mind though, and their attempts to convey details were pointless; might as well have been trying to understand colors outside the human viewing spectrum.

There was an old woman in a chair, with a respirator on the wheelchair’s back, and someone was pushing it. A random man with no identifying marks other than that he was wearing a gray hoodie that hid the features. He took a second to scan the hoodie for any brand marks, but there were none; a typical tactic to avoid being easily recognized. There were a couple other people as well, a man and woman, walking beside the chair. If they’d been talking to the old woman, it’d have looked normal, but they weren’t. Looked more like they were standing guard.

The next picture showed them entering an apartment building. Just some random, shitty apartment building in Devil’s Corner. But a specific building, with an address and everything. A million times better than anything he had.

“Amazing,” he said, and beamed at Hella. “Thanks.”

“No problem, kid.” With a shrug, Hella set her chin on the woman’s shoulder, as she also set her legs to dangle off the bed, around Isabella’s. “What’s your next move?”

“Not sure. Gonna take this to my sire. Finally got some kind of actionable evidence.”

“If she’s the woman you’re looking for,” Isabella said.

“Yeah, true. Think I should send a scout to find out, first?”

The icy woman shrugged. “A question for your sire, Mister Mire. But, a scout would be dangerous. If the scout alerts them to their presence, it could spell doom for said Kindred. Or the hunters will simply flee, and scurry into the cracks of the city like the cockroaches that they are.” Again, she snapped her fingers, pointed at Danny, and then pointed at the bed.

Jack raised a brow, and watched Danny sit on the bed’s side, and begin to undo her shoes. He glanced around, and noticed the other members of her group were gone. Just him and the three Kindred that, he assumed, shared a bed. Not an assumption anymore, considering Danny was peeking at him over her shoulder, as she started undoing the string-wrap buttons of her shirt.

She looked shy, and timid, just like he must have that first night with Antoinette. And he had to admit, that timid, shy look was a real turn on. If he was a more aggressive fellow, he could see how arousing that’d be, to have someone meek and shy under your touch, helpless to stop you as you make them cum their brains out.

But it was also terrifying to be that person, and he had no reason to make things harder on her. He got up, saved the apartment building’s address on his phone, texted it to Damien and Jessy — on delay until he was out of the cave — and nodded to Isabella and Hella.

“I’ll bring this up with my partners, and we’ll decide from there. Thank you again.”

“Oh? You do not wish to watch?” Isabella smirked at him, almost a sneer, and leaned back against Hella. Either they’d rehearsed this, or they rode the same wavelength pretty well, because Hella reached around her lover’s waist, and started undoing the lace of the corset. Each tug of her fingers caused the two large mounds behind its over-bust shape to tremble lightly with the movements, and he had to admit, he stared at them for a second longer than he should have. Maybe two.

“Watch? I uh, I have a girlfriend as you know, and—”

“Watch, not join. The Prince shares a passion for the theatrical display of sexuality, does she not?” Isabella’s smirk remained. She wasn’t offering to put on a sex show because she wanted to perform. She was offering so she could trap him in a bad situation, break him, manipulate him, like he was nothing more than a sex obsessed teenager. “The Prince enjoyed inviting others to create a sexual spectacle, at the ball. And I admit, it was a terribly enjoyable experience.”

He hesitated again. Not his fault! His penis had a mind of its own, and it was very much wanting to see the three women do things to each other. But he wasn’t thirteen anymore. He could control his dick. Mostly.

“Pass, but thank you for the very, very ... very tempting offer.” He made a small bow, and turned to leave.

“Mister Terry,” Isabella said, leaning back and setting her head against Hella’s neck, as the Gangrel slid off her corset. Breasts. Large, heavy breasts. Jack forced his eyes down and away. God damn it, woman. “Have you been watching the council?”

“Watching the council? You mean—”

“I mean, it is in any Kindred’s prerogative to keep an eye on other Kindred, Mister Terry. We are, after all, territorial creatures. And those who have been keeping an open eye and ear, will have no doubt noticed a buzzing noise. Something about the Madam Turio, and a dangerous game she plays?”

What the ever-living fuck. Garry had mentioned that only a fucking hour ago. What the hell.

“Where ... did you hear that?” He looked over his shoulder at her, half to hold a dramatic, Ventrue pose, and half to make it easier to not look directly at her naked torso.

“Vicky and Parker, through a friend of a friend of a friend.”

Vicky and Parker. This was getting ridiculous. How many things kept pointing at those two, and now several people pointed at Maria, too. Why Maria? What could she be doing that had everyone so concerned and aware?

“Thanks, for telling me.” Even though it reeked of manipulation.

Jack offered a nod, and gulped as he watched Hella and Danny both begin to kiss Isabella’s neck, while caressing and massaging her heavy breasts from behind her.

Yeah, get out now.

~~Natasha~~

They followed her to the shower, again. She was worried they’d want more sex, and kind of excited they might too, but three orgasms for each boy was enough to keep them satisfied for at least a couple hours. Werewolves were unendingly horny, she realized far too late into this relationship. Art grabbed the soap, Matt grabbed the shampoo, and they got to work pampering her; also, cleaning up their mess, because both wolves had taken it upon themselves to coat her in their cum. Something about being covered in their seed was so dirty, and naughty, and primal, that it tickled something inside her, made her squeal and squirm and give her best doe eyes. And if she gave them those doe eyes right now, as they washed the cum from her skin, they'd probably fuck her again.

But, enough was enough. For now.

“You know Tash,” Art said, on a knee in front of her, and one of her legs in his hands as he soaped it, “we don't know much about you.”

“You d-don't?”

“Nope.” Matt stood behind her, and started working his fingers in her hair with the shampoo. Oh, oh, heavenly. The shower was becoming a frequent place for conversation, considering how often they had to use it, post sex.

“Yeah.” Arts hands worked the soap up and down her leg, massaging as much as washing. “Who were your parents? What sort of life did you live before becoming a vampire? That sort of stuff.”

“Oh ... um, well, Kindred don't usually talk about that kind of stuff, you know? It's like, um ... that p-p-part of us died when we were embraced. We're on our second lives n-now, and we ... we try and focus on that.” Not always successfully.

They nodded, and hmmm'd a few times, in sync with each other.

“All Kindred do that?” Matt said.

“W-We do, as we age. It's important, b-because if we don't, those old memories can really ... tie us down. We're n-not like you, alive. Kindred are undead things, and that means we can b-be a b-b-bit static. Old memories can be an anchor, in a b-bad way.” Trying to explain it was difficult. How to get across that Kindred were literally dead things, pretending to be living things, and that it was easy for a dead thing to get trapped by the unchanging state of their minds, was more or less impossible. Torpor changed a Kindred's mind, not aging; they didn't age anymore.

“Still hard to believe that you're older than me. I mean, just look at this thing.” Art set both hands around her vulva, and pulled her apart, earning a squeak from her. “This thing is so damn tiny! And you shave it smooth.”

She pounded both her small fists on his huge shoulders, until the brute stopped opening her entrance like she was a bag of chips!

“You! You ... you two should trim some of that hair off. It's n-normal, in a city like Dolareido, t-to trim off or shave off p-pubic hair.”

The two wolves looked down at their naked bodies, and shrugged. “Sure,” they said.

Well, that was easy.

“You don't ... d-don't have to wax it, or anything.”

“Good fucking god!” Matt jumped back, and hit his back against the wall of the shower. Big tub, big shower, but not enough for the man. “I didn't even consider that!”

Giggling, she turned around, and pat the big guy on his stomach. “Relax! I s-said you d-d-don't have to. Just shave, or trim.” Matt was a typical mountain man, big and gruff, lots of body hair. It looked good on him, but she spent her first and second life in Dolareido. In such cities, fashion was always on the mind, and quick to adopt the newest fads. Maybe some day, it'd be with plenty of hair again, but for a good twenty years now, it was to go hairless.

Easy for her to do. She shaved her body down once, and simply didn't regrow it unless she wanted to. Laughing, she thought of Art and Matt shaving themselves down, only to regrow all their hair in a puff of comedic smoke.

With her back turned to Art, she should have predicted the man would take advantage. She squeaked, and tried to turn around, but he didn't let her, one hand gripping her hip while the other soaped up her butt. Ah well, it needed to be cleaned anyway.

"Prince tell you about the new Uratha in town?" Art said.

"Um, only a little. Eric, r-right?" Jessy and Tash had both seen him, talked to him, but before they knew he was a werewolf.

"Yeah." Matt set his hands on her head, and continued shampooing her hair, from the front this time. "We haven't see him yet. Avery's description is he's a black dude, average height, shaved head, clean shaven." His smile was so warm, and she returned it as she took a loofa, and started lathering his body too. Like washing steel.

Right. Nodding, she reached up, and washed the man's shoulders as best she could from so far below. "W-Works at Bloodlust."

"We should pay him a visit," Art said. "But, Clara said he's not too interested in us."

"He doesn't want to learn ab-bout ... who he is?"

Matt shook his head, and turned her around to begin washing her back. "When you first change, you get some memories bestowed on you, from Luna."

A cough drew both their eyes down to Art. "Just because the transformation gives us memories, doesn't mean it came from the moon." Apparently, he didn't agree.

“Luna is more than the moon.” Matt’s grip on Tash’s back got a little harder. Not uncomfortable, but awkward.

“Says you.”

“Come on, Art. David spoke to the spirits. They said come here. Avery herself said the visions—”

“You ever had a vision, Matt?”

“No, but—”

“How many times we have to have this discussion? We have no proof, just someone’s word.”

“You sound like Noah. You don’t trust Avery?”

“That’s not what I said.”

If Natasha could shrink her tiny body more than it already was naturally, she would. Art and Matt were joined-at-the-hip friends, and to hear them start arguing was very strange. Stranger, because they were all naked, and she was standing between them, getting washed.

She looked up over her shoulder at Matt. He wasn’t the same as Art. Art was a skeptic, and Matt was not. Tash was a skeptic, but that didn’t mean she didn’t appreciate the power of someone’s commitment to someone else.

And then there was Matt’s past. He lost his family. Part of her wanted to ask for more details about that, but then she avoided the issue when they asked about her previous life; quite the little hypocrite she was. She could talk about her parents, if she could dig up the memories, if she could find the strength to wade through that shithole.

“Let’s ... g-go see Eric,” she said. Redirecting their energy toward something more productive should hopefully be a good idea. Look at her, being a mom.

---

Eric did not want to be seen, not by Matt and Art anyway. One glance their way and the young Uratha scowled. He was a good scowler; maybe he practiced it, for his old fighting job. It was enough to give Tash pause, for sure. Matt and Art nudged her forward, and she gulped as she came in closer to the man. He was up on the second floor by the stairs, one elbow on the railing, and looking down at the small crowd below. So much more intimidating than that time she’d caught Jessy fucking him in a booth; his first change must have changed him in ways she could never fathom.

She managed a small smile at him. He looked great in a suit, but reeked of the sort of man who hated suits. A shame, Antoinette would say.

“Hello Eric,” she said. “This is Art-turo, and Matthew.”

“I suppose you’re with Avery.” Venom dripped from his words. Something must have pissed him off, and it had to be related to Avery. Weird, considering Avery should be helping the man. But Art and Matt said he wasn’t interested; still, she was hoping that was exaggeration. Apparently not.

Art raised a hand in a small wave. “Ni-zu tag,” he said. Tash raised a brow. Whatever he said, it was enough to make Eric snort, and set his gaze back to the crowd underneath them. “Knew you’d be an asshole.”

Natasha facepalmed. Ok, if Avery acted like that with Eric on their first meet, she couldn’t blame the bouncer for being annoyed.

But Art’s words managed to pull a small smile from Eric, before he turned to face them full on, one elbow on the railing.

“Seems to be a common attribute among our kind.”

Matt, behind Art, pat his friend on the shoulders, both hands. “I take offense to that. Not all of us are like Noah or Avery, or this asshole right here.”

Art elbowed Matt in the gut, hard enough to earn a grunt and backstep from him, before Art stepped around Eric and came to the railing as well. “Avery says she gets the impression you want to be a ghost wolf.”

“Ghost wolf?”

“Yeah.” Matt came in as well, but he made sure to put Tash between him and Eric, by the railing. Nice of him, to include her; or he was trying to keep some distance from the mean man. “Means you don’t bother with the joining a pack and being a part of the great hunt.”

“Not actively, at least,” Art said.

“Then, yeah, I guess that describes me pretty well.” Eric shrugged, and glanced up at both Art and Matt. Much as Tash could tell Eric was a strong, deadly fellow, Art was a tall guy, and Matt was a giant. He looked small, in comparison. “Got no interest in your pack, or whatever.”

Smirking, Art looked down at the crowd. “You don’t want a piece of the pack, I get that. But Siskur-Dah is in your blood now. It’ll come to you, or you’ll go to it. Unavoidable.”

“Says you.”

“It’s true,” Matt said. “You act like Avery came to you trying to recruit you, military style. Not true ... mostly. She’s throwing you a life jacket, because like it or not, this shit’s going to show up on your doorstep from now on.”

“I can swim fine on my own.”

This Eric man was obstinate. Tash smiled, and tried to hide it by looking down at the dancing crowd. No wonder Jessy liked him. The girl didn't normally deal with tough assholes on such terms, and Eric must have been a breath of fresh air for her. Or rather, a unique taste of blood. And the blood was most definitely a plus.

She licked her lips, and glanced up at Matt beside her. To sink her teeth into the massive meat of his neck, and let the ambrosia flow into her mouth, was scary addictive. Tasted so damn good. And Jessy seemed to be a bit attached to this man, so, the blood might have had something to do with that. Or it was his asshole behavior. Both, definitely both.

“They're only trying t ... t-to help,” she said.

“No one helps for no reason. And Avery already extended the offer to join her pack; though I could tell she meant as a rock under her foot.”

She raised a brow. “A rock?”

“Yeah. She didn't actually want me in the pack, just under her thumb.”

“Can you blame her?” Shrugging, Art turned to face the man. “We don't know you.”

“But,” Matt said, “we'd like to. You're Uratha now, and that warrants learning who you are.”

“ ... just a guy who wants to be left alone.”

Art laughed again. “Well, ghost wolf, you may want to be left alone, but you're in the shit now. You'll see them everywhere; maybe not like David, but you'll see them. You'll smell them, notice them, and when push comes to shove, you'll feel the drive to hunt them down and fix the shit they fuck up.”

Matt nodded. “Father Wolf’s duty.”

“I have no interest in any ancient being’s duty.”

In any other circumstance, Tash would have watched and said nothing, let the people talk, argue their own stuff, stuff she had no business getting her nose into. She knew nothing about spirits, or Father Wolf, after all. But, things were different now, now that she was a member of the Ordo Dracul; not a real member, not yet, but serving one nonetheless. This sort of stuff was becoming her business, like it or not.

“What w-will you do then?” she said. “M-Matt and Art are sure that things will ... w-will happen, whether you want them to or not. And—”

“And they can all fuck right the hell off.” Eric put his hands into his pockets, and headed toward the stairs. A glance up at Matt was enough to make the giant move out of the way, so the man could continue on his way. No look back, no glance, no invitation to follow him, nothing. One moment there, next moment gone.

He was a mean guy.

“ ... I ... guess that was a b-bad idea.”

Matt shrugged. “Nah, that was fine. Some new wolves just take time to acclimate, and from what Avery tells me, this dude had a rough first change. Not the roughest, but rough none the less. I imagine it was rough for you, becoming a vamp, right?”

“It ... it was.”

Art headed over to an open booth, and the three of them sat down, her in the center. It was nice, with them around her, hiding her and protecting her from the annoying world of Bloodlust. Had a safe feeling.

A safe feeling. Been a long time since she had a feeling like that, to feel safe with other people, especially boys. It was strange, and, welcome.

She frowned, leaned forward toward the booth table, and set her hands on it as fists. “I t-told you that ... that Kindred don’t like t-talk about their past much, from when they were still alive.”

“Yeah,” Art said, “but I mean, you can leave it like that. You don’t have to say anything.”

Sighing, she shook her head. “It’s ok. I learned ab-b-bout you, Art.” The man had had a rough childhood, growing up alone in Tijuana. “And Matt, Jacob ... that m-must have been horrible.” And the gentle giant lived in perpetual sadness over the death of his family, that he did not get to witness. She knew things about them, and now, maybe she felt safe enough to return the favor.

“D-D ... Daniel,” she said, “he turned me. Embraced me. It was a ... w-weird ... moment. I was offered a cursed immortality, and he warned me ... w-warned me that it’d be hard, and horrible, and that I’d have to leave m-my parents behind. I was young.” And she would forever look young because of it. “B-But, I didn’t realize ... how bad it would be, leaving them. Or how bad it would be ... w-when parents think ... their child has died.” Her fists melted into flat hands, before she sank back into the booth, and hugged herself. “Mom got sick. It w-wasn’t long before she ... d-died. And D-Dad, he ... he killed himself, not long after.”

Both wolves stared at her, then each other, then her again, before they too sank into the booth.

“Heavy shit,” Art said.

“Yeah.” Nodding, Matt reached out, and slid an arm around her shoulders. She didn’t fight him. Normally, she’d very much want to be alone, thinking these sorts of thoughts, but she’d opened this door, this gate, and Art and Matt were looking on through it. They were stepping through it.

Art set his hand on her thigh, and gave it a light pat. “How are your memories? Not sure if that’s offensive to ask; I know Kindred and their memories can be shaky.”

“I haven’t t-taken a long torpor.” Not that the nightly torpor of vampire sleep wasn’t enough to twist memories with scary dreams, but a proper torpor, to let the blood lust settle, was not something she expected to deal with for many decades yet. Thankfully. “I can ... I was there for ... my mom’s funeral. And then later, my d-dad’s...”

Both men winced. Yeah, no more words needed on that. And judging from the reaction, they had gone through similar. Matt must have had to go through a funeral for his family, and judging from what he said before, she wouldn’t be surprised if there’d been no body to bury. And Art, she was afraid to ask for details on his situation; troubled childhood and forced to live alone could mean anything.

Maybe she’d ask for more, later, but—

“Wow, who died?” Jessy came up over the stairs, and walked over to them, head tilted to the side. The three of them glared at her. She threw up her hands, palms forward. “Whoa, sorry for asking.”

Tash shook her head, and let her eyes relax. Not Jessy’s fault, and her brutal personality was a nice change of pace from Tash’s inner monologue. And while she was a very forward woman, she didn’t have any of Eric’s bitterness. Maybe it’d be good if she rubbed off on him.

“It’s ok,” she said. “Um, just...”

“Heavy stuff,” Art said.

“Uh huh?” Shrugging, Jessy slid into the booth, and got cozy up beside Matthew. “You really are gigantic, you know that? Tash, you have to let me have a taste.”

“W-What? No! You have Eric, g-g-go find him. He was here moments ago.”

“Was he? Shit, I missed him. He was supposed to be working, but ... but you fuckers drove him off, didn’t you?” And, like she’d known Matt for decades, she punched him in the arm.

He returned it, and grinned. Buddy punches were a language he could understand.

“We didn’t drive him off,” Art said. “I mean ... I suppose we did. We’re just trying to help him out, make a choice, get him into the fold before he gets buried in shit. He’s Uratha now, and he’s not going to be able to ignore all instincts, the signs, the everything.”

Jessy shrugged. “He’s his own man, let him do what he wants.”

Art raised a brow. “Let him do what he wants? Don’t you have him under your thumb? Paying his salary, putting a roof over his head, and let’s not forget, threatening to kill him if he breaks your Masquerade?”

Uh oh.

The Gangrel didn’t like that. She leaned forward, one elbow on the table, and sneered at Art. “Our Masquerade, asshole. Don’t think just because we do a better job keeping the Masquerade safe, that it doesn’t also protect you. And besides, we were going to keep things the way they were with Eric because it's a mutually beneficial relationship."

"As long as he doesn't go into a Death Rage at an inconvenient time." Sighing, Art shook his head some more, and waved his hand through the air. Dismissing. Jessy would not like that, either.

"We can handle it," she said, growling.

Tash gulped, and reached out toward Jessy to tap her hand. "Um, they're ... they're v-very ... d-d-dangerous when ... when they do that." Not that they were beyond recovery. She'd managed to break through to Art and Matt, but it was a close call.

Jessy shrugged, and mirrored Art's dismissing wave. "You telling me your two boys here never go wolfy on you, maybe during a good fuck?"

"J-Jessy! I'm not ... n-not into bestiality!"

"Of fucking course not. I don't mean fucking when they're wolves, but when they're in their big transformed mode, you know?" Jessy leaned back in her seat, and let her eyes drift upward as a goofy smile sneaked onto her lips. "I want to see you fuckers in that form. Must be wicked awesome."

Matt and Art raised a brow at each other, looked down at Tash, then Jessy, then around again, before Matt finally spoke up. "The Gauru form is dangerous, Jessy. Very. If we don't struggle to keep control, it can lead into a Death Rage."

"Yeah," Art said. "It's a fine wire to walk."

"But can you fuck in that state?" The stupid Gangrel woman shivered, and winked at Tash. "You guys get like, nine-feet tall, right? Human wolf hybrid monster things? Towering behemoths of muscle and raw power? Sexy as all fuck?"

Matt choked on a cough, while Art continued to raise a brow. There was no talking sense into Jessy. Tash knew that, and now so did her boyfriends.

“That doesn’t mean we couldn’t use Dalu,” Art said at least, and he grinned Tash’s way. “Bigger, stronger body, more muscle, but not werewolf mode.”

Werewolf mode? Ugh, these boys were regressing down to Jessy’s way of talking. Tash would not allow that!

“If y-you want t-t-to experiment, go find Eric, and ask him! I d-don’t ... do ... that.” She glanced Matt and Art’s way, and shrank into her booth a little. Now the image was in all their heads. Dalu mode, she hadn’t seen, but it sounded like a bigger, stronger person. Gauru mode, she’d seen too many times, and the idea of having sex with one of those titans of steel was scary.

Scary, and thrilling. Tash was the one who’d told Jessy she thought their Gauru form was a towering behemoth of muscle and raw power, and maybe she said it with a little more smiling and shivering than she meant to. Jessy interpreted that as her thinking they were sexy, evidently. And, well, they were kind of sexy, in a ‘oh god it’s going to eat me’ sort of way. Was that sexy? Maybe it was, a little. The idea of those enormous beasts pinning her down, tearing her clothes off, and ... and ... doing things to her? Would they even be able to fit inside her?

If she’d been blushing life, she’d be blushing beet red.

“K well, I’m gonna go look for Eric, see if he’s willing to give it a go.”

Art rolled his eyes, and threw up his hands in small surrender. Yeah, there was no talking to Jessy.

“Ok, well,” Matt said, “far be it from me to tell you how to live your life, or enjoy your sex life, but you’re poking at a dangerous place, Jessy. Gauru is sacred, and ... yeah, dangerous.” Poor man couldn’t find a better word for dangerous, and it wouldn’t have mattered if he did. Jessy’s mind was set.

“Good to know.” Jessy hopped out of the booth, and went hunting for her target.

“That girl is peculiar,” Art said.

“You’re t-telling me.”

“I mean, she really knows what she wants, doesn’t she?”

“ ... I d-dunno.” Tash shook her head, leaned forward, and set her elbows on the table, so she could rest her chin in her palms. “I think she ... she m-might want something a little more romantic. Rough! She likes rough, b-but ... I think maybe she’s...” Maybe she’s a little more like Tash than Jessy figured. Maybe she’d like a little romance too.

And of course, Tash was more like Jessy than she’d ever thought.

Her phone rang. Jack’s ring. “Hello? Jack?”

“Hey Tash. We’re having a bit of a get-together at the Bloodlust later this evening, talk about the hunters and stuff, you in?”

“Uh, s-sure. I’m already here.”

“Sounds good. Triss and Jen and Damien will be there. Fiona too, but she’s not answering her phone; probably underground. And Antoinette’s coming.”

“The P-Prince is coming? Um ... that’s ... s-sure, ok.” This was going to be a weird meeting.

---

---

~~Eric~~

He didn't want to do this song and dance. He didn't want to hunt spirits. He didn't want to deal with any of this ridiculous crap.

Go home? No, Avery knew where he lived, and Clara and Carter were there already. He wanted to see his cat, but Kat would be safe there without him for a day. A day was all he needed, a day to clear his head. A day thinking about what Athalia told him.

Drifting through the dark streets of Dolareido, he let his wandering soul guide him between the grand buildings of sin. Once he was deep in an alley, he set his back to a wall, and looked up. Sun would be rising soon. Sleeping during the day was fucking weird, or at least it should have been, but wolves seemed perfectly capable of hunting at night; preferred it, even. He could feel that, sense it, feel the tips of every hair on his body tell him that night time was the better time to be up and doing things. Day time? Pointless. Prey hid during the day, slept, and other predators took the same queue.

Daytime was for the humans. For him and the other freaks, nighttime was the new life. It made visiting his dad a little problematic, but his new body seemed fine running on less sleep when he needed it to.

He smiled, and looked at the moon. His new body was fucking great. The new thorns in his side, not so much. But at least the thought of being forced to hunt things didn't make him want to gag, like driving a cab did.

Hunting. Hunting spirits. How the fuck did that work? What the fuck was a spirit? All he had were strange memories and knowledge that didn't belong to him, climbing up through the gravel of his brain, and showing him images of things. 'Things' was as good a descriptor as he could give, because it was everything and anything.

Spirits? Hithim, his new memories told him. And the hithimu and hithisu. They were things he was supposed to deal with, and he had no fucking clue how to do that, other than to kill it. Kill it with fang and claw and strength.

The Meninna preferred to hunt shartha. That's what Avery was doing in Dolareido, finding a home for her pack, and dealing with the shartha. The word itself sent ice up his spine, and he looked down from the moon to the asphalt. Cigarette butts. Those he understood. Spirits and ancient host creatures, that he was supposed to somehow hunt? That he didn't understand. He wasn't sure he wanted to understand.

“Why me?”

“Why you indeed.”

Eric jumped, and spun around. Someone had snuck up on him? He doubted anyone could sneak up on him, with his new senses to protect him.

“Who is this one?” the voice said.

“New. New Uratha.”

“New. Weak.”

“Weak and open.”

“Open to us!”

Movement caught his eye, and yanked it to the wall. The shadow was billowing, as if it could catch a breeze. Curves, cresting against the light like collapsing waves, the black reached out across the asphalt around him, and licked at the space beneath his feet.

Slowly, with all the haste of the ocean tide, eyes began to form in the shadows around him. White eyes. They glowed, casting subtle whites around him and sending fresh shadows out into the blackness of the alleyway.

“Fuck you.” Ok, spirits. Spirits were coming for him, like Avery said they might. The fuck sort of spirits were hanging out in shadows?

Shadow spirits. Literal spirits of darkness, probably with no other desire than to turn off lights.

No, it was more specific than that. A simple shadow spirit wouldn't do this, behave like this. These things reached out for him from the walls, from the cracks of black around dumpsters and building corners, from around old crates, from around broken bottles where the light was cast aside by the curving glass. They weren't simply shadow spirits, they were spirits of dark alleys, of hiding places, of the cracks in a city where the filth and sin welled up like pus around the scabs of a wound.

He knew that. Why did he know that? How? Memories, understanding, kernels of knowledge swimming in the gray matter of his brain, and rising to the surface. And cravings along with it. He wanted to sink his teeth into these spirits, tear them apart, rip them open and devour their essence. They needed to be thinned, before their rampant desires turned this whole district into nothing more than a shadowy corner where people could get lost in the worst humanity had to offer.

He ran. The eyes stayed in the dark, and they called out to him. Open to them. Let them in. He belonged in the dark.

He supposed, if it wasn't for all the other shit being dumped on him, white eyes in the darkness would have scared him; they did a little. But compared to all the other shit he'd seen in the past month, some white eyes looking at him from shadows was rather tame. Didn't change that he didn't want to be near that, anywhere near that. Stay the fuck away from him. Just leave him alone and let him do his own thing.

Breathe, just breathe. Luna's advice? He didn't understand. How the fuck was he supposed to understand that?

He adjusted his suit jacket, and made off toward nowhere.

---

---

~~Antoinette~~

Antoinette sighed as she watched the squabbles of her Primogen. Garry's choice of childe was going to cause problems, but she knew the man had been speaking with Jeremy Long on several occasions, and more besides, over the past few months before the embrace. There had undoubtedly been months before that, where the man was meeting with Long as well. Either way, his request was reasonable, despite her knowing full well it would lead to issues with the Xnomina.

The Invictus council did not agree. They leaned over her beautiful glass table, and barked at the Carthian leader. He returned their barks with his own. Bark. Bark bark. Woof. If she did not know better, she would have assumed she was in a room filled with Uratha, howling their complaints.

Why did she pursue this life, this role as Prince? Perhaps she had a martyr complex, and felt it her duty to bear the sins of her race. She did want to fix her species, prevent their self destruction. Truly, she did. But sometimes, only sometimes, she wondered what it would be like to abandon all responsibilities, and simply exist. Would it be so bad? No one was strong enough to challenge her, harm her. There was nothing and no one who could threaten her if she wanted to abandon this foolish crusade, and simply enjoy her second life.

She leaned back in her chair, and combed her hair over her shoulder as she let her mind wander. A terrible sin, not paying attention in her own meetings. But, at the moment, she was overpowered with the need to fantasize.

She could take Jack, and disappear into another city. Fresh people, fresh faces. There would be dangers, but she was confident she could handle them all. She and her lover would hide deep beneath the earth during the day, and come nightfall, they would do whatever whim came upon the gentle night breeze. Enslave several kine, and enjoy an orgy? A regular indulgence, to be sure. Ashley and Julee would come, of course; she was Daeva, and no self-respecting Daeva feasted upon random kine when they had devoted ghouls, whose blood they were already familiar with.

But then, perhaps she could embrace Ashley and Julee, turn them, welcome them as Kindred, and release them from her bind. They would be free to find men and women to seduce and devour to their heart's content. Other Kindred were not to touch her little Ventrue, but that did not mean they would not be welcome to visit. It would be fun, for Ashley and Julee, Kindred in their own right, to engage in their own sexual hedonism, with Antoinette and Jack watching. She could hold her Ventrue in her lap, facing the orgy before them, and softly massage his cock in her hands as his head rested between her breasts. And before them, Ashley and Julee could be surrounded by a dozen kine, all men, and each could bury her in white fluid, after pounding them into a slew of wet orgasms.

And once the sexual delights were done, Jack and Antoinette could move on, and worry for nothing but tomorrow night. Perhaps they could move to a different city? Dangerous for Kindred to go anywhere without protection from the sun, but she was strong enough to dig deep holes in the earth in an emergency. But holes could be found, and the two of them would be helpless if caught in torpor.

Reality shattered her dreams with a hammer of cold steel. Yes, there were realities that elder Kindred could not ignore. Risk-taking was how you died, and elders became elders by digging into whatever locale they chose. Drifting was not an option. If she moved to another city, it would be to live, not drift. But then, that did not mean she would have to become Prince once more. She could simply exist, live her unlife, and do nothing but engage in carnal delights with Jack until they were sore from the effort. Until they would be inevitably dragged into the squabbles of the local Kindred, or perhaps other paranormals, or even accursed mages and their insane pursuits.

And for all her fantasizing, she could not abandon the Ordo Dracul. The need to find truth and prepare for the future, were deep-seeded needs in her soul, and no amount of running would silence those inner demands.

“You can’t expect us to let this pass,” Michael MacDonald said. Such a loud man, with none of Viktor’s control.

Hell must have frozen over, for her to miss Viktor Honors.

“You have no say in who I sire.” Garry leaned forward, set his elbows and hands on the table, and offered something between a grin and sneer at the opposing Gangrel. Bark bark. “Only the Prince can deny me that right.”

“Did she know it was Mister Long you were grooming?” Maria said.

Spoken about in third person. Antoinette did not appreciate that. She sat up straighter in her chair, and glared at the rotting Nosferatu.

“I did.”

“I can’t believe this.” Julias stirred in his seat, as if sitting upon fire. “This timing could not be worse, Tones. We don’t need to be squabbling, when we have hunters in the city.” If this were an Invictus meeting, he would be pacing about, she was sure, and bestowing commandments from on high, as Ventrue were prone to do. But this was her meeting, her domain, and he was forced to temper his reflexes. Good.

“I do not need to justify my allowance for his choice,” she said. “But, in the pursuit of peace, know that Garry has been grooming Long for months. Have you not, Mister Tones?”

“Yeah. Known him for a while, and we’ve been working together on things for some time. He did me a solid, so I did him one and turned him into a ghoul. Things progressed smoothly, and he earned the right to be Kindred.” The subtle grin tainted his words. He knew Xnomina and Terra Den did not cooperate, and Long’s economic power in contesting Xnomina was icing for Garry’s choice. Of course, once the man was a ghoul, Garry’s manipulation of Long was complete; ghouls followed the orders of their masters with the utmost loyalty, after all. Embracing the man was a defensive maneuver, so the Invictus could not challenge Long directly without challenging the Carthians indirectly.

Killing another covenant’s ghoul was a terrible thing, but would not warrant war. Killing a member of a covenant, on the other hand, did. Bitter memories.

“Garry’s strange choice of friends,” Jacob said, finally joining the conversation, “is irrelevant. What matters more, is the unusual circumstance his game has brought to life. Eric Tanverson is Uratha.” The eyeless monster leaned back in his chair, and ground his teeth until Antoinette could hear the enamel tear away. “Another fucking wolf in our city.”

“That is a strange circumstance,” Garry said. “Long’s games against Xnomina were only in the typical kine context. He had no idea about Eric.”

Julias nodded. “None of us did. Except for Fiona, probably.”

“Yes,” Maria said. “Begotten can see far more than we expected, if they can tell an Uratha is Uratha before even they do.”

Fiona. If Jack’s request to the others went as planned, Antoinette would spend a couple hours at Bloodlust with her lover, and his friends, Fiona included. And perhaps Eric would be working tonight as well. The silly drama and interactions of the masses were not her concern, and yet, such silliness was where much of life’s joys were to be found. It might be good for her, to take a step back from her role for a couple hours, and simply watch others talk. Jack had said they were to talk of the hunters as well; a conversation worth hearing.

“Mister Tones,” she said, “see that Mister Long does not cause chaos for the Invictus. Terra Den and Xnomina are, of course, up to the management of their respective leaders, but any struggle between the Carthians and Invictus is to be done without the death of Kindred. The hunters are the primary concern. Do I make myself clear?” She met the Gangrel’s eyes, and stared into his depths, like slicing open his ribcage with a scalpel to expose his heart.

“Of course.” He met her gaze for a few seconds before looking away. Like with a dog, holding eye contact was a sign of aggression, and to hold it longer, a sign of dominance. She won, as she always did.

“Azamel,” Julias said, “gave us some info that we’ve been looking into, as you know. The old woman that might have performed the ritual. We’ll be investigating a possible sighting and location, in Devil’s Corner.”

“Get Avery under your thumb yet?” Garry said. “She might help if you ask.”

Julias sneered at the man. To see the Primogen meetings damage his patience was sad, but Antoinette said nothing. Not the time.

The meeting continued. Garry complained about the Mirrden district takeover by Xnomina. The Invictus council complained about Long and his sudden inclusion in the Danse Macabre. Jacob complained about another Uratha, though at least Jacob’s complaints were half in jest, as if to mock the others for their petty annoyances. Julias pushed for more awareness and aggression in dealing with the hunters, while the others cautioned patience, and to let Azamel handle her own problems.

A tug of war of topics, that led nowhere. Such was unlife. She looked forward to, what would hopefully be, a more enjoyable conversation later tonight.

---

Bloodlust. In the past, she would come here with Ashley and Julee, and watch the world unfold. Her frequent visits to the night lounge were a part of her game to pit Viktor and Tony against each other, oh so long ago. Without such a reason, she rarely came here; that was more due to her need to deal with present circumstances, however. A friendly, innocent visit would be a welcome change.

Jack should already be here, waiting for her, with Beatrice, Jennifer, and Fiona. Others were likely to come, she was sure, such as Athalia, or perhaps Jessy. She had also messaged sweet Natasha about the meeting, only to discover she was already there, waiting.

What was the Prince doing, wasting her precious time on as pointless an endeavor as ‘hanging out’? It was not pointless, as she knew. Despite the overwhelming need to work, work, and continue working, it was a road to self destruction. One had to take time to enjoy the simple things in life, such as a conversation with acquaintances, or there was little point in living.

And, the visit was not without other merits. Assessing the situation of those involved, and what they knew of the hunters, was valuable. Was Beatrice making progress with Jacob. Was Fiona a sweet, innocent little creature, or a master manipulator. Was Jennifer pursuing sexuality with the same intellectual standpoint as Antoinette; a potential ally, that one, if Jacob had not recruited her first.

She stepped into the night lounge masquerading as a club, and smiled at the kine that looked her way. Oh yes, she was a beautiful woman, she knew it, they knew it, and there was a game to be played when people made eye contact, under such a circumstance. Flirting with the eyes, saying things without saying them. 'If you served me, I would make your nights filled with bliss beyond imagining. Too bad.' Things of that sort.

She was a very tall woman, and that was intimidating for many, especially when combined with her long white hair. Kindred, Uratha, and Begotten cared little for the shape of the body when assessing threat, but kine were dominated by such measurements. She was a tower, and a deadly looking one at that, to the simple, living creatures indulging in her city. If only they knew she owned their lives. The thought put a smile on her lips, and she shared it with the kine as she walked past them, toward one of the stairways on the side of the dance floor.

She had decided to wear one of her dresses meant for a nightclub. It left little to the imagination, with its long, black curves covering only one of her legs, down to the ankle, while leaving the other leg exposed up to the high hip. No underwear of course, and anyone fortuitous enough for a convenient viewing angle would see her sex; fashion, in the new world. The dress's chest was barely more than a sliver of fabric for each breast, wide enough to cover her nipples, and rise to hook behind her neck. It left much of her bust exposed, especially as the chest straps reached down to her stomach, with plenty of room for her breasts to sway with her movements against the small slivers of fabric. And, of course, the dress was open back, to complete the illusion of nudity.

People stared as she walked past. They knew her, here, despite many months between visits. It was a blessing and a curse, having distinct features. If she continued visiting for years yet, she would eventually have to stop, for decades, before the story of the white haired woman passed. It had happened before, and it would happen again; unusually tall with white hair made her hard to forget, and dark amber, almost red eyes, made it impossible. And if the story included the 'unaging' descriptor, it would attract unwanted attention.

But it would be many years before she would have to take such actions with Bloodlust. Perhaps she should visit more often, and enjoy its carefree, sinful nature with Jack and her ghouls.

She made her way up the stairs, and scanned the booths. The red light did little to expose the hidden faces in the darkness, but the light pulsed white with the beat of the bass-heavy music, visual flare to the heartbeat of the club, and exposed the people hiding on the second floor.

Two of whom, she recognized as Jessy Herrington's ghouls. Each had a kine woman in their booth, and were kissing them. Jessy herself was a sexually open-minded person, and Antoinette appreciated that, but letting her ghouls sleep with random strangers seemed crass. Then again, Jessy was Gangrel, and Antoinette would never be able to understand how those brutes thought.

Jessy though, was nowhere to be seen.

Jack was in the back, with Beatrice and Jennifer, and Jack raised a hand to offer a finger wave. Adorable. They had chosen the larger booth, center and back, to make room for the other guests. Damien, she was not happy to see, but she could understand his presence. And the man was quite attractive, especially when wearing some business casual clothing, his suit jacket undone, and no tie. Natasha was there as well, and so too was Arturo and Matthew.

This would be Antoinette's first time speaking with the Uratha without Avery's presence. A potentially disastrous situation, but if Vola felt comfortable bringing her boyfriends to the meeting, then she must have felt comfortable with their interaction with her. Time to test those waters; with Jack's presence of course, in case she needed his skills as intermediary.

The two wolves were dressed in dark jeans, with Matt in a white shirt, Art in black. The two beasts were built from steel, and had no need for a jacket's fake shoulders to emphasize their builds. They came with plenty of emphasis. They were massive examples of male strength, testosterone, and mass. Antoinette could not help but smile at the thought of little Vola, trapped between the two enormous men, and struggling to hold on as they fucked her at the same time. Delightful.

Beatrice was in jeans as well, and a cropped tank top, black, that hugged her chest tight enough for everyone to notice she had pierced nipples. The girl was far more into her looks than she realized; Julius knew it, Antoinette knew it, and she was probably coming to learn it, too. Jennifer, Beatrice's opposite, wore her love of beauty and fashion on her sleeve, and tonight, she was wearing something meant to catch eyes. All the eyes, apparently. Antoinette could not see her skirt from the angle, but she was wearing a tube top, white, that also had sleeves; a pleasant contrast to its exposing nature. The tube top itself was nothing more than a thin strip, tiny enough that it would have been scandalous on a beach, let alone in a night club. The woman should have been Daeva. Jack, of course, was dressed as any self respecting Invictus Ventrue would: the full suit ensemble. A two-button single breasted jacket, gray, with a tie to match. At least it was a casual suit, with notch lapels and fitted silhouette.

People started to shift out of the booth, no doubt to greet her properly, but she shook her head, and motioned only for Arturo, Matthew, and Natasha to step out. They caught on quickly, and slid out, so she could slide in there place, and take the center of the booth.

As much as tonight was about relaxing, it was also about official business. And in either circumstance, she would take the throne.

“Prince,” Damien, Natasha, Beatrice, and Jennifer said.

“My Prince,” Jack said, smiling up at her as he shivered for a moment. This was not a typical circumstance, her joining him in his social affairs. Perhaps he was nervous she might be cruel to him, like she had been at the ball, and bathe him in sexuality.

She might, but not yet.

“Prince,” the two wolves said, once they noticed the proper greeting.

“Kindred, Uratha,” she said. “I am glad my joining you has not dissuaded this meeting.”

Beatrice shrugged. “We were just gonna talk, maybe watch a movie before sunrise. This is cool, too.”

Antoinette nodded, and made subtle glances toward the rest of them, to see how they reacted to Beatrice’s tone. The Nosferatu was forever familiar, and Antoinette was sure Arturo and Matthew would be as well, once they realized it was acceptable to be so. She was not sure it was acceptable; perhaps it was better to keep that interaction formal.

Jennifer was staring at her, her bust, her dress, her everything. Maybe the Ventrue had thought Antoinette would come to Bloodlust in something a little more conservative. A silly notion. What was more intriguing though, was how the two werewolves struggled to not look at her. It was only natural of course, when wearing a dress designed to emphasize and display her beauty and sexuality. Natasha was looking too, which was terribly adorable. Had she told her two boyfriends that she had spied on the Prince while she made love to her little Ventrue?

No one said anything else, and Antoinette raised a brow as she looked at the rest of them.

“Please, speak as if I were not present.”

“Easier said than done,” Beatrice said. “No offense.”

Antoinette rolled her eyes, leaned back in the booth seat, and slid out an arm to hook it over Jack’s shoulders. She pulled him, snug to her side, and grinned at Beatrice.

“Try.”

Beatrice would never be convinced with requests or bribes, no, but the juvenile woman would respond to challenge.

The Nos smirked at her, shrugged, and relaxed into the booth in mimicry. Antoinette could tell Beatrice, and all of them, were tense with her around, tense in the way someone might be if they expected a larger predator to randomly become aggressive and attack them. They did not know what to think about her presence. Antoinette did not, either. She was here as Jack’s date, more or less, not as the Prince, but that was an inescapable part of her life. It would be interesting to see if the others could move past it.

Arturo mirrored the Nos’s shrug, and leaned in. “What’s the news?”

“Isabella and Hella think the shaman woman is in Devil’s Corner, too,” Jack said. “She’s managed to get a sighting, a convincing one, and an apartment building to investigate.”

“That’s pretty damn good.” Matt leaned in as well, though Antoinette could see he kept sneaking glances her way. Both to check and see if she was agitated or looking to be aggressive, but also to examine her body. Poor man had no sense of subtlety, and when combined with his jovial nature, made him adorable. Art wore his grit and cynicism openly, where Matt did the same with his gentleness and kindness. What had Natasha said they sometimes called Matt? Lenny? The Of Mice and Men reference was terribly cute, and fit the two of them well.

“This shaman woman,” Jennifer said, “we think she’s the one that performed the ritual, that we think led them to Jack? We think this is her, and we think she might be in this apartment building? And we think all this because of Azamel’s vague description?”

“Correct,” Damien said. “This could easily be nothing. It could also be a trap. I should investigate first.”

“You volunteering?” Jack said.

“Yes. Though I would appreciate some nearby back up, in case things get sour.”

“Of course. I’ll be there.”

And just like that, Jack had thrown himself into harm’s way, again. Far be it from her to tell the boy how to live his second life, but that was exactly what she had done last night. At least this time, he would be on the sidelines, while the Sanctified boy would be the one risking his life.

“You coming?” Art said, looking at her.

Before she could respond, Jennifer leaned in. “Elders don’t normally do things hands-on, Arturo.”

Art raised a brow, before nodding his head toward Antoinette while looking at Jennifer. “This looks hands-on to me.”

Once he looked her way again, Antoinette returned his gaze, and looked deep into dark, brown eyes. A troubled childhood, a rough upbringing, and now the man relied on the honesty and closeness of his pack, to keep himself from ever feeling so afraid again. She wondered if the man realized how obviously he wore such a past on his face, borderline on his sleeve.

“We are all dealing with this hunter threat,” she said, “but Miss Denver is correct. I would not help with my own hands, unless absolutely necessary.” If she died, the city would fall into chaos, and the Invictus and Carthians would undoubtedly go to war. As much as she sometimes wished to risk doing things herself, it was better this way.

Arturo squinted at her, until Natasha pat his side.

“She’s right. It’s n-not smart, for the leader to go in first.”

Antoinette smiled at her little student, nodded, but said no more. She was here to observe, after all, and only interject when necessary.

“Avery goes in first.”

Jennifer shook her head. “Avery doesn’t have millions of people balancing precariously on a knife’s edge. Avery doesn’t get to live for forever either. Don’t think your wolf tactics apply, Arturo Ibarra, or hold a candle to Kindred tactics. We rule the world for a reason.”

Rule the world. Well, at least the Ventrue thought big. Kindred did rule the world as far as matters of kine were concerned, but it was not so clear cut when considering the bigger picture.

“Guys, come on,” Jack said. “Not here to talk about this.” He offered the werewolves a quick glare too, before moving on. “I’ll try and play backup, Damien, but the hunters will recognize me on sight, and I’m sure they won’t let me get close a second time.”

“I’ll help,” Natasha said. “I can keep you hidd-den.”

Two Mekhet, and powerful ancilla at that, helping Jack, was a step in the right direction.

“Avery would prefer we stay out of this, for now,” Matt said, “but if Tash is going to risk her neck, we’ll go too.”

Art offered his fellow wolf a punch in the shoulder, a gentle one, buddy-buddy like. Too cute, how these boys were, indeed, boys. How someone like Natasha ended up with rough-and-tumble sorts like the two men sitting around her, Antoinette could not fathom. It takes all sorts, she supposed. And having Jessy as her friend no doubt prepared her for the uncouth stupidity of such types.

“Avery will get pissed,” he said.

Matt shrugged, and returned the punch. “Isn’t she always?”

Tash giggled. Charming and pleasant, Antoinette struggled to not beam a smile at her little student.

“Be sure to let us know how it goes,” Jennifer said.

Damien raised a brow. “Not coming?”

“Fuck no. I ain’t risking my neck unless I’ve got a few dominated kine with shotguns between me and them. And it’s a stealth mission, right? Not like you need all of us.”

“Besides,” Beatrice said, “we’re doing our own thing.”

“We noticed,” Art said.

The Nos met the man’s gaze, leaned in close across the booth, and grinned at him, a big enough grin to expose some of her crocodile teeth. “You weren’t invited to that meeting. Be happy Jacob didn’t tear you in half and throw your guts into the ritual bowl.”

Art returned the gaze, and leaned in just as much. Very similar, these two creatures. “Your boss is going to bring a calamity down on your heads if he keeps fucking with shit.”

“You don’t know Jacob,” Jennifer said. “None of us really do. The only person who could really understand what that man is up to, is the Prince.”

And, again, everyone at the booth looked to her.

“I will not speak for Jacob, and his actions are his own; if you get into a confrontation with him, do it at your own risk, young wolves. But, I will say that my old friend is not some idiot child pursuing grand agendas on a whim. Give credit where credit is due, Mister Ibarra, Mister Wilson. Jacob is no fool.” She hoped. “Is Jacob who we wish to be speaking of, tonight?”

“I hope not,” Jack said. “Where’s Fiona? Thought she’d be here.”

“She’ll be here soon, I imagine,” Beatrice said. “I spoke to her a little while ago. I’m still surprised about Eric being a werewolf. God damn.”

Matthew shrugged and shook his head. “Dude’s an asshole.”

Natasha choked on a laugh, and hit the man in the side with a tiny fist. “He’s just confused! He ... it’s n-normal to be lost, when your life changes, l-like that.”

“Agreed.” Jack nodded his chin toward Antoinette, before looking to the rest of the group. “Should have seen me when I realized I was dead now. Ran out of my sire’s bathroom in a panic, crying out to Julias ‘I’m dead oh fuck I’m dead!’”

Everyone chuckled, Antoinette included. It was a pleasing image, her silly Ventrue, tripping over himself with panic.

“I did think he was working today,” Damien said. “I’m surprised he’s not here.”

“He l-left,” Tash said, “to ... to ... go b-be alone, I guess? Jessy went after him.”

After a few more minutes, Athalia and Fiona appeared. Athalia was dressed for the street, which frustrated Antoinette to no end. She would look beautiful if she wore more dresses like that time at the ball. Fiona did. The saucy little creature was wearing a green dress with plunging cleavage, showing off her impressive bust.

“Wow, a ton of folk!” Giggling, Fiona came up to the booth, and leaned over the table. “Aww, no Jessy?” The growing smile, and a glance around with searching eyes put more weight into that question than Antoinette expected. “Or Eric?”

“He left,” Tash said again. “Um, I think J-Jessy was chasing after him.”

“I think she likes him.” Giggling yet again, Fiona slid into the booth, next to the werewolves. A moth to flame.

“Thought you liked him?” Jack said.

She shrugged, and traced invisible lines in the table. “He’s sexy! But I dinnae ken if I like like him.” Whether she knew it or not, Fiona slipped a glance Damien’s way.

The girl was a fool, a young, silly fool. Were she Kindred, such reckless sexuality and flirtations would be perfectly safe and acceptable. But as a Begotten, pregnancy was a risk, if copulating with non-Kindred; Athalia and Angela was proof of that. Then again, Antoinette was overreacting, due to her natural distrust of the monsters. She knew that, and she forced her reflex down, so she could reevaluate. There was nothing wrong with Fiona's unbridled whims, but, hopefully, the girl did not let her actions trap her in unwanted situations.

She was trying to make Damien jealous, this little redheaded monster. Antoinette smiled, and glanced Damien's way as well; the boy was glancing Fiona's way, before looking down. He found her attractive, naturally, and he squirmed a little. Tres mignon, but stupid. Fiona would need night marshaling wands to guide the man, not subtle eye glances. But she herself was far too young to know what she wanted.

Antoinette chuckled. This was delightful. Everyone here was silly and youthful, and making all the mistakes young people should. Even the older, such as Tash and Damien, were slaves to ignorance; to which, the only cure was knowledge and experience. Tash was frequently being buried in new experiences now, if the glances she was casting her boyfriends' way was any indication. Damien, on the other hand, had little such experience. Perhaps Fiona would change that, or someone else? The boy no longer worked for that psychopath Lucas, and maybe now could find a little happiness in the touch of another.

"Athalia, Fiona," Jack said, "we got some more information on a possible location of the shaman." The boy filled them in on the potential building the shaman may have been hiding in. Antoinette doubted the hunters would be hiding anything in an apartment building, but it was also true that the Kindred did not have many eyes in Devil's Corner.

A difficult game to balance. She had many thralls combing the city for hunters, many keeping an eye on the Carthians, and many keeping an eye on the Invictus. She also had thralls keeping an eye on the Begotten, and the Circle, though the latter was difficult, with Jacob's skills. Part of her was tempted to suggest she send some of her thralls to this building Isabella and Hella had discovered, but it could easily backfire. If discovered, it would spur the hunters to find a new hiding place. Hunters were undoubtedly trained in noticing thralls.

A difficult balance indeed.

"Hey Damien, how's the hole in your gut?" Beatrice said.

Damien tensed; a peculiar reaction. Antoinette watched the man meet Beatrice's gaze, before it eventually fell away, some hidden weight forcing his head down. A glance to Beatrice showed, she too, was displaying some awkwardness. Something had happened between them.

"Been healed for a long time," he said.

"That's good."

Another conversation that came to a standstill. Perhaps her presence was causing harm to the flow of their conversation. She had predicated it would, but it was a bit sad to see it happen. Unfortunately, she was Prince, their ruler, and despite Jack's efforts, she would never be able to simply sit, and converse with those she ruled. Not like how she conversed with Jack, at least.

Jennifer leaned in, and looked at her. Not Beatrice, or Fiona or Athalia, or the men, but her. And she took her time looking the Prince up and down, what she could see above the booth table. Some of her Ventrue pride, manifesting as a contest of wills, perhaps?

“You look fucking amazing in that dress, by the way,” Jennifer said, voice without break, eyes unwavering. “You could have come naked though. Same diff.”

Several of the people in the booth coughed, some choking on them.

Antoinette returned the woman’s defiant smile. “As do you. Though I fear if you tripped, some random man’s cock would end up trapped between your breasts.” It was a tube top after all, and would be perfect for such a sexual act.

Her words earned some more coughs, and some choking sounds as several of the paranormals at the table struggled to not laugh. The Begotten and Uratha, unfortunately, were slaves to their biology, and could not help but blush a little.

Jennifer, on the other hand, laughed outright, and sat back. Test passed. Yes, you silly Ventrue, I am as sexually confident as you, and all the more. If you had any idea, any idea at all, you would not have challenged me.

“That is a good idea,” Beatrice said, leaning back, and hooking an arm around her friend’s shoulder. “Keep that on, and we’ll test it out on Julias when he’s free.”

Athalia facepalmed, while Fiona giggled and blushed. Tash’s boys were squirming, obviously unfamiliar with women behaving so brazenly. It was their first trip to Dolareido after all, and their chosen mate was a shy thing herself. Mason had fallen in with one of Dolareido’s more outgoing Kindred, Tilly of the Carthians, and he no doubt knew how forward Dolareido Kindred could be. Natasha was the exception, not the rule.

Or at least, she used to be. Again, Antoinette grinned at her tiny student, and how she was squeezed tight between Art and Matt on the small amount of space available in the booth. Tash looked uncomfortable with the conversation, but not with the two boys. In fact, she seemed embarrassed, probably because the conversation was touching on sexual acts she had performed. The delicious little creature.

“You vamps really do talk about nothing but sex,” Athalia said.

“Hey now!” Fiona shook her head frowned at her fellow monster. “I enjoy it! Left my hometown for this.”

“You left your hometown because there was no one there to feed on.” Laughing, Athalia managed something akin to a real, normal smile. “I think your choice of city was misplaced though.”

“Oh?” Antoinette said.

“Yeah, lot of adultery and shit in Dolareido, but that’s not what Fiona—actually, far be it from me to tell you what Fiona feasts on.”

The group looked to the feisty redhead. Indeed, what did she feed on?

“... I ... it’s um, personal, sort of.” Squirming, Fiona shifted around in her seat, and managed a small smile for Antoinette. “But, I feed on ... on abusive folk. I punish them.”

Yes, Jack had told Antoinette about Fiona’s hunger, what little she shared with him and Damien. It was not much to go on. Damien knew more, but the man had not shared those details; at least, not that Jack shared with her.

“I suppose you could feed on me then, mm?” Antoinette said. She had been plenty abusive toward people, when she felt they deserved it.

“Um, I ... I could have a go!” Giggling like a schoolgirl, Fiona squirmed and adjusted a strap of her dress. “But, but I cannae feed unless ye're afraid. Normally, I'd take someone back to my lair, and tie them up in my web. The real assholes, the big meanies, the ones that bully folk hard, drive folk to suicide, or beat folk up. Those, I ... I had a habit of killing, and eating, too. Cause Vrall can do that, and that extra bit of terror, and punishment, was like icing on a magic cake."

Interesting. Was fear a prerequisite to all Begotten feedings? She was tempted to ask, but Athalia was already giving Fiona a rather pointed glare; she did not like having her species' secrets revealed, but it was Fiona's choice to do so.

Everyone else at the table raised brows. Yes, devouring a person whole was strange, and it had been at least a century since Antoinette had drank someone to death. The Uratha did not need to eat humans in any capacity, though she knew they enjoyed the taste of it, in the rare cases it occurred.

"There have been few reports of kine deaths that have gone unexplained, since our meeting about the issue, my dear Fiona. I am impressed with the control you and your fellow Begotten have shown." Credit where credit was due, there had been no deaths she could blame on the Begotten since then.

"Cheers! I've been getting better at feeding on folk lightly. I'm aye a wee hungry, but it's manageable."

"Hunger sucks," Beatrice said. "Those nightmare lair things you have, we can enter those when we're sleeping? It's a nightmare, right? I wonder if—"

A phone rang. Everyone pulled out their phones, even the wolves, checking their new phones. But all for naught, as Antoinette held up a hand to claim guilt for the disturbance. She pulled out her phone, and checked the message.

~I'm at 843 Baker's Street. Another ritual found.~ Daniel never did care for greetings.

Sighing, she quickly texted back. ~Terry's face?~

~No.~

Chapter 68

~~Jack~~

The meeting at Bloodlust went about as well as he expected. There was awkwardness, and strangeness, weirdness, and all the synonyms. But once they realized Antoinette wasn't there to destroy them or spy on them, they seemed to settle in. Triss turned into a punk, Jen turned into a slut, Fiona was all giggles, and even Athalia managed to crack a smile. Damien got less defensive, and so did Arturo. By the end of it, Jack was finally able to relax.

And then the phone rang.

They didn't have long until sun up, maybe an hour, and doing more recon was a bad idea. But this was too important to not investigate immediately. Antoinette went back to her tower, where she could better relay the information to her thralls, through her network, and whatever it was a Prince did that kept the city running. Jen, Triss, Athalia, and Fiona all left, unaware of what Daniel had found, only that the rest of them had to leave asap. They'd find out sooner or later; this information went around the Kindred underground, no matter how hard people tried to keep it secret. Natasha, Damien, Matthew, and Arturo all took a ride in the Invictus car Jack called. A tight fit.

843 Baker's Street was the apartment building Isabella had given Jack. Now it was the apartment building they were driving to, at Daniel's behest. Part of Jack wanted to tell the man his solo efforts were getting in the way of their investigation, and that he might have compromised what could have been a good ambush opportunity; or worse, gotten himself killed. Bad idea. And besides, the man knew what he was doing.

The five of them walked through the front of the shitty old apartment building, down the shitty old apartment building stairs, along the shitty old apartment building carpet in the hallway, stained and dirty, past the dented, scratched walls, and down into the basement of the shitty old apartment building. Even if the ritual wasn't here, he wouldn't have been surprised to find a corpse or two buried in the building's guts. There were some storage lockers down here, with open fence showing all their contents; no rituals would be done in this room. But at the end of the room, there was another door, and the group of them moved through it a little slower now, as the lighting grew less, and the world grew quiet.

There was another stairway, going down, and at this point, he was starting to get the same vibes he caught from Athalia's stairway into hell. It was dark, it was deep, and it was confined. Claustrophobia. Gulping, Jack stepped along, Damien ahead of him, Tash and her wolves behind him. The door led to another door, one with an sliding view window, ready to accept passwords. This door led to a stairway. And this stairway led to a door.

And that door opened to show the same ritual.

"... wow." Damien stopped, blocking them, until Jack tapped him on the shoulder. "Sorry." Stepping in, the Mekhet looked around, in blatant shock over the sight.

Jack didn't want to look at the sight. Once was enough.

"Same as last time," Daniel said, and pointed up.

And like a bunch of lemmings, they all looked up, and gasped. The skeleton on the ceiling had another picture attached, but, like Daniel said, it wasn't Jack. Thank god, he couldn't stomach that a second time.

"Eric?" Matt said.

“Eric.” Art said.

Eric. Why was the picture of Eric? Shit. Shit shit. What was the pattern there? If the ritual was finding people the hunters could use to get close to the Prince, Eric did not fit that bill.

Like last time, the walls were covered in symbols, written in blood, and some in what looked like charcoal. The tables that lined the walls were metal this time, and someone had still carved symbols into them, scratching the strange shapes into the metal surface. Many had symbols painted in red next to them, and the smell of rotting blood was evident. If the old woman had been here recently, and the blood was already rotting, then the sacrifice might have taken multiple trips to complete.

A bird skull. A cow skull. A horse skull. Same as last time, symbols painted around a giant circle on the floor, something he would be sure the Circle were responsible for, if he didn't already have someone else to suspect. Jacob and his witches insisted it wasn't them, and Azamel was sure it was this strange shaman woman. But, it was hard to imagine humans, kine, doing this, stringing someone up, killing them, burying every surface around them in symbols, while dissecting them.

Disgusting.

“Wait,” he said. “Julias said he and Jessy found Eric in the sewers after his first change, with Athalia. Think he talked to Azamel?”

“I w-wouldn't be surprised,” Tash said.

Then Azamel was a link. Which made sense, considering she was the hunters' target all along. But others had talked to her as well. What made Eric and Jack different from the others? They were both young as fuck, in paranormal terms, but that hardly seemed like a decent link.

“This is sick,” Damien said, standing by one of the tables, and sifting through the piles of papers. “Someone drew a dissection.”

A dissection, for the most part. While most of the pictures showed calculated removal of skin and muscle, a few showed some rather barbaric tearing.

“I think it’s that Black Blood spirit,” Art said.

Jack froze, before slowly turning his head to look at the man. Art wasn’t looking his way, instead looking up at the skeleton pinned to the ceiling.

Jack did his best to sound like he didn’t know what they were talking about. “What do you mean?” Not that he didn’t trust Art and Matt; their hearts seemed to be in the right place, but he didn’t want them interfering with him learning as much as he could.

“Old, big, nasty spirit, an Incarna.” Art looked in Daniel’s direction, squinting at the statue in a trench coat, before looking back up at the hanging skeleton. “I don’t know, honestly. Those red wraiths seem to be interested in this stuff, and those red wraiths are connected to Black Blood, and—”

“And we don’t know.” Shrugging, Matt got down onto a knee, and looked over the enormous circle symbol on the floor. “I smell ... chemicals, old.”

Daniel nodded. “This was probably a bunker set up for producing or storing drugs. Professional.” As professional as you could get in Devil’s Corner, Jack figured.

Red wraiths and Black Blood. Connections he’d already made, but knowing that’s what Art and Matt were thinking meant it was a good one.

“Triss said something,” Jack said, “about you not being invited?”

“Yeah. She and that other witch are getting into deep shit with Jacob, and Black Blood. Everyone’s blowing it off, but—”

“We’re not blowing it off.” Daniel shook his head and adjusted his glasses, but otherwise did not move. “I’m well aware of Jacob’s interactions with Black Blood. These rituals are new, however.”

While they chatted, Damien did nothing but stare. Tash looked disturbed by the sight as well, but didn’t take long to push past it and start cataloging things. Jack joined her, and sighed as he looked at the pictures stacked on the tables around the room. What once probably held vials and jars, now held piles of evidence of the occult, with a blatant obsession with the macabre and grotesque.

He picked up one picture, and stared at the accurate, detailed tendons. Why the artist had to pay so much loving attention to all the minute particulars of what lay underneath skin and muscle, he couldn’t fathom. Those red wraiths wanted a piece of Fiona, to see her guts and whatnot, and he assumed that that was connected to this.

But was it? Those red wraiths were cutting everything apart and blatantly obsessed with getting their hands on flesh. The ritual was about gore as well, but different. The pictures in front of him would have been at home on a surgeon’s desk; most of them, anyway.

“Matt,” he said.

“Mm?”

“You interrupted something being done by the witches?”

“Yeah. Triss, Jen, and that Jacob asshole, were performing some sort of ritual, and communicating with Black Blood. There was a corpse there, and a ritual bowl, full of guts and whatnot.”

Jack winced, and held one of the drawings in front of him, facing the table, his back to Matt. “ ... messy?”

“Extremely.”

Then there was a disconnect. Black Blood and its red wraiths, if they were its red wraiths, had some sort of interest in flesh, but a total disregard for acquiring it cleanly or keeping it intact. The person performing this dissection and this ritual was far more concerned with exact detail, patterns, and a strange combination of anatomy and occult knowledge.

Much as it'd be easy to blame Jacob and Black Blood, it was seeming more and more like they and the rituals weren't connected; not directly, at least.

“We need to find Eric,” he said. “But—”

“But the sun will be up soon,” Damien said, finally lowering his eyes from the corpse above. “What do we do about this?”

“I'll lock it down.” Nodding, Daniel gestured to the door. “Let's leave, and get some place safe for sunrise. Take Art and Matt with you, Natasha, until you are safe at the tower.”

It was hard to not smile at that, Daniel, being protective of Natasha, in his own, official, cold and distant sort of way. Jack had no right to judge, but still, cute.

“I'll go with her, I suppose,” he said. They were going to same place, after all. “Thanks for showing me, sheriff. I know you didn't have to.”

“I messaged the Prince, Mister Terry, not you. But I do not disagree in involving you. You've proved your worth.”

Jack smirked at the man. Proved his worth. He was talking about Lucas; which Art and Matt didn't know about, if he guessed right.

They left, and headed back to Elysium Tower to sleep. Hopes up, hopes down, Hella's sighting proving very true, but in the end, wasted. At least her picture had confirmed they knew what the shaman and her companions looked like. Something was better than nothing.

---

---

~~Eric~~

Come sunrise, he took the opportunity of his temporary freedom from the watchful eye of vampires, to do fuck all. He drifted around, watched a shitty movie, bought a couple burgers, only to eat the meat and nothing but. Someone asked if he was doing keto, and he almost said no, but on second glance, he had to admit he was. In the past week, he'd eaten nothing but meats, muscle and organ, and other strange things that were ultimately just parts of an animal.

He was tempted to visit Azamel. Of his three options, the Begotten seemed to be the only group willing to be basically hands off with him. Avery wanted him under her thumb to some degree, and the vamps were blatant about wanting to control him entirely. Jessy said he should just do whatever he wanted, play the field, like an athlete with options. A good idea, except that the three groups were liable to either kill him, or get him killed, if he fucked up.

The more he thought about it, the more he found himself leaning toward Azamel. The only thing she asked is for him to try and help her if she and the others were under attack. Of all the options, that seemed the nicest; except that, of course, hunters were already in the city, trying to kill her. But they were probably going to try and kill him too, so that was almost a moot point.

And for some stupid reason, he liked the monsters. He liked Fiona for obvious reasons, but Athalia? Bitch. Mark? Asshole. Azamel? Colossal bitch. Those three probably pissed everyone off around them, merely by existing. That was appealing, for whatever reason. Maybe seeing a bit of himself in them.

The werewolves all seemed cool, but he got a bit of a military vibe from them. One for all, all for one, no man left behind, blah blah. No thanks. The vamps wore their mafia motif on their sleeves; though, he'd yet to talk to a Carthian, so maybe they were different.

The vamps, the Invictus, were also writing his cheques. That meant they owned his new life. It also meant they owned his dad's life. If he did something to piss them off, that'd be the end of that. And it wasn't like he could just ignore everything Avery had to say; christ, he ran into some fucking random spirits just last night. Should he have hunted them down, or chased them back to wherever, or was there something else he was supposed to do?

Why did he care?

He went to a hotel. Random hotel, random room, paid in cash, nothing that would give him away. Kat had food; thankfully she could graze on food and not get fat, too lazy to make the effort to gorge herself. Here, he could close his eyes, forget about his troubles, the ridiculousness of his new life, and breathe. That's all he needed to do, breathe, relax, and let the stress melt away.

Of course, that wasn't going to happen.

---

The woods. The forest. A riverbed at his feet. The gentle, lulling sounds of water cresting over small rocks and pebbles. Wind, soft and soothing against his fur as it rustled the leaves of the trees around him. He sat by the river on his haunches, paws wet against the pebbles that dipped into the water, gibbous moon above. In the distance was Dolareido; he recognized the tall buildings, skyscrapers, and the glow of casino lights.

Would it be so bad, if he stayed here? The forest behind him, city in front of him, both in his world, both a part of him.

No, it wouldn't.

He took a long, deep breath, and sighed. If he didn't know any better, he'd think he was relaxed.

Breathe it again. Smell that? The woods, water, life and death in a nice balance. What else do you smell?

Asphalt and sex and metal and alcohol, from the city, on the breeze.

You breathe that, breathed it your whole life. The city is in your blood, in your lungs, and it's your duty to defend it.

I never asked for duty.

You never asked to breathe.

I should be thankful for a life I didn't ask for? Gracious? Sounds like a Johnny Cash song.

It could be.

He snorted, and looked down at the river. A wolf looked back at him, a normal wolf. Eric was a wolf now, a werewolf in truth, some sort of ancient entity's bloodline reborn in the human body. Father Wolf and Mother Luna were his new parents? Was Father Wolf a better parent than his dad in the hospital?

Yes and no. It was so long ago, I can barely remember. His children killed him. He prowled the borders between spirit and solid, flesh and ephemera, and kept things in order. A tough job, considering how thin the lines between Hisil and Gurihal were. A horrible mistake, killing him, I think. It led to—

The river exploded, water erupting in a cloud of cold force that sent Eric flying back. He spun through the air before crashing into the ground, rolling and rolling, until rock and earth tore off clumps of fur mixed with blood. What the fuck what the fuck what the fuck.

Eric, shaking, head pulsing, forced himself up onto his paws, and stared out toward the river. It was a small stream, a foot deep; nothing should have been jumping out of it, let alone exploding out of it. But water continued to rain down from above, and the river itself churned and boiled, as if a million piranha were swarming some drowning fool.

Shadows crawled out of the water. Tall, wide, like curtains against the backdrop of the night sky. The city was behind it, and soon hidden from view as the curtains spread, edges smooth, and body completely opaque. Several hooks, or nails, were at the top of each curtain, a corner. It was almost like he was looking at a pair of enormous bat wings. Two pairs of wings? Four arches, four spans that covered the world in obsidian, before disappearing into the water below.

An arm shot out from the water, and slammed down into the ground before Eric. A mostly human arm, but the skin was dark, black, tinted with strange shades of gray, like metal, and enormous claws. Then another arm ... and another ... and another.

Whatever this thing was, this shadow clawing out of the depths of his dream, it had four wings, and four arms.

It roared, an alien sound, deep and rumbling, and with a vocal fry and tear like a metal singer scream. It came up onto the shore of pebbles, and the small rocks were crushed under the weight of its colossal talons. Two legs at least, but a long tail, slithering left and right like a fucking dragon's, dangled behind the entity.

“This is the one,” it said. It could talk.

Eric looked up. The moon was gone. There was still light; he was in a dream after all, and shit didn't have to be logical. But, the moon was gone, vanished, like it was afraid of this monster. And the voice was gone. Instead, a new voice replaced it, this thing's, a voice of guttural growls and harsh, raspy vocal fries.

Whatever this thing was, it was twelve feet tall. Good fucking god.

Eric backed up, and snarled at it, ears down and back against the fur of his head. He was a wolf, and these things came naturally. But he wasn't a wolf. He was Eric. And Eric was fucking terrified.

He backed away, and let out a barking howl at the monster. It stared at him, two giant horns piercing the sky. Its eyes glowed red and amber, like lava. Its mass caused the earth to break apart underneath it, as it shifted its weight with its new stance, standing tall in front of Eric. It spread its wings, and blotted out the sky.

“Jeremiah will have you, and you will answer his questions.” It took another step toward him, and Eric took a few steps back to keep distance. Each step the monster took, the claws sank through the rock beneath it, like butter.

“Jeremiah? The fuck does he want with me?” Hey, he could talk. Right, a dream, rules didn't matter.

But his dreams weren't normal dreams. He didn't control these things, these sleeping hallucinations; and this invader didn't belong. Every hair on his furry body stood up with animal aggression, and he bared his teeth as he snarled and barked at the titan walking toward him.

It didn't like that. It sprinted forward, shredding the ground while launching itself toward him. Eric turned, and fled. Run, get the fuck away, get the fuck away!

The forest. There was a forest. Safe place, his hunting ground, side by side with Dolareido, his other hunting ground. Two sides to the coin, wolf and man. He could hide here, or turn the tables.

The monster didn't agree. As Eric forced his aching, bruised body past a couple of trees, the monster slammed its mass into them, and broke them. Trunks three feet thick snapped, exploding bark and shards of wood, and sending the trees crashing into others. The forest died around Eric, trees spinning out of control and breaking upon others. The thickest trees survived the impacts, and the smaller shattered, showering the flattening land with twigs, leaves, and chaos.

Eric's dream body was big, for a canine, but still only a wolf. One-forty, maybe one-fifty pounds. This thing chasing him was at least twenty times that much. It reached out with one of its four arms, and slashed out, claws slicing through the wood and sending more trees toppling. All this little dog could do was run and hide, scampering underneath fallen trees that left a foot of room to crawl under.

Why didn't it answer his question? And if it wanted to catch him for Jeremiah, it wasn't doing a good job. It was going to fucking kill him, drop a tree on him, or fucking step on him. A glance back showed the beast kept its four wings against its back, folded tight, while the four arms rendered the forest into mulch.

"You can't hide, Uratha."

The blood curdling noise echoed through the trees, until Eric felt it dig into his spine, serrated, iron hot needles stabbing into his back. His muscles twitched and cringed, and Eric shook his head as he tried to dislodge the voice from his ears. He couldn't. Couldn't fight this thing. Couldn't attack this thing. Couldn't do anything but run. Run where? He was going to die. It was going to catch him and it was going to kill him.

He kept moving. The forest greeted him, familiar, home. The trails where prey ran, the sights and sounds and smells, he knew them all. The little flits of drifting essence, the ephemera entities, spirits, manifesting, growing, building up, becoming. He sped past a critter, a squirrel maybe, body glowing green and partly see-through, eyes deep and dark. There was an owl, with eyes like the night sky. There was a fox with several tails, and it screeched before disappeared into the forest, as did the others. Everything wanted to get away from the intruder, the Goliath, ripping and tearing its way through the green and brown of the woods.

Where was the voice? Gone. It abandoned him, left him to run from this monster alone. And it was gaining on him. He threw his belly to the forest floor, and forced himself under a giant log, something ancient and part of the land, something that offered him a nod with eyes opening in the lines of the tree's bark.

The monster didn't care. It slammed all four of its hands down into the enormous piece of ancient wood, and ripped it apart. In the shower of bits of bark and death, it threw its mass forward, taking down two more trees with each shoulder, and sending them forward in a mad spin of inertia. One of them hit another tree, and went into a spin, bouncing around against rock and earth until one of its branches caught Eric in his side.

Pain. He'd always thought you weren't supposed to feel pain in a dream, not pain like this, pain that scorched up the spine and gave you a headache, made you want to vomit. Pain silenced for a moment, before it doubled again when his body collided with something, the length of his wolf body curving around it before he slumped to the ground. A stump had blocked his flight path with all the grace of a car crash.

The world blurred around him. His body was heavy. His fingers didn't respond; right, he had paws now, not hands. But he knew how to use paws, and they weren't responding. His lungs had stopped working, diaphragm no longer pulling down. Nothing was working. He was a lump, a pile of flesh, pulsing with agony and crying tears — that's why everything was blurry, his eyes were filled with tears. Or, blood.

The monster crouched down over him, glowing red eyes glaring into him. Its face looked human, for the most part, except for the massive horns, and as it growled, shark teeth joined the list of inhuman features. One of its four hands reached out, and picked him up. He was a wolf, against a twelve-foot gargoyle creature, and he was going to die.

The monster grabbed his head with one hand, his back legs with another, and started to tear him in half. No questions, no words, nothing to explain this pointless murder. Skin, muscle, tearing, bones separating, crushed into bits, grinding into—

---

He sat up in bed with a jolt. Where, where was he? Right, the hotel. Where was Kat? Right, not at the hotel. What fucking time was it? Sunset.

Christ, sunset? How long was he asleep? Must have been over ten hours. What in the ... oh fucking hell. He looked around himself, and winced as he felt the wet sheets. A cold sweat soaked the bed, and himself. His dreams hadn't been doing that since his first change, but whatever that dream was, it scared him fucking shitless; evidence was there in front of him, whether he wanted to believe it or not. He'd probably have literally shit the bed, if it'd gotten any worse.

He got up out of bed, and headed for the shower. His feet were like cinder blocks, dragging, knocking against the door frame and the hallway. Some random, shitty hotel, so he blamed his clumsiness on that. And the weight of his body? Had to be the shitty bed. Shit bed, shit hotel, shit sleep, and now he had stubbed toes.

Even if the vamps can track you, you really should sleep in your proper bed, Eric. At least then you can sleep deep and proper.

He got to the bathroom, set his hands on the tiny sink, and looked into the tiny, warped mirror. Looked like shit. Felt like shit. Everything was shit.

“What ... the fuck was that?” He held a hand up to his face, stared into the mirror, and cradled his jaw. No idea, no idea what that fucking was. The dream was vivid, blatant. His dreams often were, since the changes had started hitting him. There was usually a voice in his dreams, and it talked to him, that much he managed to wrap his mind around. But that thing, that giant fucking gargoyle thing, was not like anything else.

It found him. It ran him down in his dream, and killed him. Holy fuck, he could still remember the sensation of pain, unimaginable pain, in his bones and muscles as they started to tear to pieces. Saran wrap being pulled apart, resistant and pliable at first, before it started to give way in a bloody mess. He now knew what it felt like to die, in the most horrible way possible. What a lovely memory to have drilled into his mind for the rest of his life.

Nasty nightmare? It was unusual for a nightmare. God fucking damn, he felt like shit, like someone had run him over with a truck. He didn't feel like someone had torn him in half; still breathing, after all. If someone had run him down though, hopped out of the truck, and beat his ass with a baseball bat, he might feel like this. Except the pain wasn't in his body, wasn't in his bones or muscles like it felt like it should have been, and it wasn't real pain. Something in his brain told him he was fucked, and needed to lie the fuck down, told him he was beaten and bruised, even though he didn't feel like it.

He stared down at the sink. Red eyes. Glowing, red eyes. Maybe a spirit, like the ones in the alley? No, those his instincts told him were spirits. They smelled like spirits; what that was, his human brain wasn't able to put a finger on, but they did. There were spirits in his dreams, but they couldn't have been real, just dream things spawned by whatever was clawing its way out of the depths of his subconscious to talk to him.

He looked at the mirror again. Everything turned double, and started dancing around. Colors blurred, bleeding over each other. Hallucinating? No, he knew this feeling, the same feeling of being in a choke hold. Except you were normally lying on the ring floor during one of those, not standing.

He collapsed. One of his hands managed to grab the sink basin on the way down, but he went down anyway, bodyweight jerking on the sink hard enough to half-turn his body with his shoulder as a pivot point. He almost wrenched his arm out of the socket, but let go at the last moment, other shoulder slamming into the floor.

“Fucking ... shit...” He gasped for air. For a moment, for a painfully long fucking moment, he felt like the wolf in that dream again, after he was slammed into the tree trunk. A sack of broken flesh, lying down, unable to do anything. He turned his head and stared at the crummy ceiling. It was spinning.

Breathe. Breathe. Get some air into your fucking lungs.

He forced in the air, slow and deep. His body ached, or fake ached or whatever, but it was nothing he couldn't handle. The problem was his brain didn't want to function, didn't want to uptake the oxygen. Christ, was he having a stroke?

No, that made no sense. Wrong symptoms, and his new body didn't seem like it'd ever get a stroke. Something else was happening to him. Fuck, fuck fuck fuck, what was happening to him?

---

He took a taxi back to his new home. Thinking he could get a better night's rest at some random hotel backfired, apparently. No, there was no way the shitshow that was his brain right now was caused by the hotel, unless there was a gas leak in the hotel and he borderline died. Now back at his Invictus-bought penthouse suite apartment, he could catch his breath, take a shower, get dressed, and get ready for work.

Hopefully. The ride up the elevator did not go well. He was in the suit he wore the night before, and that was the only thing that got him past the concierge, considering he was dragging his hands against every surface so he didn't fall over. It was a damn expensive place to live, and lot of the people coming and going were dressed in tuxedos or other expensive, ridiculous suits. Some women were dressed for nights at the opera, while others were dressed for high price nightclubs where they'd blow a blue collar's monthly wages in a single night, on heroine. Everyone looked like they bled money, and at the moment, he very much did not, tripping over himself like he was dying.

Fuck, maybe he was dying. Was that dream a premonition? That gargoyle, demon, whatever the fuck it was, belonged on a god damn cathedral, casting judgment on everyone passing by. It did not belong in his head. It wasn't supposed to be there, that much his new senses could tell him. If it didn't belong there, the fuck did that mean?

He pressed the button on the elevator, and did his best to not look at the tiny dog sitting in a woman's purse; dog didn't bark, so, props to her for good training. Concrete weighed on his shoulders, and pulled him into the side of the elevator. Stay standing, just stay standing. Another person came on, older dude in a suit with a mustache, maybe visiting someone. Eric managed a small nod. Be polite to the strangers, and let everyone look at you like you're drunk, just don't prove it.

His floor, finally. Only a few other apartments on this floor, as each apartment took up a corner of the large building; ridiculously fucking huge apartments. He forced in another breath, and made for the door, swallowing down the nausea in his stomach, and ignoring how the hallway attempted to thwart him like he was in fucking Inception.

He smelled someone, someone familiar, and recent. She'd been here before, and he could smell her again. Gulping, he opened the door.

Yeap, there she was. Sitting on his couch was Jessy Herrington, with Kat cuddling into her tits. She was wearing a white shirt, buttons undone far enough to show a bit of the black bra underneath. Looked great with the black jeans.

Even feeling like he was about to pass out, his dick loved to give him a quick rundown. God damn it.

“You look like shit,” she said.

“I ... feel like shit.” No use arguing, no energy for that. He dragged himself over to her, and collapsed onto the couch hard enough to launch her an inch into the air. “Tried to get some sleep somewhere safe, alone, away from fucking ... everyone. Guess it didn't work.”

“Didn't sleep?”

“I did, just doesn't seem to have worked.”

“I figured you wolves were basically unstoppable juggernauts, always at your prime?”

“Yeah, I was feeling like that for a while, too. Knee is healed, and ... yeah.” His head collapsed onto the couch back, and he turned it enough to look over at Jessy. The woman held his cat snug to her, and raised her enough so Kat could put her two forearms against her shoulder, near Eric.

Kat offered him a few slow blinks, before turning her head to nudge into Jessy's neck. The purrs were audible, and ridiculous. Traitor.

"The place smelled like cat shit, F Y I. I cleaned your litter box."

"... seriously?"

"Well, I mean, I called the help and had them do it." Jessy laughed, and nudged her cheek into Kat's head for some rubbing. "I am far too important to be cleaning litter boxes."

He laughed, then groaned. Dizziness overwhelmed him, and faded away with each pulse of his heart. Ok, yeah, no laughing.

"You were supposed to work tonight, right? Take the night off."

"I ... I think I might just. The music would make my brain explode."

"Guess that means I won't be feeding on you tonight."

"Sorry."

"Ah that's ok. I wouldn't want to catch whatever parasite's fucking up your brain anyhow." She kissed Kat's head, got up, and started walking around, Kat's forearms still on her shoulder, and butt sitting in her arms. "How's your dad?"

Knowing the Invictus could monitor his expenses was horrible, and embarrassing. His life was enough of a train wreck, no need for all those eyes peering into it, with his purchases on a list they could analyze and laugh at.

“As useless as ever, and dead set on not getting better. Man just doesn’t fucking care.”

“Your mom died, right? Were they close?”

Eric lifted his head, and raised a brow as he looked at her. What a way to approach a sensitive topic, for any man; girl was exposing his psyche with all the grace of a wrecking ball.

“They were close. She died of cancer.”

“Cancer’s a bitch.” Sighing, Jessy continued around his place, and peeked into his cupboards. “Empty.” She checked a drawer. “Empty.” And another. “Utensils.” Then a cupboard. “Empty.” Then she checked the freezer and fridge. “And a whole fucking lot of meat. I bet Kat loves that.”

“I ... it’s ... it’s the only thing I can stand eating anymore.” There were other things too, bones, strange organs not normally sold that he asked a butcher for. He kept them in the back of the freezer, to avoid having to look at them until it was easier. And to avoid unwanted topic conversations.

“When did she die?”

“Must be almost twenty years now.”

“Dad ever find another relationship?”

“No.” Eric wanted to get up and watch Jessy closer, make sure she didn’t touch anything. Stupid. It was her apartment, really, and it wasn’t like he had anything in it to hide. The biggest secret he had was the brains and bones and hooves in the freezer, and she’d already moved on from that.

“Probably very depressed, especially after his son’s career and marriage were ruined by a knee injury.”

“Thanks a lot.” Groaning, he crawled over onto the rest of the couch, and lay on his back, head on the couch arm. “And you? Tell me some shitty stuff about your past.”

“Don’t really got one.”

“No past?”

“I mean shitty stuff. Got no baggage.” With a shrug, she came back over to him, and sat down on the glass table, Kat still in her arms. Damn cat looked perfectly happen to go coma in Jessy’s ever petting embrace. “Kind of silly, isn’t it? So many vamps got a story, some fucked up path that led to their embrace. That poor kid Jack was an attempted murder by an enemy vamp. Natasha, I know her siring led to the death of her parents. Julias, well, Viktor sired him without telling him what was happening; now that’s some fucking scary shit. And my sire, MacDonald? He’s old as dirt and can’t remember the details, but he tells me he had to fight someone else to the death for the right to be embraced, bare hands.”

Jesus, that was grim.

“But not you?”

“Nah. My parents and I never got along, so I ran off when I was pretty young. They didn’t try and find me. Years later, I’m working a shitty factory job in North Side, and got into a bar fight on the edge of South Side, near the Carthian district. Apparently I’d got into a fight with a ghoul, who are fucking strong as shit compared to normal kine. Still kicked his ass, though. Broke my arm, but kicked his ass. Michael thought that was boss, so he spent a couple years grooming me, then sired me. Here I am.” Shrugging, she gave Kat another kiss. “I had a cat, back then. But after my embrace, he didn’t like me. You know how cats can be, when they’re old and you try and introduce them to new cats; or in this case, a vampire. Too much of a change for an old boy like him.” That put a thought in her head, and her eyes looked up, drifting. “I suppose that is the biggest baggage I have. Lost my cat when I was embraced. Maybe that's why I like you so much."

"Because I have a cat?"

"Because you have a cat. A dumb, loving cat."

She was definitely dumb and loving, no doubt about that. At least Kat didn't like the other Uratha; probably their military vibe putting her off.

"Guess that makes me lucky."

"Damn right. Lucky you have an awesome cat, because cats are awesome. Lucky you're a werewolf, because that's awesome. And lucky you caught my eye, because I'm awesome." Jessy winked at him, before she started rubbing her face on Kat's head. Kat returned the gesture, head bumping her and purring like a lawn mower.

"Not so lucky last night."

"Yeah, you really do look like shit. Couldn't have just been a bad day's sleep."

"I ... I had this dream. Do vampires dream?"

"Sorta." She came over and sat down on the arm of the chair his head was on, so only an inch separated his head from her butt. That was fine, it was a great butt. "Kindred have torpor, where we go comatose during the day. We dream then, pretty vivid, weird shit sometimes. It gets really nasty when we purposefully go under for years at a time, to suppress our blood lust. The dreams get nuts, and you're stuck in them, for years. Lot of vamps wake up from that a different person."

"... that is some scary shit."

“Right? I haven’t done one yet, and a lot of us don’t until we’ve got a century under our belt. It’s generally not something to look forward to.” Shrugging, she stood back up, and sat down on his stomach instead. He braced for pain, but, his new body handled her weight fine. He felt like utter shit, but at least his muscles weren’t fucked. “You?”

“Dreamed I ... dreamed I was a wolf, last night.”

“Sounds almost blasé, a werewolf dreaming of being a wolf.” She leaned back over the couch, butt on his stomach, and lifted Kat up and over her shoulder to set the feline on a nearby cat tower, before she got comfortable on his gut, her elbow on the back of the couch, chin in her palm, face toward him.

“Except my dreams talk to me. Talk talk to me, as in, call me out by name, and ... tell me things.”

“Sounds creepy. What sort of things?”

“This fucking Uratha shit came with baggage. Something about ancient beings and the duty I’ve inherited from them.” He threw up his hands, before setting one on his forehead. “I’d just love it if everyone left me the fuck alone.”

“That include me?” Raising a brow, she licked a fang, and waited. He thought she was joking, but, it seemed like she really wanted to know.

“Fuck no, you’re one of the few people that seems to be upfront with me.”

“Ha! Well, it is the norm for vamps to lie, cheat, manipulate; s’why I told you to play the field. What about the dogs and monsters, they fuckin’ you over?”

“Avery wants to ... adopt me into the fold.”

“Typical.”

“Azamel wants me on her side, but as far as I can tell, she’s got no rules beyond that. Simply help her out if she’s under attack. Otherwise, do whatever I want.”

“But Julias wants you to work with Avery, and the Invictus think you should stay where you’re at.” Laughing, she shook her head, like it was a song and dance she’d heard before. Probably was. “I wouldn’t want to be in your shoes, despite all the luck. I see the hospital bills.”

“You do?”

“Yeah. I put you on the Invictus payroll, and that comes with chains. Course, that was before you got your paranormal badge, and now you have some rights; or at least, more than kine.” She reached down for his jacket, and spread it, before she started tugging on his arms. “Come on, help me out.”

He raised a brow again; doing that often with her. Eventually he conceded, and helped her slide off his suit jacket. She got to work on his shirt buttons next, humming as she undid them. No grins or mischievous smiles, despite his expectations, only a small smile as she undid one button, then the next, and the next. If he didn’t know better, he’d assume she was his mother, taking care of him because he was sick.

“Gonna get some vapor rub for me?” he said.

“Ha! Don’t think I won’t. You’re a man, which means you’re a big baby when you’re sick. A big, dumb, very sexy baby with a really nice six pack.” She whistled as she pulled his undone shirt out from the waistline of his pants. With some effort, she got the shirt off entirely.

“Strange looking baby.”

“Yeap.” She pat his chest, chuckling, before she undid the button and zipper of his pants, and yanked those off too, before sitting back on his stomach and pelvis. Now all he had left was his boxers. “But I’m not your mom, I’m your babysitter. Ever had the babysitter fantasy?”

“Hot babysitter sexually satisfies young boy?”

“Yeap.”

“Can’t say I have.”

“Didn’t want some busty lady to introduce you to the awesomeness of sex, with a tender hand and soft tits, when you were going through puberty?”

“Oh, I did. Just, all my babysitters were ugly as balls.”

She laughed, and set her elbows onto the back of the couch as she continued laughing. “Well, I’m your babysitter now, and your senior by a good forty years. And I’m a fox.”

His turn to laugh. Damn this woman was brazen, bold, confident, and fun. Sheryl had been a lot of those things, but in hindsight, he wasn’t sure she was ever fun.

“Get into Fiona’s pants, yet?” she said.

He hesitated. Any other woman, and he’d be sure it was a trap, but this Jessy woman was different; not necessarily a good kind of different, but different. He was a one-on-one kinda guy, when in a relationship. He wasn’t in one right now though, and neither was Jessy. But, that could change.

The thought of being in one with this playful tiger of a woman, was appealing though. She was fun, like Fiona, but instead of Fiona's young, girlish joyfulness, she had a mature bite to her. And she was rich, no denying the appeal in that.

“Almost. She visited me, and I had her quite satisfied, before it was my turn. Then Avery interrupted us.”

“Ah, damn, nasty case of blue balls then. Jerk it out yet?”

“Heh, no,” he said. Nodding, she reached down beside her hip, slid her hand under the waistband of his boxers, and grabbed his dick. “Whoa, hey!”

“Too sick for a quick jerking?”

“I ... uh.” What was he supposed to say to that? He felt like shit, but, as he felt his blood flow respond to her touch, it didn't make anything feel worse. “I guess. But, I'm not really feeling up to sex.”

“Didn't say sex.” She rolled her eyes, leaned back onto the couch, her butt on his stomach, and her closer arm with its elbow on the couch back. Her other hand continued to stroke him, her body blocking the view. He could feel it more than well enough, and he groaned a little as his girth hardened, filling her palm. “I'll get mine, later.”

“Y-Yeah, ok.” He could work with this. He needed to relax, clear his head, see if the grogginess and shit would fade with time. “Your ghouls?”

“Nah. You, when you're feeling better.”

“Heh, thought you had a bunch of ghouls, for a regular orgy, with you as the center of attention?”

“I do. But, eh, been doing that sorta shit for decades. Sometimes it's nice to take it easy, enjoy a palette cleanser.”

“Is that what I am?”

“Not sure. I can’t turn you into a ghoul; don’t think so, anyway. And yet, I continuously find myself wanting to fuck you. Isn’t that strange?” She shrugged, stopped stroking him, and took a moment to toss aside her shirt, and then her bra. They went flying, the bra landing on Kat and her cat tower. Naturally, Kat didn’t care, and looked at the bra sitting on her body, before looking back out the window. “There, some eye candy for you.” Topless, she ignited something inside her, and his jaw dropped as he watched the difference manifest. Color came to her skin, and he could hear the dead heart inside her begin to pump.

Eye candy was putting it lightly. Like she said, she was a fox. As much as he loved Fiona’s softer body and enormous breasts, Jessy’s muscles, feminine but strong curves, plentiful breasts, and short blond hair, were all amazing. Reminded him of other fighters he met in his career. Maybe he should have hooked up with one of them, and not a spectator like Sheryl.

“It’s pretty great eye candy.”

“I know, right? Fuck, I am gorgeous.” She put her hand on his cock again, and slid down his boxers enough so she could hold it upright and stroke it more readily. Her thick thighs blocked the view, but he could tell from her grip how familiar she was with what she was doing. Comfortable. Might as well have been his own hand, with how she found the right pressure and grip style, each stroke working the bottom of his length before working up and nudging against the base edge of his glans. He might last five minutes, watching the topless woman work her magic.

“Sure you don’t—”

“Nah. Just stay there, relax. Hell, if I get into the mood, I might just masturbate and put on a show for you.” She winked at him, grinning like a devil. “And I’ll call Ganders, tell him you won’t be coming in.”

“You’re being very nice. Trying to seduce me to work for the Invictus?”

“What? No, I told you to try and play the field, play all of us. Told you that cause I know, in the end, you’ll work for us. Avery’s too rigid, and expects you to step into line. Azamel can’t provide you with anything except for protection, and she can’t even protect herself, with these fucking hunters coming for her.” Shrugging, she took one of her breasts into her palm, other hand still stroking him, and gently massaged the soft weight of her tit. Big enough to fill her palm, even overflow it slightly, it had Eric’s eyes hypnotized as she bounced it with a couple fingers, purposefully showing off its natural size.

He groaned as he watched, and shivered as he felt his precum wet his glans. The growing warmth of cum pooling underneath his testicles, getting ready to erupt, caused his length and glans to grow more and more sensitive. Pleasure sparks grew, and grew, until it went into his core, causing his abs to flex underneath the woman’s ass.

She smirked at him. She knew he was going to cum, and make a mess on the very, very expensive couch; she didn’t seem to care. Her grip shifted higher, squeezing the more sensitive top half of his cock, as one of her fingers reached up to cover the hole of his glans. And as the first gush of his hot cum squirted from him, she gently blocked its flow, so it flowed back down onto his cock, and her fingers.

“Don’t worry about the couch. The help will make sure it’s clean.”

“N-Not sure I ... like the idea of ... of a maid in my apartment.”

“Heh, you will.” She continued to stroke him, far more gently, but consistently, milking another wave of his cum from him, and another. Soon his own fluids coated every inch of his hard, veined girth, and she massaged it into his skin with her soaked fingers. It was hard to not groan louder, as his cock grew sensitive, and she continued to stroke it with slow, firm grip, sliding fingers along his skin with his cum. “If I’m going to be over here on the regular, making a mess with you, you’ll be a problem. I’m a vamp, I leave no traces behind. But you? I’ll be coating this place in your jizz, and that’ll definitely get stinky. Poor Kat.” She glanced back over her shoulder at Kat. Lazy animal was content to stare at the window from her cat tower, looking down over the huge city of lights. Probably felt like a queen.

“This ... going to be a regular thing?” he managed to say between more quiet groans, as she pulled another wave of his cum, and another. God fucking damn, she milked him, squeezing him at the base and working it for a few strokes, before sliding her soaked grip higher, to draw out another few drops of his cum.

“Definitely. You’re the kind of asshole I like. Fiona likes assholes too, like Damien, but he’s a different kind of asshole, doesn’t do much for me. You though, I like.” She smiled at him, and blushed.

It was the first time he’d ever seen her blush. Stripping in a night club? No blush. Fondling another girl while riding him, in public? No blush. Admits she likes him, blushes. It was so god damn endearing, he couldn’t help but smile.

She started stroking him again.

“Oh...” He let out a long breath, and fell back, relaxed onto the couch.

“Tash tells me a little of her exploits with her two boyfriends. You guys can go two, three times easy. Sometimes four. Least I can do is jack you off a second time.” Laughing, she used his cum to gently massage the sensitive, exposed skin of his glans, making sure to use a soft but consistent grip along the base edge. Girl knew how to please him better than he did. “I asked her if her boys had ever fucked her while transformed.”

“Transformed?”

“You know, that big form you guys got, Gauru I think it’s called? The big, huge, scary war form.”

“I can’t imagine that’s safe.” He melted into the couch, and struggled to keep his exhausted eyes on the topless woman. The subtle back and forth sway of her torso, with her up and down hand movement, made her far too hypnotic to not stare at. And her free hand reached down to his chest, where she caressed his muscle, his collar, and soon the front of his shoulders. He could fall asleep, right now, if she wasn’t also sitting on his abdomen.

“Probably not. But, fuck me if the idea isn’t really, really hot.”

“You into wolves?”

“I’m into the idea of a nine-foot-tall werewolf monster thing, with enormous hands fighting to tear off my clothes, and a giant dick rearranging my insides.” She stopped blushing. Talk of very, very kinky sex was as normal to her as breathing was to him.

“Are ... you asking me to do that?”

“Just putting that out there. I wouldn’t say no if you tried.” Chuckling, she looked down at her stroking hand, and took some time to work the base of his shaft, squeezing harder on the tougher part of his cock, and spurring some heat to build between his thighs. “Well, except for, you know, the begging and pleading ‘please no, it won’t fit, oh please don’t hurt me, oh god you’re splitting me apart’ sort of stuff. If you hear any of that, pay no mind. It just means you’re doing good. Oh!” He eyes lit up, and her smile grew; he could almost see the fantasizing in her eyes. “Especially if I try and get away, and I’m all shaky with orgasms, and dripping cum everywhere and stuff? And I’m begging for a break? Arg, pin me down and just have your way way with me.” Nodding to herself, eyes drifting upward, she licked her fangs again, and shivered.

This girl, was insane.

“I ... I could really hurt you, you know.”

“I’m a vampire, dumbass. I’ll be fine. Besides, you won’t hurt me, not in any way I won’t like, I mean. You like me too much.”

As if to prove her point, she started to stroke his whole length, and quickly. Lubrication made it easy, and her firm, consistent grip, made sure each stroke sent a powerful wave of bliss and pleasure sparks into his thighs and core. A few seconds later, the tingling of heat underneath his testicles announced itself. A few seconds more, and a gush of his cum squirted into her palm. She shifted her grip higher to encompass the whole of his swollen glans with her grip, and used his cum to keep her touch dripping hot and heavenly.

He struggled to keep his eyes open, as he melted into the couch.

Laughing, she stroked him for a little while longer, and squeezed out a few more drops of his cum, before she let go at last. “Look at this.” She showed him her hand, fingers spreading and pressing together. “Tash was right, you guys cum buckets.” Strands of white, thick globs of it, coated her palm, her fingers, and a few drops dripped down her wrist. That was a lot, far more than he would cum in the past.

“You talk about that sort of stuff with your friend?”

“Girls talk about everything. Hell, Tash and I have a system. If we go too long without talking to each other, we know something’s wrong.” She shrugged, and got up. He breathed a sigh of relief; nice to not have her sitting on his gut, no matter how amazing the sight was. “If we were gonna go again, I’d give you a proper show, and masturbate with this hand, get your cum inside me.” Winking, she played with his cum in her hand again, pressing her fingers together and making a fist, before she walked to the kitchen. “I’ll clean you up. You, relax.”

“Yeah ... ok.” And he was. The rippling bliss of orgasm aftershocks continued up and down his cock, and he looked down at the cum-soaked phallus, before letting his head fall to the couch arm again. Exhausted for two reasons, now. “Were you always this sexually aggressive?”

“Nah.” Whatever she was doing, she opened a few cupboards and drawers until she found what she was looking for, and got the water running. “Aggressive, yes, but not sexually. It took a few years as Kindred, before it really sank in.”

“What sank in?”

“Just how fucking hot we vamps are, and I was a dumbass for not indulging.”

He coughed on a laugh, before his body relaxed into the couch again. “How so?”

She returned, a wet rag in hand, and she sat down on his gut once again. He shuddered for a second, as a hot sensation covered his flaccid cock, and then, sliding texture. She was cleaning him, and still topless. If he stared at her too long, he’d get hard again; his new sex drive was proving to be insane, almost as much as the woman sitting on him.

“Well, as you can see, I’m a fox. Getting down to this low body fat percentage, as you know, is brutal. But as a vamp, all the issues with being super lean are gone. No more chronic hunger, or being cold all the time, or energy issues, or mood swings. I get to keep this amazing fitness model body, without any of the downsides.”

“That is pretty great.” Women did a number on their bodies, getting as lean as Jessy, for things like bikini bodybuilding competitions. Not healthy, or fun. He’d had it rough too, staying lean for his career, for photoshoots, but not as hard as a woman for sure; and his new body made it easy.

“Yeah, I cut down as part of my grooming. Hated it, but Michael assured me it wouldn’t be a problem after the embrace. He was right.” She took some time on his testicles, wiping them clean, and grinned at him as she did. “There’s a lot of other things too. Can’t get pregnant, or diseases, so no reason to ever use a condom.”

“I have to admit, cumming inside you is wonderful.”

“Damn straight.” Once done, she aimed the rag, and threw it into the kitchen from her seat on his belly. Based on the sound of impact, and the smile on her face, she’d landed it in the sink. “Sexual endurance is another big plus. Gimme a meal and I’m insta-horny. Let me blush life and I can cum until I’ve soaked you. And I haven’t taken a shit in fifty years, so, this ass is one hundred percent for quality anal and nothing but, at this point.”

He raised a brow, and looked at the ass currently sitting on his abs. A very large, toned ass.

“I know, right?” she said, and gave her ass-in-jeans a good slap, hard enough to make her breasts jiggle for a moment. Woman knew exactly what she was doing. “But, you know, that’s all kind of secondary to the biggest change.”

“What’s that?”

“The overwhelming majority of Kindred don’t fucking care. Fuck everyone, fuck no one, Kindred just don’t fucking care. Got a high sex drive? Have an orgy with a dozen kine. Got no sex drive? No one will bat an eyelash if you never fuck a soul. Whether you're a prude or a slut, no one fucking cares anymore, and I god damn love that. Do whatever the fuck makes you happy." Sighing, relaxing, she leaned back on the couch, and put both elbows onto the couch back. Still topless meant her breasts were on display, but he was sure that was half the reason she was sitting like that, to give him a treat. The other half was, she genuinely didn't seem to give a shit.

He really liked that. Sheryl liked to pose, and be sexy too, but the moment things winded down, she'd cover herself up. Terrified to ever be seen without make up. Terrified to ever let out a fart. Jessy, she'd probably fart right on him, if vamps did that.

"I suppose," she said, "I should tell you the other reason I'm here."

Ah shit. "Really would prefer ... you didn't spoil ... the mood." He struggled to find a little venom or bite to put in his words, but he was too exhausted. Despite what was turning into a pleasant evening, he still had trouble seeing straight, and every part of him felt like it weighed a thousand pounds. He would never get up from this expensive couch unless he had to.

"It's important. Last night, only a bit before sunrise, Jack sent me a message. Another ritual has been found."

"The weird one with the symbols and picture?"

"Yeah. Except this time it wasn't Jack's face. It was yours."

He forced his head up, and stared at the woman. Zero tact, off like a bandaid. He could appreciate that, usually, but knowing a bunch of psychopaths had his face, a little easing in would have been better.

"My face."

“Yeah. Jack thinks it’s a connection with Azamel.”

“Azamel? I talked to her once! I—” The memory slammed into him, and tore through his eyes until he shut them. Fuck. Fuck fuck. “The ... in the dream ... I was being chased by some sort of monster. And, and it said ... Jeremiah wanted me.”

“Fuck, that doesn’t sound like a regular dream.” She slipped off his stomach, and got dressed. “Try and get some more sleep, maybe sleep off some of whatever’s been done to you. I’ll watch over you for a few hours.”

“ ... done to me?”

“Uratha who’s wrecked like he’s been binge drinking, had a dream where a monster says Jeremiah’s looking for you? Yeah, I’m guessing something’s been done to you.” Shrugging, she reached down, yanked his boxers back up over his bits, and reached out for his hand. Of course, she didn’t bother to wait for him to brace himself, and instead yanked him up onto his feet with all the grace of an ox. “Come on, up and at ‘em.”

Dizzy as fuck, his weight fell onto Jessy, arm hooked around her shoulders. But she handled his weight easily, and guided him to his bedroom. Kat followed, offering a few concerned meows, and rubbing against their legs as Jessy dragged him.

“It ... it was a dream. It meant nothing.”

“Wish I could agree, but see all the scary shit out there I have, and you start being a little more open minded about ridiculous shit. Describe the monster.”

“The monster? It—” His voice caught in his throat for a moment as Jessy lifted him, and threw him onto the bed, borderline literally. “It was ... at least twelve feet tall, dark skin like leather, and ... and four arms, and four wings.”

“That sounds ... pretty rad, actually.”

Rad. Good god, the woman really was from an older time.

“It had a tail, and glowing red eyes, and ... it’s a blur. I think ... think I can remember its face. Mostly human, except for ... sharp teeth ... and horns.”

“Sounds like some sort of dragon. Well, leathery skin? Oh, a human-looking face you said. Maybe some sort of really big demon or gargoyle thing,” she said. He could tell she was saying these things with an air of sarcasm, but at the same time, her eyes fell a bit after she said them. Fun to joke, but not so fun when those were genuine possibilities. Christ, his new life was fucked up.

“It did have claws, and talons.” He remembered those all too well.

“I’ll give Fiona a text, see if it sounds familiar to her.”

He tried to sit up, but his body might as well have been upside down. The strength to move was there, but every attempt to use it made his brain disagree, like some sort of extreme vertigo that was convincing him he was heavier than he was.

“Think it was a Begotten?”

“Could be, right?” She shrugged, pulled out her phone, and got texting. “You were asleep, and those monsters can fuck with your dreams.”

“But Jeremiah is hunting Azamel, and vampires, and werewolves too, if he’s after me. Is he working with a Begotten?”

“Could be. I’m not coming to any conclusions yet. I’ll get Jack and Damien involved, and we’ll evaluate.”

It'd be damn weird, if those hunter psychos were working with a monster. Weird was normal at this point, though, so maybe it was a good idea to consider that. Either way.

With Jessy's help, he got under the sheets. On his back, he stared up at the ceiling, and looked over at the vampire woman.

"Wake me in a few hours?"

"That's the plan."

"What'll you do?"

"Figured I'd watch some TV in your living room."

"I—" Kat hopped up onto the bed, nudged against him, and found her usual spot beside the pillow. "I don't know how I feel about that."

"Not comfortable with me being around while you sleep?"

"What? That's not what I meant. Just, after what you just did for me, I figured I should ask if you wanted to stay the night."

Laughing, she tapped her phone against her forehead a few times, and smiled at him. "You mean in bed with you."

"Yeah."

"I'm Kindred. I go comatose when I sleep, and I sleep during the day. And unless those curtains you got are sealed to the walls to not let in a single crack of light, I'll turn into kindling come sunrise."

"Those ... are legitimate points."

"That said." Shrugging, she climbed onto the bed with him. Still in her jeans and shirt, but at least no shoes, she lay on top of the covers. “Don’t think I’ve ever lain in bed with a man, and not had sex.”

“Heh, how about a woman?”

“Only Tash, and without sexual context. Tried to get Tash into bed a few times, for a proper fucking, but she didn’t really pick up the signals. And I don’t think she’s into women, which makes me all sorts of sad.” Smirking, Jessy turned on her side to face him, head propped up on a palm, elbow to the bed. “Got her into bed with my ghouls a few times though. You should have seen it, that tight little pussy spread open on a cock. Bet I could barely fit a finger inside her.”

Ok, yeah, this woman was a sexual animal. He could feel the blood start to work its way down to his cock again, the pulses of his heart each pumping a wave of blood into the member. But he took a deep breath, and forced his body to calm. You need some more sleep. Get some more sleep.

Except, he wasn’t tired. He was exhausted, and weak, and feeling dizzy and tender, but not tired. The weight of his eyelids never grew, and his body didn’t sink into his blankets.

“I think sleeping most of the day has fucked my sleep schedule,” he said. “I doubt I’ll be able to sleep.”

“Bleh, you’re going to need to feel better though.”

“Wh—oh, because you think hunters are going to try and do to me, what they did to Jack.”

“Yeap. Got Kindred watching the place right now. And right now, I’m texting Damien and Jack about the weird dream you had.” She stared into the glow of her phone, but she had trouble texting with the speed of the typical phone user. It made sense, he supposed. She was born before cell-phones existed, let alone texting. “It’s why I’m dressed. Otherwise I'd be under the blankets with you. Way to a man's heart is his cock."

"Stomach."

"Cock."

"I'm pretty sure it's stomach."

"I've been embraced for over fifty years, dumbass. I've seduced hundreds of men, turned dozens into dotting sex slaves. Even turned some of them into ghouls, if they proved themselves capable in and out of bed. Never cooked a damn meal in my life."

He laughed, and looked up at the ceiling as he smiled. "You're confusing men, with boys."

"Am I?"

"Yeah. When the sex is over, and the heat has died down for the moment, is where the difference becomes apparent." And where he and Sheryl never really connected on anything, unless money was involved. "If you fill a man's stomach, that's where infatuation turns to love."

"I see." She nodded, checked her phone a few times more, and turned over onto her back next to him. "I suppose you'd know more about this, despite the age diff. Married and divorced, I imagine you have wisdom to share."

Wisdom to share about his failed marriage, and painful divorce. All the bitterness and constant thoughts about it running through his head, summarized in a word he didn't expect: wisdom.

"You know? I just might."

~~Julias~~

He was tempted to call Triss, and see if she had something to contribute. But he knew it'd be a bad idea. Much as he wanted to confide in her all the details of what was happening involving the hunters, at a certain point it crossed into needless, and potentially disastrous information overshare. If they got involved, they might trip over what the Invictus were doing, or give something up to the Carthians.

Was that a bad thing? Now that Garry was taking a more active role in fucking with the Invictus, Julias found himself hesitant to let him in on the details of Invictus movements against the hunters.

He sighed from behind his desk in the Xnomina HQ, and watched the video feed from a dozen thralls stationed around Carlava Villa. Snipers on rooftops, eyes in parked cars, and more than a few Kindred about, doubled up, each paired with at least one member that was good at the cloak of night. No one was getting into the building that didn't belong there.

~Just jacked Eric off a couple times. Now we're gonna take a nap on his bed.~

Julias looked at the text, tied into the network for the Right Hands. God damn it, Jessy. That woman, what the hell. Young kindred often let their sex drives get the better of them, until they were older, but Jessy was plenty old at this point. He figured she'd have calmed down by now. Well, at least she said she jacked him off, not fucked him; that'd be a hard position to jump out of and prepare to defend herself, if someone attacked.

The following texts about Eric's dream, were not so silly. Talk of a monster was understandable, dreams were weird. But the specific mention of Jeremiah seemed out of place. Combined with Eric's exhaustion despite his Uratha physicality, it was too much of a coincidence for Julias to pass it off as a meaningless dream.

Dreams were the purview of the Begotten. He was tempted to try and contact Azamel; easier said than done, with no actual way to message her, except maybe send a runner into the old tunnels.

The others should be here, but they weren't. MacDonald was off with a crew, investigating potential Terra Den issues; whatever that meant. Turio was doing something, by herself, about something she didn't want to talk about. In the past, he'd have chalked it up to Maria being Maria, pursuing whatever sort of creepy shit a devout person like her did. Why she never left the Invictus to join the Sanctified, he'd never understand.

That wasn't fair. Maria was a far more reliable council member than Michael was. She put her foot down and got things done, without putting the Invictus, or Xnomina, in harm's way. Usually. There was Antoinette's warning about her, and there was a buzz going around that Maria was dipping her toes into dangerous, nondescript things. What those things were, no one knew, but he didn't put it above Maria to pursue the strange sorceries Lucas was supposedly capable of. Jack confirmed that Lucas had actually cast a bolt of lightning, and hurt the Prince, preventing her from using her majesty discipline. Theban sorcery, supposedly. It was one possibility of what Maria was up to. He didn't want to consider others, not yet.

He held down the 1 key on the keyboard. "Jack, any sightings?"

"No."

2 key. "Mister Burksen?"

"No."

3 key. "Madam Lauevion?"

"No sir."

He went through a few more, and sighed with each one. No point in asking, they'd report in any sightings the moment they had any, but he was growing impatient. He hated that he was growing impatient. Impatience was not a good trait for any Ventrue, and it wasn't one he ever wanted to learn, before or after his embrace. The issue was, this was possibly pointless. Eric's dream, if it was an attack of some kind, was a giveaway, which meant the hunters knew Eric knew, and that the Kindred probably knew; assuming they knew Eric was working with the Kindred. Another maybe.

Considering the ritual was of his face, there was no way the dream was just happenstance. It had to be real, had to be something, had to mean the hunters were going to come for Eric. How. How was the problem. Would the hunters come in through the front door, or chopper in, or something ludicrous? The Kindred had every inch of the building's exterior monitored, under the assumption the hunters would come for Eric. There was just no way it was going to go the way their plan thought it might.

He looked at his phone, at another text from Jessy, this one for him specifically.

~Eric says the way to a man's heart is his stomach, not his dick. Thoughts?~

Sometimes, Julias forgot that he and Jessy had worked side by side for decades. To Jessy, that meant every detail of her personal life she felt sharing, was up for him to learn, whether he wanted to or not.

He facepalmed, before he texted back. ~A boy, a young man, can't think past their own dick. A man is capable of appreciating more. You could consider that to be a metaphor for the stomach, yes.~

~That's basically what he said!~

~Sounds like you got your work cut out for you, if you're trying to break this man.~

~Bah.~

He laughed, and put the phone back down. Break was the wrong word, but it was probably how Jessy was thinking about it. She had to break the man of course, not enjoy a growing romance like an adult, no no. To Jessy, he was a challenge to overcome, and puzzle to figure out.

Jack had told Julias that he was sure Eric and Jessy were interested in each other, and it was good to see his childe noticing details. A little tidbit of information could turn into a vital puzzle piece for a key issue, or valuable ammo in war. He was catching on quick. Poor Antoinette, forced to watch her lover become more and more of a schemer and typical Ventrue with each passing night. Julias was proud, but he had to admit, it was a little sad, seeing the kid's innocence melt away.

The Carlava Villa wasn't the only thing Julias was monitoring. There were thralls keeping an eye on the Mirrden District, in case Garry made a push for it. There were Kindred roaming South Side in pairs or triplets, hunting, keeping an eye open for anything and everything that might have been involved with the hunters. MacDonald had a bunch of Kindred keeping an eye on the Carthians, wasting time and man power over Tones's stupid crap. If the two damn dogs could stop fighting for one—his phone buzzed.

A message from Triss. ~Hey Superman. Jacob says you guys are doing a stakeout on Eric?~

Of course Jacob knew. No Invictus had told him, but at this point, it was expected the old man would find out what the Invictus were up to, except for the most private, and well-kept secrets.

~Sorry Triss, Invictus business.~

~Thought hunter business was for everyone?~

~It is, but coordinating with the other covenants makes things difficult.~

~True, I suppose.~

The Prince was the exception, of course. In matters dealing with the hunters, he kept her up to date. Unfortunately, she couldn't be bothered to deal with this matter personally. She had some thralls watching, he was sure, but she herself was attending to 'Princely' affairs; which likely meant putting counter measures in place against both the hunters, and the Begotten, Uratha, and even the covenants. She always did think ahead. The sheriff was off pursuing some mysterious agenda no one really understood, but at this point, Julias was sure he was doing something involving handling the new threats of the city. The man was a mystery.

~Guess what I'm doing?~ the phone said. Another text from Triss.

He was almost tempted to text her, and say he'd have to get back to her. The night was proving uneventful though, and with as many eyes as he had watching the tower, he didn't need to be watching the video feeds himself. It wouldn't be so bad, to text her back.

~What?~

~Got my hands all covered in kine blood, and I'm drawing patterns on Jen's big tits.~

~ ... what?~

~Ha, kidding. But we are doing some crúac shit. Jacob's showing me some rituals.~

~And you're texting me while doing this?~

~We're on the way. I'll send you a juicy picture if we get naked and rub blood on each other, or something. ttyl~~

Julias rolled his eyes and set the phone back down. He didn't mind the idea of Jen and Triss being naked around Jacob; he doubted the old man gave a shit about naked girls, at this point. There was concern about the dark and dangerous road the two witches were going down, though. Triss had awakened to a new level of confidence, since she started wearing that necklace, and watching her put her own blood around his door frame was an odd sort of thrilling.

He was in love with a witch, a practitioner of the dark arts, and an all around badass woman. Two, sort of, with Jen attaching as a friend.

He smirked, leaned back in his grand chair, and took stock of his second life. Dating an amazing woman, her friend too, he was now on the council for the Invictus of Dolareido, his childe was performing above all expectations, and Lucas, Viktor, and Tony were all dead. Everything should be better, but they weren't, not with the hunters, werewolves, and the damn monsters ruining everything.

Groaning, he buried his forehead in his palm. The Begotten were not the problem, not the way his reflex insisted they were. Hunters in the city, here to kill Azamel, were a problem, but as much as he'd like to blame Azamel, hunters were a problem all paranormals had to face. It was her fault, but at the same time, it was hard to blame her for simply existing. Not all paranormals were lucky enough to live in a city like Dolareido.

His phone buzzed again. He checked it, and chuckled at the picture. Triss, doing a stereotypical selfie for her phone, with her free hand lifting her tank top so he could see her breasts and nipple piercings. Jen was behind her, kissing her neck, and grinning at the phone as she did. The beast within would normally dodge or blur such photos instinctively, but with a little mental effort, a Kindred could pose for a camera.

Where were they? Looked like a cemetery. Probably the Three Kings Cemetery. He knew Jacob performed a lot of his extracurricular activities in that area, but he wasn't in the picture. Either he was not in camera shot, or not around. Julias hoped he wasn't around, but he got the feeling the two witches were growing comfortable enough to not give a shit about posing for Julias, even with Jacob around. Not because they didn't respect the old man, but they were catching on that Jacob was happiest when people treated him like the asshole that he was; in this case, ignoring him to pose for the phone.

Another picture came in, this time with Jen's hands groping Triss's breasts, still suckling on her neck. Then another, groping her breasts still, but now kissing her.

~Evil.~ He texted before he rolled his eyes, again, and took a couple seconds longer looking at the picture, before setting the phone down. She knew she was torturing him. He'd have to repay her and Jen next time he saw them.

He looked back to the video feed. Carlava Villa was a fairly tall building, with many floors. It had to be tall, to justify the large size of the apartments. Most of the floors had eight, but the top few with the grand suites had only four, giant apartments worthy of millionaires and presidents fucking prostitutes in secret. Three were being taken up by Uratha now.

He frowned, and watched Damien's high perch camera feed. Through the curtains of the building, he could see the silhouettes of some entities on various floors. One of them was Clara, the werewolf who had an interest in Jack. It was a good thing Jack hadn't given into Clara's flirtations, but Jack had expressed some sadness over being unable to reciprocate. He liked Clara, he told Julias as much, and he seemed to think highly of her, but felt bad about not being able to return her interest. Poor kid probably didn't realize that it'd offend Clara if she realized she was being pitied.

The silhouette of Clara was alone, sitting on a couch. Watching TV, or streaming a movie, perhaps. He could find out, if he wanted, bring up the Xnomina monitoring program, then use his Invictus passcode to get access to the private information. No reason to spy on what she was watching though, except to maybe piss her off later with the knowledge. No reason to do that either.

He set his curiosity aside, and moved his eyes to another video feed. Hella Vendram was watching from the street view, a distant position a good couple blocks away from Carlava Villa. Isabella didn't get her crew involved unless directly ordered, and even when ordered, she was hesitant to throw them into the direct line of fire. He could appreciate that; but it was also why she wasn't a Right Hand, and Jack was. Where Jack was both accomplished and trustworthy, Isabella was as well. The difference was Jack's ability and desire to get things done; case in point, he was sitting in a car with Natasha at this very moment, hidden in her cloak of night, almost directly outside Carlava Villa. Natasha could keep him hidden, barring some ridiculous counter card the hunters hadn't played yet.

And that was a possibility.

Julias sighed, and looked for that joy he had a moment ago, when Triss texted him. Gone. He grumbled, and dragged his fingers down his face. Being stuck behind a desk was man's version of hell. He thought things would be better as a council member, but having to be hands off with everything, so he could provide macro support and keep people aligned on objectives, was both infuriating and nauseating. No wonder CEO was considered one of the most stressful jobs on the planet; no amount of money can justify dying young to a stomach ulcer. Unfortunately, Kindred didn't have to deal with stomach ulcers, so nothing existed to end this strange misery he'd found himself in.

He wanted to be out there, with Tash and Jessy, with Jack, getting his hands dirty. The oldest, strongest ancilla in the city, and he was trapped behind a desk. No, that wasn't true. He could go out there if he wanted. The problem was he knew it wasn't a good investment of his time, or a good use of his managing skills. From here he could give orders while monitoring the situation; maybe he should get a proper monitoring van set up, like a police crew?

If the hunters showed up and caused a ruckus, Carlava was only a five minute run away. But even in that circumstance, it was probably better to stay here and monitor the situation on the dozen video feeds. Viktor would say it was the responsibility of underlings to do the heavy lifting, and die, while it was the duty of leaders to oversee how. Grim, but true, unfortunately.

He leaned back in his seat, and checked Damien's feed again. The man was a stone, unmoving, and silent. Fifty years of sneaking, hiding, observing, learning the sword, learning to use guns, learning his disciplines. The man was basically a self-taught assassin, and had insisted on doing his stakeout alone.

And, no matter how much Julius found the man unnerving, he was proving to be both trustworthy, and a damn valuable Right Hand.

---

---

~~Damien~~

Damien took a slow, deep breath. Pointless. He didn't breathe, no Kindred did, and the act had lost its value even as a nervous tick, long ago. Now, he was doing it to check if his hearing was still adjusted. If the breath was quiet, his ears weren't adjusted enough. If the breath sounded loud, they were.

The other Kindred weren't used sitting and watching silently. They were taught to be more proactive in their pursuits, to engage, that the best defense was a good offense. It was true, he supposed. In the modern world, with technology at hand, being passive meant losing engagements. He who struck first, won. This was especially true when using explosives.

But when it came to doing a stakeout, and waiting for an enemy to expose themselves, patience was required. The younger Kindred, and those his age, were spoiled by Dolareido. They had no patience. They wanted to run in, convinced they could take on any threat.

That was slowly changing though, as the new threats made it apparent how deadly they were. The Kindred were starting to understand that the Uratha, and the Begotten, were stronger than them. Only the ancilla and elders were strong enough to stand up to them, and the overwhelming majority of Kindred in Dolareido were neonates. Kindred ruled the city, but before the terrifying power of werewolves, or the sheer alien nature of the monsters, most vampires were weak and vulnerable.

And these hunters were hunting Begotten. They came here to kill Azamel, not Kindred. Sometimes Damien wondered if he was the only one putting that together, to come to the realization that these hunters were veterans, not to be taken lightly. Did it matter? He wasn't sure. What he did know, was that if he spotted Jeremiah or Angela, he would kill them. Athalia could burn for all he cared. He wouldn't let her daughter damage the fragile world Dolareido held. He wouldn't let those maniacs hurt this budding new existence he was carving for himself from the ashes of his sire's corpse.

He wouldn't let them hurt Fiona.

He shook his head, and took another slow, deep breath, to align his ears. It also sent his mind wandering to last night, and the small get-together with the Prince, Jack, Natasha, and the others. Jennifer and Antoinette had, naturally, worn their sexuality openly, leaving nothing to the imagination. It wouldn't be long before Fiona would be dressing the same way, and he had to admit, he was looking forward to seeing her in yet more revealing clothing.

The girl was gorgeous, delightful, and her sunny disposition was soothing to his soul and mind. Not only gorgeous, she was beautiful, and sexual, and the sight of her heavy breasts struggling against the plunging cleavage of her green dress was—“Damien!” Jessy’s voice, tapping into the open line. “Get in here now! I ... intru ... ck... —” Static.

Chapter 69

~~Eric~~

Someone was coming.

He sat up in bed, and climbed over Jessy, but she sat up at the same time, and he rolled with the momentum. The floor greeted him, and he wished he'd landed on cheap apartment carpet, not beautiful, designer ceramic tile that had all the softness of Sheryl's soul.

"The fuck?" she said.

"Someone's coming. I can hear them. Feel them." He tried to stand up, but the moment he was on his feet, everything felt heavy. Arms, legs, the head on his shoulders, it all increased in weight to the point he felt like a newborn unable to lift its own head.

Jessy was up a moment later, hands on his shoulders, stabilizing him. "You serious?"

"Someone ... familiar."

"No hunter's getting past the Kindred watching outside, Eric. The only people who could get in here without them knowing are other paranormals."

He frowned, blinked away his dizziness, and grabbed some jeans from the closet. "I don't know who it is, but I can feel them. Someone's here, in my territory. I have to—"

"Your territory?"

“I ... shit, I didn’t even think about saying it like that, it just came out.” He marched out into the living room, wearing nothing but his boxers and jeans. Good enough to answer the door. Good enough to punch someone in the face if they were looking to try and convert him to their side.

Not good enough to stand. He got to the door, before his hand had to brace his weight, fingers to the wall, head falling forward.

“You look really hot in nothing but jeans,” the vampire said, coming up behind him. “If you were cuddling Kat too, it’d be like a fashion shoot, specifically for wooing lonely, crazy cat women.”

“Can we stop joking for a second?”

“Fine, but I don’t see—”

The stranger arrived at the door. There was a coldness to the smell that crept under the door frame, an alien, and almost overpowering aura. He didn’t know what the fuck an aura was, or how he knew he could feel one, but he was. This person at the door had an aura, and it was dark.

Jessy pulled him back by the shoulder, and put her eye to the peep hole. Mistake. He tried to reach out, to grab her shoulder and yank her away, but the world wouldn’t hold still under his feet. Before he could say anything, the door opened with a loud crack, the door frame shattering open around the lock.

But Jessy jumped back in time. As she slid by, socks gliding on the floor, she grabbed him by the wrist, spun, and threw him into the couch fifteen feet away. Nausea hit him, but he managed to keep his food down as his back collided with the couch back. He tried to keep his eyes on Jessy, but she was twisting, moving, sliding—no, she was standing still now. It was the damn world moving around, refusing to hold still again.

“Who the fuck are you?” she said.

Someone stepped into the room. Some guy wearing a nondescript gray hoodie, blue jeans, and black sneakers. He was tall, broad shouldered, and brought his hands up like a boxer as he put the weight of his body onto the balls of his feet.

No answer.

He was familiar, whoever he was. Fucker smelled familiar, felt familiar, and Eric was sure he'd seen the man before. Where? Who the fuck was this guy?

“Jessy, he's dangerous!”

The woman snorted a growl, and came in closer. “Answer me before I—”

“I didn't come here for you. I came for the Uratha.” The stranger's voice was almost monotone, and for a moment, Eric almost expected him to say ‘I want to suck your blood’ or some other stereotype. Romanian? It was subtle, but there. Except, whoever this fucker was, he was no vampire; he didn't smell like they did, hints of ash and staleness. Instead, he smelled more of that alien smell from before, something his nose didn't recognize.

The man stepped in, and swung his hand upward. Whoever he was, he had balls, but he didn't smell like a vampire or werewolf. What was he, then? The fist collided with Jessy's blocking arms, and sent her flying, the impact of knuckles on forearms hard enough the sound was almost comical, like a scene from a movie. A growl filled the room as Jessy stumbled back upon landing, before dropping to a knee and onto her hands, like she was getting ready to sprint.

“Jessy, I—”

“Shut up and stay put, Eric.”

Yeah, that made sense. He wanted to get up, to fight, but the very thought of standing up was enough to have him reaching for the couch to brace himself. He was no use in a fight right now.

Maybe if he changed? Could he change? He knew he could, felt the ability in his guts as much as he knew how to flex a muscle. But trying to change right now was like trying to fly, and until whatever was happening to him settled, he wasn't doing anything.

Jessy said the place was being watched by Kindred, but she wasn't calling for them. She had faith they'd come in on their own, then. But then, this fucker wasn't supposed to be able to sneak in past them. They might not have been coming; and not like they could see in, since Eric had blackout curtains hung up everywhere. Really regretted that now.

He half expected the man in the hoodie to tell Jessy to leave. Another part half expected him to pull out a pistol and start shooting. He did not expect the man to run up to Jessy, and take another swing.

Jessy came in to meet him, and swung her arm down. Eric stared on, sure his eyes were playing tricks on him, as Jessy's arm exploded in size, spikes and thorns erupting from her bicep and tricep, from her forearm, from her knuckles, and the length of her fingers extending as they thickened into claws. The counter inertia was enough for the rest of body to get launched a foot into the air, as the colossal hand slammed into the floor.

Oh god, his floor.

The intruder dodged to the side at the last moment, throwing himself with a panicked jump. He slid into the wall, near a cat tower. Shit, Kat! No, Kat wasn't around, still in his bedroom, and smart enough to not come out with the noise.

His eyes locked onto Jessy, and he forced himself to sit up more, one arm gripping the couch back as he squinted. If the world could stop spinning for just one fucking second, he could get a better look at the vampire.

He gulped as Jessy's other arm erupted in the same mess of death, covered in the same sort of spikes, and fingernails elongated into massive claws from monstrous hands. She launched forward, weight on the balls of her feet, back raised, as if she had a tail to counter balance. She didn't. Instead of an animal, she just looked like a hulking monster, several spikes erupting from her back, her spine, and from her elbows. Others erupted outward from the top of her head, and others erupted from her feet, talons that shredded her socks.

The man sidestepped at the last moment again, but Jessy's speed was immense. Her claws snagged on his hoodie, and cut through the pockets.

"I don't know you, who you are, or how you got in here," she said, stalking back and forth, now that her prey was out of reach. "But I'm going to rip you to fucking shreds."

The man stood, looked at her, and frowned. His features were largely hidden in the hoodie, its hood pulled forward, and burying the man's face in more shadow than it should have. How he managed to punch Jessy so hard that she flew clear across the room, Eric had no idea, but the man grimaced as he looked the vampire up and down, his lips only barely visible. No banter, despite Jessy fishing for it.

Just as Jessy was about to pounce, the man ran in, sneakers gripping the floor as he vaulted up, drew his fist back, and slammed it down toward her. As he did, a flash of shadow blanketed the room, black, enormous curtains that jutted outward from behind the man. The fist he drew back was enormous, black, leathery, and there were two of them for the one hand.

Wait.

“Jes—”

She leapt aside, talons tearing up the ceramic tile as her weight caught against it, skidding like she was ice skating. Her hand’s claws sank into the floor as well, helping bring her sliding body to a halt.

“I saw it, Eric. I said shut up!”

He gulped. Her voice had changed, some inhuman growl overtones mixing with the woman’s usual tone. It was like a demon was bursting out of her.

And a demon was trying to kill her. The intruder stood up from where he landed, and the tile around his punch splintered outward, a small crater around his fist. Any fighter understood that you could only put as much weight into a punch as you had weight attached to it; a light guy with a hard punch would send himself away from whatever he punched, if the thing was heavier than him. But seeing a guy jump, and then land as if he weighed a couple thousand pounds, was massive dissonance to Eric’s trained mind. This made no sense.

Jessy dashed for the man, and threw her weight at him, hands out to both sides with claws elongated. If the intruder dodged to the sides, he’d risk getting clawed. If he stayed where he was, Jessy’s weight would hit him, and then she’d close her claws around him.

The intruder turned his side to Jessy, and brought one of his wings down over his body, like a wall. Wings?

Eric squinted again, stared, breathed deep, and did everything he could to get the world to hold still for a second, so he could see what the ever living fuck the guy in the hoodie was doing. Something was coming out of him. Not like Jessy's spikes and claws, which had erupted from her skin like bone growths, but something that faded from existence the moment it had served its purpose. Something black.

Jessy's body collided with the black wall, and before she could close in her claws around him, he snapped the black curtain away from him. It was a wing, it had to be a wing, something that connected to the man's back, and had bent around him like a shield. Wings, four of them.

The thing from his dream.

He sprinted after Jessy, sneakers making tiny squeaks against the fancy floor as he threw his weight into her. The Gangrel hadn't gotten up from her rolling, and only managed to get to a knee as he ran into her. He slammed forward his palm, the one motion sending two alien palms to reach out, one grabbing her face, the other grabbing her wrist. With a growl, a familiar, shrieking growl, the man in the hoodie slammed the vampire's skull into the wall separating the living room from bathroom.

The drywall gave way, bits of paint and white mist splashing outward like water, before it cracked inward and let Jessy's head to pass through it. It was like a fucking cartoon, half her torso going into the wall too, and the impact causing her legs to straighten out in the air behind her, before slumping against the wall and floor.

The man turned toward Eric, and marched his way.

Eric stared at him, and tried to force his body to respond; so far the only thing that was responding appropriately was the increased heart rate and breathing. The world wasn't going to hold still long enough for him to stand up, and every motion felt like trying to find where gravity was again. He was borderline helpless.

Borderline. Growling at the intruder, Eric dug his fingers into the couch cushions, and stood up. He expected his feet to land on the ground, but they didn't, tripping over themselves sideways, and sending him to the floor. It was like being very, very drunk, and as Eric reached over to the couch now beside him and tried to pick himself up, he groaned against the familiar struggle. Drunk as hell without any of the buzz, delightful.

A loud crack turned his head toward the door.

“What the fuck is this?”

Eric squinted at the apartment entrance, trying to make out who it was. But sound and smell filled him in a lot quicker than his eyes.

“Clara! This guy is ... trying to ... take me to Jeremiah,” he said. She must have heard the commotion; everyone in the building must have heard the commotion. The Kindred had to know what was going on, or at least that something was happening.

The man let out a single snort, before he swung his foot for Eric's chest. To try and dodge it was a reflex, but a pointless one, and Eric let out a loud groan as the man's sneaker crashed into his stomach hard enough to send him back a few feet. If he had anything in his stomach, he'd be vomiting as he spun over once before landing on his side.

“He smells weird,” Clara said, approaching, corner of her lip raised in a snarl.

“He's ... a Begotten,” he said between coughs and groans.

“The fuck is a Begotten doing working for Jeremiah?” Clara looked to the other side of the room where Jessy was pushing herself out of the hole in the wall, and then back to Eric's direction. Groaning, Eric put his palms to the floor, and twisted to look back toward her, and the fucker who kicked him.

Mister Hoodie hesitated, before he brought his fists up to his chest, and cracked his knuckles. As he took a step toward Clara, a shimmer of black filled the air around him, burying them in shadow. Flickering movements, each massive, each swallowing the air around them in its shadow. A set of dragon feet, then gone. Four arms poised to rip and tear, then gone. A long tail slithering behind it like a swimming crocodile, then gone. Four wings, with a pair of horns rising up between them from the demon's skull. Gone again, as Mister Hoodie came in closer to Clara.

“The fuck were you hoping to accomplish?” Clara said. “Not like you're getting out of here with Eric, or alive.”

The man snorted again, and a heavy blast of air shot out around him, as if a great beast had expressed discontent. He raised his hands, grabbed reality between his two and four sets of fingers and claws, and ripped out the curtains of the universe.

As blackness set upon them, he could hear Jessy, scrambling with her phone. “Damien! Get in here now, we have an intruder! I can barely see anything, shit is going black, and the ... shit.” She put away the phone, and ran for the monster and two werewolves, before everything was swallowed in the growing shadow.

---

The blackness came, and fled, like a morning fog. Slow, heavy, cold, and unwanted. Eric groaned again as he reached over for the couch, and froze as his hand found something hard instead. Something hard, cold, and rough to the touch. Something that gave him a splinter as he slid his fingers along it.

“The ... fuck...”

“Eric?” the darkness called out. Jessy's voice.

“Yeah, I'm here. Clara?”

“Yeah, I’m here. Where’s here?”

“Dunno,” Jessy said. “But ... but if what Fiona told me is right, this fucking Begotten just pulled us into a nightmare.”

The following silence might as well have been the Funeral March.

“Shit,” Clara said.

Eric sighed, and stood up. Stood, standing, up! Fucking yes, finally. He couldn’t see much, only some barren walls in the dark and the two nearby women, but he could tell the world wasn’t spinning anymore.

“I ... am apparently feeling better,” he said.

“Might be because we’re in a nightmare?” Jessy came up to him, and put a hand on his shoulder. He expected to feel claws, but they were gone. She changed quickly. “If that fucker got into your dream, and did something to you there, maybe it’s broken because we’re here?”

Clara snorted, and came up to them as well. Until their eyes adjusted to the darkness, better to stay near each other; the fucker could still be around, too. “So you two might be perfectly fine with this, but this is my first time inside a nightmare. You sure we’re in a nightmare?”

Shrugging, Jessy brought up her phone, and used it as a flashlight. “My first time too, but we know what Begotten can do. If you have any other ideas, hit me, because I’m getting no reception.”

Eric smirked at the Gangrel. Panic was rising in his gut, and every sense he had told him he was in some alien location, but Jessy handled it in stride. He supposed her fifty plus years of being a vampire, and decades of being some sort of front liner for the Invictus, meant she'd earned her scars and stars. Maybe they were in good hands, if the woman's volatile nature didn't doom them.

The world decided he wasn't ready for standing yet, and he reached out for Clara's shoulder. "Ok ... feeling a lot better, but not back to full speed yet."

The Uratha nodded, pat his arm, and looked around the room that surrounded them. It was a large room, with walls, and a similar layout to his apartment. But as he breathed deep, he smelled stone, and the ocean. He smelled wood, the forest, just a hint, but the stagnant air mostly held the scent of old stone, and the sort of water damage from decades of weathering storms. As Jessy's light came by, he squatted down and ran his fingers along the floor. Dirty, and he could feel the stone, smooth and worn, against his skin. He was barefoot, after all, Jessy too, and the stone was colder than his bare feet appreciated.

"Feel like I'm standing in some sort of old, fancy cottage with stone floors," he said. Back on his feet, he walked over to a wall, and touched it. "No, this is stone too. Stone walls and stone floors?" Looked like a wood ceiling though. Old, stained, and a bit warped, but yeah that was a wood ceiling, with planks showing many imperfections.

"Oh shit." Jessy pulled on something, and the two wolves turned to look at the incoming light. The sound of wood shifting on stone was strange, grinding, not the sound you'd expect from a cottage. Eric and Clara came over, and watched the gentle light cut across the floor, flickering, swaying. Fire.

Jessy winced, put her phone away, and pointed at the wall beyond the door. A hallway, with torches high up on the stone wall, lit. No, not a torch, a brazier, fancy, with a gargoyle shape holding the flame in its hands, the beast perched upon a stone outcropping.

They both stepped out into the hallway, and gasped at the size that awaited them. Eric looked left and right, half expecting the fucker in the hoodie to pounce, half expecting the four-winged gargoyle to pounce. But they were alone, and the hallway greeted them with nothing but silence, and the fire the gargoyles dangled over them.

The ceiling of the hallway was high, much higher than the room, at least twenty feet, and the hallway was wide, twenty feet as well. Several doors like the one they'd opened awaited, all closed, and while one end of the hallway came to a stop, a wall of stone and nothing more, the other end of the hallway looked like it opened into a turn.

“We’re not in Kansas anymore,” Jessy said.

Fuck him, if the damn woman couldn’t make him laugh.

---

---

~~Damien~~

He took the stairs.

Wrapped in his cloak of night, he tapped into the speed of a Mekhet, and drove his shoes into the hard metal of the inner fire escape stairway. Kine were there, some fleeing the building, but not in a panic. As far as he could tell, they had thought the noises might have been explosions, or maybe a collapsing wall or structure pillar. But the noises were gone, nothing had happened, and no fire alarm had gone off. People began walking back up the stairs to their apartments.

Some of them paused, and glanced around, confused, as Damien sped past them, jumping along the railing and climbing it almost straight up. He was a blur to them, their eyes sliding off of him, and minds unable to parse the alien presence. Moving quick and silent among the masses was as much an art as it was a blood discipline, and Damien was confident in his mastery.

Eric's floor was near the top of the tall building, and Damien frowned as the journey took seconds longer than he wanted it to. He'd said on the open line he was going in, and half expected Julias Mire to tell him to wait for back up. He didn't, and gave him an 'affirmative' instead. Perhaps the man was beginning to trust him.

It'd be a nice change of pace, for people to trust him. The only people he felt truly did so, were Jack and Fiona.

He steeled his gaze, sprinted down the hall, and went for the open door, sword in his right hand, pistol in his left. But the room was empty.

"What in God's name..." Sighing, he put his pistol away, and pressed in on his ear piece. "This is Damien. Eric's suite shows signs of melee combat, extreme damage, but there's no sign of him or Herrington."

"What about Clara?" Julias said.

"Negative."

Damien could almost hear Julias frown over the line. "Video feed saw her jump from her couch, and then run out of the apartment. I assume she ran to join Eric and Jessy."

"She probably did. And Carter?"

"Not in the building tonight."

"Roger that." Damien squatted down over the crater on the floor, and frowned. The floor was damaged as if someone had dropped a very large iron ball onto it from on high; but no iron ball was to be found. The hole in the wall could be accomplished by smashing someone into it, and the claw marks along the floor were long and filled with cracks and shred marks; the work of a Gangrel's protean transformations. The crater in the floor though, that would have required a great weight.

An Uratha could make a hole like that, if transformed into their war form, and if they drove the entirety of their weight into a single fist, after jumping to a great height. There had been two Uratha in the room, but no howling or roaring. That could have simply been the building's good sound insulation though.

He raised his head, and offered Jack and Natasha a nod as they walked in.

"They really just vanished?" Jack said.

Sighing, he nodded again, and walked over to the hole in the wall. Clear through, studs smashed, with bits of fabric against the wood between the drywall.

"A bad fight," he said.

"Think ... m-maybe ... a Kindred did this?" Natasha stood by the door, and looked back out. The police would not be coming, of course, and the residents would be informed there was no cause for concern.

"You know a Kindred that can make people vanish like this?" Jack shook his head, and squatted down by the dent in the floor, as Damien had done. "Cloak of night can do a lot of things, but the only Kindred I can think of that could use it, and incapacitate Jessy and Clara, and take them and Eric out of here all at once, would be —"

"Jacob or the sheriff." Damien shook his head, and motioned to the claw marks. "Jessy would have called that in immediately, if it were Jacob. No, she called in something more vague after hesitating, and based on these marks, she thought she could fight the intruders.” Jessy wasn’t stupid enough to try and fight those ancient undead, and if it was either of them, she would have called it in.

“Could always be an ancient elder we don’t know about,” Jack said, rolling his eyes with his own absurdity.

“The chances of that are ... v-very ... very low.” The little Mekhet came in and joined them, taking pictures of the damage with her phone.

“Yea, but the other three options suck.” Wincing, Jack sat down on the couch, and looked around with wandering eyes. “Either the hunters have a way of bypassing our stakeouts, getting passed all the Mekhet’s auspex on top of that, or the Uratha or Begotten have taken Jessy and Eric. And Clara ran up here, so...”

Damien shook his head. “I doubt Clara helped the intruder. Your sire says she ran up here after the noises started, body language surprised. Though, that does not dissuade the possibility that an Uratha is responsible; I don’t know what abilities they have, but I assume some would be strange and powerful, considering their ability to journey to the Shadow Realm.”

“B-Begotten then?” Tash said. “It w-w ... would make sense, with what Jessy’s m-message said, about Eric’s dream. We could ask them.”

“We?” Damien said. “You came along to cover Jack. That—”

“That’s still a thing!” Frowning, the tiny girl came up to him, and jammed in the chest with one of her fingers. “Trying to get rid of ... m-me?”

“No.” But he’d prefer to not involve her in the dark games he and Jack were drawn into. And that was a definite possibility, if the conversation turned in directions Damien wouldn't be able to predict. "Fine." There was no reason to suspect the oncoming 'threat' Jack warned him about was linked to Eric's kidnapping, but, it never hurt to be prepared. Mekhet motto, or Mekhet paranoia, either or.

Their ear pieces gave off a quick beep tone, announcing an incoming message. "Jessy's phone is off the grid, no GPS, no signal." Mire's voice. "Think it was destroyed?"

Damien did a double check on the damage. "No sir, at least not here. It may have been, if it was taken elsewhere."

"Tracker history shows it didn't leave that spot," the ear piece said. "So unless she was teleported somewhere deep underground or into a jamming zone ... I suppose that's all very possible, if she vanished."

What a scary technology, being able to not only locate a person anywhere in the world if they had their phone with them, but to also have recorded where they'd been. Would Kindred keep maps, showing the life path of each Kindred and where they moved at all times? The Invictus would, surely.

"What do we do now?" Jack said, finger to his ear piece. "She's completely gone. The intruder, Clara, Eric, they're all gone like they stepped into the twilight zone or something."

The beep dialed in once again. "Unfortunately our options are limited. Is Natasha willing to help?"

Damien nodded. "She is."

"Ask her to visit the Uratha, and see if they have any ideas."

"Sure you don't want me to do that?" Jack said.

“You need to visit Azamel. Jessy’s description of Eric’s nightmare intruder, and his sudden incapacitation, are too specific to ignore.”

Damien winced, and looked to his companion. The expression on the boy’s face was obvious. Shit.

---

Damien sighed. Jack sighed. The two of them crept into one of the old, abandoned subway tunnels, and through a locked door, into the depths of Dolareido.

Damien was not looking forward to this meeting; and yet, a smile kept sneaking onto his lips. A small thing, teasing him, sparking memories of Fiona, her giggling, her accent, her curves. A part of him told him he should be more concerned with immediate circumstances, about Jessy’s disappearance, and the two werewolves. There was a very real chance that the three of them were in the hands of the hunters, and Jessy could be killed as collateral damage to their real target, Eric.

Perhaps they should have asked the Circle of the Crone for help. Their blood magics were capable of extraordinary feats, and he wouldn’t have been surprised if divination or mystical viewing and tracking were among them.

His mind warped back to Fiona, and he slapped himself hard enough to pull a gasp through clenched teeth. Jack stopped, and raised a brow.

“Sorry,” Damien said. “Thinking about ... things.”

“Fiona?”

“ ... how did you know?”

“The only times I’ve ever slapped myself, and was thinking about things, was when it was about a girl.”

“Jessy and Clara are girls.”

“Ha, yeah, but you know that’s not the same thing.” Jack had a smile on, small but there. Perhaps he wasn’t worried, or had learned from Julias the value in not showing fear.

“ ... she is on my mind occasionally, yes.”

A strange look washed over the boy’s face. Relief, perhaps?

“She’s been flirting with you, so that’s understandable.”

“She has?” Damien looked at his companion, and raised a brow. “Isn’t she trying to seduce Eric?”

“She’s attracted to Eric, sure, but a lot of that seems to be about making you jealous.”

Madness. Damien shook his head, and started walking again. It was a mile to Azamel’s hideout, and they couldn’t dally.

“ ... are you sure?”

With a chuckle, Jack followed after him. “Julias — and Antoinette — have been teaching me a lot about social queues. Fiona’s young, fun, trying to discover herself, all that typical young adult stuff I’m still going through.”

“I spent those years hiding in sewer and subway tunnels, I’m afraid.”

“Which is why I’m telling you. I wouldn’t have said a thing, honestly, if you didn’t just say you were thinking about her. She likes you, but she’s all over the place, not sure what to do with herself, what she wants, or how to figure it out.” He put his hands up in mock surrender. “I could be wrong, but the signals aren’t subtle.”

“Then how come I haven’t seen them?”

“Because they’re not subtle by female standards. Flicking hair over the shoulder, frequent glances with smiles, sneaking peeks at you while drinking, turning to face your general direction. Women think these things are giant signs, big neon letters that say ‘I like you let’s chat’.” He shrugged, and took a moment to check his vest within his suit. Good to always check that your weapons were on hand. “But we’re guys, socially awkward guys at that. It’ll take a lot more than that for us to notice.”

He found this all hard to believe. It was a stereotype he was familiar with; he spent fifty years hiding in a city, not in a cottage in the woods. But he’d assumed it was exaggeration. Who’d be silly enough to play these games?

Fiona would be silly enough, and her silliness kept pulling smiles out of him, whether he wanted it to or not. She was his total opposite, bright and cheerful and forever giggling. But, how was he supposed to respond to flirting? He hadn’t a clue. His goal in unlife was to serve Lucas, and women were not a part of that plan. The plan was dead, along with his sire, but the wake of his inadequacies and ignorance remained.

“Damien,” Jack said, “has Maria been up to anything strange?”

“Are more things pointing to her?”

“Nothing related to this vanishing act, but, yeah, a few more people have mentioned they think she’s up to something.”

This again. “I told you, I don’t know what people are finding out about Maria that could suggest this. Everything she tells me, she tells the Invictus council, and all the Right Hands. The only things I know that you do not, are matters of the Lancea et Sanctum; and trust me, those topics are innocent.” Trying to establish the rules for the rebirth of the Second Estate in Dolareido was proving problematic. People were not interested, and trying to bridge the gap between old and new, with an elder as his partner, was like trying to mesh water and oil. Stir them, and it seemed like they got along, but once things settled, the differences became apparent.

“I believe you. I’m just throwing shit at a wall, seeing what sticks.”

“ ... what?”

“Shit at a wall? Nevermind. We’re flying blind about this mysterious threat, and the only person who could probably answer our questions, is Jacob, the sheriff, and the Prince. I can’t ask the Prince, and we can’t ask the sheriff, or Jacob for obvious reasons.”

“Why can’t you ask the Prince?”

“Azamel said to not involve people, and I’m sure that goes double for the elders.”

Damien raised a brow at his partner again. “You love her though, and trust her.” It was a cold, logical decision to keep his lover out of such dangerous information trails. He hadn’t expected Jack to have that level of resolve. Perhaps he should have expected it.

“Yeah ... yeah I do. But I don’t tell her everything, just like she doesn’t tell me everything. Her Princely machinations, and Ordo Dracul things, I don’t know any of it.”

“Not the same thing. This thing threatens us all, and—”

“And she knows. I know she knows. She knows I know, and she knows I know she knows, I guess.” Jack frowned at the metal rails beneath them. “The problem is, this shadow game is deadly, and one slip up means someone dies. You knowing is a problem, but I took a gamble and trusted you.”

“Though really, it was Fiona’s slip up that forced the situation.”

“I could have not explained what she meant,” Jack said. “And I was going to tell you eventually anyway, cause I need a friend in this.”

“Thank you, I suppose.”

Smiling, Jack shrugged at him. “You earned it.”

Damien returned the small smile. He appreciated Jack’s reserved expressions, and how he didn’t explode into theatrics for interaction, like Jessy often did. The boy understand the power, and value, of stating things simply.

Funny, Damien enjoyed seeing Fiona explode with her dramatic exaggerations. He didn’t enjoy it when others did.

“You said you have not told her everything? The Prince? It sounded like you meant more than this vague threat we hunt.”

“Yeah, I ... haven’t told her about Angela.”

Damien raised a brow, and turned to look ahead as they talked. The matter sounded personal. In the past, Damien would have shied away from such interactions, but he’d been working with the Right Hands and the Invictus long enough to have developed a sliver of empathy for them; Jack, far more so.

“What do you mean?”

“Just been having ... rage issues, I guess, about Angela.”

“That’s understandable. I’m not sure I see the reason for concern.”

“Yeah, yeah, I agree. Not ... yeah, it’s not a big deal.”

Damien again raised a brow, but did not turn to look at the man. There was more to it than that, based on the tone in his voice; not that Damien's social skills were reliable. Was Fiona really flirting with him? He'd assumed the girl was flirtatious with everyone, and hadn't sent him any unique or specific signals. Maybe he was blind.

Or maybe, as Maria told him, he had an aversion to happiness. A common failing amongst the Sanctified, she confirmed, and assured him it would be something he struggled with for centuries; as she still did. Fiona was a walking, talking bundle of happiness. Why? She was a monster, a beast of nightmares that stalked, hunted, and fed upon the scum of the Earth. Why was she joyful?

Youth, no doubt, was a large factor. While the monster she'd taken into her as a part of her was old, with a name and history, Fiona herself was a young woman. Perhaps it was also her simple mind. She didn't over analyze everything, as Mekhet did.

Maybe he should listen to Jessy, and try the same.

A little while later, he and his Ventrue companion arrived at Azamel's 'hole in the ground', as Julius put it. He half expected to find it empty, but Azamel sat upon her chair, smoking, while Athalia sat reading a book. Mark and Fiona were nowhere to be seen.

"The boy returns, with ... the other boy." Azamel shrugged, blew some smoke their way, and coughed. A lot. "I assume this is about the appearance of the Begotten?"

"So it was a Begotten?" Jack said.

"Yes. We don't know who it is, or what they're up to, but there's a Begotten in the dream, nearby. They've shut their lair off to us."

How forward this woman was with information, suddenly. He didn't trust her. He was sure no one trusted her, except for maybe Jack, and the boy's naivete was a danger to everyone. But then, a little trust could lead to positive outcomes; case in point, himself. It was hard to abandon fifty years of scurrying in the dark, though, trusting no one.

He had no reason to be, as Jessy would put it, a ridiculous, brooding stereotype anymore.

“The ritual has been performed again,” Jack said. “This time, it showed Eric’s face.”

“It did?” Athalia said, hopping down from Azamel’s stage to join them. While the two Kindred were in suits, she was dressed in blue jeans and a black sweater. “Strange.”

Jack, naturally, decided to tell them far too much for Damien’s taste, and recounted the tale of the discovery of the ritual, and their attempts to capture whomever was sent to kidnap Eric. “We had Kindred doing a stakeout while Jessy was in there with Eric. Clara was below, in her own apartment. But, whatever happened, drew her attention. By the time the rest of us came in, Eric, Clara, Jessy, and the intruders had vanished.”

Athalia sighed, looked to Azamel, and sighed again when Azamel blew some smoke, and shrugged. Giving her permission to do whatever she wanted, Damien supposed.

“Many things could make a group of people vanish,” Athalia said.

Shaking her head, Azamel managed to speak. “Nonsense.” Another coughing fit, lungs tearing them apart, forcing Damien to wince.

“Azamel’s probably correct,” Damien said. “More incriminating is a dream Eric shared with Jessy, which she relayed to us. Eric insists a monster, a gargoye creature with four arms and four wings attacked him in a dream. Since then, he’s been exhausted.”

“Shit, yeah, that’s probably the Begotten we sense.” Nodding, Athalia began pacing side to side in front of them. “Wait, the ritual is performed by a friend of Jeremiah’s. The fuck does a Begotten have to do with this?”

The little Ventrue raised a hand. “Jessy’s text said Eric’s dream monster said he was fetching Eric for Jeremiah.”

That was enough to earn a snarl from Athalia. “No Begotten is working for that psychopath, not willingly anyway.”

Damien shrugged. “Perhaps it is unwillingly.”

Athalia’s face turned from ice, to fire, as she considered the implications. “Jeremiah, or Angela, controlling a Begotten?” Fists at her side, she marched as she paced, feet growing louder, as if that would expel her anger. It wouldn’t. “We—”

“You didn’t tell us,” Damien said.

“I’m sorry?”

“You didn’t tell us, about a new Begotten in the city?”

“Why would I tell you anything?”

“When did this new Begotten arrive in the city?”

“A few weeks ago.”

A few weeks ago? This woman was infuriating. Did she not see the harm in not sharing such crucial information?

Jack sighed, and waved his arms. “Not the time, guys. We have to get Jessy and Clara back, and Eric. Tonight.”

---

Azamel said Mark was busy and would not be joining them, but Fiona was at a bar in Devil's Corner. He knew the girl did her hunting there, at different bars, different alleys, different places where she was liable to run into someone who deserved to be put down. But she didn't put them down anymore, supposedly; Invictus police reports suggested few people had died, since her change in feeding approach, so it must have been true.

The Invictus car pulled up by the bar, and waited. Jack had his phone out, and was texting.

"Vola?" Damien said.

"Yeah. She'll meet us at the apartment. Arturo and Matthew will be coming, at Avery's behest. They want help getting Clara back, but, understandably, don't want to send the whole pack into a nightmare realm. Not familiar territory for them."

"Is it for us?"

Jack sighed, shrugged, and looked at him with a small grimace. It was their duty to learn all they could about the Begotten and the nightmares where they lived, but progress on that front was going slow. Maybe Damien should be more upfront about his curiosity with Fiona, and simply ask her? It'd be an excuse to talk to her, too.

Damien, you are a child.

Of course, Athalia was in the car, and she sighed and rolled her eyes. "If it were familiar territory, I'd wonder who's been letting you into our lair. Fiona is far too chummy with you."

"Fiona," Damien said, "understands the value in friends." Hopefully Athalia would notice his hypocrisy in that statement.

"She's a child. She doesn't understand anything, the value in anything."

Damien almost snapped at her, but Jack spoke up first.

“You’re protective of her,” he said, smiling.

“What?”

“My mom, she used to say the same thing about Mary, my sister, when she was being a bit too rambunctious.”

“Ram ... bunctious.” Athalia sighed, folded her arms across her chest, and stared ahead. Damien struggled to not grin at the sight. It was true then, that Athalia was being protective of the girl. And why wouldn’t she be? She was a mother who’d seen how badly things could go, and with her new family, was perhaps trying to prevent that.

Fiona came out of the bar, a grin on her face and bounce in her step. Wearing blue jeans that hugged her curves, she netted her fingers behind her, and skipped the last few steps of the way to the car. It was a large car, basically a limousine, and had no trouble fitting them all. But, with them all in the back seat, it made it difficult to not admire the green sweater she wore, and how it exposed the entirety of her shoulders.

Her large bundle of frizzy red hair against the pale skin and freckles of her shoulders, was beautiful, and he struggled to not stare. Jack’s words rung in his mind again and again, taunting him. Should he try and flirt back with her? How do you flirt? He could talk to her, but if he tried to say something flirtatious, or even slightly romantic or sexual, he was bound to fail. He had no idea how to do either.

“Damien!” Fiona said, smiling at him, and scooting in past Athalia to sit beside him. Crap.

“Fiona,” he said. He knew his voice was deadpan, and he made sure to only meet her gaze and nothing but. He did not lower his gaze. No. No lowering of his gaze, despite his peripheral vision able to see how her low-hanging sweater hugged her breasts and waist tight enough to show the curves of her figure.

With a small giggle, she reached out, and adjusted his collar. “Suit and tie?”

He froze for a moment, before he forced his eyes in Jack’s direction. The kid was smiling at him. Damn it.

“Jack is wearing this too.”

“Aye, but he’s Invictus. Plus, I bet Antoinette likes the suit and tie.”

“I am a Right Hand of the Invictus. Some presentation is to be expected.”

She rolled her eyes, and tugged on his tie a few times. “I think ye’d look better dressed like the sheriff, maybe a wee more modern. Ever see the Matrix?”

Jack choked on a chuckle. Damien frowned at him, before setting a hand on Fiona’s, and guiding it away from his tie.

“Let’s focus on the matter at hand.”

“Fine fine.” She slumped into the car seat, a little frown of her own. It didn’t last. It never did. “I’ve felt a new presence in the dream, but I cannae find them.”

“That’s why we’re here,” Athalia said. “We need your help. Vrall is better at opening doors than I am.”

“But, opening a door into another Begotten’s lair? I ... I dinnae ken if I can.” Fiona’s frown returned as she folded her arms across her chest, and stared down. “Vrall has ne’er done that before.”

Jack nodded, and looked out the window as the car drove off to South Side. “I imagine tonight will be full of firsts.”

---

---

~~Jack~~

Other than Fiona’s worry over opening another Begotten’s ‘tunnel’, everyone seemed confident, and he knew that was because he looked confident. He wasn’t. But, Julias had made it clear how important it was for people to trust in the confidence of the leader, and while he wasn’t the leader, Ventrue habit dictated he start acting like one. He only noticed after the fact, that he was the one doing things first, and encouraging others to follow. Case in point, he opened the door to Eric’s apartment first, and expected everyone to follow behind him.

They did, too. It was a bad time to let his Ventrue blood inflate his ego, but there was something damn satisfying about being in the front, and everyone following behind you without a complaint. He forced down the smile, and offered a small wave to Tash and the two Uratha. Three Uratha.

“Um, hello?” he said.

“Noah.” The man, covered in tattoos with a shaved head and pale skin, walked up to him, and extended a hand. Wow, a hand shake. Taking it, Jack couldn’t help but smile at the very old school form of introduction.

“Jack Terry.”

“I’m here to back up Matthew and Arturo. They have a habit of getting stuck in stupid situations.”

Art came up to the man, and shoved him, hard enough to make him stumble a couple steps.

“Don’t pick a fight with me, you asshole.”

Ok, that wasn’t as friendly as Jack expected. Some buddy buddy shoving and insults, he got, but Art looked more than a little pissed by that remark. Noah, on the other hand, sighed, shook off his shoulders, and walked back to where he was as Art walked back over to Matt. The two of them were sniffing as they walked around.

Tash walked up to Jack, and smiled up at him. “Noah is ... well, um, I wasn’t there, but the boys say Avery isn’t t-t-too happy about how often Art and Matt are with Kindred, so Noah is ... is—”

“Just making sure things are going smoothly. Besides, I want to help get Clara back.”

Message received. Noah was here to help rescue their pack mate, but also to make sure Art and Matt didn’t do something to compromise the Uratha. What that meant could be anything, but it was definitely casting the man as some sort of auditor. Poor guy.

Athalia offered the man nothing more than a short snarl, while Fiona bounced up to him, and looked him up and down. He was fit man, wearing a t-shirt and jeans, so he fit in well with the Begotten, clothes wise, while all the Kindred in the room wore suits, Tash included. The vampires were the only ones with weapons too, hidden under their jackets, while the monsters and werewolves were more comfortable killing things with their bare hands. The whole situation made Jack feel like the vampires were the civilized ones, and the others were not. Not a healthy image to have, but, it was hard to ignore.

“Noah,” he said, “this is Athalia and Fiona.”

Noah nodded to each of them. The introduction was unnecessary; the werewolves had already seen both of them, that time in the tunnel with the strange spider monster. Still, it was nice to do things proper, and maybe keep things civil. Three Kindred, three Uratha, and two Begotten, working together, was going to test his skills, because an argument was going to break out at some point. Inevitable.

“So, mission breakdown,” he said. “This is a rescue mission, but also a recon mission. We don’t know where we’ll end up, and learning as much as we can about enemy territory is secondary to rescuing our companions. Every effort must be made to maintain a stealth profile, and we should only engage the enemy if absolutely necessary.” Remain calm, confident, don’t think about the dangers ahead, don’t think about Jeremiah or Angela, or this mysterious Begotten that might be an enemy. Stand strong, confident.

He winced as he thought about Antoinette. This was the sort of shit she was angry at him for, his natural tendency to put himself into harm’s way, and try and deal with issues. Half of him knew it was because he really wanted to help, but deep down inside of him, he knew there was another reason, arrogant as it was. He couldn’t trust anyone else to do it.

Where did that come from? It came naturally he supposed, with time, no matter the situation he was in. It was the same before he was Kindred; given enough time, he pulled ahead of others in his pursuits, and if it was a team effort, he could never quite trust other people to handle things, even if he knew they could. Ventrue hubris manifested in many forms, and that one was going to be a problem. Maybe he’d turn into an arrogant asshole like Viktor? He grinned at the thought. No way in hell.

He punched his palm, adopting the best hero pose he figured he could get away with. “Search and rescue. The hunters knew we’d be watching Eric, or suspected at least, so they sent someone or someones they could trust to get Eric out of here without getting caught. Based on information from Eric that he was assaulted in his dream, that whatever attacked him there was working for Jeremiah, and that the Begotten have sensed the presence of another, unknown Begotten, we have to assume a Begotten is working for Jeremiah.”

“Question!” Matt raised his hand. Oh god, he acted like it was school. It was so damn cute, Jack had to look at Tash, who was smiling.

“Yes?”

“The monster attacked Eric in his dream?”

“Yes. Jessy said, after the dream, the man was wrecked, exhausted, dizzy.”

“And the monster said it worked for Jeremiah?” Big guy looked complexed.

“More or less. Yes, I know that sounds fishy. Why would the Begotten give up that information? The most obvious explanation is that this is a trap, and we’re walking into it.” It sounded so cool so say shit like that in the movies, but in real life, it just sounded dumb. He could see doubt manifesting in their eyes, and he raised a hand to cut in before they could speak. “But that’s why we’re bringing a large crew, with many skills. Far as we know, Jeremiah hasn’t had any interactions with the Uratha yet. But, considering the recon these hunters seem capable of, they might know werewolves are in the city. Kindred, Uratha, and Begotten all working together though? There’s a good chance they won’t see that coming.”

The group nodded, each looking down and then around as they considered his explanation. It was a good one.

“Sounds like an adventure,” Matt said, before a slap upside the head from Art earned a wince.

Noah sat down on the couch, chin between finger and thumb as he considered. “They also might not have expected Jessy, or Clara, to actually be with Eric in the room. They may have bitten off more than they could chew.”

“Maybe.” Jack had never seen Jessy fight, but she was one of the few ancilla in the city, and a Right Hand largely because of her might. He had faith she could handle combat situations easily enough. And Clara was a veteran werewolf; he’d seen her fight, when up against that spider monster, and he had no doubt in her abilities either. It was quite likely the abductors had indeed bitten off more than they could chew.

If that was the case, then their search and rescue mission would be easy. If not, it was a good thing they were bringing a group as large and strong as they were.

“Make sure you stick with us,” Athalia said. “Fiona and I can break out of this Begotten’s chambers, burrow into the physical world here, but you can’t.”

Noah leaned in. “Uratha can—”

“You can’t do shit, you stupid fucking dog.” Athalia dismissed him with a hand wave and a snarl. “And we’re only bringing you because your companion is probably in the nightmare too. If it weren’t for that, you could go fuck yourself.”

The silence that fell on the room was cold, and painful. Only the ring ring of his phone managed to punch through the ice. Jack winced, sighed, and pulled out his phone.

“Sire?” he said, once the ringing stopped.

“Jack. Report.” Julias’s official voice. Jack smiled into the phone; he liked the official voice, efficient and prompt.

“Vola, Burksen, and I are here with Athalia and Fiona. We also have three Uratha for assistance”

“Three? I assumed Arturo and Matthew would be coming. Who’s the third? Carter?”

Carter was a good guess, but the old man was with Avery at the moment, Jack assumed, and not in the apartment building. A waste. If the man didn’t want to live in the luxuriousness of Carlava Villa, why’d he request it? Or maybe he was still pissed about the silver bullet Damien shot into his leg.

“Noah is the third. We’ll be leaving, I assume, the moment Athalia and Fiona figure out how to track down whoever did ... whatever.” The holes in their knowledge about Begotten were painful, and it was going to make Damien and Jack look bad for Maria. But it wasn’t like they could simply ask them for more details about how nightmares worked; Fiona’d already told them plenty, and was probably scolded for it. Knowing Azamel and Athalia, they likely treated her like a daughter who needed some rules to keep her safe. What a strange, twisted family.

“I’d say keep me posted,” Julias said, “but I assume you won’t be able to contact me from the nightmare. Stay close to Damien and Tash, Jack. And if you run into Jeremiah or Angela, keep your head on your shoulders. I know, believe me, I know what’s going through your head.” Jack highly doubted that. “But until you’ve got more years under your belt, you can’t take the offensive against threats like that. If worse comes to worst, let the wolves do what they do best, and provide support. Agreed?”

“Agreed.” What was that scene, in Game of Thrones, with someone getting their eyes gouged in by the opponent’s thumbs, lots of screaming, until their head exploded? Yeah, if he got his hands on Angela, he could see himself doing that. He could feel himself doing that. Press in, drive the thumbs through the soft eye, and drive the glass eye into her fucking brain, until he felt the soft matter of fleshy pulp splatter over his face.

He shook his head, blinking a few times, and took a few, useless breaths. “We’ll report back the moment we’re out. Cya then.” Beep. Nodding to no one, he put his phone in his pocket, and looked to the two Begotten wandering the room. “It’s up to you, ladies.”

“Make sure,” Athalia said, “to keep your dogs on a leash. I can trust the vamps do be quiet about things, but if you mutts so much as howl, I will personally put the three of you into the fucking ground.” The icy, beautiful woman walked up to Noah, and jammed a finger in his chest. “Or I’ll simply leave you there to die.”

Fiona squirmed, looking down and shifting her weight from side to side as she kept her fingers netted behind her. Yeah, awkward. “I can see the path the Begotten took.”

“As can I.” Athalia looked around at Eric’s apartment after giving Damien a little shove, walking past him. No reason, she didn’t walk in his direction. She just liked being a bitch. “Seems like ... the path connects ... over ... a building, filled with rooms, similar size.”

“A weak connection,” Fiona said. “I’m surprised they managed to burrow from here.”

“It’s different with each Begotten.” Shrugging, Athalia took a deep breath, and held out her hands. “Come on, it’ll be easier if we’re both opening it.”

Jack stepped back beside the wolves and vampires, and watched the two monsters. Uratha considered the world of spirits to be their realm to guard and maintain, and the Begotten considered the world of nightmares to be theirs. They had a point. Vampires could touch on those things, but couldn’t really exist in them, grasp them, bend them and bind them. Vampires lived in the physical, in flesh and blood, sex and bullets.

To the three Kindred watching, what the two monsters were doing might as well have been an act of god. To the Uratha, it must have been like watching how your neighbor did laundry versus you.

The room's light began to flicker, before it settled on fading away, as if someone had blown out the fire. There was no fire, but if a cold breeze had come through the room, announced by billowing curtains and a spooky howl, it wouldn't have surprised him. More than darkness found them, weight found them, something heavy that pressed on their shoulders.

He looked beside him, and offered Natasha a smile. She returned it, but she was glancing around as well, barely enough light for them to see by, and getting darker. Art had a hand nudging against the back of her shoulder though, and Matt looked down to give her a smile too; big guy radiated safety and joy at the same time. Noah was looking around with an analytical eye, like Damien was. Jack was doing his best to not visibly tremble; his previous trip into the nightmare was not a fun one, and he didn't suspect this one would be either.

---

---

~~Eric~~

“So, find someone to bang yet?” Jessy said.

Clara stopped, turned around, and glared daggers into Jessy. Oh shit.

“What the fuck is the matter with you?”

“What?”

“We're kind of busy right now. How about you focus?”

“I am focusing. Casual chat helps me focus.” Shrugging, Jessy took the lead, and marched down the hallway. It was a long, massive hallway, and while she made sure to stay away from the fires that lit the path along the wall, Jessy otherwise seemed incapable of fear.

No chance in hell that's what it was. She had to be afraid; it was her first trip into a nightmare, and everyone's first trip into this particular one. They had no idea what the fuck they were in for, and their lives were in extreme danger. But Jessy didn't show that, didn't shake or flinch or do any of the things he'd expect from someone unexpectedly pulled into a literal nightmare. Brave, foolhardy, both, he wasn't sure, but Eric was damn glad to have her nearby, because Clara looked nervous.

"Vamps like to fuck, a lot, we get it, calm down," Clara said, growling under her breath.

"You gotta be shitting me." Laughing, quietly under her breath at least, Jessy continued along the hall, glancing back to see if they were following only once, before she pressed forward. "I saw the look in your eyes, at the ball. I bet if the situation were a little different, you'd have joined in and made a few guys happy as a pig in shit. Maybe at least give a guy a blowjob."

Cat fight was on the tip of Eric's tongue, but through the infinite wisdom bestowed upon him by his experience with marriage and divorce, he kept his mouth shut.

"Sorry, I prefer monogamy. Guess I'm old fashioned that way." Clara rumbled in her throat, a growl deep in the chest.

"You're single. I didn't say cheat on someone, I said—"

"Not about cheating, fucking slut, it's about not opening your legs to everything with a pair of their own. I got a little more self respect than that."

Jessy rolled her eyes. She didn't turn around to look at them, so Eric couldn't see her eyes, but the woman's body language was blatant.

"You don't like sex?"

“I do, but I prefer to pair it with romance. I hear a lot of girls like to do that, too.”

“If you ever get to be my age,” Jessy said, voice getting lower as they grew closer to the corner ahead, “you might learn how to actually enjoy yourself. Romance is hard to find. A good fuck is a lot easier to find. Besides, if I was in a relationship, I’d be faithful as fuck. Got nothing against monogamy.”

“Word is you prefer orgies to relationships.” The venom in Clara’s voice was not masked, the werewolf cluing in that subtlety wouldn’t work with the vampire. Eric kind of wished it would, because subtlety was quiet, quieter than Jessy was being anyway. No sounds came from ahead, or the other rooms though.

Eric stopped, and eased open one of the doors along the hallway wall to peek into the darkness. Squinting until his eyes adjusted, he found nothing but another empty room. Mostly empty, with some old wooden chairs, a wooden table, and what looked like an empty fireplace. None of them looked comfortable, and it fit in nicely with the stone. It was like he’d been teleported into the guts of some sort of underground hold in a castle.

“I do love me a good orgy,” Jessy said. “You would too, if you knew how to have an orgasm.”

“Knew ... how to ... What the fuck?”

“Probably only ever cum with a vibrator on high power jammed against your clit, or a shower head on full blast set to incinerate. If only you knew how good it could be if you could get past your shit and relax.”

Clara turned her head enough to stare at Jessy, and give her a backhand slap against the shoulder.

Jessy turned her head, stared at Clara, and returned the favor.

Clara turned completely, and shoved her. Jessy shoved her back.

Eric ran up between them, and winced, ready to feel fingernails dig into his skin. But thankfully, the girls — not women, evidently — got the message, scowled at each other, and grew quiet as they came to the turn at the end of the hall. He hadn't expected Jessy to start an argument in this circumstance, especially about something this ridiculous. He hadn't expected Clara to be offended, and return the argument. Maybe Jessy hit home, then. Still, a petty thing to insult someone over. Maybe Jessy was offended about the slut comment? If she was, she hid it well.

Jessy poked her head out first, before motioning for the rest of them to follow. Breathing deep and slow, Eric came around the corner, and looked up at the enormous door that barred their way. A dual door, wood, almost as tall and almost as wide as the giant hallway.

“Think fuckers are waiting for us past this?” Jessy said, walking up to the door. It wouldn't have surprised Eric if the doors swung open the moment she touched them, but only silence greeted her exploring fingers.

“Yeah.” Clara went up, mirrored Jessy, before putting her ear to the door. “I don't hear anything. No breathing. And...” —a few seconds of silence went by— “no heartbeats, except ours.”

Jessy smirked. No heartbeat for her of course.

“How far you trust that?” Jessy said.

“Hearing a heartbeat? Ten feet maybe.”

“That's not very far.”

“It's a fucking heartbeat. I can hear breathing a lot further, usually.”

“Usually?”

“Smart people keep their breathing silent.”

“How about smell?”

“I can’t smell if anyone’s behind the door, when the door is air tight. I can smell a lot of scents, a lot of weird, old fashioned scents that make me think we’re in some old farm or something. But unless there’s a fucking breeze cutting through the door, I can’t fucking god damn well smell through it.” Clara was doing a good job of whispering, despite the blatant malice in her voice. If they weren’t trying to be stealthy, she’d be yelling. “If we had an Irraka with us—”

“Irraka?”

“Type of Uratha. Stealthy. Good at recon.”

“Sounds like a Mekhet.”

“And you’re a Gangrel.”

“Yeap.”

“So you’re useless.”

Jessy snarled at Clara, a little louder than she probably should have. “So are you.”

Eric walked up between the two girls again, and pressed his hands to the door. They both stared at him and what he was doing, but neither stopped him; yeah, no point in waiting around for whatever to whatever, they had to press on, and that meant opening the door into whatever dangers lay ahead. The girls backed up, put their weight onto the balls of their feet, and crouched slightly, ready to pounce at whatever exposed itself as the two massive slabs of wood slid apart.

The classic sound of an old wooden door times a thousand resonated through the hall behind them, and into the grand chamber ahead of them. If their location was unknown before, everyone in the building knew about it now. The two women winced almost as much as Eric, as he lowered his hand. He only pushed one door open, and only a couple feet, but that was enough to make far too much noise. So dead, they were so fucking dead.

Jessy poked her head out first. Eric braced to hear a bang, a gunshot, an explosion, a sword slice, something to end Jessy's life; nothing came. After a few moments, she reached behind her, and motioned for them to follow with a few finger waves. Gulping, Eric followed, and stepped into the chamber.

The hallway had been huge, but the chamber was titanic. The roof was high, very high, so high he had trouble seeing it. Darkness along all sides in the colossal room, the small flames unable to light its size. The gargoyle braziers that lined the hallway behind them, instead lined the enormous pillars of stone before them, pillars five feet wide, pillars that went up at least a hundred feet. Each pillar was topped by a gargoyle statue, each statue with arms raised, holding another pillar that continued the pillar up and up, until it vanished into the darkness.

The gargoyles had four arms, and four wings.

“Fucking god.” He pointed up at the towering creatures. Far away as they were, a hundred feet up on the pillars, it was hard to make out details. But it was enough. “That’s ... that’s the thing from my dream.”

“Ever seen this place before?” Jessy said.

“Fuck no.”

“Then ... I guess we’re in this thing’s personal nightmare? Cause, yeah, if these statues look like it, then ... yeah, must be its own nightmare? Right?” Shrugging, Jessy touched one of the pillars, starring up at the titanic structure. “Badass.”

He facepalmed. Badass was not the word he would use.

The three of them drifted around a bit, but ultimately grouped back up, and stood in what they had to guess was the center of the room. The pillars were very far apart, and there were many of them, but at least they seemed to be in pairs; the giant room was actually a giant hallway. Standing between two pillars, in the center of the hall, the tiny fires on the pillars were barely enough to make the walls visible, and each end of the hall was nothing but a wall of darkness.

He looked up again, and again, and again. The gargoyle creatures were on a knee, all four arms up to hold the pillar above, like Atlas holding the world. Their four wings were spread, catching the tiny flickers of fire light that came from below. Their long tails wrapped around the pillar halfway, and their large, human-like faces stared down at them, horns visible. They really were like the monster from his dream.

“I guess ... that means the guy that showed up at the apartment was a Begotten,” he said, “and ... and he got into my dream somehow.”

Clara nodded. “Likely, yeah. You’re Cahalith, so your dreams are pretty powerful.”

“You know about the dreams?”

“All Cahalith have powerful, meaningful dreams, that reach beyond what dreams normally do. I ... I didn’t think it’d be anything the Begotten would be able to take advantage of, though.”

Jessy put a hand up. “Maybe the ritual told them more about Eric than just his face and location.”

Certainly possible for the ritual to tell the hunters he was Uratha, and Cahalith. The fuck did he know about occult rituals and shit? Fuck all.

“Do ... do you have the same dreams I do?” he said.

Shaking her head, she squinted as she stared in one direction of the new, gargantuan hallway. Trying to see the other end, probably, but it was useless. They may as well have been trying to see past the horizon.

“It’s different for all Cahalith. You’d know that, if you stopped being such a jackass and let Avery guide you.”

He snorted, clenched his fingers into fists, and looked around a few more times. Pick a direction, pick a direction. Couldn’t see the ends of the hallway, and couldn’t smell anything in the still air to give a direction; the air was thick with the smell of what he guessed was horse shit, hay, and old metal and stone, but it sat in the air, everywhere, without any inclination of source. But, he could hear something.

He and Clara both started walking in a direction, the same direction. Jessy raised a brow, but shrugged and followed after them. The sides of the hallway were much darker, so the three of them fell back into the blackness against the wall, and crept forward.

“Stay close,” Jessy said. The two wolves raised a brow as they looked back at her, but when a strange, almost cold sensation enveloped them, subtle but there, the vampire grinned. “I really suck at the cloak of night, but it should be enough to keep us hidden from any basic kine.”

He doubted they'd run into any normal humans in this nightmare, but, if they did, a normal human was perfectly capable of calling for help, or shooting a gun. The memory of Mister Pitt, and the way Eric had slaughtered him and his crew, bubbled up in his mind. A gun wouldn't do shit to him when he was transformed, but hunters were hunters, and no doubt they'd have some way of making sure werewolves were—

He stopped, and stared at Clara, as the woman fell onto all fours, and began to shrink. Fur popped out of her skin, replacing it, as her clothes disappeared into her. Why go into that form now? No, wait, she was shrinking, not growing. Her hands and feet turned into paws, not giant hands of claws and talons. Her mouth grew into a snout, but not a huge one with giant teeth. No, she turned into a perfectly normal looking wolf.

Because wolves could move silently.

Clara sat there, in the dark, her fur blending into the shadows, and waited. Ok, yeah, just transform, on the fly, he could do that. Right? Right, no problem, right.

Ok, breathe. You can do this, you can do this; without roaring or making noise or giving away their position any worse than they already had, hopefully.

“First time?” Jessy whispered. “Except for, you know, that other time.”

“ ... yeah.”

“The cloak of night will keep the sound suppressed ... a little ... just don't scream or anything.”

Easy for her to say. For all he knew, this was going to be painful.

Breathe. He took a deep breath, and another, and another, and looked for that part of himself. As much as he expected it to be a distant, strange, weird thought he'd have to pull out of a hazy memory, he could feel the transformations inside him. The issue wasn't finding the strange, new muscle to flex inside his soul, it was navigating forming the new muscle memory. Like playing the guitar, fingering a complicated riff used muscles you already had, but it took practice to perform the maneuver correctly, to establish the muscle memory.

So he did it slowly. With long, deep breaths, he tapped deep into his being, and flexed the muscle to be wolf, to be on four paws, to be low to the ground, to be a creature of fangs and speed and howls. Fur overcame his dark skin, and jeans vanished into his body. His spine warped, elongating, sprouting a tail. Fingers shrank, fingernails grew, and his palms raised before shrinking as well, the whole of his hands becoming paws.

A wolf. He was a wolf. He sat on his haunches, like a canine would, and looked around, tilting his ears in different directions as he listened. He could hear more, and his initial choice on direction was the correct one. There was noise coming from the darkness, far, subtle, like breathing, and maybe sliding of something soft on stone.

He was a fucking wolf. That was so hard to wrap his mind around! Like switching a gear, flexing a muscle, like breathing, he was now a different thing. He turned around a few times, and almost jumped at the sight of his tail, before he looked up at Jessy. Her jaw had dropped, and she stared at him with wide eyes as she brought her fingers up to her lips.

“You. Are. So. Cute!” Still whispering, thank god, she fell to her knees, and hugged him, wrapping her arms around his chest as he sat down on his butt. “Oh my god oh my god oh my god.” Squeezing him, she rubbed her neck into his, her cheek to his ear, and pet his fur.

His tail started wagging. He didn't tell it to, but damn if it didn't start wagging behind him. He could feel the mental connection, something in his mind as automatic as smiling; tail wagging. Being pet felt really good too, and all the nerve endings fired off little explosions of joy where her fingers ran.

Part of him wanted to lick her, too. But, too weird.

“Ok,” she said. “I can keep the cloak of night going while we're all transformed.”

Wait, what?

He stepped back from Jessy, and blinked, a lot, as the woman started to go through the same transformation. She winked at him as she began to shrink, as fur overcame her clothes, as paws emerged, and her mouth and nose morphed into a snout.

“Gangrel, mother fucker. I'm awesome,” she managed to say before her lips disappeared. With her ears up and her tail wagging slowly, she became a wolf as well, fur darker than Eric's or Clara's, but still gray.

What in the fuck. Vampires could turn into wolves? He thought that maybe, just maybe, they could turn into bats, but wolves was not on the list of things he expected to see out of Jessy. Panting a couple times, she walked over to him, paws quieter than her bare human feet could be, and nudged her nose into his side. Twice.

He had the sudden urge to pounce her, and play fight. Eric you dumbass, you're in a fucking nightmare and you've turned into a wolf because it's easier to sneak around this way. It's very dark, especially along the wall, and your gray bodies blend into the shadow. Your paws make less noise than shoes, or bare feet in your case and Jessy's, and both your hearing and sense of smell are greater than they were before. Stealth mode, not dog wrestling mode.

Maybe he could wrestle later.

He wanted to laugh, but laughter wasn't a canine reflex. His tail wagging spoke for him, and he pressed his body into Jessy's, both to play a little, and push her toward the wall so they could continue their stealthy journey into inevitable death. She made a couple whining sounds, not happy about his focusing on keeping them alive, apparently, but fell into a prowling stance as she started forward, behind Clara. He fell in behind her, and kept looking around, forcing himself back to awareness.

Looking up was proving surprisingly difficult. Could dogs look up?

Think about that later. He craned his neck to look behind him, and then to the right, where the enormous hallway lay, pillars lining its depths. A tail in front of him was wagging, only a little, but wagging, and Eric found himself looking at Jessy's wolf butt. It was a nice wolf butt; he had no idea how he knew what a nice wolf butt looked like, but it was. Oh god, this was a dangerous road to take the mind down. Abort, abort!

Again he found himself wanting to laugh. What was it about Jessy that made him laugh so easily?

They continued along, shoulders and heads low, each step calculating and silent. It may have been a pointless attempt at stealth, considering they made plenty of noise earlier, but maybe not. What he was more concerned about was whether heading toward the noise was the right call. They could simply go hide somewhere where there was no noise, and wait for rescue. Waiting for rescue was the problem though. He didn't say it, and the girls didn't say it, but they all knew the possibility of rescue from their current circumstance was slim. They'd been transported into a literal nightmare, not into some corner of Dolareido. Could Azamel's people reach them here? Would they even try? Maybe, maybe not. But sitting around waiting for something to happen was a dangerous choice, so, he went with being proactive.

What'd he hear, once? Action is not inherently superior to inaction. This was a ballsy, risky move, and it could get them killed.

Christ, what he would do to be back in his new, fancy apartment, sitting in his hot tub, and sharing a glass of wine with Jessy. Except, she'd have a glass of blo—actually, she'd be sucking on his neck, and riding his dick as she did. After, after that, they could sit down in the tub, relax, and Eric could try and enjoy the new wonders of his life. If they lived through this, if spirits left him alone, if Avery left him alone, if the vamps didn't drag him into some war, if Azamel didn't demand he become her guard dog.

He glared at Clara, over Jessy's back. Her prowling was amazing, and Eric became very conscious of the sound of his own paws against the stone, barely audible to him, let alone anyone else outside Jessy's stealth aura. She was right, and he should have let Avery take him on a hunt or two, teach him a few things about being Uratha. But, he just wanted to be left alone.

That mindless attachment to this ideal of solitude and peace, was going to be his undoing. Old habits died hard though. He knew it, and he saw it in his dad every day. Christ, he was more like his old man than he wanted to consider right now.

It took a while to get to the source of the subtle noises, but with time, a wall in the distance appeared. Tall, almost unending, disappearing into the darkness above. Stone, and more stone. But it was the thing against the wall between the two final pillars, that had the three wolves staring. A chair of stone, big, heavy and thick, huge slabs of stone carved and combined. It was a throne, with two of the familiar gargoyle braziers in front of its arms, casting flickering amber light over the seat. Upon the huge chair's back, was another gargoyle statue, like the ones that held up the centers of the hundreds of pillars. A colossal carving of darkness, four arms, each reaching down to grip onto the equally massive chair's back, along with its two legs. Its four wings were raised high, and Eric stared at them, squinting, looking for any signs of movement. No, they held perfectly still, as did the rest of the creature; a statue like the others.

The man in the chair didn't hold still. He breathed, he sighed with apparent boredom, and he twirled a knife along his knuckles as he waited.

Jeremiah. He wore the same trench coat last time, brown, and with many subtle pockets, likely filled with knives, ammo, and god knows what. Short gray hair combed back, and a short gray beard sliced with several scars. Tattoos started on his neck, before vanishing underneath a black shirt, and he wore a necklace with a coiling circular shape dangling against his chest.

Eric froze, and stared at the necklace. Last time he'd seen one of those, it was on the hunters that had jumped him and Fiona, and it'd been glowing white. This time it wasn't. Maybe it only reacted to nearby Begotten then.

Eric slid up further, enough for Jessy and Clara to see him, and he nodded his head toward the man on the rock throne, while baring his teeth. Both of them had no doubt read a description of Jeremiah, but Eric wanted to confirm. This fucker was dangerous, and out to kill things like them.

That was more than enough for Jessy, who lowered herself to the floor until her belly was almost touching it, and began to work her way into the corner of where the hallway wall met the end. A pillar stood between them at the throne, and little light reached past it. It was enough for a possible sneak attack, but it was also a really stupid idea to try and sneak attack a man who looked like he killed bears with his bare hands.

Clara didn't agree. She crouched low, and came up beside Jessy, blurring into the shadows behind the pillar, and sneaking up along the wall the throne sat against. They wouldn't be able to get behind the throne, its back many feet deep and connecting to the wall; a perch for the enormous gargoyle statue. But the throne's actual seat sat far ahead enough they could stick to the wall, get in close, and go in for the kill.

The monster had to be around somewhere, though. How he had managed to disappear after pulling them into the nightmare, Eric didn't know. Could have been a trick or something, but when he entered the nightmare with Fiona, she transformed beside him.

No, focus. This was an amazing opportunity to deal a blow to the fuckers threatening everyone and everything his new life had brought him. It could be a trap, or it could be an opening. Jeremiah was alone; maybe the Begotten apparently working for him got separated? If the Begotten didn't appear with the three of them in the room they arrived in, maybe he got separated, or was still back in the real world.

No more time to think. Clara and Jessy were both sneaking up alongside the long slab of stone that served as the chair's legs, and he followed up behind them. A few more glances up showed the enormous gargoyle statue, still as a stone, body dark and flickering with only hints of fire light. God it was creepy, being so close to it, where he could feel the heat of its body radiating.

Heat?

Something massive swung out, and slammed into his back. Tail! The fucking tail. Oh fucking shit. It crashed against his spine, and flattened him, hard leathery skin of the monster combined with momentum and weight more than enough to crush him into the stone below. Pain scorched through him, the cracking of ribs like twigs, and the puncturing of organs. Like before, just like before, this monster was going to kill him.

He looked ahead, and barked fury as the beast reached down, and scooped up Jessy. Clara leapt away, but the beast swung out a wing, exploding air and sound and heavy mass in all directions. The tip of the enormous wing clipped her, and sent her spinning through the air, barrel rolling until she landed on her side twenty feet away, in front of the throne.

“Well well, I was wondering when you’d get here.” The old man chuckled on his throne, but Eric couldn’t see him. At least he couldn’t, until one of the massive hands reached down and scooped him up. Being in the monster’s grip, with his ribs shattered and poking holes into his innards, sent lava scorching through his body. The beast turned his head to them, most of his features hidden in the dark, but the eyes began to glow red all the same. Only now did an odor of leather and alien life emit from the entity.

It was a trap. Of course it was a trap.

Still sitting on his perch, the monster held out the two wolves in front of the throne, reaching over it and using his immense size for balance. Jessy and Eric could not move, as they were held before Jeremiah.

“Three werewolves?”

“No.” That deep voice, filled with bass, but mixed with weird overtones of vocal fry, harsh and raspy. “This one is Kindred.” The titan held Jessy closer to Jeremiah. She snarled, howled, barked, growled, and squirmed with all her might, but the monster’s hand was big enough to keep her canine waist completely circled, and trapped.

“She must have sucked a wolf dry at some point then.” Shrugging, Jeremiah reached out, and pat Jessy on the side. “No idea where a city vamp would get a wolf for a meal.” Laughing, Jeremiah looked at Eric, and winked at him. “Hello Eric Tanverson. You’re going to tell us everything you know, and even things you don’t.”

Chapter 70

~~Eric~~

Clara transformed into a human as she forced herself to stand. With a snarl, she shook off the injuries, and wiped her lip.

It was that easy? She was hit hard, hard enough to go flying, hard enough to have bones broken. But, she was Uratha, and that meant ... fuck, he didn't know what it meant. Strong, tough? Healing through anything? He didn't know anything, because he was too fucking stubborn to find out.

“So you're Jeremiah?” she said, pacing side to side. “How the fuck did you pull this off?” Snarling at the man, she pointed a finger at the colossal creature still perched upon the stone throne's back.

“Monsters aren't so hard to kill if you know their banes.”

Clara twitched, fingers squeezing into fists as her frown hardened. “And?”

“Discovering them can be tough.” Still on his throne, Jeremiah passed his knife from knuckle to knuckle, grin on his face subtle but persistent. Confident. “For a werewolf like yourself, silver. It's such a common bane, and known to everyone.” With a shrug, the man reached into his trench coat, and pulled out a large pistol, knife still in his other. “You're barely worth hunting.”

Snarling all the more, Clara continued pacing again, eyes snapping between the two trapped wolves, and the man with a god complex. “What does—”

“And vampires, sunlight and fire are so easy to turn into weapons, I'm better off wasting my time killing cockroaches,” Jeremiah said.

That earned a raised eyebrow from the werewolf. “You in this for the thrill?”

“I can’t deny there is an appeal in that thrill, but no. Werewolves are a menace, violent, stupid, short-sighted, and prone to killing random innocents every so often. Vampires? Smarter, with a far better eye for the future, but they’re just blood leeches. The amount of human deaths to them is actually manageable, and acceptable, as long as hunters get their hands dirty every so often. But monsters, monsters aren’t the same.” Chuckling, the maniac stepped down from his throne, and made a grand, sweeping gesture with his knife hand. “Monsters can destroy entire cities. Monsters can turn whole villages into food, for a single beast. Monsters can decimate ecosystems. Monsters can grow, and grow, until they’re no longer Begotten, and their true selves, confined to the nightmares they were spawned from, break free into the world of the living.” Smiling at her, he came closer, and closer. “I’m here to kill Azamel, and perhaps Athalia, if the opportunity presents itself. Tell me what I want to know, and you get to live.”

“I don’t know shit about Azamel.”

Jeremiah sighed, loudly, with some theatrical flair to his voice. He was enjoying this. “I didn’t think so. But the man here, Eric, he’s been to her lair, spoken to her, spoken to Athalia. And unlike a vampire, I have ways of removing the information from him.”

Oh shit. Eric started squirming, but his stubbornness only earned a tighter squeeze from the goliath holding him.

“Je ... remiah...” Everyone went silent, and turned to the new voice. An old voice, slow, weak, a sound Eric was getting too familiar with from his trips to the hospital. The sound of an old woman’s voice, someone old enough to warrant a deathbed. “Is ... is this the one?” An old woman in a wheelchair came out from the darkness, the subtle noise of her respirator growing louder and louder as she approached. Where the fuck had she been hiding?

A group of hunters stood behind her. Eric recognized them as the four he ran into, with Fiona. And behind them came a woman, dark skin like him, and what looked like a glass eye. Oh fucking fucking fucking shit.

“It is indeed, Elen my sweet.” The psycho in the trench coat pointed the knife back at Eric, before turning his back to Clara. Confident, and maybe a bit stupid, but Clara didn’t take advantage. How could she? Any move she made in her current circumstance would either get her killed, or him and Jessy.

The monster with wings sniffed the air, and let out a long, crocodile-like groan, complete with rumbling that shook the air. “Master ... the nightmare is being entered.”

“The other Begotten?”

“Yes, master. They will be here in minutes.”

Nodding, Jeremiah pointed to Angela. “Earlier than I expected. Take the others, prepare the ambush. Slaughter them all.”

The sound of many feet joined Angela’s. There must have been another one of those hallways nearby, on the other side of the grand chamber they were in, like the one Eric had come from. As they came out of the dark, Eric let out a canine whimper at the sight of a dozen men, each armed with a host of weapons no civilian would be able to get their hands on. Assault rifles, what looked like a fucking flamethrower, grenades, and a bunch of shit he didn’t know by sight.

The four he recognized stayed with the woman in the wheelchair.

“I guess you have friends, Eric,” Jeremiah said, walking up to him. The monster held him at a height convenient for Jeremiah to look him in the eye. “We’re ready for them this time. Either they die in a hail of gunfire and wall of flame, or they run away, and we can continue this interrogation.”

God, oh fucking god they made the wrong move. They should have waited, should have fucking waited where they were. If they had just fucking waited, maybe whoever was coming to rescue them would have run into them. It was like one of those shitty horror films where people suddenly become outrageously stupid and throw themselves into precarious situations, because they’re too stupid to realize what they’re doing. Fucking shit fuck.

Clara didn’t move. As the hunters walked past her, she stared at each of them through the corner of her eye, body still turned to Jeremiah and the monster. The hunters sneered at her, some making a show of their knives on their belts, pulling them out a little to make the glint obvious. Some of those knives were the strange ones Eric saw in Fiona’s jungle, when Jeremiah showed up. Some were silver.

Silver. The sight of it sent a jolt through his body, and he blinked. What the fuck. The beast holding him, that thing was terrifying, and overpowering. The silver knives were different, they put a cold dread through his wolf body, as if someone had stolen a kidney and threw him into an ice bath. Pain, mixed with the searing rush of adrenaline and stimulus overload.

The old woman sighed long and slow, and raised a hand. Finger pointing at Clara. “Why ... is she ... free?”

“She’s not free, Elen. Unless she wants her companions to die, she’ll stay where she is.” The man smirked, and walked over to Eric. Tears blurred Eric’s eyes, and pain muddled his thoughts, the agony blaring in his head until headache and nausea mixed. “You, pup, are going to tell me everything you know about Athalia and Azamel. Come on, Elen.”

Elen sighed, long, the struggle for her lungs to manage breathing, even with a respirator doing the work, blatant. The hunter woman behind her did the pushing, glaring at Clara and the two wolves as she did. These hunters hated them, to the point every one of them couldn't look Clara's way without wishing death upon her with their eyes. Christ, it was like watching a bunch of zealots. White, pointed blankets on their head with the eyes cut out would not have been out of place.

“Come here sonny,” Elen said, voice almost cracking like a weak, damaged speaker.

With a small twist of her wrist, she slid her fingers along the air, and cut through it. Each fingertip glowed a subtle black, almost purple, and traced lines through the air in front of Eric's face. All he could do was stare, and shiver, pain and misery mixing into a horrible cocktail of nausea. The beast's grip around him was absolute, and every breath was a panting mess, sending scorching fire through his limbs. But he could still stare, and watch the old woman weave colors in the air. Either he was dying and his brain was flooding itself with chemicals, or she was doing magic.

The colors combined into a single line, floating in the air, and the old woman reached through it, hand disappearing into the cut in reality. After rooting around in the fucking cracks of the universe, she slowly removed her hand, and exposed a scalpel. Shit, shit shit. She came closer, wrinkly face breaking into a smile, thin white hair falling flat over her skull and shoulders. Far older than Azamel.

Come to think of it, every old woman Eric had ever met was a horrible person. Azamel was horrible, this Elen woman was horrible, his grandmother was horrible and spanked him for not wanting to eat his peas. The pattern was undeniable.

She came in closer, breath ragged, fake teeth showing as she smiled. “If you could turn back into a man, my boy, that would be helpful.”

He snarled. Mistake. The beast holding him squeezed, and he let out a whimper, and gargle, as blood spilled up over his wolf tongue.

“That’s alright, deary. Whether wolf or man, the voices do not care.” She set the scalpel on his wrist, and his arm froze. Not because he wanted to freeze, but the limb came to a standstill against his will, unable to move, as the woman gently slid the insanely sharp blade down the skin above his paw. He howled, more blood coming up onto his tongue, as blood leaked out onto the fur of his wrist and paw.

“Voices?” Clara said. Her face was pained, and she fidgeted in spot. But the three hunters standing around had their pistols out, no doubt armed with silver bullets; knives out too. The hunter holding the old woman’s chair kept her eye on Clara, and so did Jeremiah.

“If only you knew what sort of forces exist in this world, stupid dog,” Jeremiah said, standing beside Elen, closer to Clara. “Nightmare worlds? The spirit world? If you only knew.” Laughing, the psychotic fucker held his knife up to Eric’s neck, where it was exposed at the top of the monster’s grip. “Cards, each of them cards, in a house of cards.”

This fucker delighted in not answering their questions, only giving them confusion and vague redirections. Much as Eric wanted to bite the man, pain drew his eyes back to the clean cut the old woman was making down his arm, through his fur. As his blood dripped down over his paw, the woman reached out with her other hand, and caught his blood in her palm.

“The ritual is very precise,” she said. “I have to find the elegance in the shapes. I have to find the beauty in the connections. I have to find the mastery. I have to find the machine.” Humming softly to herself, Elen raised the bloody hand, and again, began to draw in the air. His blood crept up her fingers, defying gravity, and becoming crimson paint for her fingertips, cutting through the air and leaving trails of hovering red. “This would be easier if you would turn back into a human, but I suppose it is better if you are restrained.” Her energy was returning, like an artist taken up with passion, all encompassing.

“Stop ... stop fucking cutting on him! The fuck are you doing?” Clara took a step forward, only to have three pistols raised and pointed at her. Jeremiah didn’t bother turning around, keeping his eyes on Eric.

“Like I said,” Jeremiah said, “you have no idea. The ways things are connected, the things that exist in the dark, in the cracks between worlds, in the beams of light that seep in from above. You’re nothing but a stupid dog, mindlessly chasing a ball.”

After drawing a circle and a pentagram in the air, the old woman shook her hand in a quick circle, and the symbol fell to the stones below. It painted itself into the stone, and as the old woman continued to cut into his arm, she began to draw more symbols against the invisible canvas.

“When we are done, you’ll tell the voices everything,” she said. “Your insides will paint for them, draw for them. Life, blood, tendons, bones, sinew, ligaments, a divine merger of components. The machine of life. Vessel for the soul. I’ll find the root of memory, draw the connections, and—”

“You’ve said enough, Elen. We’re keeping the vampire and she-wolf because they’re valuable hostages, not companions to share our secrets with.”

Quite the fucking hypocrite, aren’t you? Fucking psychopath. The thought evaporated as the scalpel found bone, and Eric tried to howl his agony. The monster’s crushing grip didn’t let him.

He managed to look at Clara as a whimper escaped him. She looked worried, and angry, but she was paralyzed. Behind her, the hunters were preparing a trap for their friends. The sound of groaning wood against stone resonated through the hallway, burying the groans and whimpers Eric's wolf form was making. They must have closed the door Eric and them came through, to prepare their ambush. Who was coming to his rescue? Or Clara's or Jessy's? Did they need Begotten to enter the dream?

He looked over at Jessy. Still in her wolf form, like him, and struggling with all her might. The beast squeezed her hard enough Eric could see her limbs threatening to bend and break under the pressure, but she kept squirming as if it didn't matter.

Did it matter? She was a vampire, and he doubted a broken limb would stop her. Would it stop him? He was a werewolf, and as much as he didn't want to, he could remember bits and pieces of his fight with Pitt and his goons. He recovered from a stab wound, completely recovered, when he transformed. How strong was a werewolf? Was it strong enough to fight this monster? Strong enough to fight a psychopath?

He had to try. Now or never.

Eric closed his eyes, and pushed away the pain. The monster had him in his grip, and didn't seem to care that he was forcing bone to rub against his organs. It was pain he was used to at this point, enough to ignore it for a few seconds at least. Ignore it, find that new muscle, and use it.

As he began to change, the monster holding him screamed, and threw him down at Clara. Everything became a blur, pain mixing with the unpleasant sensation of his stomach pressing against his sides with sudden momentum. An explosive roller coaster, complete with the roaring machinery, except it was the creature's roar.

Attempts to transform were lost to the clenching of every muscle in his body, as his weight slammed into Clara.

She caught him. Holy shit. He managed to look up at her, legs twitching, tail wriggling, body panting.

“Jessy!” Clara said, looking over him and to the monster.

He managed to turn his snout to look to the vampire. She was human again, except, not. It was that shape she had, back in the apartment, enormous claws with spikes coming out of her knuckles, forearms, and now shoulders. More than that, spikes had erupted out of her back, out of her knees, out of her fucking head. Blood dripped from her, red, darker than red normally was, but blood nonetheless.

The monster let go of her, and held its hand up to look at the holes Jessy’s body had punctured into its fingers and palm. Jessy landed on her feet, shoulders raised and arms forward, back hunched, and eyes glaring fury at the monster as blood dripped over her body. Whatever she had done to her body, her human shape was twisted into a grotesque monster. Her teeth exposed as she snarled, massive fangs, many of them. Her back bulged with muscle, filling her blue sweater to near bursting. Her legs grew thick, torn in many parts with spikes, like her sweater. And blood dripped from everywhere.

“The hell?” Jeremiah jumped away from the vampire, brought up his pistol, and fired. Bullets shredded through Jessy’s body, ripping into her clothes and muscles, some shattering some of the bone spikes that jutted out of her skin. She regrew them in seconds. “Sándor, secure her! I want this bargaining chip.”

Eric caught sight of Jeremiah’s face, and grinned a wolf’s grinning. He new that face, recognized it, seen it in the ring far too many times. The face of someone who had a plan, and was surprised to see it not work out. He must have underestimated Jessy.

“Boss!” One of the hunters in the departing group returned, rifle at the ready.

Jeremiah waved him off. “We’re fine. Go with Angela. Kill the intruders.”

“Yes sir.” The woman ran off to rejoin her companions, and Clara glanced over her shoulder, before looking to the four with the shaman. They were stunned; Jessy’s insanity and recklessness was not something they predicted. She was just a blood leech, after all. What could she do?

She could solo a giant fucking monster, apparently.

Everyone’s jaw dropped, as Sándor the monster reached down for Jessy, and Jessy leaped onto the monster’s face. The beast’s shrieks and roars of pain echoed down the hall, and everyone jumped back as the gargoyle stood up, wings spreading, and arms snapping up to try and rip Jessy from his face. But she crawled over his shoulder, and dropped down between his wings, disappearing. Based on the new roars, and how the beast tried to reach behind him between his wings, she must have latched onto his back with her claws.

That was enough for Clara. She set Eric down, and erupted. Eric jumped back, failing, bones refusing to work, and fell over all the more, as Clara threw herself at Jeremiah. She transformed, body exploding in size, clothes disappearing, fur sprouting, tail reforming, and mouth becoming a massive snout filled with huge teeth. It only took her two seconds, two literal seconds, to complete the transformation. The titan within slammed its feet and claws into the stone floor, talons tearing into the stone, as the colossal beast threw herself toward Jeremiah.

The man dodged. He sidestepped the juggernaut of muscle, and jumped back several times while shooting at the beast. But Clara rushed past him perpendicular to his line of fire, and onto the throne, bullets whizzing past her. Eric could do nothing as the single werewolf and single vampire, fought against the group and the monster.

“The vampire and she-wolf aren’t worth this trouble. Shoot them both!” Jeremiah barked his orders at the four remaining hunters, and the one escorting the old woman pulled her back, and quickly wheeled her away. The other three drew their pistols, and aimed their pistols at Clara, but she jumped against the enormous gargoyle’s leg, and tackled the beast in its chest. Off balance as it was, the gargoyle stumbled back, and fell onto its side before rolling off to the side of the giant throne’s vast back. The hallway vibrated with the impact of the creature landing

Eric watched the old woman go, doing his best to memorize her face. The sunken cheeks, the dazed eyes with little life left to them, the shaking limbs. She didn’t have much time left, aged to a point the body wasn’t willing to hold on. With how sickly she looked, he was surprised she was holding on at all. Maybe it was because of her ability, whatever it was that let her perform rituals, whatever dark forces of fucking Hell that let her pull a scalpel out of a hole in the universe, and draw symbols into the air itself.

She disappeared behind a pillar, and then the loud groan of opening wood filled the hall again. That confirmed it. There must have been another hallway with rooms, like the one Eric had come from.

He looked past Jeremiah, to the monster on the floor. Massive as the creature was, a crazy vampire and determined werewolf were on his body, biting and clawing and tearing into him; and even with its great size, a werewolf was a hulking, massive titan of muscle. It was like watching a lion struggle to take down a bull, a full grown, healthy bull, something a lion wouldn’t normally hunt. She did anyway, taking on a monster with over three feet of height on her.

Seeing another werewolf erupt with rage and power sent a jolt into Eric's body, called him, beckoned him. Howling rung in his ears, demanded he join the hunt, boiled his blood, sent energy and chaos pumping through his veins. Clara ripped and tore and bit into the monster's body, but its skin was thick, leathery, hard, and she only managed to draw small amounts of blood. But there was blood, and the smell of it filled Eric's nostrils. Blood. Alien, surreal, monster blood. Her roars called to him, invited him into the rush of the hunt, the thrill of the fight, and the glory of the kill.

Strength incarnate exploded inside him. Bulging muscles replaced frail wolf limbs. Serratus muscles wrapped his ribs as they mended. Trapezoids pushed out from his shoulders and neck. His lats rebuilt themselves in moments, realigning his spine with his rhomboids, and causing his shoulder and back width to increase to ludicrous sizes. Massive talons replaced the tiny claws of his paws, as did enormous hands. His snout grew bigger, thicker, longer, and his teeth did the same. Weight came from nowhere, forcing his new, larger rear paws into the stone beneath him. Two hundred, three hundred, four hundred pounds. He flexed his arms as the rumbling in his chest turned into a growl. Five hundred, six hundred, seven hundred pounds. More, until he was no longer a wolf at the knees of the hunters, but towering over them instead, their backs to him, his growls lost in the sounds of their yells as they tried to fix the chaos Jessy and Clara had caused.

He roared, silencing them all, and he dove into the fray.

~~Natasha~~

She was in a nightmare.

As she held up her phone to use as a flashlight, it was obvious that she was in a nightmare, and that sent a chill down her spine. The Prince would surely want as much information gathered as possible, so she snapped as many pictures as she could, while shining the light about. Paranormals had ways to keep themselves out of pictures, but the nightmare itself? Time to find out.

As she scanned the phone around, eventually her lens landed on Noah, who was looking straight at her, a frown on his face. Yeah, she was being silly. They had more important things to worry about, like—oh my god.

Tash froze, and stared at the enormous, skeletal creature before them. It was colossal, and was missing its lower body, dark bones held up by its hands on the floor. Bone wings. Small white dots inside huge, black eye sockets. A giant spinal cord, dangling from a rib cage Natasha could probably fit inside of. She'd seen this monster before, when Athalia had gotten aggressive with her and her boyfriends, in the tunnels beneath Dolareido before the spider monster attacked. Azlu, they called it.

She turned, and almost squeaked. Spider monster! No, this wasn't the grotesque monstrosity from before, this was different. Very different. A woman's body, sort of, a white silk dress over a curvy figure, a face with no eyes, only enormous horns, shins that came down into long, sharp points, with no feet. She had less fingers, and her fingers were long claws themselves. Dark, almost shiny skin, and eight long, long, long long long spider legs that came out of her back, their multi-sectioned lengths smooth and almost metal like, and they came to sharp pointed tips, like her feet.

Athalia was terrifying. Fiona was both terrifying and beautiful. Maybe it was the thin white dress that barely contained her enormous breasts, or how it cinched tight around her inhumanly small waist. Maybe it was the small, dark lips that pursed into a very seductive little smile. Very much not Fiona!

Jack and Damien both seemed almost blase about the whole thing, though she noticed Damien glancing Athalia's way a little more often. Maybe he'd never seen her monster form before, her 'horror'; or he was just scared of it, like she was. Tash looked to the others as well, and was happy to see the wolves were staring at the monsters as much as she was. They were scary! Athalia in an obvious way, Fiona in a 'I will seduce you, tie you up in silk, and literally liquefy and drink your innards' way.

Around the room were wooden tables, wooden chairs, all very old fashioned. The wooden ceiling above them screamed antique. If she knew her history well, and she did, they seemed like the sort of furniture you'd find in homes in the 1500s. Time travel? No, no of course not. The monster must have had a nightmare home in a place that was like the 1500s. A deep breath sold it, the smell old wood, but also manure and grass.

The group of them looked at the room's door. Same old wood, and it was open to let in a slice of gentle fire light cut across the room.

Nodding, Arturo moved forward toward the door, and crouched low. Tash engulfed the group of them in her cloak of night, as did Damien, and she nodded to them as she followed behind Arturo.

"We should be fine t-to talk, quietly," she said. "Smell anything? Other than ... what ... appears to be the insides of a castle, from f-f-five hundred years ago."

"That explains why I smell shit, horses, grass, wood, and stone. I can smell Clara and Eric, and ... yeah, that's Jessy," Art said.

Wow, what a nose. She pat him on his back, and he stood up as she poked her head out. With a glance back, she nodded toward the hall, and everyone came out.

"W-Wait, Athalia, how—" The giant dead god corpse thing, became black mist, and flowed through the normal-sized door. "Oh."

The skeleton beast snorted at her, and a gush of cold air hit Tash, as the odd monstrosity marched forward. With more room over their heads, Athalia drifted higher, hovering, her nigh-black skeleton wings grazing along the sides of the huge hallway. At least she was up and out of the way of them, but Tash didn't like it. Her spinal cord swayed around underneath the strange half-body corpse monster! Gross.

Fiona walked through the door, her long spider legs following behind her. Once she was out into the hallway, she started walking on the eight spider legs, and her human half began to hover behind Athalia. Long, such long legs. Tash looked up at her, and as Fiona drifted over her head, Tash covered her eyes. The spidersilk dress she was wearing did not have underwear! And the bits between her thighs appeared to be human.

Could Begotten have sex? Or rather, could their horrors have sex? Athalia, of course not, but Fiona?

Tash looked over to Art and Matt beside her. Matt kept his eyes on the multiple doors of the hallway around them, but Art glanced up and smirked as he looked up Fiona's skirt. Elbow attack! Tash drilled her elbow into his side, hard enough to earn a quiet groan from him, before he chuckled at her.

"Sorry."

"R-Right." Frowning, she continued along, and looked at the gargoyle braziers holding the fires. "These are ... b-beautiful."

"This a reflection of a real place?" Noah said. "The Hisil operates sim—"

"It is a nightmare, fool." Athalia turned to look down at them from above. How a skull could frown, with no lips or skin, Tash wasn't sure, but it did indeed look like it was frowning. Maybe just a trick of the eye, to match her upset tone. "It is not a reflection of anything. It is a creation, and it stands on its own in the Primordial Dream. I do not know if this chamber is the heart of this beast's lair, but ... I do ... sense a presence."

Primordial Dream. Fiona had mentioned it, but neither she nor Athalia had explained it. At this point, it sounded like the dream world was an actual place. What were chambers? Lairs? How did you burrow through ... through ... what did you burrow through, to get from the dream to the physical? How did any of that work? Tash's priority was to deal with the hunters, but Antoinette still wanted her to learn as much as she could about the Begotten, the Uratha, and the worlds they policed.

Antoinette. Tash sighed, and looked at Jack. The boy stepped ahead of them, and walked with an upright pose, Athalia and Fiona over his head. Before departing on the mission, Antoinette had asked her to protect the boy; a request as a friend, not the Prince. She'd do her best, but it was hard to do that when Jack kept putting himself at the front. Maybe she could talk to him, tell him to stay closer to Damien? No doubt Julias had already told him that, though.

He was a Ventrue, and there was no getting around that Ventrue drifted toward leadership. Mister Mire had sired the boy for his tenacity, but as Jack grew comfortable, and confident, he became more and more like his sire. And then, there was his secret about his new, overwhelming hatred for Angela that he'd shared with her. While the boy was becoming more and more like Mire, he was also becoming more and more like Viktor. And that must have been terrifying for him.

She nudged Art in the side, and he leaned down for her, bringing his ear next to her lips. "Keep an eye on J-Jack."

"You know I will."

“I ... I m-mean ... more than ... than you m-m-might think is necessary.”

Art raised a brow at her, but nodded, shrugged, and continued walking.

Matt opened one of the side doors, and everyone froze with the quiet sound of wood creaking on stone. Rolling his eyes, Art walked up to him, slapped him upside the shoulder, and peeked into the room.

“Same as the one we arrived in.”

“Strange,” Noah said. “This feels less like a nightmare, and more like a ... like a museum, or medieval festival.”

“Not all nightmares show the pits of torture they can put you through so easily,” Fiona said. Her accent was gone! Now she sounded almost Portuguese. “My heart of my lair is a jungle. The pain it can inflict, the terrors it holds, are deep within its center. None of you have seen it.” Guess that ruled out Damien or Jack having ever gone that deep then.

Noah fell in behind Jack, and looked over his shoulder as he walked, eyes scanning around at everything. While Arturo looked like he was scanning for enemies, Noah seemed interested in the strange building itself. She didn't know him very well, but maybe he was a scholar or something, an intellectual; not that Art or Matt weren't smart, but ... but they weren't. Smiling, she pat Art on his side, and he raised a brow at her, confused. So cute. Her beautiful, awesome, big dumb boyfriends.

Noah, on the other hand, she noticed a glint in his eyes when he approached one of the braziers, and examined it. She knew that glint. It was the glint she got in her eye whenever she saw something new, something interesting, something to add to her catalog of memory.

“These braziers,” he said, far closer to the fire than she was willing to get, “are ... too detailed.”

“Too?” Damien said.

“Yes. Stone sculptures like these were typically not high in detail. And yet, these gargoyles have ... pores.”

Oooh! Tash wanted to look closer, but didn't want to lean in close and get a face full of flickering flame; the slightest touch was enough to be harmful. She'd have to suffice with looking at the gorgeous artwork from a distance, and take a few zoomed in pictures.

“Chambers are the culmination of fear, breaking points for the soul, and...” The skeleton monster above let out a long, raspy sigh, and shook its head. “Nevermind. It is not physical, it is greater than that. Do not trust your eyes.”

“I feel ... so ... naked here,” Matt said. “Nothing has a reflection. I don't smell or feel any spirits. But I can feel it's different.”

Tash couldn't feel that. As she kept the group in the aura of her cloak of night, she managed to look around a little with auspex, to see if there was something extra to see. With vitae flowing through her eyes, looking for ... for something beyond physical matter, it was pointless. Whatever it was that the monsters and werewolves could see or feel about the place, to her, it was beyond her ability to notice or differentiate. Could Daniel? Her sire's mastery of auspex was far beyond her own, and the man could use it to do unthinkable things, discover lost secrets, uncover truths from liars, and even glimpse into the past. Maybe someday she'd be able to, too.

“As we said,” Fiona, or rather Vrall, said from above, “we are in the Primordial Dream. The physical and spirit world are two sides of a coin, but here? It is the shadow the coin casts.”

Tash nodded as she digested the information. Maybe they should call this place the Shadow World then, if that was the analogy. Then again, who was they? Primordial Dream, Shadow Realm, where did these words come from? Who categorized and collected the information, gave it definitions, names, identifiers. And was it accurate information?

The group stopped before a door, giant, two wooden slabs barring their way. Closed.

Jack pulled out his pistol and short sword, as did Damien, and Tash. The hallway had been empty, and despite poking their heads in a few of the doors, all they found were empty rooms with old furniture.

“I can smell them,” Art said. “They moved through here.”

“I guess they closed the d-door behind them?” Tash shook her head as she considered. That was a possibility, but if it’d been her, she wouldn’t have closed such an enormous door after opening it, since it was bound to make a lot of noise. It also meant they’d have to reopen it, if they were going to run back.

“Think your cloaks of night can suppress us opening this?” Jack said. Both Mekhet shook their heads. “Figures.”

“Stealth will only help so much,” the skeleton said. “Forcing open someone else’s portal announces our presence, be it a Begotten’s lair, or some other entity’s tunnel through the worlds. Whatever beast waits for us within this nightmare, they know we are here.”

“... so much for the element of surprise.” Damien sighed, and pointed his sword up at the hovering monstrosity. “Could have told us that before we came here.”

“It would not change what we have to do. The hunters will be waiting for us. And the likely place they will, is on the other side of this door.”

Sighing, Tash set her chin in her fingers, and analyzed. Yes, if the hunters were setting up a good place for an ambush, the other side of a thick door was a good place.

“D-Does anyone hear, or sense anything on the other side?” she said. Everyone shook their heads. “Should ... should we try and ... b-b-burst in?”

Everyone looked at Jack. Tash smiled at that, not only because the boy was turning into Julias far faster than he realized, but also, because she didn't want to answer that question herself. If the hunters were waiting on the other side, trying to sneak out of the hallway wouldn't work; whoever stuck their head out first would die. If they burst into the room, but the hunters weren't waiting, they'd give up the element of surprise by announcing their arrival even more than they already had.

“Can you investigate with that black mist form of yours, Athalia?” Jack said.

“No. My senses are gone while in that form. It is only for moving to locations, not scouting.”

Nodding, Jack looked to the three Uratha. “Can you transform into your werewolf form, and ... well, stay in control?”

Matt and Art smirked, while Noah shrugged.

“I can,” Noah said. “Not all of us are so well mannered.”

The two boys with Natasha rolled their eyes, but at least they didn't get angry. They weren't happy about Noah playing supervisor, but Natasha could tell the man was doing his best to help the pack. Art had said the man was Elodoth, and was good with his words. They also said he was a bit of a sociopath, and thought of his pack mates as pieces on a chess board, not as people. A mean insult, but even now, the man's expression was more deadpan than Tash expected from anyone in this situation. She recognized the look of someone analyzing the moment, and detaching themselves from the emotional gravity of it to maintain an objective eye. Hopefully that wouldn't lead to rather harsh decisions, at the possible detriment to others.

She doubted it would. He was a member of their pack! Surely he'd protect his family above everything else. Matt and Art seemed to trust him, even if they didn't like him.

"Alright," Jack said, "the mission hasn't changed, just the method. Stealth isn't an option"—he threw a glare at Athalia as he said it—"so we should use a rushdown tactic instead. Even if the enemies aren't waiting in ambush, rushdown will work better because it will allow us to close in on the enemy quickly. Ever see SWAT tactics? Use speed and overwhelm the terrorists holding the hostages. Hesitate and lose, so we don't hesitate. We move quickly, and take down any enemies in our way. They'll hesitate, and we'll take advantage of that."

For a moment, Tash smiled at the man's wisdom. Then, she tilted her head to the side. Was he talking about a video game? It almost sounded like he was talking about a video game. It was still sound advice, and she pursed her lips as she kept her opinion to herself.

"Remember, rescue is priority. Second priority is learning more about the hunters and the situation, like how they have a Begotten working for them. We've been flying blind for weeks with these hunters, and that has to change." He checked his pistol, tightened his grip on his sword hilt, and took a breath; only Natasha and Damien would know how useless that was. "Ok, Uratha, you—"

Roars from beyond the door started to echo, loud, filled with inhuman shrieks. Moments later, more roars joined it, but not layered with strange shrieks. She knew those roars! Those were the roars of a werewolf, a howl mixed with rumbles that grew into overpowering thunder.

Everyone froze when the sounds of gunfire joined it.

They all looked at each other, and Tash chewed on the inside of her cheeks as they listened. Gunshots, more of them, and then yelling. The noise's details were lost to the echo of whatever lay beyond the door, but it sounded like a man's voice. Clara, or Eric, or both, were fighting the hunters. Maybe Jessy was fighting too; knowing Jessy, she probably threw the first punch.

Natasha had faith in Jessy's abilities, as the girl had proven herself many times in combat, kicking Carthian ass. But this situation was different. The hunters weren't looking to have a brawl, or a skirmish fight that led to blood loss, but no deaths. No, the hunters were looking to kill, and they'd use fire and silver and shotguns and assault rifles. Could Jessy survive something like that?

Everyone waited for Jack's word.

---

---

~~Jack~~

As the distant roars and gunshots ran through his ears, he tossed a few dozen scenarios through his head. Did they really have to do this? Did it really come down to opening a door and hoping for the best? Was it really the best idea to just, break their way into some unknown monster's dream, and force a situation? There had to have been a better way, a smarter way, something more elegant or precise or manipulative or ... or ... something. This rescue mission was foolhardy, and everyone knew it. He wasn't saying it, and they weren't saying it, but they all knew it.

All of their back-up plans for rescuing Eric, if their defense of him failed, did not account for a nightmare realm. If they'd had time, they'd have taken a few days to plan something proper. This on-the-fly rescue mission was going to be the death of them all, but it had to be done. It had to be done. He wasn't about to let Jessy go through what he did, or Clara. Or hell, even that asshole Eric.

"Let's take advantage," he said. "Uratha, transform and get ready to storm whomever's waiting for us. Damien and Natasha, ranged support. If there's any snipers waiting for us, use your speed to get up to them and take them out, but otherwise stay out of the fray. Fiona, close range support. Stick with the Uratha, distract, and incapacitate groups with your webbing if you can. If the werewolves go down, get them back through the door and into one of these rooms." He gestured to the normal-sized wooden doors around them. "Athalia, push open the doors as fast as you can, and since you can fly, try and get behind whatever's waiting for us.

"If I was Jeremiah, I'd have hunters waiting for me in a staggered formation. We're talking kine, with physical limitations; they have to rely on their weaponry to be dangerous, so they'll play to those strengths. Pistols and shotguns at medium range, rifles at long, with some kind of cover between us and them. They may have a sniper, but unlikely; sniping in real life is nothing like the movies. They'll also have molotovs, maybe flamethrowers and grenades, and silver bullets and silver knives, and..." He stroked his chin as he looked down, and ran through the scenarios in his head. Needed more time, needed a lot more time, but they had to go and they had to go now.

"And where will you be?" Athalia said.

He frowned at her. Trying to earn the woman's trust was going to be a lifelong endeavor, at this rate. "With Damien and Tash, as their support. Much as I'd like to be up front and center, I'm not an idiot. I've got a year under my belt as Kindred, and that's it. Tash and Damien are ancilla, and far more skilled in combat than I am."

Whatever fire was in his gut that survived his first encounter with Angela, he wasn't about to put it to the test without due cause. And, Ventrue as he was, he had a natural talent for resilience and animalism, the former not useful for a blitzkrieg, and the latter useless inside a nightmare, he figured. Dominate would serve him well, if he could get in close enough to use it, and no way they'd let him do that without filling him with lead and dousing him in napalm.

“If anyone has a better idea,” he said, “speak up. The hunters know we're coming, so this is going to be chaos incarnate.”

Noah stepped up. “Given how quickly we have to move, your approach is the best we can hope to achieve.”

Well, that was a point for him. He looked at the others, and they all shrugged. It was a weird balance between having a little — only a little — faith in his plan, and not having any better ideas. But everyone had a strong drive to make this thing happen. Werewolves wanted to save Clara and Eric. Vampires wanted to save Jessy. Monsters wanted to learn how Jeremiah was working with one of their kind; it was a scary thought, one who slays their kind working with their kind.

“Alright, get ready,” he said. The urge to hyperventilate hit him. If he needed to breathe, he'd probably be seeing stars, or passing out. This was the first time he'd ever truly gone on the offensive, against anyone, ever. That one time he, Viktor, and Julias were attacking Tony was sort of offensive, but Viktor and Julias did all the work; Jack was a spectator. Lucas? On the defense. That fucking spider monster in the sewers? They were ambushed. And of course the time he was kidnapped, his escape was reactive.

This would be the first time mounting a true offensive. The first time going into something, expecting to have to fight, and kill, and be the one actively causing the engagement.

Sighing, he nodded to the Uratha, and they began to transform. He offered Athalia another nod, and the monster set her colossal, skeletal hands against the door, and pushed.

The doors pushed back with the strength of an erupting volcano, shattering the wood. There was a moment, a single moment, where Jack could see the wood bend and warp like ripples in water, before it exploded into the hallway. Shards of it, some small, some massive, crashed over the group, and all of them fell back as the kinetic wave smashed into them. It pushed into them, through their bones, organs, and slammed them to the floor until they were sliding along the old stones hard enough to tear small holes into their clothing.

Slow motion, flying through the air, a vague awareness that he was going to be in pain when he came to, but until then, he was numb. The others were bundles of limbs and chaos around him, rolling, twisting, sliding. It was like God had chewed them all up, and spat them out.

The world went silent. Jack forced his eyes open, and stared up at the ceiling above, body grabbing at air it didn't need. Up and down, left and right, all lost. Like waking up on some mornings, and not having your natural, innate awareness of your position and orientation; it made you feel lost. But as the silence turned into a ringing in his ears, deafening and painful, he forced his weight up onto his elbows.

He was on his ass, and he was in pain.

Groaning as the scorching agony shot up his body, he looked down at himself, and groan turned into a grunt and growl; at least he thought he was making those noises. Hard to tell when you were suddenly deaf.

There was a shard of wood jammed into his gut.

He reached out, and ripped it out. Bits of his skin came out with it, and bits of muscle, hooked into its jagged edges. Don't waste time thinking about it, don't pause to let the pain enter your thoughts. Somewhere in the corner of his mind, he remembered the time that Rebecca woman had stabbed him. Viktor after that cut him open. Damien after that, stabbed him. Did the Azlu monster stab him? He couldn't even remember. All of that was washed aside by the memory of Angela, and the torture she had inflicted on him.

Yanking out a glorified splinter was nothing. He glared at the wound, and forced it closed, forced his vitae to pool into his muscle and skin, and demand it seal. It did. He was a Ventrue, resilience was in his blood, and he had to react before—

An arm, massive, and covered in fur, reached out over his head, slammed down into chest, and grabbed him. The hand was big enough for the claws to get around the sides of his ribs, and throw him. The world became a blur as he spun through the air, and crashed into one of the side doors. It swung open from the impact, and darkness greeted him, along with stone, and wood, as he rolled across the floor and slammed into a chair, and then a chair, and then a table.

Pop. Pop pop. Quiet, little popping noises rattled in his ears, growing louder and louder, as the ringing grew quieter and quieter. The headache came like a rising ocean wave, slamming into his brain as the realization finally clicked. The moment Athalia had touched the door, it had exploded inward. Nothing except for a military grade large explosive was blowing down that door, the way it had.

Jack looked around himself. With the door of the room open, and the gargoyle braziers outside providing a strip of light cutting into the room, he could see the smashed chairs and table around him. Bits of wood, cracked in half around his, yet again, thrown and beaten body. As the ringing went away, the pop pops grew louder and louder, until it was obvious what they were. Gunfire. And not glocks, like he knew Damien and Tash used. He recognized the boom of shotguns, the loud cracks of higher caliber pistols, and the rain of bullets from fully automatic rifles.

God he hated being right all the time.

Two shapes threw themselves into the room. He tried to sit up, to use his—oh fucking god he dropped his weapons. Groaning, he slammed his palms against the floor, sending a painful jolt through his body. Get up, defend yourself!

“Jack,” one of them said, body a blur mixed with the dark, light hitting their colossal back, world spinning around them. “You ok?” Their voice was hard and choppy, almost a bark, mixed with depth and bass.

“ ... yeah, um—”

“Art.”

“Right, right. Matt?”

The bigger wolf grunted. Guess Matt wasn't much for talking when transformed then. But then, it looked like Art had a hard time, with a lack of lips, and the tongue and chops and yeah, hard to talk as a wolf.

“Thanks,” he said. One of them must have thrown him into the side room, before the hail of gunfire began. Matt shrugged, like it was no big deal. The man was way too nice.

As his eyes adjusted to the darkness, and the two wolves fell into the shadow around the streak of light that cut across the floor, Jack stared at the two beasts. There were holes in their bodies, bleeding, and badly. He'd seen the wolves recover from extreme wounds in moments, when fighting the Azlu monster, but the holes in their bodies trickled red down their fur, and both wolves were breathing hard.

How long had he been out? It must have been only seconds, and he'd managed to recover from a hole in his gut quickly. At least, recover enough function.

“... silver bullets,” he said to no one.

“Just pistols,” Art said, “and only a little silver.” He groaned, voice rumbling as he rotated his shoulder. The size of his muscle was so massive, his arm was almost as big as Jack's whole body. “Maybe shotguns had silver too. No time to check.” Each word came out as a half bark, but powerful enough to punch through the noise still coming from the hallway. Yelling, shouting, gunfire, and screaming.

If the silver bullets were only coming from the pistols and shotguns, maybe there were some issues with creating silver bullets? Expensive, or a metallurgical issue, he had no idea. But it was nice to know that, presumably, some rifle bullets had hit Art and Matt, and hadn't caused the sort of damage Jack was looking at.

“So much for the plan.” Groaning, Jack forced himself onto his feet, and dragged himself toward the door. Maybe, just maybe, he could get his pistol and sword back. Maybe, just maybe, he could do something to save this foolhardy plan. Maybe, just fucking god damn maybe, he could save the others, if they needed saving.

He stuck his head out along the door, just far enough to get his eye poking around the door frame of stone. The hallway was a mess, bits of wood everywhere, and splatters of blood, some of it too dark to be a werewolf's. Some of the darker stuff was fading into ash, vampire blood. But some other blood, even darker in shade, didn't.

Fiona. The spider woman lay on the stone floor of the hall, and Jack gulped as he stared at her. Other doors in the hall had been opened, likely hiding the other members of the ragtag crew; trails of blood led into the rooms, same as Jack's. No one else was in the hallway except for Vrall, and the gunfire from beyond came to a stop as the dust settled. The blood was hers, and it continued to leak from the holes in her gut and limbs, as she trembled. Her long spider legs on her back squirmed, like a struggling spider unable to escape a sticky surface. Her human-shaped body was a dead weight, shivering, barely breathing, and the crown of many horns on her head shifted against the smoothed rock of the floor.

Why weren't they shooting her to death? They—no, they had ammo, they had the numbers, and they had the advantage. They weren't shooting her to death because they saw an opportunity.

Fuck. Jack stuck his head out a little further, enough to look down the hallway. A bullet whizzed past his head, and he ducked back into the darkness as it slammed into his door frame, opposite of the hunters. It'd only been a second of looking, but it was enough to see that a group of the hunters were waiting in the next room, a dozen of them at least. They were hiding behind some sort of giant pillar, in what looked like an enormous chamber.

His plan would have probably worked then, probably, if the hunters hadn't struck first. The fuck did they use? Some sort of plastic explosive, and a lot of it? Jack's ears were still ringing, and only his Kindred vitae kept it from becoming a lasting problem; kine would have taken days to heal the hearing damage, if at all. The hole in his gut wasn't completely healed either, just closed, and his limbs and torso ached with impact damage. If he'd still been alive or blushing life, his body would be covered in bruises tomorrow.

And like a giant fuck you to vampires everywhere, there was fire. The explosion hadn't created it, the hunters had, probably immediately after the explosion to prevent the vampires from escaping. The fire circled what remained of the door, bits of wood still attached to the frame, and one of the hunters was out in front of the pillar, closer to the shattered door. They had a flamethrower, and every so often, they re-coated the area around the door, the floor, the ceiling, all of it in flame. No vampire was getting through there easily.

“Surprised you came, Jack.”

He froze, and looked at the two wolves with him. They shrugged, and waited, not recognizing the voice. He recognized it though, and god he wished he didn't.

“Angela,” he called out from his hiding hole.

“Stick your head out again, please. I missed.”

Jack snarled, gritting his teeth until his jaws clicked. “You survived getting stabbed, and run over.”

“I did.”

Sighing, Jack stared at Fiona. She'd been shot a half-dozen times, at least, and the wounds weren't small. How hunters got their hands on ammunition that could do this much damage to flesh, he didn't know; he didn't know if Fiona's skin was fleshy either. Whatever they'd shot her with, it had not only ripped clean through her arms, legs, and stomach, the holes the bullets left were far too large. Werewolves could heal from that damage, if it wasn't silver, unless it got one of them straight through the head. A vampire might live after getting shot in the head from bullets that large, maybe, but they'd go into torpor for a long while. Defenseless was as good as dead.

“A human wouldn't survive that,” he called out, “let alone recover so quickly.”

“And yet here I am. Gonna take more than a stab wound and a car bumper to kill me.”

“Are you even human?”

“Fuck yes I’m human! Unlike you. Unlike your wolf buddies and your monster friend. Unlike your vamp partners. All of you, hiding in Sándor’s nightmare. You are all so fucked.”

Sándor? Judging from what she said, it was the monster who owned the nightmare they were in, then.

She said monster friend. Singular? So she didn’t know about Athalia yet.

The door across from Jack was closed, but at least one of the doors, across the hall and closer to the hunters, was open. Jack and the pair of wolves got knocked back pretty far then. Hopefully Damien, Tash, and Noah were together. But where the fuck was Athalia?

Think, think. Athalia could transform into a black mist when moving around, but she said she lost the ability to sense things when doing so. He doubted she completely lost her whole sense of orientation and position though, cause otherwise, she wouldn’t be able to move around, or know when to come out of the mist form. Did she turn into mist when the explosion happened? The strange blood was Fiona’s, and he doubted a skeleton monster bled, so maybe she was unharmed. Maybe, just maybe, she’d be able to use the mist form, sneak in behind the hunters, launch a counter attack, and give the rest of them the window they needed to respond.

Could Damien and Tash sneak past the hunters with the cloak of night? Not if they’d been shot a bunch; they didn’t have the resilience of Ventrue or Gangrels. And no vampire except an elder was maintaining the cloak of night while jumping through a ring of fire.

Think think think think. If he had to rely on Athalia, there’d be trouble. Athalia herself hadn’t been able to confirm or deny if she could attack her daughter, and it was her daughter blocking them from getting to Jessy and the others. It was her daughter and her gang of psychopaths stopping him from getting to Fiona.

“Jack?” Fiona said, voice quiet, wavering.

“Thank god. Fiona, you alright?”

“I ... I ... am surprised...” Her blade-like fingers pressed to the floor, trying to lift herself.

“Don’t! Don’t, don’t move.”

“I ... I’m bleeding ... badly. I have to ... I have to return ... to my ... lair.” The beautiful monster tried to move again, but her efforts failed, body flattening to the stones as she collapsed, spider legs twitching. “Have ... to ... return ... or I’ll ... die.”

“If you move, they’ll shoot you, Fiona.” With his voice low, and a wall of fire between them and the hunters, some whispers should be safe. “They want us to come to you.” Please stop moving please stop moving please stop moving.

“I ... guess I am ... the fly in the web.” She let her blood-soaked body collapse completely, earning a loud chuckle from the glass-eye bitch beyond the fire. “I cannot help but feel ... that we ... underestimated ... the threat.”

Hearing her new voice analyze the threat hurt. Better than hearing giggling, Scottish Fiona though. It’d be too heartbreaking, and he needed to use his brain right now, not listen to an aching heart. Think think think.

“Which one of you is faster?” he said to the two wolves.

Art raised his giant hand of claws, but Jack’s eyes fell to their bodies, and he winced as he looked at the bullet holes that remained on their limbs. It was weird to see Uratha not heal, and weirder still to see the two, hulking, massive brutes, panting. The hunters must have bombarded the hallway with bullets when they blew the door. Jack went flying, got lucky with—

He blinked, and stared down at himself, as he noticed there was a gash through his pants, above the knee. A bullet had got him, two in fact, hitting the leg and tearing through the muscle. His undead body prevented blood loss from the wounds, despite each being an inch deep, and he stared at the open split of pale skin and dry muscle within. Only after realizing he was wounded, did the pain kick in.

He squeezed his eyes shut, and forced down the pain. No, he didn't have time for this. He had to save people, had to make a plan to deal with the situation, had to think. He tapped into his gut, his core, his beast, and told it to deal with it. Moments later, thick Kindred blood pulled at the wound, and the muscle and skin closed. Barely. It was nothing compared to what the Uratha could do, except, they weren't. The silver bullets had damaged them almost as badly as a normal bullet would hurt kine, or fire would hurt Kindred.

Asking them to do any running was going to be a problem, but what other option did he have? No matter what happened, they needed the Begotten for their escape plan. And, the last thing he wanted was for Fiona to get hurt in this. Much as Vrall was supposedly an experienced monster, Fiona was a young girl.

Then again, who was he to talk? Either way, the only one who could save Fiona was Art.

“Art, can you—”

A hail of gunfire cut through the hall, and Jack almost jumped off his ass. Both Uratha fell back as well, bodies rolling into the darkness, away from where the gargoyles' firelight cut along the floor.

The fuck were they shooting at? He forced his eyes onto Fiona, terrified he'd find her nothing but a pulpy mess of flesh and spider legs. But it wasn't her they were shooting at.

Jack stared at her as bullets flew past her, around her, slamming into the stone walls and tearing them apart. Many of the bullets went high, crashing into the braziers and sending bits of fire around in small splashes of flame; the nightmare's fire had more weight than it should have. Every so often, the telltale thud of a bullet hitting flesh was a small pause in the rain of death.

Someone in a suit, full of holes, came sliding in, momentum forcing them to skid foot first, their arm to the stone. Fast, very fast, but the man was trailing bits of blood, thick heavy blood that vanished into ash moments later.

“Damien! What the fuck are—”

The man did a running pick-up of Fiona, slamming his weight into the wall by Jack, before he scooped her up as he threw his weight toward the door opposite of Jack. It swung open with a loud crack as Damien's back and shoulder crashed into it, and both he and Fiona rolled along the floor. Fiona's rolling was a mess, her enormous spider leg blades coming out of her back, each many feet long, and having to twist and bend along their multiple joints.

“Damien! Damien you fucking idiot. Are you alright?” The gargoyle braziers cast their light into the room, and Jack stared at the two bodies strewn around against the wood chairs and tables.

Damien managed to raise a hand. His back was against the leg of one of the tables, and he was sitting, legs spread out, Fiona on the floor next to him. Alive, still alive, but Jack could see the myriad of holes puncturing the man's chest. Jack was in no position to judge his brash actions though. The little Ventrue was the moron in this circumstance, unable to stay armed, while Damien managed to not only save Fiona, he kept his weapons on him as he did.

“You fuckers have a lot of nerve,” Angela said, voice loud and burying the sound of fire. “You break into an unknown world, with absolutely no clue what’s waiting for you. How fucking arrogant can you get? Or do you think hunters are that stupid, that pathetic, that we’d let you just march in here and do whatever you want?”

He bit his tongue as he stared at Damien and Fiona. Both of them were a mess, and Fiona was bleeding everywhere. He doubted she’d be opening any doors to any other worlds or nightmares in her condition. And Damien looked bad, very bad, like that time he got stabbed by the Azlu monster. He was still conscious though, pistol still in his hand.

This rescue operation had gone from foolhardy and rash, to predictably disastrous in seconds. He just didn’t expect it to be this disastrous. Hell, with two ancilla, two Begotten, and three Uratha, he’d gotten cocky, and expected things to go well. Angela was right, and he was arrogant.

That was the problem with hubris, he supposed. You didn’t know you had it, until it was too late.

~~Julias~~

This was a stupid idea. He shouldn’t be doing it. As a member of the council, it was his job to dictate actions to his subordinates, and manage the outcomes. And yet here he was, in the tunnels, alone, walking toward Azamel’s den.

He took a moment to adjust his tie and make sure he was presentable. He was Julias Mire, youngest to ever step onto the Dolareido Invictus Council, and Alder Viktor Honor’s childe. He—

He stopped, and laughed, running his fingers over his head and through his hair. What was it he said to Triss, so long ago? Right, that he envied the kine and their ability to enjoy the moment. Get drunk, get high, get lost in arousal and lost to the immediate, lost to circumstance, lost to whatever their whimsy desired. And then later, he told her that he was sick and tired of Kindred and their constant pursuit of the opposite, forever trying to plan for any and all possible contingencies, with a million plots and maneuvers in place to deal with them. Wholly incapable of enjoying the moment. Worse, their every thought was dominated with schemes and weaving webs of secrets and lies.

Here he was, doing just that, about to weave some webs. But was the problem his new attitude, or that his old one was naive, now shattered under the weight of reality?

Unlike his predecessor, when the night was done and he had a moment to breathe, he could go back home to his lover, and fall asleep in her arms; while Jen ooh'd and aww'd over the two of them cuddling. It made the games, the manipulating, the schemes, worth it. And if his schemes potentially saved Jack? It made it very worth it.

He wasn't completely alone on this dangerous quest. Four thralls were with him, loyal servants of the Invictus. No ghouls though, not worth the risk on what could easily become a very violent meeting. Ghouls were harder to kill, but far more precious to whatever Kindred had nurtured them. He had none of his own anyhow, and he was doing this without the knowledge of his fellow councilmen; couldn't borrow theirs. Hopefully the three men and one woman with him, each dressed in suits and wearing ear pieces, would survive the encounter.

He should have brought other Kindred with him. But then, who could he trust with this? If he told anyone else, they'd probably tell the rest of the council, and they'd stop him. He could tell Beatrice, but she was busy with Jacob, as per her text. Besides, he wouldn't bring her, not for something like this. Invictus business, and dangerous. She'd probably slap him, or claw him, for actively keeping her out of danger, but at least she'd understand the Invictus business part. She had her own business with her new teacher after all, Jacob.

What was the man teaching her? Julias knew about Jacob's old witches from before his time, and how they died, generally for sticking their noses out too far in their pursuits and getting caught by hunters. If Triss died from similar, it'd kill him. It'd kill him, and then he'd kill the old man, if he could. Then again, Jacob wasn't the reckless man Viktor said he used to be. He could be trusted, to a degree. A small degree.

He shook his head. He was a happier man than he used to be, but right now, happy wasn't what he needed. What he needed was to be a cold, ruthless, powerful negotiator and master tactician. Thinking of Triss always got him smiling, and he needed to be not smiling. He was the great Julias Mire, strongest of the ancilla, childe of Alder Viktor Honors, and councilmen of the Invictus. The authority to do as he pleased sat with him.

Hopefully Azamel could see his side of the argument.

He found her doing what she always did, sitting in her chair, rocking, smoking, staring into nothing. Mark hopped down from the concrete stage, and glared at him, arms folded across his chest.

"Let him be, Mark," she said.

The man frowned, adjusted his black hoodie, and hopped back up onto the stage. He found his own place to sit on a couch, and pulled out an e-book reader. Did they just sit down here all the time, and read? No, they had to eat, but he doubted they left through the tunnels to do so; not Azamel, at least. Maybe Mark brought food to her? Maybe, but then Julias knew of no kine deaths that could be attributed to her. How the old woman, or how any of them fed besides Fiona, was still a mystery.

Julias looked over his shoulder at his four thralls. Each had their arms at their sides, ready to draw their pistols from their hidden vest holsters if needed. He doubted they'd be terribly useful in a fight against monsters, but then again, bullets could do a lot of damage if you used enough of them.

“Thank you,” he said.

“For?” She didn't bother to look his way, content to stare off into space as she blew some smoke, before clearing her lungs with some coughs.

“For helping us, for sending Fiona and Athalia along with Jack. The mission is ... dangerous, to say the least, but it was the best we could come up with in a single hour.”

“Considering the time constraint, it was not a bad move.” A compliment, from Azamel. He did not see that coming. “And in the dream, Athalia is more than capable of taking care of herself.”

“You trust her a lot.”

“I trust both Mark and Athalia to be capable of more than any Kindred, once inside the dream.”

“And Fiona?”

“She ... is unusual. It has been a long time since I've known a Begotten with her horror so developed unto itself. Vrallar'trakla of the Eight Blade Arach is old, very old, and very powerful, and yet she is tethered to a child. Perhaps with time, she will grow to be stronger than I? Like your childe, hmm?”

Julias frowned, but wiped it away. There was something to her voice with the Jack comment, something he didn't like but couldn't put his finger on.

“I came to ask a question.”

“By all means, ask. I don’t promise to answer, but you never know.”

Naturally.

“I wanted to know why you didn’t go.”

“ ... why I did not go?”

“Yes, why you, the great Azamel, did not go. I remember the last time you were here, old monster. I remember the damage you caused.”

“You understand the power I wield.”

“I do.”

“And yet you threaten me, and hold my favorite home hostage with explosives.” She blew smoke his way, and glared at him through the gray. For a moment, he could see something strange through the smoke, where her eyes were cutting through it. A shadow, a flicker of shape and darkness that almost looked like tusks.

“You know it was the right move,” he said.

“Do I?”

“You’re a threat, and unlike the Uratha, you have a tendency to cause major damage to the city when you decide to act out.”

“ ... that was almost ninety years ago.” She finished the cigarette, set the butt in the ash tray on the small stand beside her, and sighed. “Things change.”

“I’m not here to argue about the past. I’m here to ask why you’re not helping Fiona and Athalia. A Begotten is working with the hunters. That alone warrants your investigation, doesn’t it?”

“We are investigating it.”

“And?”

“And our investigations have proved futile. This monster hides from us, and forcing our way into his or her lair invites trouble.”

He could understand that. But it wasn’t good enough.

“Your ability to enter the nightmare world, and move around, is a deadly ability,” he said. “More than your other abilities, this way to bypass things—”

“We cannot bypass everything, or do it so easily, vampire. But, yes, the roads of the worlds, all worlds, are ours to travel as we desire. We are monsters, the true and original creatures of darkness.” She laughed. Laughing led to coughing, horrible, nasty, deep in her lungs, and she brought her hand up to her mouth as a fist to cover her lips.

“ ... you’re dying, aren’t you?”

“I am hundreds of years old, and I am no vampire. Of course I’m dying.”

Sighing, he came in closer, and stood before the decaying monster. “Cancer?”

“Were it so simple. No, it is not cancer, foolish boy. But, as you may now suspect, I do not waste what energy I have left on foolishness.”

“Two of your people are—”

“They are not property! They are individuals. We are friends, a family of sorts, and we rely on each other. But they are not my subordinates, fool. I do not need to bend or break them, and I do not need to order them. And, I am not beholden to owe them.”

He didn't believe that. Azamel was a monster, beyond the definition of a Begotten, and those under her protection likely did everything she asked of them. Her words weren't without merit though, since Jack assured him Fiona was still the ridiculously happy person she'd always been. If Azamel was the colossal tyrant the Invictus assumed she was, surely the Scot's attitude would have been affected.

“Jack's in a nightmare world,” he said, “with the best team I could imagine him getting in such a small amount of time. But I suspect the hunters are more prepared than we realized. With a Begotten working for them, Jeremiah and Angela's unusual tenacity, this shaman woman able to do some ritual magic beyond us, and an unknown-but-large force of hunters working with them, I have to assume they're more prepared than even our more pessimistic estimates.” Sighing louder, he held his chin in his fingers. “At first glance, it seemed like the right thing to do, sending him with such a powerful group. On second look, I think he's walking into a more dangerous trap than we assumed. Jeremiah would have a plan in place in case we followed Eric's kidnapper, one capable of stopping even an elder Kindred.”

“Yes ... that is possible.” Shrugging, she held out her hand to the side. Moments later, Mark joined her, set a cigarette in her hand, and lit it for her. She said she wasn't dying of cancer, but with the amount she smoked, he doubted even a Begotten was impervious to its effects. “Why don't you go?” And for good measure, she blew a puff of smoke at him.

“I would love to go, but my days of risking my life on random missions are over. I have responsibilities now.” He glanced back at the four thralls. Each stood silent as statues. Well trained, and reliable. But if they'd been Jessy and Tash, as they once were, they'd have provided their opinions and support. Those days were gone.

“Ah yes, your empire of ... them,” she made a gesture to the thralls, “and of your fledglings and neonates. Like children, they must be nurtured. And you, their parent? An absurdity if there ever was one.”

“You're dodging my request. I want you to help Jack and the others.”

“No.”

“Why not? If you're dying of old age, then it's inev—”

“Do not speak to me of death and age, immortal leech. And what would you know of Begotten?” She took a long breath of her cigarette, and blew shapes into the air, circles. Impressive. “And my death is not inevitable. You, a simple blood leech, will never understand the destiny that awaits Begotten. I will make mine a reality, and you will bow and ... and...” With a sigh of her own, she leaned back in her seat, and tapped ashes into the nearby ashtray. “I am old, and decayed, and I dodge death's looming scythe with my effort. I did not make my requests of Athalia and Fiona lightly. Leave me be.”

“And if I promise to remove the explosives?”

That got her attention. She sat up, watched him for a moment, before she sank back into her seat. A weight was crushing her, pinning her. Maybe death was at her door.

“Even if, Mire. Even if,” she said. He glared at the old woman, but it was pointless. Someone as old as her wasn't about to change her mind, no matter how much he bargained. “But if you truly think my fellow Begotten are in danger, speak with Jacob.”

“Jacob?”

“Yes. The old bastard loves to dip his toes into my affairs. He is curious about nightmares.”

Nosferatu were masters of nightmares, at least compared to other Kindred blood clans. It made sense for the man to be interested in a species that literally embodied nightmares.

“Curious?” he said.

“Indeed. He is hunting something, pursuing knowledge. The realm of spirits, the realm of nightmares and dreams, he hunts them, and others I’m sure. He may know of a way to break into this unknown Begotten’s lair.”

“Thanks for the tip.” Maybe it’d be worth it to visit Jacob, and see what he had to say? “May I ask what he did to put himself on your radar?”

“He and that crocodile mouth friend of his tested the edges of my realm.”

Triss and Jacob. Two peas in a pod. He hoped the old man wasn’t turning her into a new version of him.

“I’ll go speak to him right now.”

“I imagine he’s dancing with death at this very moment, in his ritual chamber in Three Kings Cemetery. But make sure to leave the thralls at home, vampire, lest the old monster sacrifice them.”

---

He texted Triss, explaining his trip to the cemetery. If Azamel was right, then Jacob and Triss, and probably Jennifer, were already there. Alas, no response.

Ritual chamber, ritual chamber. He didn't know about the exact location of the ritual chamber, or that it qualified as a ritual chamber. Everyone knew that Jacob had multiple places where he performed his crúac madness; too smart to put all his eggs in one basket. And he was sure the Prince and her sheriff knew them, or at least this one, but the Invictus didn't.

So here he was, standing at the gate of Three Kings Cemetery, wasting his time. As Azamel suggested, he left the thralls at Xnomina HQ; Jacob preferred a more personal touch anyway. Adjusting his tie, he stepped under the gate, and looked around. The Dolareido Cathedral wasn't too far. Maria surely knew about Jacob's proximity and his blood rituals, but Jacob could hide a tank in his cloak of night if he wanted. He'd be more than able to hide himself so near, unless a Mekhet went hunting with auspex. With the loss of Natasha, the Invictus no longer had a powerful Mekhet; no, Damien filled that role now, sort of.

He should talk to that boy soon, and see if he could learn more about what things Maria was sharing with him.

He smirked as he looked around at the beautiful graveyard, and its royal tombstones. Going on a mission, a dangerous one, to deal with dangerous Kindred. Felt like being a Right Hand again.

Of course, if Jack returned from his mission, and shit had hit the fan, Julias not being at the Invictus HQ where he could delegate tasks, would be a problem. Michael and Maria left the task to him as they pursued their own interests, and while one of them would probably step in to manage the chaos, it should be on him to do so. It was such a horrible cliché, to be uplifted to a position where you were no longer able to get your hands dirty, and miss it.

Jack would probably mention Captain Picard, and his desire to remain a captain, never get promoted. Some of that nerd info had sunk into Julias's mind, he supposed, after numerous conversations with the boy prior to his siring. But it was a valid comparison. And it was nice to be doing something himself, risking his own life, instead of risking everyone else's all the time. Part of him still thought maybe he should have sent Isabella or Hella, or Parker or Vicky, but he couldn't trust them with this, not with Azamel, not with Jacob.

He smiled as he looked at the graveyard. How many of his younger years did he spend hanging out in graveyards? Something about being surrounded by the dead was alluring, when you were a newly dead yourself. It grabbed Nosferatu harder than others though. He wondered if Jacob and Triss walked around the place, speaking about the dead, and being stereotypical vampires.

No time to daydream. Rotating his shoulders, he squatted down, almost touching the stones and grass with a knee, as he looked around for life. He needed something with eyes and ears, something to guide him, something that would have watched others of the graveyard. He needed a rat.

Sure enough, a rat exposed itself. It took a few minutes, but eventually one of the brown rats at home in the city climbed onto a tombstone, where it munched on a bit of nut. The rats in Dolareido were borderline fearless, and smart. Jack seemed partial to his crows, but Julias felt rats were the stronger choice. More limited with their inability to fly, but a rat could sneak into a house, into a facility, into anything, where a crow was lucky to not get noticed just perching nearby.

He reached into his core, found his beast, and brought it to the surface, wrapped in vitae to keep it under his control. "Have you seen a man, perhaps with two women? He'd likely have a bandage wrapped around his eyes, older guy. One of the women would have many teeth." The beast translated the words for him, turning them into images, with enough sound and scent embedded for the rat to make sense of them.

The rat nodded.

“Good. Do they have a habit of going somewhere?” Again, the rat nodded. “Take me there.”

Dropping in on Jacob unannounced was a dangerous game. Everything with Jacob was a dangerous game. But after dealing with the man for a century, Julias felt comfortable dealing with his insanity. Treat Jacob like an asshole about the small things, but with respect about the big things, and he'd most likely play ball. It didn't work every time, but often.

The rat guided Julias to one of the mausoleums higher up the gentle slope of the graveyard. Julias took a deep, slow breath, the old reflex returned from seeing Jack do it. The angels on the small stairway were imposing, and they'd make any vampire uncomfortable walking among them. Did the werewolves feel that way? Probably not. Maybe they felt the same when walking in areas that had suffered a massive loss of life? And monsters, true ones like Azamel, were there places or things in the world they preferred to avoid?

He wished he knew. Azamel's declining health was both a good and bad thing; dying people were often desperate, and did risky things. If he had some way to stop her beyond the explosives, control her, keep her under his thumb, he'd feel more comfortable about that arrangement. But then again, like Jack said, the Invictus weren't treating her with the same respect as the Uratha. Maybe it was time to stop thinking about her as the enemy, especially with her sending Fiona and Athalia to help Jack rescue Jessie, Eric, and Clara.

She shared information about Jacob, too, without requiring it. There were too many reasons to trust her, to the point Julias was suspicious of ulterior motives.

The rat guided him into the mausoleum, along the floor, and onto the back wall, where several coffins sat. It climbed up, and sat upon one of them.

Julias raised a brow. “In the coffin?”

The rat nodded.

Sighing, Julias pushed it open, and made the active effort to not breathe. He didn’t need to, and he didn’t want to smell the dead. He doubted the coffin would have any sort of serious smell, considering the corpse inside was over a century old, but still.

He pulled out his phone, shined the light, and found ... a piece of paper with a note written on it.

‘Get out of my cemetery, asshole.’

Julias facepalmed, and laughed. He got played. Jacob, you asshole.

His phone dinged, and he checked his texts.

~Yo Superman, just got your text. Looking to talk to Jacob? We’re at Three Kings Cemetery.~

~So am I.~

“Oh, so you are!” Laughing, Triss waved to him from outside the mausoleum. There was blood on her body, a lot of it, soaking through her black shirt and jeans.

Jennifer too. The woman was wearing something dressier, looser pants with a looser sweater of black, but she too had blood on her skin. Dried blood.

Jacob stood behind the two of them, jackass smile on his face, and eyeless gaze staring at Julias through his bandage.

“I wanted to speak with you, Jacob,” he said, stepping down from the mausoleum.

“Leave a message next time, Invictus.” While the two women were dressed normally, albeit soaked in blood, Jacob was in robes, heavy, dark, stained, and tattered. The sort of robes one would expect to find an occultist wearing while sacrificing virgins to dark gods, and eating their organs too.

“It can’t wait. I need your help.”

The old man laughed, the creepy kind, half quiet, half wheezing, chuckling while drawing in breath. The sort of a chuckle a ghost would make.

“Do tell.”

Chapter 71

~~Natasha~~

It wasn't the first time Tash had been close to an explosion. Working for the Invictus, they had all sorts of toys for dealing with the Carthians. They weren't allowed to kill other vampires, lest they trigger a war, but sometimes blowing up a car, or a cellar, or even a whole building, was required to send a message. She was familiar with the kinetic punch, the wave of force that hits the body, and then the following wave. It was nothing like in the movies, where you could just hide behind a heavy object, and be fine. Energy didn't work like that. Pressurized energy moving outward at a few miles a second hit everything near it, and the only defense against that was distance.

They had all been within ten feet of the door when it had blown apart. Considering how big the door was, the kinetic force that had hit them was strong enough to damage organs, let alone impact damage from their bodies slamming into the walls and floor.

The strange thoughts that go through the mind when coming to your senses from what might as well have been a thousand simultaneous punches to her body. She could see the ceiling, and a giant floating skeleton thing, something with wings and no lower body. Oh, right, Athalia, and she was turning into black mist.

Athalia. Nightmare. Rescue mission. The world and its realities came crashing down on her mind like an ice bath, and she struggled to lift her head enough to look around. The explosion had slammed her into the wall, and gravity had brought her into the floor on her back. One of her legs was underneath her, backward.

Familiar pain ignited inside her, in an unfamiliar package. Reflex told her to flex her muscle, her leg, try and work it, but it was broken or dislocated, and the effort turned pain into scorching agony. Weapon, weapon, she needed a weapon. Door, obstacle, she needed something, do something. She squeezed her left hand; pistol there. She squeezed her right; sword there. She couldn't hear anything, only ringing. There were bits of wood everywhere, and one very large one on top of her.

Bits of the wood beam covering her body were breaking off, like small explosions, and she felt the impact of each random, shattering thud. Pop. Pop pop. Bullets? Bullets. They were shooting at her.

She looked beside her, at one of the doors that lined the hallway. It was blown open, broken in half, two parts still standing with their hinges. It wasn't the floor that had stopped her from moving further back, it was the door frame of the side door. Her head was propped up against it slightly, enough that she could see the remains of the main door too. Giant slabs of wood, shattered and ruined, still remained on its hinges. The door itself had been a foot thick; the explosives used to shatter it would have been very powerful.

The hunters had predicted their intrusion, and had brought the tools needed to deal with some of the most powerful creatures Dolareido had to offer. Jack and his group had gotten cocky, very cocky, and now they were a prostrated mess.

No time to complain; and Jack would beat himself up enough for it anyway, no need to throw wood on that fire. First things first, she had to move herself out of the door frame, and into the room. A quick glance, and use of her auspex — forever an oddity in her ability to see in near pitch black — showed another empty dark room, with some wooden tables and chairs.

Grinding her teeth together, she forced down the pain, and dragged herself into the room. She twisted herself, and screamed in her mind where no one could hear, as her leg twisted underneath her. But, with the huge board sitting on her body, she had to get out from under it to get to safety, but leave it there until she was in the room. It was the only thing keeping the hunters from obliterating her in a rain of lead.

It made it easier to scream, so she kept screaming, in her mind. The pop pops were getting louder and louder as her hearing returned, and she matched her inner screaming to them, until it was all a blur of noise in her head.

The crunch of bone grinding on bone, the shards of broken limb cutting into meat and tissue, and crushing against each other, was agony. She ignored it. She forced her little body further, and further into the room, and as her leg twisted out from underneath her, she clenched her teeth down until she felt her jaw threaten to break, too. Bullets crashed into the wood, and others slammed into the stone of the door frame, inches from her head, each random impact a sharp spur in her side, demanding she keep moving.

The board slid off of her hip, and onto the foot of her bad leg, as she got herself into the room. No time to think, no time to lament the pain, no time to do anything, except put her weapons down, and yank. She couldn't help but scream out loud this time, and the sound of her voice echoing against the stone drew a silence from the unending barrage of bullets. Free at last. She grabbed her leg by the thigh, and twisted it back into a moderately normal rotation. Crunch.

Her next scream was for everyone to hear.

Panting, almost crying, she stared down at her leg. It was aligned enough for her body to begin healing it on its own. With shaking hands, she picked up her pistol and sword, and pushed herself out of the beam of light cutting into the room. She checked herself for bullet wounds as she moved; none she could see. If not for being a corpse, she'd probably have a concussion, and ruptured organs from that explosion. Being pre-dead had many advantages, and she forced herself to appreciate that, as the burning pain of the ruined leg throbbed up into her body and mind.

She put her back to the wall of the door frame, further from the hunters. She wanted to be able to poke her head out and see, and maybe shoot, and until her leg was working again, she'd have to rely on her pistol over her sword. From here, she might be able to take some shots, and stop hunters from approaching. Maybe.

With a moment to gather her senses, she poked her head around the door frame enough to see into the hallway, and toward the shattered door. Where were the others? They must have got knocked back further than her, since she hit one of the side door frames.

Wait. She looked across the hall at the other door, opposite of her. Damien? And Noah. She sighed relief, and managed a small nod to them. They returned it from their side, both of them sticking their heads out from the door frame only enough for her to see them. Damien was still armed, too. Good. Noah was transformed; she surprised herself, being able to recognize that he wasn't Art or Matt. Both had been shot, Damien a few times, and Noah half a dozen. Some of the wounds looked like they were healing, but some weren't, leaking blood continuously. Silver?

Groans in the hallway, feminine sounds. Athalia? No, her skeleton form didn't sound like that. And her skeleton form had vanished, poofed, into black mist that faded. Had to be Fiona. Oh no.

Natasha cursed under her breath, and tightened her back to the wall, head poking out only enough to see Damien and Noah. Oh no no no, not Fiona. If it was anyone else, it'd be easier to accept; they were all older and familiar with battles. But Fiona or Jack? They were kids.

She shook her head hard. Stop thinking that way!

“Surprised you came, Jack.”

Tash blinked, and leaned around the door frame a little more, to see one of the hunters behind the ring of fire circling the remains of the large, destroyed door. A woman, dark skin, and ... and a glass eye? It was hard to see through the flickering flames in the distance, but the eye caught the fire and gave a slight, amber reflection.

“Angela,” Jack said from somewhere further down the hall. Thank god he was alive.

“Stick your head out again, please. I missed.”

This Angela woman truly was confident, and from the way she spoke, she would grate on anyone who had a kind soul. Reeked of bully, bully with a gun. A psychopath.

The two threw some barbs at each other, but it was Damien Tash found her focus on. He was inching out from the door frame he was in. Not out, not completely, but he looked like he was getting ready to run. Bad idea, bad idea! A hunter stepped over the flame and entered the hallway, and Tash unloaded a bullet at him. But the hunter was fast, paying attention, and threw himself back beyond the hall the moment Tash moved.

She couldn't let the hunters come into the hall until they recovered, if they recovered. The explosion had been devastating, not to mention at least two of her companions were shot.

Damien leaned forward, weight on the balls of his feet, sword and pistol at the ready. Uh oh. Tash shook her head, and Damien nodded toward the hallway, further up. She couldn't see from where she was sitting, her sitting on the wrong side of the door frame to look down the hall that direction without getting her head blown off, but some more groans made it obvious what he was aiming for. Fiona.

Now was not the time to grow a heart, Damien! Was Art and Matt alive? Or Jessy? She didn't know, and she couldn't think about that right now. She had to focus, and so did Damien. She shook her head at him, and pointed toward the destroyed, giant gate the hunters stood outside of. They were just waiting for someone to poke their head out, so they could blow it off!

More groans, from further up the hallway. Fiona, please, don't die. Tash grit her teeth as she forced her eyes onto what sliver of the big door she could see, and again took another shot as a hunter crept up to the fire. She missed, flame blocking her view, but she nearly hit them, enough to scare them back into hiding.

Damien got into a sprint start position.

Don't! You're going to get shot!

He looked her in the eyes, and smiled at her. Him. Smiling. She wasn't sure she'd ever seen that smile on him, not that sort of smile, a hopeless fool's smile.

And then he was running. The man had already been shot, several times, gaping holes in his body leaving small bits of ash behind. And as he exposed himself, a hail of gunfire was only going to add to it. He was going to get shot, again.

---

---

~~Eric~~

Jessy had managed to create chaos. Clara amplified it. Now Eric was going to take advantage.

How cocky were these fuckers to think they could hold them in control, and rely on this monster Sándor to do all the heavy lifting. There had to be more going on, because everything about the situation and its sudden upheaval reeked of predictable cliché. How could they have thought this monster would be able to handle them? Either the man thought little of Eric, Clara, and Jessy, or he thought highly of Sándor. He couldn't have been expecting Angela and her group to cover him, since he sent them to deal with the intruders.

Maybe Jeremiah didn't expect the intruders to arrive so quickly? Eric had only been in the dream for what he guessed was an hour. If the Invictus were launching a rescue mission for Jessy, or Avery was launching one for Clara, it was record speed. It was also ballsy and reckless. He'd have to thank whoever it was, because it gave him the window he needed, to throw himself at four hunters instead of nearly two dozen.

Three hunters. The one with the old woman Elen was still helping her, with whatever. Better for him.

His roar caught Jeremiah by surprise, but the old bastard dodged nonetheless, rolling to the side and firing at him. But Eric's new body had no issues with speed despite his weight. His talons dug into the stones beneath him, weight driving them into the rock. It felt natural, to tear the earth beneath his colossal weight, not natural for a wolf, but natural for a werewolf. Traction let him pour his strength into his body, let him summon speed that defied his size, let him move under Jeremiah's bullets and close in on the three hunters. Payback.

The three hunters brought up their pistols, eyes looking up at him, wide, startled, scared. But despite the fear, they opened fire, and Eric roared fury as several of their bullets hit him. Silver. He knew it the moment it cut into his muscle. Acid, burning, melting, his bane in a stupid fucking hunk of metal shot out from a peashooter. It wasn't pure silver, and from the way it felt in his flesh, he knew only a small part of it was silver at all, but it was enough. His flesh wouldn't heal fast like it should have, like he instinctively knew it should have, but it wasn't enough to stop him from slamming into the three.

They went flying. His weight was far more than their simple human bodies could handle, and smashing the back of one of his hands into one of the hunters sent them rolling through the air. The next, he swiped for, but the hunter fell back, collapsing onto their ass to avoid the swipe, and rolling to the side to avoid his incoming step. The next hunter tried to line up another shot, but he reached out, grabbed her pistol, and squeezed. She managed to let go of the pistol in time to avoid losing her hands, as he crushed the metal in his grip.

The feel of metal, bending, warping, breaking in his palm. Strength so massive and skin so tough, the metal broke, destroyed in his hand, bent into a worthless shape. What a thrill!

There was something so fucking satisfying about giving into the carnage, and letting his base instincts dominate. He looked at his enormous hand, at the darkness of his gray fur, at the massive claws. He looked at his fingers, and how the strength in them, the tendons along the bones, how easy it was to tap into them and bear down on something to break it. It was like crushing an egg in the palm. Popping a human skull would be like crushing a grape.

The sizzle of silver burning in his wounds snapped his mind back to present circumstance. A second pause was enough for the hunter who rolled out of the way to bring their pistol back up, only to have to roll out of the way again as Eric pounced at him. Not a cat pounce, or even a dog pounce, but a monster's pounce, a titan's pounce. The size of his limbs versus the weight they had to carry, and the momentum against gravity, made the motion feel more like he was a rhinoceros charging into prey. Even missing, his size was enough to cause his leg to hit against the hunter, and knock them over like he'd smashed them with a giant hammer.

These bastards were good at avoiding. They'd had practice against other monsters, had probably hunted and killed other beasts like him. For a brief moment, images and memories ran through his mind, of old movies he'd seen, new ones too, depicting werewolves as ferocious monsters that needed to be killed. The idea cut through his animal mind, into the fury and rage, reminded him that he was the villain according to these humans, and he was a human only weeks ago.

The rage crashed against his insides, stirring them into rapids of adrenaline and hunger. He was not the villain. There were no villains in this maelstrom of carnage, no heroes, no good guys or bad guys. There were predators, and there was prey. These humans had threatened him with torture and death, and he was going to devour them.

He glanced over his shoulder. The leader, Jeremiah, he needed to die. Eric wanted to turn and attack him, shred him, tear open his guts and stomach, rip him apart, eat him. Eat him. Eat him. But he couldn't, the other prey was in front of him, and they had teeth and claws of their own. Clara? No, she was still fighting the gargoyle monster, using her weight to try and wrestle it, while Jessy remained behind the creature, stabbing and clawing, roaring and screaming.

Jessy. She was far more similar to beasts like him than he'd thought. Even now, she had her claws and teeth on the monster's body, was tearing into his shoulder, and roaring strange sounds a normal human throat couldn't make. She was ... enticing.

The smell of blood began to fill the room, his nose catching it, and he breathed it in deep. The rush of it sent life and heat through his veins, warming him, demanding he roar; he did. Jeremiah looked at him, glared at him, and raised his pistol at him. Pistol. Metal pipe that shot small stones. But these stones were silver, and burned with the wrath of his bane.

Jeremiah turned the pistol on Clara, and started firing.

“No!” He threw himself at Jeremiah, but for all his speed, it was too slow. This bastard was far faster than an old man should have been, and he unloaded six bullets at his fellow wolf. Three slammed into the gargoyle monster, sinking through the leathery skin of Jeremiah’s comrade, but three more hit Clara, and the result was far more visceral.

She howled, a layer of pain in her roar as she fell to a knee, before turning around to look at Jeremiah. Three little sprays of red came out of her back, before turning into small blood streams leaking out of her. The fur blocked seeing the specifics of the wound, but Eric knew it’d be burning, veined, like someone poured acid into her flesh.

Eric slammed a hand down against Jeremiah’s arm, hard enough to send the pistol out of his hand, but Jeremiah didn’t hesitate to retaliate. The knife came up, and massive as it was, Eric couldn’t move his huge arm out of the way. Much as he still had his instincts as a trained fighter, his new body was huge, and wasn’t too concerned with dodging. Silver, sharp and surreal, cut into him and sent pain up through the flesh. It wasn’t like with the monster crushing him, blunt force trauma and pain. The special metal burned him like fire burned vampires, reduced his skin to a ruined, bleeding mess.

He ignored the pain. It was easy. Clara had called to him, her howls and roars woke him up, and the beast inside answered the called. Pain? Meaningless. There was only the hunt, the fight, the kill. There was only his prey, and his pack. This stranger wolf was a friend for now, enemy of his enemy, and his mate, the undead, was now fighting for her life against a monster of insane proportions. He had to join them, had to help, had to end the threat, save his mate, defend his territory.

The beast in him didn't know how to plan. He was vaguely aware of it, of a haze, of something blocking his thinking; like being drunk, brain buzzed on a high of adrenaline and blood lust. Should he worry about the giant gargoyle, the man with the tattoos and knife, or the trio of hunters recovering from his attack? Should he worry about the hunter who took the old woman away? Should he worry about the tattooed man's pack member with the strange eye? All those questions faded away, as his instincts took over.

Cut off the head of the snake, and the body dies.

He dove for Jeremiah, ignoring the huge blade of silver pointed at him. The tattooed man was wise, white hair announcing his age, and scars announcing his experience. Old prey was weak, but old prey was smart, and this old prey kept the blade up and pointed at Eric as the werewolf threw his weight at him.

As cold metal slid into his chest, Eric roared into the man's face. The blade went low, the old human's height too low to be able to hit Eric in the heart. Eric felt it in his breath though, and as he roared over man, a splatter of the werewolf's blood washed over Jeremiah's face. Ignoring the pain, Eric drove his hands down against the human's shoulders, and with his weight, pushed him onto the ground, and pinned him.

The room shook as an explosion happened. Eric looked down the dark, enormous chamber, toward the path he originally came from. The explosion was loud, and a second later, Eric felt his body shudder from the force as it slammed into everyone and everything. Too far to hurt them, but enough to stun everyone.

No, it didn't stun Jeremiah. The human underneath him, glaring at him like he was nothing more than a rabid dog, pulled down on the silver knife jammed into Eric's chest. Eric roared, more blood erupting over his tongue and onto the man beneath him. But the roar was weak, blood filling his lungs, his breath, and robbing his energy with each moment. He had to get the knife out of him. Ignore the explosion, ignore everything else, just deal with the dangerous prey in your clutches right now.

The knife was in his side under one of his pectorals, and try as Eric might, the arm closer to the wound did not want to respond correctly. Something was cut, torn, preventing the closer shoulder from rotating on the angle he wanted. But the rest of the arm worked, and he sank his claws into the prey's shoulder, earning a satisfying roar of pain from his meal. His other hand reached for the man's head, but the prey pushed against the silver knife, sawing through muscle and bone, and Eric had to grab the assaulting wrist instead.

At a certain point, pain took on a new voice, and it shrieked in his head, a wall of ice to block his way. He backed off, jumping back from Jeremiah, and held the massive gash in his chest. The flesh within tried to heal, tried to snap back into place, tried to stop the blood, but it didn't. It was nothing like that time the short man had stabbed him with his metal claw, this time his body couldn't manage. The silver cut through more than his flesh, it cut through the fury, the beast, the thrill and rush, it cut through his being.

Eric fell to a knee, hand still on the gash in his chest, blood gushing up and over his fingers. With a few seconds to breath into his bloody lungs, the blood slowed down. Even if it was silver, it wasn't pure; how Eric knew that, he didn't know, but something in him knew the knife could have done more damage to him if it was more silver, though it would have been too soft. Instead, the bastard found a balance between hardness, and wolf's bane. Lucky for Eric, it was enough that he could feel his body heal the wound enough to keep him from bleeding to death in minutes. Unlucky for him, that it almost could.

Footsteps behind him. He tried to turn, but the cut muscle in his chest roared in agony, stopping him, and six arms grabbed onto him. It wasn't a lot of weight, not even six hundred pounds, but with the hole in his chest and cut on his arm, each from silver, it was more than his body wanted to handle. He tried to reach back and grab one of the hunters, but the hunter grabbed his arm instead, while the one behind him wrapped him in a headlock. The remaining hunter grabbed his other arm, and a new set of footsteps announced the returning fourth hunter, who came up behind him, and threw themselves onto his back as well. He roared, twisting and turning, but his energy was gone, leaking out onto the stone floor beneath him as blood.

With a groan of his own, the old man stood back up, and rubbed his shoulder. He too was bleeding, but Eric had had the opportunity to do a lot more than give him a minor shoulder wound. Had it, and lost it.

“We need you alive, Eric Tanverson. Elen still has a lot of information to pull out of you. Sándor!” Like barking orders to soldiers, Jeremiah turned with a snap toward his monster.

The giant beast was still struggling with Jessy, but in the chaos, the monster had trapped Clara underneath its giant foot. Massive as the creature was, its foot and enormous talons were large enough to pin Clara on her back, talons stabbing into her shoulders. Blood pooled around her waist, the silver bullets not healing, same as Eric's wounds. She snarled, twisted, barked and roared, but wounded as she was, the four-armed, four-winged demon was large and heavy enough to keep her down.

The monster fell forward, keeping its one foot on Clara, and earning a shriek of pain from her as he forced more of his weight on her. Four hands fell to the stone, catching the beast's weight as he came to a knee, and he used the momentum to launch Jessy forward from his back. Her claws were sunk deep into its body, and she kept one hand within the beast's flesh, but the weight and inertia was enough to spin her, and turn her upside down, legs on the beast's head. It was enough for Sándor to snap his hand up, and grab her.

For a moment, Eric expected Jessy's deformed body and array of spikes and horns to penetrate the beast's hand again. But the demon kept his grip loose, and threw Jessy down at the floor with all his might. The sickening crunch of bone filled the room as the vampire bounced against the stone, and bits of her bone spikes flew outward from her, shattering and breaking from the impact. More than just the bone spikes, but her bones as well. Arms twisted and crunched, legs snapped and bent, and joints dislocated, as the vampire bounced twice against the floor, before going still.

Her transformation began to fade. The extra muscle vanished. The spikes, what remained of them, pulled back into her limbs and under her skin, and the deformation of her form disappeared. A few seconds later, all that remained was Jessy, clothes tattered, body broken, arms and legs twisted around and bending in places they shouldn't have.

“Ok!” Jeremiah said, clapping his hands together one. “You gave Sándor quite the fight there, vampire. Impressive.” Laughing, the old bastard put his metal claw away, and pulled out ... metal rings. Eric struggled, dug through his mind, and found the word buried underneath rage and scents and blood and hunger. Handcuffs.

“Fuck ... you, you fuckin—aaaaarg!” Jessy's voice broke into screams as Jeremiah rolled her onto her stomach, and yanked on her arms as he drove the heel of his boot into her spine. He snapped each wrist into the cuffs, and let go of her hands. They fell onto her ass, trapped behind her. One of her arms was snapped at the elbow, the other at the forearm, shoulder dislocated as well, and until she healed, she wouldn't be able to use the arms anyway.

“You ... you fucker,” she said. “You put these on—”

“On Jack, yes. Tenacious boy, though. I didn’t expect the grandchilde of Viktor to be as resistant as he was. A mistake on my part. If I had known, well, I would have brought him back into Sándor’s nightmare instead.” Laughing again, he squatted down in front of Jessy’s face, and grinned at her as she raised her head to glare at him. “Now, really, stop struggling. I want Azamel’s head, not yours.”

“You’ll fucking kill us once you know what you want to know.”

“Probably, but not necessarily. Dolareido’s a nice place compared to many; not many paranormals killing people. If you vamps play ball, some of you will get to live.”

“Some.” Snarling at him, she twisted and squirmed, earning more screams from herself. It was turning Eric’s stomach, watching her limbs bend and twist in ways they shouldn’t have been able to.

“Angela warned me the vamps here were stubborn. I should have listened to her.” Sighing, the man walked over to Clara, and squatted down over her. She was pinned on her back, still transformed and massive compared to Jeremiah, but small compared to the gargantuan demon towering over her. Helpless. “And you, you’re going to tell me more about your pack. Werewolves weren’t on my radar when I first came here, and when I learned you were here, I was content to ignore you. But now you’ve made yourself a problem.”

“Fuck you,” Clara said, gnashing her teeth together.

“I’ve killed several werewolves in my time, woman.” Jeremiah drew his knife, and set the silver blade to the pinned woman’s furry neck. “But I’ve never had the opportunity to torture one. Your healing ability is immense, and—”

A howling shriek cut through the room, the chamber, and echoed against the enormous walls that surrounded them. Like a ghost choir, the inhuman screaming continued, long, until everyone was looking for the source of the deathly sound.

Jeremiah stood up, and turned to face the distance where Angela had taken her crew. “Athalia.”

---

---

~~Damien~~

Well, this was going far worse than he had anticipated, and he had anticipated it going poorly. Hindsight was twenty twenty, and a bastard. Jack had said it was likely a trap, but they were arrogant in their abilities. They were all accomplished, powerful paranormals, and more than capable of killing multiple hunters at once; or they should have been. One mistake put them all on the defensive, and as Damien looked down at his body, he sighed. Holes. Many holes. But he was still conscious, a step up from his encounter with the Azlu creature.

He looked around the room. Empty, and dark, save for the light cutting across the floor from the open door, gentle, flickering fire light. With his back to the table leg behind him, he looked down at his hands. Sword and pistol, good. His legs were spread, and the holes in his gut and chest struggled to close themselves. He was no Ventrue or Gangrel. Healing wounds like this would take time. Better than the guaranteed death a kine would suffer, but if he couldn't defend himself, it was the same thing.

He looked at the spider monster beside him. Fiona. Despite the danger, despite the haphazard plan, he'd managed to save her. Wounds covered her limbs, terrible wounds that bled dark red, but she was breathing.

He reached out for her, and gently pulled her onto her side, facing him; didn't want her choking on her own blood. Pain ran through his body, reminding him that some metal was now lodged in his withered organs and bones. He'd survive. Would Fiona? Her eyes were—she had no eyes; made it hard to read her emotions. But from the shallow panting and small shivers, he could tell she was in a lot of pain.

“D ... Damien?” she said.

“Yeah?”

“You ... you've been shot.”

How could she see him without eyes? But then, how did Jacob? Not the time to think about that.

“So did you.”

She laughed, and a splatter of blood rained onto her lips. There was only one bullet wound on her stomach, but it must have hit something important. “I ... I ... could use ... a moment ... to heal.”

“Can you heal from this?” He forced himself to lean in toward her, and set one hand on her crown of horns. They were hard like metal, but the skin of her shoulder, despite its black, metal-like tint, was soft.

“Are you ... worried about me?”

“What? Of course I'm worried about you.”

“Just ... you've been ... ignoring me lately, and—” Another cough covered her small lips in blood, and Damien winced as he watched the dark red leak down over her cheek.

If he was a stereotype, so was she, he supposed. He was too blind to notice signals, and she was finding some where there were none.

Jack waved at him from his side of the large hall, and motioned for him to stay put. Not much chance of that changing at the moment. Sighing at his own stupidity, Damien reached down across his chest, and touched the bullet holes. Several of them had punctured clear through his body; a good thing if you were a human, to get the metal out of the body, but not so good when a vampire, and the metal was never the issue. Three holes along his stomach, and from the shape, he knew he'd actually been shot in the back. Each attempt to twist his body caused his muscles to tear, only for his vitae to work to repair them.

He was an idiot. If he'd stayed in the room he'd managed to drag himself into after the explosion, maybe a better situation would have presented itself. But no, he got emotional, lost his head, and did something impulsive.

Sighing again, he looked at the beautiful monster in front of him. He didn't want her hurt, and that led to a really, really stupid, impulsive decision. He wasn't used to that feeling. Didn't know it, didn't recognize it, didn't know what to do with it. Now he felt like a fool, like the time Jack had come out of hiding to save Antoinette from his sword. But, like then, the fool boy had managed to save the girl. Hopefully Damien's stupidity had managed to save the girl, too.

"I wasn't ignoring you," he managed to say at last. He forced his eyes up from her shivering body, to the hallway and door, to Jack, Arturo, and Matthew. The three of them were talking with each other, whispering, voice lost to the sound of flames and occasional gunfire. Noah and Natasha were safe for the moment, but where was Athalia? He didn't know. Whatever was happening, the hunters had the opportunity to storm in and finish the job. They wouldn't be safe much longer.

She lifted her head, a struggle for her, and pointed face toward him. “Yes you were, you ... you didn’t—”

“You want to go on a date?”

“ ... w ... what?”

“You want to go on a date, when this is over?” Ok, yeah, this was good. This was progress, character development, a step toward developing some sort of social life and not getting in his own way. A step toward abandoning Lucas’s brainwashing.

Unless she said no.

She started to laugh, but pain put an end to that quickly. With a small whine and whimper, she set her crown of horns against the floor again, and smiled at him. “Yes.”

He managed a smile back. A date after all this was over sounded good, because it meant this would end, and they’d survive. She believed it. He, on the other hand, was far too pessimistic to assume they were going to get out of here alive. Better if she did, though.

He forced his vitae to do its work, to close the bullet wounds enough so he wouldn’t leak everywhere. It took time, time they didn’t have, and Damien kept looking to Jack and the doorway as he did his best to speed up his healing. But he was no Ventrue, no Gangrel, healing would take time. Time, and blood.

He looked down at his waist. Three more bullets had caught him on one of his rebounds against the hallway wall, and got him in the side, by the hip. He could feel bullets lodged into the large bone of his pelvis, and the only reason the bones hadn’t shattered was his vitae forcing it to stay together. Even now, he could feel the almost self-aware, dark, crimson liquid in his body, thick, strong, forcing the bone shards together hard enough to function. With enough time, his body would force out the bullets, but he didn’t know how long it'd take. As much as he'd suffered many scrapes in his time hiding in Dolareido, never anything like this, Azlu spider monster aside. And the time Tash shot him. What fond memories.

He gritted his teeth, and forced his body into action. Every moment drained him, emptied him of vitae, of energy, as his body rebuilt itself. No time. If he couldn't get his body working, they were dead, and he couldn't have that. But he didn't have time.

Fiona pressed her claws onto the floor, and pushed herself up enough to have both palms against the stones beneath them.

“You should hold still until—”

“We have to ... have to do something. Or we're dead.” Groaning, shaking, she lifted some of her spider legs from her back, and hung them over her head in front of her. Each spider leg shined a gentle black, like metal, and each came to a sharp point, like a rapier. But with them so close now, he could see that on the tip, at an angle along the sharp point, were tiny holes. As she pressed the four tips together, white liquid oozed from the holes, as thin as thread, becoming solid the moment they struck the air.

She was weaving web.

“What are—”

“I ... am going ... to patch us up.” Despite her shivering, her spider legs worked quick, her more human-ish hands still on the stone floor while her long blades did their magic. “I'm not going ... to just wait ... to die ... After this, I'm going ... to go on a date ... maybe somewhere nice. And then we're ... going to go hunting, for food, for both of us. And ... and then, we're ... we're going ... to date more.”

He coughed, caught between a laugh and the scorching pain of muscles clenching with the involuntary action. “We are?”

“Yes, b-because ... because I ... I am ... I deserve to live, and ... and I refuse ... to not...” Her words trailed off as she focused, the web she weaved tight and thick, becoming a large bandage.

It was strange to see, and hear such a deadly monster waver with her words. Either from blood loss or from nervousness, the beautiful creature’s voice lost its usual conviction, to the point Damien almost felt bad for her. Fiona always had conviction, reaching almost juvenile absurdity. And Vrall was Fiona, sort of. Considering her proactive, social nature, he had no choice but to assume it was blood loss. It was Vrall’s voice, not the Scot’s, and to hear the mighty creature speak like that, scared him.

As the bandage took form, she raised an arm, and the spider legs brought the bandage to her bicep. It was like watching a real spider wrap a fly in its web, except it was a quartet of silk strands spooling out and around her arm. The white material immediately turned dark red, soaking in her blood, but she wrapped and wrapped, and tightened the weave as she built upon it. It was a very thick, durable bandage. She moved onto her legs, the human-ish ones, and begin wrapping the holes that had punched through her. One had not gone clear through, but better to leave the metal in there and wrap it for now, he supposed.

“I’ll ... get you after,” she said.

He motioned to his body, and the holes that were mostly sealed. “I’m at no risk of bleeding to death. My insides are shredded, though.”

“Vampires are durable.” The creature smiled at him as she moved on to her calf, wrapping it faster than the other parts, her speed picking up as she got used to the motion. “Can you move?”

He tried to sit forward, but the motion sent scalding agony into his stomach. If he was alive, he’d have vomited with pain. Wincing, he leaned back, and forced one eye to stay open so he could watch the door. “I can, but I need a few minutes to make it ... not tear my insides ... apart.”

Nodding, the spider woman worked quickly, wrapping her various wounds tight, including the hole in her stomach. That was a problem. For a vampire, the organs were pointless, and the muscles and bones only served as a frame for the vitae to enact its power. He needed his body intact, but it wasn't going to die on him. At worst, he'd run out of vitae, and go into torpor until someone fed him. Unlikely to happen in the current circumstance; they'd just cut off his head while he slept.

Fiona, on the other hand, was different. He didn't know how though. Were her organs necessary, did she need her blood, how much of her horror was like a biological creature?

He was running questions through his mind to avoid dealing with present circumstance. She was in worse condition than he was, and unlike him, she was going to get worse.

“You ... like to think a lot, don't you?”

He blinked, and shook his head. His gaze was still on the doorway, but he hadn't noticed Fiona had started dragging herself over to sit beside him. Her long spider legs pressed to the stones, and forced her along the floor, leaving a trail of blood behind her.

“It keeps me alive.” Heal faster. Heal faster. He needed to get his body working, now. Every time he looked at Fiona, he winced at the sight of her wounds and blood-soaked bandages. She was a monster, and a powerful one; he couldn't imagine a few bullet holes and a bullet in her gut would kill her. He hoped not. He really hoped not.

“Stuck in your head a lot?” Her voice was becoming less and less like Vrall. Not Fiona, but, not the same rigid and formal Vrall, the scary monster creature he'd once ran into in a jungle beneath the city. It was nice.

He didn't answer her question. Eventually she sat beside him, leaning against his shoulder. It was a struggle for her, moving a total of two feet, and he almost told her to go hide in the shadow instead. They weren't directly in the beam of light from the door anymore, but next to it, and not exactly hidden.

"... think you can open a door and get us out of here?" he said. "Back to your lair?"

"No ... not like this."

"Then anything we can do to get me back on my feet faster, the better. Think you can patch me up?"

"I think so."

Nodding, he pushed himself away from the table, and got onto his knees in front of her, butt against his heels behind him, weight on his toes. The enormous blades came for him, and he closed his eyes for a moment, reflex warning him they might stab him. They had before, once, when he first met her. Just think of them as sewing needles, only sewing needles, not ancient living swords that have killed likely hundreds of people in previous lives.

Fiona smiled at him as she used all eight of the pointed swords, the tiny holes almost invisible along their sharp angles. The small droplets of white emerged, and as some of her blades poked at his clothes to slide them up, exposing his chest, stomach, and holes there in, she began to weave her bandages. He wasn't sure if her smile was because she was feeling better, or she was feeling worse, and was facing death like she faced all her worries: with giggles. But it was a nice change of pace from the cold pit of his own thoughts, he had to admit.

Had to admit a lot of stuff when around her, lately.

~~Jack~~

“Ok, they’re alive,” Jack said, grinding his teeth into dust as he looked through the door across the hall. He never expected Damien to be so rash, though. Maybe the Mekhet thought his extreme speed would be enough to rescue Fiona without him sustaining more damage; dumbass. Ugh, Jack slapped himself in the forehead. He thought he could save Antoinette from Damien, back in the day, so he couldn’t fault for the man for being impulsive like him.

Except now the man had been shot, several times, on top of who knows how much damage from the initial assault. Jack couldn’t rely on Damien anymore, injured like he was. Maybe he’d be able to save Fiona from bleeding out, though. The two of them had moved out of the light beam from the doorway, so he couldn’t see them very well; hopefully they were still alive. Damien definitely would be, but whether he could still fight, still aim a pistol, still anything, was hard to discern.

Think think.

He looked to the two wolves around him. They were still healing, and from the sight of it, it was going to take hours. They feared silver the same way vampires feared fire, but the wolves would fight despite it, he knew they would. He could rely on them to fight until they were nothing but bone, until they were dead. But how to use them? They couldn’t move up, couldn’t press the attack, couldn’t do anything to break through the barrier the hunters had set up. And the clock was ticking.

“Athalia ... if you can hear me, wherever you’re hiding, we could really use your help.” He looked down and stared at the floor, as he started praying for a monster of darkness to come help him. She was the only true unknown factor, since Noah and Tash had to be in the other rooms. If they were alive or dead, he didn’t know, but they wouldn’t be able to press up either. Maybe—

A breeze moved through the hall, and stirred the flames in the grasp of the gargoyles on the wall. Jack raised his head, and stared at the flame as it danced in the cold air. The air smelled different.

The two wolves noticed it, too. They raised their noses, each wolf breathing the new air deep, and looking to each other with confusion in their eyes. A strange expression to see on giant wolf heads, eyebrows raising, eyes lifting. Stranger, was the look of shock.

Jack looked back into the hall, and froze, as darkness began to seep over the stones. Cold, quiet, the silent shadow crept up along the ceiling, the floor, the walls, and reached out with slow tendrils of obsidian fog. The distant roar of fire, the curses from Angela, the occasional gun shot, all of it became quiet, deadened, as if submerged in water, or behind a thick wall. The flowing black moved further, and the breeze that came with it attacked, slashing gusts against the gargoyle braziers, and ripping the fires from their hands until they were extinguished.

One by one, the flames went out. The encroaching darkness was cold, like ice, enough to send a painful chill down Jack's spine as the shadow engulfed the hallway. One by one, the fires died. One by one, the only sources of quality light available in the hallway of ancient stone, vanished. Jack gulped, and stared down at the shadowy movements as it trickled along the walls; far more than a simple shadow. It was like that scene from The Ten Commandments with the Angel of Death, the creeping fog that stretched out over Egypt, and killed the firstborn.

If only he had some lamb's blood.

He pulled out his phone, turned on the light, and pointed it down, but the light didn't reach far, the black fog blocking much of its power. He recognized this fog. This was Athalia's fog, the same icy shadow that surrounded him when he took those stairs down into hell, into her nightmare world.

Distant hollers of trepidation reached his ears.

“What the fuck is that?”

“What’s going on?”

“Keep the fire going!”

The voices of the hunters struggled to reach him, unable to penetrate the fog easily, but he could hear them a little. It was enough to send another chill up his spine, as he heard the fear in their voices, the panic, as the creeping death came for them.

He stuck his head out from the stone door frame, and watched more and more of the gargoyles succumb to the black. Closer, and closer to the fire and remains of the giant door, and closer to the awaiting hunters, the blackness moved. Many of the hunters pulled out flashlights, others turning on mounted lights on their rifles, and the hunter with the flamethrower applied several coats of the liquid flame around the bottleneck between them and the paranormals. Their little lights might as well have been candles against the encroaching fog, and the fire was nothing more than a small thing, a tiny thing against the endless onyx. Like building a fire in the wilderness, the light it provided only highlighted how vast the darkness around them was.

All the gargoyle braziers died, leaving Jack and his two werewolf companions in the black, except for his phone. And like the hunters, his phone was barely more than a firefly.

The darkness continued, and Jack watched as it came into contact with the fire. The roaring flames struggled, but the darkness was cold, death in mist, and it killed the flame like smothering life was the black fog’s purpose. The hunter with the flamethrower tried again, and again, voice rising into screams as they painted the area red. But with each moment, it was more and more like watching primitive torches fighting the inescapable blackness, and then eventually, nothing but tiny candles. All the new fires the flamethrower created died in moments.

And then there were only the hunters, and their flashlights, weak, and futile.

Jack raised his phone, and pointed it at Art and Matt. Both wolves looked scared, and that was not a look he expected to ever see on one of the titans.

“Matthew, Arturo, we have a window here. See if Tash and Noah are fine, but stay low, move slow, and don’t make any noise until you’ve got a stone wall between you and the hunters. I’ll go check up on Damien and Fiona.”

No idea, he had no fucking idea Athalia was capable of this. He should have, now that he thought about it. They were in a nightmare, and just because it wasn’t Athalia’s didn’t mean she didn’t have access to everything that made her a creature of darkness. A monster under the bed. With a few, slow, useless breaths, he prepared to sprint across the darkness and into Damien’s room. A glance at the two werewolves showed they were ready to move, too.

The world went red.

Jack froze again, and every nerve in his body went numb as a flash of screaming faces filled his vision. He wanted to fall back, to get away from the sudden death shrieks in his ears and the pained face of someone dying horribly away from his eyes. But he couldn’t move. The air became blood, and the wails of the murdered blazed in his face.

The world turned to darkness again, a little bit of light from his phone the only brightness to guide him. What the fuck was that?

“What the fuck was that!?”

“Guard up! I know who that is.” Angela’s voice. The other hunters must have seen that too. “Come on out, Mother!”

A shrieking howl filled the stone walls, erupting outward from the darkness and its origin, where it crept out from the hall, toward the hunters. Jack fell onto his ass, and closed his eyes, but it didn’t help. The red images came again, piercing his eyelids: dying faces, blood tears, throats being ripped open by claws. And then gone again, as silence crushed everyone. He raised his hand to his ears, but when another inhuman scream echoed through the hall, the hands did nothing. The bloody screams followed, and no matter how hard he closed his eyes, an image of death, gore, screaming and torture filled his vision.

When it passed, he forced himself out into the hall. Running wasn’t going to happen, and the hunters were too busy shining their lights around at random shadows. But after a few seconds, another shriek slammed into their souls, everyone’s, and demanded they stare at nightmares. Jack tried to ignore it, but the scream in his mind was a death cry, distinct, and all too familiar. It reminded him of the hunters he’d killed, that he’d sent rats to devour alive. It was a sound that stuck with you, scarred you, a sound you’d never forget. And if he guessed right, everyone was hearing it.

He pitied any of them who hadn’t heard that sound before. The nightmares, in bed and sleep nightmares, would ruin them for years.

He forced himself forward, on his hands and knees, and crawled across the hall. The hallucinations returned every few seconds, and lasted a second, but if he concentrated on moving, he continued to make progress. The hallucinations didn’t freeze him, only made him feel frozen, feel like he was buried in ice, or frozen earth, or at the bottom of a lake of cold corpses. Keep moving, keep moving, ignore the death cries, ignore the eyes of the dying penetrating your eyelids.

Once he reached the next door frame, he brought up his light.

“Thank god,” he said. “Damien you dumb—” He winced, and lowered his head in reflex as a dying woman’s face hit his eyes, and then was gone. “You good?”

The man had bandages wrapped around a lot of his body. Legs, arms, his chest under his shirt and jacket, white bandage that looked like Fiona’s silk dress. Except, her dress was soaked dark red, and while she was covered in bandages as well, she was a panting, trembling mess, bandages redder still.

He braced for another scarring hallucination, but none came. Biting his teeth together, he slowly looked behind him at the darkness, and raised his light. He couldn’t see the door he came from, where Art and Matt still were. Or, might have still been. Subtle movements, silhouettes, moved through the black fog, and Jack squinted to see if he could identify them. No. All he could do was hope it was them.

“I’m good,” Damien said. “Was ... were those...”

“It was Athalia.” The spider monster next to him nodded, voice ragged and quiet. “She ... she is ... a better Eshmaki than Vrall ever was. She is the terror in ... in the dark.”

A glowing recommendation from a fellow monster. Jack nodded, and braced again as another shriek echoed through the stone walls. But nothing came. The inhuman sound was more distant, like it must have been closer to the hunters. Thank fucking christ.

His dreams in torpor today were going to be borderline PTSD.

“I guess we have an addendum to the plan,” he said. “We need to get out of here ASAP, once the primary objective is met. The werewolves have been shot with silver, Fiona here is bleeding, and Damien is beat up. My wounds are minor, but we still haven’t found Tash or Noah.”

“I saw Natasha,” Damien said. “She’s alive. Injured, but not as bad as me.”

“And Noah?”

“He was with me, before I decided to help Fiona. He was shot several times as well, and at least one of those was silver. Not in good shape.”

“Damn.” Grunting, Jack forced himself back up onto his feet, and held out a hand for Damien. The Mekhet stuck his gunhand out, and Jack lifted him by the wrist. “Fiona, how does this attack from Athalia work?”

“She ... she is ... she is lost to the darkness, Jack. She knows she is supposed to attack the hunters, but ... but you may not be able to approach with her also attacking you.”

“You mean the hallucinations? I—”

“No. Not them. Her ... from the black. She might attack you, and ... and anyone who is ... is where she is. Hide. Hide until ... the darkness fades. Or at least, don’t move.”

Shit. Shit shit shit. Things weren’t going smooth. Why didn’t things ever go smooth.

“Alright. We’ll ... we’ll try and get closer, but stay out of her way,” he said.

Damien managed a shrug, but winced, sucking in his breath through his teeth. “As much as we can stay away from fog.”

“Fiona, stay here. See if you can hide more, and don’t come out until we’re back.” He felt bad, sidelining Fiona, but the monster was shot up worst than any of them, and it was plain to see a gunfight was not where Vrall was at her strongest. If they had to fight in woods, or in tight hallways or something, her webbing and blades would be invaluable. But the large, open hallways and corridors provided no cover, no way for any of them to use their abilities easily. No wonder the hunters were setting up camp in this monster’s nightmare.

Jack got down on a knee by the door frame, and peeked his head out to look down the hallway. The darkness was thick, and the light couldn’t penetrate far. It wasn’t just light though, but sounds. Distant screams echoed from the black, as if from a great distance, like someone crying for help from the depths of a canyon. But the hunters were only maybe a hundred feet away, and he could see tiny white dots in the dark, their flashlights, struggle to find the source of their torture.

“I’ll be back ... I promise,” Damien said.

“ ... bye,” Fiona said.

Jack raised a brow at the man. That was very out of character for the once-assassin. Maybe the man listened to him, and talked to Fiona? He was tempted to look back at Fiona and check her reaction, but he’d barely be able see her if he tried. Better to ask about it later.

He got down on his knees, and crawled once again, pointing his light at the floor, and making sure every motion he did was subtle. It might have been unnecessary. The hunters could barely make sense of their own surroundings, let alone resume the attack on Jack's crew. But Fiona had said something about Athalia, and not moving, so, subtle movements for now.

“Focus! She's out there, somewhere. Keep looking, get your backs together, and keep your lights up!” Angela's voice. Like the others, it was distant and submerged, but it hit with more volume. Woman was not afraid to yell, and make a stand. Something about her was unique, something that made the whole situation of her, fighting monsters and nightmares, almost seem to fit like a puzzle piece. Almost.

Jack forced himself along, taking each baby crawl step nice and slow. Closer, and closer to the next door along the hall, closer to Tash and Noah, closer to getting this group back together. If Athalia didn't kill them all.

The next door was indeed open, and he almost crawled into it, but held up his light instead. If it was him in this darkness, and some shadow poked its head in, he'd be liable to shoot said head.

“Noah? Tash?”

“J-Jack? Oh thank god. W-What's going on? Noah is across the hall.” Tash's voice. Relief washed over him. More of his group, still alive.

“I—” An ear-piercing scream sundered his skull, and he fell to his palms. For a moment it was there again, a group of faces, close enough he could see the white of their eyes as they rolled up in their unknown torture. He was too close to the next room, too close to Athalia, and her nightmare scalded his vision with the bleeding faces of the dying. When it passed, he shined his light on Tash where she was hugged to the wall by the door frame. “It's Athalia. She's—”

The door frame of stone exploded. Jack fell down onto his side, and stared up above him at the slice marks that appeared in the stone. Massive slash marks, the sort of marks a werewolf's claws might make. Bigger.

“What the fuck!” Staring at the claw mark that wasn't there a moment before, he gulped at the bits of its rock that fell around him. “Damien, did you—”

Slash marks cut across the floor, next to him. Deep marks, and he rolled away from the sound of stone tearing apart in a split second. Gulping again, he pointed his light at the deep slashes, and drove his feet against the floor to push himself away and into the room.

Fiona said don't move. Why? The massive slash marks could have come from Fiona's Vrall, but—no, they couldn't have, they were way too thick. Whatever made the marks had thick, massive claws. Athalia had thick, massive claws, on her colossal bone hands. Shit. Oh fucking shit.

“Don't move!” he said, as Damien poked his head around the door frame, on his knees as well. “Don't move, don't move a fucking muscle, don't—” Again, the screaming hit him. Hit them. Jack managed to keep his eyes open for a split second, and saw Damien and Tash both freeze. Teeth gnawing, claws tearing, knives twisting, blood splattering, screams echoing. All in his eyes, in his ears, in his head where he couldn't get it out.

And when it was gone, Tash lowered her hands from her eyes. He shined his light down at the floor between them, so they could see each other, and he offered her a small smile. He wanted to roll over, curl into a ball, surrender, and try and block out the images; it wouldn't work, though. Whatever Athalia was doing, it was not something that could be blocked out. Unavoidable. Immutable. Like a nightmare that comes back every night to haunt you. Best he could do was give his friend a small everything-will-be-fine, lying smile.

No one moved a muscle. If the red flashes wouldn't hurt them, then all they had to do was not move a single fucking muscle, and whatever was—another quartet of slashes hit the ground, somewhere between the stone floor, and the gate that exploded earlier. Jack looked in the corner of his eye, and winced at the sight of Damien. The man had crawled forward a few feet, and drew the attention of whatever was happening; the claw marks had hit the stone floor in front of him.

“Wait,” Jack said. “Just ... just wait ... Hold still. Wait until ... I don't know, until these flashes are gone.” If that would ever happen. The hunters beyond continued to yell, but from the shape of their lights, he could see they were keeping some kind of formation. With the black fog between him and them, they looked like stars against the endless oblivion of space. Now there was a cold thought. “Noah, you there?” He had to speak up, almost yell, for his voice to penetrate the thick blanket of death, but he risked it.

“I am.”

Jack turned his head slowly, and only enough to see the other side of the hall through the corner of his eye. Noah's voice sounded almost like a bark, so the man was still transformed. How long werewolves could stay in their titan form, he didn't know, but he got the impression it wasn't forever. Everything felt like it was on a timer. They still had to rescue their friends, and now everything had ground to a halt.

“We're here too,” Art said from beside Noah. Good, they were all alive. Things were going better than—

Jack's head jerked up as impact sounds filled the hall. A slash mark appeared on the remains of wood still attached to the door frame of the large gate. And a blur of movement, of bone, of wings, came and went. And then another, against the pillar in the next chamber, the one the hunters were grouped around. Jack couldn't see it, but he could hear it. So could the hunters. Their lights went up, all of them pointing at the pillar, before the little lights started aiming around randomly again.

No more flashes came. Jack gave it a moment, twenty seconds, and he counted them. No more flashes. As the twenty seconds went by, another slash landed against something in the other chamber. And then another, each announced by screams, the hunters still suffering the red hallucinations. By the twentieth second, a third slash hit something, and earned a scream. One of the little stars in the black flew up, and landed on the floor.

Athalia had hit a person.

“Fuck you!” Angela’s voice. Jack couldn’t see what she was doing, but that changed when she unleashed a wave of fire. The oppressive darkness might have put out the fires, but that didn’t stop the hunters from making new ones, short lived as they were. Shrieking with blood curdling cries of rage, Angela fired the streak of red death into the air. “Fuck you! Die! Die you fucking bitch! I’ll kill you!”

Jack gulped. He’d heard those screams before, from the psychopath. Part of him was happy knowing the anger and hatred she’d shown when the two of them were fighting wasn’t unique to him, but a larger part wasn’t. She was a menace. She had to be killed.

Another slash hit something Jack couldn’t see, but the sound was unmistakable, and Angela turned her fire on it the moment she heard it. The red light cut through the black fog, spreading it, dissipating it for a few seconds, and lighting up everyone and everything around it. Something large slipped into the black, dark bones and massive limbs fading into the obsidian, breaking into flowing black ink. Another slash cut through the onyx, and Angela turned faster, unleashing a spray of flame straight at the door. Jack froze, only ten feet away from where the liquid stream of fire fell on the stone. Some of the red caught Athalia, and her enormous rib cage and dangling spinal cord lit up, red on the dark bone. For a brief moment, where the flame landed, the bone turned white, the black material on it burning away.

The following shriek froze everyone. A banshee's cry.

A couple of the hunters had glowing necklaces too, but the glow was subtle, only noticeable when Angela went nuts with the flamethrower. How much fuel did a flamethrower have? How long could you spray the fuel before you were out? He had no idea, but Angela didn't seem to be worried about it.

Another slash, and the sickening crunch of claws on flesh and bone. Someone screamed, a feminine cry that forced Jack to wince. But Angela didn't. The devil turned to the source of the sound, and unloaded a river of fire.

The banshee's cry returned times a thousand, as the death angel of bone erupted into flame. The colossal, flying creature raised her enormous hands to her skull face, and fanned her bone wings to take flight, high above the hunters. But she was on fire, and her screams were hot ice on his spine.

Jack stood up. Now or never. "Go! Now!"

The three vampires and three werewolves ran for the door. Damien handed Jack his gun, and kept his sword as he embraced himself in his cloak of night. He'd been shot many times, and a Mekhet wasn't going to be up for discipline theatrics soon after that. Natasha followed in after him, her phone raised as a light, other hand holding her pistol. Jack adopted the same stance, and frowned at how unwieldy it was. Mental note: next time, always bring a proper flashlight when dealing with monsters, or hunters, or anything.

The blanket of obsidian death that weighed on them all faded away, and the black fog sank into the floor. Their lights punctured the thinning mist, and the exposed group of hunters. The large group of hunters.

He was right, a few of them had some necklaces on that were glowing, gentle white light. The light lessened, and faded away as Athalia raised higher; necklace's glow must have had something to do with Begotten, or Athalia specifically. He looked up as the skeleton creature's shrieks continued, and winced all the more as several of the hunters raised their guns, and opened fire.

Shrieks turned into a staccato of interrupted howls and grunts from the monster. The black layers on her bones were on fire, and burning like dry paper, while bullets pelted her.

As another hunter raised their gun, the werewolves fell upon them. Three of them, each in the front row of the assault, each wounded and bleeding. But they pounced into the fray nonetheless, darkness embracing them as the flashlights of each hunter they jumped went down with them. Athalia's fog had put out all the gargoyle braziers, and that included the ones in the next, larger room; darkness to be exploited.

Angela didn't flinch. She turned the flamethrower to the wolves, and shot over them. She knew. The fucker knew. The three vampires jumped back, far back, putting a couple dozen feet between them and the fire as fast as they could. The werewolves threw themselves to the floor, under the flame. Much as fire was deadly to Kindred, it wasn't too picky about who it burned, either.

"Don't even think about it! Fuck all of you. You're dead! All of you!" Her screams were a crescendo, mixed in with the roar of fire.

The other hunters took advantage. Three of them were on the ground, and blood pooled around their bodies, gash marks an inch or two deep in their flesh. It was hard to see anything, now that all the fires were out, but Angela was creating new ones, and the hunters all had flashlights. They were shining them around in a near panic, but there was enough of them to create enough light to move by. The three that were on the ground, the massive gashes exposed what looked like bullet proof vests.

These fuckers were far more prepared than he could have imagined.

The three werewolves all got up, and the hunters raised their weapons, each of them with barrels pointed at the closer, more obvious threat: giant wolves on two legs. The Uratha didn't wait to get shot this time, and jumped into the pack of humans. Athalia's earlier attack had brought the hunters together, herded them, and the beasts took advantage. Flashlights went up as hunters fell onto their backs, and the wolves sank their claws into them.

Or at least they tried to sink their claws into them, but there were more hunters than any of them expected. Several were beside the enormous pillar, half hidden in the darkness, and they came up to the werewolves. Melee range. With so many of the hunter lights not being aimed properly, it was a mess of flashing black as the lights snapped across in random directions. Wolf claws and wolf teeth bit and chomped, and hunters with silver knives swung at them.

The werewolves and vampires had better vision in the dark, Tash most of all, but in the chaos of swinging limbs, gunfire, knives, and claws, it was too hard to figure out what to do. Jack stood there, stunned, and looked around quick to find an option. But fire blocked their path, Angela firing the stream of flame at the vampires. Holding the flamethrower in her right hand, she pulled out a pistol in her left, and pointed it at the vampires as well.

The three of them dove to the floor and into the darkness of the hallway, as bullets flew past their heads, some slamming into the stone walls around them. They couldn't get closer. If the fuel so much as touched them, there was a good chance they'd die in seconds, or at least lose a limb.

The sight of Athalia on fire was a fucking nightmare on a nightmare. But she had disappeared again, and her death shrieks were gone. If she was dead, Jack was going to fucking hate himself. If she and Fiona died, they were all trapped, and fucked.

“You fuckers helping Athalia, you all deserve to die with her. Come on, Mom! Get down here so we can end this! Show yourself! Show yourself you fucking—” Athalia's wail cut through the noise of the fight like nails on a chalkboard. The black fog reformed above, in a random spot maybe a hundred feet away. Athalia said she couldn't tell where things were like that; the dozens of random claw marks everywhere proved it. But the corpses on the ground looked like they'd been mauled by a fucking dinosaur. Athalia was swiping at things without know what the fuck they were, or who they were.

Christ, that was cold.

Athalia, drifting like a fly with a damaged wing, fell to the ground slowly. She landed on her hands, enormous claws resting on the stone as she twitched and shook. Her bones looked white, as if someone had bleached them pale. Almost like a sick person losing all color in their face. The fact she was still alive was amazing; she'd been set on fire. But the white dots of her eyes, little glowing dots in the center of her skull eyes, were flickering in and out like a dying light.

Whether or not she was dying, it wasn't enough to stop Athalia. The skeleton creature roared at the group of hunters, and came running forward. The sight and sound of the death angel, running on her two hands, spinal cord swaying like a tail, and mouth opening wide to unleash the inhuman scream, forced everyone to look her way. The werewolves tried to take advantage of the chaos, but the hunters opened fire on them, the men and women with knives ducking low so their companions could fire over their heads.

They'd practiced for this. They knew how to mix ranged and melee combat. The fuck kind of bullshit was this, a military squadron? The hunters had underestimated Jack when they kidnapped him, but now he was returning the favor. They all were.

The sickening sight of bullets slamming into fur and flesh forced Jack to take a step forward. He expected Angela to unleash more flame in his direction, but instead, Angela was looking at Athalia, and started shooting her pistol. Bullets slammed into the monster's bones, cracking them, and splinters of the white monster's body snapped off. Some bits shattered, raining down around Athalia, and others broke off in huge chunks, until Jack could see through holes in her titanic ribs. The monster ignored her wounds, screaming, shrieking, and ran at Angela. More bullets slammed into Athalia's face, and her jaw shattered, half of it breaking off and falling to the stone floor. Athalia didn't stop.

“Come on, Mom! Bring it! Fucking bring it!”

Oh good god what sort of family drama was he witnessing? And Angela, she had zero sense of reality. Her words sounded like a shitty soap opera, and her actions were the sort of temper tantrum he'd expect from a literal child. But the psychopath was fearless, and she fired again, and again, until the click click of no ammo sounded several times.

Angela reached down with her pistol hand, and tried to draw a new magazine, but the skeleton creature, full of holes, shrieking in pain and what Jack could only guess was morose fury, threw herself onto Angela. The woman went down, flamethrower falling away before sliding across the stone floor as the necklace on her neck began to glow brighter. The skeleton creature grabbed the woman with one hand, picked her up, weight balanced on her other enormous hand, and threw her daughter at the other hunters, the ones firing at the werewolves.

Jack had lost track in the madness. The hunters shooting were trying to hit the wolves, and the wolves were running around in the darkness, leaving trails of blood everywhere they went. But with all the gargoyle braziers extinguished, and only the lights on their rifles or handheld lights to provide illumination, the advantage started to become theirs.

But the vampires were blocked. Angela had doused the doorway in flame, and it hadn't settled yet. What light the fire gave off, the werewolves were on the other side of the nearest pillar, keeping the shadow on their side. It also meant the vampires couldn't see them anymore, except for split moments where they ran from one pillar to the next. They could see Athalia though, see the ruined monster of bone and carnage whip her own daughter through the air toward the hunters around the pillar.

Fuck this.

With a deep breath — the habit would never die — and step forward, he got ready, preemptively winced, and jumped.

“Jack!” Tash and Damien said. He ignored them. A Mekhet was likely to die if they got too much fire on them, and both of them were more injured than he was. And he'd done this before.

The fire wasn't too high, maybe three feet. The flickering heat was great, but not as great as the last time he'd felt its bite. It took advantage of the hole in his stomach where the giant splinter had stuck him, and it took advantage of the hole in his pants where a couple of bullets had sliced him. Those patches of skin, and the fat and muscle underneath, were gone in seconds, turned to ash. And he felt every fucking wave of agony it caused. Burns were pain beyond pain. Burns, true, deep burns, were deadly, to the point a person could die from how stressful the pain was on the system. He wouldn't die to that pain, but that didn't change that fire hit him with it, blinded him until he saw white, and wiped the world away until there was only the incinerating misery of his bane.

And then he was on the other side of the fire. He focused his vitae toward the burn marks, but there was something about burns that he knew he couldn't heal, not until he slept come the dawn. The werewolves weren't healing the silver wounds either. Did monsters have similar? Whether they did or not, being set on fire and then shot a dozen times would put almost anyone into the ground, but Athalia was still alive.

Except, barely. The titan fell to the floor, twenty feet from where Angela had slammed into some of the other hunters. Jack wasted no time, and ran over to the psychopath.

Angela dragged herself off of the bed of other hunters, and started to get up. "I'll kill you, I'll—"

Jack kicked the gun out of her hand, smile on his lips as he felt his boot slam into her wrist. He didn't break her bone, but he got close, and the yelp of pain she made was a siren's call to his soul. He kicked her in the stomach, and sighed bliss as he felt her guts ripple from the impact. He kicked her in the side as she rolled over, and groaned delight as he felt his boot crack ribs. He kicked her in the back, and grinned his biggest grin ever as he felt another rib crack, in the lower back by her kidneys. Another kick, in her chin, snapping her head back, and silencing her rage as her teeth slammed together. Another, and another, bruising muscle and damaging her guts, until at last she stopped trying to get up.

It'd only been three seconds. Three seconds of bliss.

As she stopped on her back, panting, wheezing, she looked at him, glass eye lifeless, while her real eye burned a hole into his skull. One glance from her was all it took, to light the fire in his gut, to send a scorching inferno up into his chest and out into his limbs.

The agony of his burns vanished, buried in the pulsing hunger in his brain.

And then he had a half dozen guns pointed at him, including a shotgun. Shit.

But before the hunter with the shotgun could put a spray of death into his face, a howl erupted over the hunters. Arturo burst from the darkness, as if ripping himself out of a literal wall of shadow. The titan of muscle grabbed the shotgun, and roared into the woman's face before he slashed across her shoulder. Claws sliced through muscle, earning a scream from the woman hunter as she fell, and the ire of the other gun wielders. But Noah and Matthew collapsed on them at running speed, on all fours, only getting onto their hind legs at the last moment, and bulldozing the hunters.

Jack could smell the blood on them, their own blood, and he could hear the panting in their breaths. They were exhausted, and wrecked. They had to end this soon. Tash and Damien would be joining them in moments when the flames faded, but in the mean time, Jack had to deal with Angela.

He brought up his pistol, and pointed it at her face, phone light held up in his other hand and shining it down on her.

He expected the psychopath to flinch, to raise her hands, maybe cover her face, maybe crawl away. He expected her to swear, curse, scream at him. He expected her to beg for her life, plead for him to not shoot her. He expected a dozen things from her, any of them, all of them, anything to add to his growing hatred for the fucking bitch.

He didn't expect her to close her eyes, and wait for it. A gentle smile graced her lips too, as she stopped moving, stopped struggling, stopped doing anything, and waited for him.

It was disgusting. He froze, pistol shaking in his hand, as his light shined on the woman's face, lighting it up so he could see every detail. She really did look like Athalia, her human form. And he stared at it, the face with scars, the fucked up eye with the cut across it, the panting, exhausted woman. The world froze. The backdrop of the werewolves, fighting off almost a dozen hunters around him, preventing them from shooting Jack, vanished. The flashes of light from flashlights in the darkness around them were like slow moving spotlights. The rumble of the burning fire blocking Tash and Damien from joining was a gentle whisper.

The skeleton monster with the destroyed face looked at him. Half of her bottom jaw was gone, exposing the giant vertebrae behind it connected to her skull. Holes and chunks of bone were gone, exposing a strange, black inside. Her arms were crumbled and borderline ruined, but working enough that she pushed her claws against the floor, and dragged herself toward him. Slowly, but surely, the colossal skeleton monster, inched his way, ribs scratching against the bloodied stone floor.

“D ... Don’t... ,“ the monster said.

He stared at the skeleton creature. The death angel, the monstrosity, burned and broken, clawing her way toward him and her daughter, dragging her ribs and dangling spinal cord on the floor.

“Athalia, she has to die. She’s going to kill us. She—”

“Please ... she’s my daughter.”

He knew this was going to happen. He knew, if the opportunity presented itself to kill Angela, and Athalia was there, she’d do something. Maybe stop him, maybe attack him, maybe anything. But beg? He didn’t, couldn’t have foreseen begging, not from her.

“ ... I ... I’m sorry.” He forced his eyes off of the monster, and onto the awaiting Angela. The apology was for the mother, but there was a sickening ache in his stomach when he looked down at the daughter. The psychopath looked over at her mother for a moment, and back to him. He couldn't tell if she was daring him, or asking him, to kill her. Either one made him not want to.

No, he couldn't afford mercy. He readied the pistol, and—

The world spun. White, then black. Colors. Spinning, flashing strobes of streaking chaos. He landed on the ground, on the stones, palms out, pistol gone, phone gone. The world was a mess, pain mixing with flickering colors, and an unbalanced sound. Something was missing, something was gone.

His left eye. His left eye was gone, and his left ear. He lifted his hand, and pressed it to the side of his head. Flesh. Bone. Ash.

“Almost missed him.” Laughter came from a distance, and so too the thud of loud, heavy, colossal footsteps. “You ok, Angela?”

Chapter 72

~~Beatrice~~

This was going to be interesting. And dangerous. And scary. And exciting.

Jacob guided them back down into the chamber beneath Three Kings Cemetery. Guess he didn't care if Julias found out where this ritual chamber was. The dragons knew, so, it couldn't have been his most secret, most important, most diabolical location. And considering the array of limbs and blood symbols he had on the back wall, where darkness hid the collection, she could only imagine the sort of fucked up shit he had in his primary ritual chamber. Or primaries? Or whatever other chambers he had.

But this one was more than enough to have Superman staring, wide eyed, at the grotesque imagery.

Once they reached sacrifice bowl, wide eyed became stunned. There was a fresh corpse hanging from the hook, drooling guts and blood into the rusted concave metal, so poor Julias got an eyeful for his first visit into the depravity of the circle.

“ ... I saw a police report on this man,” Julias said. “A pedophile from another city, on the run.”

Jen nodded as she came over to the bowl. The woman wasn't entirely comfortable with crúac yet, but she was getting there. Triss though, for some reason the blood and slaughter came to her naturally, quickly, and she embraced it. She'd killed kine before she ever met Jacob, and butchering some sick, twisted, or otherwise needs-to-die fucks, in order to perform their experiments and rituals, was fine by her.

Maybe not so much for Julias, though.

“I drug them and keep them under,” Jacob said, smiling at Julias, while pushing the corpse so it started to swing on the hook. “There are some rituals, that require pain and torture and all that juicy goodness, but I don’t normally indulge. Especially not with the girls here.” There was still a chunk of intestine hanging over the pelvis, where Jacob had slit the bastard’s stomach open. It was connected to the ass, after all, so she imagined it was the large intestine dangling; Jacob had ripped out the stomach, she saw that. Kindred craved blood, not flesh. Seeing the man’s insides didn’t tickle her appetite, but it did tickle something else inside her, when she used his blood to paint symbols.

“Thanks for that, I guess.” Wincing, Julias came up to the bowl. Bold. He looked into it, and winced again as he no doubt noticed the mountain of blood, guts, and the way they’d been torn out, not cut out. “What sort of ritual were you performing?”

Triss and Jen looked at each other, and then to their boss. Of course, their boss laughed, and shrugged.

“Witchy witch kind of stuff.”

“... uh huh.” Rolling his eyes, Julias set his hands on the bowl. Blood on his palms and fingers now, but he kept them there. Very bold. “What do I need to do?”

“You need to cut off your hand.”

Beatrice and Jennifer both winced, sucking the air in between their teeth, as they looked between Jacob and Julias.

“I can’t just bleed for you?”

“No. We’re opening a door, and that takes a sacrifice.” Jacob reached into the bowl, moved aside some guts, and found one of his rusty knives. Fucking bastard just had to make this as hard as possible for Julias. “Cut off your hand, and fill the bowl with your ashes and vitae. I will perform the ritual, and open the door to your childe. Lucky for you you share the same blood, or I wouldn’t be able to open this door.”

“You wouldn’t?”

“Of course not. How would I know where to go? I’ll be delving into a world of dreams and nightmares, piloting through an endless sea of fog and mayhem. Thoughts and fears and desires from the entire plane of existence. I’ll—”

“Ok, I get it. You’ll use my blood to home-in on him.”

“Exactly.”

“And if we didn’t have my blood?”

Jacob tapped his finger, big jackass smile on full display, doing the work of expressing what his bandage-covered eye sockets couldn’t. “Perhaps the sheriff’s blood, though it’s unlikely he’d willingly give me that. Without a strong guiding light, I won’t be able to find the realm, so if it’s not blood, it’s nothing. You are lucky Jack went on this mission.”

Triss pat her lover on the shoulder. She knew he didn’t trust Jacob, but Jacob was proving to be a very informative teacher. Sort of. If he said he needed this or that, he needed this or that. Sometimes he fucked with you, but it was always in good fun. Sort of. Lots of sort ofs, with Jacob.

“Have you done this before?” he said.

“I’ve been experimenting with the nightmare realm, yes. Azamel is a large threat, and so is her group of friends.”

“So you’ve found her nightmare lair before?”

“No. Like I said, I need a guide, something crúac can understand. Your blood. Your flesh. Your ashes. Without the guide, I’ll just be drifting around in the dreams and nightmares of the world. And fuck that, you know?”

Triss choked on a chuckle, keeping it down but only just. Her boss’s antics were growing on her, but she could see they were irritating to Julias. And it wasn’t a good time to chuckle. Jacob handed Triss the rusty, shitty knife, and gestured to the bowl.

“Ladies,” Jacob said, “a drop of your own blood, too. And a drop of mine.” The old man smiled at her, and waited.

Nodding, she put her hand over the bowl, and concentrated. There was more to this than just a drop of vampire blood. Crúac was about intent as much as anything else. The beast in her, that thing she had connected with somehow, it had crossed a barrier inside her, exposed her to something new and wonderful and thrilling and fucking dangerous, something in her blood. The vitae she concentrated and forced into her blood was the same mental effort you’d use to make a ghoul, or resurrect a fresh corpse as your childe. It was special, magical, and it deserved respect. It was what Jacob wanted, and as much as he joked and goofed around, she knew he had all the respect in the world for the power of their blood. And now, now that the beast inside her was whispering in her ear, she did too.

A single drop, before she handed Jen the knife. A single drop that was mentally draining, and left Triss a bit dizzy for a moment. That single drop did more than suck the energy out of her, it also quietened her mind, softened her thoughts, and let something with fangs and claws nuzzle a little higher up in her spine. It was almost like a purring sensation, coming from something that lived inside her, something that was now happy with her. Something that wanted to go hunting later.

Julias raised a brow at her, and she smiled at him, before she looked over at Jen. The same look on her face, one of joy, of embracing a dark, dirty little secret, and relishing in the strange tingles it sent up the body. She was succumbing to it too, just like Triss, and god damn it was good to have a friend with her on this journey. They were witches, manipulators of blood and the occult, practitioners of scary rituals that could backfire, that could summon things they didn't mean to summon, that could spell doom for everyone involved.

Wow. She really was getting off on this. So naughty.

Jacob took the knife, and let out a large drop. It splashed against the guts of their kill, and burned away to ash. If it had entered someone's body, dead or alive, the vitae would react and do its thing, as if it really was sentient, as if it wanted to spread its vampire disease. Christ, she still hadn't talked to Damien to apologize to him, about giving him her blood. Ok, yeah, if the man returned from this alive, she'd visit him and talk to him.

Everyone looked at Julias, as the old man handed him the rusty knife. Julias looked at it for a moment, before he sighed, and took it.

Julias set the knife to his wrist, and began sawing.

Triss and Jennifer both winced, but Triss forced herself to keep watching, while her friend looked away. Yeah, it wasn't easy to watch someone cut through their own wrist, especially when it was a guy you happened to love. Julias bore the pain well, and considering he had a century embraced under his belt, she imagined he'd had many encounters that involved a lot of pain. Hell, she rescued him from a burning building where his head had been smashed in by Rebecca. The man was used to pain.

Cutting off your own hand was different from pain. Maybe if she'd given him a nice, clean axe to do a proper chop, it wouldn't have been so bad, but cutting off your own limb, with a knife, was a psychological nightmare. The mental barriers the brain had between you and such self destruction was immense; she'd run into them several times, in her crúac rituals. Pain was temporary to a vampire, but the mental struggle to not harm the self in a way the old living body would consider permanent, never went away.

Even the mighty Julias started to show signs of pain, extreme pain, as the knife pushed through bone. She put a hand on his shoulder, but the man was too focused on grinding his teeth together. And through it all, she watched. This was important. It was a sacrifice, it meant something, it was pain and limiting the self, even if only temporarily.

Thankfully, it wasn't too drawn out. He was a vampire after all, and had the strength to drive through bone with a knife in only a few seconds. The extremity fell to the bowl, and wiggled with the impact, before evaporating into ash. Several heavy drops of his vitae fell into the bowl after, dark red, almost alive in and of itself. Onto the pile of guts it went, fading into ash seconds later, little red flames, almost like sparks, dancing on the blood's surface as it went poof.

Groaning, Julias put his stump of a hand to his chest, inside his jacket. "There. Happy?"

Triss looked at Jacob. Jackass had a giant grin on, of course, and he drummed his palms on the bowl's edge a few times; for effect, she was sure.

"Very. If only Invictus would maim themselves at my behest more often." Chuckling, Jacob rubbed his hands together, and came over to join the others on their side of the bowl. "Beatrice, Jennifer, mood lighting."

Rolling her eyes, Triss pulled out her phone, pulled up a light program, and pointed it down at the bowl. The program had various settings, and used the phone's screen to display a rather trippy color effect; lots of bleeding reds mixing with white. Jennifer used the same program, and pointed the phone up at the cave ceiling.

“ ... you have got to be shitting me,” Julias said.

Jacob shrugged. “You don't like mood lighting?”

“There's a fucking corpse, right in front of you. There's guts in a bowl. I can smell the shit and blood and piss and drugs. Have you no respect for the dead?”

“I have the utmost respect for the dead.”

Triss and Jen froze. Jacob didn't say that with a joking inflection. Jacob said that in a serious, monotone voice. He never used that voice. The two ladies looked at each other, before looking at Julias to see what he'd say.

He said nothing. Sighing, Julias took a step back, and with his good hand, motioned for the man to continue.

That was a strange snap from Jacob. Respect for the dead? Wh—oh, Minerva. Ok, yeah, sensitive topic, and Julias had grazed it. But her man, all knowing and stupidly wise, backed off before he made things worse.

Jacob reached out both of his hands over the ashes of their sacrifice, and over the entrails of their kill. The corpse continued to dangle there, dripping blood, and Triss didn't know if it was required for the ritual or not. The specifics seemed to be something only Jacob knew, and Triss was half convinced they didn't matter. Intent, desire, and respect for the ritual mattered. Sacrifice and pain mattered. Blood and will mattered.

Jacob reached down into the mess of their kill, and touched his fingertips against the drying blood. Not dry yet though, and once the blood coated his fingers, he walked over to one of the nearby walls. Not the wall in the back, where the unusual shadow hid the gore display, the symbols and body parts, the chests of metal and limbs. All the walls of the cave had symbols drawn into them, etched or chiseled, many painted in blood, symbols she was growing to both recognize, and enjoy the sight of. They were beautiful in their own way, and represented the dark arts in a strange, media-friendly format.

Maybe she should make a Twitter account, and share? Ha.

She froze, as Jacob turned toward the back wall. Wait. “Jacob?”

“Powerful as I am, Beatrice, and as much as I know, navigating this realm is not something I can do alone. Not if I want to go with my own hands.” He offered a small wave over his shoulder, and disappeared into the black fog near the wall. “And you know, if Jack really is in trouble, I’d like to help.”

She blinked a few times at the man’s silhouette, before it was gone. Jen came close to Julias, and nudged her elbow into his side before looking at his fucked up wrist. Yeah, hand gone, god damn.

“You’re going to summon him?” Jen said to Jacob’s disappearing silhouette.

“I am.”

Triss shook her head. “Will he want a favor for this?”

“Of course. But I’ll handle that,” the Nosferatu said from the dark. “Julias, on the other hand, will owe me based on the outcome. If the kid doesn’t need help, a small favor will suffice. If I need to rescue him? Well, a big favor.”

Julias stared into the black, and Triss could almost see the man calculating a thousand outcomes based on this conversation alone. “Naturally,” he said, tone sarcastic, borderline mimicking Jacob.

That earned a laugh from Jacob, and the clang of one of his chests being opened with a snap.

“Though, I have to thank you, Mister Mire, for the opportunity to do this. This is a step I’ve been meaning to take, but I’ve had no beacon to guide me.”

“Does that qualify as the favor?”

“Ha. No.” Another clang resounded through the cavern, and then, the distant howling of corpses.

Julias raised his head, looked up, and around, as the quiet screams started to fill the air. Whether they were the echoes of the past, or their kills, Triss didn’t know, but whatever Jacob was doing on that back wall, whatever rituals he was painting or dancing or whatnot, it had tainted the cave with screams.

Black Blood’s body came for them. She wasn’t sure if it was his body. ‘His’ because his voice sounded masculine, but she was pretty sure spirits didn’t have genders. And this spirit’s body was an ocean of ooze, black and flowing and thick but not. It should have felt like tar, but it felt like nothing, and as it began to ooze down the cracks of the walls, Jen and Triss waited patiently.

Julias, not so patiently. As he cradled his stub of a wrist inside his jacket, he stared at the walls, before looking between the two witches. “Uh...”

“Just wait,” Triss said. “Black Blood can’t do his thing until he ... sets up.”

“Sets up?” Blinking over and over, Julias looked around at the rising tide of black, and lifted a leg as it started to come up over his boots.

Triss touched his arm, and nodded. Slowly but surely, the black ocean, bleeding up the walls, bleeding down the walls, and falling from the eye sockets of the skeletons that held up the ritual bowl, began to fill the room. She'd been through this a few times now, Jen too, and the two of them had gotten comfortable with it; as comfortable as you could. But her Superman looked disturbed, even a little scared, and she smiled at him as she waited.

Only when the strange, black liquid covered them, and filled the underground cavern to the ceiling, did Jacob return to the bowl. Triss and Jen knew what he did over there, painting his symbols, using the blood of corpses and metal of torture devices as his paint and brush. Probably not something Jacob would want others to see; hence, the black fog that covered that side of the cave. But then, she doubted he cared too much, if he was willing to bring Julias down into the cave. Maybe it was to keep people calm, if he was bringing them into the cave for the first time?

Unlikely, because no one was going to stay calm when the darkness started talking to them.

“Well well, if it isn't the mighty Julias Mire.” The spirit's voice rose from the shadow, and everyone turned to the bowl where the strange, deep, bassy voice came from.

“ ... you must Black Blood.”

“That I am.”

“I didn't think Black Blood would be from the South.”

Jacob, returning from the black upon blackness in the back of his cave, laughed, and set his hands on the bowl again. “He's borrowing the voice from someone we killed.” Of course, Jacob called him ‘he’ as well, and the habit was rubbing off on Triss.

“Naturally.” Rolling his eyes, Julias looked down into the bowl. They were all standing inside black water, but there was enough light for them to see, and the blackness didn’t impede them like water would. It meant they could move around easily, and Julias took a step back as a face looked up at him from the contents of the bowl.

From the guts, intestines, organs and flesh, a face of oozing black smiled up at him. It was made of the remains of Jacob’s sacrifice, and Black Blood’s infestation had turned it black. Triss wasn’t sure if it was more or less disturbing than the first time she had met the strange entity, when it had possessed a corpse, walked around, and helped Jacob with teaching her a ritual. Most fucked up night of her life.

And this was probably Julias’s. He’d cut off his own hand, and was now staring down into a bowl of entrails, that were looking up at him and talking to him, all while being submerged into a black water. Yeap, that ranked pretty high on fucked up shit.

“Am I to understand, that we’re going to save the infamous Jack Terry?” Black Blood said. Wait, infamous?

“What has Jacob told you of my childe?” Julias didn’t like that very much. He put his good hand against the bowl, and stared down at the face. Ballsy. It was cute, seeing Superman get all fatherly.

“Only good things!” Jacob said, hands up, like he was afraid of Julias’s judgment. Course, he wasn’t, and he laughed a moment later as he climbed into the bowl. “We’re just going to check and see if things are going his way, Black Blood. If he needs rescuing, we rescue him.”

“And if he does not?” the spirit said.

“Then poor Julias owes me a favor for nothing.”

“And the boy is in the clutches of these hunters and their Begotten friend? I reckon he does.”

Julias’s frown only grew as Black Blood made it obvious that Jacob was sharing details with the spirit. More than that, that Black Blood knew details that Jacob had only just learned. At this point, Triss expected him to, with how much her boss relied on him for their rituals and whatnot. It must have been a shocker though, for Superman to hear his childe was a topic of conversation between a psycho and an alien god. The kid had a habit of causing waves, though, so it wasn’t like it wasn’t deserved.

“I can sense the blood of our beacon. Good to go. See ya later.” Jacob nodded, offered Julias a finger wave, and stepped into the bowl. Stepped into, and sank into, with a plop. Like as if he’d dropped into a deep pool.

And the black water around them vanished. As if someone had popped a balloon, it all went away in an almost explosive shattering of black winds and black splashes. It had no impact, but it sounded like it should have, and looked like it should have. It drained down into the floor like the floor had opened up to swallow it, and it was gone the next second.

And then there were the two witches, and a bowl of guts. No black bloody ooze stuff, no talking faces made of entrails, no nothing.

Sighing, Julias walked around, cradling his wrist, and Triss followed after him. Half to keep him company, half to keep him from touching anything he shouldn’t be.

“I’m sure Jack is fine,” she said. “And if he’s not, Jacob will do something. He likes the kid.”

“Why is that?”

“Dunno. Kid is good at making friends.”

“He ... he wasn't, when I was grooming him for the embrace. That kid was antisocial as all hell, and thought of everyone else as mindless sheep, slaves to capitalism and peer pressure.” Sighing, Julias looked at her, the bowl, Jen, and the dark end of the room where Jacob had done his ritual out of sight. “Suddenly he's friends with every vamp in the city, including Jacob.”

She laughed, shrugged, and tapped on his arm. Mistake. The gentle impact nudged against his wrist, and he groaned.

“Ah, shit, sorry. Um, well, Jacob's not so bad once you get to know him. He likes to keep Invictus at arm's length though, cause, you know.”

“Indeed.”

“Don't be like that,” Jen said, walking over to him and nudging up against his other side. “Really, you can trust the man more than you think you can.”

Triss raised a hand. “But not completely.”

“No no, not completely. That'd be a mistake, and Jacob wouldn't want that. But you can trust him with Jack's life, sure.”

“But ... maybe not the Uratha's. Jack took some on this trip, right? I don't know about them. Boss might leave them to die.” Jacob did absolutely hate them, for their meddling, their entitlement, and their involvement in Minerva's death. It was hard to say if Jacob was able to make smart choices when they were involved.

Hopefully their involvement wouldn't affect Jacob's rescue mission.

“Come on, Jen,” she said as she walked back to the bowl. “We’re supposed to be a tether.”

“He never did explain how that works.”

Shrugging, Triss held her hands over the bowl, and concentrated her effort and will into the area. Jacob said if they concentrated their vitae into their fingers, and kept it over the bowl, it’d work. Why’d he need a tether, if he had Julias’s blood to guide him? She didn’t understand, didn’t know how, but knew how to do what he wanted. Yeah, it made no sense, but these days, nothing did.

~~Natasha~~

Jack spun in place. His gun flew out of his hand, and his phone did too. Its light twirled as the phone spun repeatedly, streaks of light cutting across the chamber of madness, as werewolves struggled to handle the hunters surrounding them. Everyone froze when Jack went down, and the two vampires gasped at the sight of the boy’s head exploding.

No, not exploding, thank god. But for a moment, the side of his skull was gone, and Tash felt every muscle in her body clench as she brought her hands to her lips. The bullet had hit his eye, against side of the socket along his temple, and cut through the bone along his ear. Through the fires flickering in front of her, all she could do was watch as the boy collapsed backward, turning to land on his stomach. He touched the wound, body shaking, and bits of blood dripping from the wound before fading into ash.

Since Athalia’s strange shadow fog had dissipated, the fire that Angela had renewed was taking its sweet time burning away, leaving her and Damien stranded. She could jump over it, if her leg was working. Damien could jump over it, if he didn’t look like he’d been shot a dozen times, considering the bandages on his body. But she had to get over there, had to save Jack, had to save Art and Matt and even Noah and Athalia. Had to save Fiona. Had to save Eric, and Clara, and Jessy! Had to do something.

“Sorry about that, Angela. Sándor and I had a bit of trouble with these three, and I’m guessing you had trouble, too?” An older man stepped out of the darkness, pistol in hand, other arm dangling weakly at his side. Blood. As he came in closer, the old man looked at the prostrated skeleton creature, then Jack, and chuckled as he held out a hand to Angela.

“... yeah. Athalia kamikazed.” She took the man’s hand, and dragged herself over to get her pistol.

The man had to be Jeremiah. But—oh god. Tash stepped back, as something stepped out of the blackness, something tall, something that earned the thud thud of a giant’s footsteps. Its horns came first, topped upon an almost human, but not quite human head of colossal size; no, its whole body was colossal. And it had four arms. Four wings! Some sort of gargoyle monster, something that walked on raptor talons, and leaned forward, counter balanced by a tail.

Three bodies dangled in its hands. His hands. Jessy, Eric, and Clara. Clara and Eric looked like hell, and they were in their human bodies, dripping small drops of blood as the beast moved in closer to the others. From the way they dangled, they looked unconscious.

Four hunters walked around the monster’s legs, and they looked beat to hell, too. Soon-to-be bruises covered their bodies, and gashes, patched up but otherwise a serious problem for kine. They limped and dragged, but remained at arms, guns held and ready to shoot. It was more than enough to bring the wounded and exhausted three werewolves near Jack and Athalia to a stand still.

“We lose anyone?” Jeremiah said.

“A few, yeah. Athalia killed a couple, and these fuckers hurt Jackson enough to kill him.” She nodded her way to a man by the pillar, slouched, and not responding. Blood was pooling around him.

“And the paranormals?”

“None dead. Two vamps right there.” Angela pointed to her and Damien. Oh no. “Three more dogs here. And Mom’s little friend is down in one of the rooms, bleeding out. We should go check and kill her.”

“That we should.” Jeremiah walked over to the flamethrower, and sighed as he picked it up. Damaged. He set it back down, and looked across the flames to the two vampires. “I’m not in Dolareido for you blood suckers. I’m here for Azamel, and the rest of her kind, true monsters. Bring the spider woman here, and you get to live.”

“W-What?” Tash said. “ ... n-no, we—”

Damien leaped. Tash jerked, and snapped her head to the side as the man jumped over the flames. No way his body could handle that, but he did it anyway, sword up and ready to slash.

His impulse earned him another bullet to the chest. Jeremiah raised and drew his pistol with the speed of a professional duelist, a subtle and quick movement that wasted no motion, hip firing. The pistol he had was something high caliber, and it slammed into Damien’s chest the moment the man had left the ground, putting a stop to his forward motion so he fell back to the ground beside Natasha.

“Is the spider woman a hot spot for you, boy?” Jeremiah said.

Tash shook her head. “She ... y-you can’t, she...” There were no words she could say to this psychopath. The look in his eyes was one of zero empathy, as if someone had ripped that part of him out with bloody claws. It was the sort of look she expected Jacob to have, if the man had eyes of his own.

“Fuck ... you,” Damien said.

“Hot spot it is. Isn’t that cute.” Shrugging, Jeremiah walked toward the werewolves. Each of them had four hunters around them now, guns pointed at their huge bodies. The beasts struggled to stay standing, and both Art and Matt had blood leaking from their chops; their own blood, mixed with the blood of hunters they managed to bite earlier. Many of said hunters were the ones holding guns to the werewolves, and they did not look pleased. How they were standing, Tash couldn’t fathom, but these hunters had the resilience of ghouls, without a ghoul’s extreme healing or strength.

“Now, this little punk here lied to me.” Glaring at the Uratha, Jeremiah stopped beside Jack, who was still on his hands and knees, trembling. Jeremiah slowly, almost gently, put his boot on the boy’s back, and pushed down, until Jack gave in and collapsed to the floor. “He mentioned someone named Avery, and when I asked him about it, he lied about who it was. I only found out later from Elen about the werewolves. Took some digging to find out about Avery.”

The bastard pulled his foot back, and kicked Jack in the side, hard. Poor boy was knocked onto his side, trembling, cradling his face and trying to stop Jeremiah from kicking him again. No luck. Jeremiah kicked him again, and again, as if getting revenge for what Jack just did to Angela. Angela was beat up, and had had a gun pointed at her; he must have assumed, and assumed correctly.

“All of you, you’re all going to surrender, immediately. I can make use of each of you, and if you play nice, some of you will get to live.”

Matthew snarled. “Some? You—”

Jeremiah hip fired once again, and the bullet slammed into Matt's leg, sending him down onto his knees with a howl. Oh no.

"P-Please, don't," she said.

"Please don't?" The man looked her way and laughed, and with only a quick glance, fired at the two remaining, standing werewolves. The bullets slammed into their legs as well, and each went down, growling and grunting as their palms caught the stone floor. "You're our prisoners, monsters. You have no rights, and you don't get to beg. Do what we say, and if I'm feeling charitable, I'll let some of you live. But be under no illusions, you're nothing but pests, and we're exterminators. Only reason some of you might get to live is we're after—"

The world split apart.

Everyone turned, and looked at the cut through the universe. A seam, like someone had taken a sword and sliced through the fabric of space. Tash knew her brain was having trouble interpreting it, like an illusion, one made to defy the eyes and make them see something incorrectly, messing with depth perception and colors. But something had cut its way through the air, and was reaching out through it.

The seam began to bleed black. Tash froze to the point her body ached, muscles clenching, eyes stuck on the sight of air bleeding. Air didn't bleed, but it was. As if the universe could bleed, as if someone had cut through its skin, infected skin rotting with black ooze. And someone stepped out of it.

"J-Jacob?" she said. Everyone was silent, and her voice was loud enough for all of them to hear.

Dripping of black ooze, and yet with his dark robes and hair still looking dry, Jacob smiled at the group of insanity before him. The bandage that covered his eyes looked dry too, gray and worn like it always was, as if it was decades old. There was blood on him, dried and crusted, but whatever the ooze was, it fell off of his body like it wasn't real.

“How the fuck did you get in here?” Angela said.

“How indeed.” Laughing, Jacob spread out his arms, and with him, spread the tear in the universe. Unlike Jack, Jacob didn't hesitate.

Everyone jumped back as the black liquid gushed out of the hole. Like water rapids, the blackness raged from the tear, and washed over the stone floor around the group of hunters, werewolves, and everyone else. The fire, already dying, disappeared beneath waves of black, as did the wood remains of the giant door, the stone floor, and all the fallen things. Guns, lights, the bodies, Jack, everything disappeared under the black waves.

Leave it to Jacob to have the perfect opportunity to monologue, and instead, laugh. Laugh, and laugh, and laugh. Defying expectations at every turn. Tash glared at the man, and the man offered her a tiny wave, as he let the gushing water pour around him. It didn't hit him, despite how fast it was rushing from the tear, as if the black liquid was sentient and avoiding him. Maybe it was. Maybe—hands, there were hands in the water! Black hands. Dozens of them. They poked up from the water, exposing scrawny wrists and skin so thin the tendons were defined, before they disappeared beneath the surface of the raging stream.

Raging whirlpool, more like it. As the insane amount of liquid gushed into the chamber, it defied every law of physics Tash could imagine. The water rose quickly, faster than the vertical geyser created, and dozens upon dozens of the strange, black hands reached out from the ooze to grab onto varying things, varying people.

But the fire was out, and that was good enough to get moving. If this was Jacob's rescue attempt, it was a good one, because every single hunter, and the four-armed monster, were struck dumb. It was entire seconds before they responded, all of them raising their guns, and firing upon the elder. As much as Jacob was easily one of the most powerful Kindred Tash could imagine still alive in the present day, a few hundred bullets traveling faster than sound, slamming into him over a whole two seconds, would turn him into pulp.

The water erupted. It shot upward from around Jacob, and only a subtle silhouette of the man remained as he disappeared into the black abyss. The force of it sent waves ten feet high, well above the already two-foot deep current, and the hunters screamed as it slammed into them. Even the werewolves, massive as they were, let out yelps of surprise as the dark ooze smashed into them, and sent them under. More than under, but pulled under, as the dozens of onyx hands, with their dripping fingers, reached up over the waves, and pulled the beasts into the black.

She reached down, and yanked Damien up onto his feet. The man groaned as he leaned on her, but he hadn't dropped his sword either. If anything, he was clenching it tight, ready to fight, despite the new hole that had been put into his chest. The bullet looked like it slammed into his sternum, through it, and was probably lodged in the organs inside him.

"Come on," she said. "Let's—"

A roar cut through the maelstrom of noise the black rapids made, and Tash stared at the colossal gargoyle as it struggled against the arms grabbing it. They were tiny, so very tiny compared to its immense size, but there were dozens of them grabbing at its legs, and trying to topple it. With its four wings folded snug to its back, it still had four hands to fight off the assaulting limbs, but three of them were full. Big as it was, holding a whole person in each palm was a large task, and eventually, the monster was forced to let them go, all three of its hostages falling into the black.

“No!” Jeremiah’s voice. He unloaded bullets at the geyser, but as far as Tash could tell, it was an endless void of black liquid, ready to accept each bullet as the meaningless hunk of metal it was. Jacob had vanished, and the alien entity was making short work of the chaos Jack and his crew had been unable to handle.

Athalia was lost to the liquid. All three Uratha were gone. The tide raged, and slammed against Tash’s and Damien’s legs, and the black hands came for them too. They took their time though, more concerned with the other chamber, and dealing with the hunters struggling, twisting, squirming, and kicking at them. One hunter went under, screaming. Another did as well, but they slashed and kicked and fought, and broke free, before reaching down to grab and free any fallen brethren from the black.

The hands weren’t trying to pull the hunters under, not the same way they were trying to grab the werewolves. The strange, alien hands buried and pulled the enormous, unmoving skeleton monster into the black. They had long ago quickly pulled the injured, prone Jack into their depths. They grabbed the falling Jessy, Clara, and Eric, and pulled them beneath the raging surface of the dark ocean, where they disappeared. But the hunters, they fought against the unending ocean of hands, and began firing at the ghostly limbs.

Bullets worked. The hands shattered, tearing apart, and exposed strange liquids within. Black wasn’t a good enough word to describe the liquid void, so dark it confused her eyes all the more.

“F ... Fiona.” Groaning like a dying man, Damien pushed himself off of Tash’s shoulder, and started wading through the water in Fiona’s direction.

What had happened to that man? She suspected those two were interested in each other, but it was strange to see Damien go from cold and detached about everything and anyone, to suddenly risking his life to save her, and going back for her too. She almost wanted to go with him, but she had to watch, to see what happened, to look for an opportunity, as the hunters fought against the raging waters. Hands reached up through the black around her, but she didn't resist them; no point. Whatever it was, whatever they were, it was from Jacob, and the man was going to help them. Probably. Hopefully.

An explosion of water erupted in front of the gargoyle monster, and it jumped back. It was such a massive entity, all its movements seemed a bit slow; it was the difference in size, not because it was actually slow. But either way, it was not fast enough to escape Jacob erupting from the dark waves. Like a shark attacking prey from beneath, the old Nosferatu threw himself at the gargoyle's neck, going for the kill.

To see Jacob punch a giant gargoyle in the mouth, and send the creature toppling over, was strange. It was like a scene from a comic book. Maybe that's what the old Nosferatu was aiming for, for something ridiculous, over the top, and all-around unnecessary. But whatever his goal with theatrics, it worked. He punched the twelve-foot-tall gargoyle beast of Goliath proportions in the chin, and sent it falling back. Jacob must have weighed only one twentieth of what the gargoyle did, and his strength ultimately sent himself flying back and away from his target after the punch. Like a gymnast, Jacob backflipped several times before landing on his feet in the waist-deep water. The black ooze was rising.

The gargoyle fell back, massive weight slamming into the dark ocean waiting for it, and onto dozens of black hands. Many shattered, snapping apart like bone and flesh should, before disappearing into the ooze. Others reached out and up, grabbing onto the beast's struggling limbs. They couldn't pin it down, and it thrashed against the hands, breaking more and more of them as it rolled back onto its knees.

The hunters were all standing again, the ones that were still alive, and each of them was firing at the oncoming hands. As the strange, dark limbs tore apart under a hail of bullets, the hunters backed up toward where Jeremiah had originally come from. They formed a line, those with pistols holding one of their wounded on a shoulder, and those with shotguns or rifles standing in front of them, all of them backing up. It was like watching military, or special forces. The synchronization, hand gestures mixed to signal movements and intentions, and a mix of fear and fearlessness.

No vampire in Dolareido had this sort of training.

“Come on!” Jeremiah, pistol in one hand, other hand dangling at his side with a bleeding shoulder, started to back up as well. Angela had found her pistol at some point, and draped her weight over Jeremiah’s shoulders with one of her arms, while the other continued to shoot at the hands.

Now, go now! They’re both distracted and slowed! Go!

Tash raised her pistol, and began to fire. But the ocean of black crashed against her legs, and the hands grabbed and pulled at her.

“No! Stop! Let m-me shoot!”

The hands, the water, the strange, black ooze didn’t hear her. Or didn’t care. The hands grabbed, yanked, and pulled her down, and she kept firing at Jeremiah and Angela as best as she could. She wouldn’t hesitate and lose this opportunity like Jack did, Athalia be damned.

One bullet hit Jeremiah in his leg, another hit his shoulder, and another hit Angela in her shoulder too. But she couldn’t get them in the neck, the head, anywhere that meant death! She tried again, and again, but the flowing water slammed into her harder, and buried her, soaking her in the strange, not-wet liquid, and blocking her vision as the hands pulled her into the depths below.

She forced her head above the surface long enough to hear Jeremiah say something.

“Elen, crash it!”

An explosion of white filled the chamber, and slammed down against the pillars, the walls, the hunters, the everything. What darkness was brought by Jacob was lost inside the overwhelming onyx that swam over them all. Black, on black, on black. Silhouettes of movement against the churning oblivion. And the sensation of being ripped out of the universe.

All was silent.

The hands pulled her under, deeper, into an endless black. The floor was no longer solid. The stones stopped blocking gravity’s will. The eternal void beneath her welcomed her with a silence and numbness, all sound and feeling gone as its black tendrils filled everything.

And then she was floating. Blackness everywhere, nothing but blackness. No, there was something moving, but it was black on black, and trying to see the details had her straining her eyes.

Liquid.

“Pleasure to make your acquaintance,” the endless void said.

“ ... h ... hello,” she said. Texan accent?

“I see I may have startled you. And for that, I apologize.” The voice chuckled. A deep, manly voice, with extra bass mixed in that made it sound thick, and inhuman, even monstrous.

“Black Blood,” Jacob said. Whoa, wait, where was Jacob? “What happened?”

“It seems that the shaman woman in the hunters’ employ is capable of some powerful things. She has an understanding of the realms, greater than ours, old friend.”

Slowly but surely, the darkness presented something more than fuzzy silhouettes of obsidian against onyx. It was a road. Not a road like asphalt, but something glowing white. It looked like stars at first, distant, and weak, but with time more of the stars broke through the darkness and became a road of gentle, white light. Very gentle. It was almost like walking on the reflection of moonlight on broken glass.

Natasha was being lowered from above. The hands! They were still on her, holding her, and they drifted through the black, dripping water around them, as they lowered her and others onto the road. Gravity, solid ground, but not, because as far as she could tell, she wasn’t in a place where either would exist. Could exist. And yet, there she stood, looking down at herself and testing her feet against the soft white light.

Black, oozing, thick droplets fell onto the strange road, before dripping off and disappearing into the great endless void beneath them. Ok, she had no idea what she was looking at, but she sighed relief as she watched Eric and Jessy, Clara and Noah, and Art and Matt join her.

“Jessy,” she said, and she walked over to her friend. “You look ... b-beat to hell.”

“Ha ... fuck ... you.” The woman was on her back, and she wasn’t getting up. Her skin was full of holes, the sort her Gangrel spikes would make; a favorite of her transformations. But that stuff normally healed moments after she was done. “Thanks for ... coming to my rescue.”

“ ... w-w-we tried.” Sighing, she looked over at the rest of the crew. Art, Matthew, and Noah were all on their knees, panting, wheezing, back in their human form, and bleeding, legs no longer working after Jeremiah's final shots. Their bodies were full of holes, and cuts caused by silver knives. She really, really, really hoped they wouldn't die; she was attached to two of them.

"Cl ... ara." Jack! The boy, still missing half of his face, forced himself up onto his feet. Drifting forward along the road of quiet stars, one hand pressed to his shredded skull, he made his way toward Clara. "Clara." When he reached her, he fell down onto his knees beside her, lowered his hand from his face, and pressed the ash-covered palm to her shoulder. "Clara ... you..." The sound of Clara's breathing cut through the silence, as Jack rolled her onto her back. He sighed relief, and looked over his shoulder to the rest of them. "Jessy. And ... where's Eric?"

"I'm here." Eric sat up, but stayed sitting, just as beat up as the other werewolves. "You guys really just threw yourselves into the meat grinder, huh?"

"Course they did," Jessy said. But she wasn't getting up, and her smile faded as she groaned in pain. "That said, um ... where the fuck are we?"

"Wait," Jack said. "Where's Athalia, and Fiona?"

Jacob, standing further down the road, walked over to them, and smiled. "Give Black Blood a moment. They're different, and not so easy to pull through this strange realm. I guess they got hooks in it that we don't."

"Well now, I do believe I have them," the hidden voice said.

And just like the others, black hands reached out from the ooze, and through the strange void around them, pulled two monsters. First was Athalia, the skeleton monster. The hands, floating and drifting, set her colossal form on the road by Tash. Next was the the spider woman Fiona, or Vrall, and Damien next to her. Athalia didn't move, but at least Fiona was breathing.

“Athalia?” Jack said, forcing himself up onto his feet, and walking over to her as well. It was Julias all over again, looking for things to blame himself over as a reflex. Like sire, like childe, she supposed, but it wasn't going to do the boy any favors.

Athalia let out a low groan. How could she groan, she had no vocal cords! But then, the darkness was talking to them, something invisible and with thousands of hands, so talking without a throat wasn't so crazy. What was crazy was how much damage the poor woman had suffered.

And Jack had tried to shoot her daughter. She was going to hate him for that. He was going to hate himself for hesitating. A delightful mix of the most horrible outcomes imaginable.

“We have ... ways ... to take care of ourselves.” Coughing, Fiona forced herself up onto her fe—she didn't have feet. She forced herself up onto her points, where feet should have been, and used her eight spider legs to help keep herself up. “This is ... in between. We don't normally walk through this realm. But burrow through it.”

“Yeah well, I'm not a Begotten. Black Blood and I have to make due with what we have access to.” Chuckling, Jacob gestured to the endless void around them. “But there are many things you can find, if you look hard enough.”

“I'll get ... Athalia back ... to her lair,” Fiona said, and she dragged herself over to her skeleton monster friend. “I ... I think I could use ... a little help.”

Damien tried to offer, even raised a hand, but the poor boy fell to a knee the moment he did. He still had a hole in his chest, and his many bandages painted quite the image of broken bones and ruined insides.

“I’ll help-p,” Tash said. “Matt, Art, are, um, y-you guys ... gonna be ok?”

“We’re alive. We’ll heal,” Matt said. The three werewolves helped each other onto their feet, and their legs trembled, bleeding, earning groans from each of them. But they were standing, shaky knees, but standing. Super resilient, if also super stubborn.

Art didn’t look convinced. “Assuming Jacob and his spirit friend don’t kill us right now.”

The dripping ooze, around them and yet connected to nothing, chuckled. “Bless your heart, little doggie. To think I care about your intentions anymore? Well, you have no idea.”

“Then explain.” Noah pointed his finger out at the blackness, eyes glaring. It was surprising, seeing the bald, tattooed man looking angry, when he was so calm and composed in their initial outing. “Why’s an Incarnae working with this vampire?” A rather pointed hand gesture for Jacob, too. A lot of animosity, and as far as Tash knew, Avery’s pack had never interacted with Jacob or Black Blood directly. She had, but they hadn’t, except that one time with Tash.

Jacob walked up to Noah, and grinned at the man. Grin turned into something more sinister, before Jacob put a finger against the man’s chest. Noah didn’t stop him, only frowned. If Jacob wanted, he could shove the werewolf, and even a gentle push would be enough to knock the wobbling man over. He knew to not try and fight the elder.

Jacob’s expression softened, and he walked ahead on the road of gentle light. “You capable of getting back to your lair from here, Fiona?”

“I ... I am ... but, I warn you. Don’t reside in this in between world for long. Things exist here, old vampire, that should be avoided.” Vrral’s natural accent and speech mannerism came through more obviously for a moment, and Tash raised a brow as she reached down to help the spider lady lift the giant skeleton. Heavy! And Tash's busted leg screamed at the unwanted weight. Her vitae kept it together though, well enough she could help with this.

"Why thank you for the advice," Jacob said.

"Appreciated, thank you kindly," the darkness said.

Tash looked around at the endless void, and shivered at the sight of it. It was the sort of endlessness that made her think she was in space, in a space suit, abandoned by her fleeing spaceship. Without a way to propel herself, she'd be lost to the void of space, left adrift in nothingness. Chilling.

More chilling, was when Fiona reached out, and touched the darkness. Tash stared on as one of the spider legs on Fiona's back began to tug and pull at the strange blackness, as if plucking and pulling on stretched skin.

The skin tore! Tash raised a hand to cover her eyes as a black fog washed over her. Why was everything black, solid obsidian black? Black ooze, black endless void, black fog; she was sick of it. After this, she wanted bright lights, colorful garments, pink pajamas and cute kittens. After this, she was going to sit down, surround herself with a billion pillows, and watch a romcom.

Sighing, she tugged on Athalia's finger, holding one of the bones of her enormous hand, and struggled to drag the colossal creature into the black fog with Fiona. After this, she was going to throw out all her black clothes, suits included.

~~Julias~~

The ritual chamber might as well have been under the ocean. The black ooze had filled it top to bottom, and any human was bound to drown. But he didn't have the sensation of being under water, so maybe they wouldn't, but there was no denying that he was submerged in some sort of liquid. It was cold. It was unnatural. It was alive. He felt it pressing against his lips and nostrils, and if he tried to breathe, he was sure it'd enter his lungs.

And then Black Blood was gone, to somewhere with Jacob. Julias had no idea Jacob had become this close to the strange, alien entity. His departure meant the cave was no longer submerged in black liquid, and only silence remained. Even the creepy screams that had come from everywhere and nowhere were gone. Better for Julias to pace around, cradle his fucked up wrist, and worry about everything.

He looked over at Jennifer and Triss, the two of them standing beside the bowl, hands outstretched, and eyes focused. They were the tether. Jacob would find his way back using them, using Black Blood, and maybe his blood too. Owing Jacob a favor was not high on the list of things Julias wanted to have in debt, and this could prove to be entirely pointless.

No, it wasn't pointless. There was something going on. If he could help make sure everyone came back alive, he would. Stepping way out of his duties as a member of the Invictus triumvirate; he should trust the Right Hands to do this. But, no, he knew something was wrong, and if he had to owe the old monster a favor in order to make sure his childe came back alive, so be it.

Perhaps it was the fabled sire and childe link, warning him. Others had spoken of it, and Julias thought he felt it, but he could have been completely wrong. The flip-flopping in his mind grew irksome, and he shook the thoughts clear of his head. Having been submerged in what might as well have been death water didn't help any either, making him reconsider this choice of action. It'd been like swimming in the stomach of a ghost. Or the devil. Did he make a deal with the devil? He tried to tell himself no, but the encounter was not far off from how he imagined such a meeting to go.

Cutting off his wrist, with a shitty knife, like he was stuck in a bear trap and needed to get out. That was hell, in a way he hadn't expected. He'd been hurt plenty of times in his Kindred life, but something about forcing a knife through his own skin, muscle, flesh, and bone, was more than painful. It was sickening down to the soul; assuming vampires had one of those.

"He's back," Jen said.

Julias looked behind him to where they'd originally entered, but Triss touched his arm and pointed to the walls. They were bleeding again. The weird, black ooze trickled down over the cracks of the cave wall, over the red, painted symbols, and the etched carvings, seeping into the crevices as it leaked onto the floor. Other parts of the wall were covered in the strange black liquid dripping upward, and oozing upward, as if gravity was a joke to this monster. Maybe it was.

He sighed, and braced himself for the sickening sensation of being submerged. It wasn't too bad; he'd had to do stake outs submerged in water before, and as long as he didn't try to breathe, he didn't have to deal with water in the lungs. Drowning wasn't the issue, a strange form of claustrophobia and dread was the issue. He did not envy submarine crews.

Once the black liquid filled the cave again, a hand came out of the bowl, Jacob's. Triss and Jen both reached in without hesitation, and began to pull the man out of the bowl of guts. The entrails of his sacrifice had turned black, and it looked less like entrails, and more like some sort of swamp. Except, the swamp's mud didn't stick to Jacob's arm, sliding off of him cleanly as the two women pulled him out.

And after Jacob came more people. Oh shit. Several hands, from several different people. Julias reached out with his good hand, and pulled on one, as Jacob pulled on another, and the girls took one each. Noah, Arturo, and Matthew. Clara, Jessy, and Eric. Then Damien, and finally, Jack. Each one climbed out of the black ooze of the bowl, and each one rolled over its edge to collapse onto the cave floor.

They looked like shit.

Once they were all out, Julias looked around for the others. “Where’s Natasha? And the Begotten?”

As the werewolves and vampires forced themselves to their feet, each finding something to grab or lean against, bowl or wall, Jack held up his hand.

“Tash is with them, helping them get back to their lair. They said they can heal better there, and she was the least injured of us.”

“Least injured.” Julias frowned at the group, but as he looked Jack up and down, the frown faded. The kid really did look like hell, and Julias set a hand on his shoulder as he looked the boy in the eye. Judging from the wound, a bullet must have clipped the side of his other eye socket and smashed out along the bone; the ear was gone, too. Painful, really painful. Only the unnatural vitae of the boy’s vampire body was keeping the wound from being fatal, with bits of the inside of his skull exposed.

“I’m fine,” the boy said. He was most definitely not fine. He was shaking in pain, and he looked downtrodden, as if he’d failed his mission. Julias knew the look, it was his look.

Jacob laughed, and wiped off his knuckles. “You sure, Clarice? Looked to me like you were all about to die.”

Jack winced, and looked over his shoulder at the elder. With a moment to wallow in misery, Jack let his head drop, and stared down at the floor. Julias might as well have been looking in a mirror. Considering the rescue mission seemed to be a success, the boy had to be upset about something else. Something else was probably Angela.

They were all still in the strange, black water, but none of them were surprised. Must have been how Black Blood managed to get them out from wherever. The murky depths made them all look depressed though, and Jack looked like he was morose incarnate.

“The hunters,” Black Blood said, voice rippling through the currents of the black, “were more than prepared. Why, they even had someone familiar with the workings of the realms.” The bassy voice chuckled, in an all too familiar way, Jacob’s way. As it laughed, the water began to drain away into nothing, inch by slow inch, as if the spirit was delighting in reveling in the downtrodden group. “But don’t worry about that old bat. I’ll get my claws on her, soon enough.”

“You don’t get to touch anyone!” Matt said, swinging his arm across the air in front of him. Dramatic. “The hell do you think you’re doing, spirit? What—”

Everyone fell back as the draining water, waist deep at that point, shot outward, and a giant hand of black, leather skin, erupted from the raised waves. The crashing water, with a great mass it did not have before, sent everyone down onto their backs and stomach, everyone except Jacob. The hand, colossal, the size of a person, slammed down against Matt with all the grace of a car crash, and pinned him.

Everyone stared on, jaw dropping, as the raging spirit began to manifest. Something above them, connected to the ceiling, began to take form. The wrist of the giant hand had emerged from the draining water, but above them a face began to take shape, black, almost shiny with its ooze texture. The form remained vague, without details, but there were enough to see eyes, a mouth, and a nose. Enough for lips to move, and speak.

“If I had listened to my friend Malachi, you would be dead, idiot dog. So hold your horses. The only reason you and your pack get to stay in my town, is because I think you might serve a purpose. Red Tide and the Street-Tail King, they step onto my land and tarnish my waters; deal with them. Until then, dog, accept the truce I offered before, or I will end you myself. We done?”

Matt, giant of a man, was a bleeding, ruined mess. Black Blood hadn't hurt him, far as Julias could tell, the spirit was only taking advantage of Matt's wounds. Then again, seeing a giant face of shadow and ooze looking down at them from the ceiling, with a hand that belonged on a fifty-foot-tall giant made of black leather and metal, put this alien entity's power into perspective. Jacob had made friends with a god.

Matt grunted and groaned, but said nothing. The sort of man who'd die to uphold his views, conviction, honor, and all the stupidity that went with such concepts. Still, he seemed like a nice guy, and Julias hoped the alien creature wasn't going to kill him for the man's idiocy.

“We get it,” Arturo said as he walked over to Matt. “Let him go.”

Black Blood said nothing for a few seconds, as if contemplating killing the werewolf. It wasn't like they could stop him. The only people in the room not injured were the Circle of the Crone, and the two witches took their queue from Jacob, who would have probably delighted in the death of another of Avery's pack.

But, with time, the spirit raised its colossal hand. The limb disappeared into the draining, murky depths, and the face of ooze above them melded into the stone, before it disappeared.

“Y'all take good care of yourselves now, you hear?” Departing words from the alien entity. Jacob was struggling to not laugh, and Julias was struggling to not pull out his pistol and shoot the man.

“As you can see,” Jacob said, gesturing to the large group, “things went badly. Your instincts were right, Julias. Not your Invictus plans that you trust so much, but your instincts that told you your childe was in danger. An instinct of the blood.” The old monster came up to him, and pat him on the shoulder, same as Julias had done for Jack moments before. “Wanna come over to my side of the fence?”

“We’re already on the same side.” This old bastard was going to be the death of them all, if he continued to cause strife in such indirect ways. But, better indirect than direct, like Garry, he supposed. “Report. Everyone going to survive? Uratha need medical attention?”

“I ... I don’t know,” Eric said.

Noah rolled his eyes, and got down on a knee beside the sitting, trembling man. “Of course you don’t. You won’t let us teach you anything.”

Dragging himself back to his feet with Arturo’s help, he and Matthew knelt down next to Clara, and helped sit her up against the wall.

“You ok?” Matt said.

“Y ... Yeah. That ... gargoyle thing...”

“Gargoyle thing?” Julias said.

Jack stepped around the bowl, forced his head up, and cradled his face with one hand. “The Begotten working with Jeremiah and Angela. I ... christ, I’ll do up a proper report tomorrow night with the details. We hurt them, killed a few of them, and Black Blood forced them to do ... something. Not sure how they did it, but they pushed us out of the nightmare we were in somehow. No idea, except from what Black Blood said, that Elen did it.”

“That Elen woman needs to die,” Damien said. Many of the group nodded.

“I saw her,” Jessy said. The poor woman looked like someone had body slammed her from the Eiffel Tower. “Old woman. Should be dead yesterday.”

Jacob raised a hand, as if correcting a classroom. “Hmm, maybe not die? A woman like that has knowledge.” Everyone turned, and stared at the old monster, frowns galore, until he put his hands up. “Ok ok, maybe not.”

“So we have time to take a breather then,” Julias said. “That’s something. No paranormal died, and we have a lot more knowledge now than we did before. This is progress. Painful, but progress.”

“Painful?” Art said. “The fuck did you—”

Julias pulled out his stump and showed it to him, earning chuckles from the Nosferatu. Everyone winced.

~~Antoinette~~

“That ... that is good.” Antoinette sighed relief, and the tension in her body melted away, as Julias explained the rescue efforts of Jacob. “I am impressed with your actions, Mire. To owe my old friend a favor is a dangerous thing, and he will ask it of you in ways you will not be able to predict.”

“We’ll see. I’m pretty good at predicting,” the Ventrue said over the phone. “I regret ever letting the boy go. I let my emotions get the better of me, and thought rescuing Jessy and the others worth the risk.”

She did not agree with his plan, but she had to admit, it was a very time sensitive situation. Extreme acts of ludicrous bravery were, sometimes, fruitful. Most often, they were not, and survivor bias was a deadly sin.

“I look forward to seeing my love,” she said, implying the obvious with a deeper tone.

“First thing tomorrow night. But, he’s in a bad way, Prince. They all are. Jacob and his ... friend, really saved them from what I guess was a battle they were losing.”

She was glad that it was the Ventrue that owed Jacob, and not her. And yet, she could not deny that she too owed Jacob in a way, for his efforts. Perhaps not in a capacity her old friend would hold her to, but nonetheless.

And Black Blood. That cursed creature was involved. She did not wish that, for that alien entity to seep its claws, its dark liquid, its insidiousness into her city, least of her all fellow Kindred, and lover.

“Thank you, Mire, for your ... for everything.”

She could almost hear the man smile.

“No problem, Prince. We both love that stupid kid.”

---

If she would not be seeing her love until tomorrow night, then she had time to follow up on the new development.

She left her office, and moved down into the depths of her labyrinth. Daniel followed behind her, and she nodded at him over her shoulder as he stepped in beside her.

“How fair your journeys into the realms?” she said.

“Still having trouble tracking down the source. At first I suspected Jacob was causing these weird disturbances, but now I don’t know. It might be Jeremiah.”

“Ah yes, Jeremiah. Twice now the hunters and their plans have been foiled. I fear they will do something desperate, in retaliation.”

“Jeremiah seems like the sort of man who will respond harshly, but with some degree of intelligence.” Daniel adjusted his glasses with a single finger, before he slipped his hands into his trench coat pockets. “Unfortunately, he’s proving far too unpredictable.”

“Agreed.” With a begotten working for the man, his avenues of attack had increased tremendously, to the point she would not be able to predict his actions so easily. “It may be time we offer Azamel some freedom, in return for her help against the man.”

“I’m starting to wonder if she knew Jeremiah had a Begotten under his thumb, and waited on the info since the beginning, to put us in this position.”

“Perhaps.” The old creature was patient enough. “But, I do believe she is also too prideful to readily admit that, in all this, she is the hunted, and we are her walls. It is a difficult position to be in.”

“Are you excusing her behavior?”

“Non. The old monster will have to answer for her deceptions, but at the same time, we must ask for her help in dealing with Jeremiah, and his Begotten slave.”

“I see.” Daniel nodded, and followed her. She had not explained to him what she was doing yet, but he followed nonetheless. Loyal to a fault, her old friend. And he would be able to guess, soon enough.

There were many chambers in her labyrinth of floors and halls, of rooms and alcoves, that she did not allow others to explore. Off limits to her ghouls, to her love, and to her new student. Unsightly secrets, dark, dirty, in ways that did not become her, and the image she had crafted for herself.

She opened one of the doors, thick and sealed with many bars of metal. The mechanical padlock was old fashioned, but complicated, sturdy, and required a specific code that only she knew. It could not be picked. Perhaps it was time to move onto the digital age of locks, as she had done in many other places, but there was something powerful in the simplicity of the old. Unless someone came in with a blowtorch, they were not getting through.

She took a moment to look through the window of one of the cells. There were a half dozen humans, kept alive for one purpose only: death as the occasional, emergency meal, or sacrifice. There had been the time Jack was a mess of ruin, and she had fed him three souls, to insure his daily sleep would revitalize him. She did not tell him the details, tell him of how she kept the truly wicked here as blood bags, to be killed at her whim. Murderers, that she murdered without pity. It was better that such knowledge not be shared needlessly, lest it change the view Natasha and Jack had of her.

Perhaps Jack should know, though? It would be a step in their relationship, but not one she felt comfortable making, not yet. For now, she would keep her darker activities between herself, and Daniel. And for now, she needed one sacrifice.

She did not make a show of it, did not indulge in the kill or dance in the blood. She did not enjoy this, but it had to be done. A simple use of majesty to turn one of the sacrifices into a dotting slave, willing to do everything and anything for her. This one was a man who had killed his wife in a fit of rage. There was a certain justice to killing him, she supposed, but she tried to not frame it in such close-minded definitions. He was a sacrifice, and a kine who no longer deserved to live. She needed fuel. Nothing more.

The sacrifice followed them down, and down, and down into the deepest pits of her tower, far further than the undercity of Dolareido went. There was a secret route that connected the labyrinth to the Dolareido tunnels, but it was old, and she had long sealed it off. With recent events, she considered re-opening it, in case suicidal hunters showed up at her tower, and decided to nuke her home, literally.

Deep, and deeper, until the air was hard to breathe for the sacrifice. Down here she felt comfortable with the more grandiose experiments, the ones she shared with no one save her fellow dragon Daniel, the ones she was concerned could implode and destroy much if not deep underground. Down here, she could pursue her desire for knowledge, and not worry for the ramifications.

“I know what you’re going to do,” Daniel said, following behind her in the dark hallway of metal.

“I have to speak with it, Daniel.”

“You really don’t. Last time—”

“Last time was different. There need not be strife between us and the entity.”

Sighing, Daniel shook his head, but followed. She did not like dismissing him so, especially when he made a good point, but it was a point she had already debated. This conversation needed to happen, and as the entity encroached on her city more and more, it would happen more often.

She opened the doors to her final chamber, and once the sacrifice had entered, Daniel closed it behind them.

Above her was the same chandelier as in her main experiments room. On the floor, the same symbols, drawings that represented natural balances and mysteries in the machine of the universe. The average person did not understand the power in the enigma of mathematics, how mathematics was the language of existence itself, and how reality as they knew it existed upon the foundation of numbers. Many of those, she captured in the symbols below. With the wavelength provided by the chandelier, and the vibration provided by her machines, she created resonance. And certain things were attracted to varying types of resonance.

Black Blood required more than resonance to summon. The entity required sacrifice. It required blood, and flesh. Disgusting creature.

Antoinette did not waste time, and did not let the moment build. It was an abhorrent ritual, and she would not relish the kill, like the witches would. A nod to Daniel was enough, and her sheriff stabbed the man in the back of the head with a knife.

No pain, no misery, no fake words or fanfare. The man fell onto the center of the symbols, beneath the chandelier. The walls of metal, covered in more of the symbols she had spent decades perfecting, were the murderer's last sight, before he slumped to the floor. Daniel, with knife held, squatted down over the kill, and split them open from chin to crotch in one, clean slice.

Vampires craved blood, not muscle, meat, organ, or bone. To see a kine have their insides become their outsides was not a pleasing sight, and she frowned at the mess it made, a mess she would have to clean; no thrall or ghoul would be allowed down here to clean it.

But the deed was done. She walked over to the machine, a large thing of pipes, metal compartments, and digital readouts. It was a far older version of the resonance machine she used in her main experiments chamber, with Daniel and Natasha, but still young enough to have digital components. She set the frequency to high, and set the chandelier's wavelength to the strange blue.

Now, all that remained was to wait, as the humming sound vibrated along the walls, against the floor, and into the chandelier.

They did not have to wait long. The blue light faded away, hidden in the encroaching darkness, as black liquid began to drip from the metal ceiling. As if the ceiling had cracks in it, veins of black began to form over their heads, and soon began to bleed its ooze onto the floor. It was coming, and she folded her arms across her chest and suit jacket as she waited for the inevitable.

The alien creature took its time, ooze dripping both up and down from within the circle of summoning. It could not leave, or at least, if it did leave the circle it would have no essence to sustain itself. She doubted the creature needed to concern itself with such things, old and powerful as it was, and it remained within the summoning circle she had created purely for its own comfort.

The ooze filled the space, creating a pool of black two feet deep upon the summoning circle, as if pressed to glass around its edges. It also formed the same circle above, against the ceiling, over the chandelier, and the bleeding black dripped up and down continuously. The corpse disappeared underneath the slow waves, unable to float in the strange obsidian. At least, that was how it seemed at first, but one of its hands rose from the black. And then the other. And then, the corpse sat up.

“Well, butter my biscuits!” The corpse had adopted a new voice, and as black oozed from his eyes and nostrils, he looked at her as he stood up.

Antoinette raised her eyebrows, looked at Daniel, who only shrugged, before looking to the corpse. “... quoi?”

“Don’t worry yourself over it. Now, what can I do you for, high and mighty Prince of Slut City?” The strange corpse tilted his head to the sides, as if stretching his neck, and dusted off his shoulders. With body split open, throat to pelvis, much of what was supposed to be inside the body, fell out of the body. What things were not well attached, landed in the ooze, disappearing, while the man’s intestines fell but remained attached to the body. Why the gory state was required, Antoinette did not know, but without it, the creature would not be summoned.

“I wanted to speak of your actions tonight.”

“Ah, yes, I figured as much. Love to have your fingers in everything, don’t you.” The corpse shrugged, and began to pace, hands in the small of his back.

“What is with the absurd accent? The last time we spoke—”

“Oh I dunno, just trying it out. This poor fool you brought me has nothing new. But Jacob, this one time, brought me a fellar from the South, and I—”

“Enough.” Antoinette shook her head, and glared at the body. “Show yourself. I have no intention of speaking with a corpse. Not this time.”

The corpse stopped moving, stared at her, and considered. For a moment she thought the entity might leave; it was her asking for its favor, in visiting after all, and yet she was demanding it abandoned the charade. But the entity, like Jacob, loved to talk, to toy with others, to be a thorn in their side. She had earned the right to see the creature itself.

“Fine.” The corpse fell back down into the pool. And once it was gone, underneath the waves of black, the room filled with darkness.

Antoinette took a step back, and looked around as the liquid fog filled the whole of the large chamber in mere moments. Daniel reached for his sword, and she did not stop him; she had expected the creature to at least stay where she provided it essence. It did not want to. The strange liquid crashed into the walls, but was weightless, not affecting her or Daniel despite it washing over them. It took only seconds for the two of them to be buried in its obsidian depths. The blue light of the chandelier was almost gone, and Antoinette squinted to make out shapes in the dark.

There was a face, in the black. Except the face was at least twenty feet tall, and it floated over the corpse, looking at the two vampires. The eyes and lips, the nose and chin, all were vague blurs in the ink they swam in. But it was there, the creature, its actual body, encompassing them all in its presence.

It was terrifying.

She steeled herself, and frowned at the giant visage in the murky depths. This was the creature that haunted the shadows of her city, affected it in ways she could not understand, and undermined her efforts to control it. Determining how, exactly, the alien entity was undermining her was difficult, but in her studies, and Daniel's previous investigation, they had found many places where people behaved strangely, did strange things to each other. If she had not known better, she would have assumed them servants of the Circle of the Crone, these random kine who explored the functions of their own bodies with knives and needles.

This thing, this creature, was a menace, but she needed to know.

"Thank you," she said.

"Thank you?" Black Blood said, its unfitting Southern accent remaining, except now filled with overwhelming bass and inhuman depth that shook her body to the core. "You have nerve, little lady. I've offered you a truce, to let you be, while you leave me to mine, and you continue to poke your nose where it don't belong."

"My experiments do not affect you."

"Don't they?" The enormous face grinned at her as it chuckled, heavy voice causing the depths of the Earth to tremble. "You've summoned denizens of my city. You acquired a seeing eye, at one point, didn't you?"

Seeing eye? The squid-like creature, she supposed, that had spoke of Maria's involvement. She could ask Black Blood about Maria directly, now that she had taken the time to summon the monstrosity, but that would expose that she did not know what Maria's intentions were. It would also expose that she believed the creature she and Natasha had summoned. Giving this alien entity any more information was not something she wished to do.

"I want to speak of your move against the hunters, tonight."

"Of course you do." The bleeding silhouette of black drifted around in her chamber; though, its size prevented much movement. Large as the room was, Black Blood's visage was enormous, and it had little room to move through the murky shadows. "Or, was it you want to know about monsters?"

"... both."

"And why should I tell you these things?"

"I believe it will benefit us both. You wish for things to continue as they do, do you not?"

"Heh. Well, Malachi might not appreciate me sharing the details. You want more info? Go ask my friend."

This new voice and attitude the spirit wielded was insufferable. She expected a colossal entity of unknowable intent, with voice as alien as the stars, to be difficult to understand. Instead, this creature dare impersonate a normal man, with a normal voice, and talk 'buddy buddy' about Jacob, as if Black Blood could understand friendship or comradery. It was a spirit, and understood only how to further its agenda, nothing more.

“But,” the spirit continued, “that boy you got under your thumb, the Terry boy. My oh my, I see potential in that little man. Jacob called it right.”

“W ... Why do you speak of my love?”

“Jack Terry? That kid is going places, Prince. And don’t worry about him, I’ll keep an eye out for him.”

The alien’s words only worsened her worry, a thousand fold.

“I ... I wanted,” she said, “to propose a deal.”

“A deal? With a spirit? Them’s dangerous waters, vampire. I’ll hold you to any deal you make.”

“I am sure you will.” Sighing, she began to pace, and did her best to ignore the black water that permeated everything. It was not real, or at least, it was not the physical body of Black Blood, only some effect of it. That did not make her feel better. “Chaos has come to my doorstep as a raging tide in a single year.”

“That it has.”

“And I fear these hunters will bring far more damage than we could have estimated.”

“Probably.”

“And—”

“And you want me to do something.” The inhuman voice chuckled, bassy rumbles vibrating her walls, and causing the black liquid to churn. “Me, who you have shunned and refused to speak with. Me, who you only discuss in dark corners, and ignore. Me, who rules the other side of your town. Our town.”

“ ... yes.”

“Well now, ain’t that something.” The voice chuckled yet again, breaking into more of a laugh, a very Jacob laugh. “Jacob and I have an agreement, little missy. You got a request for me? Ask him. And besides, I saved your boy, and the others. Way I see it, you owe me; but don’t you worry your pretty head none, Jacob will take care of it. In the mean time, how about you worry about yours, and I’ll worry about mine?”

“Black Blood!” She glared at the shadowy creature, its enormous face in the murky black, and clenched her hands into fists at her side. “Do not dismiss me so easily.”

“You had your chance. I’m done with you.”

And like someone had set off an explosive, the black liquid shot outward from the center of the room. The corpse upon the floor exposed, but unmoving, the dark ooze vanished into the nether as raging wind twisted and turned the onyx into the air, before it faded. In a single moment, like someone popping a balloon, Black Blood returned to its realm, leaving her and Daniel standing in the blue light of the chandelier, the hum of the resonance machine their background noise, and a corpse at their feet.

“Merde.” With a sigh, she turned around, and headed for the door.

Chapter 73

~~Jack~~

Arriving in Jacob's cave was a weird experience. Climbing out of the remains of a kine's guts had been creepy as fuck, but not weird. It wasn't exactly something Jack hadn't figured the old Nosferatu had: sacrifice bowl, crazy symbols on the walls in blood, all the typical witchy witch stuff. The weird part was how there was a huge group of them, in what must have been a very private place. It had made him feel like he was crashing a séance or something. He was happy to get out of there.

Jessy, him, and Damien took a drive, and decided to drop by the Invictus HQ. There were thralls there they could feed on in emergency situations, and the three of them were beat up enough to warrant using them. Plus, they were the Right Hands of the Invictus, and had earned the right. The ride there was painful though, physically and mentally, and the three of them radiated depression with every long second.

Jack sat in the middle of the wide car, Damien and Jessy each taking a window. They all looked like they'd been through a war, and Damien's bandages only added to the painful image.

"How's your skull?" Jessy said.

"Throbs." Throbbing was weird. He didn't expect throbbing, since that was a function of blood being pumped through the body, irritated and swollen. The touch of air against the inner flesh and exposed bone insides, was agony, and every second he channeled his vitae as best he could into healing it. He could tell the inside of his skull was no longer exposed though, having healed somewhat, but the eye was still gone, the bone still a mess, and he kept a hand over the wound half in fear of something inside falling out.

She pat him on the back and smirked at him. “You did good, coming to my rescue that quick.”

“Not quick enough.”

“Speed wasn’t the issue,” Damien said. “Unfortunately, they were more than prepared for any intrusion. Even Jacob and his ... friend, were expelled.”

Nodding, Jessy put her hands on her knees, and looked out the window. “I was out for most of Jacob’s crazy rescue. But, I think I was submerged in ... inside Black Blood? Fucking hell.”

Jack winced. Did they want to let the driver know about this? Well, it wasn’t a secret, he supposed, since the monsters and the werewolves knew.

“My sire cut off his hand for the ritual. Disturbing. And now he owes Jacob, I guess. More disturbing. And ... and...”

His two friends sighed, and sank into the seats of the car, as did he. Better to wait until they were out of the vehicle to talk about that.

---

After the three of them had a meal, and nearly sucked each thrall to death, they took time to sit down in one of the secure conference rooms. A big table for only the three of them, but Invictus knew their shit, and had soundproofed it.

“I let Angela live,” he said. Yep, off like a band-aid. Except the band-aid tore off hair and skin with it.

Damien nodded. “That ... was a mistake, I admit.”

“Yeap.” Nodding as well, Jessy leaned back in her chair, and slowly spun it around in a circle as she looked up. The three of them were still very beat up, but they would heal faster now, and once dawn arrived, their sleep would wipe the wounds away, mostly. “Can’t blame you though. You’re young, and her mom was right there, right?”

“My age shouldn’t be a factor.”

“Well, it is.” Shrugging, she continued to spin, like a kid who couldn’t sit still. “Julias, Maria, and Michael all agreed to make you a Right Hand, knowing full well you’re young. Embraced at, what, twenty? And with barely a year of your second life under your belt. They knew shit like this would happen ... not that they’ll be happy about it.”

“Athalia, on the other hand.” Damien pulled out his short sword, and began to spin it along his knuckles. Working on his control and dexterity, probably. “She was right there, and she asked you to stop. And I saw, Jack, that you were going to ignore her pleas, and kill Angela anyway. Too slow, though. So now Angela lives, and Athalia will not be happy with you.”

“Yeah, thanks for rubbing it in.” Jack lowered his head to set his forehead on the table; very, very gently. Still couldn’t see out one side of his face, and the attempt to open his eyelid was enough to shock his body still with pain. He was getting used to pain, but getting sick of it, too.

“Just assessing the situation. We were developing a strange partnership with Azamel, but now that you’ve offended Athalia, someone Azamel holds dear, the relationship may be strained.”

“That reminds me,” Jack said. “Damien, you almost got yourself killed!”

“I ... I know.”

Jessy raised a brow. “Think we all fit into that bill.”

“Damien did a crazy rush move to save Fiona.”

“Oh! Oh!” Jessy stopped spinning, and leaned over the table toward Damien. “Did it work?”

“... yes.” The Mekhet tried to hide the smile, but a small one got through.

“That is some guaranteed pussy.”

Jack lifted his head, and facepalmed; again, very gently. “It’s not guaranteed pussy, Jess. You can’t—”

“Sure, if Fiona was more of a feminist or something. But Fiona is a classic girly girl, who wants a man to rescue her, sweep her off her feet, throw her on a bed, and fuck her brains out.”

Jack stared at the Gangrel. The damn woman’s grin was big and unending.

“Jessy,” he said, “you are the most sexist person I know.”

“Pffft. Is it sexist if it’s true?”

“I...” Ok, weird topic, and he wasn’t exactly in a position to speak with authority. This was like a strange sort of sexual harassment from the boss, in a way, now that he thought about it. His senior making crass, rude comments about sex, and frequently. The Invictus had no HR department. And, just maybe, there was a little wisdom, in the asshole’s words.

“Um.” Damien squirmed a little, and twisted in his chair a bit. “I ... asked her to go on a date, when we escaped.”

“Aha!” Jessy slapped her palm against the table. All three of them groaned. “Shit, sorry. Arg, christ, my head.” Everyone took a moment to let the pain settle, before she continued. “I’m telling you, Damien, she wants the D.”

“ ... the D?”

Jack rolled his eyes. “You spend too much time on the internet.”

“I do not! I just ain’t some antisocial twerp, like you!” She shrugged at him, and pulled out her phone. “But I got this Twitter thing going, and people just keep posting the most random, stupid, nonsensical shit. And for some reason, I keep reading it.”

“Stop.” Jack reached out, and pushed down on her phone. “Really, stop. It’s not healthy.”

She rolled her eyes, but put the phone away anyway, thank god. “She’s just a girl, so be gentle with her, Damien. But at the same time, she’s got a huge sex drive, so, be gentle with her, but make sure to fuck her lots. Here, I’ll give you some tips.” Jessy got up, walked around the table, sat beside Damien, and put her hands on the table. “So first you got the clit, right? You can treat that with some love, get some juicy orgasms, but it’s really an appetizer to better stuff. You got the g-spot, and then there’s these sweet spots really fucking deep in there, and—”

Jack threw up his hands. “Ok! Back onto the serious stuff.”

Damien nodded, and a quick glance from him showed his joy at being rescued. “Did you learn anything we didn’t, Jessy?”

“Not much. You know the monster’s name is Sándor, and he’s working for Jeremiah. Called him master. I did see that old bat Elen do some especially fucked up shit, drawing symbols in the fucking air with Eric’s blood! And she was nuts. Talked about voices, and treated the body like it was some sort of ... machine, I guess, like it was some sort of special, magical machine? And she was going to do drawings and shit, and somehow learn things from Eric’s body.”

Jack and Damien looked at each other, and winced.

“Yeah, that ... kind of makes sense, I guess,” Jack said. “Based on the rituals, we got the impression she was doing something with ... bodies, and ... haruspex.”

“What’s—”

“Divination by entrails,” he said. “Movies and stuff like to pass it off as a horror trope, as if religions thousands of years ago did it to humans. They really just did it to animals, but ... I mean, if this woman is doing this to people, in a way, then there’s something to the trope I guess.”

“Fucking nasty.”

Nodding, Damien shifted away from Jessy a little, who was still in close proximity. “The problem now, is that the hunters are likely to rely on this monster’s lair as their headquarters, and something tells me we won’t be able to get back in the same way. Jacob and his spirit friend either.”

Jessy put up her hands, and almost slammed the table again. Everyone winced in preparation, but she stopped herself in time. “I vote we stop feeling bad about the situation. We came out on top! You rescued yours truly, and two werewolves to boot. I saw that a few of the hunters died, so that’s a win. And we learned a shit load about what the hunters are up to. This Elen woman was trying to use Eric for haruspox, and—”

“Haruspex,” Jack said.

“Dude, whatever. She was using him to get information about Azamel. And there was a specific line one of them said, that he was going to give them information he knew, and information he didn’t know. This Elen is fucking scary.”

They all nodded. She sounded scary, yeah, and the picture Jack had seen of her made her seem like some sort of old witch. The new knowledge only added to that image.

Jack nodded toward her. “The gargoyle monster. Tell us about it?”

“Fucker was huge! I mean, when he came into Eric’s apartment, he was just an average looking white dude in a hoodie, bit of gruff on his face, some sort of European accent, and he could punch like a truck. In the nightmare though? Fucker pretended to be a statue, and got the drop on us. It was like fighting off a god damn giant, and the fucker had four arms and wings, so it wasn’t like a normal fight, right? I got behind him though, and Eric and Clara transformed and ... and...” Jessy smiled, dreamily, and stared off into space.

Jack and Damien blinked at each other, before Jack snapped his fingers in front of her face. “Allo?”

“Er, yeah. Werewolves get pretty big, right? But I can’t help but notice a lack of dick and balls.”

Jack exercised every ounce of restraint he could, to not slam his fractured skull and ruined face into the table. “You noticed that, while fighting?”

“Course I did. I have eyes. I notice everything.”

Yeah, no bias there, none at all, nope. Jack rolled his eye, and the sensation sent pain through him as his muscles tried to rotate the missing eye.

“But... ,” she continued, “you think that, like, it would come out, if they got horny in that form?”

“Jessy,” Jack said, “I’ve seen those beasts fight, and I’m telling you, the last thing you want to be thinking in the presence of a werewolf in their fighting form, is sex. They are titans of aggression and animal instinct. They get caught up in violence like a human gets drunk. Blood drunk! You'll ... you ... you aren't listening to a word I'm saying."

Jessy had her elbow on the table, chin in her palm, and had resumed staring into nothing, with a happy smile on her face. At this point he was sure she was half doing it just to torment him indirectly with her refusal to take things seriously. But he was also sure she really did find a nine-foot-tall beast of muscle, teeth, and claws attractive.

Clara had been kind of attractive too, in a way, he supposed. Transformed, she did still have the curves of a woman, just put on an eight-foot body, with a short layer of fur all over it. Not exactly his cup of tea, but when she licked him, there was definitely a hint of femininity to her that had grabbed his attention.

Ok, now he was definitely hanging out with Jessy too much.

"I'm worried about Tash," Damien said. "She's still in the nightmare, and while I think we all trust Fiona, not sure we feel that way about Athalia anymore."

"Agreed," Jack said. "But I think she'll be fine. Athalia is too hurt to do anything, and I suspect she'll be out of commission for days. Azamel needs us to help with the hunters, so she'll push to make sure her Begotten don't harm us."

"Yeah, yeah ok."

"You should visit Fiona." Getting up, Jack stretched out, and regretted it. Old habits were going to kill him. He didn't need to stretch, didn't need to breathe, didn't need to do any of those things that he should stop trying to do while his corpse of a body healed itself. "Tomorrow night, I mean, after we've healed. After she's had a moment to heal, too, I assume. That includes you, Jessy."

“W-What? Hey, I will, I will.”

“And please don’t get yourself killed trying to seduce a wolf.”

“He’s a werewolf, Jack, not an actual wolf, or tiger or bear or whatnot. They can talk and shit while transformed.”

That all sounded like an admission of going-to-tap-that from the Gangrel, and Jack smirked at her as he started his walk to the safety sleeping vault. Julias didn’t want them making any trips outside the HQ for the rest of the night, and he could most definitely understand that. Time to get some sleep in the Xnomina basement; safe and secure behind many walls with a hundred thralls armed and ready.

But, would any of that stop a Begotten? It seemed like they could travel anywhere, and even around barriers.

He did not look forward to the nightmares that idea was going to give him.

~~Natasha~~

Nightmares. She did not like nightmares. Nightmares were a hot button for vampires, even if they tried to pass them off, because of how bad torpor could get for many of them. They were all afraid of them to some extent or another, and all of them were afraid of the long torpor, and how those nightmares could twist their minds. Seeing nightmares as actual things in front of her, that she could touch and taste and see and smell and hear with crystal clarity? She had to wonder if the long torpor would bring her nightmares like this.

She, Fiona, and the enormous skeleton in her hands came out of the darkness, and into more darkness. If she didn’t see another shadow for the rest of her second life, it’d be too soon. But, at least this place had enough light to see by, and she groaned as she helped pull the giant skeleton into a graveyard.

It wasn't a classic graveyard, but something more like an elephant graveyard, if elephants were a hundred feet tall. The bones! The bones were so massive, and they had tusks and stuff, giant skulls that belonged on ancient, dead gods. They sat upon the sands, so colossal, they may as well have been buildings.

Tash gently set Athalia's arm down on the dark sand, and stood, staring. "Um ... if ... if the s-sun comes up here, will ... will it—"

"There is no sun here," Fiona said. "This nightmare, as most, does not change. If Athalia and I were not Eshmaki, then perhaps there would be cause for concern. But we are monsters of darkness, and our lairs are always dark." Sighing, exhausted, the spider woman let go of Athalia as well, and sat down beside a giant ribcage that was half buried in the sand.

Tash dragged herself over to her, and sat down beside her, each of them leaning back against a separate rib. Before her, was the endless desert, and the night sky, moonlight shining down on them all.

Total. Silence.

Tash strained her hearing as best she could, but all she managed to hear was Fiona's ragged breathing. There was no breeze in this graveyard, and no movement or chirps from any insect, arachnid, reptile, bird, or mammal. No clouds above. The moonlight was strong, the moon itself full, and the nightmare held no barrier between her and the sky. Everything was laid bare, and all that remained of whatever had existed here before, was sand, and bone.

It was a nightmare, and Fiona said these chambers didn't really change. So, it was someone's nightmare? What poor soul suffered this?

“A ... Angela...” Athalia managed to say, her once raspy, banshee screams and shrieks, now reduced to a pained whisper.

“She’s alive,” Tash said. “I tried t ... t-to kill her. So did Jack. She ... she—”

“Is a monster,” the skeleton monster said, half of her enormous jaw still missing. “I know. But ... she’s ... my monster.”

All Natasha could do, was frown at Athalia, and lean back. What words could she say? Athalia seemed like an intelligent woman, and no doubt anything Tash said was something Athalia had struggled with already.

“I appreciate ... w-what you did, though,” Tash said. “You helped us a lot. And even ... fought your d-d-d-daughter.”

“Seeing her again ... stirred memories.” With a great, heavy sigh, the giant skeleton tried to move. Nothing, only a few twitches of her arm. “She was always a problem child, and moving from city to city only made it worse. I left her with an orphanage, and ... only made things worse, I suppose.”

Seeing a skeleton creature lament past decisions about her daughter was a very strange sight, and all Tash could do was nod. It wasn’t a problem she’d ever have to deal with; that was a vampire’s curse, the inability to have children. Begotten? Uratha? Far as I knew, they could all procreate, if they had sex in their human forms. Uratha probably could if they had sex in their wolf forms, too, with normal wolves; weird thought. Vampires didn’t get to have children, they had childer. Not the same thing, not at all. Taking a tiny bundle of creation, and helping it grow into a human? There was something special and magical about that. A vampire spreading vampirism was more like a virus spreading the disease.

“I can’t b-blame you,” Natasha said. “I ... have a childe. Vivienne. I ... almost n-never talk to her. She’s her own woman now, w-working for the ... Invictus. I ... I d-don't ... yeah." It was hard to convey the feeling of being inadequate at parenting. Harder, to convey the feeling of being inadequate at siring. There was no way to cross that communication gap, so Tash just shrugged, sighed as she pulled her knee up to her chest, and set her chin on it. "Will you be ok?"

"Yes. But ... I will heal faster, if you bury me."

Tash almost let the weirdness of that request shock her, but then she didn't. It was a graveyard, sort of, and Athalia was a skeleton when in the nightmare. Of course she'd want to be buried in order to heal herself. Some vampires did that, too, buried themselves deep where they felt more secure during the day. Gangrel could do it in strange ways, merging with the dirt and earth and stuff.

But burying a giant skeleton wouldn't be easy. With a groan, she crawled over to Athalia, literally, and started shoveling with her hands. The sand was cool, in the moonlight, so at least there was that.

"This chamber seems sp-p-pecial," she said. "Like, it was m-made for ... for someone like you?"

Fiona crawled forward beside her, and started cutting at the ground with her eight spider leg blades. They were sharp points, so not terribly good at shoveling, but it was better than nothing.

"Begotten have many chambers in their lairs, some more than others. I am young and have few, while Athalia has more. But we have hearts in our lairs, and those are precious to us, to our horror."

Heart of the lair. Interesting. And valuable information.

"Fiona," Athalia said, "don't tell her ... about things she doesn't need to know about."

"Friendship is founded on things like trust," Fiona said.

The skeleton grunted her disapproval, and the spider woman shrugged, but listened. No more info for Tash then. Hearts to their lairs? The heart of a building was a room, so she must have meant a room in her lair, a chamber, like the one they were in.

It took time to dig enough of the sand out of the way for the huge skeleton creature to get herself submerged. They only got her halfway into the sand, before Athalia set her enormous arms and head down against it. With a little wriggling, she got herself a little deeper, and nodded.

“Thank you,” the skeleton said, face down, head mostly submerged. Creepy. “We will talk ... again, I am sure. That Begotten working ... for ... Jeremiah ... will be a great threat.”

“Your w-w-welcome, bye.” She got up, and held out a hand to Fiona. The spider lady walked beside her, her spider legs all pressing to the sand behind her, but also her human-ish legs tip-toeing along the sand on their points. Fiona seemed to usually walk on her spider legs only, so, she was hurting pretty bad. A spider monster’s version of limping.

Once they were a ways away, Fiona guided them to a shadow behind one of the larger, strange, alien corpses, and again plucked at the darkness with her claws. Like before, she someone pulled open the shadow, like opening a door, and she motioned to the empty black she’d created before her.

“This burrow will lead into shadows around Bloodlust. I’m afraid a different burrow will be ... hard to make, right now. Is that close enough to where you’ll be going?”

“Y-Yes, it is, thank you. Will ... will you be ok?”

Fiona nodded her crown of horns, and gestured to the dark tear in reality she’d created. It was as natural to breathing to these monsters, moving between the dark corners of the Earth.

“Burrowing out of that gargoyle’s home would have been difficult in that situation, but my lair is connected with Athalia’s. I can get back home easily.”

Home. Fiona called her nightmare home. That was a key difference between monsters and the other paranormals, she supposed. As far as she knew, the Uratha, for Avery’s pack at least, they all considered normal, physical, planet Earth to be their home, like the vampires did.

Her home was in the tower of the most powerful vampire she knew; her boss, too. And her boss would be dying for an info update.

With a nod and smile, she waved to Fiona.

“T-Take ... take care of yourself. I think D-Damien likes you.”

She laughed, and ran a clawed hand along one of the massive horns on her head. “I ... I think you’re right.”

“Oh! Um, I m-mean, more than just b-b-because he rescued you, but also—”

“We’re going on a date, soon.” The spider monster smiled at her, a very Fiona smile, and pushed her through the black.

---

Bloodlust it was, the alley outside, in the darkest corner.

Ugh! No more dark! No more dark things, no more shadows, no more black, obsidian, onyx, raven, jet, ebony, none of it!

She limped out into the fake lights of Dolareido streets, and sighed relief as she found herself able to actually see everything without having to squint or focus. It wasn’t a far walk to the Elysium Tower, and this close to it, she didn’t need a buddy to travel safely. Limping sucked, but a ten minute limp was a small price to pay to get to the safety of the Prince’s walls.

But, first, check in. She pulled out her phone and sent the Prince a quick message informing her she was on the way. And a message for her boyfriends, saying she was alright, and that they better be alright too. And finally, most importantly, a message for Jessy.

~Hey Jessy. I'm back in Dolareido. Heading to Elysium Tower now.~

~Hey Tash. We need to hook up and chat! Need to thank you for the rescue.~

~Thank Jack.~

~I did, no worries. Your boys alright?~

~They'll heal ... I think. And Eric?~

~He went back to his place. I got a bunch of ghouls guarding him while he sleeps. And the Invictus are going to be guarding the area from now on.~

~Smart, but after what happened, I think it'll be some time before the hunters make another move against us.~

~Probably, but I don't want to risk it.~

~Getting attached to Eric?~

~I think I am.~

~He strikes me as a monogamy lover, Jess.~

~Hey, I can try monogamy!~

~I think I remember you detailing to me, frequently, how much you dislike the idea.~

~Yeah well ... fuck you, that's what.~

Tash rolled her eyes. Jessy didn't really understand how much the tone of her words didn't come through in texting, and instead of her sounding fun and spontaneous, her aggression sounded mean and harsh. But Tash was used to it by now.

~I'll talk to you later, Jess.~

~Later.~

With a small chuckle, she walked up the stairs of the tower's front door. She waved to the man at the front desk, and started her way down the stairs in the back. Down a few flights of stairs, and into the Prince's main experiments room, where she usually found the Prince doing her work. Not there. Hmm. Shrugging, Tash moved down another flight of stairs, and poked her head into the Prince's favorite lounge room, the one with the dragon fountain. The lights were on, and set to white. Thank god, light.

"Natasha, my dear. Please, sit, relax. I am glad to see that you are safe." The Prince was sitting on the couch, but where she would normally be reading, she was sitting with nothing in her hands, body turned and staring at the fountain, her back snug to the couch.

"Prince, you seem d-distracted."

"Oui. Julias has informed me of the results of your mission. It displeases me that the entity Black Blood has involved itself so ... acutely." With a sigh, she looked Tash's way, and a frown graced her otherwise preoccupied expression. "Your leg?"

Tash was sitting, and the Prince noticed the bad leg. Impressive, and it made Tash smile. "It br-broke, when the hunters ... blew up the door we were going t-to open."

"These hunters are frustrating, are they not?" Sighing again, the Prince leaned back on the couch, and looked up. "I have dealt with hunters many times through my life."

“You have?”

“Indeed. None of them have been as tenacious, as well prepared, or grouped in such a large number as these. There were times, two centuries ago and before, when mobs would gather and burn down a vampire’s estate, under suspicion they were a vampire. One of the few times superstition worked against us, not for us. I feel like I am in a similar situation, where a mob has come to burn down my estate; in this case, my city. And no vampire, no matter how strong, dismisses the threat of a hundred peasants with torches; or in this case, flamethrowers and molotov cocktails.”

It was easy to forget that Antoinette wasn’t always the modern, mature, Prince of Dolareido. There was a time when she was young, learning her power, developing her connections in the Ordo Dracul, and growing her fortune and kingdoms. What sort of mistakes did Antoinette make when she was younger? Opening a door with explosives on the other side, probably not, but there was probably a similar comparison somewhere. Maybe, like she said, she opened a door to a bunch of peasants with torches.

The thought put another small smile on Tash’s lips. Antoinette making mistakes was a hard thing to imagine, and forcing herself to picture it helped put her boss in a more relatable light.

“Please, describe to me details that Mire may have left out.”

“Um, s-sure. The descriptions we have of Jer-r-remiah and Angela are accurate. But, I noticed, w-when they were retreated from ... B-B-Black Blood’s intrusion, that they are trained.”

“Hunters are notorious for developing skills a typical kine would not.”

“Y-Yes, but they were trained like ... like professionals. They had formations, signals they m-made with their hands, and they knew how t-to respond to chaos quickly.”

“That is a step above the typical hunter.” With another sigh, Antoinette pulled some of her wavy hair over her shoulder, and began to slowly comb it with both hands. “Most hunters are one, maybe two, sometimes three individuals, rarely with any training at all. But they train themselves, learn through trial and error, and become formidable. Never a professional though, as you describe.”

“Have ... have you known many hunters?”

“I have met several, in my life time. Some are from an age I cannot remember. But, perhaps eighty years ago, I met one. A man, with every classic issue you could imagine from a hunter. His wife had been killed by a Kindred only days after their wedding, and the man witnessed it. He went down a rabbit hole, buried himself in the lore of our kind, and of other paranormals. For ten years, he dedicated his life to hunting us, after he realized it was impossible to expose us to the public.” Kindred had their fingers in the police, media, and governments. Exposing them through those means would be borderline impossible. “A hunter’s life had destroyed any chance I had of speaking with the man. Ten years of dealing with monsters — and I do not deny that there are many Kindred worthy of the descriptor — had rendered him unwilling to communicate. In the end, I was forced to kill him.”

“You ... you sound sad, about-t-t that.”

The woman lowered her eyes to her fingers and hair, and went silent for a moment as she watched her fingertips coil the ends of white strands. “ ... I am, dear Natasha. He did not deserve death. A part of me wonders, if these hunters we kill do. From what everyone has told me, Jeremiah and Angela sound worse than the hunter I met, by far. They sound like...”

“L-Like psychopaths.”

The word earned the Prince’s glance, and nod. “Yes, that they do.”

“And Angela, she ... she seemed healthy and f-fine, physically.”

“Another anomaly. Considering the damage Jack says she suffered, a normal kine would be in a hospital for weeks, and unable to push themselves for months.”

“I shot her though! Shot her, and J-Jeremiah twice. B-But only the limbs.”

“A shame. But considering how the night went, you did better than the others.” The Prince smiled at her, and Tash beamed. Old as Tash was, she still got a schoolgirl joy out of making her boss proud, even when that boss was Maria. “Wounding those two should have bought us some time, then. Make sure to enjoy yourself for the next few days.”

Enjoy herself? She could do that. She was pretty sure she knew how Jessy was going to enjoy herself, too. Hopefully the girl didn't become a snack for a wolf in the process.

---

---

~~Eric~~

The next night since the incident, and Eric felt a million times better. He healed fast, damn fast; though the silver bullet and silver knife wounds were still tender. Good thing he healed quick, because he had another shift at Bloodlust, and while the vampires seemed to treat the place like nothing more than a place to drop by for a cheap meal, it was his new livelihood. Had to earn it, keep the vamps happy, and keep a paycheck for his dad.

Christ, his dad. The fuck would have happened to the old man if Eric had died? The vamps owed him for helping save Jack, but he doubted that extended to his family members.

He had to visit his dad again, and get in his weekly allotment of guilt and self loathing.

With a groan and sigh, he sat up, reached out for Kat, and pet her. She was on his bed as usual, and let out a quiet meow to let him know she was aware he was awake. He smiled at the feline, and leaned in to kiss her head, which she returned with some head bumps against his chin. If he died, Kat would be fucked, too. He wasn't sure which one he cared more about.

Sighing, he got up out of bed, and peeked around his light-blocking curtains. Yeah, sun just went down, so the vampires would be getting up. He still had a few hours until his shift, so it was a good time to relax, eat something, take a shower, ponder life and the hell it'd dropped on his lap, the usual. The ghouls that had been watching him were gone; falling asleep with them outside his apartment door had been tough, but he could tell they were loyal. Once he was under, he slept like a stone.

First, a quick bite to eat. Some meat. Some raw meat. Something in him told him he didn't want to cook it, that he'd be happier eating it raw, and it wasn't like he had to worry with his new body. Delicious. He gave some to Kat as well; if he could eat raw meat, it wasn't like a true predator like her wouldn't be able to.

Second, a shower. He tossed his clothes onto the bed, stepped into the ridiculously fancy bathroom, and turned on the water. Pleasantly hot. With a long, heavy sigh, he put his hands against the shiny, tile wall, and let the water wash over his bald head. It was turning into a buzz, and he should probably shave it before heading out. The apartment was still beat up, too, but some patch work had plugged the hole in the bathroom wall. He—

He lifted his head, and looked to the door of the bathroom, as he heard the front door open. The footsteps were confident, but a bit light, and whoever it was took off their shoes; it wasn't the ghouls. Yeah, only one person would do that.

And only one person would hear the shower running, and take that as an invite to come in.

“Feeling better?” Jessy said.

“I am, yeah. If you keep walking into my apartment whenever you want, you’re liable to get a punch in the face, though. Especially my bathroom. Not on purpose, course, just a reflex if you surprise me.”

Jessy grinned, sat on the edge of his tub, palms to the white surface, and watched him shower. With the shower’s lack of glass barrier, the water was free to drain into the drain hole in the center of the bathroom. Bathroom was so damn big, Jessy remained dry as she watched him. And judging from the small points of her nipples against her tank top, she was already blushing like hell. He could hear her heart beating, despite the falling water hitting his skin; that was unusual. It sounded excited, very excited, more excited than he’d come to expect from the hornball. Why?

“You’re welcome to try. I love a good fight.”

“I noticed.” It was hard to not look at her, but if she wanted to watch him shower, then he was going to shower. And he was no boy, he was a man, with enough willpower to not throw himself at the pretty woman the moment she showed interest. At least, a little more willpower, enough he wasn’t getting hard, yet. “Where’s Fiona?”

“Hoping she’d come?”

“Honestly? Nah. That Damien kid—”

“Dude was sired young, but he’s got half a century of his second life under his belt.”

“Does he? From the way he acted at Bloodlust, I’d have figured he was a kid. Young, at least.”

“I guess he kind of is. He spent those fifty years hiding in the city underbelly. He’s a damn good Mekhet, but he’s had little interaction with people, outside of being a fucking zealot.” Shrugging, she got up, walked over to him, and leaned her shoulder against the wall only a few feet away. It was close enough for some of the water hitting him to mist over her clothes. She didn’t seem to care.

“I’m pretty sure he and Fiona are a better fit.”

“I guess. She’s young, and super sweet. He’s bitter as hell, and could use someone like her to lighten that a bit, you know?”

“I’m not bitter?”

“Ha! You are, but in a more masculine, badass, brooding man sort of way. Damien’s like an emo goth boy; I could put mascara on him and it’d fit perfectly. I’m sure he’d be a hit with high school girls, and young women who haven’t grown up yet, like Fiona.” Chuckling, Jessy undid the zipper of her jeans, and slid them off. Those legs, damn those were nice legs. “A shame. I was looking forward to getting her on your dick, and I could just play with her tits and stuff while that firecracker came her brains out.” She kicked off her jeans and threw them aside with all the care of the slob roommate everyone hates. The toned legs, large, firm ass, and the small underwear, basically a thong, alleviated any frustration he may have had.

“I guess I regret her missing too, then.” That was a nice image, he had to admit. And picturing the busty little creature sitting on him while Jessy played with her body, was getting his blood pumping. That was the vampire’s goal, no doubt.

“But you know what?” She scooped up her tank top, and tossed it aside as well, left in a black bra and panties. “I kind of want you to myself. At least for a little while.” He raised a brow, soaping his chest as he watched the beautiful woman undo her bra, and slip out of her underwear. God damn. Torturing him, she cupped both of her large breasts in her hands, and bounced them a few times; the woman delighted in playing to stereotypical porn fantasies, and as ridiculous as that was, she did it with such confidence that he was entranced. She winked at him, stepped under the water, and took the soap. Standing in front of him, she guided the soap around his body, and chewed on her bottom lip as she moved the bar over his dark skin, his abs, his waist, and his shoulders. “Get a loofa.”

“Don’t got one. Never really saw the point in a loofa.”

“Because you’re a man, and men are dumb.” Shrugging, she leaned back against the wall underneath the shower, and spread her legs. “You owe me for the handjobs. Get crackin’.”

This woman, wow. Did all vampires get horny so easily? He grinned at the beautiful warrior, and how the hot water flattened her short blond hair to her head. She called Fiona a firecracker, but he could smell the arousal growing on Jessy’s body, see it in her hardened nipples, hear it in her quickening heartbeat. With a quiet, rumbling growl, he got down onto a knee between her knees, set the soap aside, and placed his hands on her thighs. Smooth, and hard with muscle.

“You want me to yourself?” he said.

“Yeap.”

“What does that entail?”

“It entails—nng!” She let out a moan, a loud one, and set her hands against the wall of his bathroom, as he kissed her clitoris. Completely hairless, there was nothing to stop him from bathing the little nub in slow, gentle licks, and offer a few suckles of her labia. “Fucking hell. It entails dating, you know? Like, monogamy, and lame shit like that.”

He pulled his head away, and tilted it a bit as he looked up at her. The way water ran down over her large breasts, down over her flat stomach, and down to her thighs, was intoxicating to watch.

“You into monogamy now?”

“I am ... willing to try new things. Because—fuuuuck.” Her voice cracked and wavered, as he eased two fingers into her clenching muscles. Middle and ring finger spread open her hot, gripping flesh, and her hot juices trickled down onto his palm, only to be washed away in the hot water. Aroused and ready, in a single minute. Holy shit. “Because I’ve been doing the single girl enjoys nightly orgies for decades now. Time to change things up, see what a relationship can be like.”

She’d never been in a serious relationship then. Did she even understand what that meant?

“I don’t think I can satisfy you as well as an entourage of men.”

“Heh, I think I’ll be fine. Besides, I—” She shivered, and reached down with both hands to touch his head, as he kissed her clit again. “I can get some more people into our bed, if I ever get bored. You cool with that?”

“Uh, well—”

“Yeah yeah, you’re a dude, and dudes got this weird thing with other dudes in the bed, hands on their girl. Ugh, Tash is so lucky.” She rolled her eyes again, before pressing on his head, and guiding it back to her clit. “You wouldn’t mind if I invited a girl or two though, would you? Not for a while, cause I want you to myself for now. But in the future, maybe?”

“You know you don’t have to do that. I’m plenty happy with a woman like you, and only one, in bed.”

“Course you are, fucking dumbass. I’m amazing.” She rolled her eyes again, reached down, and guided the wrist of the penetrating hand to continue fingering her. Curling the fingers, and pressing them against her g-spot, earned another loud moan from her, and she relaxed back against the gleaming tile wall. Satisfied. “I meant for me. More hands and fingers opening things up, right? And, when I was watching Tash fucking my ghouls, I really ... really got off on that. Girl had the tiniest little slit you’ve ever seen, no lips or anything, clit hiding between the folds. Wouldn’t mind seeing some girl riding you in the future some day, while I do things to her. Not like she’d be a part of the relationship, just some extra pussy every now and then.”

Trying to handle this woman’s sex drive was going to be difficult. Or it would have been, before his change. He had to admit, the idea of fucking several women with his new found endurance was appealing. But, not as appealing as fucking Jessy, and fucking her properly.

He started to work his hand back and forth, while curling his fingers toward her g-spot a little harder, and licking her clit a little faster. The moans got louder, constant, and she held onto his head again as her body started to tremble. With time, his fingers worked back and forth hard enough to make her wriggle, and for her large ass to bounce against the wall slightly.

A minute later, she was cumming. She reached out and grabbed his head, as she groaned, loudly.

“Fuuuck ... st-stop licking, but ... but keep ... fingering.” Talking, mid orgasm, and giving him directions. He almost laughed at how insane her confidence was, but the sight of her muscles crunching and body trembling, breasts jiggling, and ass jiggling as well with how hard he was fingering her, was too intoxicating to find funny. Her eyes were half closed, and she was smiling at him, that self-assured smile, despite how obvious it was she was cumming and cumming hard.

After another ten seconds of fingering her, forcing her orgasm to go on and on, he eventually slowed down, and eased his fingers out of her. They were soaked in her cum, and he stared at how much of it there was, before the hot water washed it away.

“You act like you’ve never made a girl cum before.” Laughing, she grabbed the hand he was admiring, turned off the shower with the other, and started the walk toward his bedroom, him in tow.

“I have, just—”

“Wife a cold fish?”

“No ... well, compared to you, yes.”

She laughed, rolled her eyes, and slapped her wet ass as she reached the edge of the bed, hard enough to make it ripple. “Because I’m awesome. How many times I gotta say it?” She climbed onto the bed, got onto her hands and knees, and grinned at him over her shoulder. One of her hands found an ass cheek, and she spread herself, showing her soaked lips. “Get to it.”

Rolling his eyes, mimicking her, he climbed onto the bed as well, and knelt behind her. He took a moment to admire the size and tone shaped of her ass, and set both his hands on it to knead it for a little while. She was shivering; not afraid or embarrassed, but orgasm aftershocks were still working through her. To get up and walk around, talk, and act like nothing was up, when he could see her pussy clenching, leaking juices, sent fire into his belly. So damn bold, and he was drawn to it like a fly to honey.

While one hand held her hip, the other slid down to her thighs, and pressed his two fingers against her trembling entrance. Hot, and wet with so much more than water. He eased the two digits into her, palm down, and curled his fingers, pressing down against her g-spot.

She arched her back, moaning, and he groaned at the sight of her cat-like figure bending. The vampire knew she had a large, shapely ass, and she was showing it off. His grip on her hip tightened, and he pushed his fingers down harder.

“Deeper,” she said, looking over her shoulder at him. “Know that spot? Deep as you can go.”

He grinned at her, and pushed the two fingers in to the knuckle. Deeper, deeper as he could go, so his knuckles were pressed to her labia, and soaking themselves in her juices, as he pressed against her deep spot.

The response was immediate, and loud. Jessy tightened her fingers around the blankets underneath her, and started pushing her ass toward his hand, until his knuckles were practically entering her. He had to fight against her motion to keep her in position, and he let out a quiet, rumbling growl as he watched the lean fighter begin to rock her body back and forth. Each time he pressed down on that spot deep inside her, toward her belly, her muscles clenched down on his fingers, and he had to fight the vise grip of her depths to keep his fingers moving.

She lasted five minutes, and came again. He stared on, and continued to finger her cunt as deep as his fingers could reach, as she started to tremble. She lowered her head to the pillow, and set her cheek to it, weight on her elbows and chest, ass in the air. Whether she was arching her back downward by accident, or to purposefully arouse him, he wasn't sure anymore, with how her muscles kept clenching and ass kept pushing against his hand. But either way, she created a long curve of her spine up to her ass, highlighting the shape of her body, to the point he was left staring until his jaw dropped.

“I ... know ... right? I ... am fucking ... gorgeous,” she said between her moans, eyes grinning at him from the pillow. No mewls or whimpers like with Fiona, only groans and animal sounds he expected Uratha made when fighting or fucking. “Come on, get in here.” Recovering, she pushed herself back up onto her hands, reached back, and pulled aside her thigh. It spread her vulva, exposing where his fingers were penetrating her, and where a couple drops of her juices slowly dripped from her smooth lips.

He knelt behind her, his knees outside hers, and eased his fingers out of her. A sultry moan pulled his eyes to hers, only to find her grinning at him, as he wrapped his cock in his dripping digits. He returned her smile, and nudged the head of his cock against her boiling entrance. Slowly, he slid his aching glans into her clenching muscles, and again the woman made a sultry moan, before she added a growl to it. Trying to imitate his, maybe.

The feel of wet, clenching, hot flesh around his cock’s swollen head sent sparks of pleasure down his length. He returned the growl with a deep, rumbling purr, something in his chest that vibrated out through his limbs, and earned another shiver from the vampire. With the tip of his length inside her, he set both hands onto her hips, and slammed himself into her. Like he’d hoped, her ass rippled with the impact, and molded to his pelvis.

“Fuck!” Groaning all the more, she let her head dangle between her shoulders. “Fucking ... caught me by surprise.”

After bringing the girl to orgasm twice already, and watching her amazing body wriggle, Eric could feel himself on the edge of his own orgasm, precum dripping into the woman’s cunt. In the past, it’d be a signal to slow down, but he knew his new body would be ready to go multiple times. And every bit of him, every shred of him, every instinct he had, wanted to take this lithe, strong, powerful creature, pound her into submission, and fill her with cum. The need, the instinct, was new, and almost overwhelming, a drive added to what was there before, now a hundred times stronger.

He drew back his hips, and slammed into her again, hands on her waist keeping her from bouncing away as he sank every inch of his length into her. Moans filled the room. Jessy did not give a shit if anyone could hear her sounds, all she cared about was enjoying the moment; he loved that. Tightening his grip, he slammed his pelvis into her again, and watched her large ass jiggle with the impact. He could feel his length spreading her open, feel her soaked muscles clench along every inch, and feel his glans push in her depths; painful to some, but she'd made it clear that she liked it deep.

She arched her back deep, ass high in the air, and pressed it against him, meeting his thrusts so each slam of his pelvis caused her buttocks to ripple. A bead of sweat started to form on her body, and then another, fake sweat, but appealing nonetheless to see her beautiful body dripping. Nothing compared to the hot juices soaking his cock and trickling down his testicles, though.

They lasted only moments.

Jessy fell to her chest again, head to the pillow, turned so she could look over her shoulder at him. Her fingers dug through the blankets, bundled them up in her fists, and she moaned with each thrust as he continued to drive his pelvis into her ass. She was soaking him, hot juices coating his length to the point each thrust earned a tiny splash. The vise grip of her depths filled the length of his member with rippling bliss waves, glans growing hyper sensitive as he felt the warmth of his cum gushing up his cock. Soon it was pouring into her, and the third stroke was enough to have it joining her own juices, leaking down over his testicles and her thighs.

As the orgasm slowed, he buried himself to the hilt, stretching her depths inward, and ground himself against her body. She mewled like a cat in heat, kicked her feet into the blankets a few times as he held her hips tight, and moved her butt an inch up and down against him. Her trembling cunt milked him, massaged him, pulled more of his seed from him almost painfully, as the waves of pleasure eased off.

Taking a deep breath, he sat back, and let his cock slip out of her. With a quiet plop, his swollen cock head fell from her shivering entrance, and he watched as trickling streams of white oozed down over her folds and clitoris, some catching along her stomach with how she was still on her chest, ass in the air. Her thighs were trembling. What a ridiculous amount of cum; something to do with his new body, maybe.

“M-More?” she said, voice wavering. “You ... can really let loose, you know? I mean ... really. Try it.”

This again. He raised a brow as he looked at the gorgeous woman, but his eyes drifted toward her ass, her dripping lips, and clenching entrance, as she started to sway her ass from side to side. Like tempting a dog by waving a bone in front of his face.

“You sure?”

“Yeah! Give it to me, whatever you want. Get aggressive, wolf man.”

Whatever he wanted. In the past, that'd have been to enjoy some good, quality, equal sex that both parties were active participants in. Still wanted that, of course. But he had to admit, a part of him really want to pin this rascal, this mischievous troublemaker, this trickster demon, to the bed, and take her. Not just take her, but take her with the wolf inside him, that was rumbling purrs at her temptations.

He got off the bed, and turned to face her, knees to the bed's edge. She smiled at him, until he grabbed her hips, and yanked her over to him, earning a surprise squeak from her; a very not-Jessy sound. He stared down at the sight of her large ass in the air, and the mix of their fluids leaking out of her, down her thighs, and down her stomach where her chest was pressed to the blankets. He stared down over her at the sight of her curved back, her muscular and lean shoulders, the tiny waist and extreme hour glass figure. He wanted to devour her. He wanted to ravage her.

He began to change. A part of him knew this was dangerous and stupid, but a much larger part of him really wanted to give in, to let the animal in him out, and take this gorgeous thing. This gorgeous, little thing. As he felt the size and weight of him increase, as he felt the muscles expand, the bones grow, the fur emerge, Jessy grew smaller, and smaller. She forced herself back up onto her hands, but when she tried to turn around, he didn't let her, titanic hands holding her increasingly small waist and hips. Her jaw dropped, while his grew longer, a snout, fangs, and a deep, guttural, rumbling growl.

“Fucking ... god.” She stared up at him, up and up, as soon he had to lean his head forward, to keep it from hitting the ceiling. The room was barely tall enough to handle his height, and he licked his array of teeth as he felt power course through his limbs and body. He looked down again at Jessy, the vampire, the little creature on her knees before him, and he breathed deep in the scent of sex; overwhelmingly her.

Take her. Pin her down. She's yours. Dominate. Own. She's yours, enjoy her. Take her. Take her.

He looked at his hands, gargantuan around her tiny body; his new hands were large enough that one was almost able to circle her waist. He set one hand back on her hips and waist, capturing her, burying most of the lower half of her body in his single hand, while his other reached down for his cock, and raised it to set the heavy slab of meat along the crack of her ass.

His cock was much longer, and much thicker. The skin had changed, veined and engorged with red, every inch of the length sensitive and hungry for stimulus. The base of it was thicker, too, before tapering where it connected to him. Heavy, dangling testicles had emerged from his body, not usually there, but the need to satisfy his arousal had awoken a change in his body, a change he was going to indulge.

“E ... um, Eric, I ... I uh ... don't think ... that'll ... fit.” She gulped, and stared at the heavy thing sitting between the two delicious mounds of soft muscle and fat. Again, she tried to turn over. Again he didn't let her, grip around her waist tightening.

He growled down at her, deep, loud, until the vibration worked through her body. She squeaked, and stopped struggling, staring at him instead. He wanted her. He wanted to own her, be in her, dominate her, take her and make her his.

He guided his heavy, fat shaft to the entrance of her dripping pussy, and pressed the slightly pointed glans against her quivering folds. The woman stared at him all the more, and her body trembled as she pulled at the blankets. She was trying to get away. He didn't let her.

He rumbled another growl, deep enough to send vibrations through the bed. The tiny creature with cum dripping down her thighs gulped again, and again pulled away, using her knees to push against the bed. She was weightless in his grip, and could do nothing, as he began to force his cock into her quivering cunt.

“Fuck! Fuuuck ... oh ... oh god...” Her eyes were locked onto him, his body, the stack of abs leading down to his illiac furrow, and the enormous shaft he was pressing against her. Clenching, drenched muscles started to spread, forced open, as he slowly eased the first inch of his length into her, and then another, and another.

It was enough he no longer needed to hold his shaft in hand. He set the wet array of fingers and claws on his prey's shoulder, burying it, half her back, and much of her arm in his grip. Rumbling yet again, he pulled the tiny creature's ass closer to him, and his rumble turned into a low, long, deep growl, as her tiny entrance spread taut around his cock. He pushed deeper, sank another inch, and another, until his glans pressed against the squirming vampire's depths.

"I ... I know I said ... d-don't pay any mind to anything I might say, but ... holy shit, I'm going to—nng!" Her voice gave away, and a mix of groan and whimper escaped her, as he pushed in another inch. And another. And another. Her depths gripped all the tighter, earning more rumbling purrs from him as the hot, soaked flesh of her insides massaged his cock. Her pussy was taut around his girth, and grew tighter again as he forced in another inch.

He leaned down over her, his haunched posture keeping his weight on his feet, as he brought his titanic chest over her body. He took a long moment to admire the hourglass of her physique, before he brought his face, his snout, in close to her head. With her head lifted and turned, still staring at him, he was able to bring his snout down to her neck, and bring one of his eyes beside her face.

She gazed into it, trembling, frozen.

"Mine," he said, voice rumbling with bass. It wasn't his voice, it was the beast's voice, a giant wolf's voice.

"I ... w-what?"

"You. Are mine."

"Y ... I uh ... nng!" Her voice raised, before her eyes rolled upward, as he began to ease himself out of her. His new thickness left no space inside her cunt, and each inch he pulled from her was heavenly friction along his cock from her taut pussy. With each inch, she squeezed, hard, and her juices coated the length of him, renewed again and again, until droplets of her cum were trickling down onto the fur of his testicles, and thighs. Each inch he withdrew, her inner lips exposed themselves as her clenching, soaked muscles, did their best to keep him from moving.

He pulled her back toward him, a little faster, and he kept his massive snout beside her head, burying her in his shadow, a couple drops of his saliva dripping from his teeth onto the bed by her hand. She continued to stare at him, eyes wide, her own mouth open as her moans escaped, unending. Grip solid and absolute, he pulled her deeper, and deeper, and forced her insides in deeper than before, until they began to resist. He kept going.

“Eric! F ... you’re going to ... to ... tear me apart.” Her head collapsed between her shoulders, and he leaned in to offer her shoulder and neck, where his hand left it exposed, a long lick. A distant memory told him, reminded him, that she’d said this was ok, that she wanted this, that he was to ignore her begging. But another part of him knew, even if her pleas were legitimate, he wouldn’t be able to stop himself, not now, not anymore. He needed to be inside her, every inch, now.

Growling into her ear, rumbling deep, filling her, the bed, and the room with its vibrations, he pulled her onto his body, deeper, his cock stretching her until the taut muscles of her drenched insides were almost painfully tight. With one hand circling her waist and hips, the other holding one of her shoulders and half her torso, he sank the thicker, bulbous shape of his cock’s base into her, and pinned his beautiful mate balls deep onto his cock. Pushing in the last few inches of his cock, where the thicker, round shape had to be forced in hard, made the vampire whimper, loudly, a desperate sound that sent his blood into a boil.

She collapsed, arms giving out as she trembled, more of her cum leaking down his testicles as he ground his weight against her. As her torso fell to the blanket, he pushed down with his further hand, and pinned her chest to the bed. She did not struggle. Ass in the air, head turned on the blanket so she could look up at him, she shuddered, and let out a squeaky moan, as he eased an inch of his length out of her, only to push it back in, keeping the thicker girth of his cock's base inside her, her cunt's inner lips snug around its tapering edge.

He did not want to leave her. Her insides were divine, tight, trembling and clenching, milking, and soaked. Her sounds, grunts and groans, as he kept her pinned to the bed and continued to gently fuck her, were intoxicating. She was his. All his.

The first waves of pleasure, rippling down every inch of his length, earned more rumbles from him. Heat flowed up his length, and he leaned down over his mate all the more as he pressed his weight against her shoulder. His other kept her bountiful ass balls deep against him, as he offered small, weak thrusts into her stretched insides; gentle for him, but each pulled a little whimper from her, as his thick fluid poured into her. His cum overflowed her taut depths instantly, and white fluid flowed out of her, down his testicles, and flowed down her thighs. He thrust again, forcing his mate to squeak and mewl, as she gripped on his cock all the harder, and her ass rippled against the fur of his pelvis. Some of his cum splashed outward from their connection, hitting his pelvis, while more of it rolled down her thighs, and down her stomach.

After coating her depths several times, he pulled out his massive length, and set it against the crevice of her buttocks. The heavy thing molded slightly to the curvature of her ass under its own weight, and squirted a couple more, thick waves of his seed, only for it to land along the woman's back, soaking her curving spine, shoulders, and neck, in white. He let go of her waist, and offered a gentle nudge to the side, causing his mate to fall over onto her hip and side.

“F ... fuck...” She managed to keep the pillow under her head, but did not move, limp on the blankets, ass to the side, and fluttering eyes on him.

Rumbling more of his satisfied purrs, he set his cock along the side of her waist, and enjoyed the final waves of bliss, gently nudging his titan body back and forth to rub to swollen, hard shaft against her sweating skin, from hip to waist, to rib, to the underside of one of her breasts. Another gush of his cum poured onto her, coating her, flowing over her and soaking skin in his seed. Another, and another, thick droplets of the opaque fluid trickling down over her abs and the underside of her breasts.

With a minute to recover, his undead mate managed to turn onto her back, and stared up at him, gasping, panting, her legs spreading and hanging off the bed. She looked him up and down, and with him standing at his full height, his ears flattened against the ceiling as his skull pressed to it. Her eyes fell lower, to her own body, and the layers of cum that covered her.

“Holy shit,” she said.

He rumbled down at his mate, and lowered himself again, burying her in his shadow as he set both hands against the blankets around her. Squatting down low, his cock fell upon her abs, testicles pressing against her dripping pussy, and she stared at how the length of the heavy slab reached past her navel.

“You fucker, you ... that ... you...” Her eyes looked back up to him, and stared into his, as he came in closer, and closer, bringing his jaw to hers, until she could no doubt feel the weight of his breath. He rumbled, purring bass, and earned some shivers from his mate, as he offered the side of her face a gentle lick.

“More.”

“W-Wait! Wait, jeeze, shit, you just fucked me with a god damn log. I need a sec to—” She squeaked, all high-pitched sounds his mate did not normally make, as he stood back up, and took her with him. He held onto her waist and hips with both hands, fully encircling them and her ass with the length of his fingers and claws.

His cock stood upright, harder with renewed need, dripping with cum, and he guided her pelvis down toward it.

“Eric, come on, I ... I’m going to ... I need—nng!” Her thighs spread, and her legs stuck out to the sides, straight and trembling, as he pressed slightly pointed tip of his red, hard cock, against her dripping folds.

Holding her up in the air, she was trapped, and she could nothing but stare down at her smooth, cum-soaked lips, spreading open on his shaft. She leaned forward toward him, and grabbed onto his wrists; her fingers could only reach halfway around them. As drops of his cum eased down from the underside of her breasts and down over her abs, he lowered her squirming body onto his cock, taking his time, and rumbling more of his pleasure as her quivering body massaged and squeezed his swollen girth.

“Oh fucking ... fuck ... fucking fuck...” Still holding one of his wrists, she reached out and pressed her other palm against the steel of his chest, as he eased in half of his length; enough to reach her depths, and force her to grunt with animal sounds that made his heart pound in his chest. He still had half his length to go.

He continued, pulling her toward him, and letting gravity help with how he held her mostly upright, only letting her lean back slightly. His mate stared at her belly, and groaned loudly, as a distension formed along her abs, showing some of his girth, and how deep he was stretching her.

Jessy whimpered as her pussy’s lips reached the thicker, bulbous end of his cock; those last few inches required a thrust to force into her clenching insides, earning more groans from his mate. But once it was within, he rumbled his bliss as Jessy trembled, her inner lips clenching around the thinner girth passed the bulbous shape.

If his mate were an Uratha, he would fuck her rough, take her with strength and need; but his mate was Kindred, a fragile thing in comparison, and he wanted to own her, keep her, take her, dominate her, not damage her. He gently bounced her cum-covered body down against his cock, working her two inches up and down, and keeping the thickest, bulbous shape of its base inside her clenching pussy. She erupted into moans as she did, and whether she realized or not, set her thighs against his hips, and eventually, bent her knees to press her calves and feet against his ass around his tail.

He was too large for her to hook her feet together behind him.

As one hand pressed to his chest, the other holding his wrist, she continued to stare at the bulge along her abdomen, grunts coming through her voice as she moaned. He stared down as well, and admired the sight of his mate's lean body, and beautiful breasts jiggling up and down. His cum on her skin shook with the gentle motion, and slid down her body over the bulge along her abs, and down further to join the mess already leaking from their connection.

“I ... I can see ... christ, it's...” Her voice was weak, wavering, and intoxicating.

He rumbled louder, letting the rolling vibrations fill him and his mate, as he pulled her off of him, every single inch. Groaning and squirming, she squeezed on his cock tight, her inner lips' grip tight enough to expose themselves, pulling out slightly with the outward draw of his girth. Then they disappeared into her, as he pulled her onto him once again. Once her clenching entrance found the thicker, round shape of the base of his cock, he gave her a gentle thrust, enough to force her trembling, taut cunt around the thickest part of him, and make her squeal.

He began to bounce her, keeping the thick base of his cock buried inside her, but still managing to work her back and forth a couple inches. It was more than enough to cause her clenching muscles to bathe his pulsing shaft in delicious friction, and render the undead beauty into a mewling mess. Her cum dripped down his testicles all the more, and her breasts jiggled up and down the impact of her bouncing body. She stared at the bulge his cock created along her abs, and eventually, looked up at him, as she came.

The rippling contractions of her insides earned another orgasm from him. Heat poured up from underneath his shaft, and as her muscles within squeezed, milking him, the gushing wave of wet warmth sent pleasure waves down his length. Combined with the skin of his cock growing sensitive, only to be basked in the clenching of his mate, filled him with bliss, and he purred over the vampire skewered on his cock, as he held her balls deep. She struggled to hold onto him, but her fingers around his wrist went limp, and her other hand fell from his chest. Her legs clenched around him for only a few more moments, before they collapsed as well, and the woman leaned back in his hands as her head fell back to dangle, limp.

A wave of his cum poured out of her, and splashed along the floor around his talons. And another. But he wanted to do more. With one hand holding her waist, the other reached out, and took her hands, both of them. He lifted the trembling, limp creature up, until her hands were well above her head. He pulled her off of him by her hands above, causing her to whimper, as again her inner flesh exposed itself, gripping his cock tight, until at last she fell free of his cock.

With one hand holding both hers over her head, his other let go, and let her dangle, feet swaying a foot above the floor, with his cum sliding down her thighs and calves, until it dripped off her toes. Rumbling at his limp mate, he laid her on the bed on her back, so her legs dangled off of it, while he knelt over her, and took the base of his cock into his hand. She managed to look up at him despite the apparent exhaustion working through her, and gasped, as he lowered himself over her, free hand pressing to the bed, as his other guided his shaft onto her body.

The waves of cum resumed, and he rumbled bliss, as he watched the white fluid coat her body. It poured over her abs, burying them, before he pressed the long shaft against the softness of her breasts, and hardness of her nipples. A gush of cum washed over the silk skin, and he rubbed his cock's head into the hot liquid, before guiding it over to do the same to her other breast. Heavy, thick waves of his seed coated her, splashing over her shoulder, her neck. Purring, he set the tip of his phallus upon her mouth, and as she gazed up at him, her panting was met with a wave of his cum on her lips and tongue. He was too thick to fit inside her mouth. Despite her blatant exhaustion, she offered gentle suckling upon the tip, and slowly licked at the streams of white that fell into her mouth, before flowing over onto the sheets. Another wave came, spurred by her weak efforts to please him with her lips and tongue, and she stared, wide-eyed, as his cum squirted out from around her lips, over her cheeks, chin, and buried her neck in white. It flowed down over her shoulders, her collar, and over her breasts, between them, and down onto her already soaked abs.

Satisfied, he stood up, leaning over his mate, and offered a quiet rumble as he breathed deep the scent of sex, of lust, and desire. Standing over her like this, his cock began to soften enough to bend gently with its weight, and heavy droplets of his seed oozed onto her awaiting body below. She was marked, covered in his seed, he was pleased by the sight. As was she. Shaking like a leaf in the forest breeze, she forced herself up onto her elbows, and sputtered up a little of his cum; yes, he'd forgotten, the undead did not consume such things. It flowed down her lips and chin, down her neck, and onto the blanket of white that coated her body. Her nipples were no longer visible through the thick waves of it covering her.

“ ... holy shit,” she said.

He leaned down again, set his hands around her on the bed, and brought his jaw to her face. She meeped. Such adorable, enticing sounds to hear from someone normally so brazen and beastly. Unable to resist, he set his tongue to her forehead where she was still clean of his seed, and licked it. He could go again, take his mate, skewer her, force her to cum again as he bathed her in fluids.

But, no, something in his mind told him he was pushing it, getting too close, pulling at something alive inside him that wanted to come to the surface. This reckless indulgence in animal instinct and sexual greed was enjoyable, very enjoyable, and he could feel a part of him want to push for more than simple sex. There was a piece inside his chest that lusted for violence, that wanted to go hunting, to cause destruction, to flout its power and rip and tear flesh and ephemera apart. He could take his mate with him, and the two could create the borders of their territory and—

He gulped, and forced himself to breathe. And with each breath, he let the transformation fade. It wasn't as easy as transforming from the simple wolf. The Gauru form wanted to be used. It wanted to be let out of its cage, and released to wanton slaughter. It lusted for battle, even a one-sided battle that would be murder more than anything. Each breath was a splash of water on that roaring fire, settling it more, and more, until it was only a gentle ember in his chest, and he was in his human shape once again.

Just breathe.

Standing on the floor, between Jessy's legs where they dangled off the bed, he looked down at himself, the bed, and the vampire. Claw marks were everywhere, a couple on her body too, small ones. His bed seemed intact, but the blankets were damaged. His floor seemed unscratched too; guess he had better self control in that form than he thought.

There was cum everywhere! What in the ever living fuck. He looked down at himself, and blinked at the huge mess of it along his cock, his pelvis and abdomen, and his thighs. But it was nothing compared to Jessy, who might as well have been swimming in a tub of jizz. From her mouth down, everything had splashes of the white fluid, to the point heavy globs of the thick seed dripped down from her large breasts, down over her abs, and onto the utterly drenched blankets.

“Jesus ... you ok?” he said, holding a hand out for her.

She took it, and pulled, shakily. With a little effort, she brought herself up to sitting, and looked down at herself as she put her hands on her knees.

“Feel like I just gave birth,” she said, voice wavering, and her body trembling. “Christ that was rough. And I haven’t been covered like this in ... ever.”

“Sorry I—”

“Fuck no, don’t apologize. That was awesome!”

---

After a quick shower, the two of them hopped into the tub. He sat down in the huge thing, sighed bliss at the flowing jets of hot water, and let his head fall back onto the tub’s high wall. Jessy was beside him, and she did the same thing, letting her head fall back.

“Things changed,” he said.

“You mean, the balance between the groups? Yeah. No one died or anything, but ... but now Athalia’s gone and made an enemy of the Kindred, and maybe even the other Begotten. I have no fucking clue how that's going to go."

"I couldn't begin to understand any of that. I meant you."

"Me?"

"Yeah you. I remember what I said, when I was changed there. It just came out, like, a new instinct took over, and ... called you mine."

"Yeah, you did."

"And yet here you are, still here."

"Expected me to run away?"

"... a bit, yeah."

She chuckled, made a few pfft noises, and raised her head as she did. With a grin, she brought in her face, and kissed him.

"You know what I did before coming over here?"

He smiled as he let the tension melt away. "No."

"I sent my ghouls to Clara's place, and said they should do everything they could to convince her they were her new fuck toys, and not mine anymore. A gift, olive branch and all that jazz."

He raised a brow, but before he could say anything, Jessy leaned over the tub, and down over the wall. With her big, toned ass in the air as all he could see, he could hear the shuffling of fabrics; she was digging for something in her clothes.

With a splash, she fell back into the tub beside him, and brought over her phone. With her income, she probably didn't care if she dropped it and ruined it.

“Let’s see what we got.” Winking at him, she brought up the gallery. “Oh wow, Clara really got into it.”

Eric looked at the picture, and gasped. Yeah, that was Clara alright, on her hands and knees, with one guy behind her pounding her. The other two ghouls were on the bed closer to Clara’s front, and she was trying to give them blowjobs and handjobs. It seemed like she was failing, with her head dangling between her shoulders in obvious bliss.

“You seriously asked your ghouls to try and sneak pictures of this?”

“Of course! Ugh, hate that bitch. But no worries, this is just for you and me to admire. I’m not going to use this against her or anything, and—oh my god look at her ass. That is a nice ass.” She swiped to the next picture. A shot from behind of Clara, naked, and now with wet hair. A shower? The next swipe showed a rather nice shot of one of the ghouls penetrating Clara’s ass, while a ghoul underneath penetrated her normally. Must have cleaned herself up for anal. “My boys are very good at DP. I’m sure Clara will have cum ten times, at fucking least, by the time they’re satisfied.”

“She looks drunk.”

“To agree to anal on the first night, with four dudes? Definitely drunk, definitely very drunk. But damn, look at that bitch smiling.”

It was true. Much as it was hard to see Clara’s face from a proper angle, the ghouls were hiding the fact they were taking pictures after all, some of them showed a glimpse of her face, and Clara looked like she was in rapture.

“I guess the lunacy trick thing only works on Uratha if they’re doing something werewolfy,” she said. “Good thing, cause otherwise these pictures would be blurry as fuck. I—oh god look at this!” She nuzzled her cheek into Eric’s shoulder, and pointed at the picture she held in front of them. It was Clara, on her side on the bed, fetal position, no men in sight, and copious amounts of cum leaking out of both her ass and sex.

“You know she’s going to kill you if she ever finds out.”

“Bah, she won’t. I ... felt like I owed her a bit of an apology, and I know she’s had her eyes on Jack, but he’s with the Prince. Poor gal must be lonely. Nothing cures loneliness like four dicks and a dozen orgasms.” Shrugging, she swiped to a few more photos, and made sure to show off each one. One, in particular, was enough to have Eric blush. This was the sort of stuff Jessy used to do every night? “Besides, next time, the boys won’t take pictures.”

“Next time?”

“Course. I said they were her fuck toys now. I’m giving this monogamy thing a try.” The vampire threw the phone over her shoulder onto the pile of clothes, trusting the rubber guard to keep it from cracking. “But I’ve never really done this stuff before. So, be gentle with me, all right?” With a small, shy squirm that was too damn cute, she took his hand, and guided it up to her mouth. She set her lips to his wrist, and gave him a kiss.

“Breakfast in bed sort of stuff new to you?”

“Very, and straight up, it’s a little frightening, so bear with me. And it won’t really be breakfast in bed, at least not ham on toast and shit. More like, I suck your dick, then I suck your blood. Even trade?”

“You really don’t have—ow!” While she had her hand holding his wrist to her lips, it was in the clear for her to pinch his skin, hard.

“Don’t be a dumbass. I like sex, a lot. I love sex. The issue here will never be ‘do I hound her for sex too much’. The issue will be ‘can I keep up with her’. That isn’t me boasting, or trying to make myself sound more appealing to a guy. That's me being me, knowing what I like, and hoping you'll be ... ok, with that."

This woman was asking him if he was ok with her absurd sex drive. That was a new twist he didn't expect. He should have, considering everything that happened, but he didn't. Hell, she even looked a little shy about it, despite her confidence. Her eyes glanced down, and she set his hand on her leg as her shoulders slumped a little. It was almost like she was asking if he was ok being in a relationship with a porn star; not that that description fit, but it seemed like how she was taking it. Maybe Clara's words had gotten to her.

"Jess, you could hound me for sex thrice a day, every day, and it wouldn't bother me, and I wouldn't think any less of you for it. I can't guarantee I can keep up, but I'll try."

And just like he'd given her ice cream, or blood sorbet or something, she smiled at him, beaming, and nuzzled her cheek into his shoulder. He was right then, and Clara's words had affected her. She was older than him, but he was the one with the experience in a one-on-one relationship. Now for the hard part: not repeating past mistakes.

"I won't cheat on you," she said.

"Course not. Didn't think you would."

"Though, I'm definitely gonna try and get some more pussy in the bed at some point. Maybe even a thrall or ghoul, someone you could transform around, and I could watch someone else's cunt try and take that log of a dick. You ever see that thing? It's huge! Fucking god I thought I was going to tear apart. And it had this thicker part at the base, and when you get it in, it's like I'm going to explode, but it puts so much pressure on my g-spot, it's insane. And—"

She continued, describing the shape of a werewolf penis with the enthusiasm of a devoted fan. The strangest conversation of his life. The change in her personality was large, too. Instead of the fun, badass chick who seduced him at the bar, she was now a fun, silly girl, a lot like Fiona, with a sprinkle of confidence on top.

After a while, she climbed up onto his lap, facing him, and set her fangs onto his neck. He set his hands on her waist, caressed her, and let his body melt into the tub as she put one hand on his forearm, the other behind his head. Nothing for him to do, but close his eyes, and let the relaxing bliss of the Kiss drain him of his energy.

“You taste amazing,” she said, before she set her fangs onto his neck again, and Kissed him until everything started to get heavy. If they’d been having sex, he would have cum instantly. But like this, recovering from sex, the Kiss dragged him down, and down, each step a beautiful journey into relaxing bliss.

She stopped, raised her head, and kissed him, closing her eyes, and pressing her breasts to his chest.

“Gonna fall asleep?”

“I ... I just might.”

“Let’s go to bed then.”

“ ... let’s?”

“Yeah. You’re coming to my place until we get a servant over here to clean the place.” Chuckling, she kissed him again, giddy either from his blood, or the prospect of an actual romance happening to her. Hopefully both. “I’ve never woken up next to someone before. I hear morning sex is really romantic; or, you know, evening sex for me. I expect to wake up and get some immediate cuddling, along with some nice, long, slow, spooning anal sex.”

He may have bitten off more than he could chew with this woman.

Chapter 74

~~Damien~~

Damien looked over at Amanda, and she smiled at him before offering a small wave. She seemed like a kind little creature, dark skin and long black hair. Damien did not care for her sire, Gloria Jennings, who had a far larger mouth for gossip than any Mekhet should have, but Amanda seemed alright. Perhaps a little ditzy, but then, after being around Fiona, ditzy didn't seem to bother him so much anymore. Ditzy people had the amazing ability to be happy and enjoy themselves. For people like him, Jack, and others that fit into the stereotypical vampire definition, they did not.

Case in point, Jack was standing outside a forbidden window, the two Mekhet behind him keeping him and them hidden in their cloak of night. His hand was on the window ledge, and his eyes were locked onto the two women within. His mother, and his sister.

While Amanda stood back some ten feet, Damien eventually walked forward, and stood by Jack's side, maybe a single foot back to stay out of the boy's peripheral vision. It'd be disrespectful, to interrupt what was clearly an important moment to him, but at the same time, it was important to Damien to stop him from letting this blatant ghost of his past devour him.

"They look ... content," Damien said.

"Time heals all wounds, right?"

The boy didn't believe that. It was obvious in the bitter growl in his voice. But even if Jack didn't believe it, it was plain to see the two women sitting on the couch together were—oh, maybe not. The two women were looking at a picture album, and their looks of contentment faded as they turned the page. Only now did Damien notice they had tears all along, and their previous looks of contentment were from the memories the boy's family was walking through.

“Why are you watching this, Jack?”

“Glutton for punishment.” He nodded his head back toward Amanda, before returning to his self torture. “Amanda's helped me out a few times, spying on them.”

It must have been frustrating, to have to rely on others in such a circumstance. All Kindred could learn the cloak of night, though the Mekhet and Nosferatu knew it naturally and instinctively. A young Ventrue had no chance of using it, not to the extent that would allow the boy to spy on his family through their living room window. In Jack's case, it was probably for the best, lest this masochism destroy him.

“But why—”

“Your family still alive, Damien?”

“I ... don't know. Lucas and his church became my family, and I didn't look back, even after the purge.”

Jack nodded to his family, sitting on the couch in the living room. TV off, the two women had a blanket wrapped around the two of them, shoulder to shoulder.

“When Dad died, things were pretty rough for us. Mom never got over it. And Mary, she did all the things a more social person probably would. Drinking, sleeping around — way too young — and probably trying a lot of drugs. And I ... became a cold, distant, critical asshole.”

This was unexpected. Damien didn't know what to say to people most of the time, let alone during an emotionally heavy conversation; unless it were matters of the Lord and the Lancea et Sanctum. But then, maybe the boy didn't want a conversation, he just wanted someone to listen to him. Antoinette could listen, but perhaps the nature of their relationship made such a conversation difficult, or impossible. Julias? Maybe, but while sire and childe shared a connection, it was also a barrier, not dissimilar to parent and child.

So he said nothing, and waited.

“I never emotionally connected with Mom or Mary, not really. I was comfortable with them, though, and I did miss them a little when I moved out. Now? It's been slowly dawning on me, how much I fucked up, and missed out on something so damn important.”

Damien raised a brow, and glanced Jack's way, before he focused his gaze on the two women. They wiped their tears, and flipped to another page in the album.

“I guess, with all the shit that's been coming my way lately, it's nice to remind myself I used to be a ... a human being. A normal human being, who didn't spend his days figuring out how to kill people, and help monsters.” The boy set his forehead to the glass, and sighed. A Kindred wouldn't leave any marks behind, no skin oil or particles, and the boy took advantage, weight dragging his head down an inch along the glass. “And reminding myself of my past only makes me feel like shit, because I wasted it.”

It was clear there was more going on, and Jack was struggling to explain it. Something about Angela, and the rescue mission, had put the boy in a weird, analytical, depressed mood. Something was caught in his soul, and was struggling to make itself known. What that was, Damien couldn't guess. Jack had asked him for information about Viktor not long ago, was worrying about becoming Viktor, and it struck Damien as likely that Viktor was emotionally distant from his own family, as well.

The boy was struggling to reconcile his past and present. It was a unique thing, and Damien couldn't begin to understand the nuances of it. But, there was something the boy could do.

“ ... you can change that.”

“What?” Jack lifted his head, and blinked at him.

“You can turn both of them into ghouls, or embrace them. Either way gives them endless life. The Prince has opened siring, hasn't she? Get permission from her, and bring your family into your new life.”

Glass shattered, plain on Jack's face, and the boy turned back to look at his family with new eyes, wide eyes. Had he never considered that before? Evidently not.

“You think ... she'd give me permission?”

“You've done a lot of things for the city, and have earned respect, and gratitude.” Damien looked down, and then at his hand. Touch the kid's shoulder? No, no, too far. Leave such emotional contact for Antoinette or Julias. “I'm sure she'd give it.”

“I ... I don't think ... I could handle seeing them as ghouls. Ghouls are so infatuated with vitae, and brainwashed to love their owner.”

“What about Antoinette's ghouls. Do you take issue with how they think of Antoinette?”

“That's different. They weren't family to her.”

Nodding, Damien looked back over at Amanda. The Mekhet had already stepped out of listening range; must have picked up on the social queues.

“Then you could embrace them.”

“And ruin their lives?”

“ ... has your life been ruined?”

“I ... I ... I don't fucking know. It's been such a roller coaster, Damien. One minute, I'm having the best time of my life, with the best woman, swimming in money. Next minute, I'm handcuffed to a chair, getting tortured, and then I'm killing people. Next, I'm promoted to one of the most powerful positions in the city, and have massive freedoms. Next, I'm in a firefight, and people are getting torn up around me, and dying, and ... and ... and I hate myself.”

“Hate yourself? Why?” That was a powerful statement, and one he figured the boy would have dismissed in the past as cliché. Of course, nothing was a cliché when it was happening to you.

“Because I didn't shoot that damn woman when I had the chance. Like a fucking idiot, I let Athalia make me hesitate. And ... and the expression on Angela's face, it was like ... like ... like I'd be doing her a favor, shooting her. Christ I want to kill her, I want revenge, I want to rip that bitch in half and make her watch her guts fall out. And I let it slip away.”

This was turning into a confession, and Damien had to wonder how a normal priest would handle this. The Lancea et Sanctum did not look for confessions from its Kindred. Kindred were to be God's monsters, and were already damned. Sins against God were irrelevant and immaterial to Kindred. All that mattered was that they served their role. Damien had, on occasion, offered advice to the congregation, been a minister, but it was nothing like this, like listening to a man pour his heart out.

And as Jack looked at his family, the conflict between his sorrowful memory, and his present hatred for Angela, was cut into his face with a serrated knife.

“I’m a god damn trope. I let her live, and—”

“Jack, only a Kindred with decades of unlife and hundreds of kills to their name, would have taken that shot without at least a moment’s hesitation. Only a Kindred who no longer thinks about the family they once had.” After gesturing to the window and the painful past, he reached out, and touched the boy’s shoulder. He almost expected Jack to pull his shoulder away. He didn’t. Maybe a little contact wouldn’t be so bad, after all.

“If I was more of an asshole, she’d be dead, and we’d be better off.”

“Perhaps. Or, Jeremiah would have realized his partner was dead, and killed us all, instead of monologuing like a fool.” Nodding, Damien lowered his hand, and nodded back out toward the streets. “Come on, before this trip down memory lane ruins you.”

With a nod and sigh, Jack came with him, and Amanda fell in step beside him opposite of Damien, as they began the trek back to the richer side of South Side.

“Julias used to tell me I was handling my transformation well, too well, and for a lot of Kindred, staring at the past like this led to ... suicide.”

Amanda reached out, and put a hand on Jack’s shoulder. Either she decided to mimic Damien, or the girl’s attitude leapt over that hurdle without any of Damien’s hesitation.

“I don’t see you doing that,” she said.

“... me neither.” Sighing, Jack slipped his hands into his pockets, and glanced over his shoulder, back at the family he left behind over a year ago. “But maybe I am playing with fire.”

“Maybe. But, every vampire has to go through this stage, Gloria says.” Shrugging like all the misery was nothing, she pat him on the shoulder again, before she nodded back to the house they left behind. “They look great, by the way.”

“They do?”

“Mhmm. Your mom’s looks like she’s been hitting the gym, and taking Mary with her, from last I saw them.”

Both boys raised an eyebrow at each other. It had never occurred to either of them to analyze the physical state of Jack’s family.

“Maybe she’s trying to move on?” Jack said.

Amanda nodded, and added a little bounce to her step. “You’ve been gone a long time. I bet she’s getting over it, and finally moving on. Or, you know, trying.”

To become nothing more than a cherished memory to your own family, while you are still alive. It was an alien concept to Damien, but Jack smiled, and nodded.

“I bet she is.”

~~Antoinette~~

Her love looked beyond depressed.

With a sigh, she set her chin on the boy’s head, and hugged him from behind. The two of them were in her shower, the lavish one meant to emulate the feeling of showering in a waterfall. They had cleaned each other already, and she expected to find some sort of smile in the boy's actions. But, no, her love was morose, and perhaps a little silence and physical contact was what he needed.

"I nearly got everyone killed," he said at last.

"While they may have taken your words for guidance, everyone there was an acting individual; you were not the captain."

"Yeah ... I guess..." Sighing, his head dropped, and she looked down at the boy in her arms as the water fell over his buzzed head. "What was I doing, giving orders? I was the youngest one there."

"You are talented, and a Ventrue. It is not unexpected."

"And ... and I let Angela live."

"From what you tell me, you were going to shoot her, non?"

"Yeah, but I hesitated. Like a shitty movie, I hesitated and let the villain escape."

"Her mother was only several feet away, little Ventrue, begging you to spare her life. And you are far too young to be killing anyone without hesitation." Words that would fall flat, but they needed to be said, nonetheless. "You may be a Right Hand of the Invictus, and for good reason, but these are trials that anyone your age is expected to fail. And you did far better than others would, in your circumstance."

"I guess. But ... but if Julias hadn't gone to Jacob, and gotten that ... that thing's help, there's a good chance we'd all be dead."

How painful, for the boy to summarize her dilemma so succinctly. If she could not control this spirit entity, then if similar circumstances rose, what could she do?

She could tie the damn boy to her bed and keep him there for all eternity. That was always an option.

“And everyone will learn from that mistake. It was an error on the council’s part, to send you and your crew. An error on everyone’s part, to underestimate these hunters.”

“I know. I know.”

He knew, but he would not let the reality wipe away the emotions he was feeling. He was young, and such lack of control over his mind was an unfortunate circumstance of his age. It was also endearing, that the boy’s soul still had such power over his mind, and she hugged the boy tighter to her as she kissed his head.

“Now that the hunters have proven far more prepared than we could have ever dreamed, I hope the Invictus, and others, will act with less haste, more discretion and prudence, from now on.”

“Yeah, no more crazy runs into nightmares without proper precautions,” he said.

“Mercy beaucoup.” Nodding, she turned the boy around, lifted his chin, and kissed him. It was enough to earn a small smile from him, one she could feel on her lips, and she returned it as she lowered her hands down his back. The feel of his hard body against her breasts was delightful, and she closed her eyes as she hugged him a bit tighter.

Something was bothering the boy, more than his words suggested. Kindred his age often went through a phase of identify crisis, as their new life as a vampire took form, and started to break down the walls of old. She knew the boy had a habit of visiting his living family, and had done so recently; her network of thralls missed little. No doubt that was part of what bothered him, but she did not see the connection between the mission, and the boy’s past.

But she would not pry. She was sure, with time, he would tell her more.

His own hands found her back, and her ass. With a little time, a longer kiss, the boy's hands started to caress her skin, massage the meat of her buttocks, and tickle up and down her spine. It earned another smile from her, and she lifted her head so she could show her joy to the small man in her arms. If he was able to feel aroused by her, then his misery was not permanent.

She nudged him into the wall of black marble, and got down on her knees. The sight of her beneath him, with her hands on his hips, was enough to break the boy's gloomy expression, and earn eyes of lust and desire.

"Blush for me," she said, as she blushed. Color came to her skin, and the joyful warmth of arousal tickled along her spine.

"I thought we were going to go hang with Tash and her two werewolves?" Despite his weak protest, the boy blushed, and his shaft lifted with life in front of her eyes. Delicious, how the hard thing stood out and up, his skin shaved smooth, and the muscle definition of his lower abdomen showed his inviting iliac furrow to great degree. Hopefully, Julias had instructed the boy, in how dangerous the Apollo's belt was; what woman could resist? She traced her fingers along its lines, from where it led from his hips, and down at a V ship toward his shaft and underneath it.

"We are. But, I will be wearing something quite ... uncomfortable, and I fear it will lead to your wandering gaze." With a devil's smile, she gazed up at him with her red eyes, as she leaned in, and set her lips upon his cock. Immediate, quiet groans from the boy, enough to send her heart fluttering. The look of sheer, rapturous joy on the boy's face, as she slid his foreskin back, and gently encompassed his swollen glans with her lips, was euphoric.

"I doubt ... you can ... ever make that stop."

She smiled around his cock, and suckled upon the tip, as one of her hands took his testicles to massage, and the other took his shaft around the base to massage as well. The boy had mentioned in the past he found wet hair attractive, and she knew her hair was quite wet, soaked in the falling water, and flat to her head, neck, and back. To show off for him, to let him drink her beauty, as she gently milked his length, was too delicious a moment for her to ever pass up.

Time was of the essence. The plan was for a shower, and then to relax at her pool, perhaps swim. Natasha and her boyfriends were coming as well, and she was curious to see how they would react to the sight of the Prince, and Natasha as well, in swim wear. If she guessed right, flaunting her body would lead to Natasha being ravaged by two aroused beasts, and Antoinette could not pass on the opportunity to give her Tash a delicious night, whether she wanted it or not. She had earned it.

Jack did not last long. Of course he did not, she did not wish for him to, as she set her goal to make him climax as quickly as possible. He reached down, and set his hands on her head, as she circled his swollen glans with her tongue. Her expert, tight, and consistent working hand on his length, would have any man cumming in minutes. But before he did, she pulled her head back, knelt higher, and guided his cock onto her breast. She lowered the hand around his testicles, and instead used it to cup her own left breast, so she could more easily press his swollen glans onto her nipple.

The poor boy set his hands on her shoulders, and shivered, struggling to stay standing, as she caressed her engorged areola with his hot glans around, and around, and around, until the first gush of his cum splashed over her breast. Jack's moans broke through his attempts to quiet them, and she smiled at him before looking back down at his shaft, as she guided it around her nipple. The hot cream flowed up and around her breast, coating it in his cum as another gush squirted up to meet it. She kept out of the falling water for now, purely to let the boy enjoy seeing the sight of her bust covered in his cum. And, with the large amount of ejaculate the boy's adapting Kindred body was happy to produce in so little time, it was quite easy to soak her breast in white, until heavy drops of the thick liquid trickled down the underside of her breast, and dripped onto the shower floor.

She leaned down to kiss his glans, licked away the final drop of his cum, and smiled up at him as she began to massage his cum into her breasts. It was hot, and thick, and felt delightful on the skin. But that was not the reason she put on such a display. It was to see the boy's entranced gaze, that she took the time to spread the thick fluid over her breasts, under them, between them, and massage the white into her skin. With both hands, she cupped the undersides of her heavy bosom, and worked her fingers around her nipples, earning little sparks of pleasure into her core, as she caressed the engorged nubs.

She continued her devilish smile, well practiced and mastered, and stood. Hot water washed away his seed, and once she had cleaned the white fluid from her fingers, she ran them back through her hair as she lifted her elbows. Raised elbows tugged at her breasts, and caused them to jiggle lightly as she soaked them in the downpour of hot water. A dance she had perfected long ago, and she sighed bliss as she felt her insides warm with how her love gawked at her, paralyzed.

"If we had time," she said, "I would take you to the bed, where you could return the favor. But, I look forward to time with Natasha. Come, let us be off." She ended the blush of life, and walked back to the bedroom, her hand behind her, and Jack's hand in hers.

Holding hands. How naughty.

~~Natasha~~

The three of them each sat on a pool lounge chair, and sighed happy sighs, together. They were in the Prince's tower, and had decided to take the night to do absolutely nothing but relax. Pools were relaxing, and Antoinette had a giant pool with a hot tub and everything. Perfect place to relax where it was safe. Tash and the boys didn't bother with swimming though; instead, they were happy to just lounge around. Swimming took effort. Lying around took none.

"Never thought I'd be saved by Jacob," Art said.

Matt nodded. "Me neither. Especially not with Black Blood."

Yeah, none of them expected Jacob to rescue them. None of them expected him to use a crazy spirit entity to do so, either.

There was no point in lamenting how rushed their plan was, how ridiculous, how arrogant they'd been, and how they'd have to do better next time. And because of their stupidity, they all owed Jacob, the crazy old Nosferatu. Or at least, Julias owed him. Whether that was better or worse than dying to hunters remained to be seen; probably better, but it was hard to tell with him. For all Tash knew, Julias would have to participate in some crazy ritual with the man, and help him summon ghosts or demons.

That didn't sound too bad, actually. She'd summoned things with Antoinette already.

Tash looked over at Art and Matt, each lying on their lounge chairs, heads leaning back and eyes closed. Both were in swimming trunks, black for Art and blue for Matt. Both were, of course, very fit, and their muscles were highlighted with definition, even when simply lying and relaxing. Art was lean and mean like a fighter, while Matt was a wall of muscle. And, despite herself, she both smiled and frowned at the sight of their new welts, bruises, and scars. Silver hurt them in ways even their special bodies couldn't fully regenerate from without days, which made her frown, but some scars on their bodies looked pretty sexy.

Ugh, she was turning into Jessy. Every day, her friend's infectious hedonism and sexual obsessions corrupted her mind!

"I do hope," Antoinette said, "that in the future, you will understand that to act with all speed is not always the smartest choice. Oui?"

Tash turned her head and lifted it enough to look at the pool. Antoinette was drifting around in the pool, her long white hair slicked back over her head, wet. Tash and her boyfriends had come in while Jack and the Prince were swimming, so they hadn't seen either of them out of the pool yet. But Tash had seen straps over Antoinette's shoulders, so, she wasn't naked. Good. That'd be awkward, and she didn't need her boss tempting her boyfriends.

"I th-think we do ... understand that n-now," Tash said.

"Bien. These are dangerous times, and I fear, due to the chaos and uncertainty these new elements have brought to my city, that it will be impossible to full prepare for them. Be careful." The Prince swam over to Jack, and swam around him. Jack returned the favor, nodding with the Prince's advice, and swimming around her as well. Two koi in a pond.

"I'm surprised you guys can relax, honestly," Art said. "Not worried about that Begotten working for Jeremiah showing up randomly?"

Jack poked his head up over the pool edge. "Fiona says Begotten can't just burrow to wherever they want. There's criteria. They have to have seen the place once, at least. And there's other stuff, about it resonating with their nightmare in some way?"

“So Eric’s place isn’t safe?”

“Normally no, but she says that Elen royally fucked the area, and no Begotten is burrowing through it anytime soon.”

Art nodded, satisfied, and hooked his hands behind his head as he looked up. “ ... this indoor pool could use a skylight.” Every Kindred in the room stopped, and raised a brow at the man, before he put his hands up in surrender. “Kidding.”

“It’s a lovely ... fortress,” Matt said. “Really, it’s beautiful. Just a little intimidating how it’s all underground, and massive. How long did this place take to make?”

“Many decades.” Antoinette came up behind Jack, and hugged him, her shoulders against his as she leaned her chin around his neck. Tash couldn’t see over the edge of the pool very much, but it was obvious to see she was squishing her breasts to Jack’s back. The woman was ridiculously confident, but unlike Jessy, it didn’t seem crass at all. Her friend’s sexual attitude was like a wrecking ball through a wall, while the Prince’s was like seductive music; you’d get pulled into its enchanting lullaby if not careful.

But, seeing her squish herself against Jack’s back, reminded her of that time she’d found the two of them making love. It’d been so sweet, and so erotic. Jack was built! He was a small guy, but Julias had definitely taken the time to groom him, putting some muscle on his shorter, thin frame. And seeing the curvy, busty goddess riding him while he suckled on her breasts, had been too lascivious.

She wouldn’t mind seeing it again. The lullaby already had her.

“Decades?” Matt whistled, and copied Art, hooking his hands behind his head and looking at the marble ceiling. “You vamps like to think long term.”

Tash looked at her boyfriends, and smiled. Much as Antoinette and Jack were both gorgeous creatures, her two boyfriends looked so handsome in their swimming trunks. And they were so huge! Even Art, who was by all accounts a fair bit thinner than Matt's huge, muscular body, was still a big, tall guy, with a broad back that he showed off with his hands behind his head.

She smiled to herself, and licked a fang. Vampires really did get spoiled—except for the Nosferatu. But other than the cursed Kindred, the other blood clans took the time to not only groom their chosen childe before siring, they picked them in the prime of their life, generally between ages twenty and thirty. Vampires were, overwhelmingly, handsome, beautiful, and fit. And Uratha seemed to be in a similar boat, as their lifestyles and inhuman element turned them into paragons of health, fitness, and strength.

How had she not indulged in this world of sex and lust before, she didn't know. But things were different now.

“Long term. That is an accurate way of describing it, oui.” The Prince swam up to the edge of the pool, set her hands against it, and pushed up, to lift herself above the water, wet hair flattening over her back and down to her butt. Tash, Art, and Matt, all lifted their heads, and watched. Because how could they not.

Tash froze as she realized the Prince was not wearing a normal swimsuit, but a bikini. And not normal bikini, or even a small bikini, but a micro bikini. The thing around her hips was nothing more than string, disappearing between her curvy butt, and providing only enough covering of her front to hide her sex. Everyone got to see that was she shaved smooth. And of course, the black straps of her bikini top were just as small and pointless, with only small triangles to cover her nipples. Except, they didn't completely cover them, and some of the pink of her areola was visible outside its edge. The weight of her breasts was enough to stretch the bikini, and the tiny string struggled to keep them contained. They were jiggling, blatantly jiggling, with her swaying walk, as if some invisible person was walking with her and poking her giant breasts with each step.

It wasn't the first time Tash had seen her boss naked; or in this case, basically naked. But it was a first for Art and Matt. As much as the Prince's dress at the ball had been revealing, and the one at Bloodlust too, it was nothing like this, and both boys' jaw dropped as the woman walked by.

"I will be in my chambers, draining my love. Boys, feel free to use the facilities here; all rooms where you are not permitted are already locked. Enjoy yourselves." Antoinette smiled at them, and continued along, Jack's hand in hers as he followed behind her.

Jack offered them a small finger wave as he vanished around the exit, big grin on his face.

"That kid is dating a succubus," Art said.

"She ... sh-she is ... I guess, yeah." Nodding, Natasha sat up, and looked down at herself. She was wearing a one-piece purple swimsuit, but it had an open back, and a sliver of an open stomach leading up to her sternum. It was racy! Maybe not as racy as wearing literal string, but still. "She is v-very ... very beautiful."

Grinning at her, Art nodded his head toward the door Antoinette and Jack had disappeared through. "Want to go spy on them?"

"W-What!? No! N-No..." She got up off her lounge chair, and gave Art a good punch in the shoulder. "Pervert." Of course, she'd already done that, but she wasn't about to tell them that.

"Hey, I'm in a Daeva's basement. I'm hopelessly caught in her web. Seduced." The man got up, raised his arms as if now a zombie, and started walking toward the door.

She caught him by his swimming trunks, and pulled him back, until he had to fall back into his lounge chair. “Not tr-true!”

Matt did the same thing! He got up, started moaning and groaning, and began walking toward the door, arms out in front of him. She dashed around in front of him, and pushed against his stomach and chest, frowning up at him. Both boys started laughing, and Matt gave in, until she managed to put him back on a lounge chair, beside Art.

“You like ... b-big boobs?” she said.

“Of course,” they said together.

She folded her arms across her chest, and glared.

They both started laughing, and Matt reached out. Once he had one of her hands in his, she was helpless to escape, no matter how hard she squirmed; might as well have been trying to move a mountain. He pulled her up onto his lounge chair, and up onto his waist. This close, he had no trouble picking her up, and setting her on his waist, straddling him and facing him, where he could hold her hips. She tried to get away, but it was pointless, as the titan held her there, and smiled at her as he pulled her in close for a kiss.

She frowned at him, but kissed him anyway. His hands roamed over her body, enormous hands, and despite herself, she melted onto his hard, wide chest, as the man tugged on her to bring her closer. Higher up on his abs, she was at a better angle to keep kissing him, as he set his head back against the lounge chair.

“I’m ... hungry,” she said.

“How about a little of each of us?” Matt said. “You’ve never done that.”

“B-Both?” She tilted her head, considering. They didn’t usually do that. But, both boys shared her all the time, so her double dipping on their blood at the same time hardly seemed unreasonable.

Matt tilted his head to the side, and waited, smiling at her. Her big, gentle giant. Art was watching, half smiling, half waiting for his turn. They were looking at her with hungry eyes, too. In fact, Art was looking her up and down, licking his lips every so often.

Well, he could wait his turn! She stuck her tongue out at him, turned to Matt, and snuggled her face into his neck. A few kisses against the hard steel of his muscle, the bulging thing sticking out from his shoulder and neck, a massive trapezius muscle, before she moved her lips to his neck. The dirty blonde gruff on his neck was scruffy, and she used a hand to push on his chin and keep the sandpaper away from her lips. She was a soft, delicate creature, and men’s facial hair was most definitely not kind to such things; the gruff was very sexy, though.

She sank her fangs into his neck, and melted into him, as the warmth of his blood flooded her mouth. Those silver bullets and knives had done him damage, Art too, and she could tell the two of them were still hurting. But if they were willing to share blood with her, she was willing to take it; it was too delectable to not. It was richer than kine blood, almost thicker, and almost sweet. Decadent. The energy in it was immense, and each mouthful she gulped down sent a buzz into her head, into her body, into her fingers and toes.

A few gulps was enough. She licked the wound closed, sat up, wiped away her lips with a finger, and smiled at the gentle giant between her legs. He returned it, and his hands ran up and down her hips, her sides, her back, earning a quiet mewl from her.

“It’s neat how you blush life, when you get a meal,” he said, a dopey, relaxed smile on him.

“It ... it’s ... it can b-be problematic.”

“Oh?” Matt winked at her, his energy returning quickly; damn werewolves recovered so fast. His roaming hands slipped under her arms, cradled her ribs, and his thumbs pressed to her nipples. Oh! Little sparks announced that the small buttons had become swollen, and she swatted his hands away.

“Hey! Come on, b-be ... be romantic ... for a while, ok?” She nuzzled onto the man’s chest, and gave him a kiss on his chin. “You t-two ... you almost ... d-d-d ... died.”

“Yeah, it was a brutal night,” Art said.

Matt, on the other hand, shrugged. “I feel fine.”

He did not! Tash gave his chest a good punch, where she knew the man had been shot. Predictably, the gentle giant winced, sitting up and holding his chest.

“Ow!”

“See? You’re n-not fine.”

“Well not anymore!”

She frowned at him, but instead of punching him again, she leaned up, kissed him — dreamy, green eyes — before she slid off of him, and crawled onto Art’s lap. He was right next to Matt, only a couple feet away, so she only had to take a single step to start climbing up onto him as well.

Whereas Matt was giant, and all muscle, with shoulder-length dirty blonde hair and gruff, Art was a bit shorter, though still huge and fit, and she smiled into his brown eyes as she reached out, and touched his shaved face and tan skin. His dark hair was jaw length, a bit messy, a bit wavy, and terribly delicious. He was from Tijuana but didn’t have much of an accent. She should ask about that some day.

The man smiled up at her, and looked down to her breasts; and kept looking. Men! She punched him too, gently, on the sternum, and earned an ‘oof’ from the man. Good. She climbed up his chest, and kissed him, eyes half closing as she melted onto him. So much melting. The man hugged her, hands drifting up and down her back and shoulders, same as Matt did, as she slid her kisses down his jaw, and onto his neck.

She’d have to teach the boys to be serious about things, and romantic about things, later. For now, the Kiss dominated her thoughts, and despite herself, she pressed her hardening nipples into his chest as she hunted for blood.

As she sank her fangs into his neck, the man purred, a rumbling, deep purr in his chest that vibrated through her. It was such a lovely sound, and she pressed her body down on him as she made her own sounds: moans. Quiet, little things, but it was too good, how amazing he tasted, how utterly delicious and overwhelmingly pleasurable the buzz the Kiss sent through her body, into her core, and out into her extremities was. The fact the werewolf’s blood was ambrosia, so delicious it defied words, only made everything so much better.

She pulled away, and sat up. The feel of his life, thick and warm, coating her throat as it dripped into her stomach, made her tremble. She smiled at him, and made a couple more small moans, as she felt the energy pulse through body. Her fake heart was beating, fast, and her skin was flush with color; as much as a pale girl like her could ever get color.

“D-Don’t ... go dying on me,” she said. While Art held onto her waist, she ran one of her fingers down his chest, and traced the lines of his pectorals, his abs, and the iliac furrow that disappeared underneath his trunks. “I’d ... be v-very sad, if either of you died.”

Matt turned on his side to watch her, though it was clear the man's eyes were half looking at her, half looking at her swimsuit, and how the tight fabric exposed her back, some of her side, and was showing how hard her nipples had grown. She covered them up with her arms again, and when she noticed Art was looking at them too, she frowned her best frown.

“It's th-th-the Kiss!”

“Oh, we know.” Chuckling, Art sat up, took her shoulders into his hands, hooking his arms underneath hers, and pulled her into another kiss. “And we're not dying anytime soon, don't worry.”

“I ... I w-worry, because you wolves are so ... gung-ho when you ... when you fight.”

“Jack made the right call. We needed to be aggressive,” Matt said.

Art shrugged, and nudged his nose against hers. “Besides, you were there. We trusted you to back us up.”

The giant agreed, turning on his chair so his feet were down between his and Art's. “You did good in there. One of the few that kept their head. Noah will vouch for you, I'm sure, if we ask Avery to take you into the Hisil.”

“Into ... the Hisil.” Scary. Very scary. But exciting, and thrilling, and their compliments had her smiling. Confidence was always a struggle, and—“Hey!”

Art's hands sneaked around her swimsuit's open back, and caressed her skin, her spine, before sneaking under it, and down onto her butt. Both hands stretched the fabric out a bit, so he could knead her ass, while he kissed her neck.

“You smell amazing,” he said.

“It’s ... it’s just ... fake life. B-Because I ... ate.” She pushed against his chest, but Art insisted, keeping his hands on her ass, caressing and massaging the skin, and keeping her pressed to him. He was getting hard. “H-Hey, you ... you just ... lost some blood, you ... shouldn’t be...” One of his hands raised higher, and pressed against her shoulder blades, pinning her to his chest, while the other reached down, still sneaking underneath her swimsuit. Fingers drifted down her butt, between, and underneath her, to start caressing her folds.

“I have to have you,” he growled into her ear.

Too cheesy! So very, very cheesy. But the heat of his body, the growing erection pressing against her swimsuit, and the man’s hands, strong and hungry, refusing to let her escape his embrace, weren’t so cheesy.

“Art, come on, s-someone could ... could find us.”

“Something tells me the Prince won’t care.”

“B ... But, Art, you—mm!” Couldn’t talk, not when he put his lips to hers, and continued to hug her so tight against him, her back was arching, and her breasts were flattened to his chest as he leaned his head down over her. His member was only growing harder, and pressing up against her slit through his trunks, while his fingers were still scooping underneath her from behind to nudge and caress her sex.

A glance in the corner of her eye made her gasp, or try to, but Art’s lips didn’t let her. Matt was masturbating! Casually, slowly, eyes on her, drinking her in, his hand worked his length underneath his trunks, until he was hard, too.

“Let’s take her back to her room,” he said. “Can’t really do much to her out here.”

“Good point. No bed out here.” Nodding, Art scooped her up, and threw her over his shoulder, her top half hanging behind him, her legs dangling in front of him. She frowned at Matt, big nasty grrr frown, since she couldn’t see Art’s face when hanging over him.

“Hey! W-Wait! I never—eep!” She squeaked, as Art gave her butt a spank! Oh the nerve. She was going to punish them, punish them so hard. It wasn’t a hard spank, but her bottom was mostly bare, since the swim suit pulled up into her butt, almost like a thong.

The two evil, horrible men took her to her bedroom, through the halls of black marble. She was horrified she might run into the Prince; though, if she did, she might ask for her help, to rescue her from these two bad bad men.

Her bedroom was a simple thing, large, with old fashioned wardrobes and a large closet to hold her clothes. Mostly empty, since she still had her own place to store that stuff, but she had to admit, the giant bed was comfortable. The boys knew it too, and Art walked her toward it.

“You ... you ... b-big ... meanies!”

The two boys laughed, and Matt closed the door behind them. The black marble was everywhere, but Antoinette had holes in the ceiling where LEDs were, shining white light upon everything. The bed had white sheets, and a few large pillows. It wasn’t meant to be anything more than where Tash put her head during daytime, not for entertaining guests! But Matt and Art didn’t seem to mind. With a chuckle, Art tossed her on the bed, and she squeaked again as she bounced.

“Big b-brutes!”

Her words didn’t stop them. Both of them grinned down at her, Matt coming to join them at the edge of the bed, and they both slid out of their trunks. They’d shaved; well, trimmed, which was perfect, their pubic hair reduced to a shallow gruff instead of big bushes.

No, wait, don't admire their naked bodies, and hard shafts. Be angry! They'd taken you to your room for inevitable sex, without your permission! Be super angry! Grr.

Art climbed onto the bed with her, and she struggled to not stare at how his lithe, lean, muscular body moved as he prowled across the sheets over to her, hard cock swaying underneath him. Big hands reached out for her, and she backed away from the wolf. He crawled faster, took her feet, and pulled her across the sheets toward him, like she weighed nothing. She squeaked and squealed, and pulled the blankets, but it did nothing, and soon Art had her in front of him. He turned her onto her back, so her legs were away from him, her head toward him. She squealed again as Arturo pinned her wrists to the bed, too.

“W-Wait!” They didn't wait. They never waited. They just picked her up and threw her down onto things when the mood struck them. She just ate, and couldn't turn off the blush of life for a little while yet; they were going to take advantage of it.

She wriggled and squirmed, and tried to get away, but Art didn't let her. He grinned down at her, and got down on his elbows so his head was right over hers. He was upside down to her, since her legs were away from him, head underneath him.

“You know I can't resist you,” he said.

“B-B-B—hey!” She forced her head up and looked down her body, to find Matt tearing off her swimsuit. Tearing! Her poor swimsuit. But, as she looked down at the giant between her legs, she froze as she recognized the animal hunger in his eyes. More hunger than usual, even. Scary hunger. Like, for a moment, she thought maybe the man was going to become a werewolf, and—

Oh my god he was changing. Changing! His body grew in size, adding maybe another six inches to his height, and his muscles grew larger, and larger. It stopped there, and she sighed relief as she stared at the colossal man between her legs, but he wasn't the same Matt anymore. He was bigger, bulkier, with fangs and more mass and more hair and ... and ... and like he was halfway between a werewolf and a man. Dalu form, they called it?

Art began to change too, and she stared up at the man as his body grew as well. Taller, bigger, thicker, and with a lot of the gruff she'd expect of a beastly man. She could smell it too, testosterone and blood, need and hunger, instinct and desire. They wanted her.

“W ... W-Why—nng!” She gasped, and struggled all the more, as Matt set his lips onto her sex. A belly full of werewolf blood had her body pulsing with satisfaction and human, living desires. It wanted to be touched, it wanted stimulation. It wanted a set of warm, wet lips on the set between her thighs, and burying it all in gentle heat.

She whimpered and squirmed, struggled to escape, but Art kept his hands on her wrists, and with his head over hers, he leaned down to set his lips onto hers as well. Upside down kiss. She frowned at him as best she could, and offered him her best angry glare, but it all melted, unable to sustain her frustration, as the man's kiss continued; not like his chin could appreciate the frustration in her eyes anyway. While Art kissed, Matt gently ran his tongue up and down her labia, until he settled on her clitoris, and began to massage the swelling nub. They always started gentle before they got rough, and no matter what she said or did, they had more than ample proof that she liked what they did. She was already wet.

Art lifted his head, let go of her hands, reached down, and tore the other half of her swimsuit apart.

“H-Hey! You ... you’re gonna ... have t-to ... buy...” Trying to argue about money was pointless. They knew she had plenty of money, and Kindred could steal things they couldn’t afford anyway; especially a Mekhet. And, worst of all, they knew she wore a sexy swimsuit, because she liked the looks it got from her boyfriends.

Art let go of her hands, and shifted along the bed a bit, so his right knee was beside her head, left knee beside her shoulder, his body facing her. With much of her torso between his knees, Art took his cock in his hand, and began to masturbate, a low growl escaping him as he looked her naked body up and down, the tatters of her swimsuit underneath her. His huge grip wrapped his veined shaft, and worked its length, sliding the skin up and down, and she stared at the swollen glans of his cock as he slowly exposed it. Just like the two beasts, it’d gotten a bit bigger too. Oh no.

As the huge man looking down at her masturbated, he leaned forward, and set his hot, swollen cock’s head against her lips. With his knees spread wide and her between them, he didn’t have to lean forward far, and he grinned down at her as she watched his body of muscle and heat pulse with need. She could feel his heartbeat on his cock as it pumped with blood, growing a little harder still. She could feel the gentle movement of his hand slowly working his length, each stroke pressing his glans against her lips.

His other hand reached down, and slipped around her throat. She gasped, and stared up at him as he offered her neck a gentle squeeze, just enough to let her feel him, let her feel the strength in his grip, feel the desire in the man’s body. It added to the heat, set her body boiling, and had both her nipples standing hard. But instead of raising her hands to grab onto his wrist, or maybe push him away, she reached down between her legs, and slid her fingers into Matt’s hair, as the man began to suckle on her clitoris, before burying it again in long, heavy licks of his tongue.

She opened her mouth with a moan, and Art slid his cock between her lips. The angle prevented any sort of depth, but it was enough for her to encompass the bottom half of his glans with her kiss, and begin licking the hot flesh. The rumbling purrs he made were intoxicating, and she quivered as she watched his eyes half close in pleasure, pleasure she was giving him. As she stared up at the massive beast, he kept his grip on her neck, and smiled down at her, the hunger in his eyes only growing as his hand grew faster. She could taste the precum as a couple drops of it leaked down onto her tongue. His grip on her neck made her helpless to move, to escape, and Matt had his grip wrapped around each of her thighs, pressing her legs down against his shoulders, so she couldn't move those either.

She was hopelessly trapped. Nothing she could do. Nope, nothing. Even if she begged them to stop, they'd probably keep going, and ravage her. Yep, that's what they'd do, pin her down and force it on her. Nothing she could do.

Might as well give in.

She tightened her grip on Matt's head, and stroked the waves of his dirty blonde hair in her fingers, as the man bathed her cunt with his lips and tongue. Sizzling heat radiated outward from her thighs, and sparks of pleasure traveled up and down her back and legs, reaching her chest, reaching her toes, and forcing them to curl. She moaned onto Art's cock, and the man responded by masturbating faster, grip on his shaft tightening, until she was staring at how his veined muscles shifted under his skin as his forearm worked back and forth.

Matt slid two fingers into her clenching pussy, and pressed up against her g-spot. His other arm reached around her leg from the outside to press down on her pelvis, and squashed her g-spot down against the assaulting fingers. Through it all, he kept his mouth pressed to her clitoris, bathing it with his tongue. Her moans turned into squeaks, and she stopped trying to lick Art, unable to do anything but gasp, as the tremors of climax hit her. Her legs straightened out, and her toes curled all the more, as her thighs squeezed on Matt's head, and quivered.

She knew she was making a mess on his face. Ever since that night with Jessy and her ghouls, her sex drive had awakened, as if someone had found an ember and threw on logs. And then Matt and Art came along, and threw on more logs. And some paper. And gasoline. Now, she could feel herself cream the man's lips and tongue, coating them in her juices, as she shook like a leaf in the wind.

As her orgasm started to calm down, and the tingling aftershocks danced up and down her legs, Art's hand grew faster, working his length until she could see the pleasure rising in his face. He half closed his eyes, and only tightened his grip on her neck as he masturbated onto her lips. The first wave of cum was enough to overwhelm her lips, and flowed down over her cheek, her chin, and down over her neck as Art aimed his cock down toward her body. He kept the underside along her lips, and she did her best to kiss and lick it, but she was still shaky, and Art was still masturbating, causing his glans to gently bounce against her kisses. Another stream of his cum gushed out over her lips, onto her chin, and landed on her neck; Art moved his hand out of the way, and she felt the warmth trickle down over her chin, and onto her neck and collar. And again, and again. What did Jessy call it? Pearl necklace. Except this one coated her lips and chin, too. Anymore and she was going to drown. She couldn't drown, though, and the werewolves knew it.

Art sat back enough for her to lift her head. She set her hands on the blankets beside her, and put her weight onto her elbows, so she could better look at what Matt was doing. He was staring at her, the hunger in his gaze only growing as his eyes looked at her cum-covered lips and neck.

He stood up, took her thighs, and spread them as he stepped in closer. Too tall! Way, way too tall, and she stared up at the giant beast as he pressed his shins against the bed, standing between her knees. He reached out across the bed, grabbed a pillow, and slid it under her butt, pointing her wet snatch up at him. Licking his lips, he took his cock into his hand, squatted down a bit so he could adjust for the height difference, and laid his cock along her lower abdomen, his testicles against her pussy. The brute of a man, in his Dalu form, was gargantuan. Over seven feet tall! And everything about him was bigger, and ... and longer.

She trembled, and stared, as the giant guided his cock onto her dripping pussy, and pressed his fat glans against the tiny opening. For a moment, she thought he might want anal; they had it often enough, and she'd grown to enjoy it, despite her words to the contrary. Tonight, the giant seemed intent on penetrating the hole he'd prepared, and she whimpered up at him as she felt her shivering muscles stretch open around his cock. His girth was only a little bigger, but a little bigger was plenty when the two men had already been massive compared to her tiny slit.

“W ... W-Wait ... it's ... nnnng...” She reached down between her legs with one hand, and wrapped her fingers around the giant thing opening her, as if that might stop him. Her other hand reached out to try and push against his stomach, but she might as well have been trying to push a house.

She tried to keep her eyes open, but Matt was doing that thing he did, where he went really slow and teased her. He sank in a couple inches before he pulled out one, then did it again, slowly getting deeper, slowly stretching her more and more, until she felt herself grow taut around his hard girth, and her insides were clenching in rhythm with him. And the angle, with her butt on the pillow, made sure each inch forced his glans to press toward her belly. Her grip on his cock continued as he slid more of the length past it, into her squeezing slit, and she squeezed the hard thing skewering her with her fingers as it grew wet with her juices.

Five inches into her, reaching her depths, and with a lot more to go; her hand holding his cock still had room for all her fingers. Her other hand found his abs, and pushed against him, silently begging for him to stop, despite her little mewls and whimpers. She knew what she looked like, with her mouth open, quiet gasps on her lips, and cum dripping down her chin and neck. She knew what she felt like, with her insides clenching sporadically, and her juices dripping down onto her butt and thighs. Pressing against his abs — hard, massive abs — to try and stop him? Utterly pointless. Except struggling meekly like a helpless lamb earned growls of desire from her wolves; it always did. And despite herself, she kinda liked those hungry growls.

Matt continued to push into her, stretching her deepest place deeper into her body, and she gasped louder. Very sensitive spot! She squeaked, and pushed against Matt's stomach with both her hands, but he kept going, slowly easing his cock into her body another inch, and another.

Art took her hands again, and with one of his, pinned both of them over her head. Oh no, helpless again. Grinning down at her like a devil, he began masturbating again, and pushed down on his cock to guide his glans against her lips.

“Turn your head,” he said, voice a low growl.

Between her shivers, she turned her head to face toward the beast kneeling beside her, and opened her mouth, to let him guide his cock against her tongue. He growled again, and rumbled, that deep purring sound, filled with bass and weight, vibrating into her, as she felt his shaft between her lips; she had to open her mouth wide to fit him. And as Art eased his cock into her mouth, Matt sank every last inch of his length into her small body, until her depths felt stretched to the limit.

If he started ramming her now, she wouldn't be able to handle it. It'd be too painful. But, rumbling, and growling down at her as pulled up on her thighs, Matt took her legs into his hands, set her feet to his chest, and gently began to grind his cock against her. Balls deep inside her, she whimpered around Art's cock as the wolf against her thighs shifted his hips back and forth a single inch. It was a gentle rhythm, and her insides sent more pleasure sparks into her toes each time the man slid every inch he had into her soaked slit.

Her insides were so hot, and something about being skewered that deeply, when every nerve inside her felt swollen with arousal, made the deep penetration feel good. As long as it was gentle! And Matt kept it gentle, easing his massive shaft in and out a gentle inch, so her depths were stretched inward again, and again, and again, all while her taut pussy clenched on him, earning delicious friction.

She came again. With a few squeaks, she managed to look up at Art as her muscles trembled, and she felt her juices trickle down her butt. It was embarrassing coming so quickly, and her blushing only grew worse, turning her into a beet as she tried to keep pleasuring Art, mid orgasm. It didn't work, and Art pulled out of her mouth to let her mewl a few times. When her sounds started to quieten, Art slid his cock back into her mouth. His right hand held both her hands down over her head, and his left worked his length, masturbating, as he nudged several inches of his girth around inside her mouth.

"You ... are way too tight," Matt said, voice gruffer than it normally was.

“Ah ... uh ... oh!” Talking with Art’s girth in her mouth wasn’t working, but he didn’t remove himself, content to smile at her as she tried. She knew Matt was going to do something, teasing her after saying something. Right on queue, he eased out more of his length, and started to fuck her faster. A lot faster. He kept the penetration to a reasonable length, only lightly grazing her deepest places, while the shallower penetration let the beast pump his cock far faster. That fast, hitting her g-spot over and over, was reducing her into a mess of quivers. She tried to lift her head and look, but again, Art forced her to keep her head where it was, as he masturbated with his thick glans and a couple inches beyond past that deep in her mouth.

She really was helpless, at this point. And, god, that set her body on fire.

She squeaked around Art’s cock again, as Matt pulled out, no longer rapid thrusting into her. He let her legs fall to the bed, spreading around him, and he leaned forward over her as he took his cock into his hand, and began masturbating. As he did, he rubbed the head of his length against her drenched folds, soaking his glans in her cum, as he worked up to his orgasm.

She melted into the bed, as the man lifted his cock enough to rest it against her clitoris, and squirted his cum onto her belly. Masturbating all the while, gentle friction against her clit, another wave of cum splashed up onto her stomach. And another, and another. Soon it was dripping down over her waist and onto the blankets, as yet more squirts of his cum flowed down onto her, soaking her. Several gushes reached her chest, coating her breasts in the white liquid, and she quivered as the warm seed covered her.

And then he was back inside her. They were never satisfied, and they wouldn’t let her up until they were.

Five minutes later, Art finally pulled his cock out of her mouth. He didn't let go of her hands, but he did aim his cock over her body as he masturbated faster. She lifted her head, and stared at it, as the first drop of his white cum leaked out of it onto her neck. Then next drop came as a wave, squirting onto her breasts, along with another, and another. And when it finally slowed, Art continued to masturbate, earning heavy drops to fall slowly as thick strands onto her neck, collar, and shoulders.

Through it all, Matt fucked her, burying himself balls deep and gently grinding his cock's head into her depths, pressing against things and filling her up until she thought she'd burst. She came again, legs spread and dangling off the bed shaking as she squirmed. To have Art covering her in cum as Matt made her cum, was too much, and she moaned, loudly, at the sensation. Her insides squeezed on Matt as hard as possible, clenching, wringing, but the enormous beast continued to fuck her, pushing a little harder and a little faster, despite sinking himself to the hilt each time. Her tender insides quivered, soaking the wolf, as his thrusting forced her climax to continue. He kept hitting that spot inside her, filling her, and it refused to let the sparks stop pulsing outward, hot waves coursing up and down her core and into her limbs.

A gush of warm flowed out of her, far more than her own juices could account for. Matt was cumming inside her, already! She squirmed and wriggled, still unable to escape Art's pinning grip, and let out a loud whimper as Matt pulled himself out of her. He set his cock against her pelvis, and masturbated, same as Art. He rubbed his dripping wet, hot glans against her sensitive clit, earning almost painful sparks of pleasure through the engorged button, before sliding his length up onto her mons, and squirting more cum down onto her stomach. And more. And more.

She lifted her head up, and stared at the sight of the giant, his muscles lightly trembling with his masturbating, his eyes fixed on her, and his cock aimed over her mons. The thick head of his shaft, leaking heavy drops of white, squirted again, and she stared at the stream of hot semen flowing over her stomach, and up her sternum with its impact, before trickling down her sides, down her ribs, down her waist and hips, and down between her legs. And through it all, orgasm aftershocks continued to work up and down her legs and into her chest, making her pant, mewl, and making her toes curl.

A moment to rest, finally! Art let go of her hands, and she pressed them onto the sheets around her to try and sit up. No good, body still quivering, not wanting to do anything coordinated like sit up. So she lay there, and looked between the two brutes gazing down at her cum-soaked body. She was drenched, and she could feel the heat of their cum soaking into her skin. Everything smelled of sex and testosterone, and she made a few, weak sighs, as she looked between the two slabs of muscle looking down at her.

They were still hard. How could they still be aroused!?! She'd had a Kiss of both of them, and they'd both cum twice, and—

Matt took her legs in his hands, and moved her, turned her, as he climbed onto the bed. He got on his knees, like Art, and turned her so she was between the two wolves. And then flipped her over.

“W-Wait! Wait, please, I ... need a b-b-b-break, and—”

Matt took her hips, lifted, and pulled her up onto her knees. She put her weight onto her palms, and looked over her shoulder at the man. Matt was normally so gentle, but she knew what he was like when he was transformed: aggressive, and hard to control. Maybe he was like that in this in-between form too? He looked like he was ready to jump on a gazelle and eat it, with the way he was staring at her back, and ass.

He used one hand to guide his dripping cock to her pussy's clips, and with his other hand, pulled her down onto his length. All of it.

“Nn! Please ... w-wait ... I...” Oh god. The beast had to spread his legs to get his body aligned with hers, her knees between his, but there was no denying the wolf was getting deeper than before. He set both hands on her hips, and pulled on her harder, forcing his glans to stretch her deeper and deeper, until Tash found herself falling forward, unable to keep her weight on her hands. It felt like he was in her stomach.

Her blatant inability to stay up didn't seem to bother Matt. He kept it slow enough to not hurt her, but he was still being a little rougher than before, and she squeaked with each thrust, as the giant sank every ridiculous inch of his shaft into her. With both hands tight to her hips, she could feel her ass lightly bounce against his abdomen, and she managed to peek over her shoulder to see her small butt jiggle with the impacts against his steel pelvis.

Fucked, doggy style, by a beast behind her, trying to penetrate her up to her tonsils. She whimpered up at him, eyes begging him for a moment to recover; he didn't give it. If anything, her tiny mewls and squeaks earned nothing but more hunger from the giant, and he squeezed his fingers into her body as he pulled her balls deep onto him, and kept her there. The fat head of his cock filled her depths, stretching her inward, and he stayed there, grinding his hips into her as he buried her butt into the grooves of his pelvis, hard enough her ass molded to the steel of his body.

With her chest on the blankets, she turned her head enough to look up at Art over her. “Art ... please ... I need ... a b-break...”

Art smiled down at her, and put his weight on his butt, his legs spread around her. He lifted her by the shoulders with one hand, and with the other, guided her mouth to his cock. They both wanted more.

She looked up at Art with her best ‘please don't, I'm meek and helpless’ look. It only earned a hungry, rumbling growl from the beast, as he slid his glans into her mouth. She struggled to keep her weight on her elbows, but Art set his hand on her head, and continued to push down, causing her to slip further down, and down, until his cock was sliding into her throat, thickness filling it. Deep, deeper, and all the way. When her lips circled the base of his cock, again the werewolf growled at her, this time in satisfaction as he gazed at her.

Her boyfriends were such brutes! Both of them were staring at her, growling, rumbling, purring, and both seemed almost desperate to get more of her, like they couldn't have enough of her. As she looked up Art's body, up his abs and chest, up to the massive man's eyes rolling upward in bliss, she squirmed and wriggled, managing only to bathe the cock filling her mouth and throat with rubbing muscle and wet friction. Weight on her elbows, she placed her hands against his thighs near his testicles, and pushed against him, but he didn't let her up, trapping her between him and the giant behind her.

Matt continued the fuck her, frequently taking the time to bury his huge phallus balls deep into her leaking slit. And with her lips around the base of Art's cock, she couldn't move in any direction, backward or forward. Completely, utterly, hopelessly trapped, with one beast holding her down, cock filling her throat, and the other grinding the head of his cock into her depths.

She came. Quivering and squirming, she started to shake, hands squeezing on Art's thighs as the pleasure waves renewed. She looked up, eyes drifting up over Art's body before they closed when the sparks hit her. They pulsed outward, reaching down into her toes, her thighs, and up through her core and into her chest. Everything was tingling, everything, and despite the overwhelming tremors, neither Matt or Art let her fall. Art kept her pinned on his length, lips snug against the base of him, while Matt took her orgasm as queue to start fucking her with a beat again, keeping his cock all the way inside her and only withdrawing an inch or two with each thrust. It felt like the beast was hitting her belly, and she felt her insides spasm as the man's girth rubbed against every inch of her taut pussy with each motion. And her insides, the deepest part of her, filled her whole body with waves, Matt's glans pressing against it persistently and forcing another wave to course through her, and another, and another.

Finally, Art let her head go. She didn't lift it. She was exhausted, and didn't need to breathe; far too much trouble to lift her head. And as long as the man didn't cum inside her — couldn't digest his fluids — she was safe to simply stay there, and look up at the man with tired eyes. Tired, and pleasure laden, she imagined. She didn't know what her O-face looked like, but she was sure Art was getting an eyeful of it, with her lips around the base of his cock, and his length filling her mouth and throat, as she came. It was almost painful, how the coursing waves of pleasure didn't let up, each driven on by Matt's refusal to stop stretching her depths further inward, until she could feel juices leaking out of her.

She was squirting, just a little, but enough for her juices to coat man's testicles, the soaked flesh gently slapping her clit with each thrust.

Art reached for her, and helped lift her, pulling up on her shoulders until his shaft fell free of her mouth. The moment she could make noise again, the squeaks started, quiet, high pitched mewls, barely more than panting, as Matt fucked her. She tried to make words, wanted to beg for a moment to rest, but all she managed was a few whimpers, each timed with Matt's thrusts.

But soon those came to a stop as well, as the man slid his cock out of her, and pushed her on her side so she could lie there, shivering as the sparks continued to pulse up and down her body. She managed to open her eyes, and found the two beasts masturbating again, each of them letting out rumbles as they leaned over her.

Art set his cock onto her cheek, and squirted cum over it, soaking the softness, before the next gush ran over her jaw and onto her neck. The next poured over her neck completely, drowning it in cum, before it washed over her collar and breasts, dripping down onto the sheets. At last, he set his glans against her lips, and rubbed it against her; she tried to kiss it, but she was too busy enjoying orgasm aftershocks, as his cum washed over her lips, and trickled down her other cheek, before falling onto the sheets.

While he soaked her top half in cum, Matt did the same for her bottom, rubbing his cock's head against her butt and hip, and causing waves of the hot fluid to pour over her waist, and down over her back and stomach. She managed a few murmurs, some quiet moans, as she felt the gentle giant rub the massive phallus along her ass, his cock's head almost boiling with heat as he pressed it along her butt, and soaked it in waves of white. Another gushed over her thighs. And another, he rubbed into her pussy, one of his hands pushing her legs up toward her chest so he could rub his cock against her dripping folds, and soak them in his cum. Even as his orgasm finished, he continued to masturbate, and milked the last few drops of his cum as he pressed his soaked glans against her sex, nudging her clitoris and earning some sparks as he coated it with his cum again.

Everyone was done. Finally. She took the time to lay there, quivering, a smile on her lips no matter how hard she tried to make it go away. The tremors continued to work through her for a while, making her toes curl a bit, and her fingers squeeze on the bed sheets. But with time, she managed to sit up.

Art and Matt were both back to their normal form, no more ridiculous giant beast man form. Their erections were gone, and both were breathing a little heavier than normal. She had drained both of them of a decent amount of blood, so, they should have been too exhausted for sex anyway, let alone go three times each!

She looked down at herself, and gasped. Soaked. Completely soaked, from lips down, every inch of her down to her thighs. So much cum, trickling down her breasts and stomach in thick strands, hitting her thighs and spreading before dripping on the sheets. Her lips, chin, cheeks, neck, her breasts and stomach, all of it was coated white. Matt had coated her whole butt in white! Oh gods, it was everywhere.

She ran a finger down her chest, and cut a line through the heavy layers of cum, before taking a moment to stare at the thick strand that now connected her finger to her chest.

“You ok?” Art said. “Got a little rough with you.”

She tried to frown at him, but her whole body was tingling, and making her smile, lips possessed and refusing to listen. Shivering, she stared down at the sight of her breasts, and hard nipples poking through the mess. Both men stared at her too, and rumbled their satisfaction as she set her hands on her breasts. They rumbled louder, when she took a moment to massage it into her skin, underneath each breast, and around, into the soft skin, and into her hard nipples. Wow.

“I ... I uh ... need a shower. And, um ... change the sheets.” Oh god, it was all over her. All over everything. So unbelievably ... naughty.

---

---

~~Eric~~

A couple days later, and he and Jessy were already sleeping over at each other's place. Today, it was his place. She slept under the bed, quite literally, after she was satisfied with some security upgrades for his door, and that his curtains would keep all the sunlight out. If even a crack of sunlight had gotten through, the bed would be the only thing keeping her from getting turned into cinders, and she couldn't sleep unless she had at least two barriers between her and the sun at all times. Understandable. Hell, he wasn't comfortable sleeping here at all, but she insisted it was safe.

He wasn't so sure. The Begotten working for Jeremiah knew where he lived, and had been in his place. He had 'burrowed' from his place into his lair, whatever that meant, though a text from Fiona said that this Elen person had destroyed the burrow, scarring the area and making it impossible to burrow through for some time. It was all mumbo jumbo to him, and he wouldn't feel comfortable until he talked to Azamel.

He slipped off the bed, and checked underneath it. The sun was setting, and he figured Jessy would be up any moment. Kat, on the other hand, hadn't bothered to wait, and was sleeping, nestled on the girl's stomach. The vampire was sleeping on her back, hands at her side, like a corpse. She was a corpse. She smelled faintly of ash, but otherwise, was pale and lifeless.

He was having sex with a corpse. Was he a necrophiliac now? Strange thought.

Damn beautiful corpse though. She was wearing jeans and a white t-shirt, nothing fancy; she was on vacation, apparently. And damn she had a body, large breasts pulling to the sides of her chest with their weight, struggling against the tight t-shirt. No bra. Her impressive physique and short blonde hair completed the image of the 'sporty' woman, and god damn, it was arousing.

He rolled his eyes, put on some pants, and walked into the kitchen of his absurdly fancy apartment. Not a child anymore, he could control his sex drive enough to think about other things for five minutes. Stretching his shoulders out, he opened the cupboards, and looked for something to eat. Except he didn't want to snack anymore. He wanted to eat a big slab of raw meat, something fatty, something with bones to gnaw on, with organs to tear open. One meal a day, a giant meal of everything you'd find in a kill.

He popped open his fridge, and pulled out a slab of meat, with the bone, and skin. And a side of liver, heart, and brains and eyes. The local butchers were going to know him by name, going like this. How did Avery and her pack do it? Or did they eat like this at all?

He may have been half wolf, but he was still half man; that meant utensils and plates. Smiling and shaking his head, he put the strange array of raw meat on a couple plates, sat at the table, and used a fork and knife. But, he couldn't deny a part of him wanted to grab it with his fingers, and tear it apart with his teeth. There was a limit to how much he was going to let this new, beastly side of him take over his life, though.

Kat, summoned by the smell of meat, came to join him. And he gave her a bit, too.

"You know girl, I did a lot of research to see what the best kind of food to give a cat was, when I started buying this new diet." He smiled at the stupid feline, and pet her head and behind the ears, as she chewed on some raw meat he put on a small plate for her. It was quite the rabbit hole of info, learning what you could or couldn't feed a cat. Lot of controversy around feeding raw food to a cat, too, which—

"What the fuck."

Eric lifted his head, and smiled at the vampire as she came out of his room. Completely awake already, not groggy or anything. Must have been a trait of being undead.

"Good evening," he said.

"Dude, this is gross." She came up to the table, and gestured to the meal. "It's not even cooked. And ... are those eyeballs or testicles?”

“Eyeballs.”

“And that looks like a chunk of brain. What the fuck?”

“I ... don’t know, honestly. I just listened to my gut.

“Your gut told you to eat brains? ... like a zombie?”

His turn to roll his eyes. “Only dead person walking around here is you.”

“Good point.” She laughed, sat down, and continued to pet his cat after he stopped so he could eat. Damn creature was getting spoiled to hell. “I was happy to see I woke up this evening. It’s not exactly easy to sleep over at someone else’s place, when sunlight turns you into kindling.”

“Been a while since I’ve had a girl over.”

“Wife really fucked up your life, eh?”

“I’d like to think it was mutual.” It wasn’t. As much as the hatred had been mutual, she was the one to walk out the door, took a bunch of his money, and left him with a debt to pay. Sour grapes. “Thanks for being gentle about it.”

“You want me to be gentle?” Shrugging at him, she drew shapes into Kat’s fur, while the cat was too absorbed in chewing. “Maybe when in bed.”

“I didn’t think you’d want gentle in bed.”

“We’re dating now, right? Figure I should try gentle sex at least once.”

“Once?”

“I’m sure I did it once or twice, decades ago.” Shrugging, she smiled at him, and licked a fang. “Besides, I was pretty gentle when I fucked you those times at the club.”

“True.”

“But you know what really turns me? What idea really gets me flowing?”

Good god this woman. “What?”

“First, we start off gentle. Maybe spooning, right? You’re holding me, hugging me, maybe choking me a little ... or a lot, and you’re balls deep in my ass. I’m masturbating slowly, and you’re taking your sweet time fucking my sweet ass, and I have a nice, gentle orgasm.”

Wow, that was pretty tame, and very vanilla, anal aside. “That does sound amaz—”

“And then you push me over, lie on top of me, put a pillow under my hips, and you transform. Get right into that big beast mode, full on werewolf, without ever leaving my ass. You’re inside me while you transform, and I can feel your weight grow, and grow, as you squash me into the bed. I can feel you get bigger, and bigger, until I can almost feel you in my stomach, and there’s a bulge on my abs from your giant, hard dick pressing into me.” Despite her continuing petting of Kat, it was clear the woman’s eyes were elsewhere, living in a fantasy and staring off into space.

“Would ... that even be enjoyable? I—”

“Oh god, I’d cum my brains out. Christ, if I was blushing life right now, I’d be soaking the chair. Oh! Then, you’d snuggle onto me, bury me in your shadow, completely cover me in your weight, and grind into me until I could feel your huge werewolf balls on my cunt. I’d be dripping all over them. And, and, then you could start fucking me proper, staying nice and deep but working in and out a couple inches hard enough to bounce me a bit, you know? And I'd look up, and there'd be your huge teeth and beastly eye, looking down over me, head tilted, chops drooling cause you're a big, hungry animal. You'd start fucking me harder, as your huge claws pin my arms and chest and head to the bed. And I'd cum again, soaking your balls as your dick squashes all my bits into the bed. And you start painting my insides white, filling me up with gallons of cum, and—”

“Whoa, whoa.”

“What?”

“I'm ... kind of surprised. Not exactly ... what I expected from a girl who's been the dominant party in orgies for decades.”

“Is ... that a problem?”

He blinked, and looked at her. She lowered her gaze, and a small frown was there as her eyes stayed on Kat, as if she was afraid to look at him. Maybe she was. Maybe Clara's insult really had hit closer to home than he thought, and all of Jessy's aggressive attitude about sex was how she coped with being ashamed of what was proving to be an utterly massive sex drive.

Or she was just sad she might have shied him away from continuing what was, apparently, her first attempt at a monogamous relationship.

“Not at all,” he said. “Hell, you're turning me on just talking about this. Though, I am worried.”

Her smile bounced back, and she scooped up Kat before putting her on her shoulder, embracing her for proper petting. “Whatcha worried about?”

“That this kink you have for werewolves is dangerous. I’m not ... not really the same me when I’m in that form. I’m new to all this, don’t really know what I’m doing, and I could really hurt you.”

“You saw what I did to that gargoyle fucker. I can take care of myself. I might not be able to take you in a straight fight, but I’m sure I could throw sand in your eyes and run away if it came to that.” She shivered, and smiled at him all the more. “Arg, talking about it like my life really is in danger? That the giant, dangerous beast fucking my ass could eat me when he’s done fucking me? Such a turn on.” Apparently, life threatening situations were also a turn on for her. With a wink for him, she set Kat down on the couch behind her, got up from the kitchen table, and paced around the apartment. “You’re working tonight, right?”

“Yeap.”

“K, let’s have a quickie before you go. Actually, on second thought, I’m gonna go with you. I’ll fuck you there, and then drop Tash and the others a message, see if they’ll visit.”

Damn. He wasn’t regretting his choice to date Jessy, but he was concerned she was going to drain him dry, or break his hips.

Chapter 75

~~Eric~~

Ganders was more than understanding of Eric's circumstance. Hell, all Jessy had to do was give him a few words and the man accepted everything with a smile. It really was a different universe these vamps lived in. They didn't worry about money, they worried about where their next blood bag was, or when the sun rose. They didn't worry about making friends, they just turned humans into slaves, and indulged in what a brainwashed ghoul would do for you. They worried about other vamps, and getting into turf wars. It was so alien to him, a guy who'd spent years now worrying about his next paycheck, and whether he'd be able to pay rent, and his loans.

He wasn't sure it was better. Since his new life had hit him, he'd gone through hell, and nearly died when a fucker put a silver knife into his god damn chest. It was still tender, and Eric rubbed the wound as he and Jessy found a booth. He was technically working, and was dressed in his suit for it, while Jessy had dropped by her place to get something more fitting a club.

Except, it was more fitting a beach than a club. The top was a black bikini top with some silver jewelry worked into the straps around the neck. And the skirt was barely a skirt, more like a small black piece of fabric that hugged the front of her pelvis, and another for her ass, with each piece joined by some straps that crossed her outer thighs and hips. An extremely short, extremely revealing skirt, that also made it obvious she wasn't wearing anything underneath it since it left her hips and thighs exposed. She did put on some heels, and Eric found himself quirking a brow at the sight of her in those deathtraps; they looked great, but he expected a sporty woman like herself to stay away from such unhealthy footwear. Apparently, she enjoyed dressing up. And being the weak fool that he was, he enjoyed looking at her all the more when she did.

“Look over there.” Jessy nodded across the way to another booth. The two of them were on the bottom floor, where it was noisier, with people dancing, the music louder, and more people in booths compared to the second floor.

Eric followed her eyes, and like a firecracker went off in his mind, he immediately snapped to attention. A vampire, and a werewolf. He’d seen them before, and now he could make out their scents in the chaos of the club. There was more to it, too. His eyes noticed the way they moved, the way they looked back at him, and looked at the others. Subtle signs about who they were, what they were, mixed into the scents, confirmed what he knew.

“That’s Tilly and Mason,” Jessy said. “Tilly’s a Carthian.”

“A Carthian, here?”

“Yeah, and she shouldn’t be.” Frowning, Jessy glared at the two, and tapped her fingers on the table in front of her. “This is Invictus territory. She’s not allowed to be feeding here.”

“Doesn’t look like she’s feeding.”

“Vamps come here to feed.”

Eric shrugged, and watched the two intruders for a while. Mason gave him a nod, but otherwise turned to resume talking to Tilly. Tilly, on the other hand, seemed to take delight in Jessy’s attention, and blew her a kiss. She had red hair cut to only a couple inches, and was a thin woman, average height with pale skin, and a few freckles. Mason was also average height, buzzed head with blonde hair, and like all the werewolves, a very athletic, muscular build. Eric took note, and memorized the faces for later.

“Is it breaking the rules if she’s feeding on Mason?”

“I ... don’t know. I suppose not. We can’t feed in each other’s territory, but I guess the spirit of that rule has always been about not taking each other’s kine.” The reasoning didn’t seem to make Jessy any happier though, and she frowned all the more as she continued looking at them. “We’re not exactly on good terms with the Carthians lately. The Mirrden district takeover pissed them off, and then they did this shit with you and Terra Den, practically asking for escalation.” With a long sigh, she nuzzled up against his side, eyes still on the distant couple. “They’re damn hot, though.”

Eric laughed, and she raised a brow as she looked at him. “Sorry. Still not used to my girlfriend—”

“Ooh, girlfriend. Never had someone call me that before.”

“Never had a girlfriend so brazen about being attracted to other people, especially other women.”

She returned his laugh, and gave him a buddy-buddy punch in the shoulder. “Men are hot, but women? Women are fucking hot, you know?”

“Agreed.”

While the music continued, the hum of the crowd died down, and everyone looked toward the entrance of the club. Eric and Jessy both raised a brow at each other, before looking where everyone else was looking. Both of them dropped their jaws.

It was the Prince, Jack at her side, and two women the same size as the kid. Jack was wearing a nice suit, which Eric had come to expect from any dude in their Invictus covenant by this point. The two girls, who looked like they could be gymnasts with how lean their strong little frames looked, were wearing pink and blue tube tops, the brunette in pink, the blonde in blue; looked like cotton candy, together. They both wore miniskirts of the same color as well, and each girl held one of Jack's hands. Eric thought he was escorting the two humans, but on second glance, it seemed Jack was being pulled by the two girls.

It was the Prince that everyone was staring at. How the fuck did she get into that dress? It looked like it was made of leather, black leather, and it was nothing but straps cutting across her in various patterns. The skirt was straps, exposing basically all of her ass and legs, with a single strap covering her sex with all the conservatism of a g-string. A black, tight corset circled her waist, underbust, and a couple straps cut upward across her breasts, barely managing to cover her nipples. She wore fingerless black gloves of leather that reached her elbows, and knee-high black boots, with shallow, thick heels, the sort made for stomping. The woman already was ridiculously tall, so high heels did seem a bit overkill.

The Prince and her entourage walked past the bar, and out to the cusp of where the club opened up. To the front of her, the open stage where some humans were dancing, grinding, kissing. To the sides, tables and booths that were pressed against the sides of the stairs, the stairs snug to the walls, leading up to the second floor that sat above the club entrance. She looked around for a moment, and smiled a demon's smile, as she noticed Mason and Tilly, but also Eric and Jessy.

If Jessy was right, the Prince might disapprove of Tilly's actions, and—nope, that didn't happen. The Prince offered them all a small nod, and guided her three little ones up the stairs, disappearing onto the second floor. With the second floor only using half of the room, the other half open above for the dancing area, the seating on the first floor was able to look up and see the railing of the second floor. There were always a few people standing around, talking, drinking, kissing and touching. But the Prince didn't come to the railing, likely taking one of the grandeur booths behind.

Eric breathed easy. She made him nervous. Very nervous.

“God damn, she has the most ridiculous tits,” Jessy said.

“ ... yeah, I’m gonna have to agree with that.”

“Something about her isn’t natural. She’s super tall, fine, that’s rare but not freakazoid weird or anything. White hair though? What caused that. And the tits with that tiny waist? That isn’t natural.”

“I assumed she dyed her hair, when I met her.”

“Nope.” Shrugging, Jessy pointed down at her breasts and the bikini top she was wearing. “I got big tits, despite being lean. I got lucky. When the first eight letters of the alphabet aren’t enough to cover your cup size, and you have a tiny waist like that? I’d vote fake, times a thousand.”

“I mean—”

“But the way they bounce and jiggle? That ain’t fake. And I’ve seen her wearing less, at some of the banquets. They jiggle for days.”

“Banquets?”

“Balls and parties and shit, that you haven’t seen yet. We gather up, get a bunch of kine in there, and go to town. Chow time.” Jessy grinned at him and gave him another buddy punch in the arm. “You should come. Vamps suck down a lot of blood, and we get the kine off too. Lots of blowjobs and clit sucking, fingering and shit. Some of the more adventurous vamps have given tit fucks, to some lucky fuckers lying on tables while other Kindred Kiss them through their orgasms.”

“Well ... damn. This is a frequent thing?”

“Nah. During my time as Kindred, we were recovering from the purge, and by the time that settled down and people were getting back to normal, the Invictus and Carthians were at it, Viktor being a giant jackass, and then that Tony fucker started causing more trouble with his own group. So each covenant did their own thing in this time, but occasionally it got pretty sexual at the Invictus banquets, especially ones the Prince attended. Just a while ago, the Prince ran her own banquet, same night Jack got kidnapped. Saw a lot of kine tits and dicks, and more than a few Kindred tits, too.” She held out her hands in front of her, cupping imaginary breasts. “Prince was wearing something that exposed the inside of her cleavage, right? But, like, all of it, half of each nipple and everything, no bra. Bounce, bounce bounce, with every damn step. Was like watching jello.”

He choked on a laugh, trying to keep it from getting loud, but damn it, he laughed anyway; she did, too.

He didn't know who Tony was, and only Viktor by occasional mention. It was hard to imagine that Dolareido had an entire nightlife, with giant figures of larger-than-life power, and he'd never known about it.

“Sounds like there's a lot I still need to learn about this world.”

“Damn right.” She lifted his arm up over her shoulder, and snuggled into his side. She was a bit tall though, basically his height, and it was a little awkward getting his arm around behind her neck; she didn't mind. Maybe she would have, if it was her arm being lifted up at an odd angle, but she'd have probably laughed and shoved him away.

So, he relaxed his arm over her shoulder, and gave her a half hug. She chuckled, kissed his jawline, and turned to watch the dance floor.

“Think you'd be comfortable coming to one?” she said.

“What, a blood banquet orgy?”

“It’s not really an orgy, cause the vamps aren’t getting off. We’re drinking, and getting off our drinks.” She gestured to the dance floor. “Like, anyone in there you’d like to see stripped naked, laid on a table, and have a couple vamps sucking dry while another eats out her pussy?”

“ ... I have to ask, what happened to this city?”

“Huh? Whatcha mean?”

He nodded the way she was looking, to the dance floor. One of the women was wearing a top that was, what would have been, the top half of a flowing gown, except the stomach was cut so high that it completely exposed the underside of her breasts; absurdly large breasts at that, fake and defying gravity. Every time she moved with the beat of the thumping music, the gown lifted enough to show her nipples. No one batted an eye. When a guy came up behind her, pressed his pelvis to her ass, and cupped her breasts from behind, she responded by pushing herself into him, and joining his rhythm with the beat.

“I mean, maybe I never really noticed,” he said, “because this really wasn’t my scene, when I had money to waste. But, I gotta ask, what happened to this city to get everyone in it so sexual?”

“You don’t like?”

“That’s not it. And don’t get it wrong, I like that you’re an insufferable horn dog.”

She chuckled, but also punched him in the ribs. Ow. Regular buddy punches were going to be a thing in this relationship, evidently.

He nodded to one of the booths. A girl in what must have a thousand-dollar dress was sitting cozy, a smile on her face as she sipped on something. Underneath the table was a guy, head between her legs.

“Looks like a man doing his civil duty,” she said.

Laughing again, he shrugged, and tapped on the table as he considered his words. “I’ve been to Las Vegas. I’ve seen how into the drugs and sex people can get. Dolareido’s the same way, except even more so. And, I guess the cops don’t stop it because—”

“Because we own the cops.” She nodded, and tapped a finger on the table as well, next to his. “Dolareido is Slut City mostly because of Antoinette, I guess. There are lots of cities with a dominant Kindred presence, big cities, and they all indulge in sex and drugs, and vamps take advantage. Dolareido’s a bit different, though, cause the Prince actually pushes for sexual ... openness, you know? The Prince controls so much of the money in this city, and I know she quietly pushes for more sexual expression and acceptance in everything. I don’t think anyone’s been arrested for sex-related crime in this city in forever. Prostitution is practically legal, as long as it doesn’t get media attention. And you can fuck in public areas and shit, and no one cares, as long as it’s not in the middle of the street, in the middle of the day.”

Eric had seen some very beautiful prostitutes in his life; never fucked one, but parties were parties, and in Dolareido, that often meant the birthday boy got fucked by a professional. Sometimes, birthday girl.

“That’s a lot of sex.”

“Yeap. S’what happens when you get a succubus running the city.” Shrugging again, Jessy took his finger, and guided it to her mouth, where she chewed on it. Not kissed, or Kissed, but chewed, like a bored dog. It was terribly cute. “If the Prince had it her way, she’d legalize it all, unionize sex workers, and get them good benefits and shit.”

“That is strangely admirable.” He was all for live and let live. People wanted to get addicted to hard drugs and ruin their health and bank accounts? If they were old enough to make the choice, let them. People wanted to pay for sex, or make a living having sex? Let them. There were issues with those ideas, ramifications that weren’t obvious at first glance, but they were either solvable, or the lesser of two evils.

“Parker and Vicky do that kind of shit, particularly in Devil’s Corner. And I’m sure those two indulge in their work, too.” Laughing, she guided his arm off her shoulders, hand down to her leg, and set it on her thigh closer to him. Smooth, and hard. “I bet that Parker asshole has ten women, doing everything and anything to each other, while he sits on a throne, getting sucked off.”

“That does sound like a typical male fantasy.”

“Male? Ha. Women got that fantasy too, except, you know, I think I’d prefer half guys half girls, if I was going to have that many bodies trying to fuck me.” Laughing, she shook her head, and looked up, lost in a memory. “One time when I was younger, a Daeva I knew had seduced a whole fuckload of people with their Majesty discipline, and we legit just stripped down, and got into the fucking pile of kine. Must have been at least a dozen pairs of legs.”

“One time, I had sex when I knew company would be over at any moment. That ... is basically the most harrowing of my sexual adventures.”

She stared at him, for a good long while, before she erupted into laughter. “Sweet merciful christ, I am going to have so much fun with you. I—” Something cut her off. She looked to the door, and raised a brow, as another woman walked in.

Clara.

The werewolf found them, and walked straight toward them. Eric froze. She didn't look happy, box braids bouncing with her steps. She wasn't dressed for a club either, jeans and a tight white t-shirt. A gorgeous woman, to be sure, but a deadly one, and she looked like she was ready to do some stomping.

She slid into the booth next to him. The other bouncers knew to let her and her pack in, despite the street clothes, and it looked like she was comfortable enough to use that fact. Or maybe anger was driving her to not give a shit.

“Clara, how you doing?” Jessy said, big jackass grin on her face.

Clara glared at her, glared at him, before glaring at her some more. “You sent them.”

“I did.”

“Again.”

“Well, I mean, I told them to come by every second night. Thought maybe you'd want a break between visits.” Without ever breaking her grin, Jessy leaned back, and hooked her elbows over the back of the seat. “If you want them over every night though, just tell them. They got the stamina, especially if I'm not Kissing them.”

Clara's eyes could cut steel with the way she was looking at her. “You ... you can't ... just...”

“What? Make life a little more enjoyable for you?” With her elbows on the back of the booth, her arm closer to Eric reached out and started playing with his ear. He didn't move a muscle; maybe if he didn't move, he wouldn't get caught in the crossfire. And her touch was kind of nice. “I know you had a good time that first night. They told me all about it.”

It took every ounce of self control Eric had, to not wince or grin or something at that. They'd done more than tell her, and the image of Clara struggling to handle three dicks at once was permanently burned into his mind. Hell, he was having a hard time not imagining the beautiful woman naked right now. A glance at Jessy showed her looking Clara up and down a few times, too. She was imagining Clara naked, for sure.

"I—"

"Come on," Jessy said, "be honest. Think I'm gonna slam you for admitting you indulged? Christ, the last thing a vamp is going to insult you for is enjoying sex."

"I was drunk as fuck that first time! And alone ... and I ... I would have ... agreed to anything, like that." The vulnerability in the werewolf's voice was blatant. He didn't expect that from her.

"And the second time?"

"I..."

And like a dam had broken, Jessy sighed joy, smiled, and leaned in over the table, elbows on it and fingers netted together. Almost looked like she was making a business deal, and winning. "I know how to pick em, right? I trained them good, too."

Clara blushed, and Eric couldn't help but smile. Much as Jessy was being an asshole, it did seem like she was trying to help Clara, in her own perverted way.

"Yeah, they knew what they were doing."

"Right? Isn't it great, when you know the guy is going to actually get you off, multiple times, before he's done. You can relax, get into it, not fucking worry about getting off like it's a fucking race."

Something so fucking awesome about knowing for sure you won't be getting out of bed until your legs don't work."

"Fucking god, Jessy. I've met a few Daeva with the same obsession, but never a Gangrel," Clara said.

Jessy half snorted, half laughed, and shrugged. "Slut City is run by the Queen of Sex, and she's rubbed off on everyone. She's upstairs right now, with Jack."

Mention of the kid's name earned a wince from Clara. "Thought I smelled her. I'll go speak with Jack before I go." Nodding, Clara leaned in, and managed something close to a sheepish grin. "So you didn't ... do that to try and get back at me?"

"What? Fuck no." Rolling her eyes, Jessy slapped a hand on the table, as if lightning struck her brain. "And by all means, transform when you're with the boys."

"Excuse me?"

"Transform. Wolf out, full on werewolf form, you know?"

"That is dangerous! That is ... that is asking for someone to get really fucking hurt."

"Ghouls are tough, they can take it. And I'm sure they'd be down to try some new kink like fucking an eight-foot, lean and sexy furry thing." Chuckling, Jessy looked up at nothing, undoubtedly imagining it.

"I uh ... I don't think I'll do that, but thanks for the suggestions. You prob—you already did that with Eric, didn't you?"

"Ha! Yeah. It was awesome." Jessy slapped a hand on the table again, and snuggled into Eric's side. "Felt like he was in my god damn womb."

Clara facepalmed, shaking her head. “Please be careful, Eric. You’re still new to all this, and urges in that form are so fucking dangerous. Just being near another Uratha who transforms can lead to more transformations, and for some of us, there’s no getting out of that form until we’ve tasted violence. Hell, no one in the pack has even considered sex while in Gauru form; didn’t know we could, and not dumb enough to try.”

“Don’t worry, we got it under control,” Jessy said. Eric didn’t agree, but as long as they experimented in safety, he didn’t really agree with Clara’s concern either. Not that he had any idea what he was fucking doing. “Seriously though, I hope you have a good time with the boys. It must suck to have the punk you’re interested in, out of reach.”

Clara winced, and leaned back, folding her arms across her chest. “You’ve never been in that situation?”

“Never really wanted something someone else had, that I couldn’t just take. But I highly suggest you don’t try taking Jack from the Prince, it won’t end well. If she were someone else, I’d wonder if you could get into their bed. But, the Prince and Jack are pretty much joined at the hip in love, and the only people getting into that bed are her pets. Pretty sure they’re there to be a source of blood and pussy, not a romantic rival.”

Eric pursed his lips for a moment, and waited. The woman never handled anything with grace or care, always bulldozing through anything without a second thought. There was value in telling someone the truth without sugarcoating it, but then there was taking it too far and running the person down. He enjoyed the brutal honesty, and it was a great change compared to Sheryl’s passive aggressiveness, but he wasn’t everyone.

Sighing, Clara nodded, and hugged herself, arms folded across her chest as she looked to the stairway. “Yeah. That’s ... a part of the reason I agreed to your ... sharing.”

Eric was a bystander in this conversation, and he was sure if he said something, he'd shatter the strange, fragile peace forming between the two women. Christ, they were being open about some pretty private shit, sexual and romantic. Did women always talk like this with each other?

“If you want, I can set you up with someone?” Jessy said.

“You ... already got me stepping well outside my usual comfort zone, vampire.”

“Heh, way the boys tell it, you agreed to a lot of stuff. Which is awesome, not trying to make a dig at you.”

Clara lowered her head to the booth table, set her forehead against it with a thud, and left it there. Blushing. “You vamps are turning everyone in the pack into sluts and whores. Mason, Matt, Art. I figured it was just guys being guys, chasing anything with a hole. Ugh.”

“Nah, with them it seems like romance.” Jessy looked over her shoulder to Mason, and to the vampire nudging her cheek against the man's shoulder. “You though? You looked like you needed some stress relief. So, I vote you give up on the Jack crush before Antoinette hurts you, and instead, look for romance elsewhere. And while you look, enjoy my boys; the best form of stress relief.” Chuckling, Jessy leaned in super close, and knocked on the booth Clara still had her head resting on. “Did Vincent do that thing with the fingers?”

From the look on Jessy's face, she was undoubtedly talking about something carnal. Anal fingering, Eric figured. The guilty look from Clara, head turned just enough so he could see her eyes over the booth table, sealed it.

“ ... yeah, he did.”

“Awesome. Bet you came your brains out.”

“ ... I did.”

“Awesome.”

“Ugh, no one’s—”

“No one’s going to care.” Rolling her eyes again, Jessy grabbed her top, and pulled it up over her breasts. Clara raised her head, though still leaning low, and joined Eric in blinking at the blonde next to him as she shook her shoulders a bit, making her breasts jiggle. “See anyone even looking my way twice? Except, you know, a few ‘I want to fuck that’ glances.”

Both Eric and Clara looked around, though Eric knew what he’d find: nothing. Everyone kept dancing, chatting, drinking, and only a few people bothered to look at Jessy for longer than a second.

“I—”

“You should stop worrying. What, is it because they’re ghouls? Those boys get to live for centuries now, s’long as I or any other Kindred keeps feeding them, and they’re glad to be living that long, getting to fuck and get Kissed whenever a need arises. Don’t worry about them, they’re happy to fuck a bombshell like you.”

“Bombshell? That is the cheesiest compliment I’ve ever heard. But ... thank you.”

Nodding, Jessy put her elbows on the table; without pulling her top back down. Eric struggled to not stare, or let his memories of how her breasts moved during sex, covered in cum, give him an erection.

“Hell yeah. Come on, seriously, the boys’ told me you’re a fucking fox. And if you’re worried about looking like a slut, I can guarantee you no one will give a shit. Hell, Jack is fucking three pussies and a set of tits the size of mountains on a regular basis. He won’t care. The mighty Julias Mire is fucking Triss and her friend. You remember them from the banquet? Crocodile mouth, and Jen was the one with the tits hanging out.”

“I’m ... aware. I’ve seen the largest, most developed sex and pleasure spirits in my life, ever, in this city.”

“Ha, figures. And I’m sure I’ll eventually find some pussy to join Eric and I. Can’t wait to—”

“Jessy,” a new voice called out, quiet and almost inaudible over the thudding music. Thank god, Eric could only take so much barrier smashing from Jessy in a ten-minute span. Clara either, from the looks on her face. “Oh, and Eric, and C-Clara. You—Jessy! P-Pull your top back down!”

“Hey Tash. Here to see your boss? She’s upstairs with Jack.” Jessy did as ordered, and gestured with a thumb to the petite vampire. “This one, ha. You know her deal.”

The little creature frowned at Jessy until she looked like a chipmunk. “Um ... h-how are you feeling, Clara?” Tash came up to their booth slowly, though Eric doubted she realized she walked slow. Timid. The girl was the tiniest thing, well shorter than five feet, pale skin with long black hair. She looked delicate. But, she’d gone on the mission with the rest of the rescuers, and was probably not delicate at all. And unlike Clara, little Natasha was wearing a dark dress with a surprisingly revealing amount of cleavage. Still, she acted shy, and that little bit of timidness in her body language set off prey signals in his mind.

Clara picked up on it too, and Eric noticed a moment of ... of ... of what? Animal hunger? The hunt? Something in the girl’s eyes tagged the little Mekhet as prey, and it was a body language Eric never really noticed before. Maybe it was unique to wolves?

“I’m fine,” Clara said. “We heal fast.”

“That’s good-d.” Nodding, the little vampire pulled out her phone, checked something, then nodded before she poked Jessy in the shoulder. “I’m g-going upstairs, to t-t-talk to the Prince. Cya.”

The three of them made tiny waves, before Jessy leaned back in to Clara.

“She took years to break, but I turned her, with time. Got her ready for a two-boyfriend relationship, I guess.”

Clara squinted at her. “You’re a regular saint, Jessy.”

~~Antoinette~

She adjusted one of her straps as she sat down, and motioned for Jack to sit beside her. To her ghouls, she motioned for them to stand behind the booth; similar to guards. She would be indulging them later, but for now, it was time to spend a moment with her love.

“When was the last you spoke with your sire?” she said.

“Couple days.”

“I wish to know more about this favor he owes Jacob.”

“Me too. I want to know what Jacob is up to, and Black Blood. And ... anything else out there.”

She looked at the boy, and he looked at her. Awareness. What did the boy know of the mysterious forces that plucked at the delicate weave of her city? Her love had a frustrating habit of getting involved in things that should have passed him by, things that went well beyond the purview of a neonate. She was partly to blame, she was sure, for the inevitable inclusion of the boy in events far above his ability. She was Prince, Voivode, and by virtue of that alone, a relationship with the boy meant he was in danger.

Except, that did not appear to be the primary driver of his involvement in many things. His own curiosity and tenacity had led to his participation in trials he should not have been involved in, especially where the werewolves and monsters were concerned. And it was they she had grown most concerned about, especially if the boy was involved in this hunt for the unknown presence. Were it so simple as to point the finger at the hunters, but she had a feeling it was something else.

Poor Daniel. How many nights now had he spent hunting things in realms beyond their imagining? How many nights had the man used his mastery of Auspex, and used his Twilight Projection to hunt for things hidden in the walls, hidden in the depths, hidden in the rock and shadow. There were other tools in his repertoire, and she was not happy he was forced to use them. There was something out there though, something that had to be found before it turned her city into chaos, or ashes.

And from the look Jack gave her with his words, it was evident the boy was aware. His green eyes met hers before falling away; he knew, and he knew she knew that he knew. Who had told him? Who had invited him on a quest to deal with such madness? Jacob? Black Blood? Azamel?

She set a hand on his shoulder, and smiled at him. “We will survive, my love, and I will win this game we play. Do not fret.”

No more words were needed. It would not surprise her if the boy felt guilty for not telling her that he knew more than he let on, but such was the way of the Dance Macabre. Politics, deception, and death. A sad tale when such a deadly game got between two lovers. It had the Daeva in her aching to write poetry.

She shook her head, and offered her love a kiss on the forehead. Clear as moonlight, to see the boy was thinking the same, grim thoughts, and she would not have that.

“I’m on vacation,” the boy said, and he slid in closer so his shoulder was against hers. Closer still, when she raised her arm onto his shoulders, so he could slip in further. “That means we stop thinking about all the negative shit for a while, right?”

“Oui. I believe many are feeling this way. There is a moment to rest, thanks to your efforts. But, it is normal for many to discuss city affairs, even when on vacation, if you feel the need. Though, personally, I would prefer to discuss the next opera we should watch together.”

Jack laughed, and smiled up at her, warm, and honest. “Any electric guitars?”

“I am afraid not.”

“Bah, you can’t have an opera without electric guitars.”

“I am also afraid the many decades that came before the invention of the electric guitar would disagree.”

“It’s such a shame. I love the music, but all I can think while listening to it is how much better it’d sound with a metal treatment. Thundering drums, heavy bass, galloping guitars?”

Rolling her eyes, she gestured out to where the dangling strobe lights, hanging from the ceiling over the dance floor, bathed Bloodlust in red light, while some other lights pulsed white with the beat. “And this music?”

“Ugh, fuck no. Literally the same tempo from beginning to end, except maybe a half time. No key changes, no time sig changes, and the best it has for movements is your typical bridge. God forbid they try a triplet beat. Play this if you want me to fall asleep or zone out.”

Laughing, she nodded and ran her hand along the boy's head. He melted back into her palm, and she licked a fang in delight. So easy to make the boy become jelly in her grip; sexuality was not needed. Running her fingers around and around his buzzed hair, along his scalp with just enough pressure to scratch, nearly had the boy purring.

“Read any books as of late?” she said.

“Something came my way, from Triss actually, Journey Through The Rain. She said Aaron had read it. So far it's a story about how a man in a coma is confronting a lot of the shit in his mind. Lot of hatred, lot of revelations.” The boy nudged his cheek into her side, and looked out to the lights dangling above the dance floor. They could not see the dancers or anyone on the bottom floor, as was the desired privacy of the top floor, but the red and white lights were strangely enchanting, nonetheless. “That reminds me, I wanted to ask about the Circle of the Crone.”

“Oh?”

“Yeah, like ... what do they do? No one at the Invictus seems to know much, or care.”

“A deep and interesting question, my love. I do know more than your sire, though the details of their nigh religious views are generally of little interest to those outside their circle.”

“It's interesting now, especially with Jacob getting his fingers in so many things, and Julias owing them a favor now, and ... yeah.”

She nodded, and tapped on her chin a couple times. “If I had my laptop, or we were in my library, I would show you. There are many depictions in both fiction and exaggerated history, of the sort of acts the Circle engage in. Naked, covered in bloody symbols from their recent sacrifices, they would dance naked around bones, or grand, sexual gatherings, and call upon their forsaken and outcast goddess, the Crone, for blessings; early forms of Crúac.”

“That sounds very metal.”

Metal, to describe something grim and macabre, yet awe inspiring, was an interesting evolution of the past few decades. It made her chuckle.

“They operate as a family, more so than a covenant. They have roles, titles to describe positions, though Jacob seems to have abandoned these, due to how small his group has become since his golden years. Father, Mother, but also oddities such as Maiden, and Fool, Whore, and Hermit. Others as well. The function of each, I am afraid is difficult to know in detail. They are loose in nature, these roles, but some have a duty to lead, others to teach, others to be rebellious, others to wage war. None of that is written in stone, and the Circle are ... tumultuous, with enforcing their roles. Of all the covenants, I would trust them the least, with managing a city.”

Explaining her old friend’s way of life was difficult. She did not appreciate the chaos he sowed, or the chaos innate to his covenant, and explaining it without letting her disdain color her words was problematic.

“And you? What sort of things about your Ordo Dracul can you share with me?”

Ah, this conversation again. It was terribly cute how thirsty the boy was for knowledge, but he poked and prodded at walls that were liable to crush him.

“Little. The Circle of the Crone are secretive, but the Ordo Dracul is a secret society, my love. Anything I tell you may affect all my fellow dragons.”

Nodding, he nudged his cheek into her side some more, as she played with his hair. “Part of me thinks Jacob will tie Julias to a pole, and force him to get involved in their rituals.”

“He may at that. But I trust Jacob to not overstep himself, and—oh, Natasha. Please, come sit.” Beautiful little Natasha, dressed in a long black dress — with an impressive amount of cleavage for the shy Mekhet — came up the stairs, and offered a small wave when she spotted them.

“Th-thanks.” With a nod, the petite creature came and sat beside her, and offered the dress Antoinette wore a few glances. The Prince’s dress was rather revealing, with only a single strap for each breast, three inches wide, rising up from the underbust corset to loop around her neck. A guilty pleasure, such clothes, and she was delighted to see her student was realizing the succulent beauty of her own petite body, accenting its delicious features with intriguing clothes as well.

“I noticed your night after swimming went well,” Antoinette said.

“W-What? You ... you um ... w-what?” Natasha looked down, and drew some lines on the table with her fingers.

“Do not worry, I saw nothing.” But your boyfriends are men, after all, and they leave behind traces of everything they do. The smell of sex was not difficult to notice, and the smell of what must have been a gallon semen. She did not say it, but a grin said it all.

Volta squirmed a little more, but managed a tiny smile up at her boss. “They’re a couple of ... they’re ... s-silly.”

From the expression on her face, she did not mean silly. She meant bold, shameless, adventurous, and hungry for her. Did they pin the small girl down, despite her pleas, and do things to her? Antoinette set a finger to her lip, and returned the smile. Such a delicious thought; a shame Natasha would likely say no to letting her witness the event.

Or would she? If the Mekhet continued to rest within her Elysium Tower, then—no, no it was unlikely. Daniel never shared any detail of, what she could only assume were very rare, sexual encounters, let alone perform them in clear view of her. And Vola was not the only creature that would need to consent; her boyfriends would, as well. But, as Natasha said, they were silly. Adventurous men with large appetites for their lady? She could convince them to put on a spectacle for her, no doubt. She was a very convincing woman.

“I hope ... m-my presence, isn’t intruding,” the little Mekhet said. “I mean, at the t-t-tower.”

“You have been with us for weeks now, my student.” Shrugging, Antoinette hugged Jack closer, and set her hand along the side of his head, so she could pull him into the side of her breast. The strip of fabric holding each breast left the sides of her breasts bare, making such skin contact possible; part of the purpose, and the fun, of course. “You are of no intrusion. While you continue your efforts in aiding me, my faculties are yours to use.” And then, a stern look, to seal her point. “I have explained this before.”

“S-Sorry! Sorry, um ... thanks,” Vola said. Antoinette’s frown hardened. “Um, I mean, n-not sorry! I ... will use them.”

“And, of course, as long you keep an eye on them, your delicious pair of wolves are welcome as well. You need not indulge them in only your room, either.” Another offer, to see if the little creature would bite.

“I ... I um ... m-maybe.”

Oh, a step toward confidence. Perhaps having Jessy for a friend was rubbing off on the little vampire more than she realized. Antoinette rewarded her with a smile and nod, before she released Jack’s head, and set her hands on the table.

“I assume you will be visiting Azamel and Avery soon, my love?”

“Yeah, definitely. Need to see how they’re handling all this. I imagine Avery will be pissed, nearly losing three of her pack. And Azamel, I ... have no idea.” Tapping a finger against his chin, Jack looked up to her, to Tash, then out ahead of him, mind wandering, plotting. The boy was cursed with wearing his emotions and thoughts on his sleeve. “But, it’s the covenants I’m worried about most. Jacob is doing God knows what, and Garry’s stirring up shit with Terra Den, and ... and I feel like...”

“Mister Tones understands that now is not the time to stir chaos.” She nodded as she mimicked the boy, tapping a finger on her chin. As predicated, the boy’s eyes widened a moment as he realized how obvious a gesture it was, and that he was doing it. “But I would be a fool to ignore the possibility. As much as the Carthians hate the Invictus, I am the barrier in that war. I do not let Garry, or your council, run amok.” His move to use Terra Den and Jeremy Long against against the Invictus was well planned, and she let Garry play his game, just as she let council play theirs, taking the Mirrden district. A balance. If she controlled each group with an iron fist, it would lead to rebellion. As strong as she was, if both the Invictus and Carthians threw themselves at her walls, she doubted she and Daniel would be able to regain control.

It was no wonder, that in most cities with a strong Kindred presence, it was either the Invictus or the Lancea et Sanctum that ruled, with their obsession with rules and structure, and their many followers. The First Estate, and the Second Estate. Wherever the ancient groups had acquired those secondary names, she did not know, but they were infuriating to her. As if such archaic forms of governance could withstand the future. Idiot children.

“Clara’s downstairs,” Tash said. “She is ... I think J-Jessy is ... befriending her. M-Maybe trying to convert her to ... D-D-Dolareido’s ways.”

Antoinette nodded, and considered. It was good if Clara found someone else to set her eyes on, though she imagined Jessy could teach Clara much about pleasure, and little about romance. Then again, if this budding relationship between her and the werewolf proved fruitful, perhaps Antoinette was wrong.

Sure enough, the werewolf came up the stairs to join them. Clara was a beautiful creature, but was not dressed to exploit such. Kine on the second floor raised their brows as they watched the woman in jeans and a t-shirt step up and walk toward her booth, undoubtedly thinking the same thing Antoinette was. How beautiful Clara would be in something more fitting. And it was not as if Clara was unfamiliar with the topic; Antoinette had seen her wear more feminine clothes before.

If Jessy was befriending her, then it would not surprise Antoinette if she was burying Clara in her typical interest: orgies. That could awaken a woman’s sexual awareness quite a bit, as it had done with Natasha. But then, why the simple clothes? Guilt, perhaps? Of course, this was all conjecture, and not exactly worthy of Antoinette’s spying efforts. Still, half a millennium of observation had taught the Prince many observation skills, and as the once confident woman squirmed in front of her, it was clear the werewolf felt self conscious about something.

“Clara,” she said.

“Prince,” she said, eyes lingering on her dress for probably a second longer than the werewolf meant to. “Uh, just wanted to tell Jack and Tash that I really appreciate what they did.”

“Y-You’re welcome,” Natasha said, voice raising in pitch and volume. The girl did love praise for a job well done. Adorable.

“I’m glad you survived,” Jack said. “You looked beat to hell.”

“We all did by the end of it.” Nodding, Clara watched Antoinette for a moment, and met her eyes. The werewolf was looking for something.

The Prince suppressed the urge to clutch her lover closer.

“I hope Avery recognizes the threat the hunters pose now,” Antoinette said.

“Yeah, getting a monster on their side has definitely got her attention.” Clara’s eyes lingered for a little while longer, before she shrugged, and offered a small wave. “I’ll see you at your next meeting, Jack.”

And then she was gone, leaving a wake of awkwardness behind her. The kine didn’t notice, the shadowed faces in their booths returning to their drinking and kissing, some fingering and fucking.

She looked down at Jack. He looked a touch mournful. From what she gathered of his past, from the things he told her, as well as Julias’s insights, the boy had never been on this side of a crush. It was painful to lust for someone, to crave them, and be denied. It could be a strangely sobering and guilty experience, to be on the other end.

But she would not let such thoughts dwell in his mind for long. “My little Ventrue, I do believe I wish to make love tonight.”

The boy shivered lightly, before smiling up at her, and leaning in to kiss her collar above her breast. “Oh?”

“Yes. I believe ... another session in my display room. Farner Temperman’s art is still set up, and I admit, such fantastical clothing and decor is fun to indulge.” She kissed the boy’s head, and leaned down further, so she could set a kiss upon his lips. “To dress as an evil queen, and force pleasure upon my slaves? Terribly amusing and enthralling.”

“U ... um...”

Ah, poor Tash, forced to hear. Antoinette looked over her shoulder, winked at her child, before resuming her kiss with her love.

~~Jack~~

Back in Antoinette’s deep labyrinth, and back in the art room, where she had said she liked to set up varying aesthetics for art ... displays? Display wasn’t the right word for what she’d created, a dungeon of black skulls and blue fire. The black skeletons, the dangling chains, the skull braziers of blue flame, the reaper statue, the throne, all of it reeked of macabre art, and Jack found himself staring at it all as he walked among the room. It was so damn beautiful.

He walked around the empty room, naked. The Prince had left him instructions to strip before entering, and at this point, he was under the impression she was going to make that request every time. Would she tie him up? Push on the leash? Something about being her sex slave, and utterly helpless to her whims, was a huge turn on, and he smiled to himself as he stood before the throne. She wasn’t here yet.

He was in a better mood, definitely. The whole rescue mission had been a painful failure, and yet a resounding success. The duality of it was strange, and he was struggling to let it go. Angela’s face, the strange way she'd almost looked happy when he was about to shoot her, was scarred into his mind and wouldn't go the fuck away. If he'd still been human, still had a heartbeat, he'd take up drinking in exactly one of those heartbeats, anything to suppress the memories, drown them, blur them.

But, Damien, Antoinette, Julias, even Jessy and Tash and the others, supported him. A recent meeting with the council showed Maria and Michael were, while unhappy with the situation, ultimately satisfied with his performance given the circumstance. No one was too happy about having to rely on Jacob and his outside aid, but the only person who'd have to pay that piper was Julias. Poor guy.

And Clara. He'd been devastated when he thought she might have been dead, but the moment he realized she would be fine, he shut right up and played it cool. Platonic. If Jessy was helping her find happiness elsewhere, than—

No, no no, no contemplating the shitty situations befalling him and everyone else. Vacation time. Don't think about any of that crap, about the Begotten or Uratha, about the hunters or Angela. Don't think about your family, Mom and your sister. Don't think about the Invictus and your position as Right Hand. For a few more days at least, don't think about it, and focus on the good things.

Jack turned around and looked at the strange pile of blankets and pillows, the ones surrounded by the black skeleton hands that jutted from the floor. The altar where Antoinette had fucked him last time was gone, and instead, the pile of blankets and pillows took their place. It was basically a giant, circular bed.

Some giggles caused him to raise his head, and look to the giant reaper statue. Two delicious-looking ballerinas stepped around it, and Jack smiled at the sight of Ashley and Julee, each girl beaming joy. They must have been fed by Antoinette recently, with how they were glowing and grinning.

While their skin glowed blue in the one-color light, each girl was wearing what looked like some very tight thigh-high socks, tight enough to lightly pinch their toned-but-thin thighs. Damn. They were striped, too, little white stripes circling them several times above the knee. No shoes, and Jack smirked at the sight of their feet in the socks on the floor. But his eyes raised, and stared, at the sight of their flexible, lithe little bodies, and the black thongs they were wearing, hugging their thin legs and pert butts tight enough to barely be visible.

They wore nothing else, and Jack licked his lips as he looked them from the feet, up their gymnasts legs, tiny waists, perky breasts, and to the collars on their necks. The same collars they had on last time, with tiny skulls of black, and a few blue jewels. From behind the collars, chains dangled, and Jack looked between them, to see the woman behind them.

Tall as ever, Antoinette stood more than a whole head above her two ghouls, both long chains in her hand. In her other hand, another chain, looped and dangling from her fingers, along with a collar. Jack's collar. She herself wore only two things: a see-through silk robe, colored black in the blue light, and the skull crown she wore the last time she was in here with him. The robe, combined with the skull crown, made it look like she was a necromancer on her day off, enjoying her kinks. Totally fine by him, he always had a thing for necromancers and vacation days. Corsets on work days, silk robes when relaxing.

The fact that the already see-through robe had no belt, and was open so it left the front of the woman's body exposed, robe spread by her breasts, sealed the image.

The three women stepped over the black skeleton hands that circled the enormous pile of blankets, and the two ghouls giggled as they threw themselves onto the softness. Plenty of slack in the chain, and the chain itself was thin and light. His though, was bigger, thicker, heavier, and Antoinette smiled a devil's smile as she curled a finger at him.

He gulped, stepped onto the pile of blankets, and joined his lover. No words needed, Antoinette gave him the large collar, and he put it on, the heavy chain now dangling off of it in front of him. The collar wasn't uncomfortable, built for comfort and control, not pain, and the heaviness of the chain was meaningless to a vampire. It dangled over his chest, and Antoinette gave it a tug, pulling him to her so she could lean down, and give him a soft kiss.

God damn she was so fucking beautiful, it was painful.

"Ashley and Julee have been neglected, I feel," she said. "And they are, perhaps, a bit jealous."

The two girls looked up from the pillows, and smiled, before Ashley began to crawl across the floor toward him. She made sure to sway her tight butt behind her as she prowled, arching her spine downward to emphasize every exaggerated motion.

"Mistress says her love could use a relaxing night," she said as she got onto her knees in front of him. "She says, we should be gentle tonight, and help you relax." Beautiful, lean creature, wearing nothing but thigh high socks and a thong, beaming up at him from her knees. God damn. Relaxing would be tough.

"I, um..." His dick sprung up, hard, pulsing with fake life, but very real arousal, and both the ghouls giggled, evidently quite happy at the reaction their bodies elicited.

Antoinette set her hands onto his shoulders, and pushed down on him, gently. The nudge guided him down onto the blankets next to Ashley, and the creature giggled joyously as she reached out to help him down onto his back. Julee came over as well, knelt beside Ashley, closer to his legs, and blushed as she nuzzled into Ashley's side.

The two girls looked up, and watched with hungry eyes as Antoinette eased her tall body down. The Daeva sat on her knees with both legs out to the same side, creating a slanted slope lap. It wasn't the first time she'd sat in such a position, and same as last time, she reached out for him, picked him up like he weighed nothing, and set his back against the slope of her thighs, so his head rested against the higher leg.

Her heavy breasts were big enough that the one his head was closer to pressed against the side of his face, despite how high the tall woman sat above him. The open robe meant there was nothing between his skin and hers, and he nudged his nose and lips into the soft weight squishing against his cheek. With a long sigh, he relaxed against her body as she began to stroke his buzzed hair with one hand, and her other hand set upon his abs to tease and caress his muscles.

Him, lying down, head on her lap, while she massaged him. They did this many times, and every time, he felt the stress in his body melt away, as her fingers did magic on his skin.

Both ghouls aww'd, and Jack glanced their way through the corner of his one uncovered eye. They were blushing and smiling, but with eyebrows raised, like they were watching the climax of a romance.

"Ashley and Julee, as I said, have been feeling neglected." The busty demoness smiled at her two pets, before she returned her gaze to him, licking a fang before she resumed stroking his head. Buzzed hair, fingers, melting. "They should be witness to our love, not just our lovemaking, perhaps a little more often than we have let them.”

“I ... didn’t realize.” Craving the sex, he could understand; the living had a habit of cumming their brains out, when Kissed during sex. But the romance? It wasn’t exactly a typical romance, with a manly man sweeping a lovely woman off her feet. Not like you found many romance novels written about this sort of stuff.

But both Ashley and Julee scooted in a little closer, and smiled so bright, it was almost painful, like staring into the sun.

“Mistress doesn’t tell us much,” Ashley said, “because it’d be dangerous. But she tells us some, and ... and that it’s been hard for you.” The topless ballerina slid in closer, her knees touching Antoinette’s underneath his back and shoulders. Her hands reached out for him, grabbed his closer hand, and brought it onto her lap, palm up. “But you’re only our age! Even younger, really.”

Julee managed a small nod, and after Antoinette made a subtle gesture to her with her hand, the other ballerina crawled in between his legs. She got in close, very close, and sat on her knees as she leaned over his cock. His shaft was pointing up at forty-five degrees toward him, but once Julee slipped her hands around it, she pointed it straight up. She didn’t stroke him, didn’t work its length or massage it, but held it still, encompassing it in all her fingers with a gentle grip.

It was enough to earn a quiet moan from him. He was surrounded by beautiful women, and being buried in their heat and touch.

“It’s—”

“It’s bad!” Nodding and glaring, as if declaring her anger to the gods above, Ashley pat him on his chest, his other hand still in hers on her lap. “You know what Julee and I do all day? Whatever we want. We spend Mistress’s money on fancy clothes, fancy meals, and fancy lessons for fancy hobbies from fancy trainers. Though, lately, Julee and I have been forced to rely on each other for sex, because—”

“Hey!” Julee frowned at Ashley, and Jack winced as the angry woman squeezed his dick, unaware.

Ashley stuck her tongue out Julee, before leaning in over Jack, and smiling down at him from above. “Because Mistress and her love have been getting on without us, or Kissing us before we can have some fun, too. And, I think I can be ... you know, womanly, and soft and all that, and be ... soothing.” She giggled again, and moved her head over his chest, where she leaned in closer to Antoinette, until the ghoul’s chin was touching his sternum, and her lips and nose were nudging into the Prince’s other breast, where it hung like a giant teardrop over Jack’s chest.

Antoinette said nothing. She continued to smile down at him, and her ghoul, and stroked his head while caressing his stomach. Jack could feel the nipple, half buried against the top half of his cheek, start to swell, though. The Prince was growing excited. That got him excited, and he flexed his cock with need, earning a squeak from the ballerina still holding it.

“But,” Ashley said, “Mistress is the best at it, being soothing. Cause, I mean, these are so ... soft and...” Closing her eyes, Ashley pushed her face against Antoinette’s other breast, and began to kiss her nipple, capturing it in her lips.

Only inches away, a beautiful girl, was sucking on his lover’s breasts. Kissing, licking, suckling, all the things he loved to do to her. The reaction from the Prince was immediate, and her eyes drifted half closed, as her nipples swelled. Her lips softened in a gentle smile, and she let out a long sigh as she leaned forward a little, and pressed her breast into Ashley’s lips.

Jack groaned at how much more of the Daeva's massive breast covered his face. A slight turn of his head toward her was all it took, to guide her swollen, puffy, pink nipple into his mouth. Her alabaster skin overwhelmed his face completely, and he closed his eyes as he quietly moaned into the heavy softness.

And everything went silent, except for the sound of two mouths softly suckling and kissing Antoinette's breasts, the Prince's subtle moans, and the quiet jingle of metal chains.

Jack couldn't see anything anymore, but when Julee removed her hand, and another took its place, he recognized the longer fingers and more confident grip, Antoinette's grip. And most of all, he recognized the feel of lips kissing, then slowly enveloping his swollen glans. Not Antoinette's lips though, Julee's lips.

"Slowly," Antoinette said, "I do not wish for my love to cum yet." Her voice was smooth, husky, confident, but there was a hint, a telltale tone change, that announced her arousal. Having both of her nipples sucked was making her rock her chest back and forth slightly, nudging against Jack's side, and pushing the softness of her breast into his face.

Julee nodded — he could feel it around his cock's swollen head — and began to caress his glans with her kisses, keeping it in her mouth and easing her lips up and down the base edge of the bulbous tip. Sensitive, ripe flesh, sent a wave of pleasure sparks down his length, each and every time her hot, wet lips worked up and down the edge of his cock's head. Her tongue pressed against its underside, and licked him, in much the same way he was licking Antoinette's hard, engorged nipple. The center at first, before he swirled his tongue slowly around her the puffy flesh, and Julee did the same to him, swirling her tongue around his cock's tip, before returning to gentle strokes along its tip and underside.

Through it all, Antoinette's hand around his cock squeezed with perfect pressure, though she didn't stroke him. She wanted it to last, and as he felt his precum drip onto Julee's tongue, he knew he would, if only because Julee kept the stimulus at that perfect level of frustratingly pleasurable but not enough to push him to the edge.

"I hope I do soothe my love's soul," the Prince said. "Do I, little Ventrue?"

He nodded, smiling into the softness hiding his face.

"Bien. I may be Prince, and though people think me too far above them to notice, I have heard whispers of what some people have described me as." Her hand around his cock left him, and took the chain dangling along his chest and stomach. With a small tug, she pulled him out from under her breast, and Ashley backed away to let her pull on the leash. Jack blinked up at the Prince, and pulled his head back a bit as the Daeva leaned in. "I once heard whisper, that someone referred to me as a ... cold-hearted bitch, I believe was the term."

Everyone gasped, but Jack had to do his best to hide his grin. Antoinette seemed like she was made of ice, on the surface, depending on the situation. In political matters, she was definitely cold and ruthless, and had to make equally cold and ruthless decisions from a distance when governing the city. In person, though? Especially during things like banquets? She was a teasing succubus who enjoyed drowning the city in sex. Cold-hearted bitch seemed very short sighted. But then, he was pretty biased, at this point.

And she was wearing a crown and hair ornament thing that was a giant, black, metal skull. There was that, too. Her extreme fashion, combined with her confidence, white hair, red eyes, and alabaster skin, probably painted her as some sort of ice queen to those who didn't know her.

The Prince kissed his forehead, and let the chain slack, until his weight was back on her lap, shoulders and head resting on her bare, lovely thighs. The chain hand let go, and took his cock back into her grip, to offer it slow, gentle squeezes, while her other hand, reached under her breast over his head, and guided it, the heavy mass spilling over all her fingers as she set her wet, puffy nipple against his lips. Ashley wasted no time getting back to the other breast as well, and Antoinette released a very controlled, very purposeful, and very intoxicating moan, as both Jack and Ashley started sucking on her again.

He could smell his lover's arousal, vampire nose picking up on the scent of her juices underneath him. The fact she loved having her enormous breasts played with, touched, massaged, and most importantly, suckled on, was quickly becoming his biggest turn on, and he groaned into the heavy softness covering his face. It was the perfect way to indulge, to simply lay there on her lap, her huge breast covering his face, while he suckled, and suckled, and suckled.

She started to orgasm. Both Jack and Ashley slowed their suckling, and kept the stimulus to nothing more than the softest kisses, as the buxom goddess came. Antoinette kept her voice quiet, only the tiniest moan escaping her, as she pushed her breasts into him and the ghoul beside him. Her hand on his head, no longer stroking his hair, pressed his head toward her, cradling him and smooshing his face into her breast. He kept his mouth wide open, so her large, engorged areola filled it, and he placed a couple of soft licks as she came, earning some gentle tremors from her. Eventually, she leaned back, and let his head fall back onto her thigh, half his face no longer covered so he could see Ashley had backed off as well.

Antoinette smiled down at him. Both her nipples were as swollen as they could get, each glistening in the blue light with wetness. He gawked, blatantly, and did his best to not cum into the set of lips still holding his glans in a gentle, enveloping kiss. He managed to look down at Julee, and he could see the ballerina looked delirious with need; he was too. The whole room was soaking in sexuality, in hard contrast to all the black skulls and skeletons everywhere. There was nothing quite as hot as watching the busty woman cum from nothing but having her nipples sucked on, and the ghouls felt the same way.

“To let Jack rest his head upon my lap,” Antoinette said, “to invite him to let me soothe his wounds, has become part of our romance, my pets. Each man is different, and where others may show their vulnerability differently, each man is vulnerable.” She nodded to Julee, so the ghoul raised her head, and crawled over his leg to come sit beside Ashley, by his legs. “Many men, if not most, have been conditioned by society to be emotionally reserved; women, far less so. And I am terribly lucky to have found a man who will open himself to me so, expose himself so, and,” she jingled on the metal chain attached to the collar, “be willing submit to me.”

Submit. Such a strong, naughty word, and he shivered as he met her red gaze. In the blue light, they weren't red, they were black, and he gulped as he stared up at her.

He gulped again, louder, as the Daeva slipped her legs out from underneath him, and crawled over him, massive breasts swaying underneath her. She straddled his legs, his knees underneath her butt, and took his cock into her hands, both of them. She leaned forward, far forward, until her teardrop breasts pressed to his pelvis, burying his hips and waist in their softness as the two pillows swallowed his cock between them, hiding Antoinette's hands as well.

“Julee, come, finish.” The Prince blew Jack a kiss, and nodded toward Julee, as the Daeva guided his cock out from underneath her breasts enough so his length was pressing up against her right breast, near Julee.

The blushing ghouel let out a tiny squeak, leaned in, slid underneath the black robe that dangled in the way from the Prince's side, and began to kiss his glans. Immediate pleasure shocks ran down the length, and Jack shivered as he felt the tingling warmth of cum begin to build up between his legs. Antoinette rubbed his glans against her nipple, gently easing it back forth just enough to earn friction, while allowing Julee to continue kissing the swollen head of his cock. Each kiss was joined by tongue, and the ghouel spared no expense in trying to stimulate him this time. She buried half the engorged flesh with each kiss, and pressed her tongue and lips against it hard enough to push it into Antoinette's puffy areola.

He didn't move his hips, no matter how much he wanted to. Hold still, and let the pleasure waves build, until his inner muscles flexed, and forced out the first gush of cum. A hard squirt, heat filling his cock and making him lift his head, demanding he watch as it hit both Julee's lips, and Antoinette's breast. It was a hard enough gush to overwhelm them both, and Julee squeaked as she pulled back, a thick strand of cum running down from her forehead, over her cheek, and onto her lips. She leaned back in at Antoinette's behest, and resumed suckling on the side of his glans, though not covering the very tip, so each squirt of his thick fluid gushed up over Antoinette's breast, and Julee's face. The stimulation was almost painful, but Julee knew to ease up, be gentler with her kisses, as the orgasm had Jack struggling with all his might to hold still. Antoinette's right hand continued to gently stroke his length, but her other, now soaked in his cum, reached down to begin caressing his testicles, making each fresh gush of his fluid fill him with more powerful pleasure waves.

Finally done, Julee pulled away, and looked at him. Several strands of his cum coated her face, dripping down from her forehead and cheeks, down over her lips and chin, and dripping onto his abs.

"S-Sorry," he said.

“Don’t be!” Ashley, groaning openly at the sight, climbed around Jack to sit across from Julee, Jack between them, both girls sitting around his hips. With a giggle, the blonde leaned in, gave her friend a kiss on the cheek, licking up a large glob of his cum, and winked at him as she pulled it into her mouth. She was delighting in playing to a typical fantasy for him, probably at Antoinette’s request; it was working.

With Julee’s head out of the way, Jack also groaned, a similar sound to Ashley’s, at the sight at Antoinette’s right breast coated in his cum.

“Ashley,” Antoinette said, smiling at her ghoul, and guiding his cock underneath the other breast.

“Oh, yes please.” Ashley pulled aside the other half of Antoinette’s dangling, open robe, and wasted no time, leaning down over Jack’s side and immediately setting her lips to his glans. His shaft was coated in his cum now, and Antoinette let out her own sigh of bliss, as she began to rub his hot skin against her other swollen nipple. And Ashley, mischievous imp that she was, made sure to both suckle and kiss his cock, but also her mistress’s areola.

Just as the queen intended, no doubt. She sighed bliss again, and nodded her head toward Julee. With a little shiver of her own, Julee reached out with both her hands, and began to massage Jack’s cum into the breast he’d already soaked. Waves of the white now coated the softness, leaving lines in the patterns Julee’s fingers drew, before some of it fell onto Jack’s waist and pelvis. While massaging, Julee leaned in, and set her cum-soaked lips to Antoinette’s wet nipple, pulling all of it into her mouth, and burying it in suckling kisses.

Ashley reached back and behind the Prince with one of her hands. Jack couldn’t see what she was doing, but judging from the tiny shudder the Prince made, and the smile she gave her pet, he had to assume the ghoul was massaging Antoinette's clit.

There was a lot going on, and all Jack could do was watch. He did manage to grab a pillow, and slip it under his head so he could do that easier, but he knew the Prince would not want him to interfere; holding still was paramount. It was torture, every reflex telling him to get in there, do something, penetrate something, push himself to another quick orgasm. But Antoinette liked to make him cum using nothing but the sensitive skin of his cock's head, and he had to admit, if he could endure it, the pleasure of the orgasm and quantity of fluids, were far greater.

A part of him knew it was his Kindred body, adapting to the unusual stimulus, too. It wasn't exactly normal for a guy to go three times in a session, or for him to cum so much, but having sex almost every day with the insatiable succubus was demanding his new body accommodate. It was.

Antoinette came again. With both girls sucking on her nipples, one with his cock pressed against it, and Ashley pleasuring the woman where he couldn't see, the beautiful woman half closed her eyes, and moaned. She didn't make noise during climax unless she was doing it on purpose, making noise for the sake of sounding sexy; it worked. Her moans were husky, with the right depth to send a thrill up his spine. As she made the sound, she started to jerk him off again, hand around his girth and hand around his balls each massaging wet warmth into him, as she kept his glans against her nipple where Ashley kissed and licked.

His turn to cum again. Warmth flooded his cock, and he squeezed his fingers against the sheets around him as he watched the white fluid gush up onto his lover's breast. Ashley stayed in there, unrelenting, and buried his cock in enough kisses that he groaned at the almost painful amount of stimulus; Ashley just being Ashley, liking it rough and giving it rough. The ghoul moaned onto his cock, burying it into Antoinette's nipple, and suckling on it as his thick cum splashed up over her face, and onto the mountain of softness of his lover's breast.

When she stopped and pulled away, she had the same mess on her face that Julee did, and she giggled as she reached up to wipe a strand off of her brow, so it could run down her cheek, jaw, and down her neck. Unlike Julee though, she didn't wait to be guided, and immediately set her lips back onto Antoinette's nipple, as she used a hand to cup, lift, and massage the newly cum-soaked breast. The other hand was still out of sight, still behind Antoinette, but Jack could hear the sounds of wet fingering now. Julee's further hand reached back as well, and Antoinette smiled with a long sigh as she let go of his cock, and set both of her hands against his thighs, elbows tucked in beside her inside her spread robe.

Still leaning forward as she was, his cock pointed up toward him, but upright enough that it was between Antoinette's white-covered breasts where they sat on his pelvis and hips. Ashley and Julee were devouring them, each using a hand to continue caressing them, massaging them. And with both girls pressing on her breasts, Jack's could feel the pressure and movement along his cock and his glans, earning some hard flexes of his inner muscles as the pleasure sparks tickled along the sensitive skin.

“Girls, use my breasts, and make my love cum again.”

The two girls stopped their suckling, and turned their heads to look at him, Julee biting her bottom lip, still somehow shy, while Ashley grinned like a madwoman. Both ghouls cupped the underside of each breast, and pressed in, forcing Antoinette's nipples to press against the bottom of his abs. Squishing her breasts together caused his cock to completely disappear, and Jack's eyes rolled upward as he basked in the wet, hot, soft skin of both tits now rubbing along his length.

Antoinette wasn't holding still. She rocked back and forth, maybe half a foot, causing her breasts to run back and forth around his cock. For a moment he thought maybe she was tit fucking him, but with how her eyes were half closed, and her smile was that scary-but-hot queenly smile, he could see she was actually fucking the fingers penetrating her.

“Deeper, my pets.”

The ghouls nodded, and Antoinette closed her eyes for a moment as she quivered, a single moment of weakness, before she regained her composure, and continued to rock her body. They were fingering her, two hands, at once. Not slow anymore, she moved back and forth in a proper fucking rhythm, and Jack stared at the subtle hints of pleasure on her face. She was cumming again, and it didn't stop her. Through her subtle expression of pleasure, she leaned into him while her two pets continued to squash her breasts together around his cock, each shift of her weight causing the wet, heavenly skin of her tits to bury his cock in blissful friction. A heavy drop of his earlier cum formed where her breasts were pushed together, before leaking down the crease between them, onto his body.

Good fucking god. He didn't last long, and moaned softly as he felt his warm, thick cum start to flow up his length again. Three times and it was still coming out thick, heavy, white fluid that immediately began to coat the inner valley of the Prince's already soaked breasts. With the two girls keeping Antoinette's bosom tight around his girth, burying it in her soft skin, each squirt of his cum was trapped, and flowed up, over, and around the crease where her breasts met each other. Eventually, it was too much, and it started to run down, trickling over the mounds and the ghoul's hands, before reaching his abdomen.

Finally, Antoinette stopped rocking, and sat up straighter. Both ghouls let go of her breasts, and stared at the mess of white that coated them, again, soaking them in multiple layers of cum.

“So much,” Ashley said, some of his cum still on her face. “And...” The ghoul gulped, and stared at his cum lathered cock, and how it was still hard. “How?”

It took a little mental effort to tell his Kindred body to keep the arousal spark alive, but after so many nights with his lover, it was getting a lot easier to control the subtle, undead muscle. He could tell his vitae to focus on healing, could tell it to strengthen his body, protect him from harm, and the more nights he spent in the Prince’s bed, the more he found he could tell it to rekindle his sexual desire. It was amazing, how much his new undead body had control of its fake biology, like a puppet on strings.

“Jack is quick to learn subtle skills.” Grinning down at him, Antoinette climbed over him, grabbed his cock, pointed it up to her slit, and sat down on him.

Fucking god. He stared up at the Prince as she adjusted herself, knees by his ribs, her pussy spread open on his shaft, and her juices dripped down to join the mess of his own cum already soaking him, his pelvis and waist. She sat up straight, so her heavy breasts flattened to her ribs, and he stared all the more at how his copious amount of cum dripped down her huge tits. He groaned, when both ghouls set a hand to her breasts, and again, began to massage them, his cum overflowing their fingers. The boiling, soaked, tight insides of the Prince squeezed on his cock, earning sparks along the sensitive skin, as she began to ease herself back and forth in time with their hands.

“Clean me,” she said to her ghouls. “Gently. My breasts have grown terribly sensitive.”

And thus began to most arousing, salacious, lewd act he could imagine. The Prince continued to shift her hips back and forth, squeezing and clenching on his cock, as she lifted her elbows up, and set her hands behind her skull crown to begin combing her hair.

Showing off. Elbows up tugged up on her breasts slightly, and the ghouls were quick to take advantage, each setting a hand on Antoinette's hips while their others cupped the underside of each breast. They massaged, caressed, and indulged, doing everything they could to put on a carnal display of sexuality, each girl leaning in to kiss, lick, and suckle on their master's bosom. While some heavy drops of white fell from her breasts' undersides, and others rolled down her stomach, and down around her smooth mons to land on his pelvis, others the ghouls were quick to catch, and rub around, and around their mistress's jiggling bust.

Eventually, her breasts were completely clean, his cum either fading into trace amounts of ash, so small they were basically non-existent, or swallowed down by the two ghouls. Their faces also cleaned with time, his fluids turning to ash there as well, falling away like the faintest amount of dust. That did not dissuade the two ghouls, and they continued to massage and pamper Antoinette's breasts with delicate hands, as the Prince kept her elbows up while combing her hair back. As much as she was showing off for him, she came first, and he stared down her smooth slit, as her insides clenched on him like a vise. He could see her juices, tiny trickling drops, leak down from her lips and onto his pelvis, catching the blue, flickering fire light.

He came not long after, eyes closing for a second as he let the tingling waves fill him. The way his cum filled her and coated his cock, increasing the pleasure sparks as she clenched on him, rendered him speechless. He managed only a couple groans as he watched the goddess continue her display, her smile pointed at him as she watched him cum inside her.

"Four times, my love. Using your Kindred body to its potential, I see." She lowered her hands, let her breasts fall into teardrops against her chest, and gently pushed away her ghouls as she set her fingers on his abs. Still milking him, still clenching, she squeezed on his cock almost to hurting, and forced another couple drops into her depths.

At last, satisfied. He was panting, fake life demanding he breathe, despite the lack of need. Beads of sweat glistened on him in the blue light, and on Antoinette as well.

The Prince crawled off of him, his softening cock slipping out of her and dripping more of his cum across his body. “Jack, my love, my precious, take Ashley, and drain her.” The Prince reached for Ashley beside her, picked her up, and set the ballerina on her back between the two of them. And then she did it again with Julee, laying the girl on her back beside Ashley, before she climbed onto the brunette. With a devil’s smile, Antoinette lowered herself down onto the blushing, squirming little creature, pressed her breasts into her pet’s, and set her lips onto the girl’s neck.

Watching the Prince kiss, and Kiss, another girl, was so beautiful, and arousing. No, no no, no more getting aroused. Four times crossed some sort of barrier into absurdity. But he knew, if he really concentrated, he could tell his body to get ready again, especially if he had a fresh meal; like the one he was about to.

Ashley reached up for him, beaming and giggling, and pulled on his neck and shoulders. “Kiss me! And ... and ... use fingers too?”

He made a tiny groan as he lowered himself down onto her, and acquiesced, once he saw a nod from Antoinette. The two vampires sank their fangs into the topless ballerinas, and began to suck the blood out of them. Both creatures fell into a mess of squirming moans, and Jack couldn’t help but groan again, as the hot, thick fluid of her life flowed into his mouth. Her nipples pressed against his chest, her pert breasts squashed under his weight, as he pinned her to the blankets, and slid a hand down her body. The tiny bit of fabric covering her smooth slit was easy to slip his hand underneath, and he eased his fingers into her clenching, dripping insides, to push them up toward her belly from within.

Ashley came in seconds. She'd probably been on the edge the entire time, and not allowed to touch herself until Antoinette said she could. Building up to this must have been one of the Prince's goals tonight, because, damn, Ashley's moans turned into loud squeals, and she wrapped her arms around him as she pushed her hips toward his hand. He kept his fangs deep in her neck, and gulped down each wave, as he started to finger her insides harder, hard enough he could feel her ass ripple, and hear her insides splash with her cum. He couldn't see Julee, but he could hear her, going through the same process, getting fingered into oblivion by the busty goddess pinning her to the blankets.

It lasted a while. Antoinette taught him well, taught him to Kiss slowly, to savor it, and when with her ghouls, to savor it twice over. Slow, very slow, drain the girls of all they could give before they passed out, while making sure to finger fuck them hard enough to make them cum, multiple times. He did just that, suckling as he Kissed the fit little woman's neck, making sure he drained the waves slowly. The buzz it sent through him was intoxicating, and to feel Ashley tremble as her tiny slit soaked his fingers, made him want to finger her more. It was only fair, after all she had done, and all she was still giving.

It wasn't until Ashley's loud moans died away, turning into desperate pants, and her ass fell back down to the blankets, unable to push toward his hand anymore, did he stop. For a second. He pushed back into her, and pulled a few more drops of blood from her quivering body, as he started finger her again. No moaning, only tiny whimpers, barely audible; she was going to pass out. But her petite pussy was still clenching in spasms, and coating his fingers in her cum, so he continued, forcing her to cum again, and again, until she made no more noise at all.

He licked the wound, healing it, and sat up. Ashley had passed out.

“Uh, shit. Too far.” He looked down at her body, lean, lithe, and he looked at her juices literally dripping off of his fingers, glistening in the blue light.

Antoinette was still going. Julee’s head was turned so she could look at him, and she tried to lift her hand out to him, eyes begging, as if looking for help, before her hand collapsed. She was getting fingered in the same way, maybe even harder, Antoinette working her hand up and down enough Jack could see the ballerina’s ass and thighs lightly jiggling with the harsh, wet slapping sounds. And then she went limp, eyes closing.

The Prince sat up, wiped her lips with a single finger, and smiled at Jack. She tugged on his leash, and pulled him toward her, until he was on his knees in front of her.

She took his shoulders, and pushed him down onto his back again. With a long sigh, she cuddled up against his side, pressing her breasts into his chest and side as she set her cheek on his shoulder, his leash in her hand on his waist.

“Be careful, my love,” she said. “It is impressive for one as young as yourself to learn to control their vitae so masterfully. It is normally a decade into their second lives, before Kindred learn to enhance the more subtle aspects of the Blush of Life, such as sex drive.”

“I guess I’m a quick study.”

“Indeed. But, again, be wary. Sexuality, and many other pleasures, are pleasurable due to their frequent absence. Take care to not become as some Daeva do, and spend every night amidst the legs of others.” She slid her body further up, heavy breasts sliding along his chest up to his collar, as she leaned in to plant a kiss on his lips, then his nose, then his forehead.

“Sorry, I was just trying to ... you know...”

“I am partly to blame, of course. And I was one such Daeva, who spent so many nights lost, addicted, to sex. I have learned control since then, since the tale I told you of my ghoul. I will keep you in check. If you go too far, I will tie you to the bed, and tease you with my body for weeks, before letting you finally cum. That should re-sensitize you to the simple pleasure of a single orgasm.”

Oh shit.

Part 6

Chapter 76

~~Jack~~

He looked at his phone, and sighed. “Avery says meet her at Eric’s place.”

“Eric? Perhaps she is making progress in recruiting the man.” Antoinette looked up over her shoulder at him, combing her wet hair with her fingers over her chest and down between her breasts.

“Heh, maybe. She’s just as rude as Jessy, and he seems to like Jessy.” Shrugging, he eased the phone onto a towel outside the hot tub, and turned his attention back to the woman lying on him, back against his chest. He was sitting in the tub, hot water up to his sternum. The Prince was letting the buoyancy of the water let her half lie, half sit on him, her head resting under his chin against his chest.

He was in swimming trunks. She was in a g-string, and nothing but. There was no way that could be comfortable, but she wore it of her own volition. Hell, he’d said don’t wear it if it was uncomfortable, but she just laughed at him, and took him to the hot tub, topless. At a certain point, his brain shut off, and simply followed the boobs.

Her boobs floated. He stared at them over her head, and slid his hands underneath her arms, so he could cup her breasts. So soft, and normally so heavy, but the way they fought to rise to the surface in the water made them feel so much different. He raised one out of the water, groaned at how it became heavy, spilling over his palm and fingers and hiding the entirety of his hand, before he lowered it, and the mountainous volume floated out of his palm; until he started caressing it. As expected, it earned only a chuckle from her, and she continued to comb her hair where she'd pulled a bundle of it down between her breasts.

“I remember, when we first started talking to each other,” he said, “you mentioned your eye color and hair color may have been because of your heritage?”

“Oui. I am one of the oldest in our order, and there is evidence to suggest a potential ... link, I suppose, to our order's origins. Though, I believe, I probably inflicted these changes upon myself.”

“What?”

“I am Daeva, and it is not uncommon for our kind to obsess over beauty, sexuality, or arts of any kind. I would not be surprised if I experimented on my own body in some quest for greater beauty.”

He frowned at the thought; it didn't sit well with him. He was against body modification of the deceptive nature. Piercings, tattoos, those were all awesome. Getting fit and healthy to look better naked, more awesome. But experiments to give herself her goddess proportions?

“I ... that's the first time you told me you suspected that.”

“A curse of my age to forget my younger years. A curse of my younger years, to perform such an act.” She sighed, and let her head roll back to rest beside his chin, so she could look up at him. “Do you think less of me?”

“No, of course not. Hell, reminds me that you're human, too.”

“Was human.”

“You know what I mean.” He kissed the side of her head, and started to trace circles around her nipples. There was something cozy about being allowed to play with her breasts while they talked about things, non-sexual things. The casual way he got to play with them, and squeeze them, caress and massage them, and lift them, even jiggle them, while talking about other things, tickled something in his brain. It was warm, and inviting, that level of comfort. Intimacy made manifest, maybe?

“I am glad it does not bother you. I have learned to accept my unusual body, and use it to my advantage.”

“And, I have to be honest. I really, really love the body.”

The Prince chuckled, before she leaned up to kiss under his jaw, and resumed combing her hair as she looked back to where the rest of her was a blur under the water. “I had wondered if you were only attracted to curvy women, but Ashley and Julee lack such features, and you seem quite attracted to them.”

“So are you.”

“Vraiment.” Her hands found his wrists, and while she kept one where it was, cupping her breast with a finger caressing her nipple, she guided the other one down her flat stomach, underneath her g-string, across her smooth mons, and onto her slit. With a warm chuckle, she blushed life, and Jack groaned as he felt the warmth fill her body. “Any word from Julias?”

He winced. Yeap, she was going to do this to him, make him finger her, play with her, while having a casual discussion about work. Torture, lovely torture.

“Nothing yet, except to tell me Jacob’s hasn’t talked to him yet,” he said. Her nipple responded quickly, swelling against his touch. Maybe it was the hot water, but all it took was a gentle touch, a graze of the underside of his finger along Antoinette’s clitoris, to make her sigh again, and lean her head back onto his chest.

“And what of that rascal Jessy? My thralls have learned the woman has been enjoying Eric’s company.”

“Y-Yeah, she’s ... really roping him in. And I’m thinking she’s getting him to transform, full on werewolf mode, when they have sex.” If it were anybody else, he might hesitate to describe their sex life. But with Jessy, she probably couldn’t care less.

He trapped the Prince’s clitoris between index and middle finger, and began to massage it more directly. Consistent, gentle pressure, a soft rhythm of around, and around, and around.

Antoinette had other plans. She guided his hand a little further down, and used her fingers to push in on his. Two of his fingers slid into her clenching muscles, and Jack groaned, while the busty goddess leaned her head up to kiss his jaw again, as he started fingering her. Curling fingers in a slow fucking rhythm, hitting her g-spot again and again, earned a quiet moan from her. She kept her hand there, under her tiny, high-hip g-string, and caressed her clitoris under his hand. Her other hand went to her free breast, and caressed her nipple, plucking and twisting it in gentle, slow rhythms, like their fingers were doing to her pussy.

She was masturbating, while he fingered her. God damn.

“I hope she does not find herself terribly wounded, for such a feat of sexual curiosity,” she said.”

“I warned her it’d be dangerous.”

“I am sure everyone who knows has. But danger is a powerful spice, and some people, Kindred included, are addicted to its thrills. Imagine it, my love. A beast, a giant creature, still of form near enough to human for a viewer to appreciate its towering physique, and yet monstrous enough to elicit fear. Such a beast pins you to the bed, or floor, and glares at you with both animal aggression, but also inhuman, overpowering desire.” The woman on his body shivered, and Jack groaned as he felt her pussy squeeze on his fingers. “I cannot fault a woman for wanting to taste such an exaggerated display of masculine dominance.”

“Gonna make a guy feel jealous, talking like that.”

Laughing, the Prince clenched her insides on his fingers, hard, and he had to force them up toward the ceiling with more effort, fighting her squeezing muscles. She didn't moan or groan, or whimper or mewl or any of that. She just lay back on him, and continued to caress her clitoris, as the two of them caressed and fondled her breasts with their free hands. Yeah, he got it. The fantasy she described wasn't hers. Sitting in a tub and getting fingered by her lover boy was, evidently.

“What of Fiona? Has she spoken to you recently? I have noticed her interest in your partner Damien.”

Course she did; the Prince missed nothing. “Just a few text messages, about Eric's place being safe from any Begotten burrowing in. I don't think she heals as fast as us, so she's still in her lair. Comes out for texting ... like a girl addicted to her phone.”

They chuckled. It was both cute, and a major juxtaposition to what was inside the innocent-looking girl. Made it easier to think about Fiona, and not Vrall.

“For all my frustration at the presence of those monsters, Fiona has agreed to my terms and no longer kills without restraint. She is welcome in my city, while she obeys the rules.” Antoinette lifted a single leg out of the hot tub water, straight up, and Jack stared at the long, curvy, alabaster limb, before she lowered it again. He didn't stop fingering her, and she didn't stop stroking her clit, either. Showing off, blatantly. “And she is an awfully adorable little creature.”

“Jessy seems sure she's got a sex-plagued mind.”

“Oh, she does, my little Ventrue. But she is young. Like you, she needs someone to siphon and nurture her desires.” Antoinette hugged her breasts, the one arm reaching underneath and wrapping the two of them together; barely. They were too large for her to capture so easily, but she managed, as she nudged her head up against his neck, and played with her clit faster. “If that someone is to be Damien, then I fear their first few times together will be clumsy. But, there is something delightful about two, unskilled partners, learning both each other’s desires, and honing sexual skills. An interesting way for two to grow closer.”

“I’ve been on the receiving end of all the teaching.” Now that Antoinette was holding her breasts together with her arm, they weren’t free to float around. But her nipples were still available, just above her forearm, and he started to apply a little more pressure to the swollen nub. In rhythm with him, she started to play with her clit faster, and he got the hint quick: finger her harder.

With her breasts wrapped, no longer floating in the hot tub water, they more or less stayed against her chest as he started to pound her. The water, already rolling waves from the jets, churned and splashed from the force of his hand moving up and down between her thighs. Antoinette’s whole body began to ripple, the impact of his fingers up against her g-spot spreading out and making her body jiggle. Of course, her breasts were like waves, bouncing back and forth against her forearm and chest.

Antoinette spread her legs, letting them shake and move with the water, as she started to cum. Without a word, she stopped massaging her clit, and raised the hand up her body to her breasts. No longer wrapping them, she set a hand underneath each breast, and caressed them, gently massaged them, and tweaked one nipple while Jack continued to play with the other. He knew to be gentle while she came, and she rewarded him with a tiny moan.

“I have been considering hosting another banquet,” she said, mid orgasm, voice only wavering with the impact of his fingers. “With increased security this time, of course. I will not let hunters prevent us from living our lives.” Smiling up at him, she kissed his jaw again, and clenched on his fingers with her cunt until he was the one groaning, not her. The tight, soft flesh of her depths, squeezing on him so tight he could feel her muscles spasm with pleasure, was euphoric. It didn’t need to be his dick for it to be pleasurable, just holding the goddess on his body, feeling her back on his chest, and flesh around his fingers, sent shivers up and down his body.

“You uh ... you have?” He eased his fingers out of her, and slid them up her stomach.

And just like that, like she didn’t just get thoroughly finger fucked to the point the hot tub water had been splashing everywhere, Antoinette nodded, and raised her hands to start counting things off on her fingers.

“Oui, but there are things to consider this time that I did not before. If I hold a banquet, it is to be protected, as I said. It is a way for me to prove to the covenants that these hunters do not control us, or frighten us to the point of paralysis. I must also consider that our relationship with the Uratha and Begotten have grown. Athalia and Fiona will take part again, I am sure, and perhaps Athalia will remain more than ten minutes.” Chuckling, she rolled over. The water made it easy, her body almost weightless, and she straddled his waist, knees against the hot tub seat edge. She grabbed his wrist, and guided his hand back to her slit. “Again.”

Gulping, he complied, and again, started to finger her. She put her hands on the hot tub edge, above the water, and smiled down at him, her breasts now free to dangle over the water surface. Dangle became wobble and shake, as he started to finger her pussy, and he groaned again as he felt more than just hot water drip down his hands.

“I think,” she continued, “more of Avery’s pack will attend this time, as well. It would be interesting to see if they would be willing to share their blood with some Kindred. I understand Natasha has grown to love the power of it, and so too has Jessy, I imagine. Tilly likely has as well. Perhaps we could find a male vampire to have a taste of Clara? Or female, if that would interest her.”

“You just want her away from me.” With a smile up at the goddess, he started fingering her harder, working his arm back and forth, hoping to hide the little bit of snark he put into his words.

“Oh, are you not a daring one today.” She raised a hand, and flicked him in the forehead. All this, while he continued to finger her, making her breasts sway in front of him, nipples grazing the surface of the water. They were still swollen, very swollen, and the Prince grinned at him as she cupped one breast, other hand on the tub ledge, and she began to caress and massage the engorged areola. “If she cannot have you — and she cannot — I would have her find someone else. I wish her no ill will, and it would be better for everyone if the Uratha, all of them, found happiness here.”

“You want them to stay?”

“I would be a fool to ignore their value, now that so many unwanted factors have disturbed my city’s once calm waters.” Antoinette set her forehead to his, red gaze grabbing his with all the subtlety of a dragon. “I also wonder if the Begotten might share some of their blood? But then, I imagine the blood of a monster of nightmares would not taste appealing.” So close, she grinned at him like a devil, like a succubus, and used both her hands to continue caressing her breasts, as he fingered her.

They both loved her breasts. There was something so insanely awesome about that. Maybe it was how he could lavish and fanboy over them, and instead of annoying her, she indulged in his attention. Or in this case, indulged in his enraptured gaze. The way they rippled and swayed as they hung underneath her was hypnotizing.

Then again, he loved it when she pinned him down and put a leash on him, something she seemed to delight in doing. A century's worth of luck, distilled into the sexual chemistry the two seemed to have.

"Y-Yeah, maybe. I wonder if Damien has Kissed her? I could ask him."

She kissed his forehead, and nudged her nose into his for a moment, before she let out a long, slow, deep sigh, and came again. It was subtle, her shoulders raising and her elbows pulling inward, as her eyes half closed. "I doubt he has. The boy is undoubtedly timid, when the affairs cross into personal," she said, as her pussy gripped his digits. Her hands fell from her nipples, and instead clutched his shoulders, some of her weight still on where she pressed her forehead to his. Shivering, slightly, but her insides weren't so subtle, clamping down, until he had to use his arm muscles to push his hand back and forth, slapping his fingers against her g-spot and churning the water again.

Finally, she reached down, and touched his wrist; a signal to stop. He kept his fingers inside her, but stop pumping his hand, letting her body grow still while tiny quivers worked up and down her body. Eventually he eased his fingers out of her slit as well, and smiled up at the beauty as he pulled up on her tiny bikini bottom, to hook it high along her hips again.

"Merci." She leaned down, gave him a kiss, and stepped out of the hot tub. "I must begin managing and preparing my thralls now, my love. I will see you later tonight." If it were Ashley or Julee, they'd be panting and floating in the tub, unable to walk. Antoinette, smiling and radiating orgasmic bliss, walked toward her chair, her legs shaking ever so slightly with orgasm aftershocks.

“I ... I uh—”

“Oh non non, I will tend to your desires later.” She winked at him, ran a finger down her breast and the water that dripped from it, and fetched her robe from the lounge chair. Of course, she didn’t bother to close it up, and let it stay parted, exposing her breasts, and her still swollen nipples as she raised her hands to her hair; for no other reason than to torture him, he was sure. Combing back the long, wet strands up and over the robe behind her, she smiled at Jack as she did. “Knowing that you will lust for me, all night, as you tend to your tasks? That tonight, I will lay in bed for you, let you straddle my chest, and hold my breasts together for you to slip your length into? Knowing that such thoughts will haunt your mind all night long, pleases me.”

His jaw dropped. There was a reason she didn’t ask him to Blush for her: the blue balls would have killed him. She was a devil woman!

“And just a few nights ago, you warned me about getting addicted to sex.”

“Only to a point, of course.” She sat down on a lounge chair a few feet from him, and as she let the Blush of Life fade away, she started brushing her hair with a brush she’d brought. Still with her robe open, of course, so he could stare and admire her body. “There are cities where elder Kindred are addicted, combining the pleasures of the flesh with the pleasures of the Kiss, to the point it dominates their way of life. You think my banquets overly sexual, and yet I have once seen a council of Invictus, in another city long ago, three women and two men. Each had a ghoul with them, their blood in a glass to drink, while those same ghouls proceeded to suckle and lick their slits, or swallow their shafts. They had their meetings this way, cumming onto the warm mouths of their servants, as they discussed matters of the city. When the meetings were over, they would go back to their mansions, or into their underground labyrinths, where they kept many thralls. For them, the Kiss was more pleasurable than sex, but they mixed the two, as all Kindred do. They mixed them while bathing in decadence, however, and would conduct other meetings, teach pupils, arrange tasks, and delegate responsibilities, all while their harems pleased their bodies and bled into their mouths.”

“Holy shit. I ... I guess, in comparison, we’re not nearly that bad.”

“We are not, non. But it is a slippery slope, my little Ventrue, one I have been down. Do not fret, I will make sure we continue to balance. Matters of business, or of survival, are not to be mixed with sexuality or the Kiss. But during our free time, when we have time to spare? By all means, let us indulge our desires. And if you wish to exploit the power of vitae, to indulge in sex for far longer than any normal human could, continue to do so. What matters is that you learn to leave it behind when the time comes to focus on other things.”

“That why you’re torturing me tonight?” He gave her his best pouting eyes.

She laughed. No dice. “Non. I torture you because you are mine, and a little teasing, or torture, is a part of that arrangement.”

Pouting failed, he climbed out of the tub, and reached for a towel. At least without the Blush of Life, he could walk around without an erection.

“I’m off to see Avery then.”

“Please do.”

“So ... how many thralls do you actually have bound to you?”

She laughed at him as she continued brushing her hair, before getting up and walking toward the exit, likely to go back to her room and put on a suit. “I have eyes everywhere, my love. And you can tell your council that, for all their might, they lack the subtlety needed to rule a city.”

The Invictus wanted to rule with money and might, and that often meant a bunch of thralls with a bunch of guns, according to Julias. Unfortunately, they didn’t know much about where Antoinette kept her thralls, or what sort of training they had. It made large maneuvers difficult, and unnerving, knowing she was watching.

He put up his hands in surrender. “I’m not subtle?”

“You are about as subtle as lightning come nightfall, my love.”

“Bleh.”

---

“You’re all fucking idiots.”

Jack winced, and looked down. Yeah, that was true, but Avery could be a little nicer about it.

“Kid did alright,” Noah said, adjusting the blinds so he could look out Eric’s window better.

Avery, sitting on the couch with Clara, looked over her shoulder and frowned at the man. But Jack knew she didn’t have much to say, if she was going to look for the specific flaws in their plan. There’d been flaws, but not in the choices they made once they were in the shit. They all knew it, too.

Except, Jessy wasn’t content to just know. “They rescued me, your girl, and my boy here, because they went in guns blazing. What was the time, from when we vanished, to when you guys were in there after us, Jack?”

“Bit over an hour.”

“That is fucking fast, considering he recruited two monsters and three werewolves, too.” Jessy snapped her fingers, summarizing speed with the sound. She was leaning against the kitchen table, arms folded across her chest, and Eric was next to her. Two vampires and four werewolves, discussing the aftermath.

“I’m sorry, I’ll rephrase.” Avery pointed a finger at Jessy. “You’re an idiot because you picked a fight whenever you could, instead of looking for information.” A finger for Eric. “You’re an idiot because you’re still green and refuse to let us teach you anything.” A finger for Clara. “You’re an idiot for thinking it was a good idea to push forward, instead of waiting for backup.” A finger for Noah. “You’re an idiot for getting decked by an explosive behind a door. You’re a planner. Plan better.” And finally a finger for Jack, of course. “You’re an idiot for going out of your way so hard, to help this Azamel monster.”

He sighed, and leaned back in the recliner. Eric’s apartment was a really nice place, massive, luxurious, and the repairs had been done quickly; Invictus money was a powerful thing indeed.

“Azamel has—”

“Done nothing.” Avery threw up her hands before resting her forehead in one. “She has done nothing, but you continue to go to bat for her.”

She had done something. She warned him about the inevitable threat Dolareido faced, something the Prince herself had not, despite her awareness of it. He understood why, but still.

“Fiona and Athalia helped rescue us,” Eric said. “They work for her, and came because she asked them to go, I think.” Everyone in the room looked at him, eyebrows raising. He wasn’t in a pack or covenant, so talking at all was kind of bold. And the awkward, slightly annoyed expression matched what Jack knew of the man.

He didn't want to be a part of any of this, but was getting dragged into it against his will. Poor guy.

“Eric is correct,” Jack said. “As much as hunters being in Dolareido is largely her fault, she's trying to help.”

Avery continued to sigh, but after a while, put her hand back down and leaned into the couch. “Sorry if I don't sound grateful. You saved my girl, and this fucker.” She made a small wave in Eric's direction.

“I resent that,” Eric said.

“Yeah, well, suck it up.” Avery leaned in, elbows on her knees, facing Jack. “On the other side of the wall, the city is in a strange state. You got those three fuckers, Black Blood, Street-Tail King, and Red Tide, fighting for sections of the city, but these hunters have introduced ... complications.”

Jack put up a hand. “Why are you telling me this? Shadow World isn't exactly ... well, you've made it abundantly clear you don't want vamps sticking their feet in it.”

“That was before things started getting out of hand. Besides, you've proven you're willing to go the extra mile to make sure shit gets done. Saving Clara—”

“Don't forget,” Noah said, “it was Jacob and Black Blood that saved us.”

“Yeah, that has blurred the lines on a lot of shit too.” Groaning, Avery got up, and started pacing around, arms across her chest and hand raised to hold her chin. Classic thinking pose, and Jack struggled to not smile as he watched the small, deadly woman walk around like she owned the place. “I'm not throwing my pack into a meat grinder, but the way things are going, it's looking like it'll be for the best if we help you out.”

Jessy cheered. Everyone stared at her, until she lowered her hands.

“Thanks,” Jack said. It was only a matter of time, he supposed. Avery wanted to stick around, to live in Dolareido, and she wouldn’t be able to do that if the hunters ruined things. Now that it was clear the hunters had far more tools at their disposal than anyone could have predicted, she felt inclined to help.

Or, it was because Jeremiah mentioned her specifically, before Black Blood saved them. The others must have heard it, and heard how Jack had tried to lie to Jeremiah about who it was. Point for him, he supposed.

“Yeah don’t thank us just yet.” Avery walked over to him, and flicked him in the forehead. Familiar. “There is so much crap rolling your way, it’s ridiculous. No wonder David guided us here. Every fucking day, the echoes of horrible shit hits everywhere nearby, in the Hisil. It’s not a coincidence so much insanity is hitting this city in such a small amount of time. Enough Azlu for two full grown hosts? Then hunters show up, and they have a Begotten with them? Something is going on.”

Something was going on, but no one knew what the fuck it was. He doubted the hunters knew, considering the nature of Azamel’s warning. She didn’t want him telling anyone else about it, paranoid about the information tipping someone off, and Jack couldn’t fathom that having anything to do with an army of bloodthirsty hunters coming for her head.

If the sheriff had found anything, he wasn’t sharing it, beyond his discoveries of Elen’s rituals.

“The ... Prince has a request,” he said. And now for the hard part.

Avery rolled her eyes, again, and sat back down with Clara. “Hit me.”

“The covenants are going to start putting teams together of Kindred they trust to handle themselves. Three Kindred to a team. They’re going to be doing sweeps of areas in the city, using what little we know to find them. And—”

“And you’d like one of my pack to come along with these teams.”

“Yeah. You got the nose and the ears for hunting, in ways not even our Gangrels can match.”

Jessy made a snort noise, but shrugged and looked to the window. “True enough.”

Jack threw a smile her way. Jealous, of Uratha hunting abilities? Weird. But then, he wasn’t a Gangrel. He didn’t know what it was like to have the beast riding the edge of his consciousness, unless he was utterly starving. Maybe she had some professional envy.

Avery looked up, eyes rooting through her brain, and she touched her chin a couple times as she juggled the thoughts. “Has our relationship progressed to that point?”

Oh boy, negotiating, with a werewolf. This was going to be fun. Not.

“I like to think it has. We worked together to save our kind from the hunters, and we worked together well ... more or less. And you just said you were willing to help, sort of.”

“Kid’s right,” Noah said. “Not that I think we should be throwing ourselves into this war with these hunters. David brought us here for different reasons, and so far it’s looking like they need our help. I vote we squeeze more out of them.”

Ok, Avery was brutal, but Noah was heartless. God damn.

“This isn’t about hitting them for money, Noah,” Clara said.

“You sure? Having a few million dollars under our belt could help us make some city renovations.”

Jack put up his hands. “The Invictus are willing to throw some money your way. Some. Millions might a bit much to ask...” Jack was making premium bank now, and he didn’t have anywhere near that much saved up yet. Xnomina did, no doubt, but their funds weren’t endless. “Far cheaper for us if you guys accepted assets that we—”

“Noah’s just being a sarcastic ass, Jack.” Avery wiped a hand aside, dismissing her comrade’s words. “Besides, this is a request from big tits, right?”

“I, uh ... yes.” Big tits was not a nickname he expected Antoinette would appreciate. Not because it wasn’t accurate, but the woman did not like the sort of friendly prattle or good-natured ribbing you found from people like the Uratha, or anyone in the Carthians. Jack could relate; he found it grating and juvenile, sometimes. This was one of those times, and he struggled to not frown. It could have been a test from Avery too, to see if he’d react, get defensive, and lower his guard.

“You let me see the teams, and let me choose which member goes with which team, and I’ll do it.”

Finally! Progress.

“Really?” Clara said.

“Yeah, really. But, you also have to convince Azamel to join in, have her buddies join some of these groups, too.”

He winced, and looked down. “I’m meeting her later tonight. I’ll run it by her. The Primogen and the Prince thought this might come up, but they’re not sure. Azamel’s half the reason the hunters are here at all—if not the full reason—”and the elders aren’t exactly keen on having them work beside us.” As per usual, he pushed for allowing the Begotten to be a part of their efforts, as they were when they helped rescue Jessy. As per usual, the Primogen and Prince didn’t like it, but they managed to understand his position, if only a little.

“Yeah, well, those are my terms. Take it or leave it. The hunters have a fucking monster working for them, and I’m not stupid enough to risk joining your sweepers without a little help from people who understand how one of them work.”

“Understandable. I might be able to convince Azamel to get Mark to help, but Fiona’s just a kid, and Athalia ... well, yeah.” It was easier to think about Angela without his insides turning to fire, if he didn’t say her name out loud.

“Fiona’s a kid?” Noah came to the couch with the rest of his buddies, and set his butt against its arm.

“She is,” Eric said with a quiet grumble.

Noah shook his head. Forever calm, this man, such a juxtaposition to the fancy artwork of his tattoos. At first glance, he looked like a new age artist. The moment he opened his mouth, he sounded like a lawyer. “Last I checked, she’s got a very high kill count. Higher than a lot of us in this room, I imagine, if we’re looking at human kills only.”

“She killed people who deserve it,” Jack said, “but I see what you mean.”

Avery shook her head, not satisfied. “Get Fiona and Mark, and get Athalia too. I have to know she’s not going to stab me in the back, if we stumble across her insane daughter.”

Fucking lovely.

---

“Jessy driving you to drink, yet?” he said, once they were outside.

“Heh, no. But she’s definitely a handful.”

Jack needed a buddy on his trip to see Azamel, for the buddy system, and Eric had offered. The man must have had an ulterior motive, something he wanted to ask of the old monster, but it was a good opportunity for Jack to learn more about the man. Knowledge was power; Julius rubbing off on him.

The two of them were in suits, Jack in his proper Invictus business suit, the sort used for deadly meetings, and seeing the other paranormals. Eric’s suit was a little more casual, and befitting the fun nature of a night club. All his suits were for that purpose, he supposed.

“Yeah, handful is a nice way of putting it,” Jack said.

Laughing, Eric shook his head, entertained by a memory.

The two of them walked the sidewalks, through the crowds of people, and past the glowing signs of open bars, casinos, and strip joints. Once, they’d been so intimidating. Now, they were a part of Jack’s nightlife. Hell, if he wanted to, he could walk into one of the strip clubs, sit down, and only feel partially uncomfortable, instead of horribly. In a bar, he could manage to flirt a bit, catch a woman’s eye, or a man’s if needed, and draw them into conversation. A little conversation made it easy to use Dominate, and turn his prey into his puppet for a quick Kiss, once out of the bar and into an alley. That is, if he bothered with Dominate. A kind smile and a couple drinks was enough to get many people to trust him, he was discovering.

“How did a little guy like you hook up with a femme fatale like Antoinette? If you don’t mind me asking.”

“I showed up at Bloodlust, really hungry and looking for a meal. I didn’t know what I was doing at the time, still brand new to being Kindred, but my sire wanted me to get used to taking advantage of the best place for finding a meal.” Laughing, Jack looked up to the rooftops above, scanning for movement. “I was antisocial as fuck, and very much out of my element. I ran into her at the club, and she threw me a bone. We talked, and we got along.”

“She seems ... a bit of an ice queen.”

Jack burst into laughter, and held out a hand against a street lamp to catch himself before he fell. “Y-Yeah, she can seem like that, until you get to know her. Except, unless you piss her off, then I suppose it’s apt.”

After a while, they drifted along and found one of the old street stairs down into the subway. No one looked at them for any longer than a second, likely thinking two guys in a suit walking down stairs to a locked door either wanted to chat in privacy, get a blowjob in privacy, or they had keys. People were so carefree in Dolareido. Vampire utopia, indeed.

As he went down, he looked up to the rooftops again, and continued scanning.

“Looking for something? Think we’re being stalked?”

“I hope we are.”

“Say what?”

“My—ah, there they are.” Jack held out his arm, and gave Eric a small nod.

The man jumped back, eyes wide as two sets of black wings came out of no where, flying in from above as silent as a grave. Mulder and Scully perched on his arm, and then his shoulder once comfortable, Mulder hopping over to sit on his opposite shoulder.

“You two alright?” he said.

The two birds nodded, and pecked at his ears a few times with their beaks. Ow. It’d taken a lot of research to learn that birds pecked at each other for many reasons, often just to be friendly. Little nibbles were just a part of owning birds.

“You own crows?” Eric said.

“Not really own, no. But I started taking care of these two, not too long ago.” He set a hand to Scully’s head, and scratched gently under the feathers behind her skull. “Crows are damn smart.”

“Yeah, but, pets? I can understand parrots.”

“Not my pets. They’re free to come and go, but I’ve established a connection with them.” He leaned in toward Mulder, and the crow nestled his head against Jack’s jaw, under his ear. “Vampires can communicate with animals, and control them. Gangrels like Jessy, and Ventrue like me, can do it easily.” He wasn’t sure if giving Eric info about Kindred was the best idea, but the man seemed alright to trust with basic info, at this point.

“Did you name them?”

“ ... I did.”

“Pets.”

Rolling his eyes, Jack opened the door to the abandoned subway with the key. “You two going to be ok?”

The two crows nodded, fluffed their feathers a bit, and snuggled in close to his neck for a second. A couple of caws to confirm, before

Jack stepped into the underground.

The darkness of the tunnels. There were lights, but old and dingy. Mulder and Scully flapped their wings for a moment, before Mulder flew over to land on one of the many railings that sat on the abandoned platform. No subway cars. The ones that'd been destroyed by the Uratha were still fresh in his mind, many months later. Torn apart like toilet paper.

Jack pulled out some oats for the crows, but only a little. Hard to feed them and walk at the same time.

“Why you bringing them?” Eric said.

“They're my eyes and ears. And birds notice things humans, or vampires or werewolves, wouldn't. You never know.”

“You didn't bring them to visit Avery.”

“I did. They were watching from outside.”

The crows nodded, and Mulder cawed from his perch, as Scully turned to make a few quiet croons. Jack clucked his tongue at her quietly, some light touches of the tongue tip against the roof of his mouth. A bit of vitae, raised to the surface, raised into his mind, to turn the croons his feather friend made, into images, sounds, and smells his brain could understand.

The images filled his mind. The outside of Eric's apartment, viewed from a great height. Then movement, as Scully flew down to find a perch on a nearby building. Eric's apartment was high, but Jack had pointed it out to them before he went in. The blinds were closed, but unlike the bedroom window, the living room and kitchen windows had normal blinds. With the lights on, the silhouettes of people were visible.

But as far as Jack could tell, nothing seemed out of the ordinary; except, for the unusual amount of people on the rooftops. Normally that number was zero, but the birds, more than just Mulder and Scully, noticed many new human faces up in the skies with them. Three were nearby in the bird's memory, each on a different rooftop. Two he knew as Invictus thralls, and trained snipers. The other though, was one of Antoinette's thrall.

A bird's eye view put the strange tension between the Ordo Dracul and the Invictus into perspective. Snipers on rooftops, and spies spying on each other. They shared Dolareido's sky, and had to get along. How Antoinette managed that, Jack would never understand, knowing how much of a totalitarian Viktor had been.

"You vamps like to think in sneaky ways," Eric said.

"Unfortunately, being sneaky is the only tried and true way to survive for centuries."

"I guess."

Jack looked at the man for a moment as they walked. He looked stressed. But then, he seemed like the kinda guy who was always stressed. Jack knew where some of his salary was going, too, considering it was all Invictus money. One of the joys of being a Right Hand, knowing where all the money went, except for council expenditures.

Ask him about his dad? No, that'd be way too weird. They barely knew each other. And besides, Jack's dad was dead, and this guy's dad was dying. Not the same thing.

"Gonna join Avery's pack?" There, much better topic of conversation. Valuable information, and something that Eric was undoubtedly thinking about.

"I doubt it."

Uh oh. Julias wanted him to follow Avery's lead. So did Antoinette.

"Why not?"

"I'm not interested in a new family. Got enough shit with my own family."

"I uh, don't think Avery's pack is really ... no, you're right, they're a family. How about just taking some lessons from her, about the Shadow Realm?"

That managed to make the man twitch.

"I don't want anything to do with spirits."

"I got the impression you didn't really have a choice in the matter? Kinda like, I have to drink blood to survive. If I eat a salad or a piece of meat, I'll spend hours puking that up." He hadn't tried, but Julias had told him what happened to Kindred who had. And, by the grace of God or whoever, Jack seemed to have enough intelligence to not have to try something for himself to learn a lesson.

"Yeah, I guess. They ... they're ... yeah." Sighing, Eric stopped. Jack stopped as well, and raised a brow as he turned to look back at the man. "You seem like a smart kid."

"You could say that." Ah, the stroked ego. His Ventrue pride swelled, and Jack shook his head once to try and dislodge the feeling.

"I'm getting pulled in three directions. Really, I just want people to leave me alone. But I know that won't happen, so ... what would you do?"

“What would I do? I can barely understand your predicament. I have ... no idea what’s it like, to suddenly be a werewolf. I know what it’s like to wake up one night, dead, with a bunch of knife wounds in the stomach. I know what it’s like to suddenly crave blood like it’s heroin and I’m a junkie. I know what it’s like to see every human around as a source of food, instead of people, when the hunger rises. I’m sure you have your own urges, things that weren’t there before, things that dominate your mind now. Without help, without someone to explain to me what the fuck was going on, I would have been lost, and probably dead by now.”

“So I should join Avery’s pack.”

“I ... think you should do whatever gets you the most information. That means Avery. I’m sure she’ll tell you a few things, show you a few things, and at worst, you’ll owe her. Don’t need to join her.”

“And if my gut says—”

“Your gut is a child’s reflex. Everyone’s ‘gut’,”—he raised his fingers to air quote the stupid word—“is a childish impulse. Your gut is your emotions overriding your thinking. Your gut ... your gut is to be ignored, Eric, like the whiny baby that it is. Everyone’s gut feelings are useless, whiny baby noises. Sometimes it can help in a pinch, when you need to make a split second decision, and there’s some subconscious reasoning happening. Most of the time, it’s idiotic, shortsighted, emotional garbage. Ignore your gut, flip the switch, and make a decision using as much information and evidence as you can get your hands on.” At some point, Jack had started to raise his voice, almost yelling at the bigger, stronger guy. Jack was reasonably sure he could dominate this man’s mind if it came to blows, so he wasn’t scared of him. That wasn’t an excuse for getting angry with him, when Eric was making the same mistake everyone made.

“You sound like ... a smart guy.”

Jack smiled at the man, and continued walking once Eric started walking too. "I try." It was one of the ways he and Antoinette connected. Talking about things, real things, and peeling back emotional bullshit and dogma, so they could talk about any topic conceivable without prejudice or bias, was something they both enjoyed doing.

"Do you trust Azamel?"

"That ... is a better question." Shrugging, Jack held up some more oats for Scully and Mulder, as Eric and him rounded a corner in the tunnels, tracks beneath him growing darker in the flickering light. "I trust her more than others do."

"Sounds like she just wants to be left alone."

That was the connection, then. Azamel wanted to be left to her business, and Eric was identifying with that. It was a reasonable way for the two forces to see eye to eye, but Eric was young by paranormal standards, and easily controlled; as much as you could control a werewolf. Azamel had the chops to not only fend for herself, but the smarts to manipulate a man like Eric into helping her, serving as a bodyguard or something.

But then, if he tried to exist as his own person, and not affiliate with anyone, the Kindred would eventually force him into something. It was a weird position to be in, especially since his dad was in the hospital, care being paid for by the First Estate.

"She does want to be left alone. And she could have done that somewhere else," Jack said. "Not that ... I don't know, I don't understand the Begotten, no one does. Maybe running somewhere else would have meant starving to death. But she came here and brought a lot of trouble with her. I think she's trying to help undo some of that damage, but that doesn't change how much shit is happening because of these hunters. Barry's dead." And Isabella was still royally pissed about it. “And you nearly died, twice now, because of the hunters, if I’m counting right.”

“Yeap, you are.” The man pat a spot on his chest. “I looked that fucker Jeremiah in the eye as he stabbed me. Dude’s a Hollywood psychopath.”

“Hollywood psychopath. I suppose that’s a way to put it.” And a good one. Jeremiah had the sort of charisma and determination you found in movie villains, and Angela was his psychopath twice-over student.

“You regret not killing her?”

Jack winced, and both crows managed a rather annoyed caw at Eric. He pulled back his head, until Jack reached up to stroke Mulder, the closer crow, on his breast feathers. No need to make enemies of Eric, guys.

“Yeah, I do regret it,” Jack said.

“Sore spot?”

“Very.”

Nodding, Eric scratched the back of his neck, and continued walking. Jack had expected an apology, but the man didn’t seem to have that inclination, as if the apology had been implied by his question of sore spot. Just like Jessy would have done.

Jack smiled at that.

Eventually they reached Azamel’s hole in the ground. Why the woman never bothered trying to spruce up the place, try and make it home, he didn’t know. It was a concrete stage, with a shitty bed, a shitty old rocking chair, some room dividers, a couple couches, and no place to poop. Did Begotten need to poop?

Azamel was there, as was Mark, and Fiona. No Athalia though.

“Eric! Jack!” Fiona hopped off the stage, ran over to them, and hugged them. If she noticed the crows or not, it didn’t stop her, and both birds had to make for the air to escape getting squashed. “How are ye feeling? Are—hey!” Scully didn’t appreciate it, and landed on her head, to begin a terrible assault of pecking her skull, wings flapping. “Sorry! I’m sorry!”

“Hey! Come on.” Jack reached out, and Scully returned, hopping down his wrist and arm, before returning to his shoulder. “Treat the lady nice.”

“Aye, treat her nice.” Beaming, Fiona smiled up at the birds on his shoulders. “This is very classic vampire. Sexy, with the suit.”

“Makes you wonder how many other Kindred are doing similar.” Nodding, Jack also offered a nod to Mark, and a proper deep nod to Azamel. “Hello.”

Azamel blew a cloud smoke his way, but otherwise, didn’t do much but continue rocking in her chair. “Hello.”

“Athalia still healing?”

Fiona jumped in front of him a couple times, before she walked back to the stage, and sat on its edge. “Aye, she was really beat up. Loads of bullet holes that are taking a long time to heal properly. She’s getting hungry, too.”

A hungry Begotten had a certain hint of danger to it that a hungry Kindred didn’t. A monster needing to feed was a whole different animal to a blood sucker, Athalia would probably say.

Jack glanced at Eric, who had taken a moment to find a wall to lean against. The suit, oh man, the poor suit. “Azamel, I wanted to know if you had any ... updates, I guess? Just had a meeting with Avery.”

The old woman shrugged, blew some more smoke, and looked at Eric. “Why bring him?”

“Eric’s caught up in this, and—”

“You nearly got me killed, you old bat.”

Jack and Fiona winced, and looked at the man. Hell, he thought he saw Mark wince too.

“Excuse me?”

Eric pushed from the wall, and walked up to Azamel, glaring at her with every step. His glare didn’t have the murderous intent Jack thought he might find there, but he was annoyed nonetheless, hands in his pockets and a frown carved into his face.

“A hunter, a Begotten nonetheless, showed up at my apartment. Kidnapped me. Asked me questions about you. Some freaky shaman sack of wrinkles cut into me, looking to ... use my body to learn about you.” He gestured to Jack, and Jack froze. “I was going to be tortured, and probably have my guts spilled for that bitch to read, like ... like...”

Jack raised a hand. “Haruspex.”

Everyone glared at him. Yeah, smart to know, not so smart to say right now.

“Haruspex. I would have died, so these freaks could find you and kill you.”

“Then it’s a good thing I sent Athalia and Fiona to rescue you.” She let the smoke come out of her as she spoke. If smoking was a sport, she'd be an olympian. "And I did not do those things to you, they did."

"You brought them—"

"If they were not chasing me, then they would be chasing someone else, fool. The vampires have not removed me because they understand that. And they understand that we have a better chance of defeating the hunters together."

And the vampires would have a hell of a tough time removing her, from what Julias told Jack.

Azamel's explanation seemed to calm Eric down, and he managed a small smile for Fiona again, before he leaned against the wall of dirty concrete behind him. If the man was ever going to make a decision about who he was going to lean toward, Jack couldn't tell. What did Jessy tell him? Probably something like 'dude you're a werewolf now, partner with whoever you want', which made sense if you were a wanted player. And Eric was a wanted player, if only because he was a powerful entity. His ability to enter the Shadow World was icing on that cake.

"She's right," Jack said, "to an extent. Dolareido's been low on the radar for a long time, and the Prince works hard to keep it that way. But ... but things have been happening, and we're drawing attention to the city, on multiple fronts." The deaths of three elders and invasion of two fucking spider monsters, one of which was still alive according to Avery, was a precursor to the arrival of the hunters. The mysterious warning Azamel had given him was a continuation of the shit rolling their way. "Azamel showing up, and all the shit happening she's getting blamed for, is more post hoc ergo propter hoc."

Everyone raised a brow at him.

“Post hoc fallacy,” Mark said, everyone jerking their head his way. The man barely ever said a thing. “Azamel shows up, and shit starts going horribly. People think she started the bad shit, when she didn’t. Not all of it, at least.”

Azamel snorted, coughed several times, and blew some smoke at her companion. “Thanks, asshole.” Sighing, she tapped the cigarette against her tray, and Jack winced as he saw a bit of the ashes fall onto her typical, old, dingy grandma clothes. There was a monster in that old woman, a colossal creature of nightmares, and he half expected her to pass out in her rocking chair with a lit cigarette, and set herself on fire.

She was desperate to get something done before old age took her. Nothing was as scary as someone pushed to the edge of their life, in whatever circumstance, with nothing left to lose.

“I also came to let you know,” Jack said, “that we’re going to start active sweeps of the city and the tunnels. Kindred are tripling up, and hopefully with Avery’s help, we can track these fuckers down proper.” Ok, time for the difficult part of the conversation. “We want your help with some of these groups.”

Azamel coughed once again, and hard. The room stopped and waited as the woman tore up her lungs, though from the way she tensed her body with each cough, it was obvious she was practiced. “My help?”

“Well, not your help, specifically,” he said. “Fiona, Mark ... Athalia.”

The woman lit up another cigarette, fighting her shaking hands every moment of the process. “You’re asking a lot, boy.”

His turn to frown. Considering how much of their predicament was her fault, directly or indirectly, it was not an unrealistic request. “The situation requires a lot. That shaman woman’s rituals are an ever present threat. She'll kill again, find some other person to do her craziness to, and then Eric or me will have hunters tracking us down again. Because of you."

"Because of me?"

"You're the connection in these rituals."

She blew a cloud of smoke at him. There was a good fifteen feet between them, and yet she managed to spear the smoke enough so it hit him anyway. Impressive, and fucking annoying.

"Others have visited me. Many have, in fact. The difference between them, and you, is that you and Eric are young and weak. Easily beaten. Or so they believed." Shrugging, she gestured to Mark and Fiona. "I will speak with Athalia later. You two, think you can help the leeches and dogs with their hunts?"

"... fine," Mark said.

Fiona, as Jack figured, jumped up and skipped over to him. Skipped. With her large bust, it was pretty distracting, and he forced himself to not stare. After what Antoinette did to him a few hours ago, the last thing he needed was to see a pair of big breasts bouncing around. Weak, man, so weak.

"I'd love to! Who's going with who?"

---

---

~~Damien~~

The Grand Cathedral of Dolareido. It was hard to look at it the same way anymore, for a variety of reasons. The most obvious, he supposed, was that it was once the primary HQ of his sire and master, Lucas. But now that the veil of that psychopath's teachings were fading, and the intrusive, reflexive thoughts of judgment and guilt were disappearing into the ether, the cathedral looked different because of how much it did not fit the rest of Dolareido. If all roads went to Rome, then the same could be said for the gambling and club district of South Side. Money, sex, drugs, all things he'd been taught to despise in some form or another, to discourage kine from enjoying, and now, they were a frequent part of his life.

Or at least, money was. Sex and drugs? The kine he used to punish for such acts, he no longer punished. He wondered about the capacity of his new role as arbiter for the Lancea et Sanctum, and how it rarely involved punishing kine for their transgressions. It made him feel guilty, for daring to stand in the face of the Grand Cathedral, when he hadn't done what he was taught was a requirement of his role.

But, it was the dawn of a new age, and for a new approach. No longer a slave to dogma and mindless traditionalism, he had to reconsider a myriad of things in the light of, what Jack described as intellectualism, or healthy skepticism. Lucas would have called it a lack of faith in the Lord. The duality fought in his mind, and Damien had to make an effort to think through the fog and noise.

It was a mental battle he fought every time he walked up the stairs to the giant door, passed the gargoyles that sat upon ledges and railings, the angels and demons that sat upon engravings over the door, and finally, the crucifix above as he entered the cathedral. Empty. The many pews held no one, which made sense; for now. It was taking time to create an understanding between him and Maria, and the Prince, about what capacity the Lancea et Sanctum could operate in. If they weren't careful, Antoinette would shut down their efforts.

There was no music, either. Maria often spent the some late hours in the night playing, and introducing him to classical musicians: Bach, Beethoven, Mozart, and others like Chopin and Vivaldi. Perhaps she was down in her bunker, with her piano, and the books and various artifacts of the Lancea et Sanctum. Cataloging what she'd managed to save from Garry's vandalism, taking digital pictures, creating digital lists, had become a pastime for him. He enjoyed the peace and quiet of it, to be alone with the mountain of information, and glimpses into the past.

He walked through the nave, up past the raised platform with the podium, and past that to find the pipe organ. Such a grand, majestic instrument. An imposing instrument. He sat down upon the bench, and set his hands on the keys. Maria had said his lessons had progressed well, well enough to attempt playing the infinitely more difficult instrument. The issue was the complexity of four levels of keys, and the foot pedals. Maria insisted he need not worry about the dozens of dials that surrounded him, and only concern himself with the different octaves available to him.

He set his fingers on the keys, and played a simple chord. The difference between a percussion and wind instrument was blatant, and he stopped as he struggled with the way holding a key on an organ created a consistent note. There was no impact, no strike of the inner workings of a piano against strings, only the overwhelming power of the wind within the pipes, filling the church.

He tried again. Maria had insisted he learn Beethoven's Moonlight Sonata, not as his first piece but as the piece that would hook him, pull him into the mournful beauty of classical music. It was a sentiment he was starting to agree with.

He set his left hand on the first layer of keys, low toward his lap, and his right hand a layer higher; manuals, Maria called them. This second one had a far more gentle sound, perhaps to offset the thicker chords played on the first manual? With the organ, the sound didn't die, but resonated as long as he held the keys down; it felt unnatural, and he was afraid it'd overwhelm the melody he played with the right hand. But he continued, and trusted the arrangement Maria had created.

It did sound divine. He was not skilled enough to close his eyes, but he almost did, as he let the somber, heavy sound fill him. No wonder the song was played everywhere, to the point of ridiculous cliché. The chills it sent up his spine, as the sound overwhelmed the church, was intoxicating, and he smiled as he began to melt into it.

“You need to wear a cape and some mascara, to get away with playing that.”

He jerked his head to the side, and sighed relief as he watched Beatrice saunter up to him. “Do I?”

“Yeah. You’d know that if you watched more TV. Aaaaand did I sneak up on you?”

“I was ... distracted. It takes a lot of focus to play this instrument, and I am a beginner.”

“And you’re here alone. What happened to the buddy system?” She slid up to the instrument, and leaned against one of the wooden panels that surrounded it. A crass woman, but not nearly as bad as Jessy, to his delight.

“Maria’s nest below is very defensible.”

“Ah yeah, I guess. She here?”

“I do not believe so.”

Nodding, Triss sat on a nearby railing, jeans on the wood. “Good. I wanted to talk to you solo.”

“About?” He looked back to the keys in front of him, and set his hands on them in preparative positions. He didn’t play, though. It’d be rude to interrupt the Nosferatu. But he couldn’t deny he was excited to play more on the strange, monolithic instrument.

“I ... wanted to apologize. About giving you some of my blood.”

“Ah yes, that.” Sighing, he turned to face her, one knee on the bench and foot out to the side to rest upon his other. “It was undeniable, that ... that it’d happened. I woke up with a strange desire to see you, for no reason whatsoever.”

“Creepy.”

“Worse were the cravings for more. I wanted another taste of vitae, from anyone.” Nodding, he gestured to her with a shrug. “It faded. A single taste was not enough to ruin me. And you saved my life with that move, dangerous as it was.”

“That’s true, yeah. I could have let you die.”

“Something tells me the other Kindred would have been upset you didn’t do the only option available to you.”

“Also true.” Laughing, she nodded again, and kicked her feet a few times down against the floor, as if to admire the sound it made, how it echoed out of the chamber before disappearing into the acoustic panels hidden behind pillars. “So we square?”

Square. Sometimes it was easy to forget the eras Kindred came from. Beatrice grew up in the seventies and eighties.

“I was never angry with you.”

“Good, cause ... yeah. I thought you might have been upset I might have gotten you addicted to vitae, or, you know, me.”

“I am not addicted to vitae, and it would take a lot of blood to get me addicted to you.”

Beatrice blinked at him, several times, before she laughed. Loudly. Her crocodile mouth opened wide, and her laughter echoed through the church.

“Did you just make a joke?”

“ ... I suppose.”

“And here I was thinking you were incapable of anything other than cold, hard thoughts.” She smiled at him, which looked a little strange considering she had no cheeks, crocodile teeth along her jaw, but a normal looking mouth. All her facial expressions were a bit strange, as well, especially with her serpent eyes looking at him.

“I’ve tried to ... change, as of late.”

“Haven’t we all.” She winked at him, and leaned in. “A little birdie told me you and Fiona are getting along.”

Who was this woman? He remembered glimpses of the young Nosferatu when she was a Carthian, and hung out in catacombs. Like many of the cursed Kindred, she spent her younger years underground, hiding her disfigurements, and becoming as antisocial as he’d been. She was a completely different person now, who made no effort to hide her crocodile teeth where her cheeks should have been. Her small claws on her fingers, her snake eyes, all of that was forgotten to her, with zero body language meant to hide them.

Her new life agreed with her. A witch, and lover to the strongest ancilla in the city; along with her friend to share the bed. The typical Dolareido effect, dialing the sex factor of everything up to extreme.

“I ... do have a date planned with her.” For some reason, everyone had become interested in his dating life. It was annoying, but he couldn’t deny he listened to advice when it came his way, about this particular topic. He had no experience of romance, even when he was human. Blurry memories, at best.

“She seems fun. I wish you lots of great sex.” With a salute, Beatrice hopped off the railing, and started out of the church. “I—” She stopped, voice grinding to a halt, as the cathedral doors opened.

Maria.

She was wearing one of her typical white dresses, the sort worn a couple hundred years ago, with small buttons done up the front, connected to a multi-layered skirt. The dress was in good condition, and that always struck Damien as harsh contrast against her ruined skin.

Had these two ever met? Ever talked? He had no idea, and he stood up before walking over to Beatrice to stand behind and beside her.

“Madam Turio,” he said. “I was trying to learn how to use the organ, when Beatrice came by to visit.”

“Alone?” the elder said. “The pairing system applies to all Kindred in the city, Damor. Jacob will not be happy if a passerby saw through your Cloak of Night, and cut off your head.”

Nodding, Beatrice tapped her nose a couple times. “Jen isn’t far from here.”

Nose tapping, as if taunting the elder. Brazen. The comparison some people made between Beatrice and Jessy was warranted, to a point.

“Then do not leave her side.” Frowning, Maria walked up to, and past the two of them, a small snarl made for Beatrice before she continued on to the stairway in the back of the Cathedral.

Damien and Beatrice stood there, eyebrows raised, and listened to the sound of opening, and closing gates. After a few of the thuds, clanks, and squeaks of metal on metal, Damien set his butt against one of the pews' arms, and gestured to the Nosferatu, who did the same.

"I don't think she likes you," he said.

"I guess not. I mean, I was a Carthian, and I caused a lot of problems for the Invictus, back in the day."

"I ... don't think that's what it is." It was far more likely that Maria was jealous. Beatrice, a Nosferatu who had once hid in the shadows to hide her disfigurements, now realized they weren't so bad, and engaged in frequent intercourse, while also finding someone to love. All things, denied to Maria Turio.

Beatrice sat the same way, butt on a pew arm, facing him, the two of them in the aisle. "Yeah, maybe not."

A downcast look from her said it all: she was strolling through her more painful memories. For a Nosferatu, her disfigurements weren't all that unappealing. She'd spent all her years lamenting her monstrous features, only to later realize other Kindred didn't mind them. Worse yet, other Nosferatu often had far worse mutations, and she'd had the audacity to wallow in depression for many years, as her kin did. At least, that was the impression Damien got from her face. Perhaps it was far more simple, like he imagined Jessy's thoughts to be.

No, Beatrice was a more complex creature than Jessy. Though, complexity did little except bury the mind in pain.

"When's your date?"

"In an hour."

"Ah. Looking forward to it?"

"I ... am."

“She’s a spunky little thing, isn’t she?”

“That she is.”

He wouldn’t mind enjoying time with someone less complex, someone who smiled because they meant it, because they couldn’t help themselves.

---

---

~~Julias~~

He didn’t feel comfortable not wearing a suit. He felt less comfortable, wearing a robe. He felt extremely uncomfortable, wearing a thick robe of dark, stained leather, and absolutely nothing underneath.

“Aaron and Othello couldn’t join us tonight,” Triss said, wearing a similar robe. “So I thought, this could be interesting. Sort of a bonding experience.”

“You feel comfortable letting me witness a ritual?” he said.

Jen shook her head, and gestured to the metal bowl in the dirt. “If witnessing was all that was required, I’d be able to do them.”

“You can’t?”

“No.” Jennifer shivered a bit, and spread the blanket out for her to sit down on, legs folded, knees apart. “There’s something in Crúac, about it, that ... it’s too brutal, for me to ... give into. Maybe when I’m older. But in either case, Jacob doesn’t mind, because you can’t learn to do a ritual by watching it performed.”

Julias nodded, and adjusted his own blanket as he sat down. As much as it felt strange wearing such a heavy robe that looked like it belonged on a necromancer from Jack’s video games, it was roomy, and he had no trouble sitting like Jen, knees apart and ankles crossed. Besides, when in Rome.

The moon sat high in the sky, crescent moon, with clouds peeking across every so often. For the most part, the moonlight came through, and lit the ritual the two witches were performing. The stars were brighter, out in the rocky landscape outside his mansion, about half a mile out into the empty wilderness. A few dry trees, large rocks, dirt and sand, and the quiet stirring of night animals. Snakes. Rats. He was sure an owl or two were nesting in one of the nearby, larger trees that survived in the dryer climate.

“To learn Crúac rituals is a merciless affair,” Triss said. “I’d never invite you, cause you’d try and stop it.”

“How brutal?” he said. Dumb question.

“To learn my first ritual, I would have died several times over if I were human. This ritual wasn’t nearly so dangerous, but ... barbed wire was involved.” Shivering, Triss sat down in front of the large, metal bowl, and held a bag in front of her legs. A leather bag, black, the sort one would hold the head of their kill in, a few hundred years ago. It was squirming, and every so often, it made a very chicken-like squawk.

She reached inside, and yanked out a chicken. This was getting almost cliché.

“Barbed wire and a chicken? Were you put into a chicken coop or something? Animal cruelty to still use barbed wire.”

Triss laughed, but Jen didn’t. His fellow Ventrue groaned and shook her head, hugging herself and clutching her shoulders.

“You cut off your hand with a knife. Try doing it with barbed wire,” Jen said.

“Oh ... that is brutal.” Yeah, if he’d seen Triss getting a hand cut off by sawing, with barbed wire, he doubted he’d be able to stop himself from interfering, even if it was her doing it to herself. He was afraid to ask if it was.

Nodding, Triss opened up her robe, exposing the crow skull necklace, her breasts, nipple piercings, the tattoos, and down to her stomach, more tattoos, and navel piercing. Without the Blush of Life, her skin was thinner, pale, and hugged her lean body tight. Still attractive, but considering she was holding a squawking, struggling, angry chicken in her other hand, the last thing on his mind was sex.

She twisted, and ripped the chicken’s head off.

Julias blinked, head jerking away. Blood squirted everywhere, and the dying chicken struggled in Triss’s grip. After a little while, and a little while longer than Julias expected a headless chicken to struggle, the corpse went still. Nodding, Triss chucked the chicken’s head into the old, rusted bowl, while she raised the corpse to her body.

Ok, no wonder they told him to wear one of their robes, and not his suit. Not only was Triss’s robe — and his — splattered with bits of chicken blood, but she drew a line of the blood with the chicken’s neck across her chest under her collarbone, and then down from her neck, between her breasts, to her stomach.

She handed the chicken corpse to Jennifer, who did the same thing; though Jen made sure to blow Julias a kiss before revealing her body. Maybe he could think about sex, despite the horrific act he was seeing? They had warned him that they, especially Triss, were embracing the whole ‘dark, scary witchcraft’ scene, full tilt. And, there was something enticing about how twisted, and occult, the act was. It was a dead animal, a sacrifice, and they were drawing symbols on their naked chests with its body and blood; their particularly amazing, naked chests, no less.

Jen handed him the chicken, and he grimaced as he held it by the neck. He'd held dead animals before, plenty of times; you live long enough and it was bound to happen. But this was the first time he'd ever held a headless chicken by the neck. He forced one eye closed, as if by keeping only one eye aware of what he was doing, he'd lessen the impact.

Nothing would lessen the strangeness of him spreading his robe at the chest, turning the chicken on its side, and pressing its headless neck against his sternum. Weird, weird weird, so very weird. But, he had to admit, the thrill was there. This was some dark, scary witchcraft stuff, as promised. Warm blood trickled down over the large girth of his chest, and then down his sternum and flat stomach as he drew the line.

Both Jen and Triss licked a fang as they watched him. Clearly, they were perfectly happy thinking sexual thoughts, comfortable with the act, despite the grossness of what he was doing.

Like a moth to flame, the sight of the two women smiling at him as he painted chicken's blood onto his chest, put a vivid image in his head of what sort of stuff the Circle might have done, in a different time. Orgies around a sacrifice? Someone painting symbols onto bodies, using the blood of their sacrifice, human or animal, while people fucked in a connected circle of carnal acts? He doubted the sexuality was needed, but the excitement and adventure of doing something this dark was undeniable.

Kind of like when the Invictus pushed through a particularly powerful and one-sided business contract; except, less evil.

"Now," Triss said, picking up a large knife from beside the bowl, "each of us puts a drop of blood onto the sacrifice."

"More blood?" Julias said.

Nodding, Triss was the first, and she cut a small mark into her wrist. With some concentration, she forced out a single, heavy drop of her blood, and it landed against the chicken corpse with the weight of mercury. Heavy, thick, and powerful.

“The rituals pretty much always require vitae,” she said. “It’s the connection. It’s the special element that makes Kindred what we are. It lets us communicate with ... whatever it is that’s inside us, and whatever it is out there that’s ... undefinable.” Smiling at him, a twinkle in her snake eyes, she handed him the knife.

A small spike of pain, and then gone, as he cut open his own wrist enough to force out a large drop of his blood. Jennifer did the same, and set the knife down. All of them kept their robes open, exposing the blood trails they’d painted there. Part of him suspected keeping the robes open, after the fact, was really just to give him the visual feast of their bodies, but he wouldn’t be surprised if it mattered to the ritual, too. It was hard to tell. If the ritual could not be learned through observation, then maybe intent mattered as much as detail.

“Touch the bowl,” Triss said. He put his fingertips on its edge, as did Jennifer. “Close your eyes.” He did. “Now, listen.” Listen, he did.

The world disappeared. The background noise of the desert, the wind, the tiny chirps, the occasional owl hoot, the shifting sand underneath rat tails, all vanished. Everything went deathly quiet, and Julias squeezed his eyes shut to fight against the urge to open them. This was very much not natural, and it felt that way, too. It was like someone had wrapped a thick bag around his head. The unnerving image of him, tied to a chair, with a leather bag over his head, the bag that had previously contained an angry chicken, did not sit well with him.

But he could see something. He raised a brow, but kept his eyes shut as he turned his head around. He could see something, blurry, and red, like a smudgy blob of blood on a glass. A large blob. One was where Triss sat, and another was where Jennifer sat. He leaned left and right, to make sure it was indeed them, and not colors brought on by his shut eyelids.

“I can see you,” he said. Seemed like the thing to say, despite how ridiculous it sounded, said so plainly. “Sort of.”

“Good, it’s working.” Laughing, Triss the red blob nodded; he thought. It was hard to tell what was a movement or just the blob doing blob things.

“You didn’t know if it’d work?” Jen said.

“Nope.”

“What was the worse case scenario if this didn’t work?” He said.

The blob shrugged. “No idea. Maybe your eyes would have exploded?”

“Um, ow?”

“Nah don’t worry. Jacob said rituals either succeed or they don’t. He’s mentioned nothing about a failed ritual backfiring and tearing a face off or anything. That said, some of the rituals he’s described could backfire? I dunno, but they’re not rituals I’d be capable of for decades.”

“We keep our fingers on the bowl?” he said.

“Yeap.”

“And we can see each other with our eyes closed?”

“You can see any paranormal, with your eyes closed. And the range is fucking massive, far as your eyes work normally. Keep your eyes closed, and look around.”

He almost blinked, but shut his eyes tight again, and turned to look toward where he knew the city was. A sea of red blobs. He gasped, despite himself, and stared at the tiny dots, shifting and moving. There were a few hundred of them, but many were so small as to be no more than specs of red dust in his vision, only noticeable against the black and mixed colors of closed eyes. Sea was the wrong descriptor; more like, a black sky of red, gentle stars, gathered around.

He looked around and around, but other than the two blobs of red by him, he could see no other red blobs nearby. All the other red blurs were in the city, except a few seemed to be off to the side. Jacob, and maybe Othello and Aaron. It was far too inaccurate for him to track down actual places though, since all he could see was blobs of red, no buildings or roads or anything.

“This ... would be damn useful, if you were trying to see if any paranormals were nearby,” he said. “Might even be able to find the Begotten working with the hunters this way.”

“Yeah.”

Of course, there was one problem. “Gotta sacrifice a chicken every time?”

“A small animal, yeah. Many rituals don’t require a sacrifice, though, as you know.”

Ah yeah, the crow necklace. He didn’t know if she needed it, but when she painted her blood on the door frame of his underground bunker room, there’d been no sacrifice, just her fidgeting with the necklace. Supposedly, the blood would alert her if someone crossed through it, even awaken her from her daily torpor. A powerful tool, but if she had to lose body parts with barbed wire to learn these rituals, he was happy to never learn them.

“K, open your eyes.” Triss removed her hand from the bowl, and the blobs vanished. Queue for the rest of them to, as well.

Opening his eyes, Julias looked at the bowl with the bird corpse, then up at the moonlight, smirking.

“I still have two secrets to tell,” he said. Witchy witch stuff by moonlight? Perfect time to talk about heavy things.

His fellow Ventrue nodded. “One for me.”

“Got any a bit less painful to share?” Triss said, crawling over to him and snuggling up against his arm. “Hit your wife, hate some of our new friends, and killed a child. How about something less ... life-scarring horrible, and something a little more sleepover friendly?”

“Sleepover friendly?”

“Yeah.” Jen crawled over to him as well, though she made sure to take a little time to lean forward, so her breasts swayed and moved underneath her, until she also snuggled against his side. “I’m sure you’ve got some nasty, dark secrets that would make a politician sweat, but maybe something we can laugh about? Got any secrets you don’t want to share, but because they’d be embarrassing?”

He sighed relief, and smirked at the two women beside him. Yeah, he could do that.

“ ... alright. When I was young, maybe fives years embraced, and was getting more comfortable with being Kindred, I was in a sexual relationship with another Kindred.”

“Surprising,” Triss said. “You told me it’d been forever since you let a Kindred in your bed.”

“Yeah, she was from a long time ago. One of the reasons I fell into that relationship was ... I was bad with women, and she was showing me the ropes.” So much for cultivating an air of always being a lady’s man.

Both girls gasped, big and dramatic. He rolled his eyes and shoved both them both away, but they laughed it off and crawled back in.

“Playboy Mire used to be bad with the ladies?” Jen said. “I don’t believe it.”

“Hey, I told you I had a wife, and that ended pretty badly. I didn’t have much of a dating life before her, or after.”

Triss crawled into his lap, literally, and lay on his legs, on her back, head against his sternum and looking up. “Who was this Daeva?”

“It ... it was so long ago, it’s a blur. I think her name was Virginia? Barbara?” Sighing, he shook his head and shrugged. What good was immortality if a Kindred’s mind blurred the edges on memories? “I do remember her showing me how to talk to women, be confident, be funny. She also taught me a lot about sex, and the different places to touch a woman.”

“Then I owe her a lot,” Triss said, smiling up at him from below.

“A woman’s body and mind are a mystery,” Jen said, in a very dramatic, matter-of-fact deep voice. Everyone chuckled.

Nodding, he tapped Triss on the nose once, and again on her lips, before he slipped an arm around Jen’s shoulders. “So, I hope that satisfies secret number four.”

“It does.” Jen snuggled into his side, leaned in, and planted a kiss on his neck. As she did, she set a hand on Triss’s chest, and traced the snake tattoo biting one of her nipples. When her finger crossed the drying blood trail, she smiled at Julias, brought the reddened fingertip to her lips, and licked the blood away. “We should—ugh! Oh god that tastes horrible!”

Chapter 77

~~Damien~~

Beatrice's visit had been strange. Random. And late. It'd been months since that incident, and now she came, alone, to apologize for affecting him so? Peculiar. Perhaps she was feeling more bold, becoming an integral witch in the Circle of the Crone. Damien couldn't begin to understand what that sort of world was like, but it seemed to agree with the Nosferatu quite a bit. She'd smiled for most of her visit to the Cathedral.

Sighing, Damien leaned back, and looked up. The dark alley between some of the more unkempt bars was a disgusting sight. Sinners on every corner, and not the sinners he would have scared or harassed in the past. These were sinners he would have killed in the past, people not only throwing their lives away to whatever vice they chose, but also dragging other people into their inescapable pits of doom. Thieves. Rapists. Murderers.

This was a weird date.

"That one," Fiona said, pointing at the woman sitting on a food crate, across the street, and in her own alley. She was average height, Asian, tattoos and piercings, a half buzzed head not dissimilar to Damien's hair, and black jeans torn at the knee. A tight white t-shirt showed she had an impressively tough physique, too.

Nodding, Damien pat his chest to make sure he had his knife. He did. "I've seen her around Devil's Corner before. She leads a gang, sort of. More like a group of friends who are willing to get a fist or two bloody, if she wants them to." He wasn't sure if that really qualified as a gang, since she didn't bother with some delusional claim to territory.

“I’ve seen her too. She’s been quite mean to some folk, some store owners, taking things from folk on the street.” Fiona rubbed her hands together, and licked her lips. “I saw her and her friends beat up a man and steal his motor.”

“And you want to punish her.”

“Aye. Punish her, make her afraid. I have to make her afraid. Fear.” Again the beautiful creature licked her lips. She was wearing blue jeans and her brown leather jacket. Very much not the sort of clothes you found in Devil’s Corner, where tank tops and dangling chains reigned supreme, but it looked cute on her. “Let’s go eat her.”

“Hey, you’re not allowed to kill anyone.”

“I ken! I ... know, I know.” With a frown and grump, she bounced in spot a few times, and folded her arms. “And, she doesnae deserve to die, I dinnae think.”

“Have ... any of your meals been of people who didn’t deserve death?”

“I think they aw deserved it. A lot of them were men wha’ beat their wives.” She shrugged and set her back against the alley wall. “My favorite dinner.”

“I thought you were from a small place in Scotland?”

“I am.”

“Were the people nice?”

“Aye, very. Everyone thinks Scots are cursing and swearing and drinking all the time. Nae there,” she said. Didn’t sound like her. Rebellious teenager much?

“Why the particular favorite meal, then?”

“I dinnae ken. It must be from Vrall’s old lang syne. She’s so old, and I think she’s been inside many folk. Maybe something in the past happened?”

He nodded as he slid his hands into his pockets. “I ... still have no idea how that works.”

She laughed, and reached out to touch his chest for a moment. Unlike her, he was wearing a trench coat, and a suit underneath. Typical Mekhet fashion; and he had to admit, he liked the look of it on Daniel, so why not himself, too.

“I dinnae ken, either. But Vrall came to me, devoured me, consumed and became me. The others, they’re blank slates. With me, Vrall came with her own memories. I dinnae ken if she was a Begotten back then, or maybe something else, or a special nightmare. Aw I ken is, I’m Vrall, and Fiona. We’re nae separate.”

Not separate made it a little easier to understand, he supposed. The transformation from human into something else hit them all differently. For a vampire, it was awakening to a dark, beastly thing inside the chest, inside the heart, inside the soul. It wanted blood, as a managed resource. It wanted territory it could defend. It wanted a safe place to sleep, away from sunlight, safe from anyone finding them while they were a corpse.

“Consumed you.” Yeah, that was more terrifying than the embrace. At least, more terrifying than Damien’s. He’d accepted Lucas’s deal, and dying during the embrace was a blur. Jack, he supposed, must have been terrified during his ordeal, though.

“The nightmares hit everybody differently, but one thing’s always the same. Something comes for ye, hunts ye in whatever way is theirs, and they murder ye.” She shivered too, but all her shivers earned from her was a bigger smile. “I’ve never met any other Begotten, except for ‘ere in Dolareido. Azamel told me once about a Begotten she knew a long time ago, whose horror was a giant squid monster!”

“ ... was he a fisherman?”

“Aye, that he was! And he had this recurring dream where, when fishing, a monster came up from underneath, and dragged him down into the depths. Long, inhuman tentacle arms, a dozen of them, giant enough to break his wee ship apart. And then they came for him, and pulled him down, and down, and down, into the drink. Down to ole Davey Jones.” Giggling, she bounced around a couple more times, shivering still. “Eeeeeeh the darkness of the ocean depths are terrifying.”

“I thought you were a monster of darkness? Eshamki, you said?”

“I am, but that’s not the same as a Makara. Monsters ... of the depths.” She rubbed her arms, as if fighting off the chills of fear. Maybe she was. It was hard to tell excitement from fear with her.

“Do you enjoy roller coasters?”

“I love roller coasters!” She stared at him with jaw dropped. “How did ye ken?”

“Lucky guess.” A young girl who seemed to enjoy thrills, enjoyed getting scared, and responded to it with giggles and bouncing. Amusement park rides of the scary sort were probably a favorite thing for her.

He couldn’t imagine himself dealing with the crowd, or the lines.

“So, we should go break her nose! Pow pow. And, then ye can drink from her, and we can really scare her!”

“Do we need to beat her up?” He raised a brow, and gestured to the woman. “You said you feed on her fear.”

“Aye, but it has to be a sort of fear. I have to make her be afraid cause of the bad things she did. I have to punish her. She has to ken. Know.” She emphasized ‘know’, as if it were decadent chocolate. “She has to ken she did wrong, and she’s being punished for it.”

“I see.”

“Come on, let’s go have a blether with her.”

“ ... what do I say?”

“Hmm. Actually, I’ll do the talking. I dinnae think ye like talking much.” She grinned at him, like a squirrel, a mischievous squirrel drunk on a fermented pumpkin.

“I’ll have you know I served as bishop and consultant for many Kindred of the faith.” Most of which were dead. The few that had not joined Lucas on his kamikaze attack, the few not dominated by the strange power of Tony’s old underground headquarters, had rejoined the Invictus.

“True! And—hey, let’s have a go at something different. Use yer cloak of night to hide yerself, and we’ll get behind her. Grab her, really scare her.”

Hide just himself? “How will you hide yourself?”

Laughing, she took his hand, and started to walk him out onto the sidewalk. Devil’s Corner, this time of night, was a dangerous place, and a young woman and the man she was pulling along looked like prime targets. If some kine tried to mug them, it’d be a way to get in a meal for him. But Fiona’s hunger was specific, and needed to be satisfied in a specific way.

It added a unique element to the hunt. Better to let her lead.

A moment later, they were standing in the darkness of the next alley, the two of them behind their prey. The woman no doubt considered herself dangerous and deadly, a woman to be feared, carving a slice of life for herself out of the shit of Devil's Corner. But, she was only human.

Damien extended his Cloak of Night, the invisible aura embracing all within range, and gave Fiona a nod. Again, grinning and smiling at him like she was, indeed, about to go on a delightful roller coaster ride, she hopped over to their meal.

But then she was gone. Blended into shadow, disappeared. Not like the Cloak of Night, which made the eyes slide off, but instead, she'd become darkness itself. Like trying to see a shadow in a shadow.

Damien half expected her to jump out of the darkness and yell 'boo!'. But instead, she reformed near their prey, like droplets of black ink in water, stopped, and motioned for him to come close. Show off. Grinning all the more, she made some grabbing hands, and wrenching arms in the air, indicating he should grab the woman from behind.

Shrugging, he stepped up behind the woman, and grabbed her.

"What the fuck!"

